"The powers of the government of the State of California shall be divided into three separate departments—the legislative, the executive, and judicial; and no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments, shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except in the cases hereinafter expressly directed or permitted."

"No person charged with the powers"—not with the office—"properly belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any functions"—not the office—"shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except in the cases hereinafter expressly directed or permitted." Now, before the decision in 34 Cal., if Judge Fawcett was Judge of the First Judicial District, he was then in the exercise of powers properly belonging to the judicial department, and under this provision he could not exercise any other functions pertaining to either of the others, "except in the cases hereinafter expressly directed or permitted." But the decision in 34 Cal. being made, and that being the law of this State now, we must acquiesce in it. The matter is no longer res inquirea it is res adjudicata. It has passed into the decisions of our Courts, and as law-abiding men, to which sentiment the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, appeals, I say that we have to acquiesce in that decision. Therefore, article three has nothing to do with this discussion. The decision in 34 Cal. has stood for a number of years, ever since it was rendered, and there is no occasion whatever to allude to the distribution of powers in article three.

Then we come to this other provision that is relied upon, and let us look and see whether there is any merit in that:

"The Justices of the Supreme Court, and the District Judges, and the County Judges, shall be ineligible to any other office than a judicial office during the term for which they shall have been elected."

Now, this is the first time we have found this word "ineligible." It was in the distribution of powers in article three; but this goes further, and says that he shall be ineligible. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, says that it must mean some other office than those stated in the distribution of powers. I say, not necessarily because it says he shall be ineligible. Article three says that he shall not hold two offices. There is quite a distinction. If a man is ineligible, then he has no capacity of being elected. If he is elected it is void. It amounts to nothing whatever, because he had no qualities of eligibility. Therefore I say it does not necessarily follow at all because the word "office" is used in section sixteen that the framers of this Constitution are talking about another office than in the distribution of powers. But say, for instance, that they were talking about some other office. Now, we find in the distribution of powers that first the legislative department is spoken of. That is treated, and then the executive department is spoken of, and then the judicial. Now, these three great departments are treated of consecutively. In the first place the powers are distributed. It is said that these powers shall be distributed independently into three departments, a principle which underlies many of our State Constitutions and the United States Constitution. Then these different departments are treated of consecutively. This word "office" occurs in treating of the judicial department. The framers were not done with the distribution of powers of this State, and after having treated of the legislative and executive, they came to the judicial department; and then this word "office" occurs, still treating of the distribution of powers. It would seem to follow, that inasmuch as it is decided in the 34th California that that distribution of powers applies only to State officers, that the word "office" must also apply to State offices.

But then say, for instance, this was not the intention. Now, in looking over this Constitution we find a number of officers treated of specially. The Governor is spoken of as an officer; the Secretary of State, Attorney-General, Surveyor-General, and the Justices of the Supreme Court, the District Judges and County Judges, they are all spoken of as officers; and there are county officers spoken of, such as County Clerks, Sheriffs, etc., but there is no allusion whatever in this Constitution to the position of delegate to this Convention as an office. Why is it, if they particularize the executive department, and say who who shall constitute its officers; if they particularize the legislative department, and say who shall constitute its officers, and the judicial department, and who shall constitute its officers, why is there nothing said about a delegate to the Constitutional Convention? It cannot be said that it is a position of no importance. That cannot be urged. It is a position upon which is predicated the laws of this State; our rights to our property, to our personal security, and to our liberty.

Well, now, in respect to the oath that is required here. Let us see if any oath is required of the delegates of this Convention. I read section three, of article eleven:

"SEC. 3. Members of the Legislature and all officers, executive and judicial, except such inferior officers as may be by law exempted, shall, before they enter on the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of ——, according to the best of my ability."

"And no other oath, declaration, or test, shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust."

Now, Mr. President, a delegate to this Convention ought to take an oath. It would seem natural that he should be required to take an oath; but is there any requirement on that provision? It does require it of the members of the Legislature; it does require it of executive officers; it does require it of judicial officers; but there is no requirement at all as to members in this Constitutional Convention.

The only exception is "such inferior officers as may be by law exempted." Can it be said that this is an inferior office? It does seem that the framers of the Constitution did not connect the word "office" with the position of delegate to this Convention. I care nothing about the derivation of the word, whether as Webster says, it comes from ob and facere, to do for, or from anything else. I care nothing about that. We know the rule. It is usage which modifies language and which gives it its meaning. The question may come up, what is the meaning custom attaches to this word "office." But I do not think that is a proper test of the meaning which these framers of this Constitution attached to that word. I think you must look at the context, and that we must look at the whole instrument, and judge of the intention from the various provisions in this Constitution. I cannot find any provision in this Constitution that would lead me to think that they ever associated the word "office" with the position of a delegate to this Convention. Therefore, I say that they did not intend to do it.

I am aware that Mr. Jameson, in his work there, gives it as his opinion that in such a case as this—take for instance Judge Fawcett—that he would be ineligible under this provision of section sixteen of article six, that is cited. But that is merely his opinion. That is merely his opinion, like the opinion of any other person. So it occurs to me that we ought to look at the meaning of the words of the framers of this Constitution, and it never entered their minds to associate the words "office" in respect to the position of delegate to this Convention. All that is said in these words—section two of article ten:

"And if, at any time, two thirds of the Senate and Assembly shall think it necessary to revise or change this entire Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors, at the next election for members of the Legislature, to vote for or against a Convention, and if it shall appear that a majority of the electors voting at such election have voted in favor of calling a Convention, the Legislature shall, at its next session, provide, by law, for calling a Convention, to be holden within six months after the passage of such law; and such Convention shall consist of a number of members, not less than that of both branches of the Legislature."

Now, they simply call it a Convention, and they call the delegates to the Convention "members." They do not say anything at all about the word "office." They do not prescribe any qualifications. They do not say who shall be eligible, or anything of the kind. Now, the word "office," as was argued by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, is associated in our minds with the idea of stability; that it shall not be occasional. So in the case of The People v. Turner, 20 Cal., the Supreme Court in passing upon the question, which involved the eligibility of a District Judge, cites one of the opinions of Legare, in which he describes the difference between an officer and an occasional employé. It seems to me that it is proper distinction. This is occasional. It may occur hereafter once in thirty, forty, or fifty years. It seems to me that the position is only an occasional one, and that it is not an office.

Now, although from my present standpoint—and I have seen nothing to change my views—I shall vote for Judge Fawcett to hold his seat in this Convention, yet at the same time I do not take the position which has been taken by some gentlemen in respect to the capacities of this Convention. My position is about this: that this Convention is only advisory as far as the Constitution is concerned. We get up our Constitution and go through the regular curriculum under the Constitution of this State and the Enabling Act passed in pursuance of it. We submit it to the people, and whenever that Constitution is ratified by the voice of the people, then it becomes operative and it becomes the law of the land. I do not think, for the purposes of this argument, it is necessary to go into the other question, as to the exact powers of the Constitutional Convention, because the whole argument hinges upon this section sixteen. But if the position is taken by any one that Judge Fawcett has a right to a seat on this floor because we are a law to ourselves, I could not vote for him for that position on that ground. I cannot take that position. I believe that this Constitution is to govern us until we adopt another. When we swear to support this Constitution we are swearing to that in good faith, because we do support it until another one is adopted. There is no occasion for mental reservation, and I think it would be setting a bad precedent for us to go outside of the Constitution and the Enabling Act, as far as anything is concerned except adopting a new Constitution. I recognize that we have here exceptional powers. If the Constitution or Enabling Act did not make provision for a clerical force we would have the implied power, in order to run the Convention, to have this clerical force. This would be exceptional power, but the principal object of the Convention is advisory. I think that it is better in all of these cases to follow the plain provisions of the Enabling Act, if it is in accordance with the Constitution of the State. I see the importance of this case. If we once shift from our moorings the question is, where shall we go? Shall we say that delegates shall be paid more? Shall we say that we will sit here any length of time we choose? Shall we declare ourselves a law unto ourselves? No, sir; I think not. The way I look at it is that this stream of constitutional law should flow along placidly between its banks; though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull; strong, without rage; without o'erflowing, full. That great underlying principle—that principle which we find in the Declaration of Independence, I indorse: when grievances become such that they cannot be borne, then that other power of revolution steps in; but coming here under the forms of law, I think that we sit here as a Constitutional Convention.

MR. FREEMAN'S REMARKS.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. President: I desire to state as briefly as may be the reasons which influence my opinion and judgment upon this occasion, rather than to participate in the debate, which has now occupied considerable time. The question has been mooted, rather than discussed, concerning the sovereign powers of this Convention, or of the people, and as to their right, even if they so intended by the Constitution, to prevent any person from entering this chamber as a member. I will say that without discussing that question, I understand myself to be occupying, not a revolutionary position, but, as a member of a Constitutional Convention—which is constitutional in the double sense—that it meets under and in pursuance of one Constitution for the purpose of proposing another; and I shall, therefore, address myself to the question whether, conceding that it was possible, in the adoption of the present Constitution to bind this people and this Convention, this course has been taken. Section one of article three, in regard to the distribution of powers, has already been referred to at considerable length, and the decisions, I believe, cited in the report of the majority of the Committee on Judiciary, are in cases which have arisen under that article, or articles substantially like it. Those decisions in the Iowa cases in regard to the Mayor of Keokuk, the California case, and I think the Indiana case, only go to this extent: that this distribution of powers is a mere distribution for the purposes of State government; that it does not control municipal governments, and that it is competent for the Legislatures of the respective States to authorize the officers of the municipalities to perform functions which are both in their nature executive and judicial. These authorities, therefore, do not approach the question under consideration, nor do I believe there exists any authority, unless the judgment of the Illinois Convention may be regarded as authority. I understand precisely this question was before that Convention, and that it was decided, and decided as the majority of the Committee on Judiciary think that it ought to be decided here.

I will refer to the matter of the distribution of powers in article three, section one, only to illustrate this idea: that it seemed to have been the intention of the framers of the Constitution, and of the people, to create separate departments of government, and to keep these departments separate from each other, so that persons performing the functions of one of these departments should not be interested in the performance of the functions of any other department. Without relying upon this section, we may pass at once to section sixteen of article six, and when we do so—with all due deference to the opinions of the Judiciary Committee—we read language which seems to me to be too unmistakable to be doubted, and that is that the Justices of the Supreme Court, the Judges of the District Courts, and County Judges shall be ineligible to any other office during the term for which they shall have been elected, except a judicial office. Now it seems to me the only question is whether this is an office, and I do not believe there can be any definition found of the word office, which is not applicable to the position of a member of this Convention. I think the definition, as found in the ordinary dictionary, and the definitions found in the law dictionary, and those laid down by the Judges in general terms, are substantially identical. An office is the right to exercise a public function or employment, or as Webster's Dictionary gives it, "An office is a particular duty, charge, or trust, conferred by public authority for a public purpose." Are we not now engaged in the performance of a duty, of a charge, of a trust? That we are now perform a duty and a trust I think no one will undertake to doubt. Is not this a duty? Is not this a trust, and a public one? Is it not conferred by the public for a public purpose? Is it not conferred in that particular manner which in a republican form of government is selected for the election of officers? Is it not conferred by an election, either by the people of the whole State, or by the particular districts which gentlemen here represent?

Now, I believe that the majority report of the Judiciary Committee does not undertake to say that this is not an office, but says that it is not an office in the sense in which the word is used in the Constitution. Whatever others may find in the Constitution, I find nothing there which leads me to believe that the word office, in section sixteen of article six, is used in any other than its broad and general sense, namely, a public trust, conferred by public authority, for a public purpose. It has been conceded, I believe, that almost the first view which every lawyer would take of this question is that a Judge is not entitled to hold such a position. It has been said to be a superficial view—it may be that it is a superficial view—it is the natural view, it is the ordinary view which arises from the ordinary signification of words; and I put this question, whether, in an instrument which is voted upon by the people, by men of ordinary understanding, this word is not deemed to mean what is ordinarily meant by the word office, or whether the people are deemed to have adopted that particular meaning which we are here in substance told is only to be arrived at by men of great comprehension. These are affirmative reasons, in my judgment, why I cannot vote that the person whose seat is now being considered, is eligible, nor do I see any reason alleged in the report of the Committee on Judiciary which would cause me to change that first, perhaps superficial, view which I had of this question. I suppose that in the report of the committee they urge upon us those reasons which have influenced their judgment, and which they deemed proper to influence our judgment. The first reason urged is that the claimant has occupied his seat for a long time; that no person has yet appeared to claim it; that his own county does not contest his right to it; that he is a gentleman of high character, ability and judicial experience, and every way qualified to make a useful member of this Convention. These considerations may tend to bias our judgment, but they cannot tend to cause us to give a correct decision upon this question; the question has nothing whatever to do with the character and attainments of the gentleman who occupies his seat. The question is the narrow, naked, legal one, is this an office within the meaning of the Constitution? I say it is not only an office, but I believe it is an office within the meaning of the Constitution, because the Constitution itself provides for the office. It designates the persons who shall hold seats here as "members of the Convention," just the same as it specifies that the persons who hold seats in the lower branch of the Legislature are "members of the Assembly."

It is said that the powers are distributed in section one of article three; that there can be no other powers, and that no other powers could have been in the minds of the men who framed the Constitution. It is not true that the powers of the government are entirely and completely distributed in this section, because it is one of the recognized powers of government to provide for new Constitutions. The Constitutional Convention, while it does not meet as frequently as the Legislature, is in America almost as much a permanent institution, and as regular an institution as the Legislature. We have passed by that stage when Constitutional Conventions are revolutionary and exceptional; they are provided for in our Constitution, and I think, perhaps, provided for in the Constitutions of all the States.

But, say the committee, speaking of the original Constitution, it did not anticipate what should be done under a succeeding Constitution. Conceding that it did not anticipate what should be done under a succeeding Constitution, it did anticipate what was to be done under the present Constitution. It did anticipate that the present Constitution might, at some future time, not meet with the approval of the people, and it did anticipate so far as to provide for the calling of a Convention, and did designate the persons who should come to the Convention as members. Reference has been made to the early Convention of Virginia. It has been said that John Marshall, one of the Chief Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, sat in that Convention. That the Governor was also there, and that other distinguished gentlemen were present. Well, Mr. President, I know of no reason why they should not have been there. Why should they not have been there? No gentleman undertakes to say that there was any constitutional provision then, because, as a matter of fact, that was the first Constitutional Convention that ever assembled in the State of Virginia. There could have been no constitutional prohibition—there was none. Therefore there was no reason founded on any constitutional act why the Chief Justice, or all other Justices, of the United States might not have been present in that Convention.

To show further that in the ordinary sense of the term it is an office, you may refer to the very Act of the Legislature under which we are assembled. It is not binding, it is true, but it shows the popular sense in which our Constitution is understood, and which it must necessarily be understood by people of common understanding. In the first place, our election is provided for the same as the election of other officers. Our time of meeting is provided for, our powers are laid down to some extent, and we have the same rights almost, as members of the Legislature. We have power to punish for contempt, and to arrest persons; we have the power to keep them in prison during the time we are in session; in other words we have about the same general class of powers as those conferred upon the members of the Senate and Assembly. Furthermore, it is provided that we should take the constitutional oath of office. It would not have been provided that we should take an oath of office if it was not contemplated that we were officers, and in this connection it has been stated that in one of the Illinois Conventions, when members objected to taking the ordinary constitutional oath of office, that oath was modified. Now it seems to me that, so far as precedent is concerned, this recognized the right to exact an oath. If the members of that Convention had believed there was no power to exact an oath, they would not have taken any oath; they would have refused to take the oath altogether. But they did do so, simply modifying the oath so as to make it plainly consistent with the duties of their office.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: This is certainly a grave question, and one that demands the patient consideration of this Convention, and which should command votes given upon principle in the fullest integrity which we can bring to bear upon it. Now, sir, I confess to you, that before I could turn away the face of Eugene Fawcett from this Convention, a man of so much merit and so little pretense, I should require a necessity and overwhelming reasons. I confess I see no such reasons yet. What is the argument here? It is that every man in this State, except a Judge of a Court, is competent and eligible as a delegate to this Convention, but that the very class of men, intelligent, competent, and who have held offices which have established a character which assures them to be worthy of this place, are the only men who cannot sit here with us and participate in our deliberations. Sir, I know of but one popular authority for any such conclusion, and that is Sam Slick. Sam said that he construed the Declaration of Independence to mean that "all men were born free and equal, except niggers." [Laughter.] And now all men are honest and all men are competent for this high function except the Judges of Courts. There is no law, there is no logic, there is no precedent for any such conclusion. Now, sir, gentlemen say that we are not in a revolution. What is revolution? It is change; nothing more, nothing less. It may be peaceable or it may be forcible; but still it is change. Revolution is defined by the highest authority to be, "An extensive change in the political constitution of a country, accomplished in a short time, whether by legal or illegal means." The argument that we cannot change our constitutional law, except according to existing modes of proceedings, and have not full power to change it with the sanction of the people, I find no precedent for, except in the days of the Tudors and the Stuarts. It was the argument of Charles I, and of James II. It was the argument of George III to our ancestors more than a century ago, which George Washington and his compeers crowded down at the point of the sword and at the cannon's mouth. It is not necessary to argue that we are in a revolutionary state at all, because the Constitution of this State has provided the manner of our acting, but has not dictated, could not dictate, what we could do here upon this floor after convened.

Let me call your attention, sir, briefly, to its provisions, and it will be seen that the Constitution expressly recognizes the power of the people. This proceeding is a peaceful, constitutional revolution, and nothing else. The second section of the tenth article declares:

"And if at any time two thirds of the Senate and Assembly shall think necessary to revise and change this entire Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors, at the next election for members of the Legislature, to vote for or against the Convention; and if it shall appear that a majority of the electors voting at such election have voted in favor of calling a Convention, the Legislature, at its next session, shall provide, by law, for calling a Convention, to be holden within six months after the passage of such law; and such Convention shall consist of a number of members not less than that of both branches of the Legislature."

Now, sir, what does the Constitution look to when a Convention is convened? It looks to an entire change of this whole Constitution, and if we adopt any of the principles in the new Constitution from the old, they will have their force, not by virtue of the old Constitution, but from the reference of them to the people and to their adoption by the people at the polls. We are here to propose, not to enact. And now, sir, as to the qualifications of the delegations. The Constitution is silent on the subject. It mentions no qualifications; it prescribes none. It leaves the whole subject of qualification to the electors. The organic Act prescribes none, and could prescribe none, but simply says that the party having the highest number of votes shall be elected, and now it is asked by us to interpolate upon the present Constitution, and to say that no man who is a Judge shall be competent to sit here. There is no logic in that proposition; there is no reason for it. The Constitution framers of eighteen hundred and forty-nine never contemplated any such construction. If they did, they have failed to say so, and I aver, sir, that in relation to the call for the Constitutional Convention, and the methods of election and the qualifications of candidates, that this provision in the tenth article is the only operative, the only controlling one. Nor can the sixteenth section of article six—relative to the judiciary department—be invoked to control the second section of the tenth article. It cannot be considered that it forms any part in the construction of the tenth article.

Why, sir, if the argument contended for were true, that this gentleman is not eligible because he is a Judge, then it would follow that we cannot touch a single article in the present Constitution in relation to the legislative, executive, or judicial departments, because, they say, we have sworn to support this Constitution, and this Constitution remains in force until we finally adjourn. If that be so, sir, then our hands are tied; then we have no power here to vote upon the subjects upon which we are called, or adopt a new organic law. But it is not true for delegates, there is no qualification for delegates mentioned in the second section of the tenth article of the Constitution, and the whole question of qualification by this Constitution is left entirely and exclusively to the elective power, to the voters who vote for the delegates, and I challenge any authority to be produced in this instrument defining the qualifications of delegates as to the qualities he should possess for membership.

By any rule of interpretation the second section of the tenth article, prescribing the manner of calling the Convention and the qualification of its members, is the controlling section, without reference to the sixteenth section of the sixth article, in relation to the holding of office by the Judges, which has no reference to the Constitutional Convention. The two sections are not in para materia, and are not to be construed together. It is an elementary principle, to be found in all the books on the subject, that "general words may be restricted by particular words in a subsequent clause." "A particular enactment must prevail over a general enactment." The words of the sixteenth section no more control the call and composition of the Constitutional Convention than the provision in relation to the executive department.

It might just as well be said that no man but a Judge is competent to sit here, as to be construed that a Judge is not competent for membership. There is no more authority in the Constitution for the one proposition than the other. There would be much more sense in saying that no man but a Judge is competent, for I take it for granted that the learned Judges of this country are the most competent to frame a Constitution for the State to be submitted to the people. Therefore I say that the whole argument of the opponents of Judge Fawcett has no foundation in the Constitution; that it has no foundation in law; that all the precedents in relation to Constitutional Conventions for the last century have been directly in conflict with any such doctrine. But if it were operative and binding, if the sixteenth section of the sixth article could be invoked here at all, I maintain that a membership here is not an office within the meaning of the Constitution.

I assert that no respectable authority has been produced or can be found upon that proposition, except perhaps Mr. Jameson, with whose authority I am not acquainted. Jameson, I don't think, asserts any such proposition. What was the meaning of the Convention in the sixth article, which excludes Judges from holding other than judicial offices? What is a fair interpretation of the present Constitution? That it was intended to be confined to an office under the Constitution; a regular working office under the organization of the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, but was not a Constitutional Convention convened to abrogate it. The framers of the Constitution never contemplated that a Judge might not be a member of a Constitutional Convention, called for the entire revision of the instrument. If they did so intend they did not say so, nor anything from which it could be inferred. The Constitution is entirely barren of any such declaration.

Now, every one is aware that the rule is well established by the Constitution of the United States, that so far as the qualifications of members of the House of Representatives and the United States Senate are concerned, it has been repeatedly held that they are what is presented in the Constitution of the United States, and that no power, either Federal or State, can add to or abate one jot or one tittle to those qualifications, and any attempt to do so is void. Here, sir, an attempt is made to drag in the sixteenth section of the judicial department and override the second section of the tenth article, which regulates the call of a Convention. To hold that this place is an office, and by the force of that technical construction, to exclude a member from this body. Mr. President, when statesmen come to discuss great principles of constitutional law, they do not come armed with a pocket edition of an English dictionary; they don't produce Chitty on Special Pleading. They take the Constitution as our fathers framed it and as the great men of the country have construed it; they look at the language of the instrument, they see its objects, its principles, its meaning, its intentions. They don't go to Chitty, they don't take the head-notes of a case, they take the language in its broad sense; they look at the objects and intention of the framers of the instrument. I quote briefly from Judge Story for authority on the subject of interpretation. He says:

"The first and fundamental rule in interpretation of all instruments is to construe them according to the sense of the terms and the intention of the parties."

You don't take the naked language, you regard the sense of the words; you are governed by the meaning, the intention of the framers; those are the great polar stars of interpretation. Now, sir, is it possible, can it be possible, that anybody would suppose that the framers of the present Constitution intended to exclude the most competent men in the whole country from this assembly? Sir, I do not think they are liable to that reproach; I think it is casting upon them the charge of stultification to hold that such was their intention. Again, sir, to hold that would be to charge them with absurdity. It would be not merely an absurdity, but an injustice to their country, to their fellow countrymen, if such was their meaning. It is not to be presumed. Judge Story continues:

"Illustrations may be further derived from the subject-matter, with reference to which the expressions are used; that the effect and consequence of a particular construction is to be examined, because if the literal meaning involves a manifest absurdity, it ought not to be adopted; and that the reason and spirit of the law, or the causes which led to its enactment, are often the best exponents of the words, and limit their application."

Now, sir, I say there is no reason, there is no fair construction of the sixteenth section, which would exclude Judges. No such interpretation can be given to it, no such intention can be gathered from it, no such purpose could have entered the heads of the framers of the present Constitution, because to say so would charge them with absurdity. More than all that, we must look at the mischief. The mischief was, that persons under the present Constitution, under the government as organized, should not be allowed to hold too many offices; and that one holding a judicial office should not be allowed to occupy any other under the government of that Constitution. It did not mean to extend to a prohibition to holding a seat in a Convention called by the sovereign people of the country for the abrogation of the Constitution itself. It was never intended to have that force or that construction. It never could have been the purpose of the framers of the Constitution to have excluded a judicial officer. It expressly says that he may be eligible to a judicial office, but it does not define a judicial office, it does not say to an office exclusively judicial. The functions of a member here are partly legislative and partly judicial, and I assume that the language of the sixteenth section is not to be construed to exclude a Judge from this Convention on the ground that it is judicial, because there is no pretense that it must be exclusively judicial. Again, sir, I deny that membership of this body is an office; I maintain that it is simply an employment, and I hold that the authorities, the common law authorities, draw a clear and unmistakable distinction between an "office" and a "place," an "office" and a "trust," an "office" and an "employment." The Constitution must be construed with reference to the common law. This question came before the Constitutional Convention of the State of Illinois. Some of the delegates in that body refused to take the oath to support the Constitution because they said that they came there to overturn and destroy the then present Constitution, and the answer made to that was, that the position of delegate to the Constitutional Convention of the State of Illinois was not an office within the meaning of the Constitution, and, after a careful examination of the authorities in the case of Judge O'Melveny, declared that it was not an office, and that he was a competent delegate. They summarized all the common law decisions on the subject, and declared in the Constitution:

"An office is a public position, created by the Constitution or law, continuing during the pleasure of the appointing power or for a fixed term, with a successor elected or appointed. An employment is an agency for a temporary purpose, which ceases whenever the purpose is accomplished."

Now, sir, that is a full and fair summary of the common law decisions upon the subject, and is conclusive. The matter was debated by some of the ablest men in that Convention. It was thoroughly canvassed, and that was the conclusion to which they arrived: that to be an officer within the meaning of the Constitution—and their Constitution was similar to ours in that respect—it must be a place to which a successor was elected, that it must have a fixed term. There is no such thing in the tenure of a delegate. Are we to have any successors? Have we fixed terms? I take it for granted that when the hundred days expire, and our pay stops, we shall adjourn; but we have no fixed terms. We have no successors, and, according to the text, it is not an office. Nay, more, sir, let us look at the latter part of the definition:

"An employment is an agency for a temporary purpose, which ceases whenever that purpose is accomplished."

Now, is not that precisely our position? Are we not here for a temporary purpose? Agents to do a particular thing, are we not clothed with a particular trust? And what is that trust? To make suggestions to the people for a Constitution. Now, sir, what becomes of all this technicality? What becomes of these fine-spun theories, this tortured construction that this is an office? What becomes of all this hunting into lexicographers; of all this looking into the head-notes of cases which have no application? It has no law, it has no logic to support it; and the precedents of this country, as I said before, for a century, are all the other way. I challenge the production of a single case in which a member of a Constitutional Convention has been turned out of a Convention because he held another office inconsistent with his position as delegate to the Convention. If there is any such, it has escaped my notice, and I have endeavored to post myself on this matter. But I assert, sir, the only thing that fixes the qualifications of a delegate is the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, and that is silent on the subject.

The organic Act presented no qualification for membership, and I hold that this is a question for the elective body, that it was a question exclusively for the voters, and we have no power to revise their decision. And Judge Fawcett might well say, as John Randolph said, when the Speaker of the House of Representatives asked him, when he presented himself to take the oath of office, if he was of competent age to be a member of that body. His reply was, "Ask my constituents." And now, sir, ask the constituents of Judge Fawcett if he is their man; if they hold him competent; if they say he is qualified; if they say he is their choice. If they thus answer, sir, for us to go back of that decision would be gross tyranny and the vilest despotism. When this Convention come to examine this question carefully and with intelligence, I look upon it as impossible that this gentleman should be ousted from his place among us and sent back to his constituents, and his constituents be told that we hunted about in the old Constitution, and finding that the "i's" were not dotted and the "t's" were not crossed in favor of Fawcett, that we examined some obscure law dictionary and ascertained that section to assert that membership in this body is a public trust, and therefore an office, and we sent home that delegate from Santa Barbara. If we perform this feat it will be the first Convention by which it has ever been done, and I hope the last one ever elected that will venture on such an outrage on the sovereign rights of the people of California.

SPEECH OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: The general questions at issue are full of interest, and although it might be instructive still further to pursue them, the lateness of the hour and the evident weariness of this assemblage forbids their discussion. It seems to me it would have been better in the first place to consider what mischief was intended to be prevented by the provision of the Constitution which declares that Supreme Court Judges, District Court Judges, and County Judges shall be ineligible to any other than a judicial office. It is evident it was designed to keep the judicial department free from the excitements, the pleasures, the pains, and penalties of political life. It designed, so far as it was possible, that the Judge on the bench should know no parties, but only the cause. It intended that he should never descend from the bench to the pool of politics, to be flattered by friends, traduced by enemies, libeled by the press, or to have his influence and power as a Judge destroyed for political purposes, and for political purposes only. It intended that he should not be allowed to descend into the strifes for the offices created under the executive, legislative, and judicial departments; that he should not come up to the bench to punish an enemy or reward a friend. How can it be said that the presence of a gentleman connected with the judicial system of this State in this Convention can produce any such result as that I have indicated. If that is the case, then certainly the intent of section one would seem to dispose of the whole question.

The gentleman from Sacramento, for whose opinions I have very great respect, has limited the discussion to the question as to whether a delegate to the Constitutional Convention is the holder of an office within the intent and meaning of the Constitution, and he comes to the conclusion, as I understand it, and bases his determination to vote against Judge Fawcett upon the ground that, in his judgment, he is an officer within the intent and meaning of the Constitution. I am not willing to adopt that view myself, and under the sanction of the oath we have taken, and which I insisted the other day and insist now was an oath that the law had no right to impose, and the Governor of this State had no power to compel us to take; but under the sanction of that oath, I declare that I cannot see that a delegate to the Constitutional Convention is an office-holder within the intent and meaning of the Constitution.

The question, whether a duty constitutes an office, is no new subject of debate. It has been handled in the Courts, and has been debated and considered perhaps more fully in the Courts of the State of Illinois than in any other State. I particularly refer to Bunn et al. v. The People, 45 Illinois Rep., 401, and which I shall not now attempt to read. I hope you will all examine it.

Under the first Constitution of the State of Illinois nearly all the important offices of the State were filled by an election of the two houses. It was found that this system gave rise to very injurious combinations affecting the purity of the government; that the passage of laws or their defeat was made to depend upon the election of particular individuals to particular offices. When the Convention was called, by which the present Constitution of the State of Illinois was framed, one of the principal objects sought to be effected by that call was to deprive the Legislature of the power to appoint such officers as had been appointed by them under the old Constitution, such as Justices of the Supreme, Circuit, and inferior Courts, Auditor, Treasurer, and many others, whose functions were directly connected with some one or more of the departments of the government which the Constitution had established.

Now, in view of these constitutional provisions—there was legislation had in that State under the Constitution which provided, section twelve of the fourth article: "The Governor shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate (a majority of all the Senators concurring), appoint all officers whose offices are established by this Constitution, or which may be created by law, and whose appointments are not otherwise provided for; and no such officer shall be appointed or elected by the General Assembly."

Section twenty-three, article five, says: "The election of all officers, and the filling of all vacancies that may happen by death, resignation, or removal, not otherwise directed or provided for by this Constitution, shall be made in such a manner as the General Assembly shall direct; provided, that no such officer shall be elected by the General Assembly."

The Legislature of Illinois, under that Constitution, passed an Act in eighteen hundred and sixty-seven providing for the erection of a new State House, and in that bill they appointed certain Commissioners, naming them, whose duty it was to erect that State House and disburse the moneys that were to be used in completing it. A proceeding was taken to determine whether they were officers under the Constitution of the State of Illinois; because if they were, the Legislature had no power or right to appoint them; and the Supreme Court of that State gathered together all the definitions of what was an office under the Constitution of that State, and which definitions may be very well applied to the case at bar. The Supreme Court of Illinois say: "When the Constitution says that no office established by that instrument, or created by law, shall be filled by appointment or election of the General Assembly, the framers of it had direct and immediate reference only to such offices as were created for the purpose of administering the three departments of government organized by it."

The Court cited the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall, delivered in the Circuit Court of the United States in the case of the United States vs. Maurice. This was an action of debt on the official bond of Maurice. He says:

"It is a public charge or employment, and he who performs the duties of the office is an officer If employed on the part of the United States, he is an officer of the United States."

And here it seems to me he makes the distinction alluded to by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, and which appears to be the stumbling block over which some of the gentlemen are likely to fall.

"Although an office is an 'employment,' it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may certainly be employed under a contract, express or implied, to do an act or perform a service without becoming an officer. But if the duty be a continuing one," as for instance, the office of Governor, under the Constitution of the State, it is an office that must continue from the time the Constitution is adopted until it shall be no more, or until itself shall be changed, the office or duty is a continuing one, "which is defined by rules prescribed by the Government." As in the case of a State Treasurer or Controller, he holds the office he is, so to speak, for the moment the hand on the face of the clock. They turn and turn, and the machine goes on forever and ever. Though you remove the hands, and substitute one form or another, the machine goes on, the duty exists; it must be performed, forever, though the person who for the moment is the index upon the dial of the clock may be changed and swept away.

That I understand to be what is meant by an office under the Constitution. It is something which continues. It is something to which duties are attached which are prescribed by law, and which the officer has to perform. "Who enters upon the duties pertaining to his station without any contract defining them, if those duties continue, though the person be changed."

He says again: "It is not contended that the magnitude of the object, or amount or varieties of duties imposed to carry it out, determines the character of the employment, or will convert that which was a mere employment, temporary in its very nature, into an office; it is only their continuous nature that will have that effect."

They say this in respect to these Commissioners, who were Commissioners to erect a State House, just as we are here as Commissioners under the Constitution of the State, delegates, servants, agents, appointed to do a certain work, according to our best judgment and discretion. We execute no law, we make no law, we interpret no law. We are simply here as agents of the people, to express the average sense of the people of the State of California, as we understand it, upon certain great questions affecting the organic law of the land, and when that work is completed, and we shall have folded up our records and passed them into the hands of the Secretary of State, as the law provides, we are scatterred to the four winds of heaven. We have no continuing duty. We hold no office. There are for us no successors; and the Constitution itself neither defines nor limits our duties. It is said that we are here to make a new Constitution. Not necessarily. This Convention can to-day adopt a resolution that the existing Constitution is sufficient for the people, and adjourn sine die. There is no limitation. There is nothing that hedges in or defines our duties or obligations. There is nothing distinct and definite and certain under this statute, except that the members of this Convention are entitled to ten dollars a day for every day the Convention sits. The Supreme Court of Illinois says: "It seems to us that it cannot be predicated of these plaintiffs in error, that their duties are of such a character that a general duty contains, as in the case of the agent of fortifications, although the special duty has been performed. In fact, there are no general duties imposed by the Act in question on these appointees; they have only one single special duty to perform, and that is to superintend the erection of a State House, and when that is performed their functions, ipso facto, are at an end."

They go on to say: "It seems to us, the term 'such officer', judging from the contemporaneous action and construction of the clause by the Legislature, had reference alone to such officers as had some portion of the functions of government committed to their charge. No man can certainly say to which of the three departments of our government these appointees belong. It will not do to say they belong to the executive, because they are required to execute a law. The same may be said of road commissioners; they execute the laws under which they derive their appointment, and so of the numberless persons necessarily employed by the State in subordinate positions and for a special purpose. So far as we have any knowledge on this subject, or are enabled to judge from the facts of contemporaneous history, no one has ever supposed the Legislature had not full power to appoint and employ all such agents as might be deemed necessary by them to perform duties not of a permanent, but of a transient and incidental character, such as we see in abundance in our statute books. No one has ever exalted such employés to the position of an officer, though their duties might require months or years for their full performance. There is no enduring element in these employments, nor designed to be; the duty being performed, the place is vacant by the very act of performance. The case cited, of Shelby vs. Alcorn, 36 Miss. 273, is based upon this case in 2 Brock., and was a case where a system of levee protection against the inundation on the Mississippi River was inaugurated, and the functionary to superintend the work was denominated by law an officer, the tenure of the office established at two years, with a salary of fifteen hundred dollars per annum; and the decision seems to be placed on the fact, that the duties of the office were continuous, and were a part of the permanent administration of the government.

"On his report as to the cost of the work, the Board of Police were required to levy a tax to meet it. And the Court held that the powers attached to the office pertained to the executive branch of the government; that it was of a permanent nature, and had a certain tenure prescribed, and the appointees were clothed with a portion of the executive and sovereign power of the State.

"This surely cannot be predicated of these appointees. No tenure of office is fixed by the Act, no permanency is attached to it, nor is there the slightest connection with the exercise of any portion of the executive power, or of any departmental powers, and no intention manifested in the Act itself to establish an office."

I will not take the time of the Convention to read further; but it seems to me to be the most finely drawn distinction between an office and an employment that has been suggested to the examination of the members of the Convention. I think it is beyond dispute—at least it seems to me to be beyond successful attack if disputed—that this duty, this employment, placed upon the gentlemen of this Convention, under the Constitution, is not an office created by the Constitution; that they have a single special duty to perform, and that being done their occupation is, ipso facto, ended. It cannot be said in any sense to be an office or employment within the intent and meaning of the Constitution. So believing, and so understanding the Constitution of this State, I am glad to be able to say that I can vote in favor of the delegate returned from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett. It would be a shame, unless it was absolutely necessary, unless the law was so plain that he who runneth may read, that the Convention should be deprived of the experience, judgment, and intelligence of any citizen, still more when that citizen comes to us ripe with learning, with long experience, with the very qualities, Mr. President, that most and best fit a man to participate in the deliberations of a body like this. It would be a great misfortune to lose him; and I hope that unless it shall appear to be imperatively necessary, that his exclusion from the Convention will not be resolved on. For myself, sir, I am satisfied that this duty which Judge Fawcett proposes to discharge here, with the leave of the Convention, is not an office within the intent and meaning of the Constitution. And so believing, and so glad to believe, I shall vote for the member retaining his seat.

MR. O'DONNELL'S REMARKS.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President: I shall vote against Judge Fawcett occupying a seat in this hall. Upon our admission as delegates to seats upon the floor of this Convention, we individually and collectively took a solemn oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the State of California, and to discharge our duties as delegates according to the best of our ability. That oath was a condition precedent to our admission to seats on this floor. The sixteenth section, of article six, of the Constitution of the State of California, reads thus: "The Justices of the Supreme Court, and the District Judges, and the County Judges, shall be ineligible to any office other than a judicial office during the term for which they shall have been elected."

That is the language of the Constitution that I swore to defend when I came into this hall, and I intend to do it; and I say whenever a man violates that Constitution, he has violated the oath that he took in front of the President on his admission to his seat. It is admitted that Judge Fawcett at the date of his election was and still is the Judge of the First District of the State of California. He is, therefore, ineligible to a seat on this floor by that section—the sixteenth section of article six. You may get around it by saying this is not an office; but I tell you, good sense tells us, that it is an office. It is a public office, and you draw public money from the State treasury. This is a technicality that these lawyers are trying to spring upon us. [Cries of, "Louder," "louder."] I will give you a chance to speak louder when you get the floor.

Another thing, Mr. President, if he is not eligible, and I contend he is not entitled to a seat, then his vote for officers is illegal and void. I say that if he is holding his seat, and is not entitled to his seat, his vote for officers is illegal and void. Judge Fawcett, upon his admission to a seat on this floor, was allowed to vote and participate in its organization. He cast his vote——

Mr. TULLY. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. O'DONNELL. State your point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. TULLY. He is not talking to the question we are discussing.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Turn right around here and listen and you will learn something. They discussed these officers and the first thing they did was to take up the statute, and now they are the first to violate it. They were the first to throw the law in our teeth, and they are the first to violate it.

Mr. President, I say that according to that Constitution—according to that clause of that Constitution, which it is impossible for any man to get around; it is the plainest language that I ever read, and if one section of the Constitution is correct the other is. That has been the Constitution of the State of California since eighteen hundred and forty-nine, and it never was violated except it will be in this case, and I hope that no member upon this floor, after taking an oath to support the Constitution of the State of California, will violate that Constitution.

I tell you, Mr. President, there is no getting around it. I know Judge Fawcett is capable for the position, but the fact is we have got too many lawyers. [Laughter.] It is getting late and I will not detain you any longer. I thank you kindly for your attention.

Mr. HUESTIS. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. VAN DYKE. I move that the further consideration of this business be made the special order for to-morrow, immediately after roll call.

So ordered.

REPORTS.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, presented the following report:

Mr. President: The Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights return herewith proposed amendment number two hundred and fifty-eight, which, by mistake, was sent to our committee but properly belongs to the Committee on Legislative Department.

The report was adopted, and the proposition ordered referred to the Committee on the Legislative Department.

Mr. SHAFTER, from the Committee on the Pardoning Power, presented the following report:

Mr. President: The Committee upon the Pardoning Power having had under consideration the proposal number two hundred and fifty, introduced by Mr. Condon, report adversely to section thirty-two thereof, and as the proposal relates to legislation, recommend its reference to the Committee on Legislative Department.

J. McM. SHAFTER, Chairman.

THE FAWCETT CASE.

The PRESIDENT. The special order—the matter of the eligibility of the Hon. Eugene Fawcett—is now in order.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

Mr. HERRINGTON. Mr. President and gentlemen of the Convention: Like most other members of the Convention, I presume, upon this floor, who will be called upon to cast their vote and pass their judgment upon this question, I feel somewhat inclined to present some of the reasons which actuate me in voting as I shall vote upon it. I shall do so as briefly as I may be able, and shall try to confine myself directly to the question at issue.

As I understand the matter involved before this Convention, it is somewhat a question of law—the facts being admitted. The question, therefore, turns upon the simple construction of the Constitution of the State, and upon two of its provisions, and upon two alone. The first of these is section one of article three, and the other is section sixteen of article six of the Constitution of this State. This construction will depend upon the reason and spirit of the law—that is to say, upon the grounds and reasons which induced the Convention and people to adopt them at the time of their adoption, and will involve the circumstances surrounding and connected with the adoption of each. It is not denied that article three was framed and adopted by a Convention similar, but not exactly like unto this. That Convention was, in truth and in fact, directly from the people, having its origin with the people, its inception among all classes, without distinction as to race, and I had almost said sex, condition, and state of circumstances. The second had its origin not with the people, but with the State Legislature, and was adopted in eighteen hundred and sixty-two. Lest I be mistaken, I will satisfy my own eyes by reference to the book itself:

"The Justices of the Supreme Court, and District Judges, and County Judges shall be ineligible to any other office."

I say, then, this second provision of the Constitution, section sixteen of article six, was adopted in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-two. Why was this section adopted? In the wisdom and counsel of these most potent, grave, and reverend signiors, who bring in this report—I ask pardon—in the wisdom of the majority of the committee, they bring in this report, in which they assert that these provisions were adopted by a Convention coming from the people, and that it was adopted with reference to the provision contained in article three of the Constitution of this State, and that, as to the officers therein referred to, those provisions had reference to the officers which were provided for exercising the powers of the Legislative, the powers of the Executive, and the powers of the Judicial Department.

It will be found by a reference to the decisions of the Supreme Court that not less than a half dozen cases were decided with reference directly to this provision of the third article prior to the year eighteen hundred and sixty-two. Prior to that year diverse constructions had been placed upon this third article of the Constitution. After mature deliberation and after reflection upon these decisions affecting this third article, it was found too feebly weak and inefficient to restrain the aspirations of gentlemen who even occupied the Supreme Bench in this State, and stations in the District and County Courts. It was ineffectual, though it inhibited them transacting any business pertaining to either of the other departments of government.

For that reason it was found advisable, in eighteen hundred and sixty-two, by the Legislature, to put it down in unmistakable terms—put it down in terms that could not be gainsaid—put it down in terms that could not be more clear if written with a sunbeam on the forefront of Heaven—that they should not and shall not occupy or transact or do any business pertaining to any other office than that to which they had been elected. Did these provisions point only to offices to be filled in the legislative, executive, and judicial departments? If that were so, the provisions of the third article would have been sufficient, and it would have been unnecessary for the Legislature to say, in its wisdom, they were not trammeled sufficiently to curb their ambition within reasonable bounds. Yet we find, even after the adoption of this sixteenth section, of article six, this ambition was still unchecked. The desire became so rife that a Supreme Judge, desiring to fill various positions of governmental authority, appealed to the highest tribunal of the State to have it determined that he should override the provision of the Constitution which had been solemnly enacted by two Legislatures in succession to prevent the consummation of the identical act which he essayed to do.

It is not the first time in the history of this State that the provisions of the Constitution have been trampled under foot for the gratification of ambition and selfishness. It was the exhibition of this same disposition that induced the Legislature, in its wisdom, to announce in this sixteenth section that it was no longer possible for these gentlemen to occupy these double positions.

Now, what difference do these provisions make between State offices and any other offices; county offices, or township offices? The Constitution does not specify State offices. There is no such word used in the sixteenth section of article six. It simply says: "Any other office," "shall be ineligible to any other office." Does it insert the word State? Has the Legislature put that comprehensive term into the expressions used in that sixteenth section of article six? If it had, Mr. President, the fact would not avail the majority in this contest so far as the issue is concerned. I read from the majority report:

"A Constitutional Convention is therefore an unusual instrumentality of the government, and of brief existence. It is not one of the great departments of government which are created for everyday operations, and it is not to be thrust into the ranks and limits of one of these three divisions to take its place either as executive, legislative, or judicial. The Constitutional Convention outranks them all."

What in; what in, Mr. President? In what does this Convention outrank them all? I will tell you; it outranks them in being an exclusively constitutional office. That is what it outranks them in. It will be in vain for gentlemen to say as is said in this majority report, that "it is occasional, exceptional, brief, and peculiar. It represents the people in their primary capacity." It does no such thing. It does no such thing, sir. They made a mistake; they did it unthoughtedly. They should now pause and to themselves say "check." Their oath is to the Constitution of the State which inaugurated this Convention. It was organized society and not society in its original elements, primary elements, if you please. It is, therefore, from the organized elements, the constitutional elements of the Government of the State of California that this Convention proceeds, and not from the primary elements, even if it did come direct from the votes of the people. It is, therefore, from a body politic which is so modified by the very terms of its Constitution as that no man had the right to vote at the election inaugurating it except such as had been authorized under our present Constitution to participate in the affairs of the Government. That is why it stands upon a different basis from those constitutions framed by the primary elements that usually form and enact constitutions in the first instance. That is why the gentleman who occupied the position that you, Mr. President, occupy to-day, transgressed the authority conferred upon him as Governor when he assumed to dictate to this Convention who and what should be its officers; doing so despite the objections of one of its members directly interposed. That is why I say his authority went beyond the due bounds fixed by the Constitution. Had he stood here at the will of the Convention, he might have done so as its Chairman, perhaps; but acting as Governor of this State, he was chained by the provisions of the Constitution, which binds him as it does this Convention.

What right have gentlemen to say that any man shall sit in this Convention unless by the authority of organized power under the Constitution? You may well stand with your majority here, and shake your fists in the teeth of gentlemen who elected you, and declare you are almighty, simply because you have the power to install men here and put your usurpation before the people in the light of a construction—a mere choice between expressions as to what shall constitute the organized elements of this Convention. But I say to you, pause, you are under an obligation based upon a written instrument, which you and I agreed should constitute the warrant for the assembling of the members of this Convention here to-day. I do understand that when the Supreme Court determined in the case of Ex parte Archy, that the Constitution never acted for the first time that it did ignore the plain provisions of that instrument. That when it said the provision of that document, which requires that "every law shall have but one object, and that shall be expressed in the title," was merely directory, it declared that to be law which is not law. And when this Convention undertakes to say that it is supreme—that it is not trammeled by the words of that Constitution, as if its members are not here in the interests of organized society—they tear down the plain provisions of the Constitution and assert doctrines that are revolutionary in their tendency, trampling under foot the interests and rights of the minority in this Convention, and of the people, their constituents. You have no such powers. Your powers are to propose; and your powers in that respect are unlimited. That is what you are here for, and that alone. You came here by the organized authority of the men who, and who alone, had the right to vote upon your rights to membership in this body.

Now, will you undertake to say that what has been created here an office is no office? Will you say that this position, which has been reported as being above all other offices, is not an office under the Constitution? Absurd! It is equivalent to saying that that which is mandatory is directory merely; that those who have been determined by the written instrument as the foundation, as the organizing element of this commonwealth, have never acted, for the first time, within the meaning of the Constitution. Well, if membership here is not an office, why did the Constitution makers provide in that instrument for it?

Now, this sixteenth section can certainly have no reference to the third article. And it was because this third article was too weak and inefficient to prevent the aspirations of gentlemen to other and different political positions, this sixteenth section of article six was adopted. Some were hunting for Senatorships—they all wanted to go to Congress. The last man of them desired to be Governor. Everybody seemed to have had a political longing. This third article was designed to prevent this condition of things. It failed of its purpose, however. It was not strong enough in the links that bound gentlemen to their positions on the judicial bench. The Legislature, in its wisdom, at last concluded to chain down, by this provision, as with links of steel, these restless aspirants. In vain. The English language is not strong enough to bind men's consciences if this Convention ignores its terms and determines that this position is not an office within the meaning of the Constitution. Well, this Convention has the right to settle that question. You have the right to decide it. You have the right to make it a precedent for all time to come, that it is not possible for any people under an organized government, by an organized method, to change, alter, or amend their Constitution. But I say to you it is not law. It is not in accordance with the plain provisions which you and I have sworn to obey. That is all there is to it, and this view is borne out by Judge Cooley in his great work on Constitutional Limitations, and in Jameson on Conventions, cited by him.

Now, I do not choose to travel through the definitions of what constitutes an office. If you are not sufficiently enlightened as to what constitutes an office, it would be in vain to read to you authorities from now until doomsday. There is not a definition that has been given; you can find none within the lids of the books that this position will not fill as an office. You stand here as officers. All of you are members of a tribunal which, as determined by the majority of the Judiciary Committee, outranks them all. I acquiesce in it. It is true. But because it happens to be a political office, gentlemen tell me it is not included in the terms of the Constitution. Oh! gentlemen say the Constitution never intended, where it says "a judicial officer shall not exercise the functions of any other than a judicial office," that he should not exercise the functions of an office not belonging to one of the three great departments into which the powers of the Government are separated. But membership here is not the less an office because not embraced in some of these; and, as reported by the majority, in my opinion it outranks them all of every department. I acquiesce in that report so far as that part of it is concerned. It is true it outranks them all. It is a higher and more dignified position than that of Governor of the State, and in my estimation it outranks them all in being the highest political office within the gift of the people. But it is an organized office. You cannot gainsay, you cannot deny it. It is in the book; it is written as with an iron pen and will not out. It is an office and "outranks them all." Aye, more; it is written upon your consciences by an oath that should be remembered in your deliberations upon this question.

When gentlemen tell me this is not an office, within the meaning of the sixteenth section of article six of the Constitution, I understand them to say that the Legislature, after a period of twelve years had rolled away, and after it had had the benefit of experience and of the decisions of the Supreme Court given upon this subject with reference to article three, and after this article under the decisions given had been fully tried and found wanting—that Legislature, when it enacted section sixteen, of article six, had no reference at all to this class of officers. To believe that, with that experience, after the Legislature had tried in vain with as strong provision as it was possible to place within the lids of the books to curb down or chain down those aspirants for office, and keep them out of politics and allow them to discharge the duties of their office with unbiased minds—to believe that with all this experience, when that Legislature comes to determine that these aspirants shall hold no other office than a judicial office, it did not mean a political office, is the most marvelous stretch of credulity that mortal man can conceive. Still the proposition is easy of assertion.

Now how can I prove to you that this is an office as I assert it? If I say that I am here—that I exist, that I am, how will I prove that to you? How will I make you believe that fact, if you dispute it? Can I prove the proposition? No more can I establish to your understanding the proposition that membership here is a political office established by the Constitution and within its inhibitions. It is a self-evident proposition, announced by the instrument in plain terms that cannot be proven or denied.

I hardly think it worth while to follow out all the illustrations and precedents that have been cited here as establishing the right of Mr. Fawcett to a seat upon the floor of this Convention as a delegate. Here is the case of Mr. O'Melveny, who was elected a delegate of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Illinois, and who had been a Judge of the Circuit Court within a year prior to his election as delegate. The Constitution of the State provided that:

"Justices of the Supreme and Circuit Courts should not be eligible to any office of public trust or profit in the State or the United States during the term for which they were elected nor for one year thereafter, and that all votes for them for such other office of public trust or profit should be void."

Now, Mr. President, these gentlemen all know—they are lawyers, every one of them—that it is not the province of a State Constitution or Act of the Legislature of any State to determine the eligibility and right to hold office under the United States by any member of that government. They know that when the Constitution of this State prevents one who is holding the office either of Governor or Judge of the Supreme or any other Court from sitting as a member of Congress in the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States simply because he occupied a State office, that law is null and void. They knew that before they brought in the majority report, and that we have no jurisdiction over the Federal qualifications of any gentleman, be he Judge, Governor, or any other officer of the State. This being so, and that law being unconstitutional, they allowed that distinguished gentleman to take his seat in that Convention. Where could be the objection? But the same reasons which applied in that case will not apply in this. He had gone out of office, and though the law forbid him for one year thereafter from occupying any other position, still he did not occupy any office at the time of his election as a delegate. The cases are not parallel. Besides, the provision of the Illinois Constitution was the first and only enactment therein disqualifying officers, and there was no manifestation of design on the part of those who enacted that provision in any subsequent part of the Constitution by which to determine that its framers intended a more stringent rule. So it is possible there may have been some excuse or latitude for the Convention to determine that he might remain there. I think this a very reasonable hypothesis in reference to this Illinois case.

But, Mr. President, this committee say further that:

"We must not assume for a moment that the Convention which framed the present Constitution intended to trammel the succeeding generations in any such manner in the framing of a new organic law. It would have been contrary to the accepted theories of our Government that they should claim the right to define who should sit in such Convention."

Now, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Convention, it is not incredible that the people, in framing their first Constitution, should have foresight enough to say when it comes to the framing of a new Constitution—a new ship of State—you shall not take for that purpose the officers in command of the old ship. Is that unreasonable? Is it unreasonable, when you come to construct your new vessel and launch it, to have it said you shall not take the pilot from the wheel of the old craft? You shall not take the helmsman from its helm? You shall not take the captain from command? Storms may arise. There may be mutiny on board the old craft, who knows? Where are the watchmen you so carefully posted if these be taken from the old ship while the new one is being erected and launched? For God's sake, pause! When that storm arises—the captain taken, the helmsman overboard or dead, her engineer removed, what becomes of her vast machinery; what of that once carefully sailing craft now careering without rudder, compass, or guide? Is it anything unreasonable to say in the framework of your organic Act, you shall not disturb the officers of the old craft, lest, peradventure sailing at the mercy of the storm she strike upon some unseen rock, where, shivered to a wreck, she plunges headlong to the bottom of the deep?

These are some of the reasons that may be supposed to have actuated the gentlemen that this committee are so anxious to defend from the aspersions which the minority are charged with thrusting upon them, for declaring that the officers shall not be removed from their stations on board the old craft. Oh, what short-sighted architects they were in framing this very poor provision in reference to the old hulk to protect her when about being stranded or driven on the rocks and among the breakers. Why, sir, they even provided here that the captain should be retained, the pilot kept at his post; aye, that even the Judge, so far as that is concerned as between the crew and the master, should be left to watch, and watch closely that interest while this new work is in progress.

But that seems not to be the determination of the majority of this committee. They want a mutiny on board the old craft while it is yet under full sail; and they announce in bold terms that this Convention has the right to determine who now shall manage the old craft while this new one is building—while this new act is in progress. It is not law in any sense.

Now, the strongest argument made by any gentleman in favor of that report, was made by the first speaker when he announced, with stentorian voice and in clarion notes, that fix it indelibly on these walls, where loud and long by their reëchoes in every crevice, from pit to dome, they still repeat, "It is no office, it is no office." And that is their whole argument. There is no pith or bottom to it. It is "voice and nothing more." It is not founded on any reason or rule. It is not founded on the reason that actuated the Legislature in framing this new amendment to the Constitution designed for the purpose of curbing the ambition of gentlemen who desire to fill too many offices.

Now I do not say—I will not so reflect upon the distinguished gentleman whose seat is in contest here, and whom I admire as much as any gentleman can—that he was so actuated. I believe he is a man of integrity; I believe that whether he remains or goes hence he does so with as much integrity of character as any gentleman here. I will give him credit for as much honesty as any gentleman of the Convention; but I believe him to be mistaken. I do not think he has reasoned in any other light than that in which the majority of the committee have reasoned. I believe their reasoning is based upon assumptions not borne out by the letter or spirit of the law. If any one is sticking in the bark the majority of the committee are the ones that are in the bark, and they have never gotten out of it, and never will. If they had taken the pains to ascertain how many officers that have hitherto been filling double and treble offices, in some instances dealing them out by the pound, as it were, and taking the compensation without discharging the duties themselves, they would have recognized the necessity of this sixteenth section as amended in eighteen hundred and sixty-two.

It is manifest, Mr. President, when it is considered that for twelve years this State groaned under the experience hinted at in relation to the ambitious projects of those officers, until even our legislators, fond of office as most of them are, determined there should be at least one department of government kept pure and untrammeled by the questions agitating the people—by political questions—as much as possible. Now it will be in vain for gentlemen to assert that this Constitution (which we are to frame) is not a political question.

There never was a more hotly contested canvass than that between the "Non-Partisans," Democrats, Republicans, and Workingmen for membership in this body. And that canvass is still here to-day on some of the same issues that divided the parties on the day of that election. And it was for the very purpose of preventing judicial officers from entering into the political arena and mixing with the strife upon these political questions that both these constitutional provisions were enacted.

Now, these gentlemen say that this is not a political question, in this, that it is above the people. But it is not so far above the people but what the people must determine the question at last, whether we have expressed by our work here their true political sentiments. Now, had they gone down and made these inquiries in advance among the masses, and had discovered that there were, in fact, Judges filling and aspiring to fill other positions, and had come to the conclusion that this was the reason which actuated the Legislature and people in passing this sixteenth section of article six of the Constitution, they would have arrived at the reason and spirit of the law. They did not want to go down there—I ask pardon—they did not go down. Now, if any of these gentlemen have the curiosity to examine the decisions made in reference to this question, from the year eighteen hundred and fifty to eighteen hundred and sixty-three, they will find them collated and commented on in 34th California Reports, from page 130 to 134, in a decision in which Judge Sanderson undertakes to overturn and reverse the solemn adjudication that had been made in his own case three years before, when he himself had endeavored to occupy a position antagonistic (as I maintain) to his then position as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of this State. He intended to prove that he was right anyhow, and there we have his authority for it.

We are, therefore, most happy ourselves to defend the able and distinguished men who framed our Constitution from any and all aspersions on their names. But where are the aspersions cast by the minority on the names of the framers of that Constitution? The first framers did so at an early day, according to the best of their judgment. They thought they had placed provisions there sufficiently strong to protect every department, by first of all denying to the officers of each of the great departments into which the powers of the State are divided, the exercise of any of the functions pertaining to either of the others, and afterwards, by a special provision in the same instrument, forbidding the functions of some of these departments from being exercised by certain particularly named officers. But the complications were too great; there were too many snares environing the Courts, too many loopholes for aspirants to creep through—these aspirants for office, these place-hunters. At last the Legislature seized upon them with an iron grasp, and placed upon them a clincher which it intended should be special and prohibitory. But even this was in vain. It is the Legislature of the State, therefore, that requires this defense, and the people who supported them for two successive terms, first in the proposition for the amendment, and afterwards in its adoption as a firm fixture in the Constitution.

I say, then, this majority report should have been in vindication of the Legislature, and not of the Convention that took the primary proceedings for its adoption. But who is contending for this third article of the Constitution? No one. We say it was right in its place, and would have remained an ample protection against cases like this if the Supreme Court had held it valid and in point, as they should have done. But having neglected to enforce it in its full integrity, the Legislature determined that there should be some unmistakable provision, and they put it into this sixteenth section of article six, in eighteen hundred and sixty-two. I say, then, if there is to be any vindication here, let it be of the Legislature, and not of the primary Convention.

Mr. President, these are some of the ideas which lead me to vote as I shall vote; and I really, conscientiously believe, that, first of all, membership here is an office; that, above all, it is a constitutional office; that it is an office under an organized system of government, and is a part of the machinery of this Government for the framing of a new Constitution; that it is preëminently, above all others, a political office, and that it is included within the inhibitions of section sixteen of article six of the Constitution, which denies to District Judges the right to exercise the functions of any other office.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: The question before us has assumed a position of more than ordinary importance, and it may be pardonable for every gentleman on this floor, before he casts his vote upon this question, to explain the reasons for the faith that is in him. As I understand the questions, Mr. President, there are two of them; first, as to the constitutional limitations which are placed upon this Convention, and, second, admitting that these limitations apply to the members of this Convention, is the position occupied by Judge Fawcett as a delegate an office? I assume, sir, first—and I do not propose to discuss that question at any length, the position taken by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, on the question as to the limitation of the powers of this Convention by section sixteen of article six of the old Constitution, does not apply to the members of this Convention or to any Constitutional Convention organized pursuant to the old Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine and fifty. I maintain that the Constitution and its limitations and all of its provisions were made with the sole view of providing for the government of the people. The limitations of the legislative, the limitations of the judiciary, and of the executive departments of the government under that Constitution, were intended for the people of the State organized under that Constitution, and they must obey its provisions.

The facts are that the present Constitution provides that in some future time, when the people of this State shall in their wisdom conclude that the present Constitution no longer represents the average judgment of the people of this State, that a new one might be made. It was to be a new one, coming in all its form from the people, perfect in all its parts, and the people were to be the sovereigns of that new machine with which they were to run this great institution of the State government.

Now, sir, pursuant to that part of the Constitution the Legislature authorized the people of the State to meet at the polls and decide whether there should be or should not be a Constitutional Convention. They met, and they decided that there should be a Constitutional Convention, and the organic law under which we meet authorized the making and submitting to the people of a draft of a new Constitution, organizing a new Government, inserting a new set of ideas for the protection and government of the people. This was done upon the theory that the people, and not the Legislature, were the sovereigns. Therefore, so far, I most heartily agree with the position of the minority of the Committee on Judiciary in its report. I believe that we are not the sovereigns. Not only that, but I maintain that we are here merely as a committee, representing the whole people of this State, to report to them what in our judgment would be wise for the people to adopt. We occupy no other position. I cannot imagine any other position that we can occupy. They have said to us, you cannot make for us a Constitution; we are the sovereigns; we are the head of this Government. You cannot make for us a Constitution, but you can draft one and submit it to us, and if it suits us we will adopt it and make it our own child. We will breathe into it vitality, and start this Government on a new road to prosperity. That is the position, as I understand it, that we occupy to-day.

Now, sir, if that position be the true one, I want to know, unless there be a constitutional limitation as to the qualification of the delegates of this Convention, what right we—who are but the instruments of the people, representing in our individual capacities only a part of the people from our several districts—have to say to the sovereigns of another part of the State you shall select a man as a delegate to this Convention who is thirty years old; who holds an office or who does not hold an office; who is a bald-headed man or who has plenty of hair; who is wise or unwise, except so far as the statute itself limits that power. Sir, the power to make Constitutions is a sovereign power. And when a gentleman says here that I, a representative of a part of the people of this State, selected only as a committeeman for the specific purpose of drafting a new Constitution, to the remaining people of this State, that they shall select a man that suits him to make the organic law for them, I maintain, sir, that he is going beyond the authority contemplated in the old Constitution.

Now, sir, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, only the other day, in the case of Wells vs. Baine, maintained this position. I read from Seventy-fifth Pennsylvania, page fifty-seven, and I want it distinctly understood, Mr. President, that, for one, I recognize the fact that we came here to act by authority of law; that in the ordinary acceptation of the term we are not a revolutionary body; that we are organized under the laws of the State, so far as the law gives us power of organization. But the limitation of our powers and authority are not marked out, except so far as that we are to report back our acts to the people. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania says, referring to the Constitutional Convention of eighteen hundred and seventy-three:

"The Convention is not a coördinate branch of the government. It exercises no governmental power, but is a body raised by law in aid of the popular desire to discuss and prepare amendments, which have no governing force so long as they remain propositions. While it acts within the scope of its delegated powers it is not amenable for its acts, but when it assumes to legislate, to repeal and displace existing institutions before they are displaced by the adoption of its propositions, it acts without authority, and the citizens injured thereby are entitled, under the declaration of rights, to an open Court and to redress at our hands."

Now, if it is not a coördinate branch of the Government I want to ask the Convention: Is that part of our Constitution which prescribes the duties and fixes the limitations of the judiciary a coördinate branch of the Government of the people of the State of California? If that is so, and if this Convention is not one of the coördinate branches of the Government, then, sir, the existing Constitution can have no application as to the rights of membership on the floor or as to our powers when we are here. I understand that the distinguished gentleman who wrote the minority report has referred to Jameson as an authority upon this question, and I beg leave to call the attention of this house to a consideration of much importance. The Courts say that "this is not a coördinate branch of Government. That it exercises no governmental power." And why does it not exercise governmental power? Why, sir, for the highest reason in the world, viz.: it is above the written law. We come here for the purpose of making a draft of a Constitution which, if adopted, will wipe from the records the hitherto organic law of the State and establish itself in its place, and it is done, sir, by the inherent majesty and power of the people of this State. They are the sovereigns in this matter. In the case I have cited the Convention undertook to provide a new election law for the State of Pennsylvania, whereby that Constitution should be submitted in peculiar forms. But the Supreme Court held that "when it (the Convention) assumes to legislate, to repeal and displace existing institutions before they are displaced by the adoption of its provisions, it acts without authority, and the citizens injured thereby are entitled under the declaration of rights to an open Court and redress at our hands." My proposition is, following that decision, that this Convention is not a coördinate branch of the government, that it is a body merely representing the sovereign people, and for the sole reason that the one hundred thousand voters (or whatever other number of them may be in this State) cannot, from the inconvenience of the position, come here and legislate for themselves. But so careful are they that we shall not infringe upon the rights of their sovereignty that they say to us: "After you shall have drafted a Constitution you shall submit it to us, and if it is satisfactory to us we will adopt it; if not, we will reject it."

Following in this train of thought, sir, let me call your attention to what Judge Cooley says about this matter—Mr. Cooley is a recognized authority upon constitutional law:

"In accordance with universal practice, and from the very necessity of the case, amendments to an existing Constitution, or entire revisions of it, must be prepared and matured by some body of representatives chosen for the purpose. It is obviously impossible for the whole people to meet, prepare, and discuss the proposed alterations, and there seems to be no feasible mode by which an expression of their will can be obtained, except by asking it upon the single point of approval or disapproval. But no body of representatives, unless specially clothed with power for that purpose by the people when choosing them, can rightfully take definitive action upon amendments or revisions; they must submit the result of their deliberations to the people—who alone are competent to exercise the powers of sovereignty in framing the fundamental law—for ratification or rejection. The Constitutional Convention is the representative of sovereignty only in a very qualified sense, and for the specific purpose and with the restricted authority to put in form the questions of amendment upon which the people are to pass; but the changes in the fundamental law of the State must be enacted by the people themselves."

If that be the law, and we are here only as the employés and agents of the people, I want to know where we get the right to say to any portion of the sovereign people of this State: "You shall not be represented in this Convention." The position is an extraordinary one, that the people of the whole State themselves shall not reorganize their government in their own way, electing delegates of their own choice whom they can control, and who shall represent their thoughts and their best ideas to this Convention.

As a question of policy, I might wander a little further from this proposition of law, and say that hitherto, in almost every one of the one hundred and fifty Constitutional Conventions that have been organized in the United States, it has been to the people a pride and honor to bring within the pales of the Convention the strongest intellects and the purest characters its society produced. Hitherto, whenever a man of marked ability, of distinguished virtue, of high reputation at home and abroad, was found in the community, that man was selected from his fellows and made a member of the Convention. As a rule, it has been done regardless of any position he occupied. When a man was found whose broad and liberal views made him respected and looked up to by the people, as the child to the father, they have said to him: "Your experience—lasting through possibly three quarters of a century—entitles you to come here and mark out the line of policy which your children shall follow." Pursuant to that line of action, Chancellor Kent—a man whose character is well known to every English law reader in Europe and America—occupied that position. He, sir, was a member of the Constitutional Convention of the State of New York in eighteen hundred and twenty-one, at the same time that he was Chancellor of that great State. And while he was a member of that Convention, there were other distinguished jurists of the State of New York who occupied a like position. Among them were Ambrose Spencer, Chief Justice; Jones Platt, Circuit Judge, and W. P. Van Ness, Circuit Judge. They met there in the Constitutional Convention of eighteen hundred and twenty-one, and they framed that Constitution under which the people of New York lived up to eighteen hundred and forty-eight, I think. And they met there, notwithstanding a provision of the Constitution, which I will read to you, and no question was raised as to their qualifications or their fitness. And let me say here, that after one hundred and fifty Constitutional Conventions have been held, it remained alone for Illinois and California to raise objections to bringing within its pale a judicial officer. The Illinois Convention decided wisely that it was not an office, and that the gentleman was entitled to hold the position. California is yet to decide that question. The Constitution framed for New York in seventeen hundred and eighty-seven, under which the Constitutional Convention of eighteen hundred and twenty-one was called, reads as follows:

"That the Chancellor and Judges of the Supreme Court shall not, at the same time, hold any other office, excepting that of delegate to the General Congress."

At that time the Constitution of the United States had not been adopted, and these were delegates elected to the General Congress of the United States, and that was the only exception. And yet, sir, these distinguished men sat in that Convention and helped to frame the Constitution of eighteen hundred and twenty-one. In eighteen hundred and forty-six there was another Convention, held under the Constitution framed in eighteen hundred and twenty-one, which provided as follows:

"Neither the Chancellor, nor Justices of the Supreme Court, nor any Circuit Judge, shall hold any other office or public trust. All votes for any elective office, given by the Legislature or the people, for the Chancellor, a Justice of the Supreme Court, or Circuit Judge, during his continuance in his judicial office, shall be void."

I want to know if you can find a constitutional provision more stringent, more binding, more incisive, than that of eighteen hundred and twenty-one. And yet, sir, on examination I find there were very many officers in that Convention judicial and legislative. It is admitted this refers to the judiciary, but there is another provision in regard to the Legislature. There was Charles H. Ruggles, of Duchess County, New York, who was a delegate to that Convention, and at the same time was Circuit Judge. Samuel J. Tilden, then a member of the Legislature, was a member of that Convention. This shows that the duties of delegates to a Constitutional Convention were not then and there understood to mean official duties under the written Constitution of the State of New York.

Now, sir, I find, pursuing this subject a little further, as to whether members of a Constitutional Convention are officers or not, that this great authority, Jameson on Constitutional Conventions, while he does exactly say as the minority of this committee has reported to the Convention, yet he also produces authority right the reverse of his position. And if you are guided by Jameson, you must believe that his authority is superior to all the precedents of all the Constitutional Conventions heretofore held. The word office could be made to extend to almost any relation in life. A man performs an office when he is a church warden. He may perform a species of office when he is doing any one act whereby the public are interested on the one side and he is receiving emolument on the other. But, sir, an office, as I understand it, means an office prescribed by the Constitution, and whose duties are marked out by it. Now, sir, upon this proposition I read from Jameson, page two hundred and ninety-one, section three hundred and seven, where he lays down two theories; one is that the Convention is a strictly representative body, and the other is that it is a committee of the people. The latter position, I maintain. We are in the relation of delegates, only delegated to perform certain duties, like the boy in my office. I tell him to draw a complaint upon a note. He takes the note and draws the complaint and submits it to me, and if I believe it is right I adopt it; and if it is not, I do not. And that is just the position we occupy. Now Jameson says:

"In other words, in its last analysis a Convention, according to this second theory, is a mere committee sitting for a specified purpose, under the express mandate of the sovereign, and possessed of such powers only as are expressly granted, or as are necessary and proper for the execution of powers expressly granted."

I submit to the gentleman from Marin, Judge Shafter, if that is not the true position we occupy. The sovereign there means the people, and it means nothing else. De Tocqueville and Leiber, authorities on Democracy in America, claim that "the sovereignty of the Government rests in the people." If we recognize that to be true, I ask the gentlemen from San Francisco, who want to protect the people, to stand by the people who have elected this man to represent them here. Now, what is the object of this contest? Is it to vindicate any great question of constitutional law? If it is it strikes me that it ought to have been done to such great men as Chief Justice Marshall, James Kent, and those men who have lived in the past. But nothing of the kind has ever been done. If it is done to vindicate any question of constitutional law we have no right to vindicate it here. We are not here as a judicial body. We are not here to lay down a line of policy for Courts. We are not a coördinate branch of this Government. We are here to perform a special duty and we can do nothing more.

SPEECH OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. President: Highly as I regard the opinions of the distinguished gentlemen who have taken a position opposite to the one I hold, and who have presented this majority report, and highly as I regard the opinion of my learned and eloquent friend, Mr. Estee, still, a common sense of duty, a sense of duty to myself, and to the people of this State, compels me to dissent from the views of those gentlemen.

I believe, sir, when I entered these halls I took an oath of office, as the other members did, that I would be bound by the Constitution of my State. And that no matter what other States might have done, no matter what the Constitutional Convention of Virginia may have done, I would obey the Constitution of California. The Constitution of the State of Virginia, which has been referred to here, was the first Constitution framed in that State, and stood on a different basis, for there were no prior constitutional provisions to fetter the members in any manner. The Government had not as yet been established. True, as the gentleman from Sacramento has said, they may have been trammeled by law, but they did not have the high law of a Constitution emanating direct from the people, and the delegates were left in a great measure to choose their own course of action. Notwithstanding the definitions of Webster and Worcester, and the opinions of Jameson, and Cooley, and Pomeroy, which have been so frequently invoked here, I say the Constitution is above all statute law, above everything but the people themselves, and I maintain, sir, that we are here as members of this body to defend this Constitution, and not to allow any man to sit in this Convention whom the Constitution declares to be ineligible.

It is true, as stated by Mr. Estee and others in the majority report of the Judiciary Committee, that the Illinois Convention, after a very lengthy debate, decided that a man holding a judicial office was not ineligible to a seat in the Convention. Yet, while as I before remarked in substance, I will admit that we may be at times governed by precedents. I will admit that Judges are, and that attorneys are; but there are times when these precedents do not come up to the case in question, to the point at issue, and I hold that such is the case at present. We are all well aware that errors of judgment may be committed of great ability and learning, by Judges on the highest benches in the country, as well as by the immature youth, and men of inexperience and ordinary learning. Mistakes are not confined to one class of people, and as the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, and other learned and eminent gentlemen may interpret this clause in the Constitution and give their views upon it, so do I, and so does any other humble gentleman, and we have the same right to be heard upon this question.

Now, sir, following the strict provisions of section sixteen, of article six, of the Constitution, that: "Judges of the Supreme Court, and District Judges, and County Judges, shall be ineligible to any other office than a judicial office, during the term for which they shall have been elected." I believe myself, and I say conscientiously, not with any personal motive, with no feeling against the honorable and distinguished gentleman whose seat is contested here, but, sir, with a conscientious sense of duty, looking upon this question as I do, I believe that the gentleman is not eligible under the Constitution. That, sir, is the view I take, even if other gentlemen hold the contrary. And, sir, I believe the remarks of the eminent gentleman from San Francisco, Col. Barnes, are sufficient in themselves, that they are an argument in themselves, why this gentleman should not be allowed to retain his seat here. I will read from the Record-Union of this morning, which gives his remarks made on this floor yesterday:

"Mr. Barnes supported the claims of Judge Fawcett, giving at length his views of the objects which the law contemplated when it prohibited the officers of one department of government from exercising the functions of any other department. It was designed, he said, to keep the judiciary perfectly free from the excitements, pleasures, pains, and penalties of political life. It designed to place the Judge upon the bench in such a position that he should know no parties, but only the cause; that he should never descend from the bench to the pool of politics to be flattered by friends, to be threatened by enemies, to be libeled by the press, to have his influence and power as a Judge destroyed for political purposes, and political purposes only. That was the intention, that was the beginning and the end of it."

I hold that that is a sufficient reason why the people of that county which this distinguished gentleman has the honor to represent—why he should not have been a candidate for this position, and why no District Judge should be a candidate for a position of this kind, or of any political character. I believe, sir, that when the framers of this Constitution placed this section in it, it was for the very good reason that Judges ought never to descend from the bench, even to a position of this character. Call it an office or not, call it what you will, even though you endeavor to remove politics from it, yet I do not believe that any Judge should come down from the bench to be a candidate for any position. The gentleman himself has said that when he first considered the matter of his own eligibility, at first blush he was decidedly of the opinion that he was not eligible, but afterwards, in consultation with members of the bar, he changed his mind on that subject. I say his first impression was the correct one, and he would have done better to have abided by it. And I believe, as I said, that when that section was placed in the Constitution, declaring judicial officers ineligible to any other than a judicial office, that it was eminently right and proper; that it was in the interest of the people that they should never be allowed to occupy positions of this character, or any political position whatever.

And, as the venerable and able gentleman from Los Angeles said yesterday, I do not attack the Judge on the ground that he is not qualified to sit here, either by learning, experience, or ability. I believe he is a man of purity of character. I do not oppose him upon any ground of qualification, so far as regards ability or integrity, but simply on the ground that he is ineligible, and that the duties he owes to the people of the counties he represents requires that he should be there. He stated to us that the November term of his Court would be postponed, as he could not be present to attend to his duties as Judge, and remain in this Convention too. That is true, and I say that the duty he owes to the people of those counties as Judge, should be sufficient ta require his constant presence there. Recognizing his ability, his honesty, his integrity, and his worth, at the same time I believe that there is his place and not here.

I wish now to call the attention of the Convention for a few moments, while I read the decision of the Supreme Court of this State in the case of "The People vs. Burgoyne." I think the questions involved were very much the same as the question involved in this case. The opinions was delivered by the Chief Justice, and presents this question in such a clear, lucid manner, that there is no mistaking the meaning.

Several questions were raised in the argument of this case, only one of which it is deemed necessary to examine, viz.: The power of the Legislature to confer other than judicial functions upon the Courts of Sessions.

"The eighth section of the sixth article of the Constitution of this State, title, 'Judicial Department,' provides as follows: 'The County Judge, with two Justices of the Peace, to be designated according to law, shall hold Courts of Sessions with such criminal jurisdiction as the Legislature shall prescribe, and he shall perform such other duties as shall be required by law.'

"The first session of the Legislature holding under the Constitution, acting, in all probability, without reference to the distribution of the various powers of our State government, as provided in article three, conferred upon the Courts of Sessions the entire management of the financial business of the counties. Among other duties enjoined, was that of purchase or erection of suitable buildings for Court-houses and public offices.

"In compliance with the Act of April tenth, eighteen hundred and fifty, the contract, out of which has grown the subject-matter of this suit, was made.

"It is now contended, admitting the contract was fair and equal in all its parts, that it is not binding upon the County of San Francisco.

"First, because, by the third article of the Constitution, it is provided that the powers of the State government shall be divided into three separate departments, the legislative, executive, and judicial; and no person charged with the execution of powers properly belonging to one of these departments, shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except in cases expressly directed or permitted; and second, because the eighth section of the sixth article of the Constitution, before quoted, does not confer the exercise of this jurisdiction upon Courts of Sessions, but limits their jurisdiction to criminal cases alone.

"In discussing the first proposition, it is only necessary to remark, that in the previous decisions of this Court we have repeatedly alluded to the distribution of powers by the Constitution, as a leading feature, never for a moment lost sight of by its framers, but carefully preserved for the purpose of maintaining the integrity of the different departments intact, and securing the harmony and symmetry of the whole, by restraining each to its particular orbit.

"The history of almost every nation is replete with struggles between the judicial, the executive, and legislative branches of government, for unlimited supremacy, and demonstrates, that unless curbed by wholesome constitutional restrictions, each department will, in its turn, encroach upon and interfere with the functions of other coördinate branches of government. This spirit of usurpation and encroachment has been more frequently directed toward the judiciary than any other department. In England, it was only determined by resort to civil war, which resulted in the establishment of the entire independence of the judiciary, as well as the commons while in this country, it has been avoided by the enlightened wisdom and experience of the framers of our Federal and State Constitutions.

"Acting upon this understanding, our Constitution was designed to secure the same uniformity and harmony of operation; and we do not know how the Convention that framed it could have expressed that intention more intelligibly.

"A recurrence to the origin and reasons that induced this distribution of powers, would seem conclusive upon this case, in which the Legislature have imposed upon a Court ordained by the Constitution for the transaction of criminal business, powers belonging to the executive and legislative departments of government, not even quasi judicial in their character.

"It is, however, argued by the appellant in reply, that the Court of Sessions has not been vested by the Constitution with any of the judicial power of the State. That the sixth article of the Constitution, title, 'Judicial Department,' provides, that the judicial power of the State shall be vested in a 'Supreme Court, District Courts, County Courts, and Justices of the Peace.'

"The Legislature may also establish such municipal and other inferior Courts as may be deemed necessary. That inasmuch as this section does not enumerate 'Courts of Sessions,' they are no part of the judicial department, and the Legislature, in all powers not denied by the Constitution, may invest them with such jurisdiction as may be deemed proper.

"This is a narrow and forced construction, and one which cannot be supported. If the Courts of Sessions are not to be regarded as a part of the judiciary, what becomes of the criminal jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution. We can only determine to what branch of the government they belong, by the character of their officers, and the nature of the duties enjoined. Here is a 'Court,' over which three judicial officers, known as such to the Constitution, are appointed to preside and administer, with such criminal jurisdiction as the Legislature may provide.

"Now, if the first section of the sixth article necessarily limits the judicial power to the Courts therein mentioned, by parity of reasoning, the first section of the fourth article, and the first section of the fifth article, which define in what the legislative and executive power of the State shall consist, operate a like limitation, from which it would follow, that inasmuch as Courts of Sessions are not specially enumerated in either of these sections, they belong to a fourth or nondescript branch of the government, upon which any and every power may be conferred, uncontrolled, except by the wisdom of the Legislature, notwithstanding that the third article has divided the powers of the State into three departments.

"There is another view of this question, which, I apprehend, is conclusive. Not only does the Constitution forbid the exercise of the functions of one department by any other department, but it has gone further, and to secure the complete integrity of each, has, by the third article, expressly forbid 'persons charged with the powers of one from exercising duties properly belonging to another department;' from which it follows no duties, except of a judicial character, can be conferred on the Courts of Sessions, inasmuch as the officers composing these Courts are persons charged by the Constitution expressly with the performance of judicial functions.

"Upon the second point it is equally clear that the eighth section of the sixth article necessarily limits the jurisdiction of these Courts to criminal business. Affirmative words often import a negative, except as to the matter so affirmed. In the present case, the grant of criminal jurisdiction negatives any other, just as much as that of appellate to the Supreme, or original to the District Courts, limits the jurisdiction of these Courts (as has before been decided by us).

"If any doubt could exist as to the propriety of this construction, it might be easily resolved by an examination of the sixth article of the Constitution, from which it appears that more than ordinary care has been expended in parceling out the exact judicial powers of each Court. The argument is also strengthened by the fact that the fifth section of the ninth article expressly provides for a Board of Supervisors in each county, 'who shall jointly and individually perform such duties as may be prescribed by law.' Constitutions seldom contain redundant or irrelevant matter, and if the framers of ours had understood that the eighth section of the sixth article provided for the exercise of these powers, it is hardly to be supposed that they would have needlessly committed them to any other Board or tribunal.

"It is, however, contended, admitting that these duties cannot be enjoined upon a Court, they may be conferred on the Judges thereof as commissioners, and that the exercise of them by the Judges as commissioners and not as judicial officers, would not be unconstitutional. The first answer to this position has been already stated, viz: That the officers composing the Court of Sessions are judicial officers, and, consequently, are forbidden from exercising any other functions. And second, that the Act of April tenth, eighteen hundred and fifty, confers these duties upon the Court, in direct words, and not upon the members as commissioners. A question similar to this arose in the case of the United States vs. Yale Todd, reported in 13 Howard, in a note to the case of the United States vs. Finiera, page 52, in which the same doctrine was affirmed.

"It will be observed, that the language of the Constitution is not that they, the County Judges and two Justices, 'shall perform such other duties,' etc., but 'he shall,' marking more explicitly, if possible, the intention of the Constitution. But even were it otherwise, and the word they had been used, we have shown that, by every well settled rule of construction, as well as the scope and spirit of the instrument itself, the other duties so mentioned must be limited to those of a judicial character.

"We have considered the argument drawn from contemporaneous legislative construction, as well as the recognized legal proposition, that in doubtful cases every intendment should be in favor of the constitutionality of legislative enactments; but these axioms should apply in cases of doubt. In this instance we have none.

"This question was recently decided by the Judge of the Sixth Judicial District, in an able and well considered opinion, in which the same views are taken, and which meet with the almost uniform approbation of the bench and the bar."

Now, sir, that case expresses, to my mind, the reasons why a judicial office cannot be joined with any other, where the duties are similar. The Courts of this and other States have held to the same opinion, and there is no doubt but that construction of the question is the correct one. Gentlemen of the Judiciary Committee, in their majority report, have referred to the case of the People vs. Provines, but I hold that any man who has examined that decision carefully will agree with me that it cuts no figure in this case; that the circumstance which caused that opinion to be made does not make it a criterion to govern men in their action upon this in sustaining Judge Fawcett. The opinion of Sawyer concurring and Rhodes dissenting, to my mind convey the proper impression. I read from the opinion of Justice Sawyer. He says:

"The characteristics of many powers and duties are so marked that there can be no difficulty in determining whether they belong to the legislative, executive, or judicial departments of the government. But the lines between the several departments are not defined with precision, and there are other powers and duties that partake of the nature of duties pertaining to more than one of these departments, and may as properly be referred to one as the other, or may not strictly belong to either."

Following further, he says:

"The person to be appointed is required to have certain qualifications. He must be a citizen of the United States, and of the State, and a resident and a qualified voter of the city and county, and he must be of good repute for honesty and sobriety; and he is required to produce evidence to this effect to the Police Commissioners."

This was in the case of the Police Judge. This case was an action brought by the Attorney-General, in the name of the people, against the defendant, the Police Judge of San Francisco, who was also one of the Police Commissioners. The duties were of such a character, so nearly similar, that one person filled them both, which is not the case here with Judge Fawcett, who holds the position of District Judge in Santa Barbara and the adjoining counties, and also of delegate to the Constitutional Convention. Pursuing, Justice Sawyer says:

"I deem it proper to add, that, in my judgment, if the principles supposed to be established by the case of Burgoyne vs. Supervisors of San Francisco were more doubtful than they are, the case has been too often affirmed, and too long regarded as settling the construction of the Constitution on the point involved, to justify a reëxamination as an original question. It was thoroughly and elaborately argued by counsel fully competent to the task, and maturely considered. The question was also in subsequent cases elaborately argued and considered, and the case reaffirmed, till, in later cases, it has been followed without further question by bench and bar—the effort being to distinguish the cases as they arose. Most if not all of our predecessors have had occasion to consider the question in some form, and have acquiesced in the construction if they have not expressly affirmed it. If anything can be regarded as settled, the construction of the Constitution on this point ought to be so regarded, especially as the Constitution has been amended since discussion ceased, and the inconvenience of the construction established was not found sufficient to suggest an amendment.

"The counsel in this case do not directly make the point that the decision referred to is erroneous, but content themselves with maintaining that the case now under consideration is consistent with the prior decisions. For these reasons, I shall decline to enter into a discussion of the propriety of the construction established. Cogent arguments can doubtless be urged on both sides; but this is a reason for allowing the construction to stand, rather than for disturbing it.

"The only remaining question is, does any statute authorize the Police Judge to act in the appointment of police officers? That such authority was found at one time, under the Consolidation Act, is conceded; but it is claimed that the provisions of that Act have been superseded by subsequent Acts passed in pursuance of the amendment to section ten, article six of the Constitution, requiring the Legislature to fix by law the jurisdiction of inferior municipal Courts, and the powers, duties, and responsibilities of their Judges; that the Judiciary Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and the Act of January twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and sixty-four (Laws 1863, p. 344, and Laws 1863–4, p. 30), cover the entire subject-matter of the jurisdiction and powers of the Police Court and Police Judge; and that, as the subject of appointing policemen is not mentioned in either, it is reasonable to conclude that the Legislature did not design to continue this power."

In conclusion, Justice Rhodes, a very able and learned Judge, in his dissenting opinion says:

"I concur with Mr. Justice Sanderson, in his reasoning and conclusion upon the first point. Upon the second point, without expressing an opinion as to the conclusiveness of his argument, it is sufficient to say that I am not prepared to overrule a series of decisions almost continuous from Burgoyne's Case, in eighteen hundred and fifty-five, to the present time, and therefore dissent from the judgment."

Now, sir, a majority of the Court in that decision have overturned a line of decisions that have been held to be good for years, that a man filling the office of Judge could not hold any other official position. While that is the only decision in this State, that I am aware of, that gentlemen have alluded to, that is contrary to the views I take, I hold, sir, as I stated before, that it is not enough to govern this body in their action in voting to retain Judge Fawcett in his seat, for them to consider that he is eligible. But, sir, there are other reasons as strong, if not stronger, which have been advanced here by gentlemen on this floor, why he should not be allowed to retain his seat. I believe that with this provision in the Constitution, as clear as it is, which expressly says that no Judge shall be eligible to any other office than a judicial office during the term for which he is elected, that when a man is a delegate to this body, in the face of a provision of that kind in the Constitution—one so clear and explicit in its terms—when he finds that such is the case, and when we find that Judge Fawcett is now filling the position of District Judge, which he himself admits, that if there was any doubt in his mind as to whether this is an office or not, that doubt should be resolved in favor of the people of this State, who are now in destitution and misery, that has been entailed upon them by legislation in favor of capital, by the interpretation of the Courts, to a great extent, in favor of capital, and, I am sorry to say, in many cases by learned lawyers, who are willing to interpret in their favor. I say, sir, in this case, that when a man is drawing a salary as District Judge, and that too a large one, and drawing another salary in this Convention, he is ineligible to membership in this Convention; that he is doing a wrong to the people, and taking the money which should be left in the State treasury, which belongs to the people, and that should be applied to other necessary and legal purposes.

Now the gentleman from San Francisco, a few days since, spoke in reference to the wail of universal discontent, which could have been more properly termed a wail of universal anguish, when the people see their money wasted and squandered, and legislation turned in favor of capital, and laws and constitutions interpreted in favor of capital. I think, sir, when a man is drawing one salary from the State, that should be sufficient without trying to draw another. It must all come out of the hard earnings of the toiling masses. This evil prevails to an alarming extent, and he who fills one position, has quite all he can attend to. Then, sir, entertaining these opinions as I do, about this proposition—I agree with the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman, when he stated that Webster declares an office is a duty, a trust, a charge, and Bouvier says in his law dictionary that it is the exercise of a public function or employment, and this is certainly one of those cases where there are public functions to be exercised, and he is drawing pay for it; it is a public employment; therefore, holding that it is an office I shall vote against the sitting member. I believe that the opinions of such eminent men as Jameson, to the effect that membership in a Constitutional Convention is an office, is worthy of respect. And I believe that the opinions of Webster and Bouvier are worthy of respect, when they give definitions as regards the word "office."

At this point, the hour for recess having arrived, the Convention took a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll call dispensed with.

NOTICE.

Mr. LARKIN. Mr. President: I wish to give notice that I shall at twelve o'clock to-night move the previous question.

MR. BARRY'S REMARKS CONTINUED.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. President: I have not expressly, or by implication, impugned the motives of any gentleman of the Judiciary Committee, or the motives of any gentlemen in this body, who have adopted or expressed the same views enunciated in the report. I believe they are men of such distinguished ability, of such high sense of honor, that they speak as they believe to be right; and I only ask that they will concede the same right to me, and the same honesty of purpose to me that I am willing to concede to them. And when on yesterday the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, referred to our report, or a portion of it, in the manner that he did, I think it was unworthy of him. I do not think there is any portion of that report that is discourteous, or that we said anything in that report which is improper. He referred to this portion, which I will read:

"The impropriety of the action contemplated in the resolution reported by the committee, and the justice and necessity of the above opinion, is decisively enforced by the results of its adoption. If anything is certain to be done by this Convention, it is a remodeling of the judicial department. One of the propositions already passed upon by the Judiciary Committee, and to be reported to this Convention, is the utter abolition of the District Courts—their name even is to be erased from the Constitution; and yet the majority resolution would retain a gentleman here who will be required to pass upon the further existence of his office and its emoluments, and perhaps to determine the result by his single vote. 'No one ought to be judge in his own cause,' is a legal maxim hitherto held to be of universal application."

I believe this is founded on reason, logic, and right, and there is nothing discourteous in it. I signed that minority report, and I believe the sentiments therein expressed to be right and correct, and I still stand by that report. I presume the gentleman spoke hastily when he made the remarks, and had not read the report carefully.

Judge Fawcett, the claimant for a seat in this Convention, whom we declare to be ineligible, has stated as one of the overshadowing reasons predominating in his mind why he should be retained here in his seat in this body, that he received two thirds of the votes of the people in his district—that they voted almost unanimously for him. It is, no doubt, a pleasant reflection that a man is so much esteemed in his district as to receive such a hearty indorsement, but are there not many more of us in the same position. Many of us were elected by a large vote as delegates to this Convention, but that is not a question for this Convention to take into consideration in determining this question. This is purely a matter of law, not one of expediency, not merely to satisfy the people of the district which the gentleman represents; but does he sit here by virtue of the Constitution, without any express inhibition in the Constitution, in relation to his eligibility to the seat? He defended his claims very warmly on that ground, and there were other gentlemen who took the same position. They referred in eloquent terms to the voice of the majority of the people, and held that a man elected by such a large majority that it was a still greater reason why he should be allowed his seat here. That he is a distinguished and popular man no one will deny, but that is not the question.

I will remind the gentlemen that it was but a few days since when we of the other side of the house, urged upon them that the voice of the majority should be respected; that the people's voice was supreme, especially in the case where we put up a man qualified in every way for the position, a man that had received a large vote; but the circumstances apparently, to their mind were different, and their actions and their votes did not accord with their professions to-day. In that case the voice of the people was nothing. But now it is all power. If this is consistency I fail to see the consistency. We would be willing that Judge Fawcett should retain his seat, as he has received so large a majority, such a handsome vote, on the same principle that we asked that Judge Sharpstein should have a seat in this body, as representing certain principles, representing a certain constituency who gave him such a handsome vote, representing the wishes of the people of San Francisco, who received so much larger vote than the gentleman they placed in nomination here. We were willing then, thinking it just, and we thought this principle should be carried out. We would still gladly be governed by that same principle if the gentleman who now presents himself was eligible to the position to which he aspires. But many, like myself, realizing the oath we have taken, and feeling that we should be governed by section sixteen of article six of the Constitution, which, to our mind, declares that he is ineligible, even the voice of the people, for which we have the greatest respect, is not paramount in this case, because he is here contrary to law, and under the law is not eligible to the position of delegate to this Constitutional Convention.

Now, sir, I understand that there are authorities to be introduced here in support of the position which these gentlemen have taken, showing that in other States of this Union men occupying judicial positions have been allowed to sit in their Constitutional Conventions. We admit that. We admit that men of the most distinguished ability have held such positions in other States, but that is no criterion for us to go by, for we are governed by a special constitutional provision which may not exist in the Constitutions of those States referred to. We admit that Judge Fawcett is a man well qualified by ripe learning, by long experience, and by integrity to sit in a body of this kind. We do not oppose him on that ground. We have not raised a question of that kind, but the objection is purely a legal one. We claim that there should be a certain number of legal gentlemen on the floor in a Convention of this kind, but not to the exclusion of other professions. We claim that the interests of the people at large should be represented. We hold that Judge Fawcett is not eligible, and that is the reason, and the only reason we oppose him.

I would say farther, Mr. President, that when remarks are made here like those stated by Judge Fawcett, if it is correctly reported in the Record-Union of this morning, I do not think they are becoming or proper in any delegate to make. I do not believe this Convention framed the language in the Act of the Legislature; and I do not believe the Constitution is resolved into chaos when the Convention is called by Act of the Legislature. But I believe we are still dependent upon the Constitution; that the Constitution is good and binding upon every member in this Convention; and we claim that we are bound by it to the end of the Convention. When laws are made they are binding upon the people of the whole State. When the gentlemen talk about binding posterity—that we cannot bind posterity—I say that we have been bound by the Constitution which the people of this State framed in eighteen hundred and forty-nine, and amended in eighteen hundred and sixty-two. We are also bound by the Federal Constitution. It was framed by our ancestors, and we have been bound by it; and it seems strange that we cannot in turn bind posterity in the same way. I do not believe the principle they advocate is right; I believe it is dangerous and inimical to the best interests of the people.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I rise to ask the gentleman from Nevada when and where Judge Fawcett used the language imputed to him in this morning's paper.

Mr. BARRY. I have it here. I will read from an editorial in this morning's Record-Union. While holding that Judge Fawcett is eligible, because this is not an office, the writer proceeds to condemn the report of the committee on other grounds, and Judge Fawcett's language in particular. I will read that part of the article:

"It, however, sought to fortify itself by proceeding further, and by assuming that the authority of the Constitution ceases and determines the moment a Constitutional Convention is called; that, to use Judge Fawcett's language, 'the people, when they take power into their own hands to amend their Constitution, take all power back into their own hands, and resolve things into chaos;' and that therefore the constitutional prohibition was to be considered null and void even though its applicability to the case in point should be established. This doctrine appears to us to be untenable. Its implications are not merely revolutionary but anarchial. For if the Legislature, in calling a Convention under constitutional provisions, thereby creates a power broader not only than the creator, but than the power which limits the action of that creator, it necessarily follows that the Convention is a body above all law, and above all responsibility. But a Convention is not a Constitution. It is only the machinery by which a Constitution is framed; and the work of its hands remains without life or significance until it is vivified by the assenting will of the popular majority. This fact should alone suffice to show that the Convention cannot be, as implied by the doctrine under consideration, above the law. If it were above the law it could, by its own motion, create a new Constitution; it could abrogate and ignore, and defy all existing legislation; it could proceed to enact whatever measures it chose, and it could declare them operative without awaiting popular ratification.

"It could do all this if it could do the least part of it, and assuredly it can do the least part of it if it contravene the law under which it was called in any particular. That law provides that when the Convention has framed a Constitution the instrument shall be submitted to the people at a duly called election. But if the Convention is paramount there is nothing to prevent it from declaring the new Constitution in force without submitting it to the people. This is the reductio ad absurdum; for it will hardly be maintained that a Legislature acting under constitutional provisions, and a people operating in the same way, can somehow create a power which is above Constitution and Legislature and people together; which, in fact, is wholly without responsibility of any kind and amenable to no law. Upon a plain view of the Constitution it would seem that the people had carefully reserved to themselves the final decision in regard to the acceptance of the new Constitution, and upon this view it would appear that the Convention was supposed to be subordinate to the popular will. That, indeed, is the position which we take to be the only tenable one, but it is evidently not compatible with the doctrine advanced by the majority of the Judiciary Committee. That body, with due respect be it said, seems to have fallen into some confusion regarding the functions of a Constitutional Convention, and its relations to the old and new Constitution. It is true that such a Convention forms the paramount law for the future; but it is not true that in so doing it abrogates the paramount law which it finds in existence. It could only do that if it possessed the power of enactment, which is not claimed for it, at least directly. It is not a creator, as the committee asserts. It is but a constructor. Its work possesses no operative power when it leaves its hands. The new Constitution is simply a proposition until it has been ratified by the people. The Convention in fact may be compared to a committee from its own ranks, which puts together the work intrusted to it, but which has no power to adopt that work when it is completed, but must abide by the judgment of the whole body."

MR. EDGERTON. I have carefully read the report of Judge Fawcett's speech delivered on this floor on yesterday, as reported by Messrs. Willis & Stockton, and published in the Record-Union, and also the report of his remarks before the Judiciary Committee, and there is nothing of the kind in either of these occasions. I think there is some misapprehension on the part of the proprietors of that journal; some mistake. I have his remarks here, and if the gentleman desires to see them, he is welcome.

MR. BARRY. The remarks I refer to are in the editorial column, and they are just as he made them; I think they are in substance the same as he made in the meeting of the Judiciary Committee on the night when he presented his claims to a seat in this Convention:

"The people, when they take power into their own hands to amend their Constitution, take all power back into their own hands and resolve things into chaos."

The gentleman also said, if I remember correctly, that after this Convention met—after the organization had been completed—that we had trampled down the old Constitution, as it were; that it was no longer binding on us; that we could no longer be bound by it; and other gentlemen also said that it was revolutionary in its character. I admit that political and radical change, to a certain extent, means revolution; but they take the position that everything is resolved into chaos; that we are not bound by the Constitution which our fathers framed; that we have no right to bind posterity by constitutional provisions; that the old Constitution is no longer in existence, notwithstanding the fact that we swore to support it; and that it is no longer authority which we are bound to obey. That is the position which the gentlemen take, and I hold that they are entirely wrong. I hold, sir, that we are bound by the present Constitution until we make these proposed amendments, and until they are presented to the people and ratified or rejected by them. That is my position, and I say that the gentleman from Santa Barbara, the claimant here, used in substance the language imputed to him.

Now, sir, I believe that every gentleman on the floor of this Convention desires to vote on this question in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience, and according to the Constitution of the State to which he has sworn allegiance. I believe, sir, that all are anxious to do right in this matter, with no personal feeling whatever underlying their actions. No matter what the personal or political feelings may be, they should all be sunk in the greater good, the interests of the whole people, when we come into this chamber for the purpose of framing this Constitution. And I would say that, before the vote is taken in this matter, it is important to consider what effect our actions will have upon the next generation, as well as upon those who are now living. I would say that with that wise provision in the Constitution, which declares that Judges are ineligible, if we violate it and allow a Judge to sit here, how can we ever hope or expect that the provisions which we shall place in the proposed Constitution will ever be obeyed? The future generation will point to our own acts, and out of our own mouths condemn us. They will cite our action here, as a precedent, in declining to be bound by the provisions of the Constitution. I say, gentlemen, we cannot afford to set such an example of disobedience. We ourselves cannot afford to be the first to violate the plain provisions of the very law we are making. Such reasoning is wrong—wrong in every sense of the word, and I believe it is the duty of every man within this Convention to sustain the position taken by the minority of the committee, and obey the plain provisions of a Constitution under which we have been living, and which we have sworn to uphold until it shall have been lain aside and supplanted by a new one. Because the seats of other Judges in other States have not been contested, is no reason why the seat of Judge Fawcett should not be contested here. It is not a question of expediency that is before the Convention, it is a question of obedience to law. It is a question as to whether or not the plain and mandatory provisions of the Constitution shall be trampled under foot by the very men who, above all other men, should be the first to defend it. And while men may differ in their interpretations of the law, I hold that the gentleman is clearly ineligible to hold a seat in this Convention; and I hold, sir, that principles are above everything else. The pillars and walls of the Capitol, which surround us, and the grand and towering dome above us, may crumble and perish with time, but principles will never die; they are imperishable, and I believe if we deny this man a seat here—if we refuse to violate the sacred provisions of the Constitution—the people will approve of our course; that they will ratify our actions when they come to vote for it at the polls. I believe it is the desire of every gentleman here to make such a record here that our State will not be ashamed of us. And when our remains shall have crumbled into dust, as our children look upon that Constitution and see our names appended to it, they can say, with pride and exultation, that is the work of our fathers.

SPEECH OF MR. VACQUEREL.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. President: I have always believed that speaking is silver and silence is gold. I believe in the last part of the sentence, but still I am obliged to rise as I intend to vote on this matter under no party line. I am ready to vote on this matter as a man who has always contended for the right; as a man who has devoted his life to the right and for the principle of the sovereignty of the people. If there is a principle that is settled enough it is that principle. It is the fundamental principle of any republican government; and the man that goes against that principle, sir, commits a crime—a social crime. I am astonished, sir, when I see on this floor that gentlemen, who have contended so much for the sovereignty of the people, have found that the people was sovereign on the thirtieth of September last and that the people is no more sovereign to-day. I hold the reports of one of the sessions of this Convention, and what do I find—"that no right is denied unless the right of the will of the people." Again further, it says that "if the people of the State were satisfied with the organic law they certainly would not have voted to have another in its place, but it is because the people are not satisfied that this Convention has been called." Again: "We also desire to have the rights of the people recognized." Now when I see gentlemen on this floor that have sustained these principles go right against it to-day, I must oppose it, even if they are my colleagues in the same political party that I belong. Now, Mr. President, I do not care whether this is an office or not. If I want to go and find the derivation of the word "office" in the Latin roots I could find a meaning to the word, perhaps, which is a very different explanation than the one given here; but I don't care whether the gentleman from Santa Barbara retains his seat or if it is another man; but I do care to vote on this question on the principle I have always stood for, and that is the principle of the sovereignty of the people, and by my vote I will respect the will of the people of Santa Barbara.

Will I do the injustice to think for a moment that two, or three, or four thousand citizens do not know their rights? Will I entertain the idea that I am a man of sense and that they are all fools? They have signified by their votes that they want to be represented by the gentleman, Mr. Fawcett, and I—as one of the servants of the people—I vote for retaining the gentleman in his seat. We want to enforce that decision and establish that precedent, Mr. President. Who gave us that power? By what right do we usurp such authority? The people desired to have a revision of the Constitution of this State. The people is the one to judge of its delegates, and the people will be the one to judge of our work, and they will ratify or reject it. Now, sir, it has been asserted here that if we voted for the gentleman from Santa Barbara we are violating our oath. There is not one delegate of San Francisco here that has not violated his oath to the party, and that is prior to the oath he took in this hall. If these gentlemen will remember the oath they have taken in San Francisco they will remember that it says that they will not vote for or support anybody who has not affiliated with the Workingmen's party. Therefore we cannot throw into a man's face that he violates his oath. We have violated our oath to the party for the good of the people at large, and if I must violate my oath I will do it to respect the will of the people of Santa Barbara. Now, sir, I want to be understood by every gentleman present on this floor. It has been insinuated by some of my colleagues here that I would vote in that way because my seat would be contested. I am a man that is never afraid of danger; I am a man that faces the enemy boldly in the face, and you must not take me to be such a child, when I have come here and taken a seat on this floor, because I am entitled to it. I am entitled to it by the blood I have spilt in the fight. Therefore I defy any of my colleagues who want to counterbalance my vote on account of my being scared. I am not scared. I never was. I never knew but one master, and that is the people. Therefore as I have based my line of conduct on certain principles which I have never departed from, and never will depart from as long as I have a drop of blood in my veins, and upon the fundamental principles upon which George Washington has established the government of the United States—which is the sovereignty of the people—I will certainly vote for the report of the majority of the committee. [Applause in the lobby.]

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: I agree with those who have already addressed us, that in dealing with the things of this world it is well sometimes to hear voices from the other world, and to be enlightened by the wisdom, not only of our own land but of those beyond the seas.

I should be pleased if I could excuse myself from speaking upon this question. I have sought no opportunity to do so, would gladly avoid it if possible. The report of the minority of the committee, of whom I am one, has, however, been assailed, and such extraordinary doctrine as to the nature and authority of this Convention have been advanced that I am left no choice.

I say, at once, I regret that the question of Judge Fawcett's eligibility has been raised at all. I should have greatly preferred the course taken in the Conventions of Virginia, Indiana, and other States cited here, where gentlemen holding judicial positions were allowed to retain their seats, unchallenged. But, gentlemen having a right to judge for themselves upon the proprieties of the occasion, have thought otherwise, and have presented the question of Judge Fawcett's eligibility to a seat here, to be determined as a judicial question in the light of the existing Constitution and the law.

The first question presented is as to the power of this Convention. That it has the right to judge of the qualifications of its members, is declared by the statute in calling the Convention, and it is submitted would exist without the statute.

But, in determining the main question a preliminary one is made. The minority report asserts that this Convention is bound to pursue the course dictated by the existing Constitution and laws; that we, sworn to support that Constitution, must obey it, even while in the act of proposing its alteration or abrogation; and that we are especially bound to follow established rules of construction of that instrument while so acting. On the other hand, in the report of the majority, in the speeches here of gentlemen in favor of that report, and especially in the reported argument of Judge Fawcett before the committee, it is distinctly declared that we are the people, and assembled for the purpose of remodeling the old Constitution, we are cut loose from all restraints of constitutional laws—confessedly still operating upon all persons outside of the Convention. In short, that we, and the voters who sent us here, have the power to disregard every existing law, and to proceed, as though having been just launched into being, we are met for the first time to establish government and jural relations.

The assertion is distinctly made: admitting it to be true that Judge Fawcett is ineligible under the present Constitution, the people, acting in their several districts, have the power and the right to elect him or any other person falling within that nomen generalissimum—"the people," to a seat here, and we have no right or power to go behind this expression of their will, although it is in contradiction to the very law which allows them to act at all.

To this doctrine of nullification of existing laws, to this secession from established government, I cannot give my assent. I am surprised at the sight of Union men giving in their adhesion to these notions. I am not surprised that many others support this raid upon the Constitution. They but follow the opinions which led some of them, at least, by revolt against the national government, to give the highest proof of their sincerity. There is something of obscurity—perhaps it is not going too far to say something of equivocation—in the terms used in the report and speeches, but the true sense is unmistakable.

The people, regardless of existing institutions, have a right at any time and in any manner, for any cause, and for no cause, to shake off all governmental relations, and to establish a new code and State or Nation. This is claimed to be not revolution, but a peaceful and legal change made in defiance of all law.

There have been in this land of ours, for at least half a century, men who have been possessed with the idea that the allegiance they owed to government was such only as was agreeable to the notion or exigencies of the hour, and that they were at liberty to withdraw from their governmental relations whenever they chose.

These ideas they have constantly endeavored to popularize by cunningly inserting them into laws, and declarations of political and deliberative assemblies.

Those who concur in the majority report are singularly felicitous in quoting these gentlemen as the leading jurists and statesmen of their time. Their undoubted ability and official position are appealed to as a sort of guaranty of their political and legal soundness, and as convincing proof that all challenge of their notions is mere temerity. Nor is the confidence of gentlemen in these statesmen at all lessened in the presence of the fact, that to them and their teachings is to be attributed the recent attempt to destroy this government and the widespread misery and disaster following that attempt. Amidst all the authorities and decisions cited there is one which has been overlooked, and which I deem decisive. It was made at Appomattox by the Chief Justice Ulysses S. Grant, supported by a myriad of Associate Justices standing around.

That decision: that no man, no mere portion of a people, should be permitted to disregard, that is to nullify the Constitution—is yet in full force and unreversed—nor will I, for one, permit it to be doubted here, or elsewhere, without characterizing its challenge as a piece of vicious folly, only worthy of those who never learn anything that is good, nor forget anything that is evil.

It may not be uninstructive to examine for a moment the history of the assertion of the supremacy of Constitutional Conventions. An extended statement as to this notion will be found in Judge Jameson's work upon Constitutional Conventions. I am very glad that this able work is the production of a Vermonter.

It appears that the omnipotence of Constitutional Conventions was first claimed in the Federal Convention of seventeen hundred and eighty-seven. This author, after citing the debate, in which the ablest minds participated, thus states the result: "In this most important Convention, then, of which most of the founders of our institutions were members, the power proper only for a sovereign—of definite legislation—was not only not claimed for that body, but it was expressly disclaimed." In the Virginia Convention of eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, this doctrine was denied by John Randolph. He said: "We have been called as counsel to the people—as State physicians—to propose remedies for the State's diseases, not to pass any Act which shall have in itself any binding force. We are here as humble advisers and proposers to the people." This doctrine which he opposed was broached by Mr. Dallas, afterwards Vice-President, in eighteen hundred and thirty-six; and it was followed up in a Convention the following year. It was proposed in Conventions of New York, Kentucky, and Massachusetts, and, it is noticeable, by the same class of politicians. In eighteen hundred and forty-seven, in the Illinois Convention, this idea of practical secession was more openly avowed. Mr. Peters thus delivers himself: "We are the State. We can trample the Constitution under our feet, as waste paper, and no one can call us to account save the people." In Maryland, in eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, and Rhode Island, in eighteen hundred and forty-one, this right of upheaval, contrary to existing Constitutions and laws, was asserted unsuccessfully. In the Free States, wherever this doctrine has been submitted to the people, it has been overthrown. The final culmination was reached in the ordinances of Conventions and Legislatures of eleven States, which seceded from the Union. Mr. Yancey, of Alabama, in its Convention, thus states this dogma: "In this body is all power. No powers are reserved from it." Concerning the reasons which underlie this doctrine, and the motives leading to its assertion, Judge Jameson says:

"Comparing the dates of the various Conventions in which the theory of conventional sovereignty has been propounded with those of the successive tides of pro-slavery fanaticism in the United States, it is difficult to resist the conviction that the assertion of that theory was connected with the great conspiracy which culminated in the late secession war. Was it foreseen, that to carry out the design of disrupting the Union with an appearance of constitutional right, new conceptions must become prevalent as to the power of the bodies by which alone the design could be accomplished? And conceding the existence of such a conspiracy to be carried through by means, were the eminent names cited the willing tools, or the dupes, of the far-seeing traitors who hatched it?"

I again say, these may be statesmen, they may be exalted jurists, but their whole doctrine and theory is destructive of all constitutional government.

I do not admit the good taste of citing such men and such theories with encomium. We are sitting here by virtue of a statute passed for that purpose, in direct furtherance of a provision of the existing Constitution. We have, as a condition of taking our seats here, sworn to support that Constitution. How this is to be done by following in the steps of that distinguished statesman, Peters, of Illinois, "in trampling the Constitution under our feet," I am unable to see. It is a singular fact that in the Constitution of only one, I think, of the original thirteen States, New Hampshire, was there any provision for amendment. This duty was left to the Legislature. No State, save Maryland and Rhode Island, and later the seceding States, ever attempted amendments in any other way, or by any other rule, than that furnished under, or permitted by, their existing Constitution.

I end this topic by saying, without the experience of an honorable gentleman on this floor who tells us he bears the marks evidencing his former assertion of this doctrine of secession. I agree with him; we have all we want of it.

The minority report states a reason against the claim of the sitting member, contained in the following language:

"The impropriety of the action contemplated in the resolution reported by the committee, and the justice and necessity of the above opinion, is decisively enforced by the results of its adoption. If anything is certain to be done by this Convention, it is a remodeling of the judicial department. One of the propositions already passed upon by the Judiciary Committee, and to be reported to this Convention, is the utter abolition of the District Courts—their name even is to be erased from the Constitution; and yet the majority resolution would retain a gentleman here who will be required to pass upon the further existence of his office and its emoluments, and perhaps to determine the result by his single vote. 'No one ought to be judge in his own cause,' is a legal maxim hitherto held to be of universal application."

As to this, my friend on the right, Mr. Edgerton, makes answer by appealing to the high character of Judge Fawcett, his position as Judge of the First District, his election to this Convention, as proof that no mere personal consideration will swerve that gentleman from a strict discharge of his duty here without any bias produced by his personal interest. I have no doubt of that gentleman's high character; nor do I for a moment suppose that his conduct would be otherwise than honorable and creditable to himself and this Convention. But the law of common sense has long been that no one shall be judge in his own cause. It is universal human experience that self-interest affects all men in the same direction, and so insidious is this influence that the law at least does not undertake the dangerous task of weighing its amount or force, but excludes all from the office of Judge who fall within it. So careful has the law been, that all those called upon to decide judicial questions should be entirely disinterested in feeling—that not only the remotest pecuniary interest, but bias for or against a party, disqualifies one from acting as a juror. It is only because there are conflicting considerations that a municipal corporator can sit where his municipality is a party. His interest is so comminuted, so slight, and the inconvenience resulting from his exclusion so great, that the objection of interest is parried or overcome.

The lawyers of this Convention will pardon me a direct allusion to them and the hope by which they seem actuated. From the high character, which I admit is correctly attributed to Judge Fawcett, they seem to anticipate from his efforts, joined to their own, great public good, as well as the acquisition of that reputation to the profession, which at least ought to follow great abilities, successfully employed in the public service.

Our first impressions of our surroundings are sometimes the best. Trusting to such impressions, I must express a doubt as to any of us obtaining here much augmentation of reputation, and as to Judge Fawcett, the regret that he did not adhere to his first impression, and refuse the importunities of his friends, what his own judgment seemed to condemn.

Those impressions were that he was ineligible. They could only arise from the fact that the intention of the Constitution from its language, apparent to the common mind, was to prevent a judicial officer mixing himself up with any other functions of government, either executive or legislative.

It must be borne in mind that the Constitution was adopted by the people, and when possible, that construction should be put upon it, which is in accordance to the understanding of the people. Perhaps incapable of technical construction, they understand language according to its ordinary use, and no other. This apparent intent was what first controlled Judge Fawcett, and had he, sinking the lawyer, adhered to the opinion to which all average common men would have arrived upon inspection of the provision as to judicial officers, we should have been spared this discussion, and been relieved from the temptation to apply a technical close construction of the words of the Constitution, not contemplated by those who formed it.

There are a large number of lawyers in this Convention, and there is great danger that the peculiar habits of the profession may lead to a result not in accordance with the true spirit of the Constitution.

Now, sir, I have been a lawyer for forty years, have been a member of Legislature in three States, and have had the opportunity to observe the conduct of my profession in this class of questions. I for one should not regard a legislative body composed of lawyers as the best. I readily admit that the world is indebted to them for much of its progress, but the business of the average lawyer brings him in contact with small questions; his labor often terminates in establishing or defeating important claims, upon no higher reason than the observance or neglect of some mere matter of routine or form, which in no respect is essential to justice.

He gets into grooves and habits of thought technical and restrained, and having no savor of statesmanship. Thus enveloped in forms, and following their language and the traditions that underlie them, he is inclined to ignore alike the thought, the language, and the necessities of common people.

I do not say that this result is a necessary one, but that strict legal practice has that tendency, is the result of my observation. That observation has convinced me, that in everything which involves expression, lawyers as legislators are indispensable; but in everything which involves the reasons of legislation, the sentiment, emotion, the sense of justice, a knowledge of the common wants, the laymen are in no sense their inferiors, and are equally necessary to sound legislation.

If one District Judge is a necessity, why not have them all take seats here? Why not avail ourselves of the services of the two or three hundred ex-Judges we have in the State? That such an assembly is not such as the common sense of the State would approve has been already decided.

The honorable gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard, reads from an authority. The name of the author did not reach me, but its language and idea did. No doubt it states the correct doctrine. Allow me to call attention, very briefly, to one of the rules of construction, familiar to all lawyers, as stated by Sedgwick on Statutory and Constitutional Law. He gives that of Blackstone, entirely sufficient for my purpose: "Words are generally to be understood in their usual and most known signification; not so much regarding the propriety of grammar as their general and popular use."

The majority report and its friends seem to agree with this general declaration, but they attribute to the minority report a departure from this rule by adopting what is called close, limited, or rather small construction of the terms of the Constitution, and that it errs in not applying that large, liberal, magnanimous, and broad interpretation, properly regarded as applicable to treaties and Constitutions. I agree with the proposition that the larger the scope of the instrument, especially if it is national or governmental in character, that liberality should characterize the construction.

But the question still remains, to which report is properly attributable the manifestation of liberal construction. Upon the question of power in the Convention, the majority report is limited only by the universe, but in its definition of the decisive word of the Constitution, they limit it far within its general sense. Large, liberal, or benignant interpretation is that which brings the largest number or kind of subjects and objects within the purview or effect of the law. Close or strict construction has the effect to narrow the application of the law. We have now arrived at the word "office," occurring in article five, section sixteen, of the Constitution. How do the majority treat this word? They give it the narrowest limit of which the word can be susceptible and one altogether narrower than is possible under the circumstances. The application of the word "office" is limited by the majority of the Committee on Judiciary, to such offices only as are created by that name under the Constitution. Members here are called delegates, and are therefore not officers, whatever may be their relations to the State. It is not the intention of the people, nor the interpretation of the people, which is to control; but some cabalistic, hidden meaning, which may, upon a pinch, be claimed, which is to control. In assuming power, gentlemen say they are the people. Now, this very word "people" has to be interpreted. Those we represent here are, in an important sense, not the people of California. The statute under which we sit submitted our claims to the qualified electors alone.

The people, in its literal sense, includes all sentient beings. If the word is to have this larger sense—this universal application—then the men and women, all foreigners, Chinamen included, have a right to be represented here by delegates whom they elected, as has that small body called qualified electors. This people is within the scope and effect of all general laws; it is completely subject to our rightful authority; it is to be controlled by the Constitution we propose to form. One class are native-born. The women, God bless them, always have as much claim to the beneficent protection of the law, and are morally as much entitled to participate in its creation, as are we. Yet all these are distinctly excluded from all representation here; here no one is entitled to speak for them, or as the representative of their wishes or opinions. Now, why is this? It is simply because, that by common consent—by common constitutional and statutory use of the word people, as relating to political powers, these several classes of persons have been excluded from the term "people."

If the principle of the majority report is to obtain, and the people in its largest sense is entitled to representation here, then the excluded classes were entitled to be heard upon the question of our election, and to a reasonable extent "push us from our stools," and take our places here.

I, however, allude to this in this connection only as illustrating the necessity of all the considerations surrounding a question of interpretation, and as bearing upon the true sense of the word "office," as used in the Constitution.

Article five, section sixteen, of that instrument, declares "the District Judges shall be ineligible to any office other than a judicial office during the term for which they shall have been elected."

That a membership in this Convention is an office, I have no doubt. The definition of Bouvier is, "A right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it." Other definitions extend to the "execution of any public trust."

Bouvier places "members of the Legislature" as holding a political office, and cites Morrill vs. Haynes, 2 N. H. Rep., 246, as so deciding.

Looking into all accessible authorities I find Bouvier's definition itself cited from Cruise's Digest, as being in all respects correct.

Judge Jameson, page three hundred and forty-six, says of Legislatures and Conventions: "Both, as we have seen, belong to the same Legislature. That is, they are both charged with the elaboration or enactment of laws. Where they differ is in the kind of law with which they are concerned, and in the extent of their agency in its formation." In another place he states his opinion, that members of Conventions are "officers," within the ordinary interpretation of that term. In Ex parte Gregory Yale, 24 Cal., 242, the terms "office," and "public trust," are compared, and while it is held that "office" is the more extensive term, it is declared that those temporarily executing a public trust are officers within the language of the Constitution. The statute of eighteen hundred and seventy-seven-eight, page seven hundred and sixty-two, recognizes in distinct terms that we are "officers," for it requires the "constitutional oath" to be administered to us.

It was administered, and in it we each swore to "faithfully discharge the duties of the office of delegate" to this Convention.

Now, if there is no such office, the whole ceremony through which we passed seems like a grim joke, a homeopathic dose, which if it does no good, can do no harm. We are talking about the question, what is the common use of the word "office," and have seen by the last example that the term is by the Legislature applied to ourselves. That the assertion, that the functions we execute must have been termed that of an office by the Constitution, in order to make it such within the article above cited, is disproved by legislative construction in repeated instances. Members of the Legislature, Presidential electors, and probably other functionaries of like character, are not called officers either in the State or Federal Constitution. Yet in 1 Hittell's California Digest, Sec. 2424, the Legislature provided for the election of Electors of Presidents, and of such other officers as may be required by law. Sec. 2427 makes it the duty of the Governor "to issue his proclamation for elections, designating the offices to be filled." Under this section the Governor issued his proclamation for our election to this office. Sec. 2444 declares that the vote must designate the "office" to be filled.

Sections 2453-4-5-8, to the end of the chapter, treat any person who has been elected by the qualified electors as an officer. In Sec. 2460 members of Congress are put as officers.

It is quite unnecessary to follow this farther. There is not an intelligent man in California but knows that positions of this character are all in common parlance, treated and regarded as offices. No one has thus far expressed any doubt, that this common understanding furnishes the true rule of construction in general, and no one as yet has given a solitary reason why this word "office" is to be excepted from that rule.

It is said, however, that while the act of this body may be legislative in its essential nature or quality, yet, as it relates to our power over it—that is merely to advise.

That is so, and yet the people have no right to treat it as they ordinarily can advice tendered them. They cannot amend it nor qualify it; they must take it as a whole, or reject it as such.

The effect of the passage of a bill by one house of the Legislature is immediately like ours when we propose a Constitution—the body ceases to have power over its work. It proposes a scheme to its coördinate, which it may modify or reject; but the initiatory act is as much legislative as another. The only advantage the Legislature proper has over us, is the power of conference and amendment. That sober, second thought which is denied to us. Article one, section two, of the Constitution, commencing at the bottom, declares, "All political power is inherent in the people." Article three, section one, proceeds to distribute "the powers of the government of California (i. e. of the people) into the legislative, executive, and judicial;" and then says, "no person charged with the powers properly belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others." Now, does the "government" which is organized under the Constitution, and do the three departments thereof include and provide for the exercise of "all the political power of the people;" or is there somewhere wandering in space some vagabond force which we are at liberty to assume? The Constitution and the people have undertaken to provide for this body and to define its powers. Do these powers fall within any one of the three departments; or do we constitute a fourth estate? a department at liberty to act our own will without power of legal challenge, and only subject to such sharp medicine as lies in the storehouse of revolution. That our function is legislative, and that we are persons charged with the exercise of that class of powers, and that a judicial officer cannot rightfully exercise those functions, would not, to my mind, except in the light of the present debate, admit of doubt. The reasons which have operated upon the minds of the people, which have culminated in at least the attempt to keep the judiciary apart from every entanglement by which the mind of the Judge can by possibility be influenced, are known to all.

It is said Judge Fawcett is singularly unhappy in falling within them all. He is directly interested in the question of the continuance of his official life. It is said that his presence here is occasioning that delay in the administration of justice condemned by Blackstone.

When the provisions of our proposed Constitution come before him for argument, his prejudgments will bias him against that secundo probatio of argument to which they will be subjected. He may have that dangerous task to perform of forgetting all he has heard here upon the provisions of our proposal in order to attain to that clearness of reason necessary to understand it. I repeat the language of our report, "that if the wish of the voters whose suffrage sent Judge Fawcett here can be gratified, under a proper construction of the Constitution, it should be done." As it is, I consider his admission a violation of the letter and spirit of that instrument, and that his services, distinguished as I feel they will be, will be but indifferent compensation for that evil precedent by which "many errors will rush into the State."

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: As the mover of the resolution proposing this inquiry, I deem it my duty to state briefly the reasons which led me to make that proposition. I find in the majority report of the Judiciary Committee a statement that "the objection to Judge Fawcett's holding a seat in this Convention comes from a point remote from his constituency, and without any suggestion of unfitness in any respect, and is based on a narrow, literal, and technical construction of section sixteen of article six of the present Constitution."

It is not I, sir, who object to his retaining that seat. If the position I hold is correct, the objection comes from the Constitution of this State. My investigations led me to the deliberate conclusion, based upon the authority I find in the Constitution, in the absence of any decisions, authoritative or otherwise, of the question, that the Constitution, and not I, disabled him from holding a seat here. So holding, and so believing, I submitted the resolution of inquiry, which can never be tortured into an objection to Judge Fawcett; and in my opinion the majority of that committee, under the instructions contained in that resolution, were not entitled to pervert the issue by assuming that we have based our opposition to him upon any other ground than simply the ground of his disability under the Constitution of this State. My judgment is, that they, furthermore, have argued this case from the wrong end, when they assume that we must point out the qualifications and eligibility of a member of this Convention. Sir, it is not true; the affirmative is upon them to show that this is a judicial office, or the member, whose seat is being contested, is ineligible. We have nothing to do with what constitutes the qualifications of any member here. That is not a question, Mr. President, before this Convention. The question is as to the disability, under the Constitution, of a judicial officer holding any other office, or performing the functions of any other office, and that is all. Is the District Judge of the First Judicial District disabled from holding any other office, or disabled from sitting as a member in this Convention? And that is the sole question; and if the interpretation we put upon it is correct, the only outlet for gentlemen is to show that this is a judicial office, or partakes of a judicial nature.

The debate, sir, has drifted away from the real issue that is here involved, and that is this, stated briefly: first, is membership in this Convention an office? Involved in which is the question relating to the character of the Convention; it involves the question, by what authority are we assembled here; what is the character of the whole, and what are the characters of the integers composing the whole; what is our function in the conduct of the government; what is the extent of our authority; what is the limit of our authority; who has conferred upon us the authority; who has limited the authority; are we not here a duly organized body, summoned hither by the law, deriving all the power we possess from the present Constitution, according to the forms of law, bound to obey that Constitution and the law framed under it; or are we a primary body, independent of the existing Constitution and law; are we officers under the law, representatives of the people in truth and in fact, in letter and in spirit; or, are we mere occasional employés, like a man who would come here to mend a broken chandelier?

All these questions, Mr. President, are comprehended in the issue here presented, and by the judgment of the members of this Convention it must be determined, if no extraneous considerations enter into the votes which gentlemen shall cast. I maintain this proposition, as I understand all do who coincide with me in support of the minority report, that there is no such thing, in our modern American system, as a representative body of the people in their primary capacity, unless, perchance, it may be those assemblies of the people of the Territories in the United States emerging from Territorial pupilage into Statehood, and even as to them it is held that the Enabling Act is necessary to effect a change.

The proposition is new in my judgment, sir, and I do not find that it has ever been decided in any of these United States, except it may have been in the case in Illinois in eighteen hundred and sixty-two, which has been shown, if it is offered at all in this connection, to have been authority upon our side of the question, because the people reversed the judgment of the Convention which admitted Judge O'Melveny to a seat. It has never been authoritatively settled at all, and it must be decided by this Convention upon authority found in the Constitution, upon reason, and upon principle. But the authorities have never decided the question directly: what is the character, what are the functions, of a delegate to a Constitutional Convention?

A Constitutional Convention at the present time—now that the States have all been organized, now that they have been provided with all the functions, agencies, and machinery for the conduct of government—a Constitutional Convention is now but an arm or branch of that government. It belongs to the law-making department, strictly speaking, and nowhere else. It is not, as was contended in the argument in the State of Illinois, as if the people were assembled together, or a clear majority of the whole people of the State, on some vast prairie, there met together to frame their fundamental law, to set the machinery of government in motion—not at all, sir. I do not deny that it might be done. I do not deny that there might be a revolutionary Convention, but this is not one, and no such thing is contemplated at the present time in any of the remaining States of the Union. There is authority upon that score all through the books, as was well argued by the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, abundant authority that the organic law is nothing but the law of the land, as any other law, with the simple difference that it is higher and of a more exalted character. I do not wish to trouble this Convention with any authorities.

I wish to read one authority in support of the proposition, showing that modern ideas of Constitutional Conventions, and the functions which they perform in the administration of government, has undergone a change from those primitive times when John Marshall and the Governor of Virginia sat side by side in that Convention. Those precedents no more serve to illustrate the present machinery of Constitutional Conventions than the lumbering old family coaches they used to ride to the Capitol in, are like the railroad cars and steamers in which the same journeys are now performed. As this is a man of high character, I will read a few extracts from Charles O'Conor's address on Constitutional Conventions, and methods of amending Constitutions:

"A written Constitution, the distinctive feature in American methods, is not distinguishable in principle from any other law. If there was ever a distinction it is being rapidly obliterated by continual changes and extensive amplifications. That first Constitution under which we lived for so many years was framed and put in operation by a Convention of delegates selected and assembled with less formality than usually attends the choice of an annual Legislature. The early Constitutions of our sister States were in general adopted in the same manner. It seems not to have been thought at the beginning that a vote of the people was necessary to give validity to an organic plan of government. Other Constitutions in this and the sister States have provided a means for their own amendment as far as the substitution of new Constitutions in their stead."

I maintain, sir, that the constitution-making power and the law-making power are one and the same thing, and I find that proposition in article ten, sections one and two, of the present Constitution. It would be as proper to say that the members of the Legislature, proceeding to submit amendments and propositions, convening together for no other purpose than submitting them under article ten, are not officers, are not functionaries of the government, as to say that members of the Constitutional Convention, proceeding to amend the organic law by another process, are not also government officers. They are methods interchangably used for the purpose of obtaining an amendment or entire change of the organic law. I maintain that this Convention is the organ of the government, for its appointed uses in the operation of the machinery of government, and its members are officers serving that office. It is immaterial to this issue whether the organ acts with regularity or not, it is the none the less an organ. These are the propositions, Mr. President, which I maintain are involved in the issue at present before this Convention, and which must be determined by the Convention on the main question. It remains for the State of California, through this Convention, now to first declare the principle, and authoritatively assert the doctrine, whether a Constitutional Convention is a primary body, representing the people in their primary capacity, or whether, as the minority report contends, it is but the organized agency of the government, only required to be awaked into life and set in motion by the action of the Legislature. Now, the majority report goes nearly to the extent of contending for the proposition that it is a revolutionary body. Certainly there is no middle ground; that is the natural, necessary, and logical result of their position, and the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, evidently so understood it, for he took the ground, distinctly and positively, where he must land in following out the logical sequence of his position; and that is briefly stated, sir, that this Convention is not controlled in any respect, either by the Constitution of the State, or by the laws passed touching it under that Constitution. And I say there is no midway ground.

The first objection of the majority report, the first criticisms made upon those who dispute the eligibility of Judge Fawcett, is that "to hang upon the letter here, is emphatically to hang upon the bark—that to be literal is to be wrong." Now, sir, is that true? Is not that an exceedingly unfair position, when it is said that unless we can find that the office is literally declared to be an office we must fail? We do not contend that it can be literally discovered that it is an office, or so directly declared to be, but we say that every intent, every just inference of the Constitution is that it is an office. We depend upon the broad principle that it is the agency created and function established and authorized by the Constitution, not in express, literal terms, but by fair implication.

But the report of the majority of the committee did not go to the extent which it should have gone to have made the case clear to the understanding, that of declaring whether we are working under the Constitution, or whether we are outside of it. It says, "The Constitution as it is creates a form of State government complete in itself. Under it the State was to be organized, officered, and launched into operation. It did not anticipate what should be done under a succeeding Constitution, but provided for its own practical working."

There, Mr. President, is where the majority report is fatally fallacious, in that it confounds the assemblage of the Convention with the ratification of its work by the people, for the Constitution now existing operates and is in force long after our functions have terminated, long after we have gone to our homes, and ceased to perform any office with reference thereto. "It did not anticipate what should be done under the existing Constitution, or provide for its own practical working." The point of its practical working is the method of its own amendment, its own revision, and we are here as a part of that agency, and hold that the Constitution is not supplanted, as the majority report would seem to infer, by the assembling of this Convention at all. It exists, and it will exist, in all its force and vigor until the subsequent Constitution changing it has been adopted and ratified by the people. Here, again, the report says: "As long as that Constitution should last those offices would last, and it was in view of that fact that section sixteen of article six was adopted, rendering Judges ineligible during their terms to any office in the executive or legislative department." This covered the usual, ordinary, and necessary workings and instrumentalities of the government under that Constitution, until how long? until, sir, a subsequent Constitution supplants it and destroys its force.

Another fallacy of the majority report, is in assuming that it is no part of the necessary workings of the Constitution which is to be put in force. The gentlemen say that the officers named in the Constitution—specifically named—are the only officers from which the judiciary are excluded. Now, sir, what officers are named. Gentlemen seem to misapprehend the scope and power of this instrument, in supposing that it can be only those officers specifically named; but it is not only the offices named and officers provided for in the instrument itself, whether in esse or in futuro, contemplated in section eleven of article six, where it provides that the Legislature, after naming certain officers, shall provide for the appointment and election of such other officers as may be found necessary for the proper administration of the government. Does the gentleman say that the great multitute of offices created by the Legislature during the long years, under the Constitution, have been open to the judiciary because they are not specifically mentioned in the Constitution? It would be a most extraordinary assertion. Sir, it is not only the officers named, but the officers provided for, whether by the Legislature or by the inherent force of the Constitution itself, and that is what makes us officers. We are not officers created by the Legislature, but officers spoken into existenee by the Constitution, and the Legislature is but the hand to smite the rock and set their delegation free.

Now, section eleven, cited here, contains this proviso, that the Legislature shall provide for the election of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, and other necessary officers, and to fix by law their duties and compensation. The officers named are constitutional officers; Clerks, Sheriffs, and District Attorneys are the creation of the Legislature, and are not constitutional officers; and the plain inference would be that the judiciary are free to enter into all the offices not expressly provided for by the Constitution. The Constitution is full of provisions for filling these offices when they become vacant.

The majority of the committee in their report say that "when we come to the question of a new Constitution we have something effecting the most radical change possible." Exactly! But the radical change only comes after the ratification of the Constitution. The change does not come by the assembling of this Convention. The restrictions and the prohibitions of that instrument are not relaxed until that change does come. "The old things are to pass away and new ones are to take their place. A Constitutional Convention is, therefore, an unusual, rare, and merely occasional instrumentality of the government, and of brief existence." That, Mr. President, in a certain sense, is a begging of this whole question. It makes no difference whether it is rare, it makes no difference whether it is brief, it makes no difference whether it is unusual; the provision is put in there squarely that it is an instrumentality of the government. An instrumentality of the government, how? Simply our instrumentality recognized by the Constitution of the State, and not otherwise. "It is not one of the three great departments of government which are created for everyday operations, and is not to be thrust into the ranks and limits of one of these three divisions, and take its place either as executive, legislative, or judicial." It must be a Sunday office, for they say it is not of everyday operation. How does that affect the question of the existence of this Convention as an instrumentality of the government and of the members as agents of that instrumentality. "The Constitutional Convention outranks them all; it is their creator and fixes limits to their spheres of action and boundaries to their powers. It is occasional, exceptional, brief, and peculiar." Mark, if you please, the language, the extraordinary language. It is not that the Constitution here framed and adopted is the creator of all these offices, but it is that the Constitutional Convention is the creator of them.

The necessary sequence of that is, as was claimed and contended in the State of Illinois, that a Constitutional Convention was omnipotent; that it might submit or might not submit its work; that it might create, might limit, might fix all the offices of the government. "It outranks them all;" that is the doctrine against which I am contending here. It is a doctrine which I must assert to be rank communism. If the eighty Judges of the Courts of record in this State assembled together here, calling themselves a Constitutional Convention, to take possession of the departments of government, could secure a majority, perhaps, to back them—proceeding in this way, ignoring the method pointed out by the Constitution, or the amendment to the Constitution, what is to hinder their doing it? I admit, sir, that it is "peculiar," and that is the only point upon which I can agree with the majority of the committee. "It represents the people in their primary capacity, and forms the organic, fundamental, and paramount law." There the broad doctrine is asserted of the independence of all control of this Convention, and the extraordinary language follows immediately after: "Its members are mere agents or delegates of the people." How, sir, how do they reconcile these things? In the first place it outranks all, legislative, judicial, and executive offices, and yet we come here as delegates and agents of the people.

The Colossus of Rhodes bestrides a mighty chasm, but the majority of the committee have made even a wider straddle than that. They come immediately back to our proposition, and say that "they have no power to adopt or create, but at most can only prepare and present to the people a draft of a Constitution for their adoption or rejection"—coming back again to the original proposition. Like the French brothers of the circus—Jean, Jacques, and Pierre—one ran and jumped down the throat of the second, the second ran and jumped down the throat of the third, and he turned a back somersault and jumped down his own throat. So with this majority report. They want to be on the safe side. In one breath they say that it is an omnipotent power, and in the next breath they say we have come here as mere agents and delegates of the people. They are bound to have it right some way, even though they cast consistency to the winds. I do not believe that a Constitutional Convention called by the authority of the people of the State has any such power as is claimed; is not outside of all law, nor independent of all control, as they would like to have this Convention believe. The majority report undertakes to compel those who contest this question of the eligibility of Judge Fawcett to locate the position of delegate in one of the three departments or fail in their position.

Mr. President, the issue is entirely and totally perverted. We have never contended at all, and are not bound to contend here, that the position of delegate does belong to either one of them. I am perfectly willing to state my opinion, and that is, that it is a branch of the legislative department. But the proposition is this: not what are the duties and qualifications of a delegate, as I before said, but what is the office of section sixteen of article six of the present Constitution. That is to say, instead of going to article ten, sections one and two, to discover the eligibility and qualifications of a delegate, the question is rather: is Judge Fawcett disabled under a fair interpretation of the Constitution. It is arguing at the wrong end. It is attempting to put us upon a false scent. We are not here to point out the qualifications of a member or to judge as to what constitutes eligibility. We have simply said we find a man who is disabled by another provision of the Constitution from sitting in this Convention, and therefore ask the Convention to pass upon that question. In doing so we might cite numerous other provisions of the Constitution with regard to what constitutes disqualifications of officers, but it is not necessary to this case at all. We might ask gentlemen if they would contend that a horse-thief from San Quentin was eligible to sit in the Convention, but that is not the question. We are not here discussing what are the qualifications and what is eligibility, but we are discussing the question: is a District Judge disqualified under the Constitution of the State to sit in this Convention?

That is the only issue. I pass over that portion of the report which seems to stand upon precedent and usage. The answer to that has been complete in the point made by Judge Shafter, that they form no authority, constitute no precedent for the government of this Convention, because the question never was raised, never was presented to them. But I ask now—I ask gentlemen to plant themselves squarely on the issue by their votes, and that they will follow it to its logical results, and tell me whether we are an organized body, under the law, or are we not. That is the question, sir. One gentleman, Col. Barnes, argued that the Governor had no right to administer the oath of office. Then if he had no such right or power, what follows? It was void, and we have not, consequently, taken an oath of office, and perhaps gentlemen are getting out that way, in order to vote on this proposition, that Judge Fawcett is eligible, free from the oath of office. By what authority do we come here except under the Constitution and an election? By what authority does the Controller of State issue the warrants and the Treasurer pay them, except by virtue of the law which organized us? How is it that we perform these duties and draw this pay and this mileage, Mr. President, if we are not a regularly organized body under the Constitution and the law?

Now, I pass to the intent of the law-making power when these provisions were inserted in the Constitution. In the first place, they have said that the Judges of certain Courts are disqualified from holding any other than a judicial office. How do we interpret that? Do you interpret it by the light of contemporaneous history? By cognate passages of the Constitution? We interpret it by the light of reason itself. And I say that it is a fair presumption that the intent was to control succeeding generations and subsequent Conventions. All laws, all Constitutions are trammels, binding succeeding generations, from the time of the ten commandments down. It is a still fairer presumption in the case before us, and I will cite the provision of the Constitution which makes me believe so. At the same time that this amendment was adopted—and the amendment was also adopted which immediately precedes this one, and will serve to illustrate and throw light upon the question, and that is section fifteen of article six: "The Justices of the Supreme Court, District Judges, and County Judges shall, severally, at stated times, during their continuance in office, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected." That was against extra compensation for services as Judge.

The Constitution makers, through the Senate and Assembly, intended to have the amount fixed of their compensation, and to have fixed it for Judges as Judges, and nothing else. How then is it competent for the Legislature to authorize the Judges to draw more pay from the public treasury than the amount of their compensation, as fixed by law? Can Judge Fawcett draw five thousand dollars a year for his services as District Judge, and then draw ten dollars a day compensation from the treasury for services here, without a violation of the spirit, at least, of that Constitution? Gentlemen, I say that we are called upon to vindicate the distinguished men who made the Constitution from any such aspersion as the minority report implies. I, sir, wish to clear the people who ratified it from assuming that they intended anything else than to require the Judges, whom they appointed and paid, and fixed their compensation, to render service as Judges, and to receive pay as nothing else. The limitation which is placed here, both upon the incompetency of Judges to serve other than in a judicial office; and their inability to receive any increased compensation, contains the express, at least strongly implied, limitation upon his ability to serve here and to receive his pay here, under the provisions of that Constitution. And that is the fair method of construing the intent and meaning of the law makers.

I see, Mr. President, that this debate is to be long, and an adjournment is necessary, so I will conclude what I have to say. I have said that I raised the question in perfect good faith. That this is not a party question, and I never intended it to be such. I maintain that this is a question addressed to every individual delegate for his determination under his oath of office as he himself interprets it. I maintain that these gentlemen sitting in this Convention, who have argued in favor of the majority report, since they went to that stand and took the oath of office, have sat here as delegates under that oath of office; have pursued the requirements of the statute; and by these acts have concluded themselves finally from now setting up the objection that we are anything else but an organized body; functionaries of the State; officers to represent the people; attached to and a part of the law-making department. I say they should have raised that objection before they took the oath of office as prescribed in the Act which called this Convention. I have furthermore insisted upon it because it goes to a great question of principle; a principle affecting modern legislation; affecting the health and preservation of the judiciary system as involved thereunder. I know, Mr. President, that the spirit of the people of the present day is against all means whether by indirection or otherwise, whereby money is drawn from the people's treasury, whereby the fountains of justice are corrupted and polluted; and that they so intended when they sent us here to this Convention, because it is our duty to so frame the new Constitution, which we propose to submit, as to make strong provisions, forbidding distinctly and positively, hereafter and forever, all attempts upon the public treasury; all double salaries, all means and methods by which money is abstracted. I know that this is the disposition, I know that this is the complaint, and I ask gentlemen of this Convention how they can vote to sustain this District Judge in his seat here, and allow him to draw his pay, and then insert or preserve in the Constitution the clause relating to Judges, making it extend to all other officers, covering every office, and hand that down to posterity, and then let it be construed in the light of their vote upon Judge Fawcett's right to a seat here. What a multitude of laws would flow in upon the State if we were so inconsistent as that.

We must square our action according to the principle that we propose to contend for, and we must leave no room for mistake to posterity as to what we meant. And I say, that whether it be a Constitutional Convention, or whether it be a Legislature, or whether it be anything else—commission or what not—I propose to ask this Convention to say that this Judge shall not meddle, mingle, or mix with it. My friend Colonel Barnes said that the intent and meaning of the law was to be judged by the mischief intended to be prevented. That is so, sir. I say it was to prevent a Judge sitting upon the bench, and whose compensation is fixed, coming down and scrambling for ten dollars a day additional, and contending for a seat in a Constitutional Convention. "No politics in this," says the gentleman. "It is a high and inscrutable thing." And yet upon this floor and within this room gentlemen have asserted that they were voted for and elected in opposition to the workingmen—Judge Fawcett among the rest. But I say that this Convention should disregard all questions of personal consideration and feeling on the subject, and vote that Judge Fawcett is ineligible, and let it go down to other Constitutional Conventions and posterity as a precedent of reform, which at the present time the people insist upon.

Mr. HUESTIS. I move that the Convention now take a recess until seven o'clock P. M.

Mr. McFARLAND. I move we adjourn.

Lost.

The motion to take a recess until seven o'clock P. M. prevailed.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at seven o'clock P. M. President Hoge in the chair.

THE FAWCETT CASE.

The PRESIDENT. The question before the Convention is the consideration of the majority and minority reports of the Committee on Judiciary, in reference to the eligibility of Eugene Fawcett, of Santa Barbara.

REMARKS OF MR. FINNEY.

Mr. FINNEY. Mr. President: It would be presumptious in me, I admit, to attempt to argue the question of law that has been raised in this case, after the able and exhaustive arguments by gentlemen who are too well known in this State, and in the country, to need eulogy at my hands. But, being a delegate from the county which has so recently been separated from Santa Barbara, being still closely connected with that county, in friendship and in interest, it seems fitting that I should break the silence imposed upon myself, and say a word here in favor of the county which is now practically disfranchised on this floor, or which it is sought to debar from any participation in the counsels of the body.

What has Santa Barbara done, I ask, that she should be disfranchised and cast aside. The sum and substance of the whole thing is this: that Santa Barbara has chosen, in the exercise of her best reason and her best knowledge, to send her best man to this body to represent her in these councils, and I am glad to see that during all the course of this discussion nothing has been said against the gentleman who holds the prima facie right to a seat here with us.

And, gentlemen, I am glad to say that he is the peer of the proudest on this floor—here where we meet the very best men of the State. Judge Fawcett is a man who, for qualified intelligence, for honesty, for integrity and broad ability, is the peer of anybody, anywhere—a man who is an honor to this body, an honor to his country, and an honor to the State of California.

Mr. President, my only excuse for inflicting my crude ideas and my weak voice upon the Convention, is that I feel it my duty to speak in defense of the County of Santa Barbara and of the delegate who represents that county. That is the excuse I make for saying one word, or occupying the attention of this Convention for one moment. It was said before, that it was the wish of the judicial district over which Judge Fawcett presided that he should become a candidate for delegate from Santa Barbara to this Convention, and speaking what I know in our county, which is one of the three counties over which he presides as District Judge, the people seconded the wish of Santa Barbara County to have the service of such an eminent gentleman on this occasion. We congratulated Santa Barbara on her selection, and we congratulated ourselves that perhaps we might be able to lay so slight a sacrifice upon the altar of the State, by consenting that the terms of the Court over which he presided might be postponed, so far as our county was concerned. I know that he at first would not consent to become a candidate. I know that he would not consider the matter at all until he was assured by the attorneys of the county over which he presides that it was the general wish of the people of the county that he should accept the position; that he, while appearing simply as a member from one county, still could represent our part of the State in a body of this kind, and give to it, and to us, the benefit of his knowledge, the benefit of his wisdom and experience, which would be so valuable, not only to us but to the State at large.

I will attempt to pass no eulogy at all on the little County of Santa Barbara, although it is the choice little spot, the Italy, the sunny Italy of our glorious State that outranks them all in its wealth, in its grandeur of scenery and salubrity of climate, in everything that makes a country desirable.

But, pray, what is all this matter? Hour after hour we have been instructed and entertained by these discussions on constitutional law—perhaps I should have said, these quibbles on words—and what is the point? Is it, let me ask you, gentlemen, anything more or anything less than this: that Santa Barbara is proposed here to be disfranchised, as I said, debarred from any participation in the counsels of this Convention; for there is no person here to take the place of Judge Fawcett, if he is sent out from this floor. Santa Barbara has sent no representative here to dispute his seat. She has sent no person here to contest his seat. If Judge Fawcett is sent from this floor, Santa Barbara is disfranchised and debarred from any representation on this floor. The people you know, and it is not for me to say that they are an intelligent people. That they are able and willing to send here their quota. It has been said on this floor, and I regret that it has been said, that, perhaps, the reason there was no such contest for that seat was because Judge Fawcett occupies a judicial position, and it might be dangerous for anybody to come here and contest his seat in this Convention. I believe that gentlemen of the Convention, and all those who have been residents of this State for any length of time, will scout at the idea. The temper of Californians is different. It is the only reflection I have heard cast upon him on this floor during the whole course of this discussion, and I consider it unworthy of the occasion, unworthy to be presented before such a body as this, and I protest against any such aspersions.

On the other hand, there is the most obvious and most positive reasons why no opposition has been brought to bear from his home. It is because there is none. It is because he is the desired representative of his people; because they feel in their innermost souls that if he does not represent them here, their rights will be overslaughed, their privileges thrown away by this Convention, and they stand upon their rights, and say they will have Judge Fawcett or nobody. And a distinguished gentleman who spoke this afternoon, in whose remarks I was much interested, said this question of "office" was one that could be left to the people; that unless the prohibition was so plain that he who runs may read, he was not in favor of ousting the sitting delegate, and the construction which the people put upon this thing must be the construction which is to guide us.

The voters of the County of Santa Barbara sent this gentleman here to represent them, and shall we presume that they knew nothing of the Constitution of this State; that they voted like a lot of blind dogs for a man who could not go to trial. Is it to be presumed that they did not feel positive, upon the very highest assurance, that he would be qualified to take his seat in this Convention, and that he was perfectly eligible to the position? They signified their will, they signified their choice, they signified their understanding and interpretation of the Constitution, and they signified their interpretation of the word "office."

Now, I wish to say, in a modest manner, a word to my friends of the Workingmen's party, with whom I have worked and hope to work, whose principles, as enunciated here on this floor in a great measure I believe in; it seems to me that the Workingmen here on this floor cannot afford to raise this question against Judge Fawcett. It is certainly true—and I speak of this matter with reluctancy and hesitancy—but it seems to me that the Workingmen in this Convention, coming here as they did under the ban, proscribed, despised, they came here, for instance, asking a man to be nominated and elected by this Convention to fill a vacancy which they had created, believing that the man who was the choice of the people of San Francisco should be elected. They based their demand upon the sole ground that he was the choice of the people—nothing else; that in unmistakable terms the people of the district they asked to have him represent, had expressed, beyond all doubt, that he was their choice. They were defeated. Smarting under that defeat, they still had the manhood, the real nobility, when the other two vacancies came to be filled, where men had been elected in opposition to the Workingmen, to say at once these men were elected by the people in opposition to the Workingmen's party—and our principles are that the will of the people is supreme—and they made no nominations, and they so stated. I feel proud of them.

How is it here? Gentlemen, are we not in danger of violating our own consistency? This is a matter of quibbling over words. The gentleman who spoke this afternoon with so much ability, and so much skill, upon this subject, even he, prefaces his argument with the statement that he deeply regretted that this question had come up at all before the Convention, that it had been raised at all, that it had not been permitted to pass. Is there any such profound necessity, is there any such great necessity, that we should banish this gentleman from the floor of this Convention, by acting decidedly adverse to him; that we should violate the principles upon which we came here; that we should fly directly into the teeth of the great principles for which we have contended? Mr. President, I claim that we should go carefully here. We want to be sure that we are not putting ourselves in a false position; that we are not putting the lesser before the greater. It is so easy when the passions are aroused, in the heat of debate; it is so easy for the thing nearest to our eyes to seem so large, and the things further off to seem so small. If we abandon, even in seeming, the principles for which we contend, we are lost.

Another thing in this same connection I will mention: it seems to me that the delegation from San Francisco are trying to disfranchise Santa Barbara. Now, what I wish to say is this: had there been one word of protest from Santa Barbara here; had any man appeared here claiming the seat; had the people there, in any way, by any whisper floating upon the breeze, signified their dissatisfaction with the man who represents them here, there would have been some excuse. It is not so. The objection comes not from that part of the State. The people of Santa Barbara, Mr. President, have never raised their voice to utter one word of complaint in this matter. The complaint, the criticisms, the objections, come from a different quarter. The look is bad; the appearance is not creditable.

I will not take the time with answering some of the things that have been said, but will simply say in conclusion, there are two principles of law well known to everybody: that where there is a doubt remaining in the mind of any person as to the guilt or innocence of an accused person, the benefit of the doubt must be given to the accused. Now, Mr. President, if that is good law for a jury, how much stronger is this case, and how much more necessary that the benefit of the doubt should be given to the whole people of an intelligent, wealthy, enterprising county. But one of the gentlemen on this floor to-day claimed that same principle, and in the most peculiar manner perverted it, so that it might read: that when there is doubt it must be given against the party accused. The people of Santa Barbara are not here to plead—they are here to demand that Judge Fawcett be given his seat in this Convention. I am not here to plead for Judge Fawcett, much as I admire and honor him, but I am here to speak in behalf of the rights of the people of Santa Barbara, whom he represents, who cannot speak for themselves. The question before this Convention is: shall that people be represented, or shall they not. Shall they be set entirely to one side in this body, or shall they be allowed a voice in framing a Constitution under which they are to live, and by which they, in common with the balance of the State, are to be governed. Then, if the question of doubt comes in, if it is not absolutely proven to the satisfaction of all, to the satisfaction of every man here, that they have made this great mistake, the people of that county should be given the benefit of that doubt, and allowed to have a voice in the framing of this Constitution. So, gentlemen of the Convention, I wish to say, that if there is in the mind of any gentleman here a doubt upon this matter, that doubt should be given to the people of Santa Barbara; that doubt should be resolved in favor of allowing them to have a representative on the floor of this Convention. And in all conscience, let me ask any lawyer, any man—I don't care who—has not such a question of doubt been raised, to speak in legal terms, as would, in a great many cases, compel you as jurymen to say that a man was not guilty? The press and the ablest minds in the country have taken this side of the case. It is not a new question at all. It has been argued over and over before you, and I do not desire to recur to the arguments, except to speak for the people; and it seems very strange that it should be necessary to stand here and say a single word, in a body of this kind, for the people, and in defense of their expressed will. But is it not true that such a doubt has been raised here by these great men—the greatest men that America has produced—who, having looked the matter carefully over, decided it the other way; and shall we, in the face of their opinions, in the face of the illustrious precedents, declare that not even a doubt has been raised in our minds as to whether they were right or not. Mr. President, I beg the Convention to do our ancestors the credit of having ordinary intelligence. I thank you, gentlemen, for your attention.

ARGUMENT OF MR. SWING.

MR. SWING. Mr. President: I desire to state simply the reasons why I shall vote as I shall when this matter comes to a vote. I will say this, that I have nothing whatever against Judge Fawcett; I believe him to be a man of honesty, and a man of integrity; but notwithstanding all this, I propose to vote for him in this Convention. I take up the position fairly as they have offered it, that this is not an office. An "office" has been defined to be the exercise of a public function, and taking the question and applying that definition to the system of government of this State, under the forms of the Constitution, if this be an office, it must fall either in one of the three branches; it must either be legislative, executive, or judicial. I believe nobody claims that this is an executive office. It has been hinted and maintained, with some degree of propriety, that this is in some respects a judicial position. But I think it is well accepted by every one that if it is an office at all it is a legislative office. Now, if you take the definition given here of a legislative office, you find that legislating means enacting. We find that a legislator is one who makes laws; you find these definitions in Webster and in Bouvier's law dictionary. We are not here to make laws, but I am not one of those who desire to bring a strict literal construction to bear upon this question. You will find, for instance, that according to these definitions, the word legislator means one who proposes, or one who makes laws.

Now, I submit that we do not make any laws; that when our duties are completed, that we will then lay it before the people of this State, and they may ratify it if they choose, or they may bury it in oblivion if they so choose. I say our act will receive no force or vitality until it is received and the stamp of approval placed upon it by the sovereign power of the State, which is the people. But I do not desire to pursue the question any farther on its general bearings.

Let us look farther at the provision which is sought to be invoked, by which it is proposed to oust Judge Fawcett from his seat. Section sixteen of article three is as follows:

"SEC. 16. The Justices of the Supreme Court, and the District Judges, and the County Judges, shall be ineligible to any other office than a judicial office, during the term for which they shall have been elected."

Now, I admit I have had serious doubts as to this question. I may almost say I have been on all sides of this question. In regard to what constitutes an office in this State, I hold that if that has ever been a mooted question, it is no longer. It has been settled by the Code Commissioners, and crystallized by the adoption of the Codes, and will there remain until dissolved by a subsequent Convention, or by the repeal of the Codes. Now I take it that a District Judge is not ineligible to any office, unless it was an office created by the Constitution, or an office which has been subsequently created by Act of the Legislature. In section two hundred and twenty-two of the Political Code we find the qualifications of public offices. We find it divided into four sections—legislative, executive, judicial, and ministerial. Now, I take it that unless you find that the position of delegate to the Constitutional Convention comes within that class, then the most you can say is that Judge Fawcett is only by implication prevented from sitting in this Convention. I say that he must be—if he is ineligible, disqualified—it must be directly, and not impliedly. It must be in terms unmistakable, and not left to be construed according to the prejudice or desires of anybody. It must be specially and directly done. You will find in that title that public officers have one prescribed scope, in the executive department, from the Governor down to the Clerk of the Board of Examiners. You will find it from the Chief Justices of the State down to the Justices of the Peace. In the legislative department, to which they say this position belongs, you find there Senators and Representatives. Now, I claim that if you desire to invoke this provision against Judge Fawcett, that you must get the Code Commissioners to insert "member of the Constitutional Convention." If they had done that, you could only invoke it by implication, and I do not think we wish to declare a man ineligible by implication.

The question has been asked: what position we occupy; what position is ours? I take it that we are merely agents of the people. We are no more officers in the sense and meaning of the Constitution than he who drafts a deed would be the grantee of the deed. To illustrate my idea further, let us suppose that a certain man is doing a large business. For some cause he desires to change his system of business. He calls in a skillful financier to make a different system of business. That system is mapped out by the financier, the functions are prescribed, the positions are prescribed, and the system is submitted to the individual, and if he adopts it all right, and he changes his system of business, and if he rejects it, all right, but in neither case does the financier exercise any functions in forming a system of business, nor in overturning the former system. So I say that we are in that relation—that we are simply mapping out a Constitution for the people to adopt, and if they vote in favor of it, it will then become the law of the land. But whether they do or do not, I maintain we exercise none of the functions of government, either of the old or of the new, and it does appear to me further, that in the very nature of things we cannot exercise any public functions in our present system of government, because if we did the creature would rise above the creator.

SPEECH OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. President: I desire to allay the apprehension of members, by saying that I shall not occupy the attention of members for more than ten minutes. The most that I might have desired to say has been said already by other gentlemen, with force and expression greater than I could expect to give it. But, sir, I have such strong convictions as to the duty of this Convention towards the people of Santa Barbara County, and towards the gentleman they have sent here to represent them, that I do not feel satisfied with simply recording my vote on this question.

It is, sir, a most grave and responsible act to turn a man out of this Convention who has been sent here by any constituency in this State. I understand from private conversations that there are other gentlemen on this floor who, notwithstanding all the arguments which have been made here on either side, are still somewhat in doubt as to their duty. Now, to those gentlemen I desire to say simply a few words. I desire to say first that with me there is no doubt whatever. I have been accustomed to weigh evidence and argument, and I have never had a question presented before me, that might be considered debatable at all, which was more clear than this one. I have no doubt myself that Judge Fawcett is perfectly entitled to his seat, and I go farther in that direction than any other gentleman. I believe, sir, that any person whom the people of this State, or of any county, or any district may choose to elect, would be entitled to his seat in this body. I believe, sir, that the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Morris, who resigned on account of supposed inability, would have been entitled to his seat had he presented himself here and demanded it. I do not believe this is a revolutionary body. I believe we are met in pursuance of that great American system of government which has been described by Webster to be a system of liberty regulated by law, and in exact accordance with established forms of law. But, sir, I do not see that in the fundamental law of this State, under which we are now acting, there is any qualification whatever on the membership of this Convention.

Now, to the gentlemen who are in doubt, let me say this: the people of Santa Barbara County, by a majority much greater than that by which most of us have been sent, selected Judge Fawcett to represent them. If is proposed now, sir, to turn him out of this body, send him home, and say to them, if you want a representative here we will select somebody to represent you. Remember farther, there is no contestant for his seat, nobody from Santa Barbara County who objects to him, nor any person from among all the people of California presents a protest. Remember farther that this does not involve any question of personal rights, it doesn't involve any dead man's estate, it doesn't involve any wages for labor done, it doesn't involve the property of any person elected here, or of any individual in the State of California. Under these circumstances, those gentlemen who vote against the sitting member retaining his seat, must do it from an imperative sense of abstract duty. That is all. Nobody asks to have him turned out of this body, except some gentlemen who are in this body. No rights are overturned, no individual overruled, no private rights injured by his retaining his seat here. Now, under these circumstances, sir, does it not devolve upon them to show affirmatively and clearly, beyond any honest doubt, that he is not entitled to his seat here. Now, that being the case, I ask, gentlemen, whether lawyers or not, if there is not a fair, honest doubt as to his ineligibility. Why, sir, they say, lawyers should have power to decide this question. Let me call their attention to this fact, that the people of the County of Santa Barbara, of whom, I suppose, a sprinkling are lawyers, have considered this question calmly, and have decided in favor of this man's eligibility. If you are going to decide this case on the technicalities of lawyers, you will have to disregard the emphatic voice of the people of Santa Barbara. And, by the way, some of the gentlemen on this floor seem to think that lawyers are always wrong, and it is a very remarkable circumstance that every gentleman who has spoken here against the right of Judge Fawcett, is a lawyer. That apology must be made to them, sir. The objection was raised against General Cass, in eighteen hundred and forty-eight, that he was a military man, and that a military man should not be President of the United States, and the reply was that he was not a military man enough to hurt. Perhaps it may be said of these lawyers, that they are not lawyers enough to hurt.

Now, sir, the arguments on the other side of this question invariably resolve themselves into this: they give the definition of the word office, and then add their own conclusion. They say an office is a public employment—the gentleman from Marin says, a public function. The gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman, says an office is a public employment or public trust. The word public employment seems to meet the notions of both, and they come to this wonderful conclusion: membership in this Convention is a public employment, therefore membership in this Convention is an office. Now, that is the argument, isn't it? Office is a public employment, membership in this Convention is a public employment; therefore membership in this Convention is an office. A cow is an animal which has four legs; a horse has four legs, therefore, a horse is a cow. What is the difference between the two arguments? One arrives at a conclusion by the very same course of reasoning as the other, and both are equally logical. The same reasoning applies to both. It is true that a cow is an animal having four legs, but that is not the whole of the definition. It is correct to say that membership in this Convention is a public employment, but that is not the whole of the definition, by any means. Suppose that some of these legal gentlemen were employed as assistant counsel for the State, either through the Attorney-General or otherwise, to attend to some case which the State is litigating. That would be a public employment, a public trust; he would have to exercise public functions, but it would not be an office within the meaning of the Constitution. When the State creates the office, or employment of a permanent Assistant Attorney-General, which shall be filled by one man, for a certain prescribed term, then it is an office. If you employ a man to superintend the building of a capitol, as was the case cited by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, the temporary employment to superintend the building of a capitol, is a public employment, but it is not an office. But if you should create the place permanently, and a man should take charge continuously of public buildings, that would be an office. If the State should employ a man at Washington City to appear before Congress and advocate the passage of some law, giving some right which this State demanded, that would be a public employment, but not an office. But if the State should permanently establish an employment of that kind at Washington, and fill it, that would be an office.

Now, this whole argument rests on the definition. I suppose, if we are going to define what the word means, we had better look in a legal dictionary. I hold in my hand a book which, as far as a dictionary is authority at all, is one of the best we have. This is an old copy of Burrel, and he defines office to be this: "An employment on behalf of the government in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional, or accidental." Now, this is a definition of the word "office" given by high legal authority. That is not the only definition given. That definition is taken from the decisions of the Courts.

Now, apply that definition to the members of this Convention. Is not this transient? Certainly. Is it not occasional? It never happens more than once in a generation, and perhaps may not happen once in a century. It is a transient, occasional, and accidental employment, and there is no continuity in it. It was created for a particular purpose, and when that purpose is ended, and the objects subserved, it is at an end. Is that an office, within the ordinary acceptation of the term? More than that, sir; I believe it has been argued here that the officers referred to by the Constitution are the officers created by the government, for the ordinary work of the government, and were not intended to allude to any process by which a new government should be formed, and that is the position we are in now.

Now, sir, when you come to take the argument of the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, and the other exhaustive arguments made on the other side, and strip them of their embellishments, you will find that he only argues three propositions—that this body is not revolutionary, that it is legislative, and that membership is an office under the Constitution. Upon the first, I agree with him; upon the second, I say it is not material whether it is or not; and upon this I will say that when you come to talk about definitions, I suppose it would be a fair definition to say that a legislative body is a body with power to legislate, and if that is a correct definition, this is not a legislative body, for we have no such power. There is another feature for us to allude to. I understand an office to be a place, the incumbent of which, by operations of law, has the power to perform some official act, which act in itself, and by virtue of its own face, is in itself effective, so as to change the status of some person or some thing. The Judge of a Court, for instance, has power to render a judgment which takes away the property, the liberty, or the life of the citizen, and the decision cannot be changed until it is set aside by some higher official authority. The Governor of the State may pardon the criminal or take him out of the State Prison.

A member of the Legislature is an officer, and the Legislature has power to do some act. It changes the status of some person or some thing. The Sheriff is an officer. He can take your property and sell it out, and it remains out of your possession until restored by some higher official authority. Now what power has this Convention in that direction, within that definition? Not a solitary bit. It cannot do a thing of that kind. After we have got through our labors here, sir, not a solitary person, not a solitary thing in the State of California will have been changed in the least. They remain just as they are. The organic law remains just as it is, in full force and effect. What we have done here will have no effect whatever. If the people of the State choose to adopt this Constitution which we are going to propose, then will there have been some change in the status of things, and not before.

When they talk about this body making laws, it is absurd. The Constitution says, "We, the people of the State of California, do establish this Constitution." It doesn't say, "We, the people of this Constitutional Convention," do this or that thing. The illustration given by the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, in reference to the Senate and Assembly, that neither one can make a law without the concurrence of the other, is not a fair one, for both together compose the Legislature. They are one and united, and together they can make laws, and the laws so made must have their stamp on them. "We, the people of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows," is the enacting clause. The Constitution says that the Legislature shall be divided into two bodies. But this Convention has no power at all. We cannot do a solitary thing, except to sit here and propose something to the people, and if the people choose to adopt it it becomes the law made by the people, who are the only power who can make a Constitution, or amend or change one letter in it. If there is any legislative power about it that power lies only with the people, who say affirmatively at the ballot-box that it shall be done. It is a mere evasion of the question to say that our books are full of constitutional law. Of course, but who makes it? The people of the State; nobody else. Why, upon the face of the instrument it says so, showing that nobody has power to make constitutional law except the people.

Mr. President, I do not desire to argue this question further. But it is somewhat peculiar, sir, that this effort should be made to remove the sitting member from the floor of this Convention, when no demand has been made for his removal from any quarter. It seems to me an astonishing thing that a gentleman of high character and integrity and honesty, indorsed by two thirds of his constituency, should be unseated upon a technicality when no demand has been made by anybody from his district, and no one is here to contest his seat. He is sent here by the people, and we have no right to remove him.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. President: This debate has been so prolonged that every member of the Convention must feel wearied and fatigued. Under the circumstances I feel great reluctance in addressing the Convention, and should not do so but for the fact that so many learned gentlemen, with whom I differ, having spoken to the question, I feel it to be a duty to state my reasons on the vote I shall give.

I regret the argumentum ad hominem has been resorted to. I regret that anything of a personal character should have entered into the debate. I am sure the two or three gentlemen who have just preceded me are laboring under a great misapprehension in supposing there is any personal feeling entering into this contest, either in regard to the delegate whose seat is in question, or the constituency that sent him here. Who has any such personal feeling, and from whence does it come? I have heard of none, and know of no one entertaining any unfriendly feeling against the incumbent, or the section of the State he represents. I never had the pleasure of an acquaintance with the delegate until I met him here in this Convention, I never heard anything but good of him, and however I may vote on this question it will be in pursuance of a rule I have always adopted when called upon to perform any official act—simply to do it in accordance with my judgment and my convictions in regard to my duty.

Now, sir, I should have been glad had this resolution never been introduced. If it had been dependent on my action it would never have been introduced. I would have been willing to sit here with any gentleman who comes with the indorsement which he has secured from the people. By the law we are made judges of the election and qualification of the delegates. We are called upon to pass judgment in this instance, and all personal considerations being discarded, the simple question to be passed upon is whether or no the delegate is eligible to a seat in this Convention. His eligibility has been questioned on two grounds:

First—Being a judicial officer (District Judge), and charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one department of the government, he is prohibited from exercising any functions appertaining to either of the other departments; that is, the executive, or legislative.

Second—That he is disqualified, in consequence of the inhibition in the Constitution of this State, which declares that Justices of the Supreme Court, District Judges, and County Judges, are ineligible to any other office than a judicial office.

In regard to the first ground of objection, it has been argued, that, being a District Judge, he will here be called upon to exercise legislative functions, which would be in contravention of that portion of the Constitution which relates to the distribution of powers, as contained in article three, section one. This would be true, if in the performance of his duties here he should be required to act in a legislative capacity, within the meaning of the Constitution. In my opinion, sir, he is not ineligible to a seat in this Convention on this ground; and, substantially, I concur in all that has been said by my friend the delegate from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, upon this proposition. Within the meaning of the Constitution our duties here are not legislative, and yet to a certain extent we are performing legislative functions, as legislators, or as members of the Senate or Assembly. We do not meet to pass laws, and yet we act in a legislative capacity; and by the statute under which we are here assembled we are authorized to pass on the election and qualification of our members, to organize our body, to make rules and regulations for our government, to adopt or reject propositions amendatory of the Constitution. And in various other ways we are acting, speaking, and voting after the manner customary in legislative bodies, upon every question presented.

Neither, within the meaning of the Constitution, are we performing judicial duties, and yet to a certain extent we act in a judicial capacity—not under the Constitution, but by authority of the law under which we are called together. We may be called upon to pronounce judgment in certain cases—as in the one now before us; we may sit here as a Court; may punish for contempt; may imprison—not as a part of the judicial power as mentioned in the Constitution, but by authority of the powers conferred by the statute under which we are assembled. These things we do, these powers we exercise, these functions we perform, not as members of the Legislature, not as judicial officers, but as members of this Convention. Acting in this capacity, Mr. President, we are not filling an enumerated office, as they are declared in the Constitution, and yet we are charged with certain functions.

You may call it an office, or you may call it by any other name you please. We are charged with the performance of certain duties, and whence do we derive our powers? Whence, Mr. President, do you and the members of this Convention derive the powers which we are here exercising? Is it from the Constitution, the Legislature, or the people? The solution of this I consider the turning point of this case. It will control me and my action here. Their origin is in the Constitution, under which, as a State, we yet exist. By authority of the Constitution, the enabling Act of the Legislature, and the vote of the sovereign people of this State, we are assembled in Convention here to-day, to frame—not to establish, as some would try to convince us—a new organic law, to be submitted to the people of this State for their adoption or rejection. The Constitution, article ten, section two, contains the following:

"And if at any time two thirds of the Senate and Assembly shall think it necessary to revise and change this entire Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors at the next election for members of the Legislature to vote for or against a Convention; and if it shall appear that a majority of the electors voting at such election have voted in favor of calling a Convention, the Legislature shall, at its next session, provide by law for calling a Convention, to be holden within six months after the passage of such law; and such Convention shall consist of a number of members not less than both branches of the Legislature."

In the little paragraph I have just read we find the source of all the powers and functions we are exercising. I will read it again, "such Convention shall consist of a number of members not less than that of both branches of the Legislature."

Our place of birth is not mute. It speaks for itself, and is found in the Constitution. It was a dormant power, and has been at rest from the time it was engrafted into the Constitution until the Legislature, by its enabling Act, and the sovereign people, by their election, breathed into it the breath of life, gave it vitality, and by virtue thereof we are here this day acting as members of a Convention authorized by the Constitution.

Now our Constitution provides further that—

"The Constitution that may be agreed upon and adopted by such Convention shall be submitted to the people at a special election for their ratification or rejection."

And yet we have been told we are clothed with omnipotent powers, and may for the time being set aside the present organic law and constitute ourselves the sovereign and supreme authority of the State. I can subscribe to no such doctrine. Clothed in a little brief authority we may frame and propose to the people of this State a new Constitution; we cannot adopt and establish one. The people may refuse to ratify it, and we may go back to our respective homes as insignificant as we were before we left them, and the Constitution we frame will pass away, and the one under which we now exist will live.

Now, we have been told by one of my colleagues, Mr. Estee, and by other gentlemen, that under a precisely similar condition of things as have here arisen, the people of New York held a Convention to frame a new Constitution, and secured, among the delegates, the Judges of their Courts, who, like ours, were excluded from holding any but judicial offices. I have before me the Constitution of New York, under which the Convention was organized. The cases are not parallel. The difference I will explain.

The Constitution of New York contained no provision for calling a Convention of members, to be elected by the people or otherwise. It only provided for amendments to be made by the Legislature. The Legislature had no such authority to call a Convention to frame a new Constitution, as is contained in the Constitution of this State. There were no dormant powers to which it could give life and vitality. The Legislature in that State, without authority of the Constitution, passed a law authorizing a Convention to assemble, whilst in this State the Legislature passed an enabling Act for a Convention, as in the Constitution provided. In the one case the Convention assembled under a law unauthorized by the Constitution; in the other it is assembled by authority of the Constitution and the statute, in harmony therewith. In New York the Constitution provided for no such officer as member or delegate of a Constitutional Convention, whilst here, under our Constitution, it is provided a Convention may be called, to be composed of members, and we are here in pursuance of such call.

Now, Mr. President, what are we? We are told we are not officers. What are we? We were elected as delegates to this Convention. By the Constitution we are denominated members of this Convention. Our title, therefore, should be members of this Constitutional Convention, or delegates to this Convention. The statute provides we should assemble here, elect a President, a Secretary, and such other officers as may be necessary. The Governor is to preside at our organization and administer the constitutional oath of office. All this has been done. Our per diem pay is fixed by law, and the pay of our Secretary and other officers is fixed by law. Is the Secretary an officer of this Convention? Is the Chief Justice of this State or a District Judge eligible to the office of Secretary of this Convention? It is not a judicial office. Who will get up in his place here and tell us the Chief Justice of this State is eligible to the office of Secretary of this Convention, when the Constitution declares he shall hold no office but a judicial office during the term for which he was elected? We have taken the constitutional oath of office—"to support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California, and faithfully to perform the duties of the office of delegate to the Constitutional Convention." We are here legislating, in a certain way, to the end that we may frame a new Constitution. We are pronouncing judgments in various ways. Yet, sir, we are told we are not officers; that we hold no office, but are merely functionaries—that our President is a functionary, that our Secretary is a functionary, and my learned friend, who sits before me, Mr. Edgerton, is a functionary.

"Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder?"

Now, Mr. President, under the Constitution we have enumerated officers, and by authority of the Constitution non-enumerated officers are allowed. We have executive officers named by title—such as the Governor, Secretary of State, etc.—and we have various other officers, named in the Constitution, for the administration of the affairs of State, of the counties, and other matters. It is admitted a District Judge would be ineligible to any of these unless their functions were judicial. We also find in the Constitution these provisions:

"All officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, and all officers whose offices may hereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people or appointed as the Legislature may direct." (Const., Art. XI, Sec. 6.)

"When the duration of any office is not provided for by this Constitution, it may be declared by law; and if not so declared, such office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment." (Const., Art. XI, Sec. 7.)

By these provisions, it will be observed, the Constitution contemplated other officers than those enumerated. Officers are provided for by name, and offices are provided for without naming them, and we have offices and officers unknown to the Constitution—such as the Railroad Commissioners, Bank Commissioners, Harbor Commissioners—all these are unknown to the Constitution. It may be said these officers are necessary to the administration of the affairs of the State, and, as such, must be recognized as officers within the meaning of the Constitution; but we also have officers known as Commissioners of the Yosemite Valley, appointed to take care of a public park, donated to the State by the Government of the United States. They have certain duties to perform, and a salary; but it cannot be said they are officers named in or contemplated by the Constitution, or that they are charged with any duties properly belonging to the administration of State government. Could the Chief Justice of this State, or a District Judge, perform the duties of Railroad Commissioner, Insurance Commissioner, Harbor Commissioner, or those of Commissioner of the Yosemite Valley? Would it not be inconsistent with that provision of the Constitution which prohibits them from holding any other office than a judicial office? There is nothing in the argument that this inhibition only applies to the officers enumerated in the Constitution.

The intent of the Constitution is plain. It means a District Judge, during his term, shall be ineligible to the performance of any official duties under the Constitution and laws of this State, unless of a judicial character, and it cannot be so construed as to allow a Judge, ineligible to any other than a judicial office, to fill and enjoy the salary of an office created by legislative enactment. Under such a construction, we might by law create some position for a Judge and attach to it a salary or compensation of unlimited amount, and in this way evade the Constitution.

The constitutional provisions relating to District Judges and their disqualifications are as follows:

"No judicial officer, except Justices of the Peace, etc., shall receive to his own use any fees or perquisites of office. "(Const., Art. VI, Sec. 13.)

"The Justices of the Supreme Court, District Judges, and County Judges shall severally, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected." (Art. VI, Sec. 15.)

"The Justices of the Supreme Court, the District Judges, and the County Judges shall be ineligible to any other office than a judicial office during the term for which they shall have been elected." (Art. VI, Sec. 16.)

The incumbent is drawing a salary as District Judge, and as a delegate to this Convention he is drawing pay, as provided by law, at the rate of ten dollars per day. Is not this an increase of his compensation during the term for which he was elected? When he leaves his official duties, retaining his judicial office, and comes to this Convention as a member or delegate under the Constitution and laws of the State, and draws his pay here at the rate of ten dollars a day, is it not in contravention of the provisions of the Constitution as contained in the three sections I have just read? Does it mean his perquisites of office as Judge and his compensation as District Judge shall not be directly increased during his term of office, but that these may be indirectly increased by giving him another office, with additional compensation and perquisites? If it cannot be increased directly may it be increased indirectly? Could the Legislature make a District Judge a donation of say five thousand dollars for the purpose of building a house or for traveling purposes, or to allow him to draw any compensation from the State treasury except it be as compensation for his services as District Judge? If so, the provisions of the Constitution are nugatory and idle and no limitation upon the legislative power.

The intent and meaning of the Constitution is plain, and admits of but one interpretation, and that is: District Judges, during their term of office, are ineligible to the performance of any official functions under authority of this State but such as are judicial; and that their compensation or perquisites of office cannot be increased directly or indirectly by any payments out of the State treasury during their terms of office. This interpretation is honest and according to the letter and spirit of the Constitution. Any other would open the door to unlimited abuses. If it is susceptible of the interpretation attempted to be put upon it by some who have preceded me, no constitutional inhibitions could be so drawn that they could not by indirect methods be avoided.

But, Mr. President, I did not intend to expand upon this subject, and have said more than I intended. We have, however, been told, and the committee seem to so intimate in their report, that we are acting under a higher authority than the Constitution and law; that old things are passing away and new ones are taking their place; that we are not merely the representatives of the sovereign power, but sovereignty itself; that constitutional government is in abeyance, and chaos and anarchy is for the time being upon us; that this Convention is higher than the Constitution and above all law; that we are in an intermediate state between the old Constitution and the new—between the setting and the rising sun; that the old Constitution is defunct, and the new one—as Richelieu said of France—"on luminous wings is rising, Phœnix like, to Jove." This is all very good—in rhetoric, in poetry, but very weak when we come down to facts and common sense. The old Constitution is not dead; it still survives, and will exist until the new one shall be voted upon and ratified by the people. Temporarily we are here in Convention assembled, clothed with a little brief authority for one hundred days, and if the work before us should not be approved and ratified, the so-called defunct instrument will remain, as now, the organic law of the State. If such a result should ensue I should not regret it. It was my privilege to vote for our present Constitution when it was adopted, prior to the existence of our State. It contains many excellent provisions. I voted against the calling of this Convention because I was apprehensive the new Constitution might be no improvement upon the old one. If we frame a new Constitution which shall be ratified by the people, it will take the place of the old one; but as long as the old one exists as the supreme law, I shall cleave to it, and greatly to my regret, under its provisions, I consider the incumbent ineligible to a seat in this Convention.

SPEECH OF MR. SMITH, OF FOURTH DISTRICT.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. Mr. President: As a member of the Judiciary Committee, and concurring in the majority report of that committee, I deem it but right and proper that I should justify the position I have taken on this question, and answer some of the criticisms which have been made. Now, sir, I have been wondering all the time why this matter should have been brought up at all; why the time of this Convention, valuable as it is, should be wasted and frittered away in this discussion, when there was no demand for it. There is no moral question here, there is no question of public policy here, it is purely and essentially a legal question, not even having an excuse of equity. Now, as a lawyer, when that question came up, I gave my judgment on it as a lawyer. That judgment was founded down deep at the base of the whole question. As to whether this is an office or not, does not enter into the matter at all, as far as my conclusions have reached, because it is founded upon the sovereignty of the people. It is founded upon the Constitution, which was the contract entered into at the beginning of the government, at the beginning of American liberty, and it is higher than any State government, it is higher than the national government, and rises above Constitutions, whether State or national.

The Constitution of the United States is merely a grant of power. The Constitution of the State is a limitation of power. Suppose that this State had undertaken to say that a Judge should not be eligible to any office under the national government, or for President of the United States. Of course a constitutional provision to that effect would be void. So, if the State Constitution undertakes to say that a Judge shall not be eligible to this Convention, in opposition to the power which is so much higher than Constitutions, it writes an absurdity on the statute books. This whole matter has been confused and misrepresented, and the real point at issue has not been touched. The State Constitution is merely a regulation of the right of suffrage. It does not take away any right. If you pretend to say that a man holding a particular office under the State Constitution is thereby rendered ineligible to take part in the framing and organization of a new government, you commit an absurdity. He has the right to participate in the framing of a new organic law, and we have no power to deprive him of that right. Not alone does the right belong to him, but to the people he represents. Therefore, I say that whatever the State Constitution says about this matter is in the shape of mere regulation. Suppose the Constitution had attempted to say that there shall never be any constitutional office, that the people shall not enter into this matter or that matter. I say, no, the Constitution of the State of California has no right to go that far. The limits of a Constitution do not extend so far, and the national Constitution has no right to touch it.

We have nominating conventions to nominate men for certain offices. Men may be elected as delegates to nominate men for office. Here the delegates are elected to nominate a Constitution. There is no difference between them. I hope we shall get through this without any farther waste of time.

MR. VACQUEREL EXPLAINS.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. President: This afternoon it appears that I have made a false statement. I wish to rectify it. As a good many members of the San Francisco delegation have stated to me that they had not taken any oath to the Workingmen's party, I stand up, sir, to apologize to my colleagues, as it appears that an oath and a pledge have a very different meaning. I, sir, acknowledge having taken pledges and having violated them, thinking I would benefit the people. It shall not occur again. But, sir, in explanation to myself, I still maintain that if those gentlemen have not taken the pledge of the Workingmen's party, they stand in direct opposition to the laws established by the party.

[President pro tem. BELCHER in the chair.]

SPEECH OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. President: The question before us is one of no ordinary moment. It is a question that requires the most careful consideration, and after that consideration conscientious action. The question, Mr. President, stated in a few words is: shall we deny a seat in this august body to one sent here by the sovereign people of the County of Santa Barbara—one whose purity of character, whose integrity and magnificent intellect challenges admiration. A gentleman that any constituency in this State might well feel proud of. One who comes among us, not because he sought the position, or obtained it by party intrigue or skillful management, but one who comes among us modestly as an obedient citizen at the command of his legal sovereign. He has come in and out among us for more than twenty days, and yet, from all the district which he represents, no one has questioned his right to be here, no one has appeared to challenge his eligibility or contest his seat in this Convention. Not only from the county he represents, but from the other counties composing his district, no one has appeared to question his right to be here; but it is you and I, the agents of the sovereign people of the State, who are questioning his right to be here, and saying in the tenderness of our consciences that we cannot sit in the Convention with the delegate from Santa Barbara, selected by the only sovereign that the people of California have ever recognized, and that sovereign is the people. And at this point occurs to me the language of one of old when he says: "Who art thou that judgeth another's servant?"

So I say to this Convention, by what right do you judge of the people's servant. The distinguished gentleman from Marin has stated as a proposition on this floor, that in these questions of interpretation in these matters of words, the common judgment was better than technical law. What will that Judge say when he goes home to the thousands of people who interpreted the Constitution. He goes home and tells them that one hundred and fifty-two of their agents here have overturned their interpretation of the Constitution. Sir, I say, you are impaled upon your own argument. I had rather take the interpretation of a thousand voters who had given this matter a careful examination, and voted upon their consciences, than to trust to a lot of technical men. When the people have examined and interpreted the instrument, as they have in this case, it does seem to me that we should pause and hesitate long before we undertake to give a different interpretation.

In dealing with such questions as this, we must have no uncertain law. We must have broad, plain law, so clear that every word and every letter will stand out as carving upon a monument of brass before we determine this question against the sovereign people of Santa Barbara.

If it be found that under the stern mandates of the Constitution, under the supreme law of the land—and so long as it remains the supreme law of the land we must obey it—if, I say, we find that we are impelled in a certain course by the stern mandates of the Constitution, we should take that course like men, without hesitation, let the consequences be what they may. But I claim that this is not such a case, and we should only go where the law plainly and distinctly leads us, and not allow ourselves to be hampered by words alone.

Some have construed this word "office" in one way and some in another. Some claim that membership in this Convention is an office, and others take an opposite view. With due regard for those who have debated this question on the other side, I will say that the discussion has been principally upon the word "office." It means the performance of some function. But, sirs, when we took the oath there at that desk, we did not swear on the words; we swore upon the whole instrument; not upon paragraphs taken out here and there, but on the whole document; and it does seem to me that the most of the arguments here have greatly misconceived the instrument. The members have not properly understood what is meant by the word "office," or "officer." Why, the distinguished member from the City and County of San Francisco used an argument here that was strange indeed, when dealing with the question of office and officers. He seemed to think that because we had elected a Clerk, that is an officer, therefore that disposed of the whole question. Why, your town meetings elect officers; but officers of what? Not officers of the State, but officers of the town meeting. So we elect officers; but officers of what? Officers of the Convention, not of the State. When the Constitution of the State is speaking, there is no man who has studied the science of government but knows that it is speaking of the government created by it, and nothing else.

When you read a man's will, it talks of his own household; and when you read the Constitution, it speaks of the government which it creates; and if it speaks of offices and officers, it speaks of those which it creates, and none other. Now, in this matter, it seems to me we have placed the creature above the creator. The second article of this Constitution says:

"All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it."

The people are the creators of government, and the government is but their agent and their creature. When we speak of the people changing, what does it include? Does it not include the whole political household or family? Does it not include every one, whether he be the Judge on the bench, or the Governor in the chair? We are all a part of that family, part of the great unit. Hence I say that we have been looking at the creature and not at the creator. The government is the creature, and the sovereign is the people, and upon this point I have a few authorities, and to show that I am right in this position, I should like to read a few lines from Pomeroy on Constitutional Law, to show that we make a grand mistake, that we are but the temporary agents of the people, and that the government is the permanent agency of the sovereign to regulate the affairs of State. We are the temporary agents of the sovereign master—the people:

"The people themselves, the entire mass of persons who compose the political society, are the true nation, the final, permanent, depositary of all power. The organized government, whatever be its form or character, is but the creature and servant of this political unit which alone possesses dominion in itself."

I tell you, sir, there is a power behind the throne greater than the throne itself, and that is the power that is mentioned here. I do not mean in a revolutionary sense, because the Constitution is still in force, and organized government is still in force. We are here under the protection of the government, but that government is only our agent. What are you doing here? You are trying to exclude one from this body, point him out, and say to him, you are not one of this great political family. You belong to some other class, to some other people; you are not of this political family. Again he says:

"And, first, the distinction must be carefully and constantly preserved between the nation and the government which that nation has actively created, or has passively permitted, as the agent for the expression of its supreme will. The people themselves, the entire mass of persons who compose the political society, are the true nation, the final, permanent depositary of all power. The organised government, whatever be its form and character, is but the creature and servant of this political unit which alone possesses dominion in itself. It is true that the people, the nation, may have either actively constituted or passively admitted the rulers to be the sole channels and means through which their sovereign power shall be ordinarily wielded and directed for the national purposes, and may have bound themselves not to resume the direct and efficient management of that power except in certain well defined and established methods; nay, they may have restricted the government itself in the exercise of its functions, so that beyond certain appointed limits it cannot go, and thus may have denied to this government the rightful use of all the attributes of sovereignty which they themselves possess, so that for the time being these attributes cannot be brought into play by either; but it is no less true that these attributes still potentially exist in the nation, ready to be called forth whenever the people shall see fit to follow the defined and established methods, and to put their inherent, paramount force in motion."

That word "all power" is a very comprehensive word. It will be seen that you have attempted to place the creature above the creator. Where, in dealing with the question, the Constitution speaks of offices, it means the offices created by the Constitution.

Now, let us turn to article three:

"The powers of the government of the State of California shall be divided into three separate departments: the legislative, the executive, and the judicial; and no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except in the cases hereinafter expressly directed or permitted."

Here, then, is the entire family, the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, constituting one grand whole. It constitutes the whole family of government, from the foundation stone to the highest pinnacle of its dome. It is all there, and outside of that there is nothing left. This is the length and breadth and height. Then the next thing to do is to examine and see if this Constitutional Convention is a part of these departments, or a part of any one of them. We will see whether it is or not. We are not left in doubt. We have a distinct declaration; we are not left to rack our brains over any uncertain law; we are not left to conjecture, for the Constitution, having divided the powers of government into three great heads, the legislative, executive, and judicial, proceeds to define these departments. It says:

"Section 1. The legislative power of this State shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly, which shall be designated the Legislature of the State of California; and the enacting clause of every law shall be as follows: 'The people of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows.'"

There is the legislative power, and there only. We have but one legislative power, and here it is defined. Is there any avoiding it; any escape from it? No, sir. The Legislature is the only law-making power. The Constitution, it is true, is called the supreme law of the land, but Mr. Cooley lays it down that the Legislature is the only law-making power. The Legislature has the power to make laws, and to alter or repeal the same. Now, have we any such power? Can we make a law, or alter a law, or repeal a law? No, sir. We cannot change a letter. We are but a committee appointed by the sovereign to propose certain things, which must be sanctioned by the sovereign before they can have any force or effect whatever.

Now, no one claims that this is a part of the judicial department, or of the executive department. Now we come again to the matter of office, because they say this is an office. What does the term office refer to? Officers of the State. Are we officers of the State? No, sir, because we are but the agents of the sovereign, and in no sense officers of the State. An office, as meant by the Constitution, is some continuing thing, and not a mere temporary employment.

Section eight of article five says:

"When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and law for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy, by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the Legislature, or at the next election by the people."

Why does it expire? Because it is an office under the State, and office of the government, and the legislative power is the one that deals with it, showing conclusively that the word "office" there has reference only to offices under the State.

Mr. President, I did not intend to make a speech, but only to give my reasons for the faith that is in me. I believe in putting this construction upon it we do violence to no law, but are simply obeying the mandates of the sovereign people, who called this Convention into being, and to whom alone we are responsible for our acts. We must appear at the bar of judgment of the whole people and answer for our acts. We are in no sense superior to this law under which we live, but we are the agents of the sovereign engaged in the performance of a sovereign act, temporary agents sent here for that especial purpose, and for that purpose only, and if we attempt to thwart the will of the sovereign people of Santa Barbara, we will be condemned by the sovereign people of the whole State.

SPEECH OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. President: I desire to state the reasons why I cannot vote in support of the majority report, and, sir, I propose to occupy but a few moments of the time of the Convention. I would be glad to evade what seems to be a necessity, occupying any time whatever, for the discussion has already been a very extended one. But the discussion seems to have involved issues which I think were not anticipated at the outset. Now, the character of this body is one of the most prominent questions before us—the character of the members of it—and their responsibilities, their functions, and their duties. But the real question before us is one of law—of constitutional law—the simple question whether Judge Fawcett is or is not, under the Constitution of this State, eligible to a seat in this body. That question should not be covered up. It should not be involved with any questions as to excellence of character or of eminent capabilities, or of the esteem in which he is held by his people, on which we do not differ. On the contrary, we should give his claims a calm, just consideration, just as if, instead of being the man I understand him to be, a man of learning, a man of great legal capacity, of high character, and a man likely to become a useful member of this body, he were the most humble member of this Convention.

The rights of the humblest individual on this floor should be just as sacred, and this Convention would respect them the same, as those of the most eminent member here, and we should not accept even to ourselves the imputation that all the fine qualities and characteristics of Judge Fawcett give him one iota of advantage over members who have not attained to high positions or reputation.

This is simply a question of law and justice, and we cannot afford to mingle sentimentality and friendship and admiration with it. We deal with it as a matter of business in this Convention, and nothing else.

Digitized by Google

We must lay aside partiality, admiration, regard, and friendship, and deal with this matter irrespective of all these considerations, and as a judicial body, or a judicial person, should deal with them.

Now I come to the very question before us, the eligibility of Judge Fawcett to a seat in this body, and permit me to say that I have sought to find means and reasons that would satisfy me in voting for him, but I cannot find them.

The argument in support of the majority report, as it appears to me, has taken three forms, not all maintained by the same individuals, but, I think, all by a few individuals, and the rest, some by some, and others by others. Three distinct forms, not supporting each other, but each one sufficient in itself if well founded, and yet so stated that the advocates of eligibility can fall back from one to the other, and renew the combat at each one. The first of these three, which brought out such an extended discussion, was that the clause in the Constitution upon which the objection to eligibility is made, is not binding upon this body, for the reason that this body is superior to that instrument, the Constitution of this State, which contains that clause. Or, in other words, that there is some inherent power or right of sovereignty in the people by which the members of the Convention, representing the whole people of the State, are rendered incapable of passing upon any matter in a manner not consistent with the wishes of the people of an Assembly or Senatorial district.

If we adopt this view of the inherent right of the people, the argument would be at an end, and Judge Fawcett would be entitled to his seat.

But I do not understand that position to be well taken. The inherent right of the people I believe in—we all believe in it; but there is another consideration connected with that. We are representing the people, whose inherent rights are exercised through certain forms, imposed upon themselves by themselves. The people, with all these inherent rights, have found it necessary for their own safety to impose upon themselves rules which they cannot and will not violate.

Then I say this Convention—representing that inherent right of the people, the agents of the people, for the purpose of exercising their rights to change, modify, or even to abolish the present form of State government—could not trespass upon the rights of anybody when it exercises its judicial judgment upon the question of the eligibility of any member in this Convention. The only trespass will be in the false interpretation of the law, and if the people act otherwise than upon their own self-imposed rules, established in the Constitution and nowhere else—if the people fail and refuse to be governed by them, they will be liable to find themselves in a condition of anarchy at any moment, and to have no rule or settled mode of action. The people provided in their organic law a certain mode in which their free institutions shall be perpetuated, in which their laws may be changed or modified. The Constitution being the law of law—being the fundamental law—they have provided for its being changed in a totally different manner from that by which the statute laws are changed.

The Constitution is that law which they have enacted, and which they have made binding upon themselves and their representatives—the delegates here—that the Constitution shall be changed according to such forms and restrictions as they have imposed. In this way they retained and exercise their sovereignty, but they do it in the forms of organized republican government.

While they are the people, speaking as the people, they speak through the forms which they have found to be safe, which will save the people from acting as a rabble or a mob. That Constitution is binding as to who shall form the members of this Convention. Whatever is in the Constitution is binding upon us here, so far as it restricts or prescribes the mode of action. It is binding upon us as to all we should do in this Convention. If it was not—if we were at liberty to disregard the qualifications prescribed for members here, then we would be at liberty to disregard the law as to submitting it to the people for their ratification. Why not? These are limitations placed upon us here, and if we can disregard one of them—if we are not bound to observe this prohibition in regard to the membership of this body—then why are we called upon to regard the requirement that we shall submit this work to the people at all, after it shall have been finished? If it is binding in one thing, it is binding in all things.

I say the proposition that we are not now bound by all the restrictions and limitations upon our conduct which are contained in that instrument, is the proposition that we are not amending anything, but are casting away old things, all our existing institutions, and are proceeding, ab initio, to form a new Constitution and a new State. If that doctrine were carried to its logical results, it would follow that the people have not provided a mode of organic development for their institutions, but relying for their improvement upon successive revolutions, and starting anew, from time to time, creating a new State under a new Constitution, acknowledging no authorization of, and having no connection with, any prior Constitution or organization, but dissolving the old organization, the judicial, executive, and legislative departments thereof, and instituting a new State.

Now, if we do that, who can say why we should not present such new Constitution to Congress, and ask that this new State may be admitted into the Union, for, if we are a new State, we have never been admitted into the Union, and if the old is gone in every legal sense, we are no longer a part of the Union until duly admitted.

One little error I noticed was committed by the gentleman, Mr. Laine, when he speaks about Judge Fawcett having remained so long—nearly half of the legal term—without question. I think and feel that it would be an injury to him and a reproach to us if that were so, but while I agree with other gentlemen, who would have been pleased if the question never had been raised, I think members of this Convention will remember that his right to a seat here was challenged on the first day of this Convention, and his right to be sworn in as a member was then challenged, and also what was the ruling of the Chair—and I have no doubt it was the correct one—that that was not the proper time to advance such an objection, but after the body was organized would come the time when any such objection could take its proper course.

Now, as to the second proposition which is relied upon to support the majority report, I understand the position to be that even if the requirements of the existing Constitution do put a limit upon our conduct, even if those restrictions and limitations are binding upon us, still they cannot affect this body as to its action upon the subject before it, for the reason that the clause of the Constitution (the sixteenth section of article six), declaring the ineligibility of a District Judge to any other than a judicial office, does not apply to any other office than those named by the document itself—that is, than those distinctly specified as offices by the Constitution. That I hold not to be well taken. For myself, I cannot so understand it. The words are distinct and clear in the ordinary acceptation. They are words used generally and in their ordinary sense—Judges shall not be eligible to any other office—and it is a common rule that words must be taken in their ordinary sense, unless something in the context indicates that they are to be taken in a restricted or technical sense.

Now, following such a rule, I do not see how it would have been practicable or possible for the Convention framing the existing Constitution to have used language less liable to a technical interpretation, or less liable to doubt. They used a plain phrase that well expressed their idea. What ought they to have said in order to avoid the doubt that has prevailed in this body? What could they have said, unless it had been that a Judge shall not be eligible to any other than a judicial office, in any way, anywhere, nor under any circumstances? That is not decorous language to insert in any such instrument.

It is said that the construction given to the language by those who support the minority report here is technical. It is exactly the reverse, in fact. A technical construction is a limited, narrow construction, and we are giving to the words the plainest and wisest construction and not any other. We are giving them the construction which they will receive in the minds of most men.

The third proposition in support of the majority report is that, even if section sixteen of article six does refer to all officers, yet membership in this Convention is not an office. These, then, are the positions: First, we are not bound by the Constitution, being above it; second, that if we are bound by it it does not matter, for it does not apply to any officers except those named in the Constitution as officers; and, third, if it does apply to all offices, still it does not matter, because this is not an office at all.

I do not wish, Mr. President to go into any learned dissertation on this subject; I do not propose to so occupy time, and would not, even if I had other authorities than those already cited, which I have not. But admitting that members of the Legislature are officers—that members of the Senate and Assembly are officers—then I am not able to see, for my part, wherein any exception can be taken as to the proposition that we are officers occupying offices.

It has been said here that an office is a regular and continuing duty or trust. I do not think that it is a just definition at all, or that it is any essential part of the definition of an office that it should be continuous or even frequent. I think it would be perfectly proper for a Convention, framing a Constitution, to name divers officers, to meet and hold their terms when expediency requires, under one contingency or another, so that they might be called into being, to serve until the contingency be passed. This would be a mere question of expedieney. I believe the Legislature itself might have been so convened. I believe the Convention that framed the present Constitution, or even this Convention, might embody a provision that the Legislature shall meet when the Governor in his judgment deems it necessary; that it could require him to issue a call for an election for members of the Legislature, to convene at a future day, say six months, or whatever time he might deem proper, to serve until no further necessity existed. I think that Legislature would certainly have just as much official character as the Legislature which meets every two years. It is certainly erroneous to consider the length or duration of office, or the infrequency of any position as a test of its official character. We must consider its origin, its form, its functions—the special functions to be discharged.

In all these particulars, it is obvious to me, this body is strictly analogous to the Legislature of the State. It is an elective body, called in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, which contemplated this body as much as it contemplated the Legislature. It is just as normal a part of the government as the Legislature, the executive department, or the judiciary.

The fact that its terms are not fixed at regular recurring intervals, I regard as of no consequence in determining the character of the functions discharged by the members of this body, or what their position is to be termed. It is provided for by the same instrument that the Legislature is provided for, and with reference to the same subject—the laws under which we are to live. It meets as a legislative body meets. It organizes as the Legislature does. It works as a legislative body works. It enacts a law—the fundamental law—under which the Legislature enacts statutes of details. The gentleman from San Francisco says we are here as a committee—an advisory committee—as agents and advisers of the people. That we are agents of the people is true; but I say that all the officers of the State are agents of the people, directly or indirectly, but that does not militate in the least with the functions of members being those of offices. The argument as to our relation with the people being that of an advisory committee is no more true than it would be when applied to the Legislature.

It is held that we do not enact laws. In my opinion we enact laws in the same sense that the Legislature does. We enact fundamental laws, which are to define the rights of the people, and restrict the power of the Legislature, and these laws have validity as an Act of the Legislature has when both branches have passed upon it. The people have reserved to themselves the power of ratification. Legislators would just as much and no more be officers if they had no power to pass a law over the veto by a two-thirds vote. But in our case the people directly hold the right of ratification and the veto power. The Legislature cannot put a law into force until it shall have been laid before the Governor, and then, in case of a veto, they can pass it by a two-thirds vote over the veto. Thus nothing comes from a legislative enactment prior to the sanction of the Governor. So the enactments of this body cannot take the force of operative law without the ratification of the people.

It has been said here that the Constitution we may "agree upon and adopt" amounts to nothing—has no vitality till ratified by the people. I say it will have the same vitality—a latent vitality—that an Act of Legislature has which is to take effect upon a future contingency, as, for example, the lapse of sixty or ninety days, or a particular vote to be had upon some subject. The word ratify implies some vitality and validity. You cannot ratify or confirm that which has no vitality, no validity —which amounts to nothing. If we are not officers of the State, elected to enact a fundamental law, subject to ratification or veto by the people, what are we?

The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, says we are simply a committee—an advisory committee of the people. Well, if we are a committee merely, then instead of drafting a Constitution to be submitted for ratification or veto, we ought to submit to the people a report; then the people might act upon the report of the committee, if they had so ordered things, and adopt it or amend it, or indefinitely postpone it, but they have not so ordered things.

I cannot see upon what ground it is to be denied that we are a legislative body here. I do not care if this body is not called once in one hundred years, or once in two hundred years, so long as this body is provided for in the Constitution, so long as our fundamental law looks forward to the creation of such a position whenever needed, so long as we are a normal part of the government, we are officers thereof. The less often the better, but whatever the period of time that may be imposed, still the Constitutional Convention is provided for by the same instrument which provides for the biennial sessions of the Legislature, and for similar but higher functions.

It is true, as remarked by the gentleman from Santa Clara, that we should go slow and careful in trenching upon the right of the sovereign people. I have no doubt every member feels like going slow and careful about trenching on any right whatever. Sir, there cannot be found in the whole course of this discussion the slightest tendency on the part of any one to trench upon the rights of any one, but there should also be great caution in trenching upon the provisions of the organic law governing our institutions. Every man, every citizen, ought to show the highest regard and the greatest respect for the Constitution under which we live. The members of this Convention ought to show the highest respect for that Constitution, so that they themselves, when they submit a Constitution for the approval of the people, may claim respect for it. We, Constitution makers, should be the last of all men to disregard the provisions of the instrument which has created this Convention.

I hold, then, Mr. President, that no one of the three positions taken in support of the majority report is such as commends itself to our judgment, or that can satisfy our consciences and our reason in this matter. I cannot agree with them in regard to that, and I must, therefore, exercise my own judgment and my own responsibility, and vote according to my view of the law as it exists now. The law, by reason of its universality, may not apply advantageously in all individual cases, but for sufficient reasons it does, as a rule, inhibit the occupation by a Judge of any other office than a judicial one. It inhibits the occupation of two or three or four offices at the same time. There are certainly no better or more expressive words of inhibition than those used, and it seems to me that the Convention, when it framed the Constitution, used the plainest English that could have been found.

We are asked to point out the motive why the judiciary should be excluded from holding any other office than judicial offices. I think it has been sufficiently explained already by one or two gentlemen. My judgment of the reasons why it was not made to apply to Justices of the Peace also is that their jurisdiction is so limited in extent, so limited in the amount and range of cases, that they could never be so involved as the Judges of Courts of record. I do not know whether that is the true reason or not; it is a reason of more or less weight.

Now, Mr. President, I will occupy the time of this Convention but a moment longer. I say this discussion involves the character and extent of the functions of this Convention. I hold we are enacting a fundamental law, which only requires the ratification of the people before it can take operative effect, and that our proceedings are not ab initio, not revolutionary, but regular, ordinary proceedings in the orderly development of a free government, as prescribed by the people and in accordance with the restrictions which the people have laid down for our guidance. We have of course to account to the people for our stewardship. That account will be found in the work we do. I know no instrument will be framed on which men will not differ, but I think the greater portion of the Constitution can be so written, so plainly expressed, that he who runs may read.

Judge Fawcett admitted that he himself doubted his eligibility, did not believe that he was eligible to occupy a seat in this Convention, and that he thought nineteen out of twenty would not have come to any other conclusion than he did upon a clause as plain as it could be worded, that Justices of the Supreme Court, District and County Judges should not be eligible to any other office than a judicial office. He thought that was clear and intelligible language. He so declared in his letter, and he thinks now that nineteen out of twenty would have thought as he did. He might have said that ninety-nine out of one hundred would have put the same construction upon it. The first new light he received upon it was prominent men urged him to look into the matter. After considerable research he came to the conclusion that many gentlemen here have come to, that the language could be interpreted in another way; in fact that the other was the true interpretation, and there was no ineligibility at all.

I do not want any sentence or clause in this Constitution that even one man out of twenty will or can misunderstand. I want it so that nineteen men out of twenty will be able to give a reasonable guess as to its meaning, and I trust we may be able to incorporate some provisions into this Constitution that shall ever bar out such refined interpretations of plain common English. I hope that when we shall have agreed upon and adopted an amended Constitution, if my constituents shall ask me whether it means what it seems to say, I shall not feel obliged to answer, "My dear sir, nineteen men out of twenty would quite mistake its plainest provisions."

SPEECH OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. President: This discussion has taken up considerable time, and the lateness of the hour warns me to occupy but a few moments in any remarks I may have to make. I should dislike very much to talk to empty benches, but I feel secure from this from the fact that a most distinguished and interesting speaker, Mr. Wilson, of San Francisco, will follow me in this debate.

If we have arrived at any one conclusion in this discussion—if any one fact has been more clearly established than another—it is that Judge Fawcett has a most excellent character; that he is admired, that he is honest, that he is capable, seems to be admitted on all sides, and the gentlemen who are on the opposite side seem to think that by establishing such an enviable character for him they have scored one grand point in the argument. Why a man of such character should have been permitted to leave the dreamy scenes of the land of Santa Barbara is more than I can understand. Why people did not rush to the seashore and detain him within the limits of the district in which he was so much admired, it is impossible for me to comprehend. But I believe the gentleman deserves all the eulogies which have been heaped upon him. Judge Fawcett possesses all the attributes and ability they claim for him. I presume that he was pleased with those eulogies, but I know that they were expensive to the State, for the greater portion of the time occupied by the gentlemen on the other side has been taken up in laudation of him.

It is said that the people of Santa Barbara have sent him here—that they desire to be represented by him in this Convention; but I believe that the people of Santa Barbara are a law-abiding people, and if they had known that he was ineligible the result might have been different. It was said that the people of that county were informed by their Judge that he was eligible, and of all gentlemen they would believe that a Judge must know the law, and consequently they acted upon his statement of his own eligibility. If he is ineligible they have no right to be represented through him; but when we hear so much talk about the will of the people, the question naturally arises, who are the people? Are the people of Santa Barbara County permitted to lay aside our Constitution or trample on it, or to impose on the people of this State a man who by the express terms of our Constitution is declared to be ineligible? I would not permit the people of Santa Barbara County or any other county to trample upon our Constitution or our statutes.

The claimant has made a statement showing that the public service in the branch in which he is engaged will not suffer from his absence there or his presence here. Admitting this is true, is that an argument in favor of his eligibility? Why, it is like the beauties of his personal character, no argument at all, and I am surprised that gentlemen should even attempt to make a point of it. I take issue with the gentleman upon that point: the public service, if it does not suffer now, it may suffer, and that is quite sufficient to require the gentleman to remain at home. The writ of habeas corpus may be suspended by his absence. If a County Judge of one of the counties in his district should wrongfully imprison a citizen, to whom could he appeal for liberty but the District Judge? And that Judge, according to his mileage drawn from the treasury here, is six hundred miles away from the scene of his duty. That brings me back to the excellencies of the character of the gentleman who is so desirous of serving the State. "Cæsar was ambitious" to serve the State, but his fate does not seem to have been a warning to this gentleman. If he discharges the functions belonging to his official position that will be honor enough for him, and if he is the great and learned Judge he is said to be—which fact I do not dispute—let his decisions and his work in that department stand as the monuments of his fame.

I do not propose to go into the details of this matter, but will allude to other points to show the character of this transaction. He receives a salary of five thousand dollars a year for discharging the judicial duties belonging to his official office, and yet he comes to the State Capitol and draws twenty cents per mile for fleeing from his post of duty. Is it not an absurdity? It is very simple, yet it tends to show this matter up in its true light. The Constitution makers never intended to pay a man for fleeing from his duty.

I wish to refer here to another question which has given rise to a great deal of argument. A great deal of labor has been devoted to the question whether this is a revolutionary Convention, or whether it is bound by law or the statutes of our State. Several gentlemen have made the statement on the other side that this Convention is not bound by any law or statute. It is true that they admit it was called into being by the law, that it was cared for by the law, up to the time of its organization, and then it leaped from the hands of its creators into limitless power and uncontrollability and became the master of its own creator. But I will show the gentlemen in a moment that it is a mere waste of time to argue this question, because it must result in one of two things: they must admit that this Convention is controlled by law, that it is not above the law, that it is subordinate to the law, or this Convention must stultify itself. I claim no credit for finding the solution of this question, because it is a mere matter of memory, and to the memory of the delegates I now appeal. It is but a few days ago, in the early history of this Convention, when a gentleman came forward here with a resolution to the effect that members should not be paid save when actually engaged in the duties of this Convention; then these self-sacrificing gentlemen rose up like a band of patriots and squelched this rebellious spirit, and said that the compensation of delegates was fixed by law, under the Constitution, and that there was no power on earth to change it. Notwithstanding the unlimited power now claimed for this Convention; notwithstanding that it towers above all law and above all earthly power, yet the resolution was consigned to ignominious defeat by the ruling of the Chairman, who at the first glance recognized the fact that this Convention was controlled by law. Now I think it is pretty effectually settled that this Convention is not only controlled by the Constitution of this State, but it is controlled by the statute also.

Now, sir, what becomes of all the learning that has been wasted—I will not say wasted, for it will be carried away by the delegates when they leave for their homes—what becomes of all this black letter lore and learning? It is thrown away on this question whether this is a revolutionary Convention, or whether it is governed by the laws of the land. If that question is once disposed of, Mr. President, we will have no difficulty in determining the other question, and the only one it seems to me, that of the eligibility of the sitting member. It is conceded by the other side that judicial officers of a certain grade are prohibited from occupying any positions other than judicial. It is also conceded that the sitting member is a judicial officer. What other question have we to determine—simply whether the position each member occupies here can be considered an office. The gentlemen have cited numerous authorities and given numerous definitions of the word office. It has resulted in a decided disagreement of authorities. They say we should not bring in here pocket dictionaries; that it is technical and unbecoming to statesmen. I will agree with the gentlemen, and I shall lay aside the dictionary, Chitty on Pleadings as well as Estee on Pleadings, and shall discuss the question on broad, plain principles, as to whether it is an office or not. Laying authorities aside, how can we ascertain what an office is? Gentlemen say we should dispense with authorities, and yet they have not suggested any means by which we may determine what an office is? I believe the gentleman from Los Angeles cited Sam Slick? I am not acquainted with his authority. Another gentleman cited Jameson, and the gentleman from Los Angeles says he is not acquainted with Jameson, so I have brought in Mr. Cooley to introduce Mr. Jameson. I shall undertake to determine, not by authorities, but by the light of reason and common sense, what an office is.

May I be permitted, before proceeding to this inquiry, to answer some of the innuendoes and insinuations thrown out here to-night by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, namely, "That these lawyers entertaining different views from him, are not lawyers enough to hurt." He doubtless meant that we were not lawyers enough to hurt any person's feelings. The gentleman from Marin, Judge Shafter, is well known to Judge McFarland as an eminent jurist. Of course, he did not mean he was not much of a lawyer. He certainly did not mean Judge Barbour was not lawyer enough to hurt, because he is a man of established reputation. And, as I am a stranger here, not known in the community, I suppose he means me. But I understand that Judge McFarland used to be of the same opinion that I entertain now. I am informed that the gentleman was inclined to our way of thinking so much that he resigned an office under the Government in order to render himself eligible as a candidate for delegate to the Constitutional Convention, but I presume that was when he was not lawyer enough to hurt, which by the way I am informed was but a few months ago; in all this I know the Judge meant well; I know that he was well disposed towards the people, or he would not have resigned his position under the General Government.

Now, I wish to determine what an office is. It seems we cannot agree by reference to the authorities as to what it is. I presume the only way to get at it will be to ascertain what duties or what functions belong to an office. If we find that the mode of induction into this position and the duties appertaining thereto are the same as those belonging to positions acknowledged to be offices, then it will certainly be admitted that this is an office also, yet, I do not know but what some of the gentlemen will insist that there still exists a difference; but it seems to be common sense that if all the duties of the highest office in the land are attached to this position, that it would be only fair to say that it is an office.

It will be conceded that the delegates to this Convention have been elected by the people. Now, will the gentlemen on the other side show me a single position under this State or elsewhere that is filled by an election that is not considered an office? Why, it is the great distinctive feature between a person charged with official duties and a mere employé. If the duties we perform here are the duties of mere employés, as contradistinguished from official duties, what trouble and expense the Government must incur to obtain the services of a few employés! Just think of it. The Government wants one hundred and fifty-two men to serve as employés for one hundred days, yet in order to effect that object an election is called; the electors are summoned from the mountain tops, from the depths of the mines, from the harvest field, from all parts of the State, in order to enable the Government to employ one hundred and fifty-two men in its service! Sir, the proposition is monstrous to a man possessed of only common sense. Why, sir, it must take a wonderful amount of learning to enable a man to see that this routine is necessary to enable the State of California to employ individuals in its service. But is it not wonderful what learning can do for a person! [Laughter.]

The next proposition is, why are we required to take the oath of office? We are compelled to march up to the President's desk, and, in the presence of the people of California, take and subscribe a solemn oath that we will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California, and perform our duties to the best of our ability. Do you put that oath to your brickmakers? Do you require the superintendent of every work the State of California may be carrying on to take that oath before he can perform a day's labor for the State? Before the Porter can clean out the rooms he has in charge, why not bring him in here and "put him through a course of sprouts?" He is an employé; why don't you swear him? According to the theory of the gentlemen on the other side, it is as much an office as the positions we hold. We are here in obedience to the statute. The law has called us into being, and the law is now protecting us in every manner; and not only that, but it gives us command of this building, and every officer of the State is required to obey our commands, so far as giving us information is concerned; and if we see fit we can imprison any of them who may refuse to obey our commands; and we came pretty near doing it the other day—all by force and effect of the statute. We went so far as to censure a high public functionary, because he could not perform an impossibility. Not only that, but if, in the wisdom of this Convention, any unfortunate editor from Siskiyou—I believe that is the way the politicians measure distance—from Siskiyou to San Diego, or from the mountains to the sea, should discourse of this Convention or its doings in terms which might be considered disrespectful, we could send for that editor and punish him for contempt, and if we saw fit put him in prison, and keep him there just as long as this Convention remains in session. We have the power to take a citizen away from his home and incarcerate him in prison; we have the power to compel men to come here, from any part of the State, and testify before us. Why, sir, we have more power than any other tribunal in the State of California, and yet gentlemen on the other side say we are not officers under the Government!

The powers of this Convention have not been overstated by the gentlemen, because we are invested with the power to deprive a citizen of his liberty; we exercise the highest sovereign power; we exercise power as high as that of any Court in the land. The statute also provides that we have the right to fill vacancies, but when the gardeners in charge of the grounds around this building quit work must an election be called to fill their places? Why, sir, it is useless to argue this question any further. It is absurd to say that such power should be given to anybody, and yet the position not be considered an office.

Now, Mr. President, I know that the time is limited, and yet I would like to discuss one or two other questions, but I know it is asking too much of the Convention. [Cries of "Go on! Go on!"]

Members have drawn their salaries from the beginning, very regularly, and I think that is to be regarded as strong evidence that this is an office, and that we are officers of the State. Now we pass for a moment to the proposition argued by Judge Shafter this afternoon, which is on the language of the third article of the Constitution. It certainly was the clear intention of the framers of the Constitution to prevent judicial officers from meddling in other departments of State, so that judicial officers could not at their pleasure doff the "ermine" and cavort in Senatorial robes. They should be confined to their offices, and, according to the salaries paid in this State, I should judge that these duties were sufficient to occupy their entire time and attention.

It seems to me that we are legislators, for are not our acts law? There are two classes of legislation in this country—one called fundamental legislation and the other municipal. The Constitutional Convention, assisted by the people, enact fundamental law; the legislative department of the State is required to enact municipal laws. The fundamental law is to govern and guide the Legislature in the enactment of municipal regulations. But both bodies are legislative in character, and the judicial officers of this State are, by the express terms of section one, article three, of the Constitution, prohibited from participating in any legislative action, or in meddling in either of the other departments of the government. The Legislature is pointed out by the Constitution as one of the bodies in the State having the right to amend its provisions, if its action shall be afterwards ratified by the people. Membership in the Legislature is a position acknowledged to be an office. The Constitutional Convention is another body permitted, when properly assembled, to amend the Constitution, if its action shall be afterwards ratified by the people. In this respect the duties and powers of the Legislature of the State and the Constitutional Convention are the same. Why should membership in one body be considered an office and not be so considered in the other?

Thanking the Convention for the attention I have received I will now close my remarks upon this subject.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON, OF SAN FRANCISCO.

MR. WILSON. Mr. President: I rise because it is incumbent upon me as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee to close this debate. Nothing could have pleased me better than to have seen the tone and temper in which this discussion has been maintained. However deep and earnest have been the views of gentlemen who have expressed themselves here, the spirit, the language, everything has been in the most courteous and kind manner, without any imputation against the motives of any other, and I intend to imitate the tone and temper with which others have discussed the question before you. I am relieved, in the performance of my duty, of saying much that I might have said, by the arguments of the very able gentlemen who have presented their views upon the same side in support of the report of the majority of the committee. Admonished, too, by the lateness of the hour and the fatigue manifested on the part of the Convention, I shall proceed as rapidly as possible. Although Mr. Fawcett was a District Judge at the time of his election, yet I understand the question fairly and squarely presented to the Convention to be this: "Are the people of Santa Barbara County entitled to present upon this floor a delegate of their choice?" I do not regard the question as beginning, centering, and ending merely in the sitting member, but it has a wider scope and is a larger and a greater question. It is a question involving the rights of the constituents of that gentleman; it is whether Santa Barbara County has a right to be represented upon this floor by a delegate of her own choice. Who forbids it? What forbids it? The gentlemen upon the other side have pointed us to a direct written prohibition in the Constitution upon which they rely. Prohibited by whom? Prohibited by a similar Constitutional Convention and by the people of the State of California in the year eighteen hundred and forty-nine.

It is said that that Convention and those people determined who should sit in this Convention. If so, then we have arrived at this principle in the law of constitutional government—that each Convention and generation may prescribe who shall sit in the next Convention, and following upon, that as a necessary incident, what electors shall vote for the delegates. It follows from this that we, to-day, can only exercise such political powers and enjoy such privileges as the generation preceding us chose to leave to us. On the contrary, I deny that the people of one generation have more political power than the next. I deny that the people of eighteen hundred and forty-nine could exercise a power that we cannot exercise; or that they could impair our full and free right, as a people, to make our own organic law.

I desire to call the attention of the gentlemen here to that Constitutional Convention of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, consisting of thirty-seven members, and to the people of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, who adopted that Constitution. What was the condition of things at that time? Who were those people? What were they? California originally was a department of Mexico. The system was rudely fashioned after ours. There was a General Government and States or Departments. War came and the conquest of California was the result. What was the condition of the people of California then? The political machinery of Mexico dropped, and we had a peopled region of country different from anything seen by us before in this nation. We had a military Governor over a conquered country. It had no Constitution; no State government; no Territorial organization. There was no Act of Congress that enabled them to do anything. That was their condition—peculiar and unlike anything ever seen before in this country. Those acquainted with the early history of the State know the struggle through which the people passed to be admitted into the Union. Congress refused to organize a Territorial government, and refused to pass an enabling Act so that a State Constitution and organization might be adopted and effected. A military government existed, and officers de facto were exercising the civil functions of the government and attempting to enforce laws and customs of which they knew nothing. What was California to do? What did the people do? Of necessity they were compelled to take care of themselves. They resorted to the inherent power of the American people, and elected delegates to a Convention, and framed and adopted their own Constitution and organized their State. There was nothing which authorized them so to do, except the principle that "all political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people; and they have a right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it." You may say that they acted in defiance of Congress because it was claimed by the statesmen of the day that they were under the control and power of Congress, and had no right to move in the matter until an enabling Act was passed. The people, however, by reason of the great necessities of their position, peaceably and quietly elected their delegates to a Convention and adopted a Constitution. It is true that General Riley, the Military Commandant and Governor, coöperated, for the sake of peace and order—but he had no legal power to effect anything in that behalf. In fact, the delegates in Congress, in their memorial asking admission into the Union, expressly state that the people did not form their Constitution "in obedience to the dictation of General Riley, but on the contrary, actually took the initiative in the movement, and only concurred in the suggestions of the de facto Governor as a matter of convenience, to save time, and with a patriotic resolution to merge all minor differences of opinion in one unanimous effort to avert impending ills and remedy existing evils." I call attention to this part of our history for two purposes; first, as to the question of power in the people, and secondly, upon the question of the construction of the Constitution. Never before was seen exercised in a more absolute form—never before was seen a grander exhibition of the power of the people to govern and control themselves, and to frame and determine the organic law and to create a State.

Does any one here believe that a people like that, and a Convention called together as that one was, and exercising such absolute powers, intended to declare that the succeeding generation should not have the same political power, and should not exercise the same sovereign right? That we must be bound, restricted, and limited to the exercise only of such political power and rights as they should declare? That they could determine what form of government we should have, and who should be our representatives in the formation of a new Constitution? We have the right to read the Constitution by the light of surrounding circumstances. That is a cardinal rule of construction; it is a rule of common sense, the object being to get at the intention and meaning of the framers of the instrument. Nor is it to be supposed for a moment that that little band of thirty-seven persons who framed that Constitution, and the people of eighteen hundred and forty-nine who adopted it, in the exercise of the great inherent powers of the people in their original capacity, intended to say that the generation who should a third of a century later undertake to alter or amend or create anew a Constitution, should have less power than they themselves exercised. The proposition, to the contrary, is this: that the people who in eighteen hundred and forty-nine framed a Constitution and organized a State in defiance of Congress, without any enabling Act, without any Territorial government, and only by virtue of their inherent power, claimed the right and asserted the power to control, in the formation of the fundamental law, the people of this period—over a quarter of a century later. I ask now whether we of this Convention or generation can determine who shall be the electors of nineteen hundred and eight, or who shall be the members of the Convention to revise our Constitution at that time? I do not believe in any such political heresy.

If this Convention, by its vote upon this question, is to adopt any such doctrine as that, I, for one, desire to enter my solemn protest against it, and to cast my vote in favor of the majesty, the power, and the dominion of the American people. I do not say this because I think the doctrine is revolutionary, for it is not. I say it because it is the essence, the very groundwork, the very fundamental principle of American government. The contrary doctrine leads to the most dangerous results, for according to that theory we of this Convention and generation may prescribe the qualifications of all members of the next Convention and exclude all but native born citizens, or persons of over thirty-five years of age; and the same principle would enable us to go further, for we could prescribe the qualifications of electors and exclude all under forty years of age, or all possessed of property of less value than twenty thousand dollars. When we concede the power, that is an end of the question. The possible instances which I have given are not extreme cases—they all fall directly and naturally within the principle. If, therefore, the men who framed the Constitution in eighteen hundred and forty-nine could have prescribed that Judges should not sit in this Convention, they could have said that men under forty years of age could not sit in this body. You therefore arrive at a fixed principle, that each Convention possesses the power to control, determine, and shape the form and framework of any future Constitution; and that each generation has the inherent right and authority to limit the power of the succeeding generation. How far they may exercise it, of course, is a different question. I deny that they have any such power. I say the people of to-day have the same power in that respect that they had in eighteen hundred and forty-nine. I say this Convention is the judge, and the exclusive judge, of the election and qualification of its members, and that the doctrines I have contended for rest upon the broad, indisputable and inalienable principles upon which all American States are founded.

Therefore, sir, I deny the power of the people of eighteen hundred and forty-nine to say in their Constitution, or otherwise, who shall sit here. I say again, that these views are not based on revolutionary principles, but on recognized avowed, and admitted doctrines of the American Government. And I say further, that the people of eighteen hundred and forty-nine themselves never intended any such construction to be placed upon their Constitution. There is a cardinal rule of construction which, applied to the Constitution, may be stated in this wise—that if there be two constructions, one of which is in accordance with the recognized principles and genius of our Government, and the other be in violation of the same, the first must be taken as the true construction. The construction we place on section sixteen, article six, is, therefore, to be preferred, as it proceeds upon the recognition of acknowledged principles, and denies to the people at this time no power possessed by the past generation.

There is, of course, no intention of denying here the binding force and effect of the existing Constitution, in all its functions and operations upon the State Government, until changed; but when the time arrives for the exercise of the political power which inheres in the people, to alter and reform the government, it is not the government which acts but the people in their essential character as the sovereign power, as defined in section two of the Declaration of Rights.

I desire now to call attention to some of the views advanced by the distinguished gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, for whose talent and learning I entertain the greatest respect. I regretted much to hear him denounce the Courts and the learned profession of which he has always been so prominent a member. He insists that gentlemen learned in the law are the least able to give a proper construction to a Constitution, and contends that these instruments are to be interpreted in the manner in which they are understood by men of low intellect. The gentleman's argument called to my mind the distinguished statesman and lawyer, Daniel Webster. I had supposed that a great part of his reputation depended upon his powers and grand efforts as an expounder of the Constitution. I had supposed that his great fame rested somewhat on his ability in that regard. I pictured to myself that distinguished man as he went in his carriage to the Supreme Court of the United States, to argue the great Darmouth College case—a case involving the construction of a clause of the Constitution of the United States. I could see him with his magnificent physique, his grand head—which was "a temple where a god might dwell"—his scrupulously neat attire, his blue coat and brass buttons, and his polished boots, getting out of his carriage at the Capitol, but before entering the Supreme Court stopping to ask the driver to get down from his box and advise him as to the meaning of that clause which forbids the States to pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts. I could also image to myself Chief Justice Marshall, after hearing that great case argued by the mightiest intellects in the land, and after long deliberations over the matter, calling up his very worthy gardener, and asking him to explain what his views were on that subject so difficult and profound to lawyers and Judges. If I recollect aright, Mr. Justice Story says that that clause on the subject of impairing the obligation of contracts was less discussed in the Constitutional Convention, and has been more discussed in the Courts than any other clause of the Constitution. I can also imagine how James Madison, Alexander Hamilton, and John Jay, when they were writing the series of articles constituting the Federalist, to induce the people of the United States to adopt the Federal Constitution, must have called in the janitors and porters around the Capitol to get their views as to the force and effect of its various clauses and provisions.

The learned gentleman from Marin says we must take the first obvious meaning of the Constitution, as read by the man of low intellect. Now, section two of article one says: "All political power is inherent in the people." What people? In whom? He says that the first obvious meaning would include the Chinese as a part of the people of this State. So, also, he says females are a part of the people. Yet he immediately departs from his first obvious meaning, and says that the people are really the electors only—those entitled to take part in public affairs—and that they represent the whole. He had to bring his reflective faculties to bear—his reason and sense, and then he found that the interpretation which a man of low intellect would have applied would have been merely delusive.

Take, also, section three of article one of the Declaration of Rights, which declares that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate," and see whether the meaning would be better ascertained by the man of low intellect, or by Marshall, Kent, Spencer, and Madison.

The first view of the man of low intellect would be that in all proceedings in Courts a right of trial by jury is secured. Yet how often have Courts held that that does not apply to equity cases. The Chancellor calls a jury or not, as he, in his discretion, determines. It is manifest that, to read a Constitution rightly, requires reflection and study, and that men who have devoted the most of their time to the study of the science of government, are best enabled to give enlightened views upon it. I do not say a Constitutional Convention should be composed wholly of lawyers. On the contrary, there should be representatives from all classes of business—the farmer, the merchant, the mechanic, the miner, and others. But I do say that if I wished, in a case of sickness, to know what was my disease, I should prefer the opinion of a skillful physician to that of a man who knows nothing of medicine. On a question of law, I should take the opinion of Judge Hager before that of a layman. On a question of farming, I should resort to those who pursue that vocation. On machinery, I should consult a machinist. The opinions of learned Judges and lawyers, who have devoted their time and intellect to the consideration of legal matters, and to the study of the science of government, are, therefore, entitled to the highest respect and confidence. It was, therefore, very proper for the gentlemen who, by their able arguments, have vindicated the correctness of the report of the majority of the committee, to refer to the actions and opinions of men like Chief Justice Marshall, Chancellor Kent, Judge Spencer, and other distinguished jurists and statesmen, who have written, spoken, and acted upon the subject. They shed a flood of light upon the matter, and furnish precedents which any gentleman can honorably follow.

The learned gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, and also the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman, who has acquired a deserved fame as the author of some well written law books, rely upon section sixteen of article six of the Constitution, which renders District Judges ineligible to any other office than a judicial one during the term for which they were elected, and insist that members of this Convention are officers, because they perform functions of government and are recognized by the Constitution as having something to do with the Government. Though somewhat variously expressed, these gentlemen, as well as the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, all express the one idea of Mr. Jameson, the author of a book on Constitutional Conventions. Mr. Jameson, after treating of the case of Judge O'Melveny, who was permitted to hold his seat in the Illinois Convention, against the same objection as the one urged here, and after stating the arguments there used, pro and con, gives his own opinion that the Judge was ineligible. In support of this view he says in conclusion (page three hundred and eight): "The government of a commonwealth is the totality of those instruments through whose ministry its political organization began and continued. It is that totality which governs, and not necessarily either of its members, precisely as it is in the body of an animal which lives and acts, and not in the separate parts, though doubtless of these, one masticates the food, another digests it, a third performs locomotion, a fourth thinks, and so on. And, as in the living body each organ contributes by no matter how humble or obscure a function to the common life or development, is a member of the organism. So in the commonwealth, every citizen or body of citizens charged with any duty looking to the defense, the operation or the renewal of the political system, is an organ of that commonwealth for purposes connected with the government, and must be ranked among its officers."

This is the substance of the argument here, though greatly elaborated, and Judge Jameson certainly puts it as strongly as any of his followers here. Now one mode of proving that a proposition is untenable is to prove that it goes too far. If its legitimate result is an admitted absurdity, of course it must be abandoned. Let us concede here the proposition that "in this commonwealth every citizen or body of citizens charged with any duty looking to the renewal of the political system is an organ of the commonwealth for purposes connected with its government, and must be ranked among its officers." Now if this Convention be such "a body of citizens," still its powers are quite limited, as they are confined to merely preparing and proposing to the electors a Constitution for adoption. The act which gives force and validity to the whole matter—which renders it effective—is the act of the electors at the polls. Therefore the elector at the polls is, in the language of Mr. Jameson, a "citizen, charged with a duty looking to the renewal of the political system." Therefore he is "an organ of the commonwealth for purposes connected with its government." Therefore an elector "must be ranked among its officers." From this it follows that a Judge would be ineligible to a seat in this Convention and would not be a competent elector to vote upon it. Is not this the legitimate result of the Jameson doctrine? Does not this follow from the argument of the gentlemen from Marin, Sacramento, and San Francisco, Messrs. Shafter, Freeman, and Hager?

If it requires the action of this Convention and the action of the electors to make a Constitution, how can the delegates who merely propose be officers, and yet the electors who enact and give effect to the organic law not be officers? Each performs a separate function—each, you may say, a necessary function. Yet the greater of the two is that performed by the elector. But to call him an officer, is an absurdity no one would commit. This seems to be all that is necessary to say of Mr. Jameson's views, and that of his followers, in this respect. The gentleman from Marin, however, differs from Mr. Jameson in this—that the former insists that the functions of a Constitutional Convention are legislative, and the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Hager, agrees with him in that. Jameson says that a Constitutional Convention cannot exercise legislative functions, and that when it does, it is departing from its legitimate sphere. This question arose out of proceedings in the Missouri Convention, where certain legislative powers were sought to be exercised. They were, however, held invalid, because legislative. So this Convention has great functions and great duties to perform, but they are not legislative in their character. The Legislature may do many things that we of this Convention cannot do. We can do things the Legislature cannot do. Each has its own proper sphere, and each must keep within its own limit. No person is stronger in his antagonism to the exercise of legislative powers by Constitutional Conventions than Mr. Jameson; and when he argued against the eligibility of Judges to seats in the Illinois Convention, he placed it upon a different ground entirely, as has been shown. It is, therefore, somewhat singular that the gentlemen upon the other side of this question do not agree among themselves upon the ground of objection, but differ with each other as much as they differ with us.

The gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, undertook to entertain us with some of his humor, and succeeded very happily. The debate has been long, and often necessarily tedious, and his sparkling humor was much relished. It was quite pleasant to hear his illustrations. He pictured a member of this Convention going after death in search of a last resting place. He first applied to the heaven prepared for good officers, but being told he was no officer he could not get in. He next went to the hell provided for bad office-holders. He was equally ineligible there, and, like Mahomet's coffin, must hang suspended between heaven and hell. Apply, however, this fable to the elector, who performs so important a function in the creation of a new Constitution. He would be equally expelled from the good office-holders' heaven and the bad office-holders' hell, and yet no one can insist that therefore he must be an officer.

The learned gentleman from Marin also offers us his own evidence as a member of the Legislature which proposed the constitutional amendments of eighteen hundred and sixty-two (one being section sixteen of article six) as to what the Legislature and people meant by "office." It was relished as a great joke a few years ago in one of the lower Courts of San Francisco, when a tyro in the law proposed to call Horace Hawes (author of the consolidation law) to testify as to the meaning of certain parts of the consolidation law of the City and County of San Francisco. I confess my surprise to hear the distinguished gentleman from Marin actually give testimony of a like character. The truth is that the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine declared that the Judges of the Supreme and District Courts should be ineligible to any office other than a judicial one, and that the only change affected by the amendment of eighteen hundred and sixty-two was that County Judges were included.

We have, therefore, Mr. President, two constructions of section sixteen, of article six. One of these interprets the word "office" to be such a State office as is provided for in the Constitution itself—such as takes rank in the existing government and looks to it as continuous and permanent—one that has functions of a character consistent with and as a part of that existing government. That construction excludes a member of this Convention, which is not a part of the machinery of the existing government, nor made in its support. Such a construction is consistent with the principles of liberty and the genius of American government. It is consistent with the second section of the Bill of Rights. The opposite construction proceeds upon the basis that the people of one generation have greater political rights and power than the people of a succeeding generation, and one Constitutional Convention is more powerful than its successor. I submit, therefore, that the views of the majority of the committee are the sound views upon this subject.

I will call brief attention to article ten of the Constitution, upon which the views of my distinguished friend from San Francisco, Judge Hager, somewhat surprised me. I do not know, however, that I should express surprise, for a distinguished man has said (I quote from memory), "Make a point ever so clear, and the odds are great that one whose habits of thought are different and the bent of whose mind lies in an opposite direction, will be unable to perceive it." Another delegate from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, had, in support of the majority report, read from the Constitution of New York a clause almost exactly like section sixteen of article six of our Constitution, as to the ineligibility of Judges to offices other than judicial offices, and proceeded to show that notwithstanding the clause, such eminent men as Chancellor Kent, Ambrose Spencer, and others sat in the Constitutional Convention of New York while holding their judicial positions, thereby proving that those distinguished men had construed the word office not to embrace delegates to a Constitutional Convention. In reply to this the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, produced the Constitution of New York to show that it contained no provision for the amendment or revision of the Constitution, while the Constitution of California contains provisions for amendment and revision. Therefore, he says in New York a member of the Constitutional Convention is not an officer, but in California a member of the Constitutional Convention is an officer; that Chancellor Kent and all the other Judges mentioned who held seats in the New York Convention, called together by the Legislature, were not holding another office, but that in California the delegates to this Convention are officers, because called together under the provisions of article ten, on the subject of amendment and revision. I could not help but think that the delegates to the New York Convention, who thus are construed not to be officers, would have been refused admittance to both the heaven and hell spoken of by Mr. Shafter, and been compelled to go to midair with Mahomet's coffin. What is the true meaning and force of article ten of our Constitution, providing for amendments and revision of the Constitution; and what is the effect of its absence in the New York Constitution? Is it not clear that the people of New York had the inherent political power to alter and amend the Constitution of that State? Is not that a great underlying principle of the American Government? Must the power to make a new Constitution come from a grant in the Constitution itself? Does it not come from the genius and spirit of republicanism itself? Manifestly so.

The Act of the Legislature of New York calling a Convention was merely putting the dormant power of the people of the State into action. It provided merely a proper and regular mode for the exercise of an admitted power inherent in the people. So article ten of our Constitution performs the like office. It avoids confusion and uncertainty, and secures a regular, peaceful, and orderly right which existed before the Constitution was framed, and will survive all Constitutions—the right declared in section two of the Bill of Rights. Inherent power is not granted by a Constitution. It is a confusion of ideas to say that inherent power is dependent upon a Constitution. The Bill of Rights does not give to the people the power to alter or amend the Constitution, but simply declares and affirms its existence, and the power would have existed all the same had there been no declaration of it. Now, if it be correct that this power was inherent in the people of New York—and the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, admits it—and they could exercise it, though not mentioned in the Constitution, then I ask him whether the mere mode of setting that great power of the people into motion could make any difference? Whether a delegate to a Convention called by the Legislature can be no officer, but a delegate called in another mode is an officer? I ask whether this Convention, when it is assembled, differs from any other Constitutional Convention lawfully assembled, no matter how called?

MR. HAGER. The gentleman will allow me to correct him. I did not state that in New York he was not an officer. I stated that the Constitution of California provided for the mode of calling this Convention, while the New York Constitution did not, and therefore they were different in that respect. I did not say they were not officers there but they were officers here. I certainly did not say anything of the kind, except that in our State they are recognized by the Constitution as members of the Convention, while in New York there was no such recognition in the Constitution. That is what I said.

MR. WILSON. I wrote it down, Mr. President, immediately after he said it. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but he said distinctly that these persons were not officers in New York. He has a right to retract it, of course, but I cannot be mistaken, for I wrote it down immediately.

MR. HAGER. We are not lawyers now, before a jury. When a member gives his views as to what he intended to say, that should be sufficient. I hope the gentlman will accept the explanation.

MR. WILSON. Certainly; the gentleman has a right to make the explanation. I desire to show him all due courtesy, but I cannot admit that I have uttered a falsehood before the Convention. I can now say this much, that Mr. Hager did not intend to say that they were not officers in New York. I will therefore assume that he didn't say whether they were officers or whether they were not. The learned gentleman took the distinction which now, by his explanation, amounts to nothing, for he says, "I didn't say whether they were officers or not." He took that distinction to show you that whilst it was right in New York for Judges to sit in Convention, it could not apply to us here, because in California they are officers, and thus he takes up Jameson's proposition and adopts it.

I say that the position of the members of the New York Convention and those of the California Convention are the same. The mere mode of calling them together is a matter of secondary importance. Whether it is recognized by the Constitution or not is of mere secondary importance, because the right exists in either case. Article ten of the Constitution of California simply provides the regular and proper mode of calling the delegates together, to enable the people to exercise their great inherent powers, to frame and form a new Constitution. It is a good thing to have in the Constitution, because it prevents disorder. It prevents irregularities in the exercise of that power, but it does not give the power. It simply provides a plain and easy mode of ascertaining the sentiments of the majority upon a particular occasion, as to whether the people desire to revise the Constitution. But in addition to this we may say that as the framers of that Constitution undertook to say something upon the subject of a Constitution, by all proper rules of construction they are presumed to have said all on that subject that they intended to say, and the proposition of the distinguished gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, is undoubtedly correct, that we have no right to go outside of article ten for the purpose of considering any matter upon the subject of the Constitution, and members of the Convention. It is a plain rule of common sense and a principle of legal construction, that if there are general words in one part of an instrument and particular provisions in another part of the instrument, and there is any conflict, the particular language with reference to the particular subject controls. Now here, where article ten of the Constitution is special and applies particularly to Conventions, we look to that alone and do not go any further. We find that article ten prescribes no test of eligibility, prescribes no qualifications whatever. Therefore we are to act just as if there was nothing said about it in the Constitution. The electors have the inherent right to call a Convention to revise the Constitution and to select their own delegates. They, in the language of the Constitution, have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it.

I am unable at this late hour to answer further the propositions of the various gentlemen who have so ably participated in this discussion and opposed the majority report. The question has been argued very thoroughly and very fully, and every gentleman here has no doubt formed a decided opinion. On behalf of the committee I can only add that the discussion has but more firmly convinced us of the correctness of our course, and we submit that the Hon. Eugene Fawcett is entitled to his seat in this Convention as a delegate from the County of Santa Barbara.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I move the previous question.

The motion was seconded by Messrs. Tinnin and Barbour.

The motion prevailed and the main question ordered.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MADE THE SPECIAL ORDER.

MR. VAN DYKE. I wish to make a motion that the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights be printed, and made the special order for Tuesday.

THE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears none.

MR. GRAVES. On yesterday I announced to the house that Mr. Mills, who would have voted aye on the Fawcett resolution, was paired with Mr. Estey who would have voted no.

REPORT.

MR. LAINE. Mr. President: I ask leave to present a report from the Judiciary Committee. The Chairman of the committee has gone away, and this is a report that ought to be made, and I ask that it be printed, with the accompanying resolution, and laid on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection the report will be received. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Judiciary, to whom was referred the question as to the meaning and construction of the Act of the State Legislature calling this Convention, in regard to the fund or funds chargeable with the cost of printing, stationery, etc., necessary for said Convention, respectfully report, that we had the same under consideration, and that it is the opinion of the committee, that under the Act it is the duty of the Secretary of State to furnish the members of the Convention with stationery, and that the same is chargeable to the twenty-five thousand dollars appropriated "for stationery, fuel, lights, etc., for the Legislature and State officers," etc.

This conclusion is arrived at by construing the Act making the general appropriations with the Act calling the Convention. (See Stats. 1877-8, p. 1007, third item from bottom of page; same Stats., p. 1008, Sec. 2, and p. 763, Sec. 5.)

Reading these sections and provisions together lead us to the opinion above expressed.

Second—As to the printing, it is our opinion that it is chargeable to the one hundred thousand dollars appropriated for support of the State Printing Office. (See Stats. 1877-8, p. 1007, Sec. 1, twelfth item from top of page; see also same Stats. p. 765, Sec. 16,) by which the printing is directed to be done at the State Printing Office, and the Convention is not given control of it, nor required to audit the accounts thereof; but that power is confined to the pay of members, employés, etc.

This view is strengthened by the fact that the Controller's estimate for the State Printing Office for the two years ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and eighty, was the sum of seventy-five thousand dollars; (See last report of Controller, p. 131,) while the appropriation was one hundred thousand dollars. (See Stats. 1877-8, p. 1007, before cited.) This large appropriation leads us to the conclusion that the printing for the Convention was included; and this is strengthened by the fact, that there was only one hundred and fifty thousand dollars specially appropriated for the expenses of the Convention, and their pay was fixed at ten dollars per day, and the number fixed at one hundred and fifty-two members, while one hundred days are allowed them to sit; when it must have been apparent to the Legislature, that one hundred and fifty thousand dollars would have been greatly inadequate to pay all the expenses of the Convention for a much shorter time than one hundred days.

Third—All other expenses of the Convention must, in our judgment, be paid out of the special appropriation of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars made in the Act calling the Convention.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

S. M. WILSON,
Chairman Judiciary Committee.

October 23d, 1878.

Constitutional Convention of the people of the State of California:

Resolved, That under the law of the State calling this Convention, the stationery furnished members by the Secretary of State is chargeable to the appropriation of twenty-five thousand dollars made "for stationery, fuel, lights, etc.," and not to the special appropriation of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars made in said Act calling the Convention; and that the printing is chargeable to the appropriation of one hundred thousand dollars for the support of "State printing," and not against the one hundred and fifty thousand dollar appropriation aforesaid; and be it further

Resolved, That the President of the Convention be instructed to take such steps as he may deem necessary to be taken in the premises to carry into practical effect the foregoing resolution.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. President: During the call of the roll last night on the question of the eligibility of Judge Fawcett, I stated that I voted in the affirmative for the purpose of moving for a reconsideration, as under the previous question then pending, there was no opportunity otherwise to state the reason for my vote. While by parliamentary law such notice can be given on the day following, I am aware that our rules require that notice shall be given on the day on which the vote is taken. There was no chance to give any other notice before the adjournment. A rigid enforcement of the rule would prevent the making of the motion, but if the rule was liberally construed I might make it now. Without raising that point, however, I may, perhaps, be permitted to have a few minutes in the many hours that have been occupied on this question, here to state the grounds of my motion, and I hope the Chair will entertain it temporarily for that purpose.

THE PRESIDENT. Shall the gentleman have leave?

[Cries of "leave! leave!"]

MR. MCCALLUM. I make this statement because my vote was influenced by a different reason from any of those which were given here in that lengthy and able debate. While believing that we are bound by all the provisions of the present Constitution, and until a new one shall be ratified by the people, and utterly denying the right to disregard any part of it, I was satisfied that the authorities cited here at least raised a doubt whether the position of a member here was such an office as is contemplated by the Constitution. Especially in view of the fact that as it now provides a Convention can do nothing but propose a Constitution to the people. But in the Constitution, as made in eighteen hundred and forty-nine, it was provided that the Supreme Court Justices and the District Court Judges should be excluded from holding any other but judicial office during the term for which they were elected. That was amended in eighteen hundred and sixty-two, simply by adding County Judges. But the Constitution, as made in eighteen hundred and forty-nine, contained also this section in reference to Constitutional Conventions: Article ten, section two. "And if at any time two thirds of the Senate and Assembly shall think it necessary to revise and change the entire Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors of the next election for members of the Legislature to vote for or against the calling of a Convention, and if it shall appear that a majority of such electors voted in favor of calling such election, the next Legislature shall provide by law for calling a Convention, to be held within six months after the passage of such law; and such Convention shall consist of a number of members not less than that of both branches of the Legislature." And thus it ends. Under the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, in which the District Judges were excluded, it provided for making a Constitution by the Convention itself, without its submission to the people. When that prohibition was made the Constitutional Convention in view was not only a legislative body, but the highest legislative body known to the law. It was for that reason that in eighteen hundred and fifty-six the amendment was made to this article ten, providing that any Constitution made by such Convention should be submitted to the people. The question might be raised whether it would not even then have had to be submitted any way. But the authorities show that at least thirty-four State Constitutions framed under similar circumstances in the United States in the last century, were never submitted to the people, according to Jameson. Therefore it was a necessity that the Constitution should be amended as it was, so as to require such submission for ratification. Therefore, believing that when the exclusion of District Judges necessarily meant from membership of such Convention, having the highest possible legislative powers, I feel compelled to vote accordingly, and against my inclination, in favor of retaining Judge Fawcett as a member. I need hardly say that I have no regret in being in the minority. On the contrary, personally I am satisfied that the majority have entertained a different view.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

MR. WICKES. Mr. President: I wish to present the following memorial from citizens of San Francisco, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights:

To the Constitutional Convention, to meet at Sacramento, California, on the twenty-eighth day of September, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight:

Believing that Almighty God is the source of all power and authority in civil government, that the Lord Jesus Christ is the Ruler of Nations, and that the revealed will of God is of supreme authority in civil affairs;

Remembering that this country was settled by Christian men, with Christian ends in view, and that they gave a distinctly Christian character to the institutions which they established;

Perceiving the persevering attempts which are made to prohibit the reading of the Bible in our public schools, to overthrow our Sabbath laws, to abolish the oath, prayer in our State Legislature, and other Christian features of our institutions, and so to divorce the Government from all connection with the Christian religion;

Viewing with grave apprehension the corruption of our politics, and the prevalent lack of moral and religious character in those who hold office in the State; and,

Believing that a written Constitution should contain explicit evidence of the Christian character and purpose of the State which frames it; and perceiving that the silence of the Constitution of the State, as well as of the United States, in this respect, is used as an argument against all that is Christian in the usage and administration of the government;

We, the undersigned, citizens of the State of California, petition your honorable body to frame the Constitution so that it shall suitably express our acknowledgment of Almighty God as the source of all authority in civil government, of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Ruler of Nations, and of His revealed will as of supreme authority, and thus indicate that this is a Christian commonwealth, and place all the Christian laws, institutions, and usages of the State on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the same.

THE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM STATE OFFICERS.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair is in receipt of the following communication from the Secretary of State, which the Secretary will read:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
SACRAMENTO, October 23d, 1878.

To the honorable President and members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: In compliance with a resolution adopted by your honorable body on the eighteenth instant, I have the honor to furnish the following statement of the amount of stationery issued from my office upon requisition of the various members, officers, and committees of the Convention from the opening of the session up to and including Saturday, October 19th, to wit: Amount issued to members, $1,167 41; amount issued to officers and attachés, $212 24; amount issued to committees, $30 16; total, $1,449 81.

Very respectfully,

THOS. BECK, Secretary of State.

THE PRESIDENT. It will lie on the table. I also have a communication from the Surveyor-General; if there is no objection the reading will be dispensed with, and the document will be printed. Hearing none it is so ordered.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, October 24th, 1878.

To Hon. J. P. Hoge, President of the Constitutional Convention:

SIR: In obedience to a resolution, passed by your honorable body, I have the honor herewith to submit the following statement.

WM. MINIS,
Surveyor-General.

The following shows the whole number of acres of land which have been certified or listed to the State of California by the Government of the United States, by reason of the following land grants and donations of land:

	Acres.
Swamp and overflowed lands	1,588,768.85
Grant of 500,000 acres	487,376.95
Seminary, or seventy-two (72) sections	40,445 06

Agriculture and Mechanics' Art grant	140,759 92
Yosemite Valley grant	36,111.14
Mariposa "Big-Tree" Grove grant	2,589.76

The following shows the total cash value received by the State for lands sold by her under the following grants, as appears from the records of the State Controller:

	Principal.	Interest.
Grant of 16th and 36th sections and lands in lieu thereof	$1,201,640 18	$736,914 60
Grant of 500,000 acres	389,432 35	407,811 98

Grant of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections and lands in lieu thereof.

The area of the State is about 100,500,000 acres.

The area of lakes, islands, bays, rivers, swamp, and tide lands, is about 3,357,451 acres, which taken from the area of the State, leaves about 97,142,549 acres. This amount divided by eighteen (18), gives the area of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections and lands in lieu thereof, which amounts to about 5,396,808 acres.

About all the land listed to the State in lieu of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections has been disposed of.

About 2,200,000 acres of this grant is unsurveyed.

All the swamp land that is surveyed is either sold or applied for. The proceeds of the sales of this land is paid to the County Treasurers of the counties in which it is situated.

The lands held under the grant of 500,000 acres have been wholly disposed of by the State.

MR. MCCALLUM. I ask that my vote be changed in regard to the Fawcett resolution.

THE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection the gentleman will be allowed to change his vote. The Chair hears none.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

MR. SHOEMAKER presented the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Reporting and Printing, to whom was referred resolution number sixty-three, concerning certain inquiries as to the probable cost and the expediency of transcribing and printing the Journal of this Convention, have had the same under consideration, and herewith report the same back and recommend its adoption by the Convention.

The following is the resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Reporting and Printing be and it is hereby instructed to inquire into and report at an early day to the Convention, by resolution or otherwise, the expediency and the probable cost of inscribing, indexing, and printing the Journal of this Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

MR. LARKIN. I would like to have some member of the committee state what this is going to cost. I do not want to vote blindly in a matter of this kind.

MR. SHOEMAKER. This resolution was never adopted. It was introduced and referred to our committee, and we now report it back recommending its adoption. If the resolution is adopted by the Convention, then the committee will report upon the cost. It has nothing to do with the cost.

The resolution was adopted.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I would like to make a motion out of order. The other day the Superintendent of State Printing sent in an account of the amount of money that the printing had cost up to date. It seems to me the cost was very large, and I would like to have that report referred to the Committee on Printing, that they may make an estimate, and see whether or not we are paying too much for printing.

THE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

MR. HILBORN presented the following report from the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses, to whom was referred resolution number fifty-two, authorizing the President to appoint Porters for the committee rooms, beg leave to report, that since the introduction of this resolution we have taken occasion to examine into the whole question of the employment of attachés in this Convention, in order to see if some change could not be made in the interest of economy. To this end we addressed a note to the Sergeant-at-Arms, asking him to communicate to us his views upon the subject, and by his permission we hereby append his answer as a part of our report:

"To the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses of the Constitutional Convention—Gentlemen: In reply to your request for a statement of what additional help I deem necessary for the performance of the work now necessary to be done for the Convention; also, to the advisability of dispensing with any of the present employés, I hereby present the following for your consideration: First, two additional Porters are necessary to care for the committee rooms and other work they may be detailed to do; second, that there is one Doorkeeper more and two Pages more than are actually necessary for that branch of the service. The help arranged in this way, and properly detailed, would, in my opinion, be more than sufficient to perform all the work necessary.

"T. J SHERWOOD, Sergeant-at-Arms.

"October 22, 1878."

Your committee fully concur in the views of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and since the Sergeant-at-Arms, by reason of his having charge of these Pages, has obtained a knowledge of their qualifications, and is able to judge as to who should be retained and who should be discharged, we recommend that he be clothed with power to designate the persons whose services can best be dispensed with, and we therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the President appoint two Porters for the committee rooms, at a salary of four dollars per day each, payable out of the appropriation for the expenses of this Convention.

Resolved, That the services of one Doorkeeper and two Pages be dispensed with, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms designate the persons to be discharged.

We herewith lay before you a list of the attachés of the Convention, with the salary of each, in order that the Convention may be informed as to the daily expenses:

HILBORN, Chairman.

THE PRESIDENT. The question will be on the adoption of the resolution.

MR. HILBORN. There are two resolutions. One says that the President shall appoint Porters of the committee rooms. They had better be voted upon separately.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the first resolution:

Resolved, That the President appoint two Porters for the committee rooms, at a salary of four dollars a day, to be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of this Convention.

MR. HILBORN. Our investigation shows first, that there is no doubt that these Porters are necessary. It may be said by some gentlemen that the committee rooms are now kept in good condition. This is true. The Sergeant-at-Arms, since the committees have been meeting, has had two men employed—without authority, it is true—but they have been employed and have been at work from early in the morning until late at night, and they have all they can do. I think this resolution should be adopted.

MR. GREGG. I would like to ask how long we will need these Porters—how long these committees will be in session? It will certainly not be long until the committee work will all be done up, and then there will certainly be no need for Porters.

MR. HILBORN. I will assure you that as soon as their services can be dispensed with I shall not stand in the way of their removal. But they are necessary at this time, as the various committees of the Convention are at work, and the rooms must be attended to.

The resolution was adopted by a standing vote: ayes, 62; noes, 43.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the next resolution.

THE SECRETARY read as follows:

"Resolved, That the services of one Doorkeeper and two Pages be dispensed with, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms designate the persons to be discharged."

MR. HILBORN. Now, in regard to this resolution, the Committee on Contingent Expenses felt that this was a very painful duty to perform, to present a resolution, the adoption of which would turn some of the employés out of employment, but we felt that we were charged with the duty which we could not evade. Mr. President, we claim that we should manage the financial affairs of this Convention as we would our private affairs, and when it came to the knowledge of the committee that there were more employés than necessary, we could do nothing but inform the Convention of that fact. It is a very painful duty to turn off any of these employés, and we consider that we are showing no disrespect to the President when we took away that disagreeable duty and gave it to the Sergeant-at-Arms. We shall not feel that we have been snubbed if you vote the resolution down. We have no personal feeling in this matter. As to the matter of who shall designate these persons to be discharged, this will relieve the President of the Convention of a very unpleasant duty, and since the Sergeant-at-Arms has control of these employés and knows their efficiency, I think it would be a great deal better to leave the matter to him. That is all there is of the resolution. Let the Sergeant-at-Arms designate the ones to be discharged. I have no personal feeling in the matter, but I believe the business of the Convention can be carried on with less employés than we now have. We must not squander the money of the State, and we should manage the business of the State as we would our own private matters. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I move, as an amendment to that, to strike out the word "Pages" and read that two Doorkeepers be discharged.

MR. BARBOUR. I have a resolution to that effect which I desire to send up.

THE SECRETARY read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be authorized to detail two Doorkeepers to take care of the committee rooms as Porters.

THE PRESIDENT. That resolution is in conflict with the resolution just adopted, and therefore it is out of order. The motion of Mr. O'Sullivan is to discharge two Doorkeepers and retain all the Pages. It is moved, in the shape of an amendment to the original resolution reported by the Committee on Contingent Expenses, to strike out "two Pages" and insert "two Doorkeepers." The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

MR. McFARLAND. I understand the resolution includes two Pages and two Doorkeepers.

THE PRESIDENT. No, sir; one Doorkeeper.

MR. HERRINGTON. I think the question should be taken on the Doorkeepers and then on the Pages.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. President: I understand that there are only three Doorkeepers now, and certainly we want that many. Now, I find that some gentlemen are laboring under a great misapprehension about the duties of Doorkeepers. Now, we must either have three Doorkeepers or none at all. One would be of no avail, because there are three gates by which persons can enter on this floor. Now, the Sergeant-at-Arms has no secretary or clerk, and it seems to me that we should have at least three Doorkeepers. It looks to me rather a small thing to change our mind on this business, right in the middle of the session, in order to make a little show of economy, wasting ten dollars for every one saved. We have made up our minds how many employés we need, and I do not see how we are going to get along without them. Members need not be so afraid about exhausting the appropriation, they will all get their money anyway.

MR. SHOEMAKER. Mr. President: I understand that the resolution reported by the committee will save about ten dollars a day, and I don't think the Sergeant-at-Arms, for such a small consideration, should have so much trouble put upon him as to have to turn off these men.

MR. HILBORN. As I understand it, the Sergeant-at-Arms, if this were carried out, can so arrange the force that the business can be carried on without the services either of the Night Watchman, or any additional Doorkeepers. For instance, if one of the Doorkeepers is dispensed with, the Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms can tend one of the doors, or if he is engaged in other business, one of the Assistant Porters, or some of them, can be had to assist at the gates. We passed a resolution the other day placing all the Pages under the control of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and under that resolution he now has the control over them, so that he can assign one for night work, and there would be additional Night Watchmen enough on the force without any additional expense to the State. As I said before the committee has no feeling in the world about this. You can adopt the resolution or vote it down, or change it in any way, but the committee coming in possession of the facts that there were more employés now than are necessary, some of them ought to be discharged. You can do what you please with the resolution.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. O'Sullivan, will be adopted. I do not believe that the people of Sacramento are so troublesome and so fierce, and so desirous of getting hold of our papers and propositions, to carry them off, that we must have two or three gentlemen sitting by the gates to hold these doors and keep people out. I do not see any necessity for any Doorkeepers; at the same time, I have no objection to having one if it is actually necessary. Now, sir, I believe that two of the Doorkeepers can be detailed as Porters. There is no necessity for discharging any one, no necessity for hiring any one. There are some eminent gentlemen on this floor, whenever a question of economy is raised, who take the opportunity of throwing into the teeth of gentlemen who advocate economy, that we are afraid the funds are going to give out. I want to say to such gentlemen, as far as the delegates from San Francisco are concerned, we are desirous of completing our duties in this Convention as quickly as possible, and going home to our constituents. We are desirous that this work shall be done as soon as possible, but we want it done well, and we are not scared about the funds giving out. I, for one, am going to remain at my post until it is completed, money or no money. The gentleman says we will get our money anyway, that is, if the funds give out, so you see he is willing to go on and entail an extra expense on the State, and allow the State to pay it. We, being true economists, desire that those Doorkeepers be detailed as Porters, and I desire to say now once more, that we want to get through with this work as quickly as possible, but we are not afraid about the funds giving out. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

MR. TINNIN. It is a notorious fact that in almost all legislative bodies, when a man has been placed in a position, no matter how unnecessary he may be, it is next to impossible to remove him from the place. Now, sir, it is enough for me to know that a standing committee of this body, composed, as it is, of all the elements represented here, after a full investigation of this subject, they investigate every matter connected with it, and they come here with a report and tell you what these facts are, and sir, it is enough for me to know that the committee have unanimously arrived at that conclusion; I am willing to sustain the committee in that conclusion. It is evident here to us that there are too many attachés in this body at the present time, but few of the members know half of them, and if the committee, through the Sergeant-at Arms, desires to curtail the expenses of this Convention, I think by all means they should be sustained in their report, and I hope the report of the committee will be sustained as it is.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

THE SECRETARY read as follows:

"Resolved, That the services of one Doorkeeper and two Pages be dispensed with, and that the Sergeant at-Arms designate the persons to be discharged."

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. O'Sullivan, moves to strike out "two Pages," and insert "two Doorkeepers" instead of one. The question is not divisible under rule twenty-one.

The amendment was lost.

The resolution was then adopted by a standing vote—ayes, 74, noes, 34.

RESOLUTIONS.

MR. TULLY. I have here a resolution, in reference to Night Watchman, which I would like to have read and referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

THE SECRETARY read as follows:

WHEREAS, As this Convention will be known to all future generations as a body that in all their acts exercised the most rigid economy, even to the discharging of, and refusing to pay, a Night Watchman, who had faithfully toiled for twenty-one nights; and,

WHEREAS, Since his discharge the desks of the members are nightly robbed of pens, pencils, stationery, and everything of value left there, thus depriving members of their use, and our glorious State of California of their value: and,

WHEREAS, It is necessary to maintain our future standing with unborn generations; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of this Convention be requested to commence, in alphabetical order, as the names are on the roll call, and name a member each night to act as Watchman in this chamber, and in the rooms adjoining thereto.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that the order be reversed, to commence at the bottom of the roll call instead of the head.

THE PRESIDENT. I rather think the resolution is out of order.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I wish to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That each member of this Convention, and each standing committee, be allowed stationery to the value of ten dollars, and no more.

Referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

MR. LARKIN. I observe by the report of the Secretary of State that our stationery account amounts to about one thousand four hundred dollars. I am satisfied, Mr. President, that any member on this floor can get along with ten dollars worth of stationery, and no committee can certainly use more than that amount; therefore, I insist upon the resolution of that kind, so that each member will be limited in the amount of stationery he can draw. I think we should practice economy. I am for retrenchment and reform in the administration of the government.

THE PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

MR. JONES. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution.

THE PRESIDENT. It has been referred to the committee. When it comes back you will have a chance to amend it.

THE PRESIDENT. Too late; it has been referred.

Referred to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

NOTICE OF RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. STEDMAN. I desire to give notice that on Monday I will move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution of this morning was adopted, changing the officers.

Mr. TINNIN. Did the gentleman vote in the affirmative?

The PRESIDENT. Did the gentleman vote in the affirmative?

Mr. STEDMAN. It makes no difference under rule thirty-seven, which reads as follows:

"On the day succeeding that on which a final vote on any proposition or resolution concerning the Constitution, or other resolution, has been taken, said vote may be reconsidered on motion of any member."

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman must have voted in the affirmative before he will be entitled to give the notice.

Mr. TINNIN. Let me read the rest of the rule which the gentleman omitted. I will read the entire rule. It reads as follows:

On the day succeeding that on which a final vote on any proposition, or resolution concerning the Constitution, or other resolution, has been taken, said vote may be reconsidered on motion of any member; provided, notice of intention to move such reconsideration shall have been given on the day on which such final vote was taken by a member voting with the majority; and it shall not be in order for any member to move a reconsideration on the day on which such final vote was taken. Such motion of reconsideration shall have precedence over every other motion, except a motion to adjourn. No notice of reconsideration shall be in order on the day preceding the last day of the session.

The very rule which the gentleman invokes says that the notice must be given by a member voting in the affirmative.

Mr. STEDMAN. I wish to read Cushing's Manual.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled the notice out of order under the rules.

Mr. STEDMAN. Then I wish to appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I desire to read from "Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies," page five hundred and seven.

Mr. ROLFE. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT. There is already one point of order; the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman, will proceed.

Mr. STEDMAN. Cushing says: "When no division of the house takes place, all the members present are deemed to have voted with the majority, and any member may move a reconsideration." Now, no division of the house has taken place, and I must be deemed to have voted with the majority, and, therefore, my motion is in order.

The PRESIDENT. Rule thirty-seven supersedes that, and absolutely provides that a member must have voted with the majority before he can give notice, and the Chair so decides, from which decision of the Chair the gentleman takes an appeal.

Mr. STEDMAN. I withdraw the appeal.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. NOEL. I move that the Convention do now adjourn until Monday, at ten o'clock.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move to amend, that the Convention do now adjourn until Monday, at three o'clock.

The PRESIDENT. A simple motion to adjourn is not amendable.

The motion to adjourn was lost.

PROPOSITIONS AND RESOLUTIONS RELATING TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The PRESIDENT. Propositions and resolutions relating to the Constitution are still in order.

IN REGARD TO ALIENS.

Mr. RINGGOLD introduced the following proposition, to restrict privileges to persons ineligible to become citizens:

All persons ineligible to become citizens under the naturalization laws, or prohibited by international treaties, shall not enjoy such rights and privileges as are conferred upon native-born.

Referred to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

MUNICIPAL ORGANIZATIONS.

Mr. HAGER introduced the following proposition to amend the Constitution, in regard to county, city, and town governments:

Section 1. The several counties of this State, as they now exist, are hereby recognized as legal subdivisions of the State.

Sec. 2. County seats shall not be removed by special law, but such removals may be provided for by general law. No county seat shall be removed unless two thirds of the qualified voters of the county shall, at a general election, vote in favor of such removal. A proposition of removal shall not be submitted in the same county more than once in five years.

Sec. 3. No new counties shall be established which shall reduce any county to less than four hundred square miles, or to a population of less than ten thousand inhabitants; nor shall any new county be formed of less area or containing a less population; nor shall any line thereof pass within ten miles of the county seat of any county proposed to be divided; nor shall a county be divided, or have any portion taken therefrom, unless a majority of all the qualified electors of the county or counties affected, voting at a general election, shall vote therefor. New counties when created, or portions of a county when added to another county, shall be liable for and obliged to pay their just proportion of all debts and liabilities then existing of the county or counties out of which they are respectively formed or taken.

Sec. 4. The Legislature shall establish a system of county and township governments which shall be uniform throughout the State.

Sec. 5. County officers shall consist of Boards of Supervisors, Sheriffs, Coroners, Recorders of Deeds, Auditors, Clerks, Treasurers, Surveyors, District Attorneys, and such others as may be established by law, who shall receive such compensation and perform such duties as may be prescribed by law. No Sheriff or Treasurer shall be eligible for the term next succeeding the one for which he may be elected. County officers shall be elected as prescribed by law. No person shall be eligible to a county office unless he has been a citizen and a resident within the county for two years next preceding his election or appointment.

Sec. 6. The Legislature, except as otherwise in this Constitution provided, shall provide for the election or appointment of such county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require, with such duties as may be prescribed by law. It shall, by laws uniform in their operation, regulate the fees of all county officers, and for this purpose may classify the counties by population; and shall provide by law for the strict accountability of all county and township officers, as well for the fees which may be collected by them as for all public or municipal moneys which may be paid to them.

SEC. 7. Supervisors shall be elected ——.

SEC. 8. Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the Legislature by general laws shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to inhabitants, of cities and towns; and cities and towns heretofore incorporated or created by special laws may become organized under and subject to such general laws. Cities and towns, having a population of at least ten thousand inhabitants, may become incorporated under general laws whenever a majority of the electors thereof shall at a general election vote in favor of the same.

SEC. 9. In any county having a city therein containing over one hundred thousand inhabitants, the city and county governments thereof, with an area of less than four hundred square miles, may be consolidated into one municipal government, and may be incorporated under general laws providing for the incorporation and organization of corporations for municipal purposes. The provisions of this Constitution applicable to cities, and also those applicable to counties, so far as not inconsistent, shall be applicable to such consolidated governments. In consolidated city and county governments there shall be two Boards of Supervisors or houses of legislation; one of which, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected by general ticket from the city and county at large, and shall be so classified that six shall be elected every two years. In the election of Supervisors by general ticket from the city and county at large, each qualified elector shall vote for no more than one half the number to be elected, and the persons having the highest number of votes shall be elected. Any casual vacancy in the office of Supervisor in either Board shall be filled by the County Judge.

SEC. 10. Any city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants, may frame ——.

SEC. 11. The term of any county, city, town, or municipal office shall not exceed —— years; and no person shall be eligible thereto unless he has been a citizen and resident of such county, city, or town, respectively, for —— years next preceding his election or appointment.

SEC. 12. No county, city, town, or municipal officer shall receive to his own use, in salary or fees, more than —— thousand dollars for any one year. Any such officer receiving fees shall make returns quarterly to the —— of all fees by him received and disbursed, stating the same fully in detail, verified by his oath; and for any statement or omission in such return, contrary to truth, such officer shall be guilty of perjury, and may be prosecuted and punished therefor as prescribed by law. The Legislature shall also provide for the removal from office of county, city, town, and municipal officers, for willful, corrupt violation or neglect of official duty.

SEC. 13. The compensation or fees of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office; nor shall the term of any such officer be extended beyond the period for which he was elected or appointed.

SEC. 14. No county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, nor the inhabitants thereof, nor the property therein, shall be released or discharged from their or its proportionate share of taxes to be levied for State purposes, nor shall commutation for such taxes be authorized in any form whatsoever.

SEC. 15. Taxes for county, city, town, and school purposes may be levied on all subjects and objects of taxation; but the valuation of property therefor shall not exceed the valuation of the same property for State purposes.

SEC. 16. The Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns, or other public or municipal corporations, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes.

SEC. 17. The Legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, company, association, or individual, any power to make, control, appropriate, supervise, or in any way interfere with, any county, city, town, or municipal improvement, money, property, or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, or to levy taxes or assessments, or perform any municipal functions whatever.

SEC. 18. No State office shall be continued or created in any county, city, town, or other municipality, for the inspection, measurement, or graduation of any merchandise, manufacture, or commodity; but such county, city, town, or municipality may, when authorized by law, and the public interest demands it, appoint such officers.

SEC. 19. Private property shall not be taken or sold for the payment of the corporate debt of any political or municipal corporation.

SEC. 20. All moneys, assessments, and taxes belonging to or collected for the use of any county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, coming into the hands of any officer thereof, shall immediately on the receipt thereof be deposited with the Treasurer, or other legal depositary, to the credit of such city, town, or other corporation respectively, for the benefit of the funds to which they respectively belong.

SEC. 21. The making of profit out of county, city, town, or public school money, or using the same for any purpose not authorized by law, by any officer having the possession or control thereof, shall be a felony, and shall be prosecuted and punished as prescribed by law.

SEC. 22. No county, city, town, township, Board of Education, school district, or other political or municipal corporation, shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner, or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for them respectively for such year, without the assent of two thirds of the voters thereof voting at an election to be held for that purpose; nor in cases requiring such assent shall any indebtedness be incurred (except by a county to erect a Court-house or jail) to an amount, including existing indebtedness, in the aggregate exceeding five per centum on the value of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained by the assessment next before the last assessment for State and county purposes, previous to the incurring such indebtedness; unless, before or at the time of incurring such indebtedness, provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof within twenty years from the time of contracting the same.

SEC. 23. No county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, by a vote of its citizens or otherwise, shall become a subscriber to the capital stock, or a stockholder in any corporation, association, or company, or make any appropriation, or donation, or loan its credit to, or in aid of, any person, corporation, association, company, or institution.

SEC. 24. No law shall be passed by the Legislature granting the right to construct and operate a railroad within any city, town, village, or on any public street or highway thereof, without the consent of the municipal or other proper local authorities having the control of such street or highway proposed to be occupied by such railroad.

SEC. 25. Before any public work or improvement of any description whatsoever shall be made or done, in any city, in, upon, or about the streets thereof, or otherwise, the cost and expense of which is made chargeable or may be assessed upon private property by special assessment, an estimate of such expense shall be made, and an assessment, in proportion to benefits, shall be made and levied on the property to be benefited, and shall be collected and paid into the city treasury before such work or improvement shall be made, or any contract for letting or doing the same shall be authorized or performed.

SEC. 26. The Legislature shall not pass any local or special law in the cases following:

Regulating the affairs of counties, cities, towns, townships, wards, city or county Boards of Education, school districts, or other political or municipal corporation or subdivision of the State;

Authorizing the laying out, opening, altering, maintaining or vacating roads, highways, streets, alleys, town plats, or parks;

Relating to cemeteries, graveyards, or public grounds not of the State;

Locating or changing county seats;

Incorporating cities, towns, or villages, or changing their charters;

Creating offices, or prescribing the powers and duties of officers in counties, cities, towns, townships, or school districts;

Regulating the fees or extending the powers and duties of county or municipal officers;

Regulating the management and maintenance of public schools, the building or repairing of school houses, and raising of money for such purposes;

Extending the time for the assessment or collection of county, city, or other municipal taxes, or otherwise relieving any Assessor or Collector of county or city taxes from the due performance of the official duties, or their securities from liability;

Legalizing the unauthorized or invalid acts of any officer or agent of any county or municipality thereof;

Directing the payment of money out of the treasury, or by any officer, of any county, city, or town, without the consent of such county, city, and town.

Referred to the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that the Convention now adjourn until three o'clock on Monday. It is only one hour after the regular time, and it will benefit the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry, and the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, who live on the line of that road, and who cannot get here until forty-five minutes past two, and it seems to me, that gentlemen might be a little accommodating.

The motion prevailed by a vote of eighty-one ayes, and at eleven o'clock and ten minutes, the Convention adjourned.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted Mr. Holmes, on account of sickness.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of Saturday was read.

Mr. LARKIN. I see that the resolution offered by Mr. Tully on Saturday has been put in the Journal. I understood that the proposition was ruled out of order, and if it was, it has no business in the Journal. I move to amend the Journal so that that resolution be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT. It will be stricken out. It was ruled out of order.

Mr. McCALLUM. It seems that some matters get into the Journal very improperly, and as this Journal is to be corrected, I understand that by unanimous consent the Convention will agree to amending the Journal, also, in respect to certain entries that were made about a week ago, about a certain owl. I ask that the Journal be corrected so that nothing will appear in it upon that subject. Such things have no business in the Journal.

The PRESIDENT. With the unanimous consent of the Convention, the Chair will direct the amendments to be made.

So ordered.

Mr. LARKIN. I believe it to be the sense of this Convention, and I will move that the President, before signing the Journal, examine it, and strike out any matter that is not pertinent.

The Journal was then approved as corrected.

DOORKEEPER AND PAGES.

Mr. STEDMAN. I ask leave to make a motion out of order. Mr. President: I move to rescind the second resolution reported by the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses, adopted last Saturday. The resolution was as follows:

"Resolved, That the services of one Doorkeeper and two Pages be dispensed with, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms designate the persons to be discharged."

The reason that I desire to make that motion is that if it is carried, which I have no doubt it will be, I desire to offer a resolution. Now, Mr. President, I am satisfied that a great many on last Saturday voted under a misapprehension. From conversations I have had with several gentlemen belonging to the Convention, I am satisfied that there is a great dissatisfaction at our action in adopting that resolution, from the fact that by the adoption of the resolution two small boys are to be discharged. It was asserted by one of the Committee on Contingent Expenses that they did it on the ground of economy. Now, we find that by the adoption of the resolutions on Saturday, one Doorkeeper, at five dollars a day, and two Pages, at three dollars a day each, were discharged. Total, eleven dollars. Then two Porters were appointed at four dollars a day each, making eight dollars a day, and the actual saving would be only three dollars a day, which is very small. I do not, for myself, and I believe a majority of this Convention do not, desire to see two small boys discharged to make so small a saving. Furthermore, Mr. President, I believe that we have enough help in this Convention as it at present stands, if there is a different arrangement made. The resolution I propose to offer would be this:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms detail two of the Doorkeepers as Porters and two of the Pages as Doorkeepers for the side doors.

I hold that these side doors can be properly attended by two Pages as well as by two Doorkeepers, and I do not propose that we shall discharge either one of the gentlemen at present occupied as Doorkeepers, but that they be detailed as Porters. I think that would give satisfaction to every member of the Convention, and two small boys would not be discharged. I believe that the most of these boys whom we have employed here belong out of this city. They have come here at some expense, and perhaps some of them have been to some expense in appareling themselves in a neat manner so that they might serve as attachés, and, Mr. President, I really hope that the Convention will rescind this motion and adopt the resolution.

Mr. ROLFE. Before I cast my vote to detail a Doorkeeper here to porter work, I shall want to know whether that Doorkeeper is going to accept the service as Porter. We have employed them here as Doorkeepers. The position of Porter may not be acceptable to them. I understand that the gentleman is going to follow up his motion with a resolution to detail two of our Doorkeepers to act as Porters. I do not believe it is right to detail a Doorkeeper to act as Porter unless we have his consent. I think the proper way is to discharge them from one employment and then, if the President sees fit to appoint the same gentleman for another position, and that gentleman is willing to accept it, let the appointment be made. As regards this argument in relation to these small boys, if we do not need them here, I am in favor of discharging them, whether they are small boys or not. The argument that they are small boys has no weight with me. If we need eight Pages, retain them; and if we do not, dispense with them.

Mr. WINANS. Mr. President: I do not sympathize with the spirit of the resolutions which would exclude these boys; nor do I think that this subject should be treated with either wit or levity. It seems to me a grave question of duty. When these officers of the Convention were elected, it was certainly understood at that time that they were elected for the session. Their permanency was regarded, in a moral light at least, as being quite as enduring as our own. They were elected as officers of the Convention; not as persons to be appointed for a period of time and then to be discharged or expelled. We undertook, I think, a duty towards them, to preserve them in the positions to which we have elected them—not for a day or week, but for the full term of service. Now, sir, viewing it in that light, I consider that it is unjust towards these youths to oust them at this time. No one knows where the axe will fall. Out of eight Pages that we have now two are to be ostracised, and the poor little tremblers—I beg the gentlemen's pardon for sympathizing with youth—are now waiting, each, to see whether it is going to be his fate or not to be the victim. Now, sir, contemplating it as a question of duty, I think that when the boys came here and we put upon them the seal of our approval and employment, that we made it conditional upon them to remain during the period of the session.

Further, those boys, though little children, are the representatives of families. I believe that there is not one of them who is not the support of an aged parent or of relatives, who are dependent upon these little services for their livelihood. Are we going to make a warfare upon children? They are children. Look at it in a spirit of economy. Two boys, with a salary of three dollars a day, for sixty days—altogether three hundred and sixty dollars to be saved by this Convention. Now, sir, I favor any laudable economy. When efforts are made by the Convention to restrict and restrain expenses, I am an ardent coöperator and sympathizer. Whatever we can do to carry on our affairs in the most economical form in which they can be administered with decency I certainly favor; but what is the economy reached here? The saving is about three hundred and sixty dollars, so far as these boys are concerned. This blow will not fall again. They are the only persons to be selected during the whole term of this Convention for a visitation so unreasonable as this. There are reasons, which I presume are known to every member, which render it doubly disastrous to these boys. Who of them believed, when he was elected or appointed by the order of this Convention, through the medium of the President, that his position was not permanent? Who of us believed that it was not permanent? We understood that it was at the time. Now, sir, what are we about to do; dismiss two little boys? These boys have needy parents behind them, and it is really a warfare upon women and children to save the sum of three hundred and sixty dollars. I say that this is false economy, viewed merely as a question of finance. I say that it appeals to the good sense of every member, and it is a duty of this Convention to retain them in the employment for which we have selected them throughout the session. In the name of all that is sympathetic, I ask that the Convention may rescind the order, because it was certainly founded upon want of reflection, it seems to me. It was beginning at the wrong end. Strike men, if the blow is to fall, not women and children. It amounts to that. You know not the amount of suffering this action might entail. Two of them are to be sent out from our midst, while the rest remain. There is no criterion by which to decide who should be sent out, and there is no propriety in sending any one. The amount saved would be reaped by ourselves. Is it a saving to change the current of this money, and would it go further towards paying the delegates? Are they afraid they will not realize the entire return? Is there any one in this whole assemblage who could not afford to give two dollars from his pocket, from the money that he receives here, to aid these boys in carrying on the work to the end of the session? I say that this resolution was conceived in a spirit of false economy, and was carried out at the expense of those finer feelings and tender emotions which are the ornaments of human nature.

Mr. TINNIN. I had no desire to make any remarks on this question, for the reason that I consider it but a small affair, something that should be below the dignity of this body; but after the remarks that have been made by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans, I desire to make a few remarks in reply to that honorable gentleman.

Digitized by Google

Now, Mr. President, I differ from him in regard to the position that he places himself in here, and the other members in this body. We are not sent here by the people of this State to establish an almshouse or a place of charity. If the people desire to go into that kind of business, perhaps they would have sent other members here than those that are here. The law that authorizes us to assemble only allowed us four Pages, now we have eight. When we endeavor to curtail the expense of this body, we are met with that universal cry of the persecution of women and children. Now I came here not to persecute anybody, much less women and children, but I came here to perform a duty to the State of California, and not to serve any particular individual. If there is charity to be dispensed, I presume the members of this body will go down in their pockets and pay for it, and I hope that we will not persecute the State, at least, in that direction.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I desire to say a few words upon this subject, because I have taken the trouble and time to examine it, and fully indorse the sentiments of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans, and I am in favor of the resolution offered by Mr. Stedman. I know it to be a positive fact, sir, that these young men are, in many instances—in fact, a majority of the cases—the support almost entirely of families in this State. I know that when the President appointed these young men, that he looked particularly to the matter; that he did not appoint them by reason of any political influence, but that he appointed them because they were worthy boys, and because they had aged parents, widowed parents, and, in one case, one of the boys has a blind father. The Convention gave to the President the power to appoint these boys. To-day we have got upon our standing rules that power vested in the President, and I do not see that we have got any right, in any such way, to tear it away from him. These boys were appointed—and the gentleman from San Francisco is correct—there was an implied understanding that these boys should remain here until the end of the session. Some of them are not residents of Sacramento. They come from other towns in this State, and they are here for the purpose of bettering their condition, hoping to be enabled to better it financially and to better it physically. It is a school for them, and they are aiding and assisting their destitute and aged parents. This leaves the whole power of expulsion in the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms, for he dictates, and one goes, and the other remains. I will say that I should not like to see that boy who has a blind father expelled from here, and that blind father deprived of the support of that son. It is one of the American principles to give the boys a chance, and I shall always vote to give the boys a chance, and I hope that these boys will be allowed to remain here, and that these few paltry hundred dollars will go to these boys and their needy parents. This Convention can never do a nobler act, and besides, it seems to me, that this is a matter for the President—the appointive power.

The resolution was rescinded.

PETITIONS.

MR. KELLEY. I hold in my hand a petition from several religious denominations, signed by about eighteen hundred persons, protesting against the use of the word "Sunday," in the proposed Constitution. I believe the proper committee to have it referred to has already made a report, and I desire to introduce it and have it referred to the Committee of the Whole, and laid on the table until the question shall come up:

To the honorable delegates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of California, Sacramento:

At the annual meeting of the Conference of Seventh-day Adventists of the State of California, held at Yountville, Napa County, September fifth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, An effort is being made, by those who observe the first day of the week as the Sabbath, to have incorporated in the new Constitution of the State of California a clause recognizing the said first day of the week as the Sabbath, and requiring the Legislature to enforce its observation by legislative enactment; and,

Whereas, There is not in the entire Bible, either Old or New Testament, a single precept, requiring the observance of the first day of the week as a Sabbath or holy day; and,

Whereas, There is not in either the Old or New Testament a single record of the first day of the week ever having been observed as a Sabbath, or as a holy day, by either Christ, the apostles, or early Christians; and,

Whereas, The seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, is the only weekly Sabbath referred to in either the Old or New Testament; and,

Whereas, There is not to be found in the entire Bible any text of scripture from which even a reasonable inference can be drawn that the fourth commandment of the decalogue, which requires the observance of the seventh day, has been abrogated and that the Sabbath has been changed; and,

Whereas, There exists in this State a large body of Christians (the Seventh-day Adventists), who are good and law-abiding citizens, who observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, as required in the Bible; therefore,

Resolved, That this Conference appoint a committee to visit the Convention and set before it the facts regarding the religious sentiments and practices of Seventh-day Adventists, and to endeavor if possible to induce the Convention to abstain from incorporating in the said Constitution any clause that shall in any way give preference to the religious opinions of any religious body, or that shall in any way bind the conscience of any person, or that shall in any way interfere with the religious opinions of any person.

Resolved, That said committee be authorized to circulate petitions relating hereto for signatures.

Now, therefore, we, the undersigned citizens of the State of California, in accordance with the principles set forth in the foregoing preamble and resolution, respectfully petition your honorable body that the Constitution of this State, in reference to the Sabbath day, and all other religious questions, be framed in harmony with the principles of the Constitution of the United States, believing the free exercise of conscience in religious faith and practice to be the acme of republican government.

Referred to the Committee of the Whole, to be taken up with the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

MR. HERRINGTON. I desire to offer a couple of propositions with reference to the Constitution, if there is no objection.

COMMUNICATION ON CORPORATIONS.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair has received a communication from the Secretary of State, in response to the resolutions passed by the Convention on the eighteenth and twenty-second instant. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
SACRAMENTO, October 26th, 1878.

To the President and members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: In response to the resolutions passed by the Convention on the eighteenth and twenty-second instants, calling upon me for information in respect to the corporations formed under the laws of this State, I have the honor to reply as follows:

I am not aware of any law requiring corporations going out of existence to furnish to the office of the Secretary of State any statement evidencing that fact; and there is no official data in my office that would furnish information on that point; therefore, "the number of corporations now existing in the State of California," as required by the first subdivision of the resolution cannot be ascertained.

As the possibility of answering the second and third subdivision of the resolution rests upon the possibility of answering the first, it follows that neither the capital stock nor the places of business of corporations now existing can be stated.

Assuming that the resolution requires only the number, etc., of articles of incorporation on file in this office, I shall give that information to the best of my ability.

The number of articles of incorporations on file is nineteen thousand four hundred and seventy-five, and their classification is as follows:

Newspaper, artesian well, race track, aerial navigation, homestead, railroad, State and county fair, district fair, ice, oil, acids, quicksilver, fruit, wood, hotel, insurance, wine, ship building, arts, sewing machine, iron, flume, building, peat, toll roads, lead, assaying, steam, commercial, land, bathing, coal, park, cigar, horticultural, rope, reclamation, glove, reduction works, cloth, real estate bureau, wool, fertilizing, watch, fire, jewelry, gas, medical, stage, stone, transportation, wharf, irrigating, liquor, chemical, linen, warehouse, soda water, iron, theater, brick, paving, tobacco, packing, raisins, furniture, powder, water, labor exchange, sugar, marble, boat club, sulphur, river, cemetery, ditch, express, cement, school, coöperative, lime, mills, street railroads, danger signal, glass works, granger, hall, sportsman's club, jockey club, vineyard, fire-arms, leveeing, ferry, oyster, canning, wood, ship building, banks, churches, mining, carriage and wagon, mills, laundry, botanic garden, electric power, wire works, bridge building, steamboat building, poultry and game dealers, hack and cab, dredging, musical, live stock, telegraphic, brewing, tunnel, canal, lumber, printing, publishing, colleges, societies, agricultural, mechanical.

The resolution, in its second and third subdivisions, calls for a statement of the "aggregate amount of the capital stock of all said corporations, and the aggregate amount of said capital stock of each class thereof," and a "detailed statement of the principal places of business and location of the principal offices of said corporations."

I most respectfully submit to your honorable body, that a compliance with so much of the resolution as is above quoted is impossible with the clerical force at my disposal. The aggregate of the certificates of incorporation on file in the office of the Secretary of State, number nineteen thousand four hundred and seventy-five. These certificates are recorded in forty-three large volumes, without regard to their classification. All of my predecessors adopted this practice, and it has been followed by me. I am also requested to give a "detailed statement of the amount of capital stock actually paid up by all said corporations."

Prior to the adoption of the Codes, the only corporations organizing under the laws of this State, which were required to make any statement in respect to the amount of their capital stock actually paid up, and to furnish evidence thereof to the Secretary of State, were the following, to wit: railroad companies, and steam navigation companies.

Plank and turnpike road companies, and bridge companies, were required to file a showing of this character with County Clerks, and to furnish the Secretary of State with a certificate that they had complied with the law.

The long list of other companies having the right to incorporate, and whose certificates of incorporation occupy the great bulk of the books appropriated to their record in my office, were not required to furnish the Secretary of State with any evidence in respect to the payment of any portion of the capital stock. The Codes require "the articles of incorporation of any railroad, wagon-road, or telegraph association" to state "that at least ten per cent. of the capital stock subscribed has been paid in to the Treasurer of the intended corporation." All others seem to be exempt from the requirements.

Neither the books of the office nor the indexes to the contents thereof, have been so kept as to enable any one to segregate the certificates of such incorporated companies as have been required by law to exhibit the amount of capital stock paid in, from certificates not required to make such showing, hence it must be manifest to the Convention that a vast amount of clerical labor would be required to comply with this request in this particular, as each and every certificate would have to undergo a critical examination.

The statutes of the State define my duties with unmistakable particularity, and the Legislature, in making appropriations to meet the current expenses of my office, has dealt with me with rigid exactness. There is no Urgent Necessity Fund at my disposal, to meet extraordinary calls upon my clerical force. If I were to detail a sufficient force to perform the duties required by the resolution, other duties imposed by the statutes would necessarily be left unperformed.

I assume that the information sought by the Convention is important in the interest of the people of the State, to enable the Convention to act understandingly upon some contemplated provision of the fundamental law. In this aspect, and being most desirous to facilitate by any means in my power the purposes of the Convention, I most respectfully request the appointment of a select committee to confer with me in respect to the best mode that can be adopted to lay before the Convention the information which it seeks. I have the honor to remain,

Your obedient servant,
THOMAS BECK,
Secretary of State.

MR. HALE. It is very difficult for many members on this floor to hear the reading of any document at the Clerk's desk, notwithstanding the Clerk reads just as well as any gentleman reads. I have therefore but imperfectly heard the reply that has been made by the Secretary to the resolution; in fact, to the two resolutions that have heretofore been adopted and addressed to him by this body. From what I could catch of the report, I think it contains some valuable information and suggestions. Now, sir, I believe the whole subject of corporations of the State of California is a very interesting and suggestive subject to the people at large. Both for their information and for the information of this Convention, I rise to move that the report be printed and laid upon our desks, so that the people as well as ourselves may know its contents. I suggest four hundred and eighty copies, as the rules provide.

The motion prevailed, on a standing vote—ayes, 62; noes, 53.

PROPOSITIONS.

THE PRESIDENT. The next order of business is the introduction of propositions and resolutions relative to the Constitution.

CHINESE.

MR. ESTEE introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to foreigners who cannot become citizens:

SECTION —. No person shall hereafter be permitted to come to this

State and reside permanently therein who, by the present laws of the United States cannot become a citizen of the United States and of this State; and the Legislature shall make suitable provisions to enforce this section.

Referred to Committee on Chinese.

ENACTMENT OF LAWS.

Mr. HERRINGTON introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to enactment of laws:

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

Section —. Every law enacted by the Legislature shall have but one subject, and that shall be embraced in the title. No law shall be revised or amended by its title; but in such case the Act revised or section amended shall be reënacted and published at length. Before final passage every joint resolution or bill shall be read at length three times in each house. Each reading of a bill or resolution in each house shall be on a different day. On the final passage of all bills and joint resolutions the vote shall be taken by ayes and noes, and be entered on the Journal. Every bill and joint resolution shall be printed before being voted upon. No bill or joint resolution shall become a law or be in force without the concurrence of a majority of the members elected to each house.

Referred to Committee on Legislative Department.

JURY SYSTEM.

Mr. CAPLES introduced the following resolution:

Whereas, Various amendments and propositions have been presented to this Convention looking to changes or modifications of the jury system; therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Judiciary be instructed to inquire at its earliest convenience whether the provisions of the Constitution of the United States relating to trial by jury apply to State Courts and the administration of State laws.

POWER OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Mr. HERRINGTON offered the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, restricting the power of municipal corporations, etc., from contracting debts and creating liabilities.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

Section —. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to provide by law for the organization of cities and incorporated towns and villages, and to restrict their powers of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts, and loaning their credit, so as to prevent abuses in assessments and in contracting debts and liabilities by such municipal corporations; and no municipal corporation or political subdivision in this State shall create any debt or debts, liability or liabilities, that shall singly or together exceed two and one half per centum of the aggregate true cash value of the property in such municipal or political subdivision subject to taxation.

Referred to Committee on Legislative Department.

DISQUALIFICATION OF JUDGES.

Mr. GRAVES introduced the following proposition declaring the disqualification of Judges, and providing for the appointment of special Judges in certain cases:

Section —. No Judge shall sit in any case wherein he may be interested, or where either of the parties may be connected with him by affinity or consanguinity within the third degree, computed according to the rules of the civil law, or where he shall have been attorney or counsel in the case. When a Judge of a Superior Court is disqualified by any of the causes aforesaid, the parties may, by consent, appoint a proper person to try their case; or, upon their failure to do so, a competent person may be appointed to try the case in the county or city and county where it is pending, in such manner as may be prescribed by law. The rulings and decisions of the person so appointed shall have, as to such case, the same force and effect as though made by a regular Judge of the Court. The disqualification of Judges of the inferior Courts or tribunals shall be remedied, and vacancies in their offices shall be filled as prescribed by law.

Referred to Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

ASSESSMENT OF LANDS.

Mr. FAWCETT introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to the assessment of lands, to be incorporated in the article on taxation and revenue:

Section —. Every tract of land containing within its boundaries more than one government section, shall be assessed for the purpose of taxation by sections or fractional sections; and where the section lines have not been established by authority of the United States, the Assessor and County Surveyor shall establish the section lines in conformity with the government system of surveys as nearly as practicable. Each section or fractional section shall be valued and assessed separately; and for the purposes of subdividing and assessing, the Assessor and Surveyor and their assistants, may enter upon any land within their respective counties.

Referred to the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

CHINESE.

Mr. O'DONNELL offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is incumbent upon this Convention to incorporate in the new Constitution a new section which shall forever disqualify aliens of Asiatic descent—first, from exercising the right of suffrage; second, from holding and conveying real estate; third, testifying as witnesses in the Courts of this State in any matter, civil or criminal, in which the interests of white men are concerned; fourth, interfering with the fisheries of California.

Mr. ROLFE. I rise to a point of order. That resolution is not in the form prescribed by the rule, which requires a proposition to be in the form of a section so as to be placed in the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken. Send back the resolution.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF IRRIGATION.

Mr. DOWLING introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to the encouragement of irrigation:

Section 1. The right to make a canal may be imposed compulsory in order to conduct waters intended for any public use which does not require the formal appropriation of lands.

Sec. 2. If three fourths of the owners of an irrigable land district, possessing at least two thirds of its area, wish to form an irrigation canal, the remaining fourth of the owners may be compelled to join the undertaking.

Sec. 3. The Legislature shall provide for the division of the State into three irrigating districts, to be called the Southern, Middle, and Northern Irrigation Districts, and shall also make subdivisions if necessary.

Sec. 4. The cost of building or constructing an irrigation canal or ditch shall be apportioned equally on the land to be irrigated, and said cost shall be confined to the district in which said lands are situated.

Sec. 5. All irrigation canals and ditches shall be considered a part and parcel of the lands assessed for their construction, and no irrigator can sell his land without selling his water right also.

Sec. 6. After the cost for constructing a canal or ditch is paid, the irrigators shall never have to pay any more, except that which is necessary to keep the said canal or ditch in repair.

Sec. 7. The State shall always exercise supervisory control over said canals and ditches. The Legislature shall enforce the foregoing provisions by appropriate legislation.

Referred to the Committee on Water and Water Rights.

CITY, COUNTY, AND TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATIONS.

Mr. VACQUEREL introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, on city, county, and township organizations:

Resolved, That there shall be established in each county of this State a jury, composed of nine members, whose duty it shall be to act as arbiters in all questions arising between labor and capital; said jury to be voted for by the people at all municipal elections. There shall be no pay attached to such position.

Referred to the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

HOMESTEADS.

Mr. BARTON introduced the following proposition to amend article eleven, section fifteen, of old Constitution, in relation to homesteads:

Amend article eleven (11), section fifteen (15), of old Constitution, to read as follows:

The Legislature shall protect by law, from forced sale, a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families. A homestead shall be invalid until a declaration of the same is filed for record in the office designated by the Legislature; and no homestead shall be exempt from any debt contracted after its acquisition and before the filing of such declaration.

Referred to the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemptions.

COMMENCEMENT OF FISCAL YEAR.

Mr. HILBORN introduced the following proposed amendment, changing the date of the commencement of the fiscal year:

Section —. The fiscal year shall commence on the first day of January.

Referred to Committee on Legislative Department.

INTERMARRIAGE WITH CHINESE.

Mr. STEDMAN introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to intermarriage:

Section —. The intermarriage of white persons with Chinese, negroes, mulattoes, or persons of mixed blood, descended from a Chinaman or negro from the third generation, inclusive, or their living together as man and wife in this State, is hereby prohibited. The Legislature shall enforce this section by appropriate legislation.

Referred to Committee on Legislative Department.

CHINESE.

Mr. O'DONNELL introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to Chinese:

Section —. Aliens of Asiatic descent shall forever be disqualified:

1. From exercising the right of suffrage;
2. From holding or conveying real estate;
3. From testifying as witnesses in the Courts of this State in any matter, civil or criminal, in which the interests of white men are involved;
4. From interfering with the fisheries of the State of California.

Referred to Committee on Chinese.

THE ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDGERTON. I desire to submit a motion which I think is of importance to the Convention. I move that all that part of rule seventeen, from and after the sixth subdivision of the Order of Business, be temporarily suspended until next Monday, the fourth of November. I made that motion after consultation with many gentlemen in relation with the various committees here not now ready to make their reports. The special order for to-day and to-morrow is the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights. All the gentlemen desire to be here when the Convention passes upon that. I therefore submit this motion, that all that part of rule seventeen, after the sixth subdivision of the Order of Business, be temporarily suspended until Monday, the fourth day of November.

Mr. ROLFE. I second the motion.

Mr. McCALLUM. If, of course, it has been understood, it is useless to make objection; but I understand there are three reports already before the Convention, and the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights is one which I understand will take considerable time to dispose of. Now, if there is any reason why we should not get to work in the Convention, I will cheerfully vote for this proposition; otherwise I suggest that it is about time that we commenced work in the Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that all matters must be first considered in the Committee of the Whole Convention. The Preamble and Bill of Rights is made the special order for to morrow.

MR. MCCALLUM. I would like to have it understood, for other construction is given to it. I understand the Chair to say that we can go into Committee of the Whole, notwithstanding the motion that has been made?

THE PRESIDENT. Yes; it does not affect anything before the "reports of committees."

MR. MCCALLUM. All after the sixth subdivision.

MR. WINANS. The object of that motion appears to me apparent on its face. It is evidently intended to enable the committees to have time and opportunity to act. As the Convention is now constituted, if it proceeds with the discussion in the Committee of the Whole, of articles, or propositions of articles, of the proposed new Constitution, it will necessarily and naturally occupy all the time that is usually employed during the day by committees, and thereby directly exclude committees from going on with the discharge of their duties. There would be no opportunity for committees to sit, because they are strictly prohibited from sitting while the Convention is sitting, and therefore it would be impossible for the committees to get ready in time. This is intended to give the necessary time to the committees, which are faithfully at work, and which are all conceded to be diligently prosecuting the duties confided to their charge, which they cannot do if the Convention is continuously in session. In other words, the virtual recess of the Convention during the afternoons for one week was not long enough. But one committee has made a final report, and there are thirty committees in all of this body. They must have time to work with such care as to make their work proper to be presented to this Convention. They cannot do it if we go on with the consideration of these reports now. It is out of the power of man, however assiduous they may be, unless more time is given; and I do hope, sir, that in view of the necessity of the case, in view of the importance of our movements, in view of our having first initiated that which must yet exist, that this motion will prevail.

MR. MCCALLUM. I suppose one thing we must agree on. If this motion prevails it will undoubtedly postpone the special order. It can neither be considered in Committee of the Whole or otherwise. I undertake to say that if committees choose to report they can do so, not necessarily at once; that there are propositions which will keep this Convention at work from this time forward, until the business shall have been finished; and that when we commence on the Bill of Rights it will be found that we will have business for every day we have. We have been in session thirty days, and have not commenced on a single proposition. I say that there is no reason given for postponing this special order for to-morrow. If the committee must have daytime in which to meet, why, if necessary, after the morning session adjourn over until the next day, so that committees can meet in the afternoon.

MR. JONES. I desire to offer an amendment to the gentleman's motion: that we insert "seventh subdivision" instead of "sixth subdivision," for this reason: that if the main motion should prevail there will still remain the offering of propositions relating to the Constitution, and if not allowed to be offered now they will not be considered by the committees. It occupies not a great many minutes, and moreover the committees have until next Monday, if the motion prevails, to take into consideration the additional propositions.

MR. EDGERTON. I accept the amendment.

MR. TINNIN. I offer an amendment: to include the ninth subdivision—that is, the special order.

MR. EDGERTON. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin, will not prevail. Now, sir, there is a great deal of business in the committees. My committee is not more than half through with its labors, and when this discussion commences upon such important matters as this report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights all of these gentlemen desire to be here, and they do not desire to be here and participate in the discussion after they have been through the details and drudgery of committee work. I do not see any particular reason why the discussion should commence on that special order to-morrow. The object of my motion is to facilitate business, and enable the committees to complete their labors and get their plans submitted here. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

MR. TINNIN. My object in offering this amendment is to have some time for this body to get to its labors. We have been here now four weeks, spending the time in discussing about the employés and offering propositions. Now, sir, one of the committees of this body has made its report. That report is before this body, and, sir, it is high time that we should begin to consider that report, if we expect to complete the labors of this body within the one hundred days. It seems to me to be thoroughly fallacious that time is necessary for committees to sit hereafter in the daytime. We know that adjournments are continually advocated in order to sit on committees. What is the result? After the adjournment is made, if you would call the roll at the railroad depot, or on the cars going to San Francisco, you would find a majority of the members there. We have all seen it, and now I say to the members here it is ample time that we should do something. If this continues the same, there will be delays asked all the time, and we might as well commence now as any other time. I am opposed to including the seventh subdivision, in reference to the introduction of propositions, but I hope that the amendment will be adopted to include the ninth subdivision—that in reference to the special order.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Sacramento moves that all that part of rule seventeenth after the seventh sub-division be suspended until Monday, November fourth. The gentleman from Trinity moves to amend so as to except the ninth subdivision.

Mr. Tinnin's amendment was lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, to suspend all of rule seventeenth after the seventh subdivision until Monday, November fourth.

MR. MCCALLUM. I rise to a point of order, that this requires a two-third vote.

MR. ROLFE. I seconded this motion in its original shape. I shall now vote against it because it includes the seventh subdivision, in relation to the introduction of propositions. I think we have got more propositions now than ten Conventions can manage, and I think we should cut them off as soon as possible.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs McCallum, White, and Tinnin.

The roll was called, and the motion was lost by the following vote:

MEMORIALS.

Mr. BEERSTECHER presented the following memorial from a large number of citizens of San Francisco, asking the exemption from taxation of certain property, which was referred to the Committee on Revenue and Taxation:

To the honorable the members of the Constitutional Convention of the State of California, Sacramento, California:

We, the undersigned, residents and taxpayers of the City and County of San Francisco and adjacent towns, having noticed with much satisfaction the introduction by Mr. Beerstecher, from this county, to your honorable body, of a bill exempting from taxation, to a certain amount, the property of deaf and dumb and blind persons, do earnestly commend the same to the early and favorable consideration of your honorable body, believing it to be a just and proper measure; and should the same become a law, it would redound in an eminent degree to the credit of our State and people.

San Francisco, October, 1878.

Accompanying the memorial was the following extract from the "Wasp," of April twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight:

"A Suggestion.

"A Constitutional Convention will soon be held, and various changes in the organic instrument will doubtless be made. There is one that we desire particularly to say should be considered. There should be a clause inserted relieving the blind, deaf, and dumb from the burden of taxation. There are several of these unfortunates in this city and State, who are doing their best to keep out of the public institutions provided for their support by the State. The blind and deaf have a hard lot at best, and the people of the State of California should be magnanimous enough to let the poorer portion of her afflicted citizens go untaxed. Moreover, it is really to the interest of taxpayers; for the blind, deaf, and dumb must be supported in any case, and it is much better to give them the opportunity of supporting themselves, and thereby retaining their manhood and self-respect, than to force them into charitable institutions by taxation. The aggregate taxes paid by this class of citizens is very small, but it is a vital consideration to them, and the law under which they are now taxed should be repealed. It would be an act at once of generosity and good policy, and an incalculable assistance to these afflicted individuals. We hope the gentlemen who may be called upon to draft the new Constitution will give this matter their attention."

COMMUNICATION.

The following communication was received:

Joseph Ramsey, a citizen of the United States, and a resident of Shelbyville, Bedford County, Tennessee, to the delegates composing the State Constitutional Convention for the purpose of revising, altering, or amending the organic law of California:

Although a non-resident of your State, I would respectfully submit to your consideration the inclosed plan and form for a State Constitution, or organism. You will readily see there is some radical and unprecedented changes from the Federal and State Constitutions. In the first place, you will see I have dispensed with population and territory as a basis for representation, and have substituted important interests, and election districts, and have incorporated the concurrent instead of the numerical majority, simply requiring the vote to be taken by committees, requiring two thirds of the members of any committee to enable their vote to count, and two thirds of the committees to pass any bill, law, rule, or resolution. This provision applies to the judicial as well as the legislative department, hence you will see that it necessarily dispenses with a separate house called a Senate, also the Governor's veto, both of which was only intended as negative powers. That power is now more perfectly and economically applied by the exercise of the concurrent majority. Are not the labors of your session of more importance than an ordinary session of the General Assembly, whose acts can be repealed at a succeeding session? You will find that these important interests on which each can protect itself, will be as homogeneous as the different members of the human body. That antipathy and antagonism always manifested between rival political parties, which are continually striving for the ascendancy, and each, when they gain the ascendancy, is as absolute and tyrannical as any monarchy in the world. This concurrent principle applied to the important interest above named will not only expel, but will annihilate the demon of party spirit, which is the legitimate offspring of an inherent defect in the numerical majority principle. Although not so simple, is far safer, as much more so as our trial by jury system is to be preferred (although it requires the unanimous concurrence of all twelve to render a verdict,) to a one man power. There is many more reasons and illustrations I could give if I had room and time and you had patience. Although my magazine is small and my artillery light, yet my ammunition is neither exhausted nor diminished. With truth and sound philosophy to back me, I feel that my bulwarks are as formidable as the walls of Gibraltar. If further information is desired, address—

JOSEPH RAMSEY,
Shelbyville, Tennessee.

P. S.—Would be glad some member would inform me how the plan is received, and what objections are offered.

J. R.

THE PLAN.

A Plan containing the Elements and Cardinal Principles for a State Government, viz:

We, the people of the State of California, bounded as follows (here give the boundaries) do hereby adopt, ratify, ordain, and proclaim the following (covenant) Constitution as the fundamental law of the State:

Said government shall be known and designated as a Democratic Republic, containing three independent and coördinate departments, each sovereign in its sphere, so that no one shall exercise the powers delegated to the others.

The legislative department shall be chosen by the qualified voters of each division of election district, without regard to population or territory, in the following manner, viz.: The State being divided into three divisions (called election districts), and that each of the following named interests, viz: Agricultural, manufacturing, mechanical, commercial, transportation, mining, educational, grazing, and professional, shall be entitled to an equal representation of their own selection. Each of the nine (9) interests above named shall be entitled to three (3) representatives from each (division) district, allowing each thus to have nine (9) representatives constituting the Legislative Council of eighty-one (81) representatives, these eighty-one representatives shall constitute nine (9) standing committees.

Before entering upon the discharge of the functions of their office they shall each subscribe their names to the following affirmation, oath, or obligation, viz.:

I, A. B., solemnly pledge my word upon the sacred altar of my honor that I will faithfully discharge the duties and obligations imposed upon me, and that I will not knowingly usurp and exercise powers not clearly delegated to me, and that I have not given money or any valuable thing to procure my election, nor promised to give or bestow any official favor on any person for their support, and if on conviction I submit my body, powers, and privileges, to such penalties as the law and Court may impose.

Signed, A. B.

And when such representatives thus chosen and assembled, at the time and place specified, and have signed the above obligation, they shall proceed to organize by the election of a presiding officer, styled Speaker or Chairman, a resident citizen of the State, and such other clerical officers as are necessary to complete their organization, such as clerks, secretary, comptroller. All shall be required to subscribe to the obligation above set forth; but no man shall be held ineligible of account of nationality, race, color, or religion. The legislative council shall likewise elect a chief executive officer, styled Governor; all of whose tenure of office shall be regulated by law, likewise the salaries of each and all; but no salary to be increased or diminished during the term for which they were elected. Each representative member will be required to present a certificate of the Judges who held the election and counted the votes, that said representative is entitled to his seat; but should there be a tie vote, the same constituency shall hold another election, and when qualified shall hold their office for —— years, and until their successors are elected and qualified. In the passage of all laws, rules, regulations, and by-laws, and all elections shall be taken by the committees, each committee to count one vote, and requiring two thirds (⅔) of each committee concurring to enable the vote of the committee to be counted, and two thirds (⅔) of the nine (9) committees to concur in the passage of all bills, laws, rules, regulations, by-laws, and elections.

Said legislative council shall have power to censure, suspend, or, for such crime as they deem necessary and proper, may expel any member of their body, or any officer they may have elected. These misdemeanors shall consist in bribery, perjury, forgery, theft, and drunkenness.

Bribery shall consist in giving, or offering to give, money, or any valuable thing, from any person, company, corporation, or foreign power, or in receiving, or offering to receive, money, or any valuable thing, from any person, company, corporation, or foreign power. The penalties apply to any officer or private citizen who shall be guilty. This only applies to officers who receive gifts during their official term.

Perjury shall consist of having made a false statement of any fact, or to have suppressed the truth, or willfully having perverted the same.

Forgery shall consist in signing the name or names of any person or persons to any instrument of writing without his or her knowledge and consent.

Theft shall consist in taking the property of another without his or their knowledge or consent and appropriating the same to his use, or fraudulently having concealed the same.

Drunkenness shall consist in the use of intoxicating drink so as to disqualify the person for the time being to intelligibly discharge the duties of his official position.

When a vacancy shall occur in the legislative department by death, resignation, removal, or otherwise, the interest to which he belonged shall as soon as possible proceed to supply his place, the Governor giving notice of such vacancy.

The time of the convening and adjourning shall be regulated by law; convening once in two years, and on extraordinary occasions the Governor may convene them, and when convened he shall state the object and purpose for which they were convened, and they shall entertain no other question whatever. Should a miscellaneous question arise, then each one of the nine committees shall select one of their number, and they (9) shall compose a committee on said miscellaneous question, and report as any other committee to a Committee of the Whole, and shall be disposed of as any other question; and all laws, bills, rules, and regulations shall be signed by the presiding officer and Governor, and be attested by the clerk.

II.

The judicial department shall consist in one Supreme Court, composed of three Judges or Jurists, one from each division of the State known as an election district. Said three Judges shall be chosen or elected by the Legislature, who shall vote by committees, each committee counting one vote, and two thirds of them concurring necessary, and two thirds of the committees necessary to a choice; they shall be elected and hold their office for —— years, and until their successors are elected and qualified, and shall be eligible to reëlection one more term.

This Supreme Court shall be termed the guardian protector of the reserved rights, and shall exercise original and appellate jurisdiction, and from their decision there is no appeal; they shall decide all questions of a constitutional character.

The legislative department shall likewise have power to establish such other inferior judicial tribunals, in such manner and with such powers as they deem necessary and proper.

The right of trial by jury to remain inviolate.

III.

The executive department shall consist of one chief executive officer, styled Governor, elected as provided by the foregoing provision.

It shall be his duty to see that the law shall be faithfully executed. He shall likewise have power to exercise executive clemency, when persons have committed crimes against the peace and dignity of the State, and when the Court and jury who tried the case shall concur in recommending the criminal to executive clemency.

He, with the Comptroller and Treasurer, shall constitute the State's financial agent in the adjustment of her financial business. It shall likewise be his duty to report to the Legislative Council, at its regular sessions, the condition of the State and its different departments, and to recommend such measures and policy as he thinks will promote the happiness and prosperity of the State.

But he shall have no power to arrest their laws by his veto. In case of a vacancy in his office by resignation, death, removal, or otherwise, the presiding officer of the legislative department shall fill the position. When the regular session of the General Assembly shall convene, then the presiding officer shall fill the unexpired term by the election of a successor, which shall be the first business they attend to, and a vacancy in any other department shall be filled in a similar manner.

The Legislature shall have no power to pass any ex post facto law which shall impair contract, nor no law to apply to crimes and misdemeanors committed prior to the passage of such law, nor to make any decision a precedent and of legal authority that was rendered in any case subsequent to the origin of any suit pending in any Court.

Amendments to this Constitution may be made for two purposes and in two ways: one for the purpose of enlarging the powers delegated, the other for reducing the powers delegated.

In the first place, if the legislative department shall be of the opinion their powers are so restricted that it impedes their usefulness, and that it could be enlarged without danger to the rights of the people, and should pass a resolution in clear and unambiguous terms, the powers they ask to have extended, and submit the same to the next ensuing election for ratification or rejection, and if a majority of two thirds of the different interests shall concur, the same shall be incorporated as part and parcel of the organic law.

But should the people conclude they had delegated more power than was safe or necessary, and two thirds of the people should express themselves that way by two thirds of their representatives having clearly stated the power they wish reduced, then said amendment shall be adopted and incorporated as part and parcel of the Constitution. But in no event shall more than one change be proposed at any one time.

The legislative department shall have the entire control of the elective franchise.

All power not herein delegated shall be reserved to the people from whence it came.

APPOINTING A NEW COMMITTEE.

MR. JOYCE. Mr. Chairman: I have a proposition I would like to offer, as follows:

Resolved, That there be an official committee of fifteen appointed from the San Francisco delegation on Water and Water Rights, in the interest of the City and County of San Francisco.

THE PRESIDENT. The resolution is not in order under the present rule.

AMENDING THE RULES.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: Under this head I rise to make a motion, pursuant to notice given yesterday, to amend rule sixty-four, to read as indicated in the minutes of this morning.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order at the present time. When we reach the eleventh head it will be in order. The subject next in order is the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: Before that order is taken up, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. I will send up my statement and ask that it be read by the Secretary.

THE SECRETARY read as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT: In the Constitutional Convention, on Friday, October twenty-fifth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, on the question of the eligibility of Hon. Eugene Fawcett to a seat in this Convention, Mr. Vacquerel spoke as follows:

"There is not one delegate of San Francisco here that has not violated his oath to the party, and that is prior to the oath he took in this hall. If these gentlemen will remember the oath they have taken in San Francisco they will remember that it says they will not vote for or support anybody who has not affiliated with the Workingmen's party."

In the same speech Mr. Vacquerel refers to me personally:

"I hold the reports of one of the sessions of this Convention, and what do I find, 'That no right is denied, unless the right of the will of the people.' 'We also desire to have the right of the people recognized.' Now, when I see gentlemen on this floor that have sustained these principles, go right against it to-day," etc.

Mr. Vacquerel, in making this statement in open Convention, committed a grave error, and was wholly mistaken as to every portion of his statement.

I desire to show on a question of privilege that no oath or pledge was taken, of the nature and effect as stated by Mr Vacquerel, and that the Workingmen's party is not bound by an oath, nor are the delegates thereof, nor by a pledge in the manner stated.

October 29th, 1878. BEERSTECHER.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the matter involves a question of privilege. The gentleman will proceed.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: Rising to this question of privilege, it is with no feelings of hostility against the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Vacquerel. But I do so for the purpose of giving that gentleman an opportunity of fully explaining what he meant by what I have just called the attention of the Convention to, in the reading of the points upon which I base this question of privilege.

Mr. Vacquerel was undoubtedly mistaken, and not only was the gentleman mistaken, but, being a foreigner, and therefore not thoroughly conversant with the English language, in his expressions made before this Convention, he undoubtedly made use of such words and such phrases as conveyed a different idea from that which he intended to convey. I have no doubt at all but what the gentleman intended to make a statement of facts as they really existed. But I find upon the Journal of this Convention an entry that Mr. Vacquerel, on the evening of the twenty-fifth day of October, rose for the purpose of making an explanation. The Journal says, to make an explanation in relation to his statement in regard to the oath taken by the Workingmen's party. I will read it:

"MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. President: This afternoon it appears that I have made a false statement. I wish to rectify it. As a good many members of the San Francisco delegation have stated to me that they have not taken any oath to the Workingmen's party, I stand up, sir, to apologize to my colleagues, as it appears that an oath and a pledge have a very different meaning. I, sir, acknowledge having taken pledges and having violated them, thinking it would benefit the people. It shall not occur again. But, sir, in explanation to myself, I still maintain that if those gentlemen have not taken the pledge of the Workingmen's party, they stand in direct opposition to the laws established by the party."

Now, Mr. President, the Workingmen's party never took an oath of any character. The delegates of the Workingmen's party have never taken an oath of any kind, either in the City of San Francisco or in the City of Sacramento. But the Convention called by the elements composing the Workingmen's party, which assembled in the City of San Francisco on the seventeenth day of May, of the present year, of which I had the honor to be a member, and which framed the present platform and constitution of the Workingmen's party of this State, the question of administering an oath to the delegates to be elected by the Workingmen's party came up, upon Saturday morning, May eighteenth. I read now from the San Francisco Call:

"Mr. Farrell, a member of the Convention, then moved that a committee of five be appointed to prepare a pledge or oath for the candidates to take before being nominated.

"Mr. Beerstecher said this was all bosh; the oath would not be binding under the law, and a man could not be punished for violating it. The platform, if indorsed by the candidates honestly and in good faith, would be a sufficient pledge.

"Mr. Beerstecher moved a reconsideration of the vote whereby the Convention declined to enforce the taking of a pledge by candidates, and submitted an obligation for candidates to take, pledging themselves to sustain the principles of the party, and to resign when requested to do so.

"The vote was reconsidered, and the pledge adopted."

The members took a pledge when they joined the clubs, and the delegates took a pledge when they were nominated. There is no other pledge that has been taken by the members of the party, or by the delegates elected from San Francisco, except that which was introduced in the Convention, and remains a part of the present Constitution of the party. I call attention to the two pledges that were embodied in the Constitution and platform of the Workingmen's party. I call your particular attention to the fact that these pledges did not constrain any gentleman or bind any delegate of the Workingmen's party to vote for none but a Workingman. Every delegate has full liberty of action, although the newspapers have seen fit to talk a great deal about iron-clad oaths, and about the party lash, and I think it is fair to ask Mr. Vacquerel to rise upon this floor and state whether any member of the Workingmen's party swung any lash over him in any way, or endeavored to coerce him to vote in any certain way upon the question of the eligibility of Judge Fawcett. I approached that gentleman and came out squarely with him on the subject. I said it would not surprise me if the vote on Judge Fawcett's case would be a very close one. That the gentleman would probably succeed in retaining his seat, but I did not believe from the prevailing sentiment, as I had heard it expressed, that he would succeed by more than three or four votes. I told Mr. Vacquerel if that should be the case, and if Judge Fawcett should remain in his seat by only two or three votes, it might become a very serious question for him to answer before his constituency in San Francisco as to the reasons of his vote. But that if he felt in his own conscience that he could answer to them, it was a matter that rested wholly with him, and he should go and vote just as he saw fit and proper. I did not desire to coerce him in any way, but I desired to point out the matter distinctly, and if he thought he could satisfy his constituency, it would satisfy me. That was the only conversation I had with him; that was the only lash that was swung over his head, and the gentleman will bear me out in the statement.

Now, the first pledge embodied in the Constitution of the Workingmen's party is this—and it is taken by every man who desires to become a member of that party. It is not taken secretly; it is not taken with closed doors, but taken openly, in open meetings, where any man, even if he be hostile to the party, can hear and see:

"I, C. D., do solemnly pledge myself that from henceforth I will dissolve all affiliation with all other political parties; that I will work faithfully for the establishment and maintenance of good government through the Workingmen's party of California, and place in power only those pledged to its support; that I will discourage all office seeking; that I will not employ in any manner any Chinese labor, and I will discourage such employment by others, and that I will work and vote for the election to office of all persons of known honesty and integrity, nominated by the Workingmen's party."

Everything is public, and any man can step into the ward clubs at any time and hear this pledge administered. That is the pledge taken by the individual members of the party, but it has been decided by the Council of the Workingmen's party that it is perfectly proper to go outside of the party, outside of the ward clubs, and nominate men of known honesty and integrity and political purity. A man can be nominated who is not a member of any ward club, and who has never taken this particular pledge. The pledge that was introduced by myself, on the seventeenth day of last May, is as follows, and this is the pledge that was administered to every delegate from San Francisco who is sitting here in this Convention. The pledge was administered openly, the Secretary reading it over, and the delegate repeating it over after him, line by line. It reads as follows:

"I, C. D., do hereby pledge my sacred honor that I will support the platform and declared principles of the Workingmen's party of California, and in every instance use my best efforts to secure their adoption, and that if elected, will in every instance conform to the wishes of my constituents; and if requested by them to resign, I will at once comply, under penalty of thereafter being considered a man without honor or principle, and a person unworthy ever afterwards to be a candidate for any office of trust in the nation."

Now, sir, there has never been any other pledge taken save these two pledges, and it has been decided, as I before stated, that a man can be nominated who is not a member of any ward club, and in such case the pledge which I last read is the one administered. No oath is ever taken—no man's conscience is ever trampled on by an oath—and no man from San Francisco who sits here, as far as I know, from any other county which is represented by the Workingmen's party of California, has ever taken any oath that he will or will not vote for any one who is not a Workingman, or who does not stand upon the principles of the Workingmen's party. I do not think that the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Vacquerel, really intended to say that he did so. I don't think he really intended to say that the delegates from San Francisco have broken their oaths. How can a man break an oath when he has never taken any oath? His statement made at the evening session was not sufficiently clear and explicit. He spoke about the rights of the people, saying that they should be respected, and alluded to the case of Judge Sharpstein. I desire to call attention to the fact that the cases were not at all parallel. That the gentleman who was advocated by the Workingmen's party of California at that time was a man who was under no constitutional or legal disabilities. If the gentleman from Santa Barbara had been under no constitutional or legal disabilities, as we believed at that time, then, of course, the will of the people, of necessity, must have been recognized. But believing that the gentleman was under constitutional and legal disabilities, we opposed him, because we recognize the fact that the people themselves have no right to override the law. The people themselves are just as much bound by the Constitution, and laws made under and in pursuance of the Constitution, as this body is. The people have no right to override the laws.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to a question of privilege, he is branching off on the eligibility of Judge Fawcett, which has been settled by this Convention.

MR. BEERSTECHER. If the people have a right to ignore the laws, then the people have a right to resolve themselves into chaos, and that is a right I shall never concede; and I know that the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Vacquerel, does not desire to have the people resolved into chaos. And I hope, Mr. President, that hereafter the question as to whether the Workingmen's delegates in this Convention are bound by an iron-clad oath, or any other kind of an oath, will never be questioned. I hope it will be settled definitely and positively that they are untrammeled and unbound by any oath. I don't believe in any oaths in a free country like the United States of North America. No oath should trammel the conscience of a free American citizen.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. President: I regret that we are making so much expense to the people. I notice that clock, and when talking I always bear in mind that we are talking at the rate of about five dollars and sixty-five cents a minute, and I wish that the gentleman would bear that in mind, too. It appears, sir, that I have stated that we have all taken an oath. Well, in my misconstruction of the word I may have made a mistake. I got up and apologized, as it appears that an oath and a pledge are different. Of course, as I came here to vote, and not to speak, as Mr. Beerstecher came here to do the talking, I might have made the mistake. This is the way I understand an oath and a pledge now. I swear to a gentleman to-day that I will pay him twenty dollars, and if I only promise I will pay him twenty dollars, it appears that when I swear to pay him twenty dollars I am bound to do it; but if I have only promised to pay him twenty dollars, then I may do as I please about it. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. President, I wish to be well understood. If I have said anything that has hurt the feelings of my colleagues, I stood up before and apologized and asked pardon for it, and I stand up again for it. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, yesterday made us a great speech on humanity. I wish the gentleman, in arguing this principle, would commence at home first. When the gentleman has stood on this floor and used such words as political tricksters, or some such words, he apologized for it, and that was the end of it. But it appears that they wish to have me always apologizing, and I have to be always getting up here and begging pardon. What is good for the goose is good for the gander. [Laughter.] Now, if the gentlemen have taken a pledge, and have not taken an oath, it puts me in a better situation myself. In that pledge I pledged when I became a member of the Workingmen's party, that I would not employ Chinamen directly or indirectly, and that I would not vote for any man for any office or position that was not a member, and was not sustained by the workingmen. Then I am very glad to be relieved of my pledge. I will give a good illustration of it: I happened to go, when I came up here, to a hotel where there were no Chinamen employed. I could not live on the food they had, so I went to another place. But I found there was a Chinaman employed there, and I was going to leave the place, though it was a very good place to board. But now I find, sir, that the pledge is dead since the nineteenth of June last, and as I have only pledged myself, I will continue to eat at that restaurant. [Laughter.] Now I am sorry, very sorry, to see that the members of the San Francisco delegation should take it so much to heart. I have apologized, and it was perfectly specified in my speech that I meant the pledge of the members of the Workingmen's party, and not the pledge of candidates of the Workingmen's party. The pledge of the candidates is only taken by a few, while the pledge of the party is taken by every member of the party, and the member that does not take that pledge, I hold, is not a member of the party. Now, these reports always come from a newspaper; and one paper pretends that I speak broken French. Well, sir, I speak French very correctly. I may speak broken English, but no broken French. [Laughter.] That paper states things that I never said. The gentleman has said that there are too many lawyers. Now, sir, if there is any profession or any class of gentlemen I have a veneration for it is the law profession and for lawyers. There are honest lawyers as well as any other class. One paper, I am very kind in calling it a paper, has contained a lot of falsehoods about me. If you will read any other paper you will find exactly what I did say. I apologize again for saying that the members of that party took an oath. They took a pledge which was taken openly in public. If that pledge is dead since the nineteenth of June with them it is not with me. I am a man that holds if I took a pledge then, that pledge is good yet.

MR. BARBOUR. I wish to inform the gentleman that I never took an oath or a pledge, and I regret exceedingly that he should read me out of the party.

PREAMBLE AND BILL OF RIGHTS.

THE PRESIDENT. The preamble and bill of rights, which was made the special order, is now in order.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the Convention do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

THE PRESIDENT. It must be read first. The Secretary will read the report.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. That report is on the desk of every member, and I see no necessity for spending time in reading it. I move that it be taken up section by section so that we can act upon it.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman is out of order. By the rules the report must be read once in the house.

MR. VAN DYKE. Then I move that the rules be suspended.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I hope the rule will not be suspended.

MR. VAN DYKE. I withdraw the motion.

THE SECRETARY read the majority and minority reports, as follows:

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE

On Preamble and Bill of Rights; submitting draft for preamble and article one, new Constitution.

The following is the report which will come up in the Convention as the special order for this day:

MR. PRESIDENT: The Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights beg leave to report that they have had under consideration, for a number of sessions, the subject-matter referred to them, and, having agreed upon a draft for a preamble and declaration of rights, submit the same herewith to the Convention for its consideration.

At the outset of their deliberations, the committee adopted the plan to take up, in their order, the preamble and different sections of article one of the present Constitution, and consider the same as a basis for their action, with the understanding that only such provisions should be altered or amended as the public interest seemed to demand. Acting upon this plan, the committee first informally considered and acted upon the old preamble and separate sections of article one, seriatim, in connection with the various propositions bearing thereon which have from time to time been referred to us by the Convention. Afterwards the committee went over the work again, in the same manner, for final action.

PREAMBLE.

It being the opinion of the committee that the substance and general style of the present preamble should be preserved, they have reported the same, with only slight verbal amendment, as the preamble for the new Constitution. It expresses in brief and appropriate language the people's gratitude to the Supreme Being for their freedom, and their desire and determination to secure and perpetuate its blessings by the establishment of a Constitution and government. This is all that seems to be required, without loading it down with unnecessary recitals.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

SECTIONS 1–2. Sections one and two of article one have been retained with the same numbers in the new article, without any alteration. The former declares the inalienable rights of man, and the latter the object and purposes of government, in a manner and style that cannot well be improved.

Sec. 3. Section three of the old article, relating to the right of trial by jury, has been materially changed. There were a large number of propositions referred to the committee, having in view some modification of the jury system, and after giving them due consideration and devoting considerable time to the subject, the committee agreed upon the section as reported, which has been inserted in the place of the old section seven, immediately preceding the section relating to the Grand Jury, and numbered accordingly. As section three of the article here reported, the committee have adopted a new section which recognizes the Constitution of the United States as the paramount law of the land.

Sec. 4. Section four, in reference to the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, has been retained with the insertion of the words "or juror," after the word "witness," in the sentence, "and no person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief."

A number of memorials, quite numerously signed, having in view some modification of, or addition to, what is contained in section four, have been referred to us. A representative of the clergy also favored the committee with a brief statement of the reasons assigned by a large class of our people for desiring such changes. But after giving to the subject-matter all the consideration its importance demanded, the committee, with all deference to the memorialists, still remain of the opinion that it would be unwise to materially alter or add to the section as it stands in the old Constitution.

Sec. 5. Section five, relating to the writ of habeas corpus, remains as in the original article.

Secs. 6–7. Sections six and seven, in addition to the declaration in the former against excessive fines, cruel and unusual punishments, and the unnecessary detention of witnesses, bear upon the same subject; namely, the matter of bail. The committee, therefore, have transposed and consolidated these sections, and have added, by way of amendment to the clause relating to detaining witnesses, a prohibition against confining them in jails, or rooms where criminals are generally imprisoned. At present it not unfrequently happens that a stranger or poor person so unfortunate as to witness the commission of a crime, for want of bail, is confined in some noisome prison cell, while the criminal, more blessed in the possession of friends or property, goes at large on bail.

Sec. 7. For section seven, as already stated, we have inserted the old section three, as amended. As thus amended, the right of a jury in criminal trials is still retained, but in cases not amounting to felony the Legislature may fix the number to constitute such jury; and in all civil cases the whole matter is left to be provided by law.

Sec. 8. Section eight has been divided, so as to form, with the amendments proposed, three sections. The portion relating to the Grand Jury forms the eighth section of the new article. As amended, it provides for a Grand Jury in cases punishable by death or imprisonment in the State Prison, with the usual exceptions, and in other criminal cases permits a prosecution by information or complaint, as may be prescribed by law. It also provides, that while the Grand Jury is retained two thirds may find a true bill, thereby making it more difficult to defeat action against influential parties than under the old system. Power is also conferred upon the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each house, to abolish and restore the whole Grand Jury system. In regard to the Grand Jury, as well as the trial jury, the action of the committee may not have been as radical as the public sentiment demands, judging from the various propositions before them bearing upon the subject; but if so, there is a degree of elasticity in the new system which the old did not possess; and the Legislature, guided by experience, will be enabled to meet the wants of the people in this respect.

Sec. 9. Section nine, declaring the right of freedom of speech and of the press, and prescribing a rule in criminal prosecutions for libel, has been retained as it existed in the old article.

Sec. 10. Section ten, declaring the right of the people freely to assemble together to consult for the common good, etc., has also been retained.

The committee, after duly considering the subject-matter of the two foregoing sections, came to the conclusion that it would be unwise to propose amendments to them, or to tamper with them in any respect. Their provisions have been construed, and are well understood, and it is hazardous to make experiments in such matters.

Sec. 11. Section eleven, declaring that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation, is retained.

Sec. 12. Section twelve, providing that the military shall be subordinate to the civil power, etc., has been amended by striking out the last clause, which limits an appropriation for army purposes, as that matter is covered by section twenty-two of the present article, added by way of amendment in eighteen hundred and sixty-six and eighteen hundred and seventy-one; and the latter section has also been left out of our draft, on the ground that it belongs more properly to the legislative article. To section twelve, as thus amended, we have added section thirteen of the old article, as it bears upon the same matter of restricting the military power.

Sec. 13. Section thirteen has been provided for by inserting in place of the old section, already disposed of, that portion of the old section eight, in regard to the right of the accused in a criminal trial, and has been amended. The amendment consists in adding certain other usually enumerated rights, mostly taken from article six of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and which seem to have been omitted from that portion of the old section eight. We have also altered the clause in regard to putting a person twice in jeopardy, so as to remove any doubt, in case a jury on the trial should, for any reason, be discharged without rendering a verdict.

Sec. 14. The committee struck out the old section of this number, relating to apportionment, as it more properly belongs to the Committee on Apportionment and Representation. The committee have constructed a new section on the subject-matter of the last clause in the old section eight—that is, taking private property for public uses. In the section as reported in our draft for section fourteen, it is provided that the time or services of the citizen, when required for the public, shall also be compensated in a manner to be provided by law. It may be that the labor of an individual is his only capital or means of support, and when his time or services shall be required for the public benefit there appears to be no reason why compensation should not be made the same as when private property is taken.

Sec. 15. Section fifteen prohibits imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud, and prohibits imprisonment for a militia fine. It has been retained in its place without alteration.

Sec. 16. Section sixteen, declaring against ex post facto laws and laws impairing the obligation of contracts, has been so amended as to prevent impairing the remedy for the enforcement or breach of contract.

Sec. 17. Section seventeen, in regard to the right of foreign residents to possess, enjoy, and inherit property, has been amended so as to exclude from its provisions foreigners not eligible to become citizens.

Sec. 18. Section eighteen, prohibiting slavery and involuntary servitude, has been so amended as to read: "No form of slavery shall ever exist in this State, and there shall be no involuntary servitude, except for the punishment of crime of which the party shall have been duly convicted."

Sec. 19. Section nineteen, relative to the right of the people to be secure from unreasonable seizures and searches, is retained without amendment.

Sec. 20. Section twenty, in regard to treason, and the rights of a person on trial charged with the same, remains intact.

Sec. 21. Section twenty-one, declaring that this enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people, was the last section of the original article, and we have retained it as the last in our draft, and changed the number accordingly. In its place as section twenty-one, we have inserted a new section declaring against special privileges and immunities. Several propositions were referred to us bearing upon this subject, and many of the Constitutions of other States contain similar provisions.

Sec. 22. The present section of this number added by amendment, as already stated, has been dropped from our draft as properly belonging to another article. The committee have prepared a new section to take the place of twenty-one, declaring against appropriations or grants to any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or any institution, not under the exclusive management and control of the State. Judging from the various propositions on this subject, there would seem to be a public demand for some provision of this kind, in order to prevent the funds and property of the State from being diverted and used for other than public purposes.

Sec. 23. Section twenty-three is a new section, in which it is declared that the provisions of the new Constitution, unless when declared to be otherwise, shall be mandatory and prohibitory. The purpose of this is that where plain language is used in the Constitution declaring what shall be done and what shall not be done, it must not be construed, in convenient cases, to be merely directory. This section has also been presented in deference to what seems to be a public demand for something of the kind.

Sec. 24. This is the last section in the new article, and, as already stated, is the same as the twenty-first or last section in the original article.

Several other new sections were proposed before the committee, but failed of adoption—some for the reason that they were considered unnecessary or inappropriate, and others for the reason, simply, that they more properly belonged to some other department.

Herewith the committee returns to the Convention various memorials and propositions bearing upon the matters under consideration, up to this time referred to them, and would recommend that so much of any or all the provisions contained therein as may not be embodied in the draft herewith submitted, be not adopted.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WALTER VAN DYKE, Chairman.

SEC. 3. We recognise the Constitution of the United States of America as the great charter of our liberties, and the paramount law of the land.

SEC. 4. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State; and no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or juror on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience, hereby secured, shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this State.

SEC. 5. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require its suspension.

SEC. 6. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or the presumption great. SEC. 7. In criminal cases, the right of trial by jury shall remain. In all cases, except felony, the Legislature may provide, by law, the number necessary to constitute a jury, and in all civil cases the number necessary to render a verdict.

SEC. 8. No person shall be held to answer for a crime, or other public offense, punishable by death or imprisonment in the State Prison (except in cases of impeachment, and in cases of militia, when in actual service, and in the land and naval forces in time of war, or which this State may keep with the consent of Congress in time of peace), unless on presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury. In all other cases, offenses shall be prosecuted by indictment, information, accusation, or complaint, as concurrent remedies, as may be prescribed by law. A Grand Jury shall consist of not less than fifteen nor more than eighteen persons, two thirds of whom may find an indictment or true bill. The Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each house, may abolish and restore the Grand Jury system.

Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions on indictments for libels, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact.

SEC. 10. The people shall have the right to freely assemble together to consult for the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the Legislature for redress of grievances.

SEC. 11. All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation.

SEC. 12. The military shall be subordinate to the civil power. No standing army shall be kept up by this State in time of peace, and no soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner; nor in time of war, except in the manner prescribed by law.

In criminal prosecutions in any Court whatever, the party accused shall have the right to a speedy and public trial; to appear and defend, in person and with counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation, and to have a copy thereof; to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf. No person, after having been once acquitted by a jury, or discharged by the Court, shall again be put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor shall he be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

SEC. 14. Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use, without just compensation having been made to or paid into Court for the owner, except in cases of war, riot, fire, or great public peril; in which cases compensation shall afterwards be made; such compensation or damages to be assessed by a jury, unless waived by the parties; nor shall the time or service of any person, except when held or under arrest for crime, be taken without just compensation to be fixed and provided by law.

SEC. 15. No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action, on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud; and no person shall be imprisoned for a militia fine in time of peace.

SEC. 16. No bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or the remedy for the enforcement or breach thereof, shall ever be passed.

SEC. 17. Foreigners eligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws thereof, while bona fide residents of this State, shall have the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property as native born citizens.

SEC. 18. No form of slavery shall ever exist in this State, and there shall be no involuntary servitude unless for the punishment of crime of which the party shall have been duly convicted.

SEC. 19. SEC. 22. No money shall ever be appropriated or drawn from the State treasury for the use or benefit of any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or any other institution, not under the exclusive management and control of the State; nor shall any grant or donation of property ever be made thereto by the State.

SEC. 23. The provisions of this Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, unless by express words it is declared to be otherwise.

SEC. 24. This enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

President Hoge in the chair.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Convention having resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, the Secretary will read section one of the draft.

THE SECRETARY read section one, as follows:

ARTICLE I.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

SECTION 1. All men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness.

MR. WYATT. I move to transpose the section so as to read, after the word "liberty," "pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness, and acquiring, possessing, and protecting property."

MR. WATERS. I would suggest, Mr. President, that the Secretary has proceeded to read the bill of rights, and has not read the preamble.

THE PRESIDENT. The preamble has been read in Convention, and will be taken up and considered after we have gone through with the bill of rights.

MR. WICKES. Mr. President: I move to amend by striking out the clause "all men are by nature free and independent," and substitute the following: "All men are endowed with a measure of liberty under restraint—they are equal before the law."

THE CHAIRMAN. There is already an amendment offered by the gentleman from Monterey, Mr. Wyatt.

MR. WYATT. I have my amendment in writing, which I will send up. It is merely a transposition of the two clauses.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no second to the amendment.

MR. WICKES. I now offer the following amendment:

"All men are endowed with a measure of liberty under restraint—they are equal before the law."

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no second to the amendment.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer this as an amendment to the first section:

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word "men" in the first line, and insert the word "persons."

MR. BEERSTECHER. I second the motion.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I offer this amendment for the sake of making plain the phraseology of this section, and expressing precisely what we mean by it. I know that this word has been used in all of the instruments of this kind heretofore. This does not touch any question except that which belongs to the inalienable rights of all citizens. If we say that all men are born free and equal, or free and independent, we do not mean to confine it to men when we say so, neither do the committee who make this report intend a narrow and strict construction of that word, which includes all persons that are born, and it ought to read "all persons are born free and independent." I know the construction of this word has always been that it should include other classes besides men, and my reason for offering this amendment was that we ought to say precisely what we mean.

Now, sir, one other section of this same report of this committee we find, in my judgment, the same people referred to, the same class to which this word applies, and they are called "persons." If you will look at the fourth section, for instance, where we speak of "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State; and no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or juror on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief." It does not mean that no man simply shall be disqualified as a witness or juror on account of his religious belief, but no person, and it says so in plain English.

Again, in section six of this same report we read: "All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident and the presumption great," etc.

That certainly does not mean that no one but men shall be bailable. And so also in section eight we find the same word used that I wish inserted here: "No person shall be held to answer for a crime," etc. That means that all people, all persons, may be brought up and held to answer for crimes. It does not mean that none but men shall be held to answer. Now, Mr. President, this does not touch the question of the elective franchise in any manner—has nothing whatever to do with it; it is simply to take this word out and replace it with a word which shall express what we mean. We mean that all persons are born free and independent, and I hope that we will say so. I trust the amendment will prevail.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I have not heard anything yet to change my mind on this subject. It appears to me that the language is sufficiently clear when it says "all men." We understand what is meant by "all men." Now, I am one of those who do not believe in sudden departures from old landmarks. When matters have been sufficiently clear to be understood, sufficiently comprehensive, I see no reason whatever in making any change in the form of the language. It is claimed that the phrase "all men" should be changed so as to read "all persons." Why, sir, when the first child was born into the world, to commence his race in the human line, he was called a man child. If we go back to the original language, we shall find that the same principle holds good. I say that nothing is to be obtained by changing this language by any means. It seems more forcible, more clear, and I hope that unless something substantial, something really more proper, can be presented before this Convention, the language will be retained as it is.

Mr. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I think the gentleman offering this amendment covers more ground than he intended to cover. "Men," as I understand it, is a generic term, used in the Bible as well as in other works, which includes men, women, and children. We use it in its generic sense. Now substitute the word "person," for this word "men." The word person includes artificial as well as natural persons, and is a more comprehensive term than the other, and therefore corporations would be included in this grant of rights which is a proposition I am not willing to accede to. If the gentleman will substitute "people," or "human beings," I think he would accomplish his object. Neither would I object to allowing it to remain as it is.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "men" in the first line, the words, "who are capable of becoming citizens of the United States."

Mr. McFARLAND. I second the amendment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read it as amended.

The SECRETARY read:

"All men who are capable of becoming citizens of the United States, are by nature free and independent." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: That section is precisely the old Constitution as it stands, and it is the same language as is in the Declaration of Independence, and well understood, and I hope the Convention will not change well understood language when it is not demanded by some public necessity.

The amendment was rejected.

The question being on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. O'Donnell, it was rejected.

Mr. BEERSTECHER offered the following amendment:

Strike out the word "men" and insert in lieu thereof, "human beings."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order. The committee have just refused to strike out the word "men."

Mr. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Will it be in order to move the adoption of that section?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir. If there is no other amendment, the Secretary will read section two.

The SECRETARY read section two, as follows:

Sec. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section two?

Mr. BARBOUR offered the following amendment to section two, in the nature of a substitute:

"The people of the State have the inherent, sole, and exclusive right to regulate their internal government, and the police thereof. They have the right to determine what is detrimental to the well-being of the State, and to exhaust the power of the State to prohibit and prevent it. They have the right to alter or abolish their Constitution and form of government whenever they may deem it necessary for their safety and happiness. Public officers are the trustees and servants of the people, and at all times amenable to them."

Mr. HERRINGTON. I move to strike out the word "sole" in that amendment. The word "exclusive" is sufficient.

Lost.

Mr. LARKIN. I move to strike out of the amendment the words "and form of government," so that the amendment will read:

"The people of the State have the inherent, sole, and exclusive right to regulate their internal government, and the police thereof. They have the right to determine what is detrimental to the well-being of the State, and to exhaust the power of the State to prohibit and prevent it. They have the right to alter or abolish their Constitution whenever they may deem it necessary for their safety and happiness. Public officers are the trustees and servants of the people, and at all times amenable to them."

The people of this State have no right to alter or change their form of government.

Mr. EDGERTON. I rise to a point of order. The substitute has not yet been adopted, and is not open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment to an amendment. It is capable of amendment.

Mr. ESTEE. Mr. President: What right has this Convention, or the people of the State of California, to change our form of government? That is one of the rights that is expressly guaranteed. I know of no instance where a State, by its organic law, can reserve the right to change a republican form of government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin.

Lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: Whether the questions embraced in the amendment are correct or not, certainly it seems to me that this is not the proper place for it. This second section is a mere declaration of principles of the American system of government, and should stand where it is. If the gentleman desires to incorporate any of the propositions claimed in his amendment, let him do it at some other time, and in some other section. It talks about the duties of officers, and it should be in a separate section, and not introduced in this section.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I would like for the mover of this amendment, Mr. Barbour, to inform this Convention of any guarantee that he proposes in his amendment that is not now guaranteed to the people of this State by this article, in section two. It says:

"All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it."

Now, as a citizen of the United States, and a citizen of the State of California, I believe that it embodies everything that is necessary for the welfare and safety of the people. I would therefore like to hear some reason given why this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have offered this, and I find the substance contained therein is in the present Constitution of the State of Georgia, and of the State of Illinois, and in the recent Constitution adopted by Colorado. Now, as I understand our duty here as Constitution makers, it is to adopt such fundamental principles as are demanded by our peculiar situation and condition. First, however, I will answer the gentleman who objects to the phraseology of this amendment, which I have taken from the Constitution of Colorado. It is carried along, not as a revolutionary declaration, for I see here immediately afterwards a sentence recognizing the Constitution of the United States as the paramount law of the land. I don't care whether you put it in that shape, or in some other shape. If the new section is adopted as proposed by the Committee, recognizing the Constitution of the United States, both must be construed together. I maintain, sir, that this section, as amended by the committee, is not, at the present time, good for the State of California, in the nature of things, because of the peculiar situation of this people. In the first place, we have an overshadowing curse everywhere present, in this State, and we want an emphatic declaration in the Constitution, declaring that this State has the right to regulate her own internal government. Therefore, when we come to the declaration of the powers of the State, there is the place where we want to make this declaration of our powers.

Taking the subject of public officers. It is true that it is but a general declaration of the relations of public officers to the government. But there is the place to put it, right here where you have declared the power of the government and of the people, and following that declaration as an opening wedge, with the restrictions that can be imposed on them. There are men in this country who have declared themselves to be above the law. They claim that they hold some sort of divine or peculiar position which renders them higher than the law, and I want to make them all amenable to the law, and right here where the power of the people is declared is the place to put that declaration. This doctrine has been preached here on this floor, that there are men in office at the present time who can make use of their time as against the time belonging to the people, and it is for the State herself to determine, the State itself must be the judge of what is detrimental to its welfare, and I want gentlemen to come out squarely and say whether they are in favor of the State regulating her own internal affairs, and the power of the State to impose some obligations also on her officers.

Mr. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I shall speak but briefly on this matter. We are, as a great State, one of the parties of a great compact—the greatest compact, perhaps, in the history of nations. One of the parties to this compact is the United States, or the General Government. The other parties to the compact are the several States of the Union. And now, as the Government of the United States, one of the parties to this compact, has declared the relation of the several States to the General Government, so we, as a party to this compact, have a right, and it is our duty, in this the only place where we can express our views of our relations to the General Government, to give a clear statement of what we consider these relations to be. And if it be the sentiment of the people of the State of California that no power outside of the State of California has a right to interfere in our police regulations, and prevent our taking such steps to formulate such measures as we shall think for the interest, for the protection, of the people of this State, we have a right, and it is our duty, to declare ourselves upon such propositions. And, while perhaps it comes very nearly to the old principle of States rights, yet in this statement it is so modified, and so clearly stated, there is not even an element of anything revolutionary against the government of the United States in this declaration, but it is so modified, and so plainly stated as, I believe, to meet with the approval of the people of this State. I think the General Government has no right to interfere with our police regulations, and I think we have a right to protect ourselves. Furthermore, I believe that we should put in this declaration in regard to public officers, and if this is not the place, I would ask where is the proper place.

Mr. NOEL. I would inquire what section we are considering.

The CHAIRMAN. Section two.

Mr. NOEL. I hope, sir, that the section as reported will receive no amendments. The section as reported here is identical with the corresponding section in the old Constitution of the State; and I mean no disrespect to the gentlemen offering amendments, but that section was framed by statesmen, and has stood a long test, and it should be allowed to stand. It is simply a declaration of general principles. It is a declaration of the inherent rights of the people, and any amendment that may be offered can add nothing to those rights; nor can they be taken away by any declaration we may make.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that things of a very diverse character are contained in the proposition of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. It refers at one time to certain inherent powers of the people, involving some original principles, and then it comes down to the question of the responsibility of public officers. It involves, also, some questions concerning the police power of the State. As I understand it, section two is simply a declaration of certain original inherent powers of the people. I do not think any one can find any fault with the wording of section two. It seems terse, compact, and clear. It has been construed over and over again, and has a plain significant meaning. I do not think the substitute as clear and concise as the original section; and I think the questions involved in the substitute can all be presented somewhere else, in another shape, at another time. I understood the gentleman to say that this amendment is contained in substance in the Colorado Constitution. I do not find it there. Of course I do not want to contradict the gentleman, but I do not find that clause in the bill of rights of the Colorado Constitution. The first and second sections of the bill of rights of the Colorado Constitution read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That all political power is vested in and derived from the people; that all government of right originates from the people, is founded upon their will only, and is instituted solely for the good of the whole.

"SEC. 2. That the people of this State have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves as a free, sovereign, and independent State; and to alter and abolish their Constitution and form of government whenever they may deem it necessary to their safety and happiness, provided such change be not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States."

It seems to me that is much more like our original section here, and it seems to me that the proposition of the gentleman from San Francisco is out of place here. His proposition says: "The people of the State have the inherent, sole, and exclusive right to regulate their internal government and the police thereof. They have the right to determine what is detrimental to the well-being of the State, and to exhaust the power of the State to prohibit and prevent it," etc.

Now, the proposition in the Colorado Constitution is much more compact than even in our own Constitution. I prefer to vote upon these original principles, upon which there is no great difference of opinion, than the proposition involving the views of the gentleman from San Francisco, which had better be passed upon as a separate proposition. I think, however, it is worthy of consideration, but there will be great difference of opinion, and I do not want it put in at this point. Those two sections, taken as they are, are sufficient declarations of the principles upon which the American Government is based: "All political power is inherent in the people." Nobody can object to that; it is tersely and strongly expressed. It is an expression of the great principles upon which all American governments are founded: "Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people."

Nobody can make any objection to that; it is plainly and tersely expressed. It seems to me that this is certainly good as far as it goes, and I am in favor of adopting so much of the old Constitution as we can adopt, without altering the phraseology, upon the common sense principle that it has been construed over and over again by the Courts; therefore, a proposition involving other questions should be passed upon as a separate proposition, and I prefer the original section without amendment.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: That section, like section one, simply contains political sentiments that are contained in the Declaration of Independence, and which are not disputed, while the amendment contains sentiments that can be disputed, and controversies will arise with reference to it. He wants to lay down a proposition without regard to whether it conflicts with the Federal Constitution or not. That would raise a very serious question here. Suppose we do consider a certain measure here against the interests of the people of California; but suppose it is known that we are running counter to the will of the General Government and the Constitution of the United States, and a matter over which the people of the United States have the sole power; will the gentleman from San Francisco, or any other member on this floor, maintain that we can dispose of that question? I think not.

MR. LARKIN. I wish to offer an amendment, in order to explain the amendment which I offered before. I offer this as an amendment:

"Provided such change be not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States."

I wish to add that immediately after the word "happiness" in Mr. Barbour's amendment.

MR. BARBOUR. I accept the amendment.

MR. MILLER. Mr. Chairman: The text of the amendment seems to be plain and clear, without any circumlocution, in relation to the police power of the State, without making any attempt to define precisely what the police power is, or the limits of it. Now, I have no kind of objection doing that in the proper place and at the proper time. It is evident that a long debate will be provoked here, as to the rights and powers of the States, and as to the rights and powers of the General Government. That discussion will necessarily come up in the consideration of the measures or propositions which have been already introduced here, and which are now before the Committee on Chinese. I think the propositions of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, more properly comes within the article on miscellaneous provisions, and it will save time if we consider all the propositions relating to the Chinese subject in Committee of the Whole at some other time. This proposition is intended by the gentleman to affect the Chinese, and the discussion which it will call out will involve the Chinese question, so called. It seems to me that this second section of the old Constitution, which the committee has reported, is one that should be in the declaration of rights, whether we adopt the proposition of Mr. Barbour or not. I have no kind of objections to declaring that there is such a thing as the police power of the State, but this is not the place for it. I think it would more properly come in the article on miscellaneous provisions.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I am in entire sympathy with the object of this amendment. It is an object which shall meet with my approval at the proper time. I believe, however, that it will be the true course for this Convention to pursue, to place all the propositions relating to this great and serious question together, and have them discussed thoroughly at the proper time. For my part, when this question comes regularly before the Convention, I intend that my views shall have expression upon this point, without any reservation. I believe, however, with the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Miller, that we had better, in order that these propositions may be discussed thoroughly and completely, and conclusively, remand them over to a special time, a special session, so that under this head every gentleman on this floor who desires to be heard, shall be enabled to make himself thoroughly understood. I am not prepared to discuss that question at the present time in all its amplitude, but I shall be prepared when it comes properly before this Convention. I agree with the gentleman who last spoke that probably the best place for the amendment would be in a separate proposition under the head of miscellaneous subjects. I hope that the gentleman who has offered the amendment, who I know is sincere in his desire to meet the evil, will accept the suggestion and withdraw the amendment.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not wish to be understood as opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, but my object was to ask for an explanation of the principles contained in this amendment, for the purpose of knowing and satisfying myself whether this was the proper place for it or not. I believe it is eminently proper that this section two should remain as it is, and I concur with the remarks made by General Miller and Mr. Ayers, and I hope that I will have an opportunity to vote for the ideas expressed by my friend Barbour, but I believe this is not the time and place for the amendment.

MR. WATERS. I move that the committee now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

COMMUNICATION.

The President presented the following communication from the Assessor of the City and County of San Francisco:

OFFICE OF THE CITY AND COUNTY ASSESSOR,
SAN FRANCISCO, October 28th, 1878.

To the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: In compliance with the resolution passed by your Convention on the twenty-second instant, calling for information in regard to certain assessments, I beg to submit the following:

The amount assessed on mining stocks in this city and county, according to the last assessment roll, is nine hundred thousand dollars ($900,000).

The amount assessed on churches in this city and county, according to the last assessment roll, is three hundred and twelve thousand three hundred and fifty dollars ($312,350), and the lands on which the said churches are erected are assessed at one million three hundred and forty-seven thousand and seventy dollars ($1,347,070).

The assessment on mining stocks, though small, was deemed necessarily so because in most instances the claim of double taxation and claim of non-taxability of solvent debts were interposed to prevent the separate assessment of this species of property.

The instances, however, in which I have been able to make such assessments will suffice to enable your Convention to determine whether more effectual modes cannot be devised for reaching this species of property for the purpose of taxation, if, in your judgment, this should be expedient.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. BADLAM, Assessor.

By R. R. JOHNSON, Chief Deputy.

THE PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I move that it be printed.

Carried.

REPORT ON CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE presented the following report from the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal:

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, October 30th, 1878.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Corporations other than Municipal respectfully report that resolutions and propositions numbers two hundred and one, one hundred and ninety-one, one hundred and ninety-two, one hundred and seventy-five, three hundred and fourteen, one hundred and twenty-two, three hundred and forty, three hundred and forty-four, two hundred and seventy-nine, two hundred and thirteen, one hundred and sixty-eight, one hundred and fourteen, forty-seven, forty-one, thirty-four. one hundred and thirty nine, one hundred and fifty-seven, thirteen, fifty, one hundred and thirteen, five, eleven, eighty-two, two hundred and ninety-eight, fifty-eight, eleven, three hundred and seventy-four, three hundred and fifty three, one hundred and forty-seven, and three hundred and seventy-two have been duly considered by your committee, and the same are reported back to the Convention with the recommendation that no further action be taken thereon, as such portions of the above propositions deemed of value will be found in the article on corporations accompanying this report.

Your committee recommend that a separate article on "corporations other than municipal" be embodied in the Constitution, to be subdivided into "corporations in general" and "railroad corporations."

Your committee respectfully submit twenty-three sections, forming an article on the subject of corporations other than municipal, and recommend their adoption.

GEO. W. SCHELL,

MR. ESTEE. I move that the report of the committee be laid on the table and ordered printed.

THE PRESIDENT. Under rule fifty-three it will have to be read. The Secretary will read the article submitted by the committee.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act. All laws passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time or repealed.

SEC. 2. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liabilities of the corporators and other means as may be prescribed by law.

MR. LARKIN. I move that the further reading of that be dispensed with, and that the usual number of copies be ordered printed.

MR. MANSFIELD. I desire to have it read.

THE PRESIDENT. It must be read. The rule cannot be suspended.

THE SECRETARY continued the reading:

SEC. 3. Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities.

SEC. 4. The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships; and all corporations shall have the right to sue and shall be subject to be sued, in all Courts, in like cases as natural persons.

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes; but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws; but no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 6. All existing charters, grants, franchises, special or exclusive privileges, under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity.

SEC. 7. The Legislature shall not extend any franchise or charter, or remit the forfeiture of any franchise or charter of any corporation now existing, or which shall hereafter exist under the laws of this State.

SEC. 8. The exercise of the right of eminent domain shall never be so abridged or construed as to prevent the Legislature from taking the property and franchises of incorporated companies and subject them to public use the same as the property of individuals, and the exercise of the police power of the State shall never be so abridged or construed as to permit corporations to conduct their business in such manner as to infringe the equal rights of individuals or the general well-being of the State.

SEC. 9. No corporation shall engage in business other than that expressly authorized in its charter, or the law under which it may have been or may hereafter be organized; nor shall it hold any real estate for a longer period than five years, except such as may be necessary for carrying on its business, or which is incident thereto.

SEC. 10. The Legislature shall not pass any laws permitting the leasing or alienation of any franchise, so as to relieve the franchise or property held thereunder from liabilities of the lessor or grantor, lessee or grantee, contracted or incurred in the operation, use, or enjoyment of such franchise, or any of its privileges.

SEC. 11. No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void. The stock and bonded indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased, except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock first obtained at a meeting called for that purpose, first giving sixty days' public notice, as may be provided by law.

SEC. 12. The Legislature shall provide by law that in all elections for directors or managers of incorporated companies every stockholder shall have the right to vote, in person or by proxy, for the number of shares of stock owned by him, for as many persons as there are directors or managers to be elected, or to cumulate said shares and give one candidate as many votes as the number of directors multiplied by the number of his shares of stock shall equal, or to distribute them, on the same principle, among as many candidates as he shall think fit; and such directors or managers shall not be elected in any other manner.

SEC. 13. The State shall not subscribe to or be interested in the stock of, or in any manner loan its credit to, any person, company, association, or corporation.

SEC. 14. Every corporation organized or doing business in this State, under the laws or authority thereof, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock; the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the names and place of residence of its officers.

RAILROADS.

SEC. 15. All railroads, canal, and transportation companies shall be common carriers and subject to legislative control. Any association or corporation, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination.

SEC. 16. No president, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company.

SEC. 17. No railroad or other transportation company shall grant free passes, or passes or tickets at a discount, to any person holding any office of honor, trust, or profit in this State; and the acceptance of any such pass or ticket, by a member of the Legislature or any public officer, shall work a forfeiture of his office.

SEC. 18. No railroad company or other common carrier shall combine or make any contract with the owners of any vessel that leaves port or makes port in this State, or with any common carrier, by which combination or contract the earnings of one doing the carrying are to be shared by the other not doing the carrying.

SEC. 19. No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State. Persons and property transported over any railroad, or by any transportation company or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation ticket may be issued at special rates.

SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; hear and determine complaints against railroad or other transportation companies; affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in the foregoing sections.

SEC. 21. The State shall be divided into three railroad districts as nearly equal in population as practicable, from each of which one of the three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected.

SEC. 22. REPORTS.

Mr. Belcher, from the Committee on Labor and Capital, made the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Labor and Capital beg leave to report back to the Convention proposition number eighty-four, introduced by Mr Condon, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings.

I. S. BELCHER, Chairman.

REPORTING AND PRINTING.

Mr. Ayers, from the Committee on Reporting and Printing, made the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Reporting and Printing, to whom were referred the resolution of inquiry, adopted October twenty-sixth, requiring them to inquire into and report the expediency and probable cost of transcribing, indexing, and printing the Journal of this Convention, beg leave to submit the following:

As to the expediency of printing the Journal, we consider it urgent that each member of this Convention should be placed in possession of a printed copy of the minutes of each day's proceedings. We believe it would facilitate business, give members a clearer view of the work in hand, and economize the time of the Convention. Besides, the Journal, when in its bound form, would afford a record of the proceedings of the body only less valuable for reference than a verbatim printed report of the same.

Your committee have taken the figures made up by the State Printer at an early stage of this session, to determine the cost of printing the Journal, both in its transient and permanent form, and find that it will cost for five hundred (printer's count) bound copies of the Journal, if it make five hundred pages, the sum of one thousand and thirty-nine dollars. Should the Convention require an appendix, in which would be printed the various reports from State officers, and other matter not pertaining to the body of the Journal, such an addition, estimated at two hundred and fifty pages, would cost five hundred and nineteen dollars and fifty cents. The probable cost of indexing the Journal would be about one hundred and fifty dollars, and the extra expense for two hundred and forty slips of the Daily Journal, for the use of the members, would not exceed two hundred dollars.

These items summarized would present the following total:

For five hundred copies of Journal, in book form	$1,039 00
For addition of two hundred and fifty pages, appendix	519 50
Estimated cost of indexing	150 00
For two hundred and forty copies of Daily Journal	200 00
Total cost	$1,908 50

Your committee would further report that there need be no expense for transcription of the Journal, as the minutes of the Minute Clerk can be used as copy by the printers.

This, we are assured, has been done in setting up the Journal of the Senate, and there is no reason why it cannot be done in setting up the Journal of this Convention.

Respectfully,

AYERS, for the Committee.

MR. AYERS. Having made that report, I now move that the journals of this Convention be printed as recommended in that report.

MR. MCFARLAND. I merely rise to inquire if they are to be printed and laid on our desks every morning.

MR. AYERS. Yes, sir.

The motion prevailed.

PARDONING POWER.

MR. SHAFTER, from the Committee on the Pardoning Power, submitted the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT: The Committee on Pardoning Power, to whom were referred proposed amendment number thirteen, introduced by Mr. Vacquerel; number nineteen, introduced by Mr. H. W. Smith; number twenty-one, introduced by Mr. Moreland; number sixty-nine, by Mr. Barry; number one hundred and one, introduced by Mr. Fawcett; number one hundred and twenty-one, introduced by Mr. Herold—have had the same under consideration, and recommend that they be not adopted.

The committee have retained the right of reprieve in the Governor, but yielding to an apparent public desire, have joined the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to the Governor, as a Commission of Pardons and Commutations. We have recommended that neither pardons nor reprieves should be extended to persons thrice convicted of felony, and we have further required the reasons for pardon or commutation to be given.

We herewith report a draft of the proposed section thirteen, article five.

J. MCM. SHAFTER, for the Committee.

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 13. The Governor shall have the power to grant reprieves, and the Governor and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall have power to grant pardons and commutations of sentence, after conviction, for all offenses, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions, and with such restrictions and limitations, as they may think proper, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons. Upon conviction for treason, the Governor shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the Legislature, at its next meeting, when the Legislature shall either pardon, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. The Governor shall communicate to the Legislature, at the beginning of every session, every case of reprieve or pardon granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence and its date, the date of the pardon and reprieve, and the reasons for granting the same. Neither the Governor and Chief Justice nor the Legislature shall have power to grant pardons, or commutations of sentence, in any case where the convict has been previously thrice convicted of felony.

Laid on the table and ordered printed.

MISCELLANEOUS SUBJECTS.

MR. SCHOMP. The Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects desire to report progress, and have requested me to ask for further time to report.

THE PRESIDENT. If there are no objections, further time will be granted. Hearing none, it is so ordered.

STATIONERY.

MR. HILBORN, from the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses, made the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses, to whom was referred resolution number sixty-two, introduced by Mr. Larkin, limiting the amount of stationery each member might draw, have had the same under consideration, and herewith report back a substitute therefor, and recommend the adoption of the substitute.

S. G. HILBORN, Chairman.

The report was received, and the following substitute, reported by the committee, was taken up and adopted:

Resolved, That each standing committee, and each member of this Convention, be allowed all needful stationery, not exceeding the value of ten dollars.

MR. MILLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That proposition number sixty-four, by Mr. Ayers, together with the report of the Committee on Chinese thereon, be taken from the general file and recommitted to the Committee on Chinese.

Adopted.

NEW PROPOSITIONS.

THE PRESIDENT. The next order of business is the introduction of propositions relating to the Constitution.

SUPPORT OF ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN.

MR. BEERSTECHER introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, providing that the father shall support and educate his illegitimate children:

ARTICLE —.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

SECTION —. The Legislature shall, by law, secure the custody to the mother of every illegitimate unmarried minor, and the father shall support and educate such child, and compensate the mother for her care and custody until such child can support itself.

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

MR. TINNIN introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, creating a Court of Claims:

SECTION 1. The State shall be uniformly and equitably just in all its dealings and transactions with all persons; and no debt, liability, or obligation incurred by the State, or under authority of its laws, or whereof it may have received the benefits, shall be repudiated.

Digitized by Google

SEC. 2. There shall be established by appropriate legislation a "Court of Claims," to consist of not less than three members, which shall be intrusted with a general supervision over the financial operations and transactions of the State, and its officers exercising functions relating to the collection and disbursement of its revenues. To this Court shall be submitted, with the proper vouchers, all claims and demands against the State or its treasury, legal or equitable, not specially exempted by law from the operation of this section and article of the Constitution, for approval before payment.

SEC. 3. All claims or demands against the State or its treasury, arising from whatever cause, legal or equitable, capable of pecuniary estimation, may be prosecuted by action in the "Court of Claims" by the creditor or claimant, and defended by the Controller and Attorney-General; and the Legislature shall provide by appropriation for the payment, out of the State treasury, of all judgments finally entered up in said Court. The Supreme Court of the State shall have and exercise appellate jurisdiction over all actions instituted in the "Court of Claims" on questions of law alone.

Referred to Committee on State and Municipal Indebtedness.

PUBLIC WORK.

MR. FREUD introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relating to public work:

SECTION —. All public works of every description, State, county, or municipal, and any modification, repair, excavation, or addition, of any nature whatsoever, to the same, when the cost of such work, modification, repair, excavation, or addition shall exceed the sum of five hundred dollars, shall be let by public contract to the lowest bidder, in such a manner and under such regulations as the contract law of the State shall prescribe.

Referred to Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings.

STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

MR. WICKES introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to the constitution and powers of the State Board of Education:

The State Board of Education shall be composed of two members from each Congressional District, to serve for the same number of years as the Governor of the State, and to be elected at the same time the Governor is elected, but to be elected from the Congressional Districts in the same manner that Representatives to Congress are now elected. The State Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be ex officio a member of said Board. Said Board shall have power:

1. To adopt and prescribe a course of study for the public schools of the State (except in incorporated cities);
2. To prescribe general rules for the government of the public schools of the State;
3. To adopt and prescribe text-books to be used in the public schools of the State (except in incorporated cities);
4. To provide for the examination of candidates for teachers' certificates, and to grant certificates to such candidates;
5. To direct and control the State Normal School;
6. To appoint, and for good cause to remove, County or District Superintendents or Inspectors of Public Schools;
7. To direct and control the State University.

OTHER PROVISIONS.

1. The State Superintendent ought to be elected at the same time and for the same term that the Governor is elected;
2. All the moneys mentioned in section two, of article nine, of present Constitution, should go into a Common School Fund, and a clause inserted to prohibit the Legislature from appropriating any moneys raised by taxation to the support of any sectarian or denominational institution;
3. The word "three," in section three, article nine, should be changed to "six."

Referred to Committee on Education.

TO ENCOURAGE MINING.

MR. DOWLING introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, to encourage mining in the State of California:

SECTION 1. Any miner or prospector who shall discover a lode or ledge of gold or silver-bearing quartz, in the State of California, shall be entitled to a reward of one thousand dollars, United States gold coin; provided, however, that said miner or prospector shall have sunk a shaft or winze along the vein or lode to the depth of one hundred feet downwards from the croppings.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide for the enforcement of the foregoing provision by appropriate legislation.

Referred to Committee on Mines and Mining.

RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS.

MR. HALL introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, concerning the duties of Railroad Commissioners:

SECTION —. No railroad company or corporation shall establish or construct any line of railroad in this State for the transportation of passengers or freights, except street railroads in incorporated cities and villages, nor establish any terminal point thereof, nor establish nor maintain any depot, station, or other business place for receiving or discharging passengers or freights, except with the approval, to be duly certified, of said Railroad Commissioners, or a majority of them; and said Commissioners shall have power, and it shall be their duty in said matters, to exercise general supervisory control over all railroads to be operated as public highways in this State, other than said street railroads, and the Legislature shall enact laws to render such control effective.

Referred to Committee on Corporations other that Municipal.

TAXATION OF CORPORATIONS.

MR. WINANS introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, respecting taxation of corporations:

All corporations shall be subject to taxation upon their capital stock, the value whereof, for the purpose of such taxation, shall be the market value of the same at the time of its assessment. The real and personal property of said corporations shall be separately assessed and taxed, and said taxes paid in the several counties respectively in which the same may be situated, and the aggregate amount of such taxes upon real and personal property shall be deducted from the amount of said tax upon the capital stock of said corporations. The residue of said tax upon said capital stock shall be payable by said corporations in the counties respectively in which their principal offices or places of business shall be severally located—in which counties the said capital stock shall also be assessed. The stock held by each stockholder in such corporation shall be exempt from taxation. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to pass such law or laws as may be necessary for the strict enforcement of the provisions of this section.

Referred to Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.

MR. HERRINGTON introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to local governments:

SECTION —. The Legislature shall provide, by general laws, for the establishment of local governments in the municipalities and political subdivisions of the State, giving to the officers charged with the exercise of governmental functions such powers, rights, and privileges, executive, legislative, and judicial, as shall be deemed expedient for the orderly conduct thereof, and for the safety and happiness of their inhabitants.

Referred to Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

Together with any other information, within his control, bearing upon the objects of this resolution.

Adopted.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

MR. NOEL. I move to take up from the table the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Enrollment and Engrossment be authorized and empowered to employ a clerk, at a salary of five dollars per day, whenever necessary.

The motion prevailed, and the resolution was adopted.

SPECIAL ORDER—BILL OF RIGHTS.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to take into consideration the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the pending amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Barbour to section two of article one.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The people of the State have the inherent, sole, and exclusive right to regulate their internal government, and the police thereof. They have the right to determine what is detrimental to the well-being of the State, and to exhaust the power of the State to prohibit and prevent it. They have the right to alter or abolish their Constitution and form of government whenever they may deem it necessary for their safety and happiness; provided, that such change be not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. Public officers are the trustees and servants of the people, and at all times amenable to them."

MR. WILSON, of First District. I ask that the original section offered by the committee, for which this is a substitute, be read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was lost, on a standing vote: ayes, 44; noes, 84.

THE SECRETARY read section three, as follows:

SEC. 3. We recognize the Constitution of the United States of America as the great charter of our liberties, and the paramount law of the land.

MR. HOWARD. I move to strike out that section and insert the following:

"In the United States of America the powers of sovereignty are divided between the Government of the Union and those of the States. They are each sovereign with respect to the objects committed to it, and neither sovereign with respect to the objects committed to the other."

Digitized by Google

MR. HOWARD. I object to this section, sir, because it practically ignores the States and the Constitutions of the States as any part of the charters of American liberties. Now, sir, that proposition is untrue historically, and it is untrue legally. It has no foundation, either in history or in law. If the proposition had been that the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California were the charters of our liberties, I should not have objected; but as it is now, sir, it is clearly in opposition to the spirit of the Constitution of the United States itself. Now, sir, the language which I have proposed is that of Chief Justice Marshall, in McCulloch vs. the State of Maryland. It is succinct, it is clear, it is unmistakable; and it recognizes the true theory of American government. He says: "In America the powers of sovereignty are divided between the Government of the United States and those of the States. They are each sovereign with respect to the objects committed to it, and neither sovereign with respect to the objects committed to the other." Now, sir, if we are going to recognize the Constitution as the charter of our liberties, let us recognize it as the Constitution of the United States is, that all the reserve powers and sovereignty is in the State and not in the Government of the Union. And therefore it necessarily follows as a result from the express provisions of the Constitution of the United States, reserving all the powers not granted, to the States, or to the people. And that, sir, in a late case has been held to be the law. It is so held after our Constitutions have escaped from the contests of the rebellion. In the case of the United States vs. Dale, 11 Wallace, 424, the Court says: "The General Government and the States, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other within their respective spheres. The former in its appropriate sphere is supreme; but the States within the limits of their powers not granted, or, in the language of the amendment, 'reserved,' are as independent of the General Government as that Government within its sphere is independent of the States." Now, sir, if we are going to talk about charter of liberties at all let us talk about the whole charter. Let us take the language of the Federal Courts, who say that the United States is sovereign as to the powers granted to the Federal Government, and that the States are sovereign as to the powers reserved. That is well settled. That admits of no controversy. This attempt of the bill of rights to ignore the State is, to say the least, a blunder; and let me add, still further, that if there is a State in this Union that ought to insist upon State rights, that ought to maintain State sovereignty, it is precisely the State of California, in its present position and in its present attitude with regard to several very important questions. Now, sir, it was the intention of the framers of the United States Constitution to maintain State rights—to maintain the sovereign character of the States as to all powers not granted to the Federal Government; and therefore when this bill of rights ignores, practically, the government of States, and sets up the Constitution of the United States, practically, as the charter of our liberties, I say that it is a mistake historically, a mistake in law, and it is a blunder all around.

MR. ROLFE. I have an amendment. I move to amend by striking out this section three entirely, and leaving it out. I offer that as an amendment. I make that motion because I conceive that this third section is entirely unnecessary. This brings up a question here for us to pass upon in this Convention which is more proper for the judicial department.

MR. SMITH of Santa Clara. A motion to strike out is not an amendment.

MR. ROLFE. My motion is to strike out the whole section.

THE PRESIDENT. The first question will be on your motion, to strike out the whole section.

MR. ROLFE. My motion is to strike out the whole section. I deem this a question more proper to be determined by the Courts of the country. It is a question that is being determined by the Courts of our country every day. Although I am a pretty strong Republican, and always have been since the Republican party was organized, I do not recognize the Constitution of the United States as the great charter of our liberties. We had State charters before there was any Constitution of the United States. The Constitution of the United States is a limit upon the powers of the States. However, I am not disposed to discuss that matter any further here. I simply propose to leave that matter entirely with the judicial department of our government to determine to what extent we have powers and authority under the Constitution of the United States, and to what extent we look to the Constitution of the State for our liberties and our powers and our authority. Therefore, I think it is very proper that this section, as reported by the committee, or as offered to be amended by the gentleman from Los Angeles, neither one should have a place on the preamble and bill of rights of our Constitution of the State.

MR. VAN DYKE. Now, the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard, and the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe, could be obviated by an amendment leaving out the words "the great charter of our liberties and;" it would then read: "We recognize the Constitution of the United States of America as the paramount law of the land." Leave out all about the charter of our liberties. That is, simply that we recognise the Constitution of the United States as being the permanent law of the land. Now, this might not have been in the old Constitution, but I will call the attention of the members to the fact, that I believe every Constitutional Convention held since the rebellion has inserted some such provision as that in its State Constitution. I look over the books here upon the State Constitutions and I find it in fourteen of the revisions since the rebellion. Our neighboring State of Nevada has it in. I believe all the States—perhaps I am mistaken—but I believe all the States that have revised their Constitutions since the rebellion, have such a declaration as that. Now, with the amendment I propose, I cannot see what objection any gentleman can have to it. I move to strike out the words, "the great charter of our liberties and," so that it will read: "We recognize the Constitution of the United States of America as the paramount law of the land."

MR. HOWARD. That does not remove the objection. It is not the paramount law of the land, except as to the powers delegated to the Federal Government.

MR. VAN DYKE. We understand that.

MR. HOWARD. But you don't say that. You don't say what you mean. The Constitution of the United States is not the paramount law of the land, except as to the powers delegated to the Federal Government.

MR. VAN DYKE. I understand the Constitution of the United States to be that delegation of power to the General Government—that is, the expressed powers and the necessarily implied powers; nothing more nor less.

MR. WHITE. I hope, sir, that this section will be adopted, and for this simple reason: that it is true in every word. We all know that the Constitution and laws of the United States are the paramount law of this land, and we should declare it so, that our children may recognize it and not fall into the terrible calamity through which this nation has lately passed. The same doctrine is broached here that was broached before the rebellion, and it educated half the people into believing that there was no paramount law of the land. I say that this is the truth, and why do they object to announcing the truth upon this subject any more than that the government lies in the people. That we all agree to, and yet we refuse to declare it. Why shrink from declaring the truth? I am tired of this idea that we must go to law books to understand everything. The gentleman from Los Angeles can understand all the decisions that are made upon this subject, and everything appears clear to him; but, Mr. President, is it for us to say, who never read more law than is necessary to do our business in the country? We want the plain facts there, so that our children shall understand that the Constitution of the United States is the paramount law of the land. And we want you to look to it. Take it away, and what charter have we? What charter of our liberties have we if you take it away? This paragraph is taken from the platform of the Workingmen's party of California. Communists as they are, they pledge themselves to stand by the Constitution of the United States, as the paramount law of the land; and yet we are communists; I want those men on this side here, and I hope there will be a chance of getting the ayes and noes on this question, and see where the communists are. I trust that this proposition will be adopted by this committee.

MR. BROWN. Mr. President: It appears to me that this is a matter of no small magnitude. It is one that concerns us all, and it is a matter of the utmost consequence that the finest discrimination and judgment should be used with regard to this matter. Now, Mr. President, it is a plain case as to what the object of the Constitution of the United States originally was. Certain powers from the different free and independent States were delegated thereunder to the General Government, and in addition to that, those powers and those rights as defined in the Constitution that were not delegated to the General Government were reserved by the people. Now it becomes a matter of great consequence for us to consider this within our minds. I have not time, neither would it be justice to you to dwell upon those rights that were reserved to the States. Article nine of the Constitution of the United States says: "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." Other rights that were reserved by the people were not in any sense of the word to be disparaged by those powers that were granted to the General Government, and nothing belonged to the General Government only those delegated rights which were given by the different States. This great principle remains true to this day, that powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by the Constitutions of the States, are reserved to the States respectively, and to the people. This great principle, Mr. President, remains true. Principles never die. I am in hopes that no member on this floor will so far forget himself as to speak of rebellion, or anything of the kind.

The great constitutional principles upon which our government has been established, and by which we expect the ship of State to steer clear of the rocks and over the turbulent seas of conflicting opinions, must be maintained, and the only way to do that is by adhering strictly to the great doctrines of our country. Now we hear men say that when State laws and State Constitutions come in conflict with the laws and Constitution of the United States, that the State laws must give way. Now that is all a mistake and a misunderstanding. There is no conflict between State Constitutions and the United States Constitution, or between State laws, strictly speaking, and the laws of the United States, for both have their respective spheres, and as both have their respective spheres and restrictions defined, there is no need of a conflict in this particular, and this great principle should be considered. I see no reason why we should conclude to use some other terms because other States have done so. Why should we say that the Constitution of the United States is the paramount law of the land, when the Constitution of the United States itself says that "the enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people?" We are going too far. We are giving to the General Government more than was asked, and as this State is not accused of disloyalty, I am convinced that there is no need whatever of trenching upon the rights reserved by the people by anything of the kind. I therefore feel disposed to oppose this article three, and to be in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I have an amendment to the amendment of General Howard.

MR. ROLFE. I rise to the point of order that my amendment to the amendment is before the house, and that is the only one now that can be acted on. My amendment is to strike out the whole thing.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. "We recognize the Constitution of the United States of America as the charter of perpetual union of the States, and the paramount law between the States and foreign powers." Now, Mr. President, I do not think there is a difference of opinion on this floor as to a matter of law, or as to the powers between the States and in relation to the General Government; but I do think there is a difference of opinion here upon terms. I do not think that those gentlemen who are in favor of the clause, as reported by the committee, understand the full extent of the term therein used, in regard to the Constitution of the United States being the charter of our liberties and the paramount law of the land. If it is the paramount law of the land, it is the paramount law of the whole land. It is the paramount law of the State of California. I do not think there is a gentleman on the floor but who will admit that the Constitution of the State of California, within the State of California, is paramount—is higher than the Constitution of the United States; that the Constitution of the United States is only a grant of certain powers belonging to the government of the United States, which is a government between the States and having authority with foreign powers.

Now, it will not do to say that the Constitution of the United States is the paramount law of the land, because it interferes with other questions that these gentlemen upon my right have introduced in favor of State police powers, and other questions embodied in their resolutions. This carries us too far; yet I do think that it is due to the State of California to express its sentiment in regard to the perpetuity of that union which has been so firmly established, and also to give some recognition as to the powers between the States and the power of the General Government over the States. Therefore, I offer this amendment, and if it is not in order now, I will withhold it for the present.

THE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

MR. MCCALLUM. I understand the gentleman from Los Angeles to say, in positive terms, that the Constitution of the United States is not the paramount law of the land.

MR. HOWARD. Let me correct the gentleman. I said that it was the paramount law of the land as to the powers granted to the Federal Government, and not the paramount law of the land as to the reserved rights of the States. I used the language of the Supreme Court of the United States, in repeated decisions.

MR. MCCALLUM. I must take it as he now states it. At any rate, Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States itself settles this question as to what power it has, so far as it is necessary and proper for us to declare here. Article six of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States declares; "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land." To that extent I admit that it is very proper at this time, in view of all the circumstances—not even omitting the circumstances of the debate here upon this question—to make this provision which, it is true, is an addition to the bill of rights. I shall vote for the motion to strike out, because in certain senses the State Constitution I conceive to be the charter of our liberties, and at any rate that general phraseology is more suitable, perhaps, to the stump than it is to the Constitution. I prefer the language of the Constitution of the United States itself. That Constitution is the supreme law of the land. In the early Constitutions of the United States there were a great many general phrases used and they got into our Constitutions, and no proposition has been made to amend. If it were not for my great aversion to amendment where amendment does not seem really absolutely necessary, I would have preferred to have amended the second section, which involves this question to a certain extent, for there are generalities borrowed from the old Constitutions which are not correct. This thing, for instance, of the right of the people to alter or reform their government whenever the public good may require it—without any provision whatever as to the manner—an assertion from which revolutionists forever find at least a shadow of authority in the very suggestion itself, instead of saying, as I claim is the true proposition, "the right to alter or reform the same as provided in this Constitution, or otherwise, when the cause exists," defining the direct causes.

After what has occurred in our recent national history, it appears to me that every State which has a Constitutional Convention ought to adopt a proposition of the nature that is proposed to constitute section three of this bill of rights, and especially in view of the fact that it seems as if the old controversy would never die, but must come up from time to time. As the question has been raised in this body, it furnishes an additional argument that we should make that declaration; therefore, I propose to vote, first, to strike out, and then I understand it will be proper to move to insert.

THE PRESIDENT. The first proposition will be the amendment to strike out the words, "great charter of our liberties and."

MR. MCCALLUM. Under that ruling of the Chair, then, my position must be to vote against striking out.

THE PRESIDENT. If the Convention refuse to strike out the whole section, you will have an opportunity to amend.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: We have just passed a section here without amendment: "All political power is inherent in the people." I understand by that, that all power is innate in the people; that is, it is not derivative, but is a right which is born with them, and which inheres in the people or in the people. Now, sir, it is proposed here to supplement that action, in immediate juxtaposition with this one now pending, which states that their liberties are derivative.

MR. VAN DYKE. I moved to strike that out.

MR. JOHNSON. It appears to me that the two sections would be manifestly repugnant. The one says that the power inheres in the people, and the other that the great charter of American liberty is the Constitution of the United States. It would seem, then, that after we are born with this inherent right, that it is necessary to place an enabling Act in the Constitution to secure it to us. The way I look at this matter is this: it used to be that this democratic doctrine, or republican doctrine—call it as you please—that all power is inherent in the people, was not a notion. That belongs to America and American Constitutions; and we have adopted that in section two, virtually, by passing it without amendment. A long time ago a different theory prevailed; not that power inhered in the people, but that it existed in the sovereign, and that it was derived by the people through the medium of the sovereign. That is the reason magna charta is called the great charter of liberty; because it was supposed that these privileges and immunities were derived from the sovereign; and those barons who fought at Runymede and gained by their swords that concession from King John, apparently did not know that after the lapse of several centuries this new dogma, which is now established in our Constitutions, that all power is inherent in the people, would prevail.

Now, in the twenty-ninth section of magna charta there is a provision that no freeman shall be taken or imprisoned unless by lawful judgment of his peers, or the law of the land. That is one of those inherent powers which is recognized by section two. Come farther along. Come to the time of Charles I, when the declaratory statute of the right of petition was passed. What do we see? That those loans or benevolences, so called, should no longer be exacted by the sovereign unless voted by Parliament. It is one of the inherent powers under the Constitution, that taxation should be voted by our representatives. Come farther along, to the habeas corpus Act of sixteen hundred and seventy-nine that secured the personal liberty of the citizen. That is one of the inherent powers. And, sir, in the bill of rights of sixteen hundred and eighty-eight we find that nearly all the provisions in our present State Constitutions are embodied, or a great many of them at least. These powers are inherent in the people. Now, as I understand it, the government of the United States has no power except such as is delegated to it by the Constitution of the United States, or prohibited by it to the States. These powers are delegated; they come from the people. How, then, can it be called the great charter of American liberty, which is synonymous with a grant?

The people grant, and yet you are now asked to say that by granting they get the charter of American liberty. Why, it inhered in them. The fact is, that these powers which are granted to the General Government are enumerated, but these other great powers, which constitute the palladium of American liberty, are reserved. This power of habeas corpus is reserved, because it is not granted except in case of revolution or rebellion. And so, without specifically mentioning them, a great many powers are reserved; and it is this residium which constitutes the great charter of American liberty. Now, as a matter of course, in construing this Constitution we see what are the grants. In construing the State Constitutions, we see what are the limitations. We have, then, these bills of rights inserted in our State Constitutions, for there is no such thing in the United States Constitution; and these bills of rights are by way of limitation, that the Legislature shall not do this thing and that thing, these powers being reserved to the people. And yet at the same time it is not so very important about the ramifications of these bills of rights, if we have some forcible provision in the Constitution, such as that the powers not herein enumerated are reserved to the people.

Now, I suppose that the true theory of the legislative power is this: that it is the same as the British Parliament, subject to the Constitutions. What Constitutions? Subject to the Constitution of the United States; subject to the Constitution of this State. In the British Parliament their Constitution comes in the shape of laws that are passed by that Parliament. They are the law-making power; they are the Constitution of the realm. But here we distribute our powers into executive, legislative, and judicial departments; and it is this distribution, it is this limitation engrafted upon our Federal and State Constitutions, which makes the difference in the powers exercised by the British Parliament and to be exercised by the State Legislature. The sixth article of the Constitution of the United States says that the Constitution of the United States and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, and the treaties established by authority of the United States, are the supreme law of the land. Now, whether there is any provision in this Constitution or not on that subject, it will not alter that provision. It will be just as binding as ever, and it does not require any recognition on the part of the framers of this Constitution whatever. But, at the same time, Mr. President, this Constitution will come up before this people for ratification, and some of them may say, "I will not vote for that Constitution, because there is no recognition of the Constitution of the United States in it." So it occurs to me that the whole difficulty might be bridged over in this way: "We recognize the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, within their constitutional scope, as the paramount law of the land." Within their constitutional scope. The Constitution itself, within its constitutional scope, the laws passed in pursuance thereof, within their constitutional scope, and the treaties the same. This language would not be subject to any objection at all, and would not endanger the ratification of this instrument before the people; and therefore, at the proper time, when it is in order, I will offer an amendment to this effect: "We recognize the Constitution of the United States, the laws and treaties of the United States within the scope of that Constitution, as the supreme law to each and every State in the American Union." I have simply added "each and every State in the American Union" for this reason, that some might claim that inasmuch as we engraft the Constitution of the United States upon this Constitution, that we thereby recognize certain provisions in the Constitution of the United States which grant certain rights to the Government of the United States which are not applicable to our State government. But by putting in this phraseology, that it is the supreme law to each and every State of the Union, we show that we are not referring to any such provisions that are applicable to the United States Government only, but we are simply reaffirming article six of the Constitution of the United States. When in order I will offer this by way of amendment.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: I feel it to be my duty to explain as briefly as possible my position with regard to the matter which is now before this committee. The proposition in its present form cannot receive my consent, neither can the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles County, Mr. Howard, receive my approval. I think that in the shape in which the original proposition is presented by the committee that it is out of place. It has no place in an article declaratory of the rights of the people, and for the same reason, Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that the substitute that has been proposed by the honorable gentleman from Los Angeles, amending the doctrines which we all admit, that the powers of government have been divided between the Federal and State governments, and that each is sovereign in its sphere, have no place in an article upon the subject of the rights of the people. I yield to none, Mr. Chairman, in my profound respect for the Constitution of the United States, in my recognition of its power and in my allegiance to its requirements. But, sir, I cannot regard it as the charter of our liberties, as this article proposed to amend it.

MR. VAN DYKE. The Chairman of the Convention moved to amend by omitting that part; to have that stricken out.

THE PRESIDENT. The first question will be upon that amendment.

MR. HALL. I understand that the point before the committee is upon the proposition reading as follows: "We recognize the Constitution of the United States as the paramount law of the land." If that be the single proposition, Mr. Chairman, that is before the committee, I have but one objection to it, and that objection will be obviated by adopting the suggestion of Mr. McCallum, to substitute the word "supreme" for the word "paramount." If that be the single question before the committee, it seems to me that my remarks should be brought to a close, because I am prepared to accept it in that form, although I believe, sir, that even in that form it should not have a place in this declaration of rights. But I was about to add, Mr. Chairman, that whilst I regard the Constitution of the United States as our shield and as our sword, at one and the same time, whilst it guarantees to the States a republican form of government, and whilst it protects the States against foreign invasion and domestic insurrection, I am not prepared to subscribe to the doctrine that our liberties flow from that instrument as a charter. Why the very meaning of the word implies something different. We understand by the word "charter" a paper, a writing, an instrument in writing which conveys or restores certain rights or privileges; a deed or grant of power. Now, is the Constitution of the United States a grant of liberty? The Constitution of the United States is a guard to the people and to the States. All its powers have been derived from the States, represented by their delegates in Convention in seventeen hundred and eighty-seven, and it possesses no other powers than those expressly given or those necessarily required in order to carry them into effect. It imposes certain limitations upon the powers of the State, but we have not derived our liberties from that instrument. Our liberties were secured by the colonies. They were enunciated in that great instrument which was put forth to the world on the fourth of July, seventeen hundred and seventy-six, and if any paper is to be characterized as constituting the charter of our liberties, it seems to me that it ought to be the Declaration of Independence, promulgated on the fourth of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-six.

Why, sir, we are now engaged in the work of framing the charter of our liberties. We have before us the charter framed in eighteen hundred and forty-nine, by our predecessors, which is submitted to us by the people for revision. We are now engaged in the work of setting forth certain great rights with which the people have not parted; such as the right of trial by jury; such as the right to be tried by Grand Juries; the right to be brought publicly to confront the charges against us; the freedom of speech and of the press, and a number of other rights, Mr. Chairman, which it was thought in eighteen hundred and forty-nine, and it is thought in eighteen hundred and seventy-eight by this Convention, ought to be declared in this instrument in order that they may be the more certainly assured to us, because it is well known that the declarations of the Constitution of the United States operate merely as a limitation upon the powers of the Federal Union, and not upon the powers of the States, and hence the necessity of reëngrafting them in this portion of our Constitution under the title of "declaration of rights."

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the adoption of article three as it is now submitted in the report of this committee, but in the form in which it has been modified by the Chairman of the committee to whom this subject has been committed, it shall receive my assent, to wit, in these words: "We recognize the Constitution of the United States of America as the supreme law of the land."

MR. VAN DYKE. I have no objection to that.

MR. STEDMAN. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the article on preamble and bill of rights, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and a quorum present.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. O'DONNELL. I offer a substitute for that section three of the bill of rights. It reads thus: "We recognize the Constitution of the United States of America as the paramount law of the land. The doctrine asserted in the Declaration of Independence is sound in principle and——

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order. The first question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Chairman of the committee, to strike out the words "great charter of our liberties and the."

MR. HAGER. There are so many propositions and amendments in regard to this section that I do not know precisely the question now pending, but I believe it is a motion to strike out and insert. I am not in favor of retaining this section three; not because I do not recognize the Constitution of the United States to some extent as the paramount law of the land—to every extent, I may say, where it is the authority. But I do not recognize that it is the charter of our liberties entirely. Some people think that the Declaration of Independence is the charter of our liberties——

MR. VAN DYKE. The committee itself moves to strike that part out.

MR. HAGER. Still I have a right to speak upon it.

MR. VAN DYKE. You have a right, of course.

MR. HAGER. The next great charter, perhaps, was the Articles of Confederation, under which we existed for a certain time before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. Now I do not object to having a clause of this nature in here, as I said before, because I am in any way opposed to the Constitution of the United States, but we are here for the purpose of framing a Constitution for the government of this State. We are not here for the purpose of framing a Constitution of the United States, or to put any interpretation upon that Constitution. That is a matter that should be left to the Courts, and whatever power or whatever validity that Constitution may have is not for us in this Convention to determine, and whatever we may do in that regard would be nugatory and idle, because we have no authority to do it.

Now, then, let us see where we stand. Section two of article six of the Constitution of the United States has been read, but I will read it again: "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land."

Now what can we do to that by our, I had almost said, puny efforts here, in attempting to establish a rule in our Constitution which should in any way affect that provision. Is it not all powerful in itself?

Then further: "And the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

Is not that binding upon us all? What further do we wish? I am perfectly willing to incorporate that provision if anybody thinks it is necessary to the State of California. But it is in the Constitution of the United States, which I regard, so far as that provision is concerned, as binding upon me and binding upon every man in the State of California, whether we reiterate it here or not.

Well, now, another clause in the Constitution of the United States, which has been referred to:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Then the Constitution of the United States is not altogether the paramount law of the land, because certain rights are reserved to the States which have never been conceded to the Government of the United States. But it is the paramount law of the land so far as the provisions contained herein go, which have been ratified by the States in the proper way. Therefore, without going any farther into this debate, which has been prolonged too much, I am in favor of striking this provision out, for the reason that it is unnecessarily there, and will lead to nothing else but confusion in case we should attempt to engraft it there.

MR. McFARLAND. I understand that the question now before the committee is upon the motion of the gentleman from Alameda, to strike out that portion of section three which recognizes the Constitution of the United States as the great charter of our liberties.

THE CHAIRMAN. That is the question.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. President: I understand that the question now before the Convention is upon the motion of the gentleman from Alameda, to strike out that portion of section three which recognizes the Constitution of the United States as the great charter of our liberties.

THE PRESIDENT. That is the question.

MR. McFARLAND. I am somewhat astonished that the committee which reported this section should be willing to abandon their guns at the first sign of conflict. Now, sir, I am opposed to striking that out. The gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, and the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Hager, talk as if we were trying to put some construction upon the Constitution of the United States. I do not understand that the committee has reported any construction whatever. They simply take the naked instrument. If one set of gentlemen choose to construe it after the manner of Judge Marshall and Daniel Webster, they can do so. If another class of gentlemen desire to construe it after the manner of Calhoun, and Haines, they can do so. It is not proposed to put any construction on it whatever. It is proposed to say that the Constitution itself, without any construction, is the paramount law of this land and the charter of our liberty. Who objects to that? It is an astonishing thing to me how nervous some gentlemen get when it is proposed to recognize at all the Government of the United States. They are willing to recognize Almighty God, or anything else, but they want this Constitution, from the first word to the end, to say nothing about the Government of the United States. They do not want to recognize the fact—they do not want to teach their children to know the fact, that the people of California are but a small part of a greater and grander people—the people of the United States of America. I am perfectly at a loss to know what objection any gentleman can have to putting that in the Constitution. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Hager, says that it is unnecessary. Well, sir, if it is unnecessary, what else is there that is necessary in the bill of rights? The first section declares, "all men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; and preserving and obtaining safety and happiness." Is that necessary? Who denies the proposition involved there? But when you go to declare in any way that we owe any allegiance to the Government of the United States, I find gentlemen very nervous. What is the meaning of it? I supposed, sir, that this question as to whether the Government of the United States was paramount had been determined when the United States Constitution was voted for—when the people in their Conventions were considering the question whether it should be adopted.

And, sir, the principle of denying national power to the government of the United States in the Constitution had the ablest defenders this country ever saw. Luther Martin, in Maryland, and Patrick Henry, in Virginia, with a power of reason and eloquence rarely surpassed, advocated the doctrine that we should have no common country. And in Virginia it was only through the efforts of such men as Randolph and James Madison that it was carried at all; and then it would not have been carried, if it had not been for the overwhelming influence of the Father of our Country—George Washington—which was thrown into one side of the balance. When the Constitution was adopted, the doctrine of State rights was still contended for, and then they had the whole war over again in the Courts. But Virginia, among her other great men, happened to send one of her greatest into the Supreme Court of the United States, and he judicially destroyed the doctrine that we are not a nation. And then it came into the legislative arena, and it was fought there by the men who followed Daniel Webster, and the men who followed Calhoun and Haines, and it was defeated there. And then it came to a more serious struggle, to which I do not desire to refer, except to say that the principle that had been triumphantly advocated by reason, was triumphantly advocated by force. And yet to-day, in this State of California, at this hour, we find gentlemen nervous about recognizing the Constitution of the United States. I know, sir, that California is a peculiar State. I know that she has a population here not only from all parts of our common country, but from all parts of the world. I know she has representatives here—native born representatives—who never did believe in the sovereignty of the United States. And I know she has men here from foreign countries who are not yet rid of the opinions that come from birth. If gentlemen want to vote against the sovereignty of the United States, let them do it; but let them understand what they are doing.

The gentlemen object to the word "charter." They do not want it to be said here that the Constitution of the United States is the charter of our liberties, and they try to evade it by putting upon it the old construction used five hundred years ago in England. They say that a charter means a grant of the crown. That is not the original meaning of the word at all. It is simply a deed. The word comes from the word charta, which means paper. They speak of charters of various kinds as the grants of the crown; as if the English people took the magna charta, and the petition of right, and the writ of habeas corpus which are their great charter of liberty, as simply the gracious gifts of the crown. No, sir, magna charta was not a gift of King John. It was a thing taken by the Barons at Runymede, and it was the declaration of the rights of Englishmen. But when we speak of the Constitution of the United States as being the charter of American liberties, we mean that it is the great sheet in which the rights of the American people are declared, and upon which the foundation of our government is established. In that sense it is a charter, and it is the greatest charter that we have. It is a charter made by the people, of course. The very first line says, "We, the people of the United States." Are we afraid of the word "charter"? We merely say that the Constitution of the United States is the particular instrument which forms the paramount law for all time for the government organized under it, and under which alone we have any secure liberty. It looks to me like a very small objection to say that because the word charter is used that we mean a charter from the crown of England. It is a declaration by the American people, and by the whole American people. Now, sir, we have in this country to-day—I know that we have to-day in the State of California, any quantity of men of power and influence, who are not attached to the Government of the United States; who are in favor to-day, as they always have been, of a Pacific Republic. [Sensation.] I know that a few years ago, during the time of the civil war, there were men here who were enemies of the United States Government. And at the time of the late Presidential election there were numerous gentlemen in this State, who were sorry when the plan was adopted to settle that difficulty, hoping that the opportunity might occur during the agitation to establish a Pacific Republic on this coast. That is the sentiment of a large number of men in this State to-day. I fear it is the sentiment of some in this Convention, although I hope not.

Now, sir, if we believe we are a part of the American people—if we believe that the Constitution of the United States is paramount—why should we hesitate in declaring it in the instrument that forms our organic law? Gentlemen talk about sovereignty, and give different meanings to the term. This does not say a word about sovereignty. It is not named here. It simply says that the Constitution of the United States is the paramount law of the land and the charter of our liberties; says nothing about sovereignty. Gentlemen need not be afraid about sovereignty. When you come to talk about sovereignty, what is it? States have occasionally been called sovereign, simply because they have the power to make certain kinds of laws; and it is sometimes said that the sovereign alone is capable of making a law. That is not the whole definition. A sovereign power, under the law of nations, is a power which stands independent and equal with all other powers. It is a power that has the right to deal with other nations. It is a power that has the right to make war, to declare peace, to make treaties, to impose duties, and to do anything that other nations which are independent powers can do. And if you have not these attributes you have not the attributes of sovereignty. A State has no such power. There is no sovereignty, in the general sense of the term—no sovereignty recognized by nations and by the law of nations—except the sovereignty of the whole people of the United States, represented through the Government of the United States. That is the only kind of sovereignty, sir, which we can speak of that means sovereignty in anything like its full extent. I say that has been construed to be the meaning of the Constitution. If we say that the Constitution is the paramount law of the land, we do not mean to say that Congress has certain powers under that Constitution. We are not called upon to quarrel over what the powers of the government are. If this bill of rights undertook to say that Congress, or the President, or the government, under the Constitution of the United States, had certain powers, which gentlemen denied, then these questions might arise. It contains nothing of the kind. It simply says the Constitution of the United States is paramount. Who denies that? We do not undertake to say how far the powers go under the Constitution, but we simply recognize in the Constitution of our State that the Constitution of the United States is the paramount law of the land. That is all it does. Who objects to it? For my part, I can see no objection on the part of any person who believes that the State of California is a State of the United States; and that the State of California itself is subject to the Constitution and the laws of the United States; and that the State of California itself is simply a part and parcel of a greater and grander country—the United States of America. And the man that does that, I cannot understand how he can oppose this little bit of a declaration of that principle in this bill of rights, when he is in favor of declaring everything else that you can think of. I hope not only that the section will be adopted, but that the amendment will be defeated, and that we shall put the people of the State of California in the position of saying that we, as citizens of California, believe that we are a part of that nation—a part of that government—and are not afraid to declare it. [Applause.]

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: This matter being of more than usual importance, I feel that I would like to say a word about it. In the first place it seems to me that this section is entirely useless; that it signifies nothing more than is universally accepted. It has no more significance there than would a declaration that we recognize that Victoria is the sovereign of England. The fact will remain, whether this Convention acknowledges it as such or not, and the motives that gave rise to this should be understood in the discussion of its merits. The Workingmen's party of California were accused generally of being communists, and as a declaration of their loyalty they saw fit to incorporate in their State platform these words; and if you please, gentlemen of the Convention, notice the section of the Constitution, or the proposed section, while I read: "Resolved, first, that we recognize the Constitution of the United States of America as the great charter of our liberties and the paramount law of the land," verbatim from the State platform of the Workingmen's party of California.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it so happens that one of this body, feeling called upon, no doubt, to carry out the principles of the party, made a fight in the committee for the incorporation of that idea in this Constitution. As I understand it, though that was a general political stump declaration, or a declaration that might be made by any of us with consistency as an evidence of our loyalty, it is not contemplated by a majority of the members of that party on this floor to incorporate the doctrine in the Constitution so long as its significance is of no import. As I understand the declaration of rights, or at least declarations, under this head, they should declare some specific right that might be jeopardized if not mentioned. Here there is nothing declared or acknowledged but what is universally conceded, and unless it means something more than is at present understood, why should we waste time with it? "We recognize the Constitution of the United States of America as the supreme law of the land." There might be a serious question come in there as regards the sovereign power of the people, so elaborately boasted of here. My friend who has just sat down seems to want to dodge behind it and asks "who is talking about sovereignty?"

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are here incorporating in our State Constitution the Constitution of the Federal Union. We are making the Constitution of the United States a part and parcel of the Constitution of California, and it is said, "where is the objection?" I answer, sir that there are certain limitations in the Federal Constitution; certain provisions which are understood to apply directly to Federal enactments and Federal Courts. For instance, take the Grand Jury bill. I believe that the best lawyers in the State, and in the United States, have conceded that the States have a right to act on that matter as in their judgment they may see fit; and yet the Constitution of the United States emphatically declares that no man shall be arraigned for trial except upon previous conviction by a Grand Jury. We propose to declare that the Grand Jury system shall be abolished. I am emphatically in favor of strking the whole thing out.

MR. BARBOUR. I propose to support the motion to strike out, and I do so for the reason that I have never been able to find what office in the Constitution of this State the declaration in section three will perform. It is not that the principle is not a correct principle, but it is because we have nothing to do in laying the foundation of the government of this State, with declaring what the powers of the Federal Government are. Now, sir, the Constitution of the United States, of course, is the paramount law of the land within its sphere, wherever it has sway. No man can dispute the proposition. But suppose you declare it in this Constitution. Where are we? What power are we? Do we strengthen our position, or do we strengthen the position of the Federal Government? Why, that declaration will be construed into the doctrine of centralization. Our purpose and duty is to lay down and declare the power of this State, and not the power of the Federal Government. I offered a proposition this morning to that effect, in which I maintain there is abundant recognition of the power of the Federal Government, where we assert the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence with regard to the right of the people to change, to alter, or abolish the form of government. I there provided that it should not conflict with the Constitution of the United States. That instrument guarantees to every State a republican form of government. Do we strengthen that any by declaring it in the Constitution? Not at all, sir. But I recognize it there, and I maintain that any change we make, except perhaps, by revolution, must be a change in consonance with the principles of republican government.

Now, this question has been debated long before we were born. In one sense it led to the war. Involved in it, sir, was the question of slavery. I believe that the principles and doctrines that were asserted by Calhoun were correct, and would have been maintained by the people of the United States if the element of slavery had been out of the consideration. The sentiment of the country was against that which was involved in the proposition, and not against the proposition itself; and that was the reason it failed. That was the reason that the stern arbitrament of the sword pronounced judgment against it. But the principle still lives, and I say we ought to declare it here—as John C. Calhoun declared the doctrine of the sovereignty of the States—not for the purpose of preserving slavery, but for the purpose of destroying a slavery as bad as that of the South. That is what we want to do, sir, and yet gentlemen voted my proposition down, which was the business we came here to perform, and that is, to declare the rights of the State, not attempt to dilute the power of the Federal Government by our thin water poured into it.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I want the attention of the Chair and the house one moment upon this subject. I do not like to trespass upon your patience. I think, however, that upon this proposition, we ought to regard the original principles of government, and the antagonisms of government of the present day are certainly these: First—That the crowned heads of Europe claim to rule by divine right, and that the power of the government is in the crown. The people of the States hold the doctrine that all the powers of the government are inherent in the people. The position occupied by the Government of the United States is between these—is that of a middle position—deriving its powers in a secondary manner, being a concession from the States. That brings us to the point in which all the reserve powers of the kingdoms of Europe reside in the crown; all the powers of the government in the States reside in the people. The United States has no reserve powers. The grants which the States have made to the General Government have been made; they have been construed and are established facts. We are bound by the Government of the United States to the rules which we have conceded to them, be those rules whatever they may be. A declaration upon our part now neither can contract or enlarge them. I am in favor of the motion of Judge Rolfe, of San Bernardino, to strike the clause out. I say, however, that I do not believe in the doctrine that the Constitution of the United States is the great charter of our liberties. That starts at the wrong end of the proposition. The powers of the Government of the United States are derived from the people through the government of the States, and wherever there is a reserved power it is with the people and not with the United States.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of striking this out because we are here to frame a Constitution that every word, every syllable, in fact every punctuation mark, will have vitality. By incorporating this in our Constitution, sir, we shall not make it any more binding than it is. I do not believe there is a man in the United States to-day but recognizes the Constitution of the United States not only as the paramount law but the great groundwork of our liberty, but I deny, sir, that the Constitution of the United States is the great charter of our liberty. I believe the great charter of our liberty, sir, is the blood that was spilt and sanctified the soil before ever the Constitution was framed

Now, sir, I happened to be the Secretary of the State Convention of the Workingmen's party when this plank, or resolution as it was then, was adopted. It was simply put in there, or adopted, because there was not a paper in the country scarcely, but called us communists and thieves, cutthroats, and houseless and homeless vagabonds, and in order to persuade the people that we were nothing of the kind we put this in. Now, sir, I am sorry to see gentlemen get up on this floor and flaunt the bloody shirt in the face of a motion if it declares the least particle of States rights. I have before me a copy of the Constitution of the State of New Hampshire, and I believe that it can never be placed in the category of seceding States. It reads, verbatim, as follows:

"The people of this State have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves as a free, sovereign, and independent State, and do, and forever hereafter shall, exercise and enjoy every power, jurisdiction, and right pertaining thereto, which is not or may not hereafter be by them expressly delegated to the United States of America in Congress assembled."

Now, sir, it seems to me that government was instituted by the people for the protection of the people, and if it had not been for the several States of the Union we would have no Federal Government. Hence I hold that the Federal Government derives its power from the States, because if we had no States we would have a centralized government, and we are opposed to any centralized form of government whatever. Section two of article six of the Constitution of the United States reads as follows:

"This Constitution, and all the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land."

Now, sir, Congress, in Washington, on the first day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, passed an Act whereby a land grant to the Central Pacific railways was declared. A bond subsidy of thirty million dollars of the government's first mortgage bonds on the road was exchanged with the companies for a second mortgage. This Act was passed in the House of Representatives by a vote of acclamation without calling the ayes and noes, and nobody knows to this day who voted for or against it. The responsibility cannot be attached to whom it belongs, yet by that vote the government was involved in bonds and interest to the extent of more than two hundred million dollars. It is a mild expression to call this sort of legislation infamous. It is worse than grand larceny or highway robbery, for it involves the crimes of perjury and bribery. Now, sir, if we are bound by such legislation from Congress, what in the name of God is our great country going to come to?

Now Congress is looking placidly on the State of California; she is looking on us driven to despair and disruption by making this a receptacle for the slums of China. Again, sir, when men get up on this floor and accuse men of being secessionists, I would call their attention to the fact that we are not here to open up the gaps and wounds that were caused by the great rebellion. We are here to close them and to heal them, and to drown them in the abyss of oblivion, never to rise again.

Again, sir, there was some allusion made to the Workingmen's party to-day as being truly great and patriotic. Well, I will concede that their patriotism is boundless, but I will also state that the Workingmen's party was never intended to be a step-ladder or a stepping-stone to raise men into prominence and power. Our intentions are to place every man on the same political plane; to administer a good and equitable form of government; good for the general welfare and prosperity of the people.

MR. VAN DYKE. I hope that the Convention will vote on the amendment, and bring it down to the question itself.

THE CHAIRMAN. The third section is under consideration. The gentleman from Los Angeles, Gen. Howard, moves to amend that section by striking out all of its words and inserting some other words. The gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe, moves to amend by striking out the words proposed to be inserted. In that state of the question, the Chairman of the committee desires to perfect the section. He therefore moves to strike out these words, "great charter of our liberties and the."

MR. WHITE. I trust it will not be stricken out, sir, for this reason: that I am anxious to pay the greatest government a compliment by the acts of the Convention assembled here. I am anxious that our children should know that we have paid this compliment. I say that when we say it is the charter of our liberties, I want to raise in their hearts respect for it, and that they may never flinch from it under any circumstances whatever. I conceive this to be one of our greatest duties as assembled here. We are told that this is a very little body that is assembled here. Here, sir, are assembled the people of the State of California. They may never be assembled again for twenty years, and I want them to compliment the mighty government, this great temple of liberty that has opened its arms to the world and received them here in their hospitable hearts. I want them not to pass by this great government. I am astonished to see men propose to pass by this great government and we assembled here as the whole people of California.

We are told that this plank was put in the platform of the Workingmen's party for claptrap—to set us right before the people. Sir, I was one of those men who drew that platform, and I am proud of it. There was not one single article in that platform that brought down the house and received such cheers in that convention as that did. Communists as they are, and looked down upon and despised for going to that convention, yet, sir, that whole convention responded like one man when that article was announced. I do not say that gentlemen may not change their views, and they have a right to vote as they like about it, but I do not want that party to be put into a wrong position. I know their feelings, and I know that that was the feeling with which that article was received. I hope it will be passed, particularly because it has been a disputed question upon this floor.

MR. RINGGOLD. In attempting to address this assemblage I would not presume to assume the character of an instructor. But, sir, not all the intellect of the world combined, nor the ingenious construction of language, ever made wrong right. I desire that the people of California should know that I comprised the minority in that committee that produced this extraordinary section. It does not draw any line between powers conferred and powers reserved. The doctrine of State sovereignty might as well be announced here as anywhere else. We are building too much upon precedents. If all these documents were returned, perhaps the people might get into this Convention a political structure that would be in accordance with the spirit of the age. The Declaration of Independence declares that government derives its power from the consent of the governed. The Constitution of the United States denies it. The Declaration of Independence is a political expression. The Constitution of the United States is a political abortion. It exacts taxation from millions of citizens, yet deprives them of the right of representation. It has ever been construed in the interest of capital. I do not misrepresent my constituents when I claim that liberty, protected by the Constitution and the enforcement of its provisions, shall be reserved, or we will have a constitutional death. Talk not of allegiance to Constitutions whilst the very heavens reverberate with the wail of suffering humanity. The Constitution of the United States has been violated in the interest of capital in every section and article. It has outlived its usefulness. So long as the South shook the Constitution in the face of the North slavery was protected, but when the Constitution was swept aside then were four million human souls set free. If to preserve the Constitution liberty must be suppressed, then abolish the Constitution. I cannot indorse this section, for it strikes at all State sovereignty. I believe in State sovereignty, and shall ever stand by it as long as I live.

MR. VAN DYKE. Some gentleman has suggested the use of the word "supreme" in the place of "paramount." I would like to modify my amendment so as to include the word "supreme" instead of "paramount."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question will then be on the motion to strike out the words "great charter of our liberties and the," and insert the word "supreme" in place of the word "paramount."

The amendment was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe, to strike out of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles the words he propoées in place of the section. The result of that motion, if carried, will be to strike out this article three.

MR. HOWARD. For the purpose of bringing the committee to a direct vote, I will withdraw my amendment.

MR. ROLFE. I ask that my motion be put.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon striking out the entire section.

MR. O'DONNELL. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Bernardino to strike out section three.

The amendment was adopted on a standing vote: ayes, 73; noes, 64.

MR. ESTEE. I offer a substitute for the section that was just stricken out; it is copied from the Constitutions of several of the States.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. That this State shall ever remain a member of the American Union; that the people thereof are a part of the American nation; that there is no right on the part of this State to secede, and that all attempts, from whatever source or upon whatever pretext, to dissolve said Union, or sever said nation, shall be resisted by the whole power of the State.

MR. LARKIN. I move the adoption of the section.

MR. FILCHER. I move that the consideration of the whole subject be indefinitely postponed.

THE CHAIRMAN. No such motion as that can be put to the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was adopted on a standing vote: ayes, 76; noes, 58.

THE SECRETARY read section four, as follows:

SEC. 4. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State; and no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or juror on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this State.

MR. VACQUEREL. I move to strike out of line two the words "without discrimination or preference," and insert in the seventh line, after the word "State," the following: "And the Legislatnre shall not, under any consideration, enact any law giving preference to any religious sect or mode of worship," so that the section will read:

SEC. 3. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship shall forever be allowed in this State; and no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or juror on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this State; and the Legislature shall not, under any consideration, enact any law giving preference to any religious sect or mode of worship.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I offer the following substitute. I do not care to make any argument upon it now:

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 4. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious opinions and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be guaranteed in this State. And no person shall be rendered incompetent, in any manner, nor shall any person be questioned, or forced to answer any questions, concerning or on account of opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be construed so as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this State. No law shall ever be enacted by the Legislature making it unlawful to do on any day that which may be lawful on any other day."

MR. VACQUEREL. My idea in offering that amendment is, to have it well understood that the Legislature should have nothing to do with the liberty of conscience of the people. Ten years ago I remember that a law was passed, and in some cases was enforced, but was declared unconstitutional. If we have that article, it is perfectly understood by the people that the people themselves, alone, and nobody else, have the right to change that article of the Constitution.

Mr. Vacquerel's amendment was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I shall support the substitute offered by my colleague, Mr. Beerstecher, for this reason: the word "allowed," in the second line of section four of the declaration of rights, as read to the committee, clearly implies the right to disallow or deny; in other words, instead of being an inherent right, it implies a privilege granted by somebody. Now, sir, any such assumption, by implication or otherwise, is, or should be, repugnant to every man. The word "guaranteed" is better, because it clearly implies an acknowledgment or guarantee of rights, and not the granting of them.

The substitute was lost.

MR. BARBOUR. I move to amend by striking out the words, "and no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or juror on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief," and insert, "and no person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege, or capacity on account of his religious opinions." I can briefly state the object of my amendment. The section as it stands provides that no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or juror on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief, and under the rule that the expression of the one is the exclusion of the other it might be construed that they could exclude people from holding office. My amendment is intended to extend to all political and civil rights.

MR. WILSON, of First District. In my judgment, if the amendment prevails the Legislature may render witnesses and jurors incompetent on account of religious belief. It might be a very serious question whether to sit on a jury is a privilege or not. Many men do not consider it a privilege. It might also be a question as to whether it is a privilege to be a witness.

MR. BARBOUR. The gentleman omits the word "capacity." The amendment says, "any civil or political right, privilege, or capacity."

MR. WILSON, of First District. I think it renders it very doubtful whether the Legislature may not exclude persons on account of religious belief.

MR. VAN DYKE. I suggest that when we come to the qualification of officers it would be a more proper place to put that clause. It seems to me to be unnecessary here.

The amendment was lost.

MR. HAGER. I offer the following substitute:

"All men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience. No man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry, against his consent. No human authority can in any case whatever control or interfere with the rights of conscience. No preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishment or mode of worship, and no person shall be incompetent to be a witness, or a juror, on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief."

I offer this as a substitute. It is taken substantially from the last Constitution of the State of Pennsylvania. I think its phraseology has an advantage over that contained in our Constitution, and which has been reported back by the committee. It would apply to all those cases, like the Mormons, who are compelled to perform religious worship according to a particular code.

MR. MCFARLAND. I object to the term "worship Almighty God." We know that some of the highest civilized nations worshiped a god that was not Almighty. The Greeks and Romans did not believe in any one Almighty deity. They worshiped Jupiter, Neptune, Mars, Venus; [laughter] and it might raise a very nice question.

MR. HAGER. As the gentleman appears to be an authority on the question I move to strike out "Almighty."

MR. MCFARLAND. I accept the amendment. [Laughter.]

The substitute was lost.

MR. HERRINGTON. I move to amend section four of the bill of rights by striking out the word "juror" in line three, and insert "to hold office or discharge any public trust or duty." The amendment covers the whole objection made by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. It also has the merit of completing what in my opinion was intended by this same section. That is to say, under that section the Legislature cannot prevent any one from holding office or discharging any trust or duty on account of religious belief.

The amendment was lost.

Section five was then read, as follows:

SEC. 5. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require its suspension.

There being no amendment, section six was read, as follows:

SEC. 6. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or the presumption great. Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed; nor shall cruel or unusual punishment be inflicted; nor shall witnesses be unreasonably detained, or confined in any jail or room where criminals are usually imprisoned.

MR. CAMPBELL. I offer the following: Amend section six by striking out all after "inflicted" and insert the following: "But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the infliction of corporal punishment for crimes; witnesses shall not be unreasonably detained, or confined in any jail or room where criminals are usually imprisoned."

I will state briefly the reason of offering that amendment. Three or four years ago the State of California passed an Act providing for the infliction of the punishment of whipping upon men who beat their wives, and allowing the Courts in their discretion to substitute for or add that to imprisonment. One of the District Judges of this State decided the law to be unconstitutional, and discharged a party brought before him on habeas corpus upon the ground that the Act conflicted with the provision in the Constitution which forbid the infliction of cruel or unusual punishment. While I think that the Judge erred, and while I think that as a position of law it is perfectly clear that the punishment which existed at common law, and which to this day exists in one or two of the States of the Union, could not be so classed, I want to prevent the possible defeat of any enactment which the Legislature may hereafter pass upon this subject, and for that reason I have offered this amendment. We have found that our system of punishments in this State is grossly defective. We find to-day in the City of San Francisco that life is unsafe frequently. We find that houses are broken open by burglars armed to the teeth, and willing and ready to take human life when they cannot otherwise accomplish their purposes, and it is the judgment of the community generally, as I think, that we require some severer system of discipline.

In England the punishment of whipping was abolished. Within the last three or four years they have found it necessary, from the great increase of crimes of the character to which I allude, to reënact the law authorizing that punishment in all that class of cases; such as garroters, highway robbers, and midnight burglars; and the Legislature ought to have the power here. It has worked admirably in England. It has stopped crime of that description to an enormous extent there, and experience, the best teacher, has proven that it is the only means to put any substantial stop to that kind of crime.

I saw by the paper this morning, that on last night, in one of the most public streets of San Francisco, in the very heart of the city, a man was attacked by a gang of these people and actually kicked and beaten to death—there on Sansome Street, in the very heart of the City of San Francisco. Now, sir, we have here the worst system of prison discipline in the world, and one which will encourage crime and bring criminals among us in enormous numbers. If you go to-day to your State Prison, as you enter the door or gates, what do you see? Is there anything suggestive of imprisonment within your sight? At the very entrance you are received by a gentlemanly looking "trusty," who will probably offer you a cigar. And then you pass out into a beautiful flower garden where you are greeted with the odor of flowers, where you find the finest buildings, where the music of canary birds delights your ear, and where, so far from judging it was a prison, you would think you were entering a palace. You find that out of some fifteen hundred and odd prisoners there, but about five hundred of them have any employment at all. The rest are engaged in amusing themselves as best they may. A large portion of the men who are now in our State Prison are better off there than out of it. They are deprived, it is true, of certain dissipations which they were apt to indulge in outside, but they are supported in idleness at the public expense. For them the punishment which they receive has no terrors. As soon as their terms expire, they immediately resume a career of crime, and within a few weeks are in the hands of the officers again for a repetition of their offenses.

This system must be changed if we desire law and order to rule in California. Let us profit by the experience of the past, and give the Legislature the power which it ought to have to inflict a punishment which will bring terror to the hearts of criminals. Take the men who are now in the State Prison, and, with the exception of those who have not been accustomed to a life of crime, they care nothing for the punishment. To some who have committed crimes and been sent there, and who still feel that they are men, and who still feel their sense of duty to society, and who feel ashamed of their position—I say that that class of men is the one which suffers real punishment by confinement in the State Prison.

This thing has been tried in England, and there it has put a stop to that system of highway robbery and garroting which had appeared there. The object of this amendment is simply to enable the Legislature, in its discretion, to provide a similar punishment for that class of criminals. I have not that kind of sympathy which would say to me, "It won't do to degrade a man; you must let him go on and commit robbery; you must let him knock a man down in the street with a sand-club for the sake of getting fifty cents out of his pocket; and if you inflict upon him a flogging, that is degradation." The duty of society is to use such punishments as will secure the safety of honest and respectable men; as will enable you to go home at night without the fear of being knocked down by a sand-club or some instrument of that description. For these reasons, I offer this amendment, and hope that it will be adopted, and that it will be one step, at least, towards enabling the Legislature to pass laws that will stop this class of crimes.

MR. GREGG. Approving everything, the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, has said, I offer the following substitute:

"SEC. 6. Excessive bail shall not be required nor excessive fines imposed; nor shall cruel and unusual punishments be inflicted; but whipping shall not be deemed cruel or unusual as a punishment; nor shall witnesses be unnecessarily detained, or confined where criminals are imprisoned."

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: The fact that this business of whipping was known to the common law, I am sure is no reason to assign why we should revive it; I am sure that we do not wish to revive all the cruel punishments known to the common law because crimes are committed and go unpunished in certain communities. I do not think that is any reason why this whole State should be disgraced with the sound of the lash. I never want to hear the crack of the whip in America upon any man. I never want to see the lash descend upon any man's shoulders, I care not what his crime may be. If you commence whipping, why then you run directly against the theory that punishments are to be reformatory and not vindictive. If they are to become vindictive, why I should say that the amendment offered here by Judge Campbell does not go far enough, for if you once allow the lash to descend upon a man, his manhood is dead, and when that is dead there is no chance for reform. I would say confine it to the gentleman's clients and I have no objection, but do not make it general in this free State. That it is cruel has been announced from the highest Court in the land. That it is cruel is the common verdict of all mankind, and it is too late in the history of civilization to renew any of those old and barbarous punishments. Whip a man in America! For my part I could not tolerate the bare idea of doing such a thing, much less to enact it, or place it as a black mark upon the Constitution of this State. Perhaps the gentleman has seen and known of a long list of crimes which have gone unpunished. It is not improbable that a great many of the crimes mentioned have gone unpunished in the City of San Francisco, and if the gentlemen are so desirous to prevent the evil, perhaps there is another way that that thing can be accomplished without the use of the lash.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, presents to this Convention a very important question; a vital question; a question that we cannot give more attention than is due to it. That question is no more nor no less than this: Is our Penal Code effective? Does it accomplish the end for which penal codes are enacted? That is the question. I appeal to every gentleman on this floor. I appeal to the legal gentlemen in particular, to answer that question and say if our penal laws are effective for the prevention of crime and the protection of society. I assert that it is not. It is not, Mr. Chairman. Hence the necessity, the absolute and vital necessity that the chains should be removed from the law-making power in order that society may be protected from crime; and I demand that the shackles be taken off, and that society have the right to defend itself.

Mr. Chairman, the laws of all civilized countries concede to the individual the right to take life. That is, to take life in self-defense. Would you deny to the body corporate, the body politic, the right to take life? To adopt this or that mode of defending itself? I deny that there is any right to deprive society of the right of self-defense when that right is freely conceded to the private individual.

Now, in regard to this provision of the Constitution that is proposed to be obviated by Judge Campbell's amendment. I hold that under the operation or under a strict construction of that provision of the Constitution—"nor shall cruel or unusual punishment be inflicted"—I hold that no man can be hanged, because who will assert that to take a man and drag him up and let him choke to death is not cruel? We all know that it is cruel. There can be nothing more cruel conceived by the mind of man. It is torture the most horrible. And yet it is done. But it is done under a strained construction of that provision; and that is what Judge Campbell proposes to obviate.

I demand, Mr. Chairman, in the name of honesty, in the name of virtue, in the name of everything that is sacred, that the law-making power of the commonwealth of California be unshackled and left in a position to defend society against crime.

MR. KLEINE. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any reason why we should go back to the dark ages, inflicting corporation punishment upon those who have committed a crime. [Laughter.] Let us first remove the cause. Here in the State of California we have at least four thousand white men out of employment. Is it a wonder we have crime committed? Is it a wonder, when the coolie can come every time and crowd our white fellow citizens out of employment? Is it a wonder we have crime? We may inflict corporal punishment upon criminals, but I assure you that it will not lessen crime at all. In San Francisco, as the gentleman says, some one got knocked down. Is it a wonder that instead of one that fifty or a hundred are not knocked down every day? Look at the fearful state of things in the City of San Francisco. It is almost impossible that a man can get employment. I hope that this will not pass. I have not the least doubt that the gentlemen upon this floor will not vote for such a bill as this; to go back to the dark ages. Let us remove the cause, gentlemen, and then we won't have so many crimes committed in our midst.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: This extraordinary proposition which is thrown in here is also supported by an extraordinary reason. It seems to be based upon the ground of the failure of the administration of justice; and the facts stated by the gentleman from Alameda, that when he goes on his professional visit to San Quentin that he lights upon a territory of flowers, and is presented by a "trusty" with a cigar, is reason for restoring to this world instruments of barbarism in this day and in this age. Why not propose something here to reform that administration of justice, and place all criminals on the same footing? That is what gentlemen want to do, place the petty thief and petty hoodlum upon the same footing. I speak but as an individual, my own feelings. Should the lash be laid upon my shoulders by any man it would be the purpose of my life to hunt out and retaliate upon that man the injury he had done me. If you want this extraordinary method resurrected, why not take it all? Why not go back and enact the old blue laws at once, the stocks and the pillory? Why not stick the mark of disgrace in the middle of the forehead at once? That will accomplish it. It is true that it is barbarous. If gentlemen desire to be consistent, they ought to adopt them all, or propose to incorporate them all.

MR. O'DONNELL. I am opposed to corporal punishment, because I have seen the effects of it. I had occasion to go to San Quentin to examine two young men; one was flogged to death, and the other was in a dying condition. I called upon the official there, who said that it was impossible for me to see him at that time. Finally I insisted, and told him I came there for that purpose, and intended to see the boys. I went in one room where one of the boys had been flogged to death—he had died the night previous. In the other room I found the other man, about nineteen years of age, who never was in a State Prison before. He was used as a "trusty," and was sent out to attend the brick kiln. It appears that the watchman of the brick kiln had gone to sleep, and he sloped off. He finally was arrested seven days afterwards, brought back to San Quentin, and with a rawhide five feet long, with the end cut off, the thickness of my little finger, he got one hundred lashes across his bare back. The effect was that it produced pus, and the consequence was, from the effect of the wound, that pyæmia set in and he died.

That is the reason I am opposed to corporal punishment, because they do not know how far to go. I was told by the officer at San Quentin, himself, that he would not perform this duty, but he was compelled by the Lieutenant-Governor to administer from fifty to one hundred lashes for the simplest crimes. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is one reason why I object to this corporal punishment, and I hope that there will be no delegate in this Convention that will lose his manhood to vote for such a section in the Constitution.

Mr. STEDMAN. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, will be adopted. I understand that this provision for corporal punishment only contemplates the punishment of the man—in name—who has whipped his wife. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that the man who would raise his hand to strike a woman, whether she be his wife or not, should be tied to the whipping post and receive corporal punishment; should receive at the hands of a strong man lashes upon his bare body. I care not whether it be on his back or where. [Laughter.] I do not believe that this would be carrying us back to the dark ages. I believe that we could adopt it in this nineteenth century, and it would be considered by the people as a reform. I think it is a reform that is sadly needed, and I shall cast my vote for the amendment.

Mr. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I cannot for a moment entertain the thought that an amendment of this kind can be adopted by this Convention. Why, sir, it is not to open the door, as suggested by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman, so that a man who whips his wife can be tied up to the whipping-post, but it opens the door to the whole of that principle. It opens the door for all of those barbarous punishments that have gone with those other terrible things of the dark ages. Is it possible that we are to turn back the hand upon the dial, and take the State of California back to the times of Salem witchcraft; back to the time when in England they hung a man for poaching; when horse stealing was a capital offense?

We are told by the gentleman who introduced this amendment that the prison system of punishment is not effective. Is it the fault of the law, I ask? Is it the fault of the Judges that the punishment that is determined upon by the statutes is not carried out? It is claimed here that if we have the right to take life we have the right to do this. Mr. Chairman, I deny our right to do any such thing, and base it upon the grand eternal principle of right. If we are to mould our Constitution upon precedents, where are we to stop? Although I know I am not able to make an argument such as ought to be made upon this question—although my language cannot do it justice—I cannot sit still and see a gentleman taking that position without raising my voice against it. We shall regret it, gentleman, if this amendment should be adopted.

My position is this: if our State Prison is not effective, why we should take hold of the State Prison discipline and reform it. If our laws are not carried out, we should see to it that they are. If the law is not properly administered, we should not put into it other and barbarous punishments, more than we have now, but we should see to it that those that are provided are carried out whenever a criminal is brought to justice. Is that true to-day? If we had a system under which they were sure of punishment—if we had a system under which crime was sure to meet with its reward—we would not have the trouble that we have to-day. But the fact is, that criminals, instead of being punished, too often escape. There is in many cases a reprieve, and other opportunities to shirk the responsibility of the crimes they have committed.

There is another point. It is stated here that we have a right to take life under the law, and it is admitted on all hands that it is a cruel punishment. I want to ask the gentleman if it deters from the crime of murder. Does the fact that we have the right, and that that law is carried out in many instances, deter people from committing that crime of murder? Not at all. The reason is not in the law, but because there is something in the passion of man that carries him beyond all law, and beyond all fear of punishment. Now, sir, it seems to me that we are at work at the wrong end of this business. We are attempting after the tree is grown, after the branches have spread themselves, and the fruit, pernicious as it is, begins to fall, we are turning our efforts to the boughs and branches, and leaving the root of the matter untouched. Gentlemen, if we would take a step forward in this direction, we must go to the root of this matter and educate. We are bringing up our boys and our girls for "hoodlums," simply because our system of education is wrong from the beginning. There are no opportunities for young men and young women; there are no incentives; there are no inducements; and it is growing worse and worse, and that is the reason why this tree of crime is growing and overshadowing us. And now gentlemen propose by the lash to take off the branches and boughs, and leave the trunk and the root as vigorous as ever. I cannot believe that this Convention will adopt this amendment. I cannot believe that we are ready to take that stand before the intelligent men and women of this State. I certainly must vote against it.

Mr. FAWCETT. Mr. Chairman: I think it has been correctly stated that this is one of the gravest and most serious question, that has been or will be presented in this Convention. I think it is apparent to all thinking men that there is something radically wrong in the administration of criminal justice in the State of California, and if there is anything which this Convention can do—it cannot do much—but if there be anything in its power, anything which it can do to correct the existing faults, the Convention ought to take that action.

It appears, sir, from reading the criminal records of this State, that at present there are about one thousand five hundred felons confined in the State Prison of this State. Our population will reach a total of about nine hundred thousand. By comparing the criminal population here with that in other States—take, for example, the State of Ohio—we find that our criminal population, our felons, are about as three to one. That is to say, the State Prison of this State contains to-day, in proportion to the total population of the State of California, about three times as many criminals as the State Prison of the State of Ohio. The State Prison of that State contains about the same number as San Quentin, but the State contains within her borders a population of nearly three million of inhabitants. By further examining the records here, we find that crime has been increasing rapidly, and that out of all proportion with the increase, the natural increase in the population of the State. At a time when we had about six hundred thousand people in this State the criminal population at San Quentin numbered about nine hundred. Now, with a population of fifty per cent. greater—an increase in the population of fifty per cent.—we have an increase of the criminal population, of felons confined at San Quentin, of about sixty-six or seventy per cent., and that percentage, sir, is rapidly increasing, out of all proportion, out of all ratio with the increase of population in this State. This fact alone, sir, shows that there is radical wrong in the administration of criminal justice in this State, and it is time, sir, that the remedy was applied. It is time that something had been discovered to stop the tide of crime, and to correct the evil from which we are suffering to-day.

Why, sir, it has been correctly said that under the prison system that has been adopted in this State, the criminals confined at San Quentin are better housed there than they ever were anywhere else in the whole course of their lives. Better fed, better clothed, better treated, half of them, than they ever were elsewhere in the whole natural course of their lives. And the result of that has been that nearly one half of the criminals in San Quentin to-day are there undergoing their second and third, and, in some cases, fourth terms of imprisonment in that prison. If the object of punishment is reformation, then the system totally fails to accomplish the object. If the object of punishment is to deter men from committing crime, that also has failed, because the system we have here to-day is not good in that particular at all.

Now, sir, I am not one of that school of sentimentalists who believe that there is anything specially degrading in the infliction of corporal punishment. I believe, sir, that the time when the criminal is degraded is when he commits the crime; and having become so degraded as to commit crime once, twice, or thrice, repeatedly—as often as he may possess the ability—he is none too degraded to feel upon the back the lash. There are certain States in this Union in which that kind of punishment has always been inflicted. One occurs to me at this moment, and that is the State of Delaware. That sort of punishment has been inflicted in that State always, upon all classes of criminals. The statistics there show that it is a very unusual thing for the same criminal to be punished in that State a second time. They have a system there, gentlemen, which, if not reformatory, is at least preventive of crime. Their statistics show that where a criminal is apprehended and convicted there, and subjected to the punishment of the lash, and he is enlarged again upon society, that if he sees fit to raise his hands against society again, he betakes himself to some other State, where the whipping-post does not exist. He finds crime unprofitable in Delaware—he finds it unproductive. His back, I apprehend, feels a lively recollection of certain tingles, which cause his nature to be satisfied. That is the result of that kind of punishment in Delaware. Virginia and Kentucky also have this punishment. There is too much sentimentalism spent upon the criminal. There is a school existing which looks upon the criminal as a ward to be tenderly nurtured. Another school looks upon crime as a disease—to be treated as a disease; to be cured as a disease. Why, sir, I do not believe in regarding or treating the incendiary, the robber, the murderer, and the ravisher in that style at all. I think there is a large class of people in this world—the criminal class—who are lost to all moral sense, and who stop at no crime; whose backs were made to be lashed, and there is nothing degrading in that sort of punishment to that class of people. The degradation began farther back, when the crime began to be committed.

The gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, speaks in this Convention of capital punishment and asks the Convention the question, does hanging, which is denominated by some as cruel, prevent murder? I answer him in the affirmative, and I have only to cite him to the recent case in the State of Iowa, where four years ago, under the pressure of long-haired sentimentalists, capital punishment was abolished, and I tell you that at once throughout the length and breadth of that State there was a carnival of crime. Within less than a year the effect was marked. Murder succeeded murder until it became so in that State that lynch law, which had never before prospered there, became to be the rule all over the State upon the slightest provocation. The people felt obliged to take the law into their own hands and to execute summary justice. The effect was demoralizing. They went so far as to break the doors of a prison and to take hence a murderer who had been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for life and hang him. The Legislature became alarmed, and last winter they passed a law returning to the old system of executing persons who were convicted of murder in the first degree. So I say that experience in that State has been to the effect that hanging does prevent murder, and I am equally clear that experience would be to the effect that if the punishment of the whipping-post was inflicted crime would be bridled.

Now, it has been decided in this State that the punishment of whipping is cruel and unusual. I do not think the decision legally sound, because that language was used in Constitutions all over the Union at the time when the whipping-post flourished, and therefore the judicial construction that has been given to that section is probably wrong, but still it has been so construed, and probably will be so construed again, and I propose to vote on this question to have all doubt removed, and making it so plain that there can be no misconstruction.

I believe in treating criminals to personal pain and chastisement, as a means of suppressing crime. I believe that there are criminals who cannot be treated in any other way, and that the effect of a change in the laws would be instantaneous as applied to some classes of criminals; as it has been in England, where whipping has been introduced for garroting, and where it resulted in breaking up that crime substantially. The effect would be instantaneous here, and some change is needed. The Legislature should be, in the language of my friend from Sacramento—should be left at liberty to provide such a system as experience may show is needed, or is proper to be provided; should be left free to provide such punishment as it sees fit. With that view, I shall vote for this amendment.

MR. LARKIN. I regret to hear a Judge that has a right to sit upon the bench in this State express the views that he does upon this occasion. I regret that any man occupying the position of Judge of the one of the highest Courts should not have one particle of the milk of human kindness in his veins; whose sternness would crush the poor criminal, and give him the whip, and disgrace him forever. I regret that such men as this are sitting upon the bench of this State. It is unfortunate. And why? In the history of this States we find that the greater criminals—this kind who rob the people, who have robbed the State and the United States—have gone free through the connivance of Courts. They have escaped. And yet a Judge rises here and recommends the lash if a petty offense is committed. I say it is a pity that these men do not find some means to protect the people against these men who rob the people.

MR. FAWCETT. I would like to whip them, too.

MR. LARKIN. Why don't you say so? My friend from Sacramento would like to imprison a man in the penitentiary for stealing a small lamb he has got, a lamb that is not worth a bit; but there is no way in our laws and our Constitution to catch some of these large thieves. It is the fault of the administration of the government, you will say, that this bank robber or this treasury thief has escaped justice. You will see plenty of lawyers ready to take fees to free him. No matter what crime he has committed he can always get a lawyer to attend his case if he is rich, and a Judge to hear his case. It has become fashionable to rob the people, and to-day the people regard these men who have been successful thieves as model men in society. There is the fault. It is not in the administration of justice. It is not that our laws are not strict enough, but it is the leniency of the Courts to these men who are rich. Throughout the State and the United States the men that are rich cannot be punished in our Courts. You gentlemen sitting on the bench, you attorneys attending causes before our Courts, see that you do not turn away a man who has got money to escape.

Again, our laws—both the laws of this State and most of the States—are so framed to protect the criminal that it is almost impossible to convict. None knows that better than the distinguished gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell. He knows that legislators have sought in every way possible by legislation to provide for the escape of criminals. Here is the misfortune. Let laws provide to punish the great criminal and we will not have much complaint about these parties stealing little things.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not really know or understand the temper of this Convention upon this very important matter; but if by any word that I in my feeble way might utter I could prevent the intelligence of this Convention from voting in favor of the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, I should certainly feel a thousand times thankful in behalf of humanity, in behalf, Mr. Chairman, also of the honor of the State of California. I do not believe the people of this State are ready to see her representatives in a constitutional body take a step backwards towards the dark ages of barbarism, and erect upon the free soil of America the whipping-post—and if you please the guillotine. These, my fellow countrymen, are things of the dead past, and it is not for you or me to resurrect them.

Mr. Chairman, the fault is in another direction. It is not the fault of the laws so much as it is in the administration of the laws. Look, if you please, at our Marcuse, our Davis, and the untold number of criminals in the City of Sacramento to-day that have become embezzlers, and have stolen the people's money and have gone unpunished, and what is the trouble? The trouble is, sir, that the very men who to-day are the men of fees, who by education and by nature are men of fees, have interest that these criminals shall go unpunished before the law; and it is for us not to take a step backwards in this dark and terrible direction, but to insist upon the indiscriminate execution of the law. Let the people have officers to enforce the law, and I think, Mr. Chairman, we will not need the lash. I hope and trust in God's name that this Convention will not sanction any such unheard of thing in the nineteenth century; that when a man beats his wife there will be a proper law to provide for his punishment; but to return to the dark ages, to bring men to the whipping-post, is something that my nature revolts from. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

MR. MCCALLUM. The way of the transgressor is hard, and for the protection of society it should be, too. Perhaps it ought to be harder than it is now. I think the argument of the gentlemen who are in favor of restoring corporal punishment has proved that proposition, but I cannot admit that they have proved that the way to make it harder is by returning to the dark ages. Two or three States of the Union have such laws, says my colleague. I hope California will not be the second, nor the third, especially in view of the fact that of all the Constitutions I have before me here, not one contains what is proposed that ours shall contain, an invitation to return to corporal punishment; many of them, at least some of them, expressly prohibit corporal punishment, and say it shall not be inflicted. But two or three States have tried it, they say. The gentleman from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett, tells us that in Ohio there are but one third as many criminals in proportion to the population as we have here. I waited to hear the point of the argument; whether they had the whipping post in Ohio, and I am happy to say they have nothing of the kind there. Having once lived there for many years I am glad, for the credit of the State, that they have not. Delaware is the only one where I have heard of it, but I understand that they have it in Virginia and Kentucky. But it seems to me that the provisions of their Constitutions are substantially the same as ours, and if the difficulty is in the word "unusual," then it is a sufficient answer to say that if it is to become fashionable, let it become fashionable elsewhere first, and the objection that it is unusual will cease to apply to our Courts.

The gentlemen say that the Courts decided wrong, and they rendered that decision many years ago. I do not know what their decision might be now; but I do know that I do not propose, so far as my vote goes, that the Constitution of California shall be the first to invite corporal punishment. This has been a great question in these United States. In the Congress of the United States an amendment was adopted to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting cruel and unusual punishments. Some years ago, I remember, that this question of such punishment in the navy was the subject of discussion there. I believe for a time it was abolished. I am unable to state the condition of the question now, but for a time it was abolished. The tendency of the age has all been in that direction. Now it is proposed that we return to it; but the whole argument is that the punishment is not sufficient. The argument seems to prove it, but no argument has been presented here to show that it is the only kind of punishment that will make the way of the transgressor more hard. Why don't some of the gentlemen suggest some means by which crime may be lessened by a greater certainty of punishment which would be secured by some proposition pending before this Convention? Is there anything cruel or unusual in condemning a criminal to hard labor? It is not cruel or unusual, and at the same time it is not brutal. Might not the criminal be condemned to a diet of bread and water, and then not even given that if he does not labor? If the punishment is not great enough seek some other means, but not return to this brutal system. I have heard it said that the worst thing you can do with a man is to hang him. I deny it. The worst thing is to publicly whip him, and turn him loose upon society. You had better hang him in the first instance.

MR. GORMAN. I can remember, when a small child, of a picture in about the first book I ever studied in—a picture of whipping at the post in Delaware. It was in a geography. From that moment I always was against whipping, for it seemed to be a cruel and unusual mode of punishment. I hope that it will not be introduced into this State. The picture of that criminal has taken hold of my mind from that day, small boy as I was, until the present time; and I shall always be against the adoption of that system of punishment. They say that the laws are not efficient to prevent crime in this State. I believe they are if rightfully carried out.

Now, who are the criminals that are brought before the bars in this State? A great many of them are from foreign countries, as this is a great center. As San Francisco is a great commercial center, they come from all countries; consequently we have more criminals, and we expect more than places that are inland and are not great commercial centers. We get them from all portions of the world. This State has been a flourishing State. It is a place where money has been plenty, and consequently criminals have been attracted here in great numbers. We have had crimes committed here in Sacramento very lately. We have had steals to an unusual amount in banks and other institutions here, and the men have gone free and are not punished. We see the same in San Francisco. Whose fault is it? The laws are there if they are carried out, and I believe that they are not carried out as they should be.

Now, a great many of the criminals of the State come from the boys of the State. Boys growing up in this country are almost without a means of gaining a living. They are crowded out by a certain class of people. I am a mechanic and I know that the boys come to all the shops of the State asking for work—boys that are really good; brought up by good parents. If they go to any part of the State they find a class there ahead of them that takes away their chance of earning a living. They cannot get work. They will not starve, and they steal before they will starve. They have no work in the daytime, consequently they stay around nights, and the first thing get into low dives and cellars, and from that they very soon get to be criminals, first on a small scale, and then the great criminals of the State. These are facts known to every one that lives anywhere around the City of San Francisco. They cannot get anything to do, and they have got to commit crime to make a living.

They speak about capital punishment as though it should be abolished. It has been abolished in a great many States, and reënacted. They talk about this in the same light, but I cannot see that capital punishment can be compared to it at all. I should be in favor of capital punishment but not in favor of this, for capital punishment is where life is taken, and this is for petty offenses. Let any one examine the criminal records of this State and they will very soon decide where the criminals are educated, and how this system can be changed so that there will not be so many criminals in this State, and that will be on the question of Chinese.

MR. LINDOW. Gentlemen of the Convention: I am very sorry to see that this is introduced, but I am glad that Mr. Campbell did it. Here we are represented from the whole State, and we discuss this for an hour and a half, and if it goes wrong we soon see on which side we have got the good men. The parties that will vote for a bill they say it is a good one, and the ones that vote against it of course they say it is bad. That is my idea. It settles it just as plain as anything. The gentleman from San Francisco says the boys want work. That is all very well to say. They say, "Well, we can't get work; we have to steal." I have got five children myself, and if they ever make an attempt to steal I go and gives them the lash. I never let them go to the whipping post. It seems to me that some gentlemen are afraid of it. You can keep out of it if you like. Keep straight forward and you never get at the whipping post any.

Now, the boys they come into mine store, and I could give them work if I could have control of them, but you have got no control of a boy here. There is work, but the boys wants to work when he likes, and he leaves you when he is some account. Nobody wants to beat the boy. It would be a beast of a man that would raise his hand to a strange child to give him the lash. I was a man, twenty-two years of age, and I have got a lickin' from my mother. I never was before a Court in my life, but still I always got to work. If the master had the control of a child as he would of his own, I would take a boy to learn the trade; but you have got to take the boy and support him and pay him, and some of these days his temper will get up, and he goes off. Now, if we have control of children fourteen or fifteen years of age, to train them up to learn the business, we would not have so much hoodlums. Because why? You have got the control of them. But if this whipping post would come in they would get whipped if they go to steal, and they would go to work, because they would not like it. Now, a man spends his time on these boys to learn them the trade, and they want to be paid right off big wages. Now, I have learned a trade at seventy-five dollars a year, and furnished everything except food, and I was very glad to learn it that way. Now, gentlemen, it is no use to talk. Let us go and vote on this question and see how this case stands.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion was lost, on a division—ayes, 60; noes, 88.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Just one word, Mr. Chairman. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I think that the members of this Convention do not see the scope which it embraces. Now, it includes all corporal punishments. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman, said he was in favor of flogging wife beaters. The gentleman from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett, gives statistics in reference to State Prisons. Now, wife beaters do not go to the State Prison. So that if the gentleman from San Francisco wishes to confine it to them, of course the statistics of Judge Fawcett do not support his argument at all. All it proposes is to return to the old repudiated plan of corporal punishment. Now, we can reform the prison system in this State. Put the ball and chain to these confirmed criminals, and put them to work, and not disgrace the State by returning to barbarism in this age of the world. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. JOYCE. The gentleman from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett, says that if there is anything that can be done by this Convention to stop crime, we should do it. In that I agree with the gentleman. But why has not this learned gentleman of so many years' experience given us some idea of what can be done? Now, the fact is patent, Mr. President, to yourself, as being a practitioner before the Courts, as much as any other living man, that to-day in the State of California there is a premium on grand larceny, while petty larceny thieves are punished. These men pretend to say that petty larceny thieves ought to be punished more, while such men as Ralston go unpunished. Why don't they picture out this class of crime as the others were pictured by our friend, Judge Campbell. It is a mild term to call this fraud grand larceny. Flood, Sharon, and others, rob men of their hard earnings, and then leave them without a dollar to get their families food to eat. If they show us any practical way to lash them, I will say lash them, and lash every inch of their bodies off; but until they do that, I am opposed to lashing one class of criminals and grant a premium to another. Our friend from Sacramento wants to protect society. What form of society is it? Why, it is these grand larceny thieves who have built themselves up by plundering the people under the pretense of law. What has built up the millionaires of the City and County of San Francisco and the State of California? Why, it is their manipulations in stocks of various descriptions—mining stocks, water stocks, railroad stocks, and land grabbing. This is what forms society here, and this is the class that wants the lash. They want to lash the petty larceny criminal, but not the grand larceny thieves.

Mr. FAWCETT. I beg to correct the gentleman. I said nothing of the kind, and entertain no such opinions. I believe in making a law to bear perfectly equal upon all classes, and in whipping all classes who show by their crime that they are deserving of that punishment.

Mr. JOYCE. We know that the laws are there, but these men do not get punished. Mr. Wilson told us that we had no right to legislate for a coming generation. I know that the laws are optional with the Judges, and we all know that some counsel have great influence on the opinions of Judges, as we read from the decisions of late in this State. If these gentlemen can show us that this worst class of criminals in this State, these grand larceny thieves, will be lashed, I will go for giving the lash to them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say but a very few words. I do not think that this amendment is thoroughly understood by some gentlemen who have spoken upon this floor. My colleague says that this term means any kind of torture. The language is plain. It means the whipping-post, and nothing more or less. This amendment does not reëstablish the whipping-post. It merely gives the Legislature the power, if such a state of things shall be found to exist as to render the reëstablishment of the whipping-post necessary, to do so. Of course the natural feeling of all of us is against undue severity of punishment, but if you find that other means of repressing crime are not effectual, you must remember that the very first object of punishing crime is to protect society. The reformation of the offender is a mere secondary object. Those laws which are necessary to preserve the peace and order of society ought to be reënacted; and if in the future it shall appear that other punishment will repress crime you can abolish it altogether; but if it shall appear that it will have an influence in repressing and preventing crime, that it will save our citizens from outrage, and protect them from wrong and personal violence, and from fraud—if the Legislature shall find it necessary in the future, why not do that which may be necessary for the protection of society.

This does not specify any particular species of crime. That is necessarily left to legislative discretion. I do not think myself that it would be a bad exercise of legislative discretion if the men who robbed the people of millions were triced up to the whipping-post. I have no objection to it. And let me say this, sir, that certain gentlemen speak here as if we were endeavoring to oppose all reforms. I do not oppose any reforms here. In the course of this Convention, if no other gentleman shall propose measures which are calculated to repress the swindling by officers of corporations, I shall propose them myself. I shall do all in my power to repress crime in all states and conditions of society, but at the same time I do not desire to shackle the hands of the Legislature. This particular kind of punishment has proved immensely beneficial in Great Britain, where experience shows that a man who has received one whipping rarely comes back for a second. I say, if the Legislature can, by establishing that punishment in the future, repress crime, I am in favor of it, and opposed to that sickly sentimentality which sees a fellow knock you down and nearly kill you, to rob you, but says it will be very inhuman to let him have lashes on his back.

Why, sir, there would be a discretion in these Courts if the Legislature should pass any Act of this description. It would be applied where offenses were of such a description, and showed such a degradation of manhood, that the infliction of the lash would be no additional degradation to the offender—where he was lost to all sense of shame and decency before; where he was a public enemy, and where it was necessary to resort to the infliction of that physical suffering which would prevent him from committing crime if he had lost all moral sense.

Mr. WICKES. I have been compelled in my profession to use the rod; and it has been thought that members of my profession are partial to its use; but, sir, it is a laceration to the feelings of any one to use the rod. There is nothing dignified in its use whatever. In the administration of school discipline, perhaps, it may be necessary. An ancient savant says, "spare the rod, and spoil the child," but he never says "man" once. I do not believe that man is in a pupilage, or that he can be benefited by the whip. The older nations in the dark ages resorted to all kinds of brutal punishments; but I think we should avoid copying after such uncivilized and barbarous peoples. I do not believe that we should give the Legislature all this power. I know that the practice of flogging obtained in the navy, but through Commodore Stockton it was abolished, and the discipline of the navy has been better ever since. I am opposed to the amendment, because I know the impropriety of using the lash. In regard to capital punishment, there is something dignified in that which deters from crime.

Mr. KLEINE. I think the punishment of criminals is too severe to the small criminals. I know of one boy, nine years of age, that snatched the purse of a lady, containing five cents, was sent five years to State Prison, whilst men who have stolen five or six millions of the earnings of the people have gone scot free. I hold that this amendment is going back three hundred years ago. I say that the punishment is too severe. I never knew a case yet—I never knew a criminal yet in my life that was reformed by the whipping-post. For my own part, the man that would lay the whip upon me I am sure I know what I would do with him. Mr. President, I say as I said before, we should take compassion upon the poor criminal. If these State Prison keepers were men of humanity, if they would treat prisoners more like human beings, I assure you we would not have half the prisoners that we have to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by Judge Campbell.

The amendment was adopted, on a division: ayes, 69; noes, 63.

Mr. GARVEY. I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, the Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the article on preamble and bill of rights, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. HAGER presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of San Francisco, asking for a provision in the Constitution for a local option law:

To the honorable Constitutional Convention of the State of California:

We, the undersigned, respectfully petition your honorable body to insert in the new Constitution of this State a clause similar to that now in force in the State of Texas, to wit:

SECTION —. The Legislature shall, at its first session, enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, voting precinct, town, or city, by a majority vote, from time to time, may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits.

Referred to Committee on Legislative Department.

FURTHER TIME.

MR. BLACKMER. The Committee on Future Amendments desire to report progress, and ask for further time.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, further time will be granted. Hearing none, it is so ordered.

DRAFT OF AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION, PRESENTED BY THE COMMITTEE ON CHINESE.

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall have, and shall exercise the power, to enact all needful laws, and prescribe necessary regulations, for the protection of the State, and the counties, cities, and towns thereof, from the burdens and evils arising from the presence of aliens, who are, or who may become vagrants, paupers, mendicants, criminals, or invalids afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases, and aliens otherwise dangerous or detrimental to the well being or peace of the State, and to impose conditions upon which such persons may reside in the State, and to provide the means and mode of their removal from the State, upon failure or refusal to comply with such conditions, provided, that nothing contained in the foregoing shall be construed to impair or limit the power of the Legislature to pass such other police laws or regulations, as it may deem necessary.

SEC. 2. Any corporation incorporated by or under the laws of this State, or doing business in this State, shall forfeit its franchises and all legal rights thereunder, if it ever employs, in any capacity whatever, foreigners who are not eligible to become citizens of the United States under the laws of Congress. This section shall be enforced by appropriate legislation.

SEC. 3. No alien ineligible to become a citizen of the United States shall ever be employed on any State, county, municipal, or other public work in this State after the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 4. All further immigration to this State, of Chinese, and all other persons ineligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws thereof, is hereby prohibited. The Legislature shall provide for the enforcement of this section by appropriate legislation.

SEC. 5. No person who is not eligible to become a citizen of the United States shall be permitted to settle in this State, after the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 6. Foreigners ineligible to become citizens of the United States, shall not have the right to sue or be sued in any of the Courts of this State, and any lawyer appearing for or against them, or any of them, in a civil proceeding, shall forfeit his license to practice law. No such foreigner shall be granted license to carry on any business, trade, or occupation in this State, nor shall such license be granted to any person or corporation employing them. No such foreigner shall have the right to catch fish in any of the waters under the jurisdiction of the State; nor to purchase, own, or lease real property in this State, and all contracts of conveyance or lease of real estate to any such foreigners shall be void.

SEC. 7. The presence of foreigners, ineligible to become citizens of the United States, is declared herein to be dangerous to the well being of the State, and the Legislature shall discourage their immigration by all the means within its power. It shall provide for their exclusion from residence or settlement in any portion of the State it may see fit, or from the State, and provide suitable methods, by their taxation or otherwise, for the expense of such exclusion. It shall prescribe suitable penalties for the punishment of persons convicted of introducing them within forbidden limits. It shall delegate all necessary power to the incorporated cities and towns of this State for their removal without the limits of such cities and towns.

SEC. 8. Public officers within this State are forbidden to employ Chinese in any capacity whatever; violation of this provision shall be ground for removal from office; and no person shall be eligible to any office in this State who at the time of election, and for three months before, employed Chinese.

SEC. 9. The exercise of the right of suffrage shall be denied to any person employing Chinese in this State; and it shall be a sufficient challenge that the person offering to vote is employing Chinese, or has employed them within three months next preceding the election.

MR. MILLER. I move that the amendment lie on the table, and be ordered printed.

THE PRESIDENT. So ordered.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS.

THE PRESIDENT. The next order of business is the introduction of resolutions and propositions relative to the Constitution.

MR. WILSON, of First District. I desire to send up a proposition, at the request of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Departments, and ask that it be printed out of its order, and referred to that committee:

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The judicial power of the State shall be vested in the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment, in a Supreme Court, Superior Courts, Justices of the Peace, and such inferior Courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town.

SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and six Associate Justices. The Court may sit in departments and in bank, and shall always be open for the transaction of business. There shall be two departments, denominated, respectively, Department One and Department Two. The Chief Justice shall assign three of the Associate Justices to each department, and such assignment may be changed by him from time to time. The Associate Justices shall be competent to sit in either department, and may interchange with each other by agreement among themselves or as ordered by the Chief Justice. Each of the departments shall have the power to hear and determine causes and all questions arising therein, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained in relation to the Court in bank. The presence of two Justices shall be necessary to transact any business in either of the departments, except such as may be done at chambers, and the concurrence of two Justices shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment. The Chief Justice shall apportion the business to the departments, and may, in his discretion, order any cause pending before the Court to be heard and decided by the Court in bank. The order may be made before or after judgment pronounced by a department; but where a cause has been allotted to one of the departments, and a judgment pronounced thereon, the order must be made within sixty days after such judgment, and concurred in by two Associate Justices, and if so made it shall have the effect to vacate and set aside the judgment. If the order be not made within the time above limited, the judgment shall be final. No judgment by a department shall become final until the expiration of the period of sixty days aforesaid, unless approved by the Chief Justice, in writing, with the concurrence of two Associate Justices. The Chief Justice may convene the Court in bank at any time, and shall be the presiding Justice of the Court when so convened. The concurrence of four Justices present at the argument shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment in bank; but if four Justices, so present, do not concur in a judgment, then all the Justices qualified to sit in the cause shall hear the argument, and judgment may be pronounced by a majority thereof; and if they are equally divided in opinion, the judgment or order appealed from shall stand affirmed. In the determination of causes, all decisions of the Court in bank or in departments shall be given in writing, and the grounds of the decision shall be stated. The Chief Justice may sit in either department, and shall preside when so sitting, but the Justices assigned to each department shall select one of their number as presiding Justice. All sessions of the Court, whether in bank or in departments, shall be held at the capital of the State. In case of the absence of the Chief Justice from the place at which the Court is held, or his inability to act, the Associate Justices shall select one of their own number to perform the duties and exercise the powers of the Chief Justice during such absence or inability to act.

Sec. 3. The Chief Justice shall be appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold office during good behavior. The Associate Justices shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at large, and the term of office shall be twelve years, from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election; provided, that the six Justices elected at the first election shall, at their first meeting, so classify themselves, by lot, that two of them shall go out of office at the end of four years, two of them at the end of eight years, and two of them at the end of twelve years, and an entry of such classification shall be made in the minutes of the Court in bank, signed by them, and a duplicate thereof shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State. If a vacancy occur in the office of Associate Justice, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Justice to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Justice so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term. The first election of the Associate Justices shall be at the first general election after the adoption and ratification of this Constitution.

Sec. 4. The salary of the Chief Justice shall be ten thousand dollars per annum, and the salary of each Associate Justice shall be eight thousand dollars per annum.

Sec. 5. The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars; and also in all criminal cases amounting to felony on questions of law alone. The Court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, and habeas corpus, and also all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Each of the Justices shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus to any part of the State, upon petition on behalf of any person held in actual custody, and may make such writs returnable before himself, or the Supreme Court, or before any Superior Court in the State, or before any Judge thereof. Any Justice of the Supreme Court may allow alternative writs and orders to show cause, with or without a temporary restraining order. In cases of which the Court has original jurisdiction, all issues of law and fact shall be determined by the Court in bank, or one of the departments, in such manner as may be provided by law or the rules of the Court.

Sec. 6. There shall be a Superior Court in each county of the State.

Sec. 7. In the County of San Francisco there shall be twelve Judges of the Superior Court, any one or more of whom may hold Court. There may be as many sessions of said Court, at the same time, as there are Judges thereof. The said Judges shall choose, from their own number, a presiding Judge, who may be removed at their pleasure. He shall distribute the business of the Court among the Judges thereof, and prescribe the order of business. The judgments, orders, and proceedings of any session of the Superior Court, held by any one or more of the Judges of said Courts, respectively, shall be equally effectual as if all the Judges of said respective Courts presided at such session. [Here provide for the number of Judges for the Superior Court in each of the other counties.] The term of office of Judges of the Superior Courts shall be six years, from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election; provided, that the twelve Judges of the Superior Court, elected in the County of San Francisco at the first election held under this Constitution, shall, at their first meeting, so classify themselves, by lot, that four of them shall go out of office at the end of two years, and four of them shall go out of office at the end of four years, and four of them shall go out of office at the end of six years, and an entry of such classification shall be made in the minutes of the Court, signed by them, and a duplicate thereof filed in the office of the Secretary of State. The first election of Judges of the Superior Courts shall take place at the first general election held after the adoption and ratification of this Constitution. If a vacancy occur in the office of Judge of a Superior Court, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Judge to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Judge so elected shall hold office for the remainder of the unexpired term.

Sec. 8. The salary of a Judge of the Superior Court in the County of San Francisco shall be the same as that of an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the State. [Here provide for salaries in other counties.]

Sec. 9. A Judge of any Superior Court may hold a Superior Court in any county, at the request of a Judge of the Superior Court thereof, and upon the request of the Governor it shall be his duty so to do.

Sec. 10. The Legislature of the State may, at any time, two thirds of the members of the Senate and two thirds of the members of the Assembly voting therefor, increase or diminish the number of Judges of the Superior Court in any county in the State; provided, that no such reduction shall affect any Judge who has been elected.

Sec. 11. The Superior Courts shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity, and in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and in all other cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to two hundred dollars, and in all criminal cases amounting to felony, and cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for; also, in actions of forcible entry and detainer, of proceedings in insolvency, of actions to prevent or abate a nuisance, of divorce, and for annulment of marriage, and all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for; also, of all matters of probate. And said Courts shall have the power of naturalization, and to issue papers therefor. They shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in Justices' and other inferior Courts in their respective counties on questions of law only as may be prescribed by law. Said Courts shall be always open (legal holidays and non-judicial days excepted), and their original jurisdiction shall extend to all parts of the State. Said Courts, and their Judges, shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, on petition by or on behalf of any person in actual custody, in their respective counties.

Sec. 12. Justices of the Supreme Court, and Judges of the Superior Courts, may be removed by concurrent resolution of both houses of the Legislature, if two thirds of all the members of the Assembly and a majority of all the members elected to the Senate concur therein. All other judicial officers, except Justices of the Peace, may be removed by the Senate on the recommendation of the Governor, but no removal shall be made by virtue of this section, unless the cause thereof be entered on the Journal, or unless the party complained of has been served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have had an opportunity of being heard in his defense. On the question of removal, the ayes and noes shall be entered on the Journal.

The PRESIDENT. The Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department presents this proposition, and asks that it be printed out of order and referred to that committee. If there be no objections it is so ordered.

STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

MR. WICKES introduced the following proposition, to amend amendment to article ——, sections ——, entitled "Constitution and powers of State Board of Education:"

MR. DOWLING introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, to prohibit bigamy and polygamy:

SECTION —. The Legislature of this State shall provide that bigamy nor polygamy shall never be tolerated in the State of California.

Referred to Committee on Legislative Department.

STATE UNIVERSITY.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the Board of Regents of the University of the State of California, be requested to furnish this Convention with full information respecting the annual expenses paid for salaries of all officers, employés, and attachés of said University; also all incidental expenses connected with said institution; also to give full detailed information of the amount of money received from the State, from individuals, and from all other sources, for the maintenance of said institution, and the disposition made of such funds.

MR. HAGER. I would suggest that the resolution be amended so as to read "President and Secretary." The Secretary has charge of all the books and archives.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz. I accept the amendment.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

PREAMBLE AND BILL OF RIGHTS.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, President Hoge in the chair, to further consider the report of the committee on preamble and bill of rights.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. GREGG. I will withdraw the substitute that I offered to section six yesterday.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section six as amended.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 6. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or the presumption great. Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed; nor shall cruel or unusual punishments be inflicted. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the infliction of corporal punishment for crimes. Witnesses shall not be unreasonably detained or confined in any jail or room where criminals are usually imprisoned.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "criminals," in the sixth line, the words "or persons charged with crime," so that it will read; "Witnesses shall not be unreasonably detained, or confined in any jail or room where criminals or persons charged with crime are usually confined."

MR. TERRY. There is no jail in the State that has a separate building for witnesses who are detained. If he is confined at all he must be confined at the jail, though he need not be confined in the same room with the criminals.

MR. VAN DYKE. Strike out "jail or."

MR. WILSON, of First District. I would suggest that they might be confined with criminals then unless the word "usually" is stricken out.

MR. VAN DYKE. I accept the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chairman of the committee moves to strike out the words "jail or" and the word "usually."

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: The only amendment to the old section is adding on after the word "detained" the balance of the clause. We have added on, "or confined in any room where criminals or persons charged with crime are imprisoned." The purpose is very obvious. As the law now is it frequently occurs that a party who is so unfortunate as to witness the commission of a crime is imprisoned in an unfit cell or room and herded with criminals, while the criminal himself perhaps may be able to give bail and go at large upon the streets. We think that is all wrong. Any city or county that is not able to build a proper and suitable place for the detention of witnesses should not be allowed to hold them, if they are to be herded with criminals.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I think the object aimed at might be attained and preserve the protection that was designed for witnesses detained. The object was, as stated by the Chairman of the committee, to protect innocent men whose testimony may be needed upon the trial of cases at a future time, and who, by virtue of being strangers and in a strange land, and without means, are unable to give bail. Now the section as it first stood was designed to secure those persons in that condition, who were detained for a considerable length of time, perhaps, should not be put into the attitude of common felons—of common criminals—and herded with them; that they should not be put into the place where such criminals are confined. As it stood it would have attained that end. But the gentleman from San Joaquin suggests that there may not be any other place than the jail in the county. I submit that if there be none they should provide one. The striking out of the word "jail" and leaving in the word "room" will have just simply this effect, that the witnesses detained will be taken to the common jail, to a place where felons are taken and persons charged with crime, and there will be incarcerated in the building, in a room which the public do not know from the room that the criminals are occupying.

Now, I fancy that it is not so much the hardship of occupying a room with a criminal, as it is the disgrace, to a private citizen, without offense, to be incarcerated in a place, in a jail, in a prison, in an institution which is used for the purpose of confining criminals and persons charged with crime. It seems to me the amendment loses the whole salutary benefit of the section as it stood, so far as it is designed to protect honest citizens who simply have the misfortune to be witnesses; and if that amendment be not carried, I am certain that an amendment can be made that will accomplish the purpose designed. It may be true that they might not have the means in some counties of providing suitable buildings, but I submit that in such cases they have seldom occasion to detain a witness, and when they do, it should be the duty of the public to provide a place—I do not care, though it might be some expense and some trouble—rather than sacrifice the right of a citizen. I understand that by the amendment the room shall not be one in which criminals or persons charged with crime are confined, but I submit that is not enough for the protection of the citizen. It ought to be a place not connected with any infamy at all.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: It is a fact, I believe, that in every county of the State which has a jail there are apartments usually used by the Deputy Sheriff or the Jailer in charge of the institution. Prisoners are never confined therein. The object of the amendment was that these persons who were detained as witnesses might be kept in that portion of the building, and not compelled to herd with prisoners or persons charged with crime. It seems to me that a witness would not be any more disgraced in being detained in the rooms usually occupied by the Deputy Sheriff than in any other building, and it would be a very considerable expense to any county to be compelled to provide a separate place every time a witness was detained for a few days—for I hope that this Convention will provide a means whereby it will be unnecessary to detain any witness more than a few days, by having the deposition of witnesses taken before an examining magistrate for use in case the witness is absent or cannot be procured on the trial. But it would be putting the counties to unnecessary expense to require them to provide outside accommodations for men for the three or four days occupied in the examinations. I do not understand that there will be any particular hardship in detaining a man in a room usually occupied by the Deputy Sheriff, and I think there is no jail in the State that has not apartments of that kind.

Mr. LAINE. As I understand it, the amendment is to insert the words "or persons charged with crime."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment which the Chairman of the committee now offers is to strike out the words "jail or," and the word "usually."

Mr. LAINE. Then there are two propositions, an amendment and an amendment to an amendment. Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought to abolish this matter of imprisoning witnesses altogether. At the present time we have laws, and we should stick to them, providing that witnesses may be examined and not imprisoned. Hence, I am in favor of voting down this amendment, and then striking out the words "or confined in any jail or room where criminals are usually confined," so that it will read that they shall not be unreasonably detained or imprisoned. I do not believe in imprisoning witnesses at all.

Mr. NOEL. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment which I would like to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments already.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, says there are no jails in which there is not a room in which criminals are never confined. I do not know how many there are. I am not so well acquainted with the jails of the State as the gentleman from San Joaquin, but we have in my own county a very good jail, a very strong one, and there is no place whatever of the description of which he speaks. No Sheriff or Deputy Sheriff ever remains there longer than to take care of the prisoners and feed them. I think that is the case in several of the counties.

Mr. NOEL. Mr. Chairman: I think the section sufficiently guarded as it is. That would exclude them from being confined in a jail at all, or in any room whatever in which criminals are usually confined, and if they are to be confined at all they must be confined somewhere else. I think that the section as it reads now sufficiently protects the rights of witnesses without any further amendment or any amendment whatever.

Mr. VAN DYKE. I withdraw my amendment to strike out "jail or."

The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment is to insert, "or persons charged with crime."

Mr. VAN DYKE. The object of that amendment is this: it might be understood to mean convicted persons, and I wish to make it apply to persons charged with crime.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman of the committee seems to forget that the Committee of the Whole yesterday adopted the amendment of Judge Campbell. The amendments are both out of order.

Mr. NOEL. I move to amend by adding after the word "crime" the following words: "But criminals when punished by whipping shall not be stripped naked; nor shall married women ever be whipped by any one except their husbands."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order.

Mr. WYATT. I move to add to section six the following words: "Provided, corporal punishment shall only be inflicted on male persons convicted of the crime of felony."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order. The committee has determined already what that portion of the section shall contain.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I offer an amendment to the amendment adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I desire to offer this amendment: "But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the infliction of corporal punishment for the crime of embezzlement."

Mr. WYATT. I second the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. It requires three members to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. McCALLUM. If no further amendments be offered to section six, I wish to raise the question that the proper way would be to take a vote on section six, and see if we agree to it after being amended. Now, my judgment is that we should take a vote on section six as amended, and I call for that vote.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no such thing as such a vote in Committee of the Whole. No such question can be presented in Committee of the Whole. The sections are read, and if amendments are made they are all sent back to the Convention, and then amendments can be offered if desired. But no such vote is taken in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am striving to arrive at an understanding, as to whether it is in order to amend section six.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to amend section six in any other portion of it than that which the Committee of the Whole has already adopted.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have no difference to discuss with the Chair, but I do desire a distinct understanding, that there may be a ruling of the Chair, or by the house, and no misapprehension. I desire to amend section six as it now stands, and upon that proposition I offer an amendment. Now, if the Chair rules that amendment out of order, I respectfully take an appeal, and ask the sense of the Convention.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no second to your demand for an appeal. The gentleman is out of order. It takes three to call for an appeal under the rule.

Mr. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend section six as follows: Strike out all after the word "inflicted," and add "the Legislature shall provide for taking the depositions of witnesses to be used in criminal cases. Witnesses shall not be unreasonably detained or imprisoned after sufficient time and opportunity has been given for taking their depositions." I submit that that amendment ought to be made. I am opposed to imprisoning witnesses at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order. On motion of Judge Campbell the committee struck out all after the word "inflicted" and inserted some other words. The gentleman from Santa Clara now moves to strike out these words that the committee have already inserted. The Chair rules that it is out of order.

Mr. HERRINGTON. I do not insist on it if that is so.

The CHAIRMAN. It is precisely the same language Judge Campbell moved to strike out.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: If I understand the section as it now reads, after the word "crimes" it says: "Witnesses shall not be unreasonably detained, or confined in any jail or room where criminals are usually imprisoned." It should read: "Witnesses shall not be unreasonably detained, nor shall they be confined in any jail." As it stands, it means witnesses shall not be unreasonably confined. I presume that the intention is that they shall not be unreasonably detained, and shall not be confined in any jail or room where criminals are usually imprisoned. It should read: "Witnesses shall not be unreasonably detained, nor shall they be confined in any jail or room where criminals are usually imprisoned." We should strike out the word "or," and insert the words "nor shall they be."

Mr. VAN DYKE. We cannot get to it until we get back into the Convention.

The CHAIRMAN. When the article is taken up in the Convention, every amendment made in Committee of the Whole will come up in its order. You can then vote down the amendment if desired.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I now again offer my amendment, and I do so for the purpose of calling the attention of the Chair to the fact that the committee, on yesterday, adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, and upon that ground, I understand, the Chair ruled my amendment out of order. Now, as another amendment has been adopted this morning that strikes out the whole of the amendment and adopts a substitute ——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is mistaken. No amendment whatever has been adopted this morning.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is my misfortune to be seated so far from the center of business as not to be able to understand what is going on at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section seven.

The SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. In criminal cases the right of trial by jury shall remain. In all cases, except felony, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury, and in all civil cases the number necessary to render a verdict.

Mr. WILSON, of First District. I move that this committee rise and report back to the Convention sections seven and eight of the draft for a preamble and declaration of rights, with the recommendation that they be omitted from the declaration of rights, and that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department to report upon the same in connection with the judicial department. I do this, Mr. Chairman, from the fact that the question of juries and Grand Juries have been very considerably discussed in the Committee on Judiciary. It is an important subject, and one which I presume the Convention is hardly prepared at this time to act upon. It seems to me that the subject belongs more properly to the judicial department than it does to the bill of rights. When that is reached the committee will be prepared to act upon the subject of juries and Grand Juries. Of course, the committee, after it shall report to the Convention, will resolve itself back with the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the balance.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, moves that the committee rise and report back to the Convention sections seven and eight of the draft, for a preamble and declaration of rights, with the recommendation that they be omitted from the declaration of rights, and that the subject-matter be referred to the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I would suggest that section thirteen be taken into that category.

Mr. WILSON, of First District. I accept that amendment.

Mr. McCALLUM. I would suggest to the gentleman that there is no necessity of the committee rising. We can pass the sections, and when we do rise we will report to the Convention that these sections be referred.

The SECRETARY read:

"That the committee rise and report back to the Convention sections seven, eight, and thirteen of the draft for a preamble and declaration of rights, with the recommendation that they be omitted from the declaration of rights, and that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, to report on the same in connection with the judicial department."

Mr. BARBOUR. I will also suggest that section nine ought to be referred, because that involves a very great legal question. That ought to go to the Judiciary Committee to report upon.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I have no choice as to where this matter of the jury system goes in the Constitution, and I have no pride of opinion about this matter, but I would suggest to the Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, that the bill of rights is the place where the declaration of the right to a jury is contained in all the Constitutions, I believe, without exception. Now, it is true, that in the National Constitution there was not any declaration of rights. That was afterwards discovered to be a great omission, and amendments were at once proposed and adopted which really constitute a declaration of rights. But in all the State Constitutions in reference to the trial by jury, it is contained in the declaration of rights, and it strikes me that that is the proper place for it. If it is determined by the Convention to strike out the right of a Grand Jury, why, then, the matter of regulating the practice in criminal cases can be put in the judicial department. But here the reference to a trial jury, in section seven, is the declaration of a right: "In criminal cases the right of trial by jury shall remain." Now that is one of the fundamental rights of the citizen, and is so recognized in the National Constitution, and in the various State Constitutions. The proper place for that declaration is in this bill of rights. If the gentlemen are not prepared now to go on with that section, we can pass it and go on with others. It does seem to me that we should not go contrary to the principles in every other State in reference to this declaration of the right of every citizen to a trial by jury. That is its proper place here.

Now in reference to the suggestion—I do not know whether it was seconded or not—to transfer the ninth section also. That is in regard to the freedom of speech and of the press. If that is not the place for that, in the bill of rights, I do not know where the place is. So in regard to the right of a citizen accused of crime on his trial of meeting his accuser face to face; having counsel; having the right of answering; having the cause and nature of the accusation. All these things are fundamental rights of the citizen, and the proper place for them, evidently, is in the declaration of rights. Therefore I am opposed to the course suggested by the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee in transferring this declaration of the rights of the citizen to a trial by jury, from the declaration of rights to any other part of the Constitution.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I do not understand that the motion here is to displace these propositions from the declaration of rights, but to have them considered by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Departments, in connection with the system which they propose before they shall be finally adopted by this Convention. That is my understanding of it.

MR. VAN DYKE. Then I misunderstood it.

MR. HAGER. The proposition I submitted was not to include section thirteen in the plan for a judicial system, but to have it considered by the Judiciary Committee. These propositions are frequently taken from the Constitution of the United States, or other Constitutions, and in the course of printing and reprinting errors have crept in.

MR. VAN DYKE. I have no objection if that is the motion of the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

MR. HAGER. That is the intention. It might as well be understood now as any other time that all these propositions, when it comes to the final adjustment of the Constitution, may be changed from one place to another into their proper places. The same proposition may come before the Convention, and the same proposition may be adopted from different committees, but when it comes to be adjusted into one complete whole, why, whenever they are duplicated only one proposition will be put in, and that under its proper head. There is a committee appointed for that purpose.

MR. VAN DYKE. I am aware of the fact suggested by Judge Hager, that if one proposition should be adopted, and should be ascertained to be in an inappropriate place, it would be changed by the Committee on Revision and Adjustment; but the point was that the declaration of the right of the citizen to a trial by jury, that this was the proper place for it. But if the Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary wishes his committee to consider this declaration in reference to trial by jury, as well as the Grand Jury, I have no objection; but I most certainly object to its being transferred from this part of the Constitution to some other part. If the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee will state that that is the only object I have no objection.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I understand that the effect of the motion will be to produce precisely the opposite result from that stated by the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager. I understand that it is a recommendation by this Committee of the Whole to the Convention that these propositions, embraced in these various sections, be incorporated into the judiciary system. I ask for the reading of it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"That the committee rise and report back to the Convention sections seven, eight, and thirteen, of the draft for a preamble and declaration of rights, with the recommendation that they be omitted from the declaration of rights, and that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, to report on the same in connection with the judicial department."

MR. HERRINGTON. Precisely the result that I anticipated. It is a recommendation on the part of this Committee of the Whole to the Convention that these propositions be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions that that committee report upon them in connection with their report upon the judicial system; and that they be omitted—that is the language of this resolution—that they be omitted from this declaration of rights. That is precisely the result that we do not desire. Individually I do not desire it. I certainly think that it is not a part of the procedure, so far as this is concerned, in criminal cases. It is attempted by these sections to confer an absolute right upon the individual, as contradistinguished from the mass of society, and to give him the power to determine that he shall be tried by a jury. Now, I do submit that their proper place is in the declaration of rights, and not in the judicial system.

Most of the provisions embraced in these various sections have been so long in use that they are familiar to us all, and we never will understand them any better, perhaps. Even if their language should be changed, there would be a necessity for a new consideration of them; and I apprehend that the way they are now proposed is as good as they ever will be. If these sections go to the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, under this motion, they will come back engrafted in the judicial system. Changes will have been made so far as the arrangement is concerned. I do not undertake to say that the Judiciary Committee would not report them back, to be included in this declaration of rights, but the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole that they be reported upon in connection with the report on the judicial system, is an indication that they are requested to so engraft it upon that system. I submit that they are in their proper position, and that they ought to be kept just where they are.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: In the whole number of sections which fall to the judicial department—from number one to number nineteen—the subject of juries is not included. All the propositions which have been introduced in this Convention have been very properly referred to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights. That is the only committee to which they could be properly referred. This proposition, in plain English, is to refer to the Judiciary Committee that business which belongs to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights. The plain English of it is that the Committee on the Bill of Rights were not competent to advise the Convention sufficiently upon this subject, and that it ought to be referred to the Judiciary Committee. I have not the fortune, or misfortune, to belong to either of the committees, but I do not believe in this practice. If I correctly understand, the Judiciary Committee itself has not yet reported its own business, and it has had an extension of one week's time in which to do it. They have a great amount of business before them, and the crowding of business is not going to be in the committees hereafter, but in the Convention. I am opposed to this idea of a committee rising for the purpose of reporting the business of one committee to another. I do not remember of a single proposition on this subject—or if there is, it is exceptional—which has ever been referred to the Judiciary Committee. If they have taken action—as reported in the papers the other morning—taking up the report of the committee on their own motion, it does appear to me that that committee ought at least to have waited until this Convention asked it for its opinion as to the work of any other committee.

Talk about legal questions, sir. The greatest legal questions here in the Convention are involved in the article called the declaration of rights. There are those in the Convention who, perhaps, may be enabled to vote upon these questions, who are not entirely impressed with the importance of having the opinion of the Committee on Judiciary upon these questions that belong to another committee. This comes up in its regular order. Business proceeds. A distinct, square proposition is presented to this Convention in section seven: "In criminal cases the right of trial by jury shall remain." There is a plain, distinct proposition. It does not need the action of the Judiciary Committee to tell us what that plain language means. If we are not for it, let us vote against it. It is a change from the old Constitution, but there is no necessity for the Judiciary Committee to inform this Convention as to how it ought to act. The Chairman of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights says if the object is to restore it back there, all right. My judgment is that, as it belongs there, and will have to be passed upon there, that the matter may just as well be disposed of here and now. I will be very well satisfied if the Committee on Judiciary perform their own duties, and leave the other committees to perform theirs.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I do not intend to detain this body any length of time, but it appeared from the manner in which this subject was discussed that the proposition was for this matter contained in sections seven, eight, and thirteen to go to the Judiciary Committee, and for them to investigate the great judicial principles upon which those sections rest, and to have them presented in a proper form before us. Now upon a close examination it seems when the proposition is read to us that the object was that this should be inserted in the judicial department of the Constitution. I feel like Mr. McCallum upon this subject, that if every committee is able to do its own part of the business, and that which comes immediately under its own revision, within the proper time, it will be doing exceedingly well. I do not see the propriety of referring this matter.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order; that a motion that the committee rise shall be decided without debate.

THE CHAIRMAN. That is the rule, but the Chair has permitted some latitude in order that the proposition might be thoroughly understood.

MR. BROWN. I am under the impression, Mr. Chairman, that this should remain in the bill of rights, and that this body, aside from the Judiciary Committee, is competent to decide upon it. I think it has the capacity to investigate and decide every time. I am therefore opposed to this being referred to the Judiciary Committee, or being placed in the judicial department of the Constitution, with due respect to every member of every committee of this house.

MR. EDGERTON. Is the question debatable?

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not under the rule, but the Chair has permitted some latitude.

MR. EDGERTON. I hope the indulgence of the Chair will be extended to me for about two minutes and a half. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee on Rules made their report they named a committee on judicial department, that being one of the departments of the Constitution. Some gentlemen in the Convention moved that that be changed to the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, and the reason stated then was that that committee should be an advisory committee to the Convention, and also to other committees of the Convention.

Now, sir, I do not think that the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, the Chairman of this committee, implies any discourtesy to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, or anything that need move the sensibilities of any gentleman upon this floor. It is well understood in parliamentary matters that the Committee on Judiciary of every legislative body occupies that position. In the Senate and Assembly of this State, in the Senate of the United States, in the House of Representatives, it is a matter of frequent practice for the Chairmen of other committees to request that certain matters before them be referred for the consideration and action of the Judiciary Committee.

I think there is nothing improper in the motion at all, and I desire to call the attention of the committee for a moment to one of the reasons why this action should be taken. Look one moment at section seven:

Digitized by Google

"In criminal cases the right of trial by jury shall remain. In all cases, except felony, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury, and in all civil cases the number necessary to render a verdict." It is a very serious question in my mind whether under that section the right of trial by jury is not limited to criminal cases, and that it is left entirely a matter with the Legislature to say whether there shall be any jury at all in civil cases. Section eight involves the question of the abolition of Grand Juries, and then the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, has suggested that section nine be included, and I think very properly. If gentlemen will refer to section fourteen of this draft they will find there provisions which are, to say the least, startling. That proposes a reversal of the rules of jurisprudence as they prevail all over the United States, so far as I am informed, in reference to the subject-matter therein set forth, and rules that have prevailed in this State more than a quarter of a century. They are rules that certainly should be considered by the Judiciary Committee. I move that we add section fourteen, so that the motion will embrace sections seven, eight, nine, thirteen, and fourteen.

Mr. WILSON, of First District. I accept that suggestion.

Mr. BARBOUR. I called attention to section nine as illustrating the impropriety of the motion, and showing that almost every proposition contains matter which requires judicial investigation. I am in favor of the Convention judging of this matter, and of every member deciding for himself whether he is in favor of abolishing Grand Juries. It is not a matter necessary to refer to the Judiciary Committee. Here are sixty lawyers in this Convention—or seventy lawyers—and in the Judiciary Committee nineteen lawyers. They have their chance here in this Committee of the Whole. I am in favor of going on with this article and not referring it here or there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must enforce the rule.

Mr. BARTON. As a member of that committee I would like to be heard a half minute. I hope that the gentleman will accept all the amendments, and that the discretion and good sound judgment of this Convention will vote it down accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the motion as now amended.

The SECRETARY read:

"That the committee rise and report back to the Convention sections seven, eight, nine, thirteen, and fourteen of the draft for a preamble and declaration of rights, with the recommendation that they be omitted from the declaration of rights, and that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, to report on the same in connection with the judicial department."

Mr. WILSON, of First District. The addition of these several sections, some of which ought to be in the bill of rights, makes it necessary for me to reform the original motion, and I ask to modify it so as to read in this way: "That the committee rise and report back sections seven, eight, nine, thirteen, and fourteen, and that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, to report in connection with the same, and that further action on them be postponed until the coming in of the report of the Committee on Judiciary."

Mr. VAN DYKE. I understand that they shall be transferred. I wish to ascertain what the gentleman's proposition now is. I want to ascertain whether it is to transfer these four sections to the judicial article?

Mr. WILSON, of First District. No, sir; merely that the further consideration of them be postponed until the coming in of the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, and that they be referred to that committee for consideration.

Mr. MILLER. I move that section seventeen be included.

Mr. LARKIN. I move to amend, by including the balance of the bill of rights.

Mr. McCALLUM. I move to include all the other sections of the Constitution that are about legal questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson.

The motion was lost.

Mr. SMITH, of Santa Clara. I move to amend the section so as to read as follows: "The right of trial by jury shall be secure to all and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties; but in all trials in civil cases, also criminal offenses below felony, two thirds of the jury shall be competent to find a verdict."

Mr. HERRINGTON. I offer the following amendment to the amendment: "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in civil actions, and the Legislature may prescribe the number of jurors in civil cases and the majority required to render a verdict thereunder; in criminal cases, amounting only to misdemeanor, defendants shall have the right of trial by jury or by the Court as they shall elect."

The amendment to the amendment, as presented, secures the right of trial by jury beyond peradventure, in all cases where it has been heretofore used, and from the form of its language it will bear the same construction that has heretofore been put to that section by the Supreme Court of this and other States. It has the advantage, therefore, of a determined and fixed meaning to that extent. [Cries of "louder!"] If you will listen carefully you will hear. The alterations that may be made by the Legislature has reference to civil cases—empowering the Legislature in those cases to determine the number which shall constitute a jury and the majority to render a verdict. In criminal cases it permits the defendant, where the offense amounts only to a misdemeanor, to elect whether he will be tried by a jury or by the Court.

Heretofore, as I understand the practice—in fact in County Courts it has been held that it was not competent for our County Courts to try any case without the intervention of a jury, both a grand and a petit jury. The consequence has been that it was impossible for defendants, even when they elected to be tried by the Court, in cases of misdemeanor, to be tried that way; and I submit that they ought to be permitted, if they so elect, to be tried by the Court. It is less expensive in such cases. It certainly would be both to the advantage of the State and to the satisfaction of those against whom the law is invoked. I have given the subject some little thought, and in my judgment this is about the only change that would be either to the advantage of the State or to the advantage of the defendants who are to be tried by the laws of the State. As to the form of its draft, it may be changed or altered to suit the taste of either the Judicial Committee or any other committee, or this Committee of the Whole. But it embodies the idea which, in my judgment, ought to be laid down in this bill of rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY read the amendment offered by Mr. Smith, of Santa Clara, as follows:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secure to all and remain inviolate forever, but a jury trial may be waived by the parties; but in all trials in civil cases, also criminal offenses below felony, two thirds of the jury shall be competent to find a verdict."

The SECRETARY read the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Herrington, as follows:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in civil actions, and the Legislature may prescribe the number of jurors in civil cases and the majority required to render a verdict thereunder; in criminal cases amounting only to misdemeanor, defendants shall have the right of trial by jury, or by the Court, as they shall elect."

The amendment to the amendment, and the amendment, were both lost.

Mr. DUDLEY, of San Joaquin. I have a substitute for the original draft which I desire to submit as an amendment.

The SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate forever; but in all cases, civil or criminal, except felony, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury and to render a verdict; but in all cases except felony the jury may be waived by the parties."

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I am well pleased with the draft of this substitute, except in two points—really, one point. I move to amend the substitute, by striking out the words "except felony" where they occur. I can see no reason, either founded in experience or otherwise, why it should not be competent for parties to waive trial by jury.

Mr. DUDLEY, of San Joaquin. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the amendment as it will stand then.

The SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate forever; but in all cases, civil or criminal, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury and to render a verdict; but in all cases the jury may be waived by the parties."

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the proposition becomes a very simple one on the basis of this substitute, in its present form. It provides that the right of trial by jury is inviolate; second, that while this right of trial by jury is thus inviolate, it gives to the parties—not to one party, but to both parties—the right of waiving trial by jury. I should like to hear from some gentleman if this view is not acceptable, and founded in experience; and I appeal to the members of the legal fraternity for an expression upon this point. What reason can be given why the parties to any litigation, whether it be civil or criminal, should not have the right to waive a trial by jury and submit the issues for trial to the judgment and decision of the Court upon questions of law and fact alike.

Mr. Chairman, I believe I express the average opinion of the legal fraternity of the State of California, and I think I may go farther and say that I believe I express the average judgment of the legal fraternity of the United States, when I say that, while they would preserve the right of trial by jury upon the demand of either party, in all cases it is safe for the ends of justice and the preservation of private rights and the public interest that it shall be competent for the parties to waive the trial by jury. Now, as lawyers, we know well that the right of trial by jury commenced with the Grand Jury, and then running along eventuated in a system of trial juries. The reasons upon which this system was established have in a large measure passed away. Not wholly, sir, yet the moving interests which prompted their institution have, as a matter of fact, passed away.

Again, it may be said upon the basis of the original resolution, that exception is made in cases of felony. Of course that would include capital cases. Can anybody tell me why a trial might not take place before the Court—always conceding that the people and the defendant alike consent to it—in this class of cases? We select our Judges, we constitute our judiciary, with a view first to their learning, next to their probity, third to their experience in judicial affairs. When, therefore, the parties to litigation in cases of felony, including even capital cases, consent that the Court shall try the issue, what substantial reason can be given why it should not be done. That it will hasten the administration of justice is obvious to the mind of every lawyer. I think this will not be questioned.

One of the faults of our jury system as it has come to us in our experience in this State, and all over the United States, is this: that after you summon a jury, and go through all the work of a trial, the probable result is that in about one third of the criminal cases, and perhaps a less proportion of civil cases, you get a verdict. The result is that a trial involving immense expense ends in a mistrial and all the work done has to be thrown aside, and you must commence again. Now I submit that we should preserve the system of trial by jury as a right to be demanded by either party, but we should give the right to a trial by the Court, without the intervention of a jury, when the parties to it consent.

This substitute also deals with the question that a less number than a full jury may render a verdict. I need not recount the experience of the bar of the country upon this question. We know, as a matter of fact, in our every day experience, that the ends of justice are not unfrequently entirely defeated by this jury system. You require now a jury of twelve. You must not only have a concurrence of judgment of eight, nine, ten, or eleven, but you must have the concurrent judgment of twelve men to render a verdict. In practical experience it is an almost every day occurrence that in a trial where the popular judgment, the judgment of the Judge upon the bench, the judgment of the bar and of the whole community, knowing the facts, all concur; yet you will find a jury out four, six, ten, twenty, or forty hours, and then come in and be discharged, finding that some one of the twelve men could not be made to concur with the eleven, and all the work is lost. These things, Mr. Chairman, work to defeat the ends of justice. They are the source of great complaint; just complaint too. The defeat of justice and the discontent that exists in the popular mind grows out of this condition of things. I would go farther and would put into this Constitution a provision—the substitute leaves the question with the Legislature—that three fourths of a jury, nine out of twelve, might render a verdict, in place of twelve out of twelve. I am aware that there are gentlemen who will agree with this proposition in part, but would still make an exception in cases of felony or perhaps in capital cases. I see no reason for that distinction. I think that the defeat of justice by reason of the non-agreement or disagreement of juries is more frequent in these cases of felony, and especially capital cases, than in any other. A man is put upon trial for his life, or for felony. He has but one thing to do to defeat justice, and that is to secure some one man on the jury who will not consent to a verdict of conviction. It is a thing of very frequent occurrence. Can any reason be given why this should be so. Now, sir, if there were some system by which we could make selection of juries in these important cases, and could guard equally against imposition, or incompetency, or interest, or bias, as we can and do with the Judge on the bench and other judicial functionaries, there might be some reason for retaining this clause to apply in criminal cases and certain Courts. But we know how juries are made up. They are drawn from the body of the people. They are examined by the County Judge and the Clerk upon a simple system prescribed by the Constitution. They are required to be taxpayers, citizens, residents, etc. You know nothing more about them than that. They get there on the roll, and the prosecution, at least, is limited to a few challenges. The truth is that you are compelled to accept the jury pretty much as it comes. Take our Judges of the Supreme Court, sitting here to pass upon cases on appeal from the various districts. It is not, at least, over three times out of four that all the Judges concur, and yet these are trained lawyers selected for their wisdom and for their experience. How much more unreasonable is it to expect that on these important questions you shall obtain a concurrence of these twelve untrained men. I trust that this substitute will be adopted in its present form, with perhaps the modification that I have already suggested.

MR. CAMPBELL. I would like to hear the amendment read as proposed to be amended.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate forever but in all cases, civil or criminal, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury and to render a verdict; but in all cases the jury may be waived by the parties."

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: As I understand it, the amendment proposes that in all criminal cases the Legislature shall have the power to designate the number that must agree upon a verdict; in other words, if the Legislature say that if eight men out of twelve deem a man guilty of murder that he shall be hung. Now, sir, so far as criminal cases are concerned, this is not only a departure from all past practice and all past experience, but it is a departure from the very principle upon which the right of trial by jury rests. I think the experience of all lawyers who are familar with the subject will show that it is a most mischievous and dangerous innovation. Why, sir, there are plenty of cases—or there are but comparatively few—but I know of several cases now on the records of our Supreme Court, where men have been convicted by juries of twelve men, under the influence of public prejudice or passion existing in their locality at the time, and where the Supreme Court, though it is extremely careful not to interfere on questions of fact, have said that the convictions were such outrages upon public justice that they would not permit them to stand, and for that reason have reversed the judgments. All men of experience in these matters know that it often happens that in a particular case public sentiment is excited and public feeling aroused to fever heat, and that often with a jury of twelve men it is extremely difficult to obtain anything like a fair trial. We all know that in a very large number of cases jurymen come into the box with their prejudices in the case, and although they think they can try it impartially, the impression in their minds is so strong that it is extremely difficult to remove it by evidence.

Now, sir, it is against the sentiment of the civilized world to deprive a man of his life or to condemn him as a felon, where there is not sufficient evidence of his guilt to satisfy twelve reasonable men that he is guilty. If you go to diminishing the number, you in that way take from him the safeguards which have always existed—which are really, in my judgment, essential for the protection of innocence. So far as this matter of guilty men escaping through the verdicts of juries is concerned, I undertake to say that, at the present time, criminals, as a general thing—of course there are, and always will be, exceptions—but as a general thing the criminal justice of the State is well administered by the Courts when the cases get there, and the guilty are punished, with the exception of a certain class of cases—a class of frauds which never do get to a jury, and which do not even get into the shape of an indictment. But where indictments are found for crimes actually committed, I appeal to the gentlemen around me if it is not time that, as a general thing, the guilty do not escape.

Allusion was made to the fact that we have now a larger proportion of criminals in our State Prison than there are in any State Prison in the Union. Does that show an unwillingness of juries to convict? Does that show that we ought to take from those who are accused the safeguards which they now possess? Now while in civil cases I am perfectly willing to leave this to the discretion of the Legislature, while even in cases of misdemeanor I think it simply a doubtful policy to make any change, yet I feel that in cases of felony, in cases where a man's life and liberty is at stake, that there ought to be, as there has always been, a unanimous verdict of a jury in order to hold him guilty.

I do not desire to occupy the time of the Convention, and I merely submit these few remarks upon this subject, expressing the hope that this innovation will not be adopted.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I was entirely in favor of the substitute as offered, but I am opposed to it with the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, and which was accepted. I move to amend by inserting the words "except felony." I do not object to giving the Legislature the power to say what shall be the number to constitute a jury or find a verdict in all cases except felony. I move, therefore, to reinsert in the proposition offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Dudley, the words "except felony."

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I rise to second the motion made by the gentleman from Sacramento, Judge McFarland. I have taken upon myself the responsibility of talking about this matter among the legal fraternity, and I have found many of them to be in favor of allowing a certain proportion of a jury, say three fourths, to find a verdict in civil cases and in minor criminal cases, but I have found the lawyers and the people almost unanimously opposed to allowing any fractional part of a jury to render a verdict in cases of felony. I believe, Mr. Chairman, from the remarks I have heard among members of the Convention upon the subject, that the amendment as offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin will be adopted, and I believe it ought to be adopted.

MR. LAINE. It is time for the committee to rise. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have directed me to report that they have had under consideration the article on preamble and declaration of rights, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The hour having arrived, the Convention took the usual recess until two P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

MAKING A SPECIAL ORDER.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the article reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, that has now been printed and placed on the desks of members, be made the special order for next Tuesday, immediately after reading the Journal.

MR. CAMPBELL. Would it not be better to make a special order of the article on Chinese for Monday, and dispose of that before taking up the other matter?

MR. ESTEE. Why? I don't see any necessity for it. We will probably not be through with this by that time.

MR. WILSON, of First District. I move that that be fixed for Tuesday next. I do not believe that the Convention will be ready before that time to take it up.

MR. BARBOUR. I make the point, that under the rule the business must be taken up in the order in which it is reported.

MR. ESTEE. There is such a rule, but that does not hinder the house from making special orders. I do not care particularly about making it for Tuesday; but it can be fixed for that date, and then if we are not ready, it can be put off.

The motion to make it a special order for Tuesday prevailed.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of further considering the article on preamble and bill of rights.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

BILL OF RIGHTS.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section seven, of the article on bill of rights, is before the committee. The Secretary will read the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. In criminal cases the right of trial by jury shall remain. In all cases, except felony, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury, and in all civil cases the number necessary to render a verdict.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: As I understand the condition of the question, it is this: that section seven of the report of the Committee on Bill of Rights is now before the Committee of the Whole, and the substitute before offered, so there are two propositions.

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir, the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Smith, moved an amendment, by way of a substitute, and the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington, moved an amendment to the amendment.

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAINE. I thought those two propositions were voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir, and the question is on the substitute moved by the gentleman from San Joaquin.

Mr. LAINE. So believing I offered a substitute for the two propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order. There is an amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, to the amendment.

Mr. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: As to the proposition reported by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, I am unable to support it, for reasons which I will state in very few words. The very first line takes away the right of trial by jury in civil cases, because it is a well known canon of law that the mention of one thing is the exclusion of the other, and for that reason I cannot support the proposition. I do not believe in taking away this great right in civil cases any more than in criminal cases.

There is a further objection to the proposition, that it leaves it in the power of the Legislature to destroy the right of a trial by jury, in that it leaves it to them to fix the number of the jury. The Legislature could then fix the number at one or two, and thereby destroy the right of trial by jury altogether or render it of no value whatever. And these substitutes or amendments are open to the same criticism. Therefore I cannot sustain them. I then desire to say to the Convention that I hope these propositions will be voted down. I believe a majority of this Convention are in favor of securing the right of trial by jury to all, and then we can provide that a jury may be waived in all cases with the consent of the Court. I can see no objections to such a course that can be urged. If this other is voted down, then I shall offer my substitute, which reads in this way:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a trial by jury may be waived by the parties in all cases, with the consent of the Court, in the manner prescribed by law. Three fourths of the jury, in all civil cases and misdemeanors, may render a verdict, and in such cases any number not exceeding twelve shall constitute the jury if the parties so elect."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, to the amendment of the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Dudley, as follows: "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but in all cases, civil or criminal, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury and to render a verdict; but in all cases the jury may be waived by the parties." Mr. McFarland moves to reinsert the words "except felony."

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: The amendment which I offer is simply to reinsert the words "except felony" in two places. Now, the sole purpose and scope of the amendment is simply to take away the right of the Legislature to limit the number of jurymen in a case of felony. It takes away the right to waive a jury in case of felony, and I do not think, sir, that the Legislature should have the power in high crimes to lessen the number on a jury; I do not think it will be safe to allow even the defendant to waive a jury in this high class of crimes. I do not believe that any one man, be he Judge or jury, should have the right to pass upon the liberty or the life of any citizen, and we all know that persons charged with crimes frequently act without due consideration, and without advice, and might frequently be led to waive a jury, when really their own rights would be jeopardized by so doing, and I do not believe any Court would take the responsibility of passing on the life or liberty of a human being. I think a number of men should share the responsibility on an occasion like that.

In the case of a misdemeanor I think the defendant should have the right to waive a trial by jury if he so desires. I can see no harm to come of it. It is done in some instances in Justices' Courts; but it is a very grave question of law whether, under the Constitution, a conviction without a jury in any criminal offense whatever would be valid. My own opinion as a lawyer is that a man cannot waive his right to a trial by jury. It has been held that it could be done, but it is certainly a very grave question of law. I do not believe he can under the Constitution. No man will claim that a man being tried for murder could waive a jury, and there is no possible difference between murder and chicken stealing before the law; but I think he should have that right in cases of misdemeanor.

Mr. BELCHER. I am unable to see any good reason why a defendant cannot be permitted to waive a jury trial in any case. Cases do arise sometimes when a jury may be waived, even in a case of felony, when it would be just as well for the defendant to be tried by the Judge as by twelve men. Now, why the right of the defendant to waive a jury should be denied is more than I am able to see. I would give the right in any case to the defendant to waive a jury with the consent of the Court. Now, in civil cases, cases now very often come before the Courts, when the parties choose to waive a jury, but the Court wants a jury and calls one; and so in these criminal cases the Court will call a jury if there is any question. But if the Court is willing, and the defendant is willing to waive a jury, I am unable to see any good reason why they should not be suffered to do so. The next question is about juries in cases of misdemeanor and in civil cases. Now, I prefer to keep the rule of twelve jurors unless the parties elect to have a smaller number, with the further provision that a less number than twelve may render a verdict.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento.

Lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Dudley: "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but in all cases, civil or criminal, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury and to render a verdict; but in all cases the jury may be waived by the parties."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAINE. I now offer my amendment as a substitute to the section as reported by the committee:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate forever, but a trial by jury may be waived by the parties in all cases with the consent of the Court in the manner prescribed by law. Three fourths of the jury in all civil cases and misdemeanors may render a verdict, and in such cases any number not exceeding twelve shall constitute the jury, if the parties so elect."

Mr. PORTER. I now offer a substitute to the amendment.

The SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all persons, and shall remain inviolate forever, in all criminal cases amounting to felony, and in all civil cases at law involving one hundred dollars in value. In all trials of persons accused of crime punishable with death, the jury shall consist of fifteen persons, but twelve of them shall be sufficient to render a verdict. In all other criminal cases amounting to felony, the jury shall consist of twelve persons, and nine of them shall be sufficient to render a verdict. In civil cases the jury shall consist of twelve persons, but the parties may agree upon a less number, or waive a jury; and in all civil cases tried by a jury, three fourths of the jury shall be sufficient to render a verdict. Cases of misdemeanors, and civil cases at law involving less than one hundred dollars in value, may be tried with such a jury, or without a jury, as the Legislature may direct."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Lost.

Mr. McFARLAND. I move to amend the substitute of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, by adding after the word "cases," where it first occurs, the words, "except felony." I do not believe that a man should be allowed to waive his right to a trial by jury in any case amounting to the dignity of felony; and this is a more important thing than gentlemen seem to think. Men who are charged with crime are not always in a position to know what is for their own interests. In the first place, they fall in the hands of a policeman, who always think that a man is guilty whenever he is arrested, and they are the first ones to influence his conduct. They are the first men from whom he derives counsel and advice, whether guilty or not; and, sir, we all know what insane things men often do under the advice and counsel of these men, when arrested for crime. We know that the judgment is not always clear when men are in a position of that kind, and also that a great many men arrested are innocent men, and even with the usual degree of self-possession hardly know what course to take. We know that criminals are often kept confined, without a chance of consulting with friends, until their minds have become biased and influenced by the blandishments of these policemen. I can understand how men in that way can be induced to waive their right to a trial by jury. I think, sir, that Judges also are liable to be biased to some extent, and I do not think, sir, that we should allow this class of citizens to be induced to give up their right to a trial by jury, and place themselves in the hands of one man. You may say, sir, that they are free agents; that they have the power to do as they please. Sir, they do not do as they please always, and often do not have the judgment to do as they should do, and I do not believe myself that any man ought to be deprived of his life or liberty unless by a verdict of twelve of his peers; and it is no satisfactory argument to say that he can demand a jury. We have all of us known men to confess to crimes of which they were entirely innocent, and we can see very easily how a man might be induced to put his case in the hands of a Judge who is so far above him in position. I do not believe that men charged with high crimes should be allowed to waive their right to a trial by jury.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I rise for the purpose of seconding the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland. The proposition itself will be such a one as I can vote for, though I should have liked to have had an amendment to prohibit the Legislature from making the jury to consist of less than a certain number, say six. But on this proposition of allowing parties in cases of felony to consent to a waiver of a jury, that is utterly and entirely wrong in principle. In civil cases the matter only concerns the parties—only involves a question of dollars and cents, but in criminal cases it involves the punishment by death or imprisonment in the State Prison, and no man has a right to consent away his rights, and ought not to be punished except that punishment and the magnitude or degree of his crime be found by a jury of twelve of his peers. This, sir, is a dangerous innovation. I am in no hurry to do away with a system that has endeared itself to the hearts of the American people. The people themselves, as well as the accused, are interested in this matter. I have known one man to bring a whole jury over to his side by showing them wherein they were mistaken. That is the right of the accused, that is a right which belongs to the community, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I believe the object here is to prevent, or rather take some power away from the Legislature with respect to this matter. Now, we say that a party shall have a right to demand a jury trial, and then, in the same breath, say that the Legislature shall have the right to say how that jury may be waived. Then does not the power go right back to the Legislature to say whether a man shall have a jury trial or not? You say he can demand it, and then we say to the Legislature, you can say under what conditions; it is for you to say when a man has waived that right—you can say, if you choose, that, for instance, unless a man sneezes three times before going into the Court-room, his right to a trial by jury is waived. If you are going to give the Legislature any such power as that over the rights held sacred by the American people, you might as well leave it all to the Legislature.

I see how that thing can be remedied, by making the Constitution, or rather this amendment of the gentleman, say that in cases of felony, and in all cases, if you like, the right of trial by jury may be expressly waived; not that the Legislature may take that right away from a man by implication, as they do in civil cases. Under this provision proposed the Legislature may do precisely what they do in civil cases. We may say, in arguing this case, that we must place some confidence in the Legislature. If so, let us leave the whole matter to them. I do not believe in leaving a matter of this kind, fraught with so much consequence, in such a condition as that. The whole right may be taken away. Leave the Legislature either full discretion, or leave them none at all in this matter. I do not believe that any of our American Constitutions have ever yet gone so far, have ever yet taken a step as far as this seems to go, in criminal cases.

I agree with Judge McFarland entirely, that we should not permit a party charged with crime to waive his right to a trial by jury, for various reasons. The reasons are numerous why we should not permit a party to waive that right. In the first place, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Sacramento, Judge McFarland, the first person who interviews a party accused of crime is the police officer or some detective officer who may take an interest in securing a conviction for their own personal ends, and who may so advise a party, and make him believe that it will be better for his own interests to submit to a trial by the Court, instead of calling on a jury of his peers. And the very object which the officer may have in view may be the conviction of the party accused.

Again, the prisoner may be led to believe, by various arts, that his interests would be better protected if he be tried before the Court than they would be to submit his case to a jury. Some gentlemen related to me a few days ago a circumstance where a party in a civil case was misled in that way. The party overheard the Judge remark, as he came out of the Court-room, after the case had been submitted to the jury, and after they had been deliberating on the case for some time—the Judge said: "I don't see why the jury is out so long: I would render a verdict in a few minutes for the plaintiff." The plaintiff immediately went to the defendant and said he would be perfectly willing to try the case before the Judge on the next trial, upon the testimony already taken. The defendant consented, and they did so, and the Court rendered a verdict against the plaintiff. Now suppose a Judge, in times of great political excitement—it would be an easy thing for him to drop some remark which would lead the prisoner to believe that the Court was favorable to him, for the purpose of entrapping the prisoner. Now, it is true that our Judges are too honorable to do anything of that kind, but such Judges as Jeffries have existed, and may exist again. While our Judges are honorable men, and no man on this floor has a greater respect for an honest Judge than I have, but unfortunately there have been bad men placed on the bench, and it is to guard against cases of that kind that our legislation is now aimed.

It is proposed here to permit a party accused to waive his right to a trial by jury. He should not be permitted to do so in any case. But if he may waive it at all, let us, in the fundamental law of the land, say how it shall be waived, and not leave it to the power of the Legislature to do away with the right entirely upon some technicality with which the party is not familiar. The jury is the proper party to try a man accused of crime, any way, for reasons well understood by every lawyer. It is a well understood fact that the Judge, who is charged with the administration of criminal justice, becomes, like other officers, like executive officers, calloused, so that it is only necessary to accuse a man and immediately his feelings incline against his innocence, while a jury, selected from the various callings and professions, not in continual contact with criminals, their minds are freer and in better condition to administer impartial justice. Their sympathies are not already frozen by continual contact with crime, and it is the very object of the law that a man accused of crime shall be tried by such men. There are a number of other equally potent reasons why the right of trial by jury should remain inviolate without the power of being waived.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I do not believe in submitting this matter to the Legislature. I would rather stand by the usages handed down to us by our fathers in the course of human progress. The principles involved are these: the office of the jury is to acquit, not to convict. In law, a person charged with a crime is supposed to be innocent until his guilt is undoubtedly proven, and I do not believe that a criminal should be allowed to waive a jury trial.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: As far as civil cases are concerned, I have no objection to that part; that is to say, parties in civil cases may waive any constitutional privileges which they may have. But when it comes down to a question of administering the criminal law, that is a matter in which the State is interested as well as the individual. I think it will be a dangerous innovation to put a clause in the Constitution that in any case involving the liberty of the citizen he should not be entitled to a fair trial by a jury of his countrymen. I can see no possible reason why this change should be made. It is true, it was stated the other day by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, that there had been cases where one man hung the jury. Well, sir, I think if a man is to be hung by a jury he should be hung by the whole jury, and not by any part of a jury, and he should not be hung in any other manner. There is no provision older, or more valuable, than this constitutional provision which says that the right of trial by jury cannot be waived by the prisoner. There is a very celebrated case on that subject to which I call your attention, in the Court of last resort, in the City of New York. It was a case of a man accused of murder, and in that case, by the consent of counsel, entered in open Court, one juror was withdrawn and the trial proceeded before eleven jurors, and when the matter came before a higher Court, they held that it was a privilege which he could not waive; that it was not in the interest of public justice that he should be allowed to waive it. Now, while I am aware that some of us haven't much regard for adjudicated cases and decisions of Courts—and I remember one gentleman said here the other day that if the law library could be locked up and all these books that the members bring here thrown out of sight, we could go to work and build a Constitution out of our heads, out of our own inner consciences. I believe he said that would represent the common sense of the present day. As far as these ancient rights and privileges are concerned, I am not of that opinion. I have a reverence for the opinions of the world's greatest men on these subjects. Now, the Court of Appeals say, in regard to this case:

"It is conceded on the part of the people, and it is very clear, that but for the consent of the plaintiff in error, he could not lawfully have been tried by eleven jurors."

Recollect that a jury consists of twelve persons, and our Constitution declares that a trial by jury in all cases shall remain inviolate forever, and that twelve persons shall constitute a jury. The Court goes on to say:

"A legal jury, according to the common law, consists of twelve persons. Our Constitution (article one, paragraph two,) declares that 'the trial by jury, in all cases in which it has heretofore been used, shall remain inviolate forever,' and the revised statutes provide in reference to trials in criminal cases, that the twelve first jurors who shall appear on being called, and be approved as indifferent, shall constitute the jury * * *.

"But it is insisted that the plaintiff in error might waive his right to a trial by twelve persons, and that having done so, the trial and conviction in this case were valid. The researches of the counsel have not enabled them to refer the Court to any case directly in point, either in favor of or against the proposition, nor are the Court aware of any such case; and hence it must be examined and decided in the light of principle, and such analogies as reported decisions afford.

"There is, obviously, a wide and important distinction between civil suits and criminal prosecutions, as to the legal right of a defendant to waive a strict and substantial adherence to the established, constitutional, statutory, and common law mode and rules of judicial proceedings. This distinction arises from the great difference in the nature of such cases, in respect to the interests involved and the objects to be accomplished.

"Civil suits relate to and affect—as to the parties against whom they are brought—only individual rights which are within their individual control, and which they may part with at their pleasure. The design of such suits is the enforcement of merely private obligations and duties. Any departure from legal rules in the conduct of such suits, with the consent of the defendants, is, therefore, a voluntary relinquishment of what belongs to the defendants exclusively; and, hence, there is manifest propriety in the law allowing such consent to have the effect designed by it, in most cases, as to matters within the jurisdiction of the Courts. The law does recognize the doctrine of waiver to a great extent; in some instances, even to the deprivation of constitutional private rights. * * * But it is settled that even in civil cases consent will not confer jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and where such jurisdiction exists, a change, by consent, of the mode of proceedings, may be so extensive as to convert the case from a judicial proceeding into a mere arbitration. * * * The substantial constitution of the legal tribunal, and the fundamental mode of its proceeding, are not within the power of the parties. It was deemed necessary to insert in our present Constitution a provision that 'a jury trial may be waived by the parties, in all civil cases, in the manner prescribed by law,' to authorize even the Legislature to confer a right to dispense with that mode of trial. This is a solemn judgment of the organic law, that, without such a provision, the trial by jury, in cases where it had theretofore been used, could not be dispensed with.

"Criminal prosecutions involve public wrongs, 'a breach and violations of public rights and duties,' which affect 'the whole community, considered as a community, in its social and aggregate capacity.' * * The end they have in view is the prevention of similar offenses, not atonement or expiation for crime committed. * * * The penalties or punishments, for the enforcement of which they are a means to the end, are not within the discretion or control of the parties accused; for no one has a right, by his own voluntary act, to surrender his liberty or part with his life. The State, the public, have an interest in the preservation of the liberties and the lives of the citizens, and will not allow them to be taken away 'without due process of law,' when forfeited, as they may be, as a punishment for crimes. Criminal prosecutions proceed on the assumption of such a forfeiture, which, to sustain them, must be ascertained and declared as the law has prescribed. Blackstone, vol. 4, 189, says: 'The King has an interest in all his subjects.' And again, vol. 1, 133, that the 'natural life, being the immediate donation of the great Creator, cannot legally be disposed of or destroyed by any individual, neither by the person himself nor by any other of his fellow creatures, merely upon their own authority.' These considerations make it apparent that the right of a defendant in a criminal prosecution to affect, by consent, the conduct of the case, should be much more limited than in civil actions. It should not be permitted to extend so far as to work radical changes in great and leading provisions as to the organization of the tribunals or the mode of proceeding prescribed by the Constitution and the laws. Effect may justly and safely be given to such consent in many particulars; and the law does, in respect to various matters, regard and act upon it as valid.

Objections to jurors may be waived; the Court may be substituted for triers to dispose of challenges to jurors; secondary in place of primary evidence may be received; admissions of facts are allowed; and in similar particulars, as well as in relation to mere formal proceedings generally, consent will render valid what without it would be erroneous. A plea of guilty to any indictment, whatever may be the grade of the crime, will be received and acted upon if it is made clearly to appear that the nature and effect of it are understood by the accused. In such a case the preliminary investigation of a Grand Jury, with the admission of the accusation in the indictment, is supposed to be a sufficient safeguard to the public interests. But when issue is joined upon an indictment, the trial must be by the tribunal and in the mode which the Constitution and laws provide, without any essential change. The public officer prosecuting for the people has no authority to consent to such a change, nor has the defendant.

"Applying the above reasoning to the present case, the conclusion necessarily follows, that the consent of the plaintiff in error to the withdrawal of one juror, and that the remaining eleven might render a verdict, could not lawfully be recognized by the Court, at the circuit, and was a nullity. If a deficiency of one juror can be waived, there appears to be no good reason why a deficiency might not be; and it is difficult to say why, upon the same principle, the entire panel might not be dispensed with, and the trial committed to the Court alone. It would be a highly dangerous innovation, in reference to criminal cases, upon the ancient and invaluable institution of trial by jury, and the Constitution and laws establishing and securing that mode of trial, for the Court to allow of any number short of a full panel of twelve jurors, and we think it ought not to be tolerated.

"The opinion of the Court of King's Bench, in the case of Lord Dacres, tried in the reign of Henry VIII for treason, strongly fortifies the conclusion above expressed. One question in that case was whether the prisoner might waive a trial by his peers and be tried by the country; and the Judges agreed that he could not, for the statute of magna charta was in the negative, and the prosecution was at the King's suit. * * * Woodeson, in his lectures (vol. 1, 346), says, the same was again resolved on the arraignment of Lord Audley, in the seventh year of the reign of Charles I, and that the reason was that the mode of trial was not so properly a privilege of the nobility as a part of the law of the land, like the trial of commoners by commoners, enacted, or rather declared, by magna charta. In 3 Just., 30, the doctrine is stated that 'a nobleman cannot waive his trial by his peers and put himself upon the trial of the country, that is, of twelve freeholders; for the statute of magna charta is that he must be tried per pares, and so it was resolved in Lord Dacres' case.'

"It is unnecessary to pursue this discussion further; and it remains only to add, as the result of the foregoing views, that in the opinion of the Court the judgment below should be reversed, and a new trial ordered."

Now, sir, I apply that argument to our Constitution. We are to say whether we will make an innovation upon these ancient privileges, that whenever a man is accused of crime he shall be brought face to face with twelve of his peers, who shall pass upon the question of his guilt after hearing all the evidence, and after mature deliberation; and I know of no reason why, if you can try a case with eleven jurors, you cannot just as legally try a case with six jurors, or why you could not do away with the jury altogether. Sir, I know of nothing that is more essential to the rights of the people of these United States than the right of trial by jury, where twelve good men and true stand between the man accused of crime and the officers of the law. I say again, I can see no reason why any such change should be made with reference to the criminal law. It is a right that is sacred to the people, and they will guard it with a jealous eye. It is a right which has been recognized ever since the existence of free government, and I hope it may continue to exist as long as time shall last. I hope no change will be attempted in our organic law that will affect the right of trial by jury in any case that may affect the life or liberty of the citizen.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, would it be permissible to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir, not at the present time.

Mr. HALE. The Convention, or rather the Committee of the Whole, has not had an opportunity to express its judgment upon the broad proposition involved here, and I would like to have a chance to test the sense of the committee upon a proposition a little broader than that covered by the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine. For the purpose of illustrating my argument, I desire to read an amendment which I have prepared, and which I shall offer at the proper time:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever, but in all cases whatever, except criminal cases, where the punishment may be death, or imprisonment for life, a jury may be expressly waived by the parties with consent of the Court. The jury shall consist of twelve persons, except that in all civil cases and criminal cases not amounting to felony, the parties may agree upon a less number, and in all cases except criminal cases punishable by death or imprisonment for life, a verdict may be rendered by the concurrence of three fourths of the jury."

Now, it will be recognized by all that the number of cases of felony tried in our Courts is exceedingly large as compared with the whole number of criminal cases; whereas, the number of criminal cases punishable by death or imprisonment for life are comparatively few. I take it that the committee has practically expressed its judgment against extending these provisions to cases which may involve the taking of life or imprisonment for life. But I would like to test the sense of the committee on the question of extending this right of waiver to less than all of the jury in criminal cases not punishable by death or imprisonment for life. If the committee should reject the present proposition I shall offer this to test the sense of the body.

Mr. ESTEE. This section as reported by the committee reads as follows:

"In criminal cases the right of trial by jury shall remain. In all cases except felony the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury, and in all civil cases the number necessary to render a verdict."

As I construe that, sir, in all cases except felony, the Legislature may fix the number of the jury. Now, what are they going to do in cases of felony? We are not making criminal law, we are making a Constitution. It strikes me that the language is very peculiar, and very susceptible of a different construction, and very uncertain, and I move that the committee now rise, and report it back to the Convention, with the recommendation that sections seven, eight, nine, thirteen, and fourteen be referred to the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department. I certainly think that such a grave and important question should receive more careful consideration.

Mr. McCALLUM. I rise to a point of order. It is that the motion that the committee rise is debatable, as I learned a few moments ago.

Mr. HALE. I second the motion that the committee rise.

Division having been called for, the motion was lost by a vote of fifty-eight ayes to seventy-two noes.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I am altogether opposed to any innovation on the right of trial by jury, as far as it affects a criminal case. And I am also opposed to any change in the law with regard to civil cases, that shall not be accompanied with the condition that the Legislature may at any time restore it to the old plan. I have found in the Constitution of Nevada a provision covering this subject that commends itself to my judgment, and I shall vote against the amendment, and also against the provision as it now stands, for the purpose of offering that clause in the Nevada Constitution, if I am permitted so to do. That clause reads as follows:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever. A jury trial may be waived by the parties by the consent of the Court in all civil cases, as provided by law. In civil cases, if three fourths of the jury agree upon a verdict, it shall stand and have the same force and effect as a verdict of the whole jury, provided the Legislature, by a law passed by three fourths of all the members elected, may require a unanimous verdict, notwithstanding this provision."

This obviates the objections made by some of the gentlemen, by providing that it must be by consent of the Court, and in the mode prescribed by law. It preserves to every man charged with any kind of crime the sacred right of trial by jury. Farther, if, after actual experience, the people should discover that it is unwise, the power is lodged with the Legislature to restore it as it stood before. I think it is a good provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to insert the words "except felony."

Mr. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I regret, sir, that the proposition before the committee has not been referred to the Judiciary Committee. It relates to the administration of justice; it is a very important matter, one that we cannot very well manipulate in this large body. The report of the committee I disagree with, and I presume three fourths of the Convention will oppose the radical change proposed by the committee that make this report. That would substantially do away with a jury altogether, except in criminal cases amounting to felony. But perhaps public sentiment is undergoing a change in regard to the so-called jury system as known to us under the common law. At common law a jury consists of twelve persons, and every Constitution contains a provision in relation to trial by jury, which means a jury of twelve men, and any attempt to evade it of course would be a mistrial, when it comes before the Court. But, notwithstanding all this, we have a right to engraft in our Constitution a provision making six, or ten, or eighteen men a jury in criminal or civil cases, because it is the fundamental law, the organic law, and we have a right to prescribe rules, and as I said before, it is not a question which can be very readily settled in so large a body as this. It requires the consultation of some clear-headed men, otherwise we will become muddled over it.

Now, the proposition of my friend from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, proposes that three fourths of a jury shall render a verdict. I am in favor of that proposition. The proposed amendment embodied that proposition, which I have here before me. But the last clause of the proposition says that the jury shall consist of any number less than twelve, if the parties agree. Well, suppose they agree upon a jury of ten; the question comes in, what number constitutes three fourths of ten? If you have a jury of twelve, and you get eight out of the twelve to sign a verdict, you have it.

Now, in Scotland, the jury system that has prevailed there for years is this: In criminal or civil cases the jury is composed of eighteen members, and twelve of the eighteen are required to render a verdict. That is a very good system, according to my opinion. It has been in force there for years, and has operated very well, while in England it is still a unanimous verdict of twelve men. I believe here in these United States, in various of the States, they have changed their jury system, and some of them have abolished jury trials in certain cases, even in criminal cases. A great many of them have made changes. The party undoubtedly waives a jury trial; but it is said here that a party ought not to be allowed to waive a trial by jury. Well, sir, when he comes before the Court and pleads guilty, is not that a waiver of jury trial? He may come before the Court and say, "I wish to waive a jury, and simply wish the Court to look into this matter." Well, if I was the Judge, I would say no; I will not consent to a waiver of a jury; I shall not consent to have this burden thrown upon me. Neither would a Judge consent, where the damages are of an uncertain character, to have a jury waived; and I do not think this burden should be imposed upon the Court where the damages are so uncertain that it can only be arrived at approximately any way, or in a case where the judgment may be in the nature of exemplary damages.

Now, since we have this matter here, I will refer to some of the objections. Now, take the Constitutions of Arkansas, of Minnesota, and Wisconsin, which read:

"The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, but a jury trial may be waived in all cases."

As I understand it, it relates to criminal as well as civil cases. Again, take the Constitution of New York:

Digitized by Google

"The trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used, shall remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law."

MR. WINANS. That is the language of the Constitution of this State.

MR. HAGER. Now I pass again to the Constitution of Maryland:

"The parties to any cause may submit the same to the Court for determination without the aid of a jury; and the Judge or Judges of any Court of this State, except the Court of Appeals, shall order and direct the record of proceedings in any suit or action, issue or petition, presentment or indictment, pending in such Court, to be transmitted to some other Court (and of a different circuit, if the party applying shall so elect,) having jurisdiction in such cases, whenever any party to such cause, or the counsel of any party, shall make a suggestion in writing, supported by the affidavit of such party, or his counsel, or other proper evidence, that the party cannot have a fair or impartial trial in the Court in which such suit or action, issue or petition, presentment or indictment is pending, or when the Judges of said Court shall be disqualified under the provisions of this Constitution to sit in any such suit, action, issue or petition, presentment or indictment," etc.

Then we take up the Constitution of Michigan:

"The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate.

"In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the vicinage; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor; to have the assistance of counsel for his defense; and in all civil cases, in which personal liberty may be involved, the trial by jury shall not be refused."

And this is the Nebraska Constitution:

"The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate; but the Legislature may authorize trial by jury of a less number than twelve men, in Courts inferior to the District Court."

The point I wish to illustrate is, that we may change the jury system by a constitutional provision; that we are not bound strictly to adhere to the old common law rule of twelve men; that we may depart from that rule. Then we have the Constitution of Nevada, which was referred to by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law; and in civil cases, if three fourths of the jurors agree upon a verdict, it shall stand and have the same force and effect as a verdict by the whole jury; provided, the Legislature, by a law passed by a two thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict, notwithstanding this provision."

Then we have the Constitution of North Carolina:

"In all issues of fact, joined in any Court, the parties may waive the right to have the same determined by a jury, in which case the finding of the Judge upon the facts shall have the force and effect of a verdict of a jury."

I simply read these various provisions in order that the Convention may understand that we have the right to change the jury system, and make it not only different from what it now is, but in conflict to what has been known to be the principles of the common law. In other words, we may say that a jury shall be composed of six men, in all civil actions; or, in criminal actions we may say that two thirds or three fourths of a jury may render a verdict. And now the matter to be determined is, what is the sentiment of this Convention in regard to these different propositions? If we should offer a resolution that a jury shall consist of twelve men, that would get at the sentiment of the Convention, and all amendments could be formulated on that decision. If we should offer a resolution that a verdict might be rendered by two thirds of three fourths of a jury, that would be a decision as to that part of it. But we are here struggling over various propositions without arriving at the judgment of the Convention on any one of them.

As I said before, at the commencement, public opinion is to some extent undergoing a change. I think it is. A great many men who have reflected upon this subject have serious doubts about the jury system as it now exists as a proper mode of administering justice. There seems to be an impression prevailing that men on the jury may be tampered with. Where you require a unanimous verdict of twelve men, a man who is being tried may have a friend among the twelve who is able to defeat the ends of justice. Cases are often seen where one man hangs the jury. This practice is used over and over again. Again and again we see men of influence and wealth evading punishment in that way, and these things have a tendency to cast a doubt on the wisdom of retaining the present jury system. Now, let some man of great wealth be indicted for some crime, and he is put upon trial before a jury of twelve men, and if it turns out that one of the jurors, or two or three of them, stand out persistently for acquittal, that is sufficient to create a suspicion that they may have been tampered with. That is what we do not know. I am inclined to the conclusion that we will have to dispense with this unanimous verdict on the part of the jury, and take something less than that; and I hope this Constitution will be so framed as to meet public opinion on this subject.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: Mr. Hager has aptly said that public opinion is undergoing a change in regard to the jury system, and he has expressed a great deal of truth in a very few words. Mr. Chairman, for forty years I have been a doctor, and I have learned something in regard to the change he refers to. Forty years ago the popular idea with Americans was the palladium of our liberties. To-day the popular idea, even among the legal profession, is that the jury system is the bulwark of thieves. That is illustrative in some measure of the change of popular sentiment.

But, Mr. Chairman, this is one phase of this question that I particularly feel interested in. It may be that the legal gentlemen in this Convention, notwithstanding that they admit in private conversation that it is a delusion, desire to perpetuate it. But there is one proposition in which I am particularly interested, and that is the reduction of the number of jurors. If gentlemen are determined to perpetuate the jury system, I at least, in the interest of the citizens, and of the taxpayers, demand that the number shall be reduced. I have the figures here showing the cost of the jury system in Sacramento County, and multiplying that by twenty-four, which is the difference between Sacramento County and the State of California, shows that a reduction of the number of jurors from twelve to seven would be a saving of three hundred and eighty thousand dollars a year. And when the time comes I propose to offer a substitute, that the number be reduced to seven, and I shall demand to know why and wherefore seven jurors are not as good as seventy, if the interest of the public is considered. I assert that seven jurors are as good as seventy or seven thousand. For the present I am not at liberty to offer an amendment, but I will make the suggestion, simply to confirm what Judge Hager has said, that there is a very great change in popular sentiment, and I think the people are demanding relief from one end to the other of the country.

Here, for instance, we have at the present time a law requiring that jurors shall be drawn by the County Judge, and serve one year. About two thirds or three fourths are exempt, from some cause or other, and this expense is all saddled upon the taxpayers. Farmers are taken away from their farms, and they are complaining loudly and bitterly, for their time is taken from them without any compensation. True, they receive two dollars per day, and that pays their board, but their time is a total loss, and, as I said before, they demand of us that we give them some relief; if not entire relief, at least a partial relief, such as would be afforded by the reduction of the number.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I am in hopes that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, will be voted down. I also prefer the present Constitution to any Constitution I have heard quoted. The jury system is plain and simple. This jury system has been in existence for ages, and I think time has vindicated the wisdom of ages. I differ with the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Hager, when he says that public opinion is against the jury system. I am not in favor of an innovation which I believe to be dangerous to society. In regard to this matter of allowing less than the whole of the jury to bring in a verdict, in any case, I say this, as has been well said by the gentleman from San Francisco, that I believe in requiring a unanimous verdict; and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, will be voted down. I will merely say that I will offer this amendment at the time when it will be in order, so as to make the present constitutional provisions conform to the old Constitution:

"SEC. 3. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties, in all civil cases, in the manner to be prescribed by law."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I do not intend to speak at length upon this subject. I am satisfied that the Convention is ready for the question, and was ready for it some time ago, and the debate has satisfied me still more upon the truth of that proposition. That this section should have gone to the Judiciary Committee I am satisfied. The proposition that was presented this morning should have prevailed. The section here which has been reported by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, I will say, without any disrespect to that committee, is not as neatly drawn, not as compact and clear as it should be. I will call attention to the reading and construction of it:

"In criminal cases the right of trial by jury shall remain."

Remain where? It remains in criminal cases and nowhere else. It practically abolishes jury trials in civil cases. It especially reserves it in criminal cases alone, leaving the Legislature untrammeled on that subject, having the power to adopt or not adopt a jury for civil cases. The language is not as good in that respect even as section three of the old bill of rights: "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever," is much stronger and better language; and then it follows on: "In all cases," that includes criminal cases, "except felonies, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury." They are not obliged to have a jury at all, but they may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury, except in case of felony; there they cannot. In cases of felony there would be a right remaining to the old common law jury of twelve and a unanimous verdict; but in any other case the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury, but it is not obliged to have any jury at all. And then in any civil case it says the Legislature may prescribe the number to render a verdict, but they are not required to have a jury at all in any of these cases.

I do not believe that a majority of this Convention are prepared to adopt a section into the Constitution which abolishes jury trials in all cases except felonies, or to leave it to the Legislature to determine whether, in that great class of crimes called misdemeanors, there shall be a jury or not, as it sees fit, and in civil cases there may be a jury or not, as the Legislature shall determine. That is my interpretation of section seven, and if I am correct, why it certainly should be expressed in such manner that such a construction cannot be placed upon it. I am sincere in my construction of it, believing as I have stated, that it is capable of this construction—abolishes all right to a trial by jury, except in cases of felony; leaves it to the Legislature to determine whether, in misdemeanors and civil cases, there shall be a jury or not.

Now, in regard to the proposition of the gentleman from Santa Clara, it is clearer, but still I do not think it contains exactly what would be the sense of the Convention: "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate forever, but trial by jury may be waived by the parties in all cases, with the consent of the Court, in the manner prescribed by law." Now, according to that, in civil cases, the parties themselves cannot control their own case unless by the consent of the Court. I do not see why, in a civil case, where counsel agree, they cannot waive a jury and have the case determined by the Court. But this proposition makes the consent of the Court necessary in civil cases to the waiver of a jury. This brings me back again to my proposition that this section should go to the Judiciary Committee, and be carefully considered and reported upon; and without wishing to be considered obstinate, I renew my motion that this committee now rise and report to the Convention a recommendation that all further action upon sections seven and eight be suspended, and the subject-matter referred to the Judiciary Committee to report upon the same. However, I will confine it to section seven alone. There are some other questions involved here which I have not discussed at all. If it does not go to the Judiciary Committee it can be discussed in open Convention. I think some of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States are involved in this, but I do not care to discuss them now at this place; therefore I think it should go to the Judiciary Committee in order to examine it as to that matter. And I say it without any disrespect to the members of the committee. I know that anything, however skillfully drawn, when it comes afterward to be carefully looked into and criticised, may be found to be defective; and a person who draws a section may himself see that it is not what he intended it to be; and we have now had a chance to lay bare the defects in this section, and ought to have a most careful and critical consideration. It is for these reasons that I have renewed my motion without any disrespect to the Convention, or to any member of the Convention.

MR. HAGER. I offer an amendment to the motion, that the committee be instructed to report at an early day in order that the Convention may not be delayed in the consideration of this article. I would ask that the committee be instructed to report on Saturday morning, or to-morrow morning.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee rise is not debatable.

MR. VAN DYKE. I haven't heard any objection.

MR. WILSON. I accept the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion is that the committee rise, report back the section, and recommend that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to report to-morrow morning.

The motion prevailed on a standing vote: ayes, 73; noes, 43.

IN CONVENTION.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: Is the motion open to debate now.

THE PRESIDENT. No, sir; no debate. The report of the Committee of the Whole, with its recommendation, is now before the Convention. It is not a debatable question. The motion is now to refer to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I wish to say this to the members of the Convention, that if we had arrived at any conclusion—if we had arrived at some determination here, so that all that was required was to put it in proper shape—then something would be accomplished by referring it to the Judiciary Committee. But it must be apparent that we have not arrived at any conclusion whatever as to the framing of this section. There is a division of sentiment in this Convention on the question of whether the common law jury shall be retained in all cases of felony, and upon the other question of whether in cases of misdemeanor the matter shall be left to the Legislature, and also upon the question of a waiver of jury, and how far it shall extend. We have not arrived at any conclusion whatever on these questions, and it will do no good to refer it to the Judiciary Committee. Now, sir, suppose this is referred to that committee—and I understand from the debate here that the members of that committee differ among themselves on these questions—suppose a majority of that committee report a section here, why, we will have to go over this same ground again. We have not advanced a step. It will still be subject to amendment, and we will have just as many amendments here as there are different views upon it in the Convention. Now, as Chairman of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, I have no pride of opinion in reference to this question. It was a compromise section by our committee. I think, however, it is not subject to the criticisms bestowed on it by the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. And upon the whole, for myself, I think the best thing this Convention could do is to take the section read by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, from the Nevada Constitution. It is certainly an improvement upon ours, and I for one would be willing to adopt it. It leaves the matter somewhat elastic; it provides for a verdict by a two-thirds vote in civil cases, and authorizes the Legislature to restore the old system in case the new one does not give satisfaction. I think that is the best thing the Legislature can do under the circumstances. I think it is a wrong idea, whenever a question comes up here that we cannot immediately agree upon, to rush it off to the Judiciary Committee. We want first to ascertain the sentiments of this body upon certain points; find out if we can what they desire to accomplish, so that when it is reported back we will not have to go over the same ground again. It is simply a waste of time, and the long debate we have had over this section has not in any manner indicated the sentiments of the Convention as to any one of the points involved.

MR. MCCALLUM. I am perfectly willing to sit here and listen to any discussion, if at the end of it we can avail ourselves of the benefit of it and come to a vote upon the propositions involved. Here is a proposition pending, coming from the gentleman from Santa Clara, which seems to meet with general favor in this Convention. My impression is that it will meet with favor in this Convention. Gentlemen say we are not resolved on anything. Well, we can't do anything, because they won't give us a chance to vote. I must enter my protest here, once for all, against these motions to rise and refer these matters to committees. We have not come to any conclusion yet. For an hour and a half we have discussed this question, as to what we shall do with this seventh section. Why not vote upon it? Why not return to the Committee of the Whole and vote on these two propositions which were before the committee? What light is this Judiciary Committee going to give this Convention that they cannot give it now? This matter has already been to a committee, and the report of that committee is now before the Convention for action. When will this thing end, if we take the report of one committee, and without arriving at any conclusion refer it to another committee. In that way every section of every article in the Constitution might be referred to different committees before any action has been taken on it. Now, I don't want this whole matter to be renewed again. I have listened to all this discussion, and I would like to have an opportunity to vote on this question this evening, and I believe the gentleman's proposition from Santa Clara will be adopted, and I make a motion now that we return to the Committee of the Whole, in order to get a vote on it.

MR. TINNIN. I move the previous question.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is to return to the Committee of the Whole.

Division being called for, the motion was lost—ayes forty-seven, not a majority.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion now is to refer it to the Judiciary Committee, according to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole.

The motion prevailed, on a standing vote—ayes eighty-three, a clear majority.

RESOLUTION.

MR. BARBOUR. I wish to send up a resolution to assist the Judiciary Committee in obtaining the sense of the Convention.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Convention that the common law jury in criminal cases of the grade of felony should not be denied or interfered with.

MR. CAPLES. I offer an amendment, that the number of all juries be fixed at seven:

"To provide that all juries shall be composed of seven jurors."

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. President: As several of the committees are anxious to sit, I move that the Convention adjourn until to-morrow at ten o'clock.

The motion was lost—ayes, 67; noes, 77.

MR. TURNER. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. That will carry the resolution there also.

The motion prevailed, and the resolution and amendment were tabled.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering section eight of the article on preamble and bill of rights.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section eight.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 8. No person shall be held to answer for a crime, or other public offense, punishable by death, or imprisonment in the State Prison (except in cases of impeachment, and in cases of militia when in actual service, and in the land and naval forces in time of war, or which this State may keep with the consent of Congress in time of peace), unless on presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury. In all other cases, offenses shall be prosecuted by indictment, information, accusation, or complaint, as concurrent remedies, as may be prescribed by law. A Grand Jury shall consist of not less than fifteen nor more than eighteen persons, two thirds of whom may find an indictment or true bill. The Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each house, may abolish and restore the Grand Jury system.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that the committee now rise, and report back to the Convention sections eight, nine, thirteen, and fourteen, with the recommendation that they be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to report the same back to-morrow morning. As the gentleman well observed, there are ten sections on which we can work. There is enough to do, and there is every reason in the world why these sections should be referred.

MR. WHITE. I move that the whole bill of rights be sent to the Judiciary Committee, as an amendment.

MR. FREUD. I move as an amendment, that it be recommitted to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

THE CHAIRMAN. That is out of order—we are in Committee of the Whole. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, that the committee rise and report the sections back, with the recommendation that they be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to report to-morrow morning.

Division being called for the motion prevailed—ayes, 75; noes, 47.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, and have instructed me to report back to the Convention sections eight, nine, thirteen, and fourteen, with the recommendation that they be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to report on them to-morrow morning.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that the Convention adopt the report of the Committee of the Whole.

MR. FREUD. Is the report capable of being amended now.

THE PRESIDENT. It is a motion to refer to the Judiciary Committee, and is not amendable.

MR. FREUD. I move, as an amendment, that it be recommitted to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, and these gentlemen can have the privilege of coming before that committee and stating their views. I think this is due, as a matter of courtesy and respect to that committee. I am willing to concede to the Judiciary Committee a great deal of learning and knowledge, but there are other committees of just as much ability.

MR. WATERS. I support this motion to refer these sections to the Judiciary Committee. Gentlemen will all recollect that there have been various propositions introduced in this Convention, all of which have been referred to that committee, and are now pending before it, concerning the Grand and trial jury system. These matters are before that committee, and have been thoroughly considered. Now if this Convention desires to treat that committee right, after sending these various propositions before it, after that committee proceeded to consider these propositions, and before the committee have had time to make a report, to take up the subject-matter and finally dispose of it, I think you may as well dissolve that committee. There are some debatable propositions concerning this jury system, and I think the committee ought to have an opportunity to make a report before the subject-matter is finally disposed of. There is nothing whatever that the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights can take offense at. There are various subject-matters involved here in this report which properly belong to the Judiciary Committee, and matters involving the same subject-matter, in part, have been considered by that committee, and they are nearly ready to report; so I think it is entirely proper that all these sections should go to the Judiciary Committee, and let us have unanimity at least, on the part of those who are presumed to know a little more about juries and jury systems than a committee not composed exclusively of lawyers. I think it is fitting and proper that these sections should be referred to that committee. It will save a great deal of time, as they will present them in some shape, that this Convention can know how to act.

MR. JONES. Mr. President: It does not seem possible to me that any time can be saved by such a reference. The mover of that reference, I believe, was the author of the motion or resolution which was adopted by this Convention, that so much of the Constitution as pertained to the bill of rights should be referred to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights; that so much of the existing Constitution as pertains to the legislative department should be referred to the Legislative Committee, and so on through the list. Now it seems to me that this is a violation of that rule. We are proceeding to take this matter out of the hands of the Committee on Bill of Rights before even a vote has been taken; in fact, before there has been any expression of opinion as to its merits in the Convention. If this reference would end all controversy I would most heartily accede to it, but it must be discussed and considered when it comes back from that committee. No committee can bind this Convention and I do not see how this is going to save any time.

MR. FREUD. I call for my amendment.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to refer to the Judiciary Committee.

The motion prevailed, and the sections were referred.

ADJOURNMENT.

At four o'clock P. M., on motion of Mr. Shoemaker, the Convention adjourned.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The following communication was received and laid on the table:

"To the Honorable Members of the Constitutional Convention of California:

"The great evils that in our present time are pressing, not only on the poor but on all classes of society, have their origin not in the fault, crime, or corruption of single persons, or not even in corporations of corrupt men, but in the defectiveness of our laws and institutions. The remedy for said evils can therefore never be gained by a change of persons in office, but only by a radical change of our organizations. This truth I wish to impress especially upon the minds of the delegates elected by the Workingmen's party of California. If the leader or President of this party means really to work for the benefit and welfare of the people, he is certainly on a very wrong line by stumping for Ben. Butler.

"The defects under which society suffers are only to be corrected by establishing a real self-government, the Constitution of which is built on the principles laid down in the following sketch, which, to investigate carefully, I, as the speaker of thousands of well-meaning citizens of California, earnestly beseech your honorable body.

"Very respectfully,

"E. STEINLE.

"SKETCH OF THE FRAMEWORK FOR A NEW CONSTITUTION OF CALIFORNIA.

"We, the people of California, in order to establish justice, promote the general welfare, and secure our rights and liberties, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the State of California:

"ARTICLE I.

"GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

"SECTION 1. All men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and attaining safety and happiness.

"SEC. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. The citizens of a free, republican State must never depend from the qualities and good will of single persons, but must carry on all public affairs and business themselves, and retain all governmental power in their own hands.

"SEC. 3. All offices of power for single men shall be forever abolished.

"SEC. 4. The whole body politic of citizens, divided into districts, shall rule all political actions.

"ARTICLE II.

"THE PEOPLE OF CALIFORNIA.

"SECTION 1. The people of this State are divided into four classes: a: Citizens; b: Persons who intend to become citizens; c: Persons who do not want to become citizens; d: Persons who cannot become citizens.

"SEC. 2. Citizens are—a: All persons born in this State over eighteen years old, without distinction of race or sex; b: All inhabitants of this State who are citizens of the United States by birthright, or who have lawfully acquired the right of citizenship in this or any other State of the United States.

"ARTICLE III.

"CONDUCT OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS.

"All political action, conducting of public affairs, and business, is done: 1. By the whole body politic of citizens; 2. By the House of State Agents of the people; 3. By the Boards of Municipal Agents of the people.

"ARTICLE IV.

"POLITICAL ACTION OF THE PEOPLE.

"SECTION 1. It shall be the duty of every citizen, and of every aspirant to citizenship, to take an active part in the political action of the people of California. The neglect of this duty shall be fined in several degrees, in the end, by the loss of the right of citizenship.

"SEC. 2. The State of California shall be divided into districts, each of which containing five hundred citizens and an undefined number of aspirants to citizenship.

"SEC. 3. One of these districts shall be the political headquarters of the whole body politic of citizens of the State of California.

"SEC. 4. The members of each district shall be bound to convene once in a month, in order: a: To frame instructions for the agents of the people. b: To receive and investigate accounts from persons in office or in the service of the people. c: To hear and investigate complaints against public agents or persons in the service of the people, and in case of fault to punish or revoke them from their positions. d: To hear proposals for new laws, rules or regulations, laid before them by the House of Agents, and to accept or reject them. No law of general importance shall be valid before it is voted upon by the body politic of citizens and approved by a majority. e: To elect new agents or persons for offices emptied by former incumbents.

"SEC. 5. Candidates for citizenship have the right to partake in discussions, but cannot vote.

"SEC. 6. Every district shall elect from its members three permanent Secretaries. The Corresponding Secretary shall communicate all important actions to the headquarters of the State. The presiding officer shall be elected for each meeting.

"SEC. 7. Each district shall choose and hold in place one member for the House of Agents.

"SEC. 8. In all litigious cases of general interest, in which the agents of the people or their respective committees could not agree, the body politic of citizens is the last instance and the supreme judge.

"ARTICLE V.

"THE HOUSE OF STATE AGENTS.

"SECTION 1. The House of Agents of the people shall be composed by the delegates elected from each district of citizens.

"SEC. 2. The House of Agents shall combine in itself the legislative, the executive, and the judicial power. The division of power, viz: the division of the Legislature in Senate and Assembly. The offices of Governor and of professional judges shall be abolished.

"SEC. 3. The House of Agents shall select persons for public offices and form committees from its members for conducting all branches of public affairs and business.

"SEC. 4. For the framing and establishing of laws, rules, and regulations, the agents of the people shall be governed by the following observations and principles: The fundamental evil, under which the societies of men in all civilized State organizations suffer, lies in the fact that a small minority of the people holds the riches of the country in their hands, and that in consequence thereof the great majority is poor and suffering from misery and starvation. With wealth is always power and dominion, and with poverty, want of liberty, and servitude connected. With the continuance of the said fundamental evil a democratic republic, a free State, a self-government of the people is an impossibility. The sources of this evil are: a: Want of intelligence of the mass of the people. b: Want of laws to prevent deceivers of the people to spread superstition, and thereby damage the intelligence of the people. c: Want of laws to prevent persons to hold incontrollable positions of power. d: Want of energy, strong will, and of political activity of the majority of citizens. e: Want of laws by which the accumulation of the riches of the country in the hands of a few is prevented.

"In order to unroot the said evil, the House of Agents shall frame and propose to the people a law by which the most liberal provisions are made for all public institutions of instruction and education; for increasing the salaries of teachers; for the supply of books and utensils used by pupils; for the establishment of institutions for the instruction and practical education of farmers, mechanics, and artists of all kinds.

"In all cases education and instruction is entirely free of any expense for pupils and students.

"b. A law that all persons who pretend to be astrologers, to be able to predict the future, to be in connection with spirits or ghosts, to have any knowledge of one or more supernatural beings, to be able to inform the people about one or more such supernatural beings; who also pretend that there are letters or scriptures, often called holy scriptures, of such supernatural beings, or that such letters or scriptures are written by men inspired by a God or spirit, or any other so called supernatural being, shall be compelled to bring indubitable proof of their assertions before an impartial commission, elected by the people, or they shall not be allowed to practice for money or other compensation, to teach in public institutions, or to receive salaries for their practicing.

"c. A law by which the real estate of California is declared public property. No single person can be proprietor of land or real estate. For agricultural purposes, for raising of stock, for the erection of any kind of buildings, the land must be rented through the House of Agents. The present owners of real estate property will either be left in the right of using the same as far as it is cultivated or covered with buildings, or they, or their heirs shall be properly indemnified for giving up the same to the State. * [See note at end.]

d. A law by which a progressive income tax is levied, so that an income of one thousand dollars a year or less is entirely free from tax; an income of from one thousand dollars to three thousand dollars yearly shall be taxed with one per cent.; an income of from three thousand dollars to five thousand dollars yearly with five per cent. Every income over five thousand dollars a year shall be taxed in such a way that five thousand dollars is taxed with five per cent.; every one hundred dollars over five thousand dollars, with seventy-five per cent. Out of the money received by the rent of real estate and by the income tax, large general State funds shall be created for school and educational purposes, and for loan institutions, from which every good standing citizen shall have the right to borrow money in order to commence any kind of honest, legal business, the inventory of which shall be held as security. In all such cases only small interest shall be charged. In certain cases, to be defined by the respective committees from the House of Agents, no interest at all shall be charged.

"SEC. 5. The House of Agents shall further provide for State savings banks. These and all other funds are to be held under the constant control of the people.

"SEC. 6. They shall establish rules and laws, according to which the public affairs in the different counties, townships, and communities are conducted in a similar way as for the State, by agents of the people, elected from the districts. These agents shall constitute themselves as a Board of Municipal Agents.

"SEC. 7. The House of Agents shall enact a law to the effect that all persons chosen to an office shall remain in and hold that office until they resign, or until they are revoked from their position by the people for want of trust, or for infidelity or crime.

"SEC. 8. They shall provide for the formation of military companies in each district, which shall be held constantly under the control of the people. Every officer in the militia is subject to the same rules and laws as all persons in office in the service of the people.

"SEC. 9. They shall provide for the establishment: a: Of institutions in which all old or sick persons unfit to work are cared for. b: Of institutions for insane persons, for drunkards, for vagabonds, unwilling to work from their own free will. c: Of institutions for the confinement and correction of criminals.

"SEC. 10. Capital punishment shall be forever abolished, because the commitment of crimes is the natural consequence of the faults of our political, social, or educational institutions, and, therefore, more the fault of society in general than of single persons.

"SEC. 11. The House of Agents shall be in regular convention three months every year, from January first to April first, and each member shall receive ten dollars per day during the time of session.

"SEC. 12. After the adjournment of their sessions, the Secretaries and the committees for conducting public affairs shall remain in action.

"ARTICLE VI.

"THE BOARDS OF MUNICIPAL AGENTS.

"SECTION 1. For conducting public business in the various counties, townships, and communities, the citizens shall elect persons who shall constitute Boards of Municipal Agents. These Boards shall appoint persons for offices and form committees for the conduct of all public affairs and business. The offices of Mayor, Auditor, the Courts, Boards of Supervisors are therefore to be abolished and replaced by committees from the Boards of Agents, and by juries selected by the people.

"SEC. 2. Police officers shall be appointed by the Boards of Agents.

"SEC. 3. The establishment of laws, rules, and regulations by the Boards must be laid before the people to be voted upon.

"ARTICLE VII.

"GENERAL RULES AND OBSERVATIONS.

"SECTION 1. The Constitution of California shall be revised, and, according to the progress of time, improved every ten years, if it is not resolved by the people to do this at an earlier period.

"SEC. 2. Every person residing in this State shall have the right to express his opinion freely by word and by press.

"SEC. 3. No person residing in this State, who is not a citizen, or has not declared his intention to become a citizen, shall be allowed to do any business in this State for supporting himself or family, or to make money.

"SEC. 4. No Chinese or Mongolian can become a citizen of the United States, and, therefore, cannot be permitted to do any business or labor in this State for the purpose of making money.

"Immediately after the acceptance of this Constitution by the people, the delegates, who framed the same shall convene in Sacramento and act as the agents of the people.

"Their first business shall be to constitute themselves as the House of State Agents, appoint secretaries and form committees for the different branches of public business. They shall at once act on the division of the State into districts, appoint the headquarters and regulate the political action of the people. The districts shall, immediately after they are established, elect persons for the Boards of Municipal Agents and notify through the Corresponding Secretary of the political headquarters of the State, all persons who hold public offices under the old Constitution that they have to quit their positions.

"Hon. Members of Constitutional Convention:

"Many alterations, additions, and by-laws will be required to this framework. But if you will only hold on to the principles set forth in Section 4 of Article V, then there is no doubt, provided such a Constitution is accepted by the people, that in a short time the inhabitants of our State will be a union of happy human beings. With the best wishes for your success of framing a Constitution by which this aim will be gained, and by which you will give a glorious example to the whole civilized world, I sign,

"Very respectfully,

"E. STEINLE."

* Note to Sec. 4, Art. V.—This means, not at all and by no means, "Communism." To possess personal property as the main instrument of individual liberty shall be one of the most sacred rights of men. But personal and individual property is only and can only be what is created by the mental and physical process of individuals. What is given by nature, as air, water, and soil, is common property.

STATIONERY BILLS.

MR. CAPLES offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to furnish the Convention with a detailed statement of the items of stationery and other articles, and the value thereof in money, supplied to each member of this Convention.

REPORTS—NIGHT WATCHMAN.

MR. HILBORN, from the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses, made the following report:

MR PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses, to whom was referred Resolution No. 57, introduced by Mr. Eagon, relating to paying James Saltry as Night Watchman — have had the same under consideration, and herewith report the same back, and recommend that it be adopted.

HILBORN, Chairman.

The PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Controller of State be and he is hereby directed to draw his warrant in favor of James Saltry for one hundred and five dollars, for twenty-one days' service as Night Watchman, and the State Treasurer to pay the same out of the appropriation for the expenses of this Convention.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I would like to be informed who authorized Mr. Saltry to act as Night Watchman for twenty-one days. I regard it as a steal, an outrageous steal.

MR. HILBORN. I would like to send up and have read an extract from the Journal of Monday, September thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight,

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Governor then announced the following appointments, to act until the Convention should be permanently organized: Minute Clerk, A. J. Dobbins; Sergeant-at-Arms, J. M. Farrelly; Watchman, Jas. Saltry; Doorkeeper, B. F. Alexander; Porter, Hiram Clock."

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Saltry was appointed by the Governor, and his duty ceased the moment that we made a complete organization of this Convention; therefore, I say that he is not entitled to any twenty-one days. He is entitled to pay, probably, for the time he acted under the Governor's appointment.

MR. WELLIN. I think that is rather small. This gentleman, it is true, was appointed by the Governor. He has served the Convention, and if we did not want his services, then we should have discharged him, and not kept him here day after day. I want to know if we propose to practice economy by robbing the laborer of his wages? We accepted his labor, and now we have kept him a week waiting for his pay. I do not want to be a party to the practice of that small economy which will cheat the laborer of his wages.

MR. TINNIN. I desire to call the attention of the Convention to the fact that all these other gentlemen who were appointed at that time have received their pay from this Convention. I see no reason why a distinction should be made against this single individual. All the others were paid.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. If he performed the services he did it on his own volition, not by authority of this Convention. He did so for one week, on authority of the Governor. That we should pay. But I say that when he acted as Night Watchman on his own volition he is not entitled to pay, and we should not pay it.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz. We have accepted the services of this gentleman, and I see no reason why he should not be paid.

The resolution was adopted.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

MR. WINANS, from the Committee on Education, made the following report:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President of the Convention:

The Committee on Education respectfully reports back to the Convention Amendment No. 231, proposed by Mr. Webster, and recommends that it be referred to the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

WINANS, Chairman.

So ordered.

FURTHER TIME GRANTED.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. President: The Committee on Land and Homestead Exemptions report progress, and ask for further time.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection further time will be granted. Hearing none, it is so ordered.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

MR. WILSON, of First District, from the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, made the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, to whom were referred sections seven (7), eight (8), nine (9), thirteen (13), and fourteen (14), of amendment number four hundred and two, reported by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, beg leave to report that they have had the same under consideration, and recommend that they be not adopted, but that the sections hereunto annexed be adopted in lieu thereof.

S. M. WILSON, Chairman.

November 1st, 1878.

SEC. 7. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions, and in cases of misdemeanor where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both, three fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases, not amounting to a felony, by the consent of both parties, in open Court expressed, and in civil cases, by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil cases and cases of misdemeanor the jury may consist of any number, less than twelve, that the parties may agree upon in open Court.

SEC. 8. Offenses heretofore required to be prosecuted by indictment shall be prosecuted by indictment or information, as may be prescribed by law; but a Grand Jury shall be drawn and summoned at least once a year in each county.

SEC. 9. Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions for libels, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact.

SEC. 13. In criminal prosecutions, in any Court whatever, the party accused shall have a right to a speedy and public trial, and to appear and defend in person and with counsel. No person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, nor shall he be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

SEC. 14. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into Court for the owner.

MR. LAINE. In a body so numerous as this it is impossible to understand a proposition thoroughly, unless it be printed and laid upon the desk of each member, in that when amendments are offered he may compare the amendment with the printed matter. I therefore move that the report of the committee, that is the draft, be printed and made the special order for Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

MR. BLACKMER. I believe we already have a special order for next Tuesday morning.

THE PRESIDENT. That makes no difference; we can make forty special orders for that day.

MR. LAINE'S motion prevailed.

NEW PROPOSITIONS.

THE PRESIDENT. The next order of business is the introduction of resolutions and propositions relative to the Constitution.

RELATIVE TO OFFICERS.

MR. WELLIN introduced the following proposed amendments to the Constitution, relative to officers:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION —. Members of the Legislature and all officers, judicial and ministerial, shall, before they enter upon the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe to the following oath or affirmation: "I, ——, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of California, against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance, and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution, or law of any State Convention or Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and, further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge, and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever. And I do further solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have not fought a duel, sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel, nor been a second to either party, nor in any manner aided or assisted in such duel, nor been knowingly the bearer of such challenge or acceptance, since the adoption of this Constitution of the State of California; and that I will not be so engaged or concerned, directly or indirectly, in or about any such duel during my continuance in office; and that I do not now nor never will employ any Asiatic, Mongolian, or Chinaman, nor be in any manner interested in the profits of his labor; and that I will use all my endeavors as a citizen and an officer to prevent the further importation of any Asiatic, Mongolian, or Chinaman; and further, that I will endeavor, by every constitutional or legal means, to remove from the State all those who are now here; and I do further swear (or affirm) that I have paid no money in the form of a bribe, or donation, nor made any promise of patronage, to secure my election to the office of ——, on which I am now about to enter; (if an oath) so help me God; (if an affirmation) under the pains and penalties of perjury."

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

LEGISLATION.

MR. CASSERLY introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to special sessions of the Legislature:

While the Legislature shall be convened in special session no legislation shall be had on any subject not designated in the Governor's proclamation calling such session.

Referred to Committee on Legislative Department.

PUBLIC WORKS.

MR. FREUD introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to public works:

SECTION —. All public works of every description, State, county, or municipal, and any modification or addition of any nature whatsoever to the same, shall be performed by the day, at ruling rates, and eight hours shall constitute a day's work.

Referred to Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings.

RELATIVE TO FOREIGNERS.

MR. BEERSTECHER introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to foreigners:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION —. All persons of foreign birth, before engaging in any manner of employment on their own account, or for others, within this State, shall first procure a certificate of authority; such certificate shall be issued to any applicant of a race eligible to citizenship under the laws of the State, without cost, by any Court of record of the State. No person of foreign birth shall engage or continue in any manner of employment in this State unless possessed of such certificate; nor shall any person, copartnership, company, or corporation, directly or indirectly, employ any person of foreign birth within this State, unless such person possess such certificate. The Legislature shall provide for punishment of violations of this section. Prosecutions shall be maintainable against both employers and employés. Each day's violation shall constitute a distinct offense.

Referred to Committee on Chinese.

CITY, COUNTY, AND TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATIONS.

MR. VACQUEREL introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to city, county, and township organizations:

Resolved, That there shall be elected, by each of the executive committees of the several political parties duly organized in the county, three persons, who shall, when so elected, have power to elect, by a majority vote, a competent and suitable person to supervise, inspect, and expert the books and accounts of each and every county officer in the county for which he may be so elected; the said person, when so elected, to have the right and privilege of inspecting said books and accounts as often as he may deem it expedient or necessary; the compensation of said person, elected as aforesaid, to be determined and paid by the Board of Supervisors of the county for which he may have been elected; the said expert or inspector to hold his office till the next municipal election takes place, unless it is certified and proved that he has not satisfactorily fulfilled his duty; and only in such case the committee that nominated him will have power to procure his removal and proceed to re-emplace [re-instate?] him in his situation.

Referred to Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

SUBMISSION OF THE CONSTITUTION.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara, offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Judiciary be requested to inform the Convention, at an early practicable period, whether the Convention has a legal right to submit the Constitution for ratification in such divisions as the Convention may determine.

The resolution was adopted.

COMMITTEE ROOM PORTER.

MR. BARNES offered the following:

Resolved, That Edward Wason be and he is hereby allowed the sum of eighty-eight dollars, for services as Porter, twenty-two days, in caring for the committee rooms, and that the same be paid out of the appropriation made for the Convention.

I hereby certify that I employed Edward Wason, and that he has worked, as Porter, for the committee rooms, twenty-two days. That he began working on October tenth, in cleaning and getting rooms for committees ready for use, and has taken care of same, and done such other work as was required of him since that time. The work was necessary, and I respectfully recommend that it be allowed.

T. J. SHERWOOD, Sergeant-at-Arms.

October 31st.

Referred to the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses.

THE CHINESE ARTICLE.

MR. MILLER. I move that the report of the Committee on Chinese and the amendments be placed upon the calendar and made the special order immediately after the disposition of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

The motion prevailed.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

MR. BEERSTECHER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That Carl C. Finkler be allowed ten dollars for two days' services as Clerk of the Judiciary Committee of this Convention, rendered at the request of said committee, through its Chairman, prior to his regular appointment, viz.: on the seventeenth and eighteenth of October, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, which two days' services were not included in the pay-roll heretofore certified to.

Referred to the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses.

THE DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: Inasmuch as four sections of the Bill of Rights have been put over, I do not know but what it would be as well to postpone the rest until Tuesday. I move that it be made the special order for Tuesday.

MR. LARKIN. We have now been here five weeks postponing matters. I think the business of this Convention ought to proceed. We want no more delays. Unless we intend to proceed we had better adjourn and go home. Yesterday was spent in discussing whether they would refer sections, and now they ask until next Tuesday. I ask this Convention to understand exactly the effect of these motions, which is for delay; postpone until the appropriation is exhausted, and then leave us where we commenced. I desire to see this Convention go on with its work. The people expect that we will, and if we cannot we had better adjourn.

MR. SCHELL. I am in favor of going on with the report as far as we can do it. Unless we proceed with this report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, there will be nothing else for us to consider to-day, and the result will be an adjournment. If we are ever going to get through with the business of this Convention, it strikes me that we had better proceed to it. I am decidedly opposed to putting this matter over again.

MR. TINNIN. I move as an amendment, that this Convention do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the Preamble and Bill of Rights, commencing at section seven.

MR. WILSON, of First District. In section seven, as reported by the Committee on Judiciary, there are two words omitted. I would ask leave to insert them if there be no objection.

No objection was made.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I hope before that last motion is put that the motion to postpone until Tuesday and print will be reconsidered, and I do not see why we cannot take these amendments up to-day just as well as Tuesday. Members can take down the substance as they are read from the Clerk's desk. My object was only to proceed orderly and get through with that report. If we resolve ourselves into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up that article, I am in favor of commencing where we left off, at section seven. If that is the will of the Convention I hope that the motion made by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, will be reconsidered, so as to commence at section seven. The members of the Convention understand thoroughly the amendments. I do not see any object in printing them, because other amendments will be proposed here, and if it is designed to print every amendment offered in Committee of the Whole, why we never will get through with the business.

MR. LARKIN. It is necessary to reconsider——

THE PRESIDENT. It would be out of order.

MR. TINNIN'S motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The committee had under consideration the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

MR. VAN DYKE. I see no reason why the amendments of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department could not be proposed right here and go right along.

MR. HALE. It seems to me that we have already ordered the amendments coming from the Committee on Judiciary to be printed and made them the special order and we are now in Committee of the Whole and certainly cannot reverse the action. We can take up anything except what is in the special order.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is perfectly competent for any gentleman to move any of these amendments offered by the Committee on Judiciary.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: We referred sections seven, eight, nine, thirteen, and fourteen to the Judiciary Committee and on their report we have made it the special order for Tuesday next. It has been ordered printed. Now, sir, there is no gentleman in this committee who can tell what these amendments are without having them printed. We may hear them read a dozen times at the desk, but it is impossible to analyze them and give them proper consideration in that way. It does seem to me that there is plenty of work in the Bill of Rights after these sections. I move that the consideration of sections seven, eight, nine, thirteen, and fourteen, be temporarily postponed, and that we take up section ten.

MR. MCCALLUM. I think, sir, if the Secretary will read the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, and the members at the same time take the report of the proceedings of yesterday, they will find that matters discussed at great length are substantially the same. There is but little difference in them from the propositions that were discussed. I deny the necessity of the printing of the report. If the Secretary will read the report of the committee, and gentlemen will look at the amendments proposed yesterday, they will very readily see the difference.

MR. EDGERTON. I understand the position in this matter to be this, that the Convention ordered these sections reported by the Judiciary Committee to print, and made them the special order for Tuesday.

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes.

MR. EDGERTON. Then I make this point of order: That it is beyond the control of the Committee of the Whole to consider these sections reported by the Judiciary Committee this morning.

THE CHAIRMAN. These sections are not before the Convention, but it is perfectly competent for any member to move any one of them as an amendment.

MR. TINNIN. We were delayed here all day yesterday on that same kind of work. If we commence and repeat it to-day we will accomplish nothing. It certainly is time now that something should be done.

MR. MCFARLAND. I did not make any motion for delay at all. There is more work than we can do on the other sections. We can take up the other sections and act upon them, and not attempt to deal with the sections reported by the Committee on Judiciary, until they are printed. I hope the motion will prevail.

MR. WYATT. I hope that the motion of Judge McFarland will not prevail. This Convention referred this matter to the Judiciary Committee for the purpose of having it put into such language and such form as that it could not be criticised; as that it would come out pure coin from the mint, and there could not be any question of the excellency of the work. That coin has been coined from the mint. It has come to us in such solid chunks of wisdom that there will be no question about it whatever, and I see no impropriety in this committee either accepting or rejecting it. We certainly ought not to delay any longer upon this subject. If we are not now prepared to act upon it, we will not be prepared to act upon it when it has been printed and brought back here again on Tuesday morning. I hope now that this Convention will meet this matter. If this Convention will ever be able to decide what will be a proper jury system for the State of California, they have now got all knowledge of the facts that they will have on Tuesday next. It was supposed, in sending us here, that we were competent to pass upon it. We have had time enough to pass upon it, and I say that delays are grown irksome, getting to be insufferable, and it is high time that we got down to solid work in this Convention. I hope the motion will not prevail.

MR. WATERS. I rise to make a point of order. My point of order is this: This Committee of the Whole only has power to consider such matter as may be referred to it by the house. The action of the house is paramount to and binding upon this Committee of the Whole. The Convention has seen fit to segregate the report of the committee, and part of it, it seems, it has referred to the Committee of the Whole, and a part of it it has fixed as a special order for next Tuesday. This special order was made by a paramount body—by the Convention itself—and this subsequent motion, I contend, only applies to that not made the special order. The point of order is, there is nothing before the Committee of the Whole except the residue of the report of the committee. We have not all of that report before this Committee of the Whole. The Convention is paramount to the Committee of the Whole. The Convention has made this other part a special order for the Convention itself upon next Tuesday.

MR. TINNIN. The gentleman is certainly mistaken in the position which he assumes. The Convention, before it went into Committee of the Whole, voted to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, commencing at section seven. That necessarily brings the whole of the report of that Committee before this body.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair has announced an opinion on the point raised by the gentleman from San Bernardino, that these sections were not before the Convention; but at the same time any member might move as an amendment to any portion of the bill any one of these amendments; but the Convention referred this subject back to the committee with instructions to commence at section seven.

MR. WATERS. If that is the fact, I think the Convention voted under a misapprehension. I move that the committee rise, and that the part of the report set as a special order for next Tuesday be so made. Let us vote intelligently and understandingly. I move that the committee now rise.

MR. HAGER. I want to suggest that we should pass sections seven, eight, and nine temporarily, and go on with the balance.

MR. WATERS. I insist upon the motion, from the fact that we can then have the matter printed, and take it up intelligently.

The motion was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of Judge McFarland, that the Convention temporarily pass sections seven, eight, nine, thirteen, and fourteen, and take up section ten.

Carried.

RIGHT TO ASSEMBLE.

THE SECRETARY read section ten, as follows:

SEC. 10. The people shall have the right to freely assemble together to consult for the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the Legislature for redress of grievances.

MR. BEERSTECHER offered the following substitute:

SEC. 10. The right of the people to peaceably assemble, for any except immoral purposes, shall in nowise be abridged, nor shall there be any manner of hindrance, molestation, or interference with this right.

MR. BROWN. I cannot see any special improvement upon section ten in that amendment. I can discover nothing of the kind. I do not wish to attempt to dictate to this honorable and august body, but I do believe that, as a general thing, where there is no material evil to be cured it would be much better that amendments should not be thrust upon this body. Here the section says: "The people shall have the right to freely assemble together to consult for the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the Legislature for redress of grievances." That is quite full and complete, and I think covers the ground that was intended. As I am opposed to amendments when they do not have some special importance, and are not better than those reported by the different committees, I shall vote against this.

MR. VAN DYKE. Section ten, as reported by the committee, is the old section. It has received judicial construction, and we thought proper to retain it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco.

The amendment was lost.

MR. LARKIN offered the following substitute:

SEC. 10. The people shall have the right to freely assemble together to consult for the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to direct the Legislature to redress their grievances.

MR. LARKIN. The only amendment to the present provision is the word "petition." It is a word that does not belong to a republic. It is a word that would have done well enough previous to the formation of the American Government. The sovereign does not petition the agent. As every officer is an agent of the sovereign people, we should instruct or direct our Legislatures, and not petition them. That is my point and the reason why I offer that substitute.

The amendment was lost.

THE SECRETARY read section eleven, as follows:

UNIFORM OPERATION OF LAWS.

SEC. 11. All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that that section be indefinitely postponed. I do so for this reason: it is a very indefinite and ambiguous clause. It has given the Courts of this State and of the State of Iowa a great deal of trouble, and it is covered by a provision in the plan of the Committee on Legislative Department, which is to the following effect: that the Legislature shall in no case pass a special law where a general law can be made applicable. I would inquire of the Chairman of that committee if that is correct.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I hardly think the gentleman perceives how far his motion would go. Now, sir, it is a fundamental principle in our government that no law shall be passed which affects one person and not the balance of the community. That is the principle, as I understand it, that saves all our personal rights. That you shall not make a law that shall apply to me and not to the whole community; that you shall not tax my property and not the property of others equally; that the Legislature has no right to pass laws affecting a portion of the community and not the balance. I know that there has been some little difficulty in the Courts to construe that section correctly, but I think there would be no safeguard to general personal liberty or personal rights in a Constitution that did not have some provision of that kind in it. I do not think that the proposition referred to in the plan of the Committee on the Legislative Department would involve at all the principle intended to be involved in this. Our liberty depends upon the proposition that the Legislature shall not pass a law that will operate upon me personally and allow you to escape. There may be a serious question as to what is a "general law." I do not understand that it would be safe to strike out of this Constitution that all general laws must be uniform in their bearing.

MR. EDGERTON. The clause as it now stands is from the first Constitution of the State of Iowa. It resulted there in conflicting decisions and puzzled the Courts and everybody else. When they came to revise their Constitution they modified it in about the way that it now stands in the plan of the Committee on the Legislative Department. It has been eliminated from four or five Constitutions. It is in our Constitution and the Courts have found this difficulty. The Committee on Revenue and Taxation have adopted a section that all taxation shall be uniform upon all classes of subjects in the territorial limits of the authority levying them. I think there would be no doubt about the propriety of indefinitely postponing the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion made by the gentleman is out of order. You cannot indefinitely postpone any proposition in Committee of the Whole.

MR. EDGERTON. Then I move to strike it out.

MR. VAN DYKE. I suggest that we pass it.

MR. LAINE. This section has stood in the Constitution a long time and has received judicial construction. Why should we grumble at it now? Its meaning was settled by the Supreme Court of this State in a case reported in the 17th California Reports. It is a protection and we still desire it.

MR. EDGERTON. I do not care a straw about it, but I wish to remind the gentleman that the decision he has referred to is a matter of arbitrary judicial legislation, and comes within the class referred to a few days ago by the gentleman from Marin as "Judge-made law."

MR. CROUCH. I move to amend by inserting the following in place of the section as it stands:

SEC. 11. All laws shall be general and have a uniform operation. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any local or special laws.

MR. EDGERTON. My objection to that is that the plan of the Committee of the Legislative Department covers that whole ground.

MR. MCCALLUM. I wish to make but one suggestion. I have had but a few minutes to look over the Constitutions of other States, but I find in several the exact language used that is used in the Constitution now, and which the gentleman moves to strike out. I think we had better not strike it out.

The motion to strike out was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by Judge Crouch.

The amendment was lost.

MR. HAGER. I move to amend by adding to the section, "No power of suspending laws shall be exercised unless by the Legislature or by its authority." The amendment is to add that at the end of the section, so that the whole section will read: "All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation; no power of suspending laws shall be exercised unless by the Legislature, or by its authority." I find in most of the Constitutions that provision in the declaration of rights, and I do not know of any more proper place to put it than at the end of the section which is now before the committee. It is contained in the new Constitution of Pennsylvania, which I have before me—section twelve of the declaration of rights. It reads: "No power of suspending laws shall be exercised unless by the Legislature, or by its authority."

MR. HUESTIS. I wish to ask the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, what power there is to suspend a law except the Legislature?

MR. HAGER. Sometimes we have martial law. Sometimes the military are stronger than the civil power.

MR. HUESTIS. Isn't that done by authority of the Legislature?

MR. HAGER. No, sir; not always. I find the provision in the Constitution of Pennsylvania and in several other Constitutions. They undoubtedly had good reason for adopting it. I do not care to enter into any argument upon it, neither do I care particularly about its adoption. It occurred to me to be a very proper thing, and I see no objection to its being engrafted on our Constitution.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: Let me say that I am opposed to all vague terms in a Constitution. I should like Judge Hager to define what is meant by suspending a law. I do not think I ever saw an Act for suspending a law in my experience. I will ask the Judge to favor the Convention with his construction of the clause.

MR. BARNES. In order that this section proposed by Judge Hager may be readily understood, and that he should be spared the trouble of any such elaborate explanation as my colleague requires, I move to amend by inserting before the word "laws" the word "by," so that it will read: "No power of suspending by-laws shall be exercised unless by the Legislature or by its authority." [Laughter.]

THE CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, accept the amendment?

MR. HAGER. My friend Colonel Barnes belongs to the military power, and I am rather suspicious of his amendment. I would rather say, "Soldier, spare this tree."

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The amendment as amended was lost.

MILITARY AND CIVIL POWER.

THE SECRETARY read section twelve as follows:

SEC. 12. The military shall be subordinate to the civil power. No standing army shall be kept up by this State in time of peace, and no soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner; nor in time of war, except in the manner to be prescribed by law.

MR. ANDREWS offered the following substitute:

SEC. 12. The military shall be subordinate to the civil power. No standing army shall be kept up by this State in time of peace; and, in time of war, no appropriation for a standing army shall be for a longer time than two years.

MR. ANDREWS. I would state that this is just as the section of our present Constitution is, and before we make any changes in our Constitution I want to know some reason why that change should be made.

MR. VAN DYKE. I will inform the gentleman on that subject in a few words. If the gentleman will observe section twenty-two of the same article he will see a section which prohibits appropriations for any purpose—not only military, but for any purpose—for longer than two years. That section is put in by way of amendment to the old section used in the Constitution, and it is altogether unnecessary in connection with the military, because that section covers everything. Otherwise the section is the same as sections twelve and thirteen of the old Constitution. It simply omits that in regard to appropriations for the reason stated, that section twenty-two covers every appropriation. Otherwise it is exactly like the old Constitution.

The amendment was lost, on a division, by a vote of 46 ayes to 57 noes.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

THE SECRETARY read section fifteen as follows:

SEC. 15. No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action, on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud; and no person shall be imprisoned for a militia fine in time of peace.

MR. SHAFTER. I move to insert after the word "fraud" the words "or force." As it now stands, when a man knocks another down and beats him almost to death he cannot be imprisoned on a civil process. I know of no reason why a man should not have a right to recover for personal injury done as well as for injury to property.

MR. McFARLAND. I am opposed to that amendment. I do not believe that a man should be imprisoned in any civil action whatever. I think we ought to be past that old relic of barbarism. Whenever a crime is committed the criminal machinery of the State affords all necessary opportunity for punishment and imprisonment; but in all cases where civil actions are brought—where a man wants to get money for injury—I do not believe that there ought to be any imprisonment. I shall not move to strike out the words "unless in cases of fraud," but I really think they ought to be stricken out. It amounts to a crime which can be punished under criminal process, and I do not believe we should imprison anybody under a civil process. Therefore, I am opposed to the amendment.

MR. BARBOUR. I move to strike out the words "unless in cases of fraud." I do it for another reason. Under this section the man is not imprisoned for debt. It is for fraud. Therefore, it is safe to say simply that there shall be no imprisonment for debt.

MR. EDGERTON. I understand that this clause of the Constitution, and the legislation had in pursuance of it, is employed mostly in cases of absconding debtors—people who owe debts in the State and are trying to leave. In case a debtor is discovered to be about to leave, and he has money, he may be imprisoned to abide the judgment of a Court. I do not see why the words should be stricken out.

MR. BARBOUR. Evidently the gentleman does not understand me. I do not propose the abolition of imprisonment for fraud, but I say that it does not belong in this section. I understand that in the last Constitution of Georgia they have stricken out the clause, because it implies that the imprisonment is for the debt in cases of fraud, whereas it is for the fraud itself. In another place it can be provided for and punished as a crime.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I think there are good reasons why my amendment should be adopted. In these cases of fraud it is necessary to set up not only the transaction, but to set out in detail the fraud and the acts that constitute it. Now, we undertake to protect the merchant against frauds perpetrated by making the execution come against the party. Ought not the person who is beaten nearly to death be entitled to redress against the party who wronged him? Why should there not be vindictive damages in the one case as well as the other? It is because these outrages are treated as a public offense that the perpetrators escape entirely or get a light sentence in a Police Court. They do not care anything about a civil action. You are put to the expense of a civil action when the judgment is not worth the paper it is written on. I think that class of cases should come within the law. It is true that they are subject to the criminal law, but the individual who is injured has no personal redress. I hope that these words will be inserted and that proper legislation will follow it, and that these men will at least find that they are living under a government of law.

MR. McFARLAND. If you put in the word "force" the Legislature would have the power to include almost every imaginable civil action in either one category or the other. You might include the penalty of imprisonment in four fifths of the civil actions that are brought. Now, if a man commits an assault and battery, you have a remedy. You can indict him criminally. You want to imprison a man for force in a civil process and then imprison him afterwards criminally. I do not think it is right.

MR. McCALLUM. This word "or force" is entirely too comprehensive. The gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, wants to specify such extreme cases as might exist, and possibly it would be proper, but it appears to me that they ought to be specified more specifically, because the word "force" does not necessarily imply, as in the case of fraud, anything criminal whatever. If he forbids parties to enter upon his land, and if there is a provision of law which makes the entry upon land a breaking of the rules, and there is no damage done, there might be no criminality in it whatever, yet, under this provision, it would be a case for imprisonment in a civil action. So with the destruction of personal property, which might be entirely accidental, and which our laws go so far as to require that even insane persons and children are responsible for, because intention has nothing to do with the actual damages, yet it would be a case of force, and under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Marin, would be punishable by imprisonment. The provision as reported by the committee is exactly the language of our present Constitution. The Courts have given construction to it, and I do not see the necessity of changing a single word, not even as proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, that is to strike out the words "unless in cases of fraud." I submit that unless some better reason is given, we had better not make the change. In my judgment, and after an experience of about twenty years in the Courts, I think that class of cases which arise upon fraud ought to be punished by imprisonment, because it is in the nature of crime. And in such cases, if the honest creditor can obtain redress, he ought to have it.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I would first inquire, Mr. Chairman, what the condition of the amendments are at the present time.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, moves to amend by inserting after the word "fraud," the words, "or force." The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, moves to strike out the words, "unless in cases of fraud."

MR. BEERSTECHER. It seems to me that the word "force" is very indefinite, and by placing it in that connection it might be construed that imprisonment could only be had where there was both fraud and force.

THE CHAIRMAN. Fraud or force.

MR. BEERSTECHER. The word "violence" would be much better. "Cases of fraud or violence." When the proper time comes I will offer an amendment to that effect; that no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud or violence. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, says, that there can be no debt in fraud; that fraud is never in the nature of debt. It seems to me, with due deference to the opinions of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, that there is a time when fraud is created into a debt. If an action is brought where the burden of the complaint is the fraud of a defendant, and a judgment is had upon that action, when that fraud is merged in the judgment it is to all intents and purposes a debt, and therefore, there may be a time when you have a debt in a civil action for fraud. And that is exactly what is meant by the section. At the proper time I shall move to substitute the word "violence," for the word "force," as that seems to be more limited in its operation.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: This proposition of the gentleman from Marin is more important really than it appears on its face, because if it is carried, in the first place, you will have to make a considerable increase in your judicial force in the large cities, for you will have actions for assault and battery without number. In the next place, the law provides punishment already for all classes of violence. It provides that in a case of simple battery the Court may imprison the defendant for one year and fine him a thousand dollars. In cases where there is an assault with a deadly weapon, and in such manner as to indicate an abandoned and malignant heart, it is made a felony. An assault with intent to commit murder is made a felony of a higher grade; and so far as that is concerned, there is ample punishment by imprisonment provided by law already in all cases of violence. Now, sir, look at its operation. Here is the trouble. A man is knocked down, or something of that kind. Now he can have his remedy immediately by the criminal law. He can have the man punished in proportion to the offense he has committed. But you let him go on and have the party arrested in a civil action. The case perhaps will not be reached for trial for many months. During that time the defendant, if he is poor, is confined in the county jail, and he is kept there even after he may fully have expiated the offense by suitable punishment. He is kept there until final judgment is rendered, without any redress whatever. Now, it seems to me that by adopting this amendment you will not only increase the judicial labors of the Courts to a very large extent, but you will at the same time give rise to a class of actions which are not brought now, which no man dreams of bringing, but which would be prosecuted simply for purposes of personal revenge, even where the defendant was not worth a dollar, and could make no compensation in money. It would be simply to provide a punishment by imprisonment in addition to that which the law already prescribes, and which is ample in proportion to the offense.

MR. WICKES. At another time I will second the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher. "Force" is a word that is only used properly in natural physics.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I understand very well that when the wrongdoer is taken up and sent to prison on a conviction for a breach of the public peace, that the public has been vindicated; but I would like to inquire what salve that is for the wounds of the man who has been knocked down. He goes to bed, lies there for a year, pays a thousand dollars for a physician, loses his business, is racked with pain, and, it may be, disabled for life. What good does it do him that the man who has plenty of money has been enabled to get off with a fine, or light sentence, and has left the State? It does not do him any good. I want the man who has suffered the violence and the outrage, to have some personal redress. I am looking at the back of the man who has been outraged. Suppose a man is worth the amount of money necessary to reimburse the party for all this loss, he is put beyond the operation of the law. You cannot follow him out of the State into another in which to make him liable to imprisonment, because it is a civil debt, and the remedy would depend upon the laws of the State.

MR. CAMPBELL. Take this case, where the assault is justified, and the party then sues. The person sued is poor, and is kept in prison under that mesne process during the whole time until the case is reached on the calendar. What condition is he in?

MR. SHAFTER. If he has been arrested without probable cause, he has a remedy against the party that has him arrested. What do you say to the poor victim who has been kept in his bed for six, eight, or ten months? Undoubtedly if a party is committed to jail where he is wrongfully or unjustly accused, there is some sense in saying that he suffers injury. If a party sues a man for damages he cannot get it unless the man happens to be solvent. There are thousands of just such cases that have to be endured. But there is one thing about it, the man whose property has been burned, the man who has been assaulted, whose domestic relations have been infringed upon, who has been utterly ruined, has no redress at all under the law as it now stands, as against the man who is able to take his money and get out of the way.

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco. I am decidedly in favor of the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Marin, but it strikes me the whole of section fifteen will have to be remodeled. Take the section as it is in the original section of the Constitution, as reported by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights. It reads: "No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action or mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud." Now, the invariable construction placed upon that is this, that your action must be for the debt, or, in the language of lawyers, ex contractu, and you must show that the contract was fraudulent or involves some element of fraud in its nature, so that you are compelled always to have a contract, and to show elements of fraud in connection with it, to have the benefit of the legislation under this provision. But insert, as my friend from Marin wants to, "in cases of fraud in force," and it would be inconsistent. "No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action (ex contractu) unless in cases of fraud or force," would certainly not be very clear. Therefore, the language ought to be somewhat modified. As I understand the effect of the law heretofore, it has been this: the Legislature passed certain laws authorizing imprisonment on mesne or final process in cases of fraud where there is a contract, but in cases of tort there has been no imprisonment at all. Now this should be remodeled so as to read in this way: "No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action or mesne or final process"—that portion of the section being complete in itself, having no imprisonment for simple debt—"but the Legislature may provide for imprisonment on mesne or final process in cases of fraud or force." The language modified in that way would carry out the views of my friend from Marin, and would obviate any sort of inconsistency in the section as it would read with the amendment. In the first place it would totally abolish imprisonment for debt, and it seems to me that for a debt alone, there being no corrupt circumstances surrounding it, there should be no imprisonment. This is only an enabling act, authorizing the Legislature, in cases of force or fraud, to enact a law by which parties may be imprisoned on mesne or final process. When it is in order, I shall offer what I have read as a substitute for section fifteen.

MR. VAN DYKE. Would not that be accomplished by simply striking out "for debt?"

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco. Then you would have no prohibition for imprisonment for debt at all.

MR. EDGERTON. I would inquire of the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, or any other lawyer on this floor, if it was ever supposed that this State adopted this clause of the Constitution by way of penalty? I understand not. I understand that it is purely auxiliary to the civil process, and it is only resorted to as an enforcement of the execution—the payment of the debt. The party may pay up the judgment at any time and he is discharged, or if he goes before a Court and makes a showing that he cannot pay it, he is released. I think the reasons urged by the gentleman from Marin are satisfactory and cogent for the amendment. I do not see any reason for the adoption of the word "violence" in place of the word "force," for the latter is a word that has a specific, technical sense in our Courts. Everybody understands it and knows just what it means. I think it is the proper word, as used by the gentleman from Marin.

MR. BARNES. I do not agree with the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, as to the purpose, the object, or the force, or legal effect of the right to imprison for debt. There is no such cause of action known to our statutes, or known to the law, except it was known to the common law, that a man might be imprisoned for debt. A man is sued for a debt. If he is guilty of fraud in contracting the debt, which is the simplest case to put, he is arrested for the fraud and not for the debt. It is for the fraud that he is imprisoned. It is no part of the remedy at all. A man gets a judgment for his debt. As a means of correcting a fraud he may imprison the party. At common law, the debtor must pay, or his body was in satisfaction of it. Not so here. He pays, or shows he is unable to pay, and is discharged.

MR. BARBOUR. As I understand the proposition of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, it is such as I can support, and I will withdraw my amendment for the purpose of allowing him to present it. It seems to be a separation of the question of imprisonment for debt from the other provision for the punishment of fraud.

MR. EVEY. Mr. Chairman: I would like to offer a substitute, and for information I would like to have it read. At the proper time I will offer it as a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read for information:

"No person shall be imprisoned for debt, unless upon refusal to deliver up his estate for the benefit of his creditors, in such manner as shall be provided by law, or in cases where there is a strong presumption of fraud."

MR. BIGGS. This question is on fraud, and therefore I move that it be referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

MR. NOEL. I hope that the section will be referred to the Judiciary Committee. It seems that it is necessary that all the sections of the new Constitution be submitted to the supervision and re-supervision of that committee.

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco. I move to amend in the following manner, offering this as a substitute:

SEC. 15. No person shall be imprisoned for debt or in any civil action on mesne or final process; but the Legislature may provide for imprisonment on mesne or final process in civil actions in cases of fraud or force; and no person shall be imprisoned for a military fine in time of peace.

MR. SHAFTER. I accept that amendment.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I move to strike out the word "force" and substitute the word "violence." I do it for this reason: "force" is too comprehensive a term. It has been repeatedly decided that "force" includes both actual and constructive force. That is to say, Mr. President, if a man through mistake happens to step over into his neighbor's land, or happens to get off the public highway into a private domain, the law, as aptly stated by the gentleman from San Francisco, holds that man liable in an action of trespass, in an action of force, although he never intended it; and the law steps in and says, although there is no actual force yet there is constructive force. Now if we pass the section just as it is we allow the Courts to say that a man may be imprisoned for constructive force, for a thing that he never intended. The Courts in some States have gone so far as to say that even in matters of contract there may be constructive force, and we do not desire to have this word "force" used. Now in an action of trespass the pleading runs "force and arms," where there is no actual force employed, but it never did run "violence and arms," because the word "violence" is not as comprehensive as the word "force." The word "violence" means direct force every time, and the word "violence" never can and never does mean anything indirect. I desire to have men imprisoned in certain cases, but not where they merely constructively have done something forcible. I therefore move, Mr. President, that the word "force" be stricken out, and that in its place be substituted the words "personal violence." Then the section will read: "No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action or mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud or personal violence." I believe that a man ought to be imprisoned for personal violence. If a man commits personal violence upon another man of course he can be imprisoned, but how does that better the condition of the man that is injured? I have known men in the City of San Francisco to commit assaults and batteries upon other men—almost kill these men, cause them to lay out and expend hundreds of dollars, oblige them to be confined to their beds for months. Afterwards one man came from his couch of sickness, entered complaint in Court, had the man prosecuted criminally, and the man paid his fine. The other brought a civil action and got judgment for damages, but you cannot collect the judgment. Now in such cases, gentlemen, I believe that the strong hand of the law should be placed upon that man's neck, and that he should be put in prison in order to be compelled to pay for the damages that he may have done. But I do not believe, Mr. President, that in case of mere constructive force, where a man never intended to do what the law says that he actually did do, that he ought to suffer imprisonment. Therefore, I hope that the word "force" will be stricken out, and that the words "personal violence" may be substituted in its place.

MR. WICKES. I second the motion.

MR. FREEMAN. I see no need of any amendment to the Constitution as it stands now. This Constitution prohibits imprisonment for debt, except in case of fraud. That exception ought to be there. The gentlemen say that the Legislature ought to have the power to authorize imprisonment in cases of tort. Certainly the Legislature has that power. This section does not prohibit it. There can be an action of debt for force. The action must be in the nature of tort, and therefore it is now, as the Constitution stands, without any amendment, within the discretion of the Legislature to impose such remedies as it may from time to time see fit.

MR. MCCALLUM. I understood the ruling of the Chair yesterday to be that an amendment could be offered to an amendment first. If that is correct, I desire to offer an amendment at this time.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer an amendment for the purpose of perfecting the original section as reported.

MR. MCCALLUM. Supposing this amendment is adopted, can I then offer an amendment—after it has been substituted?

THE CHAIRMAN. Not after the substitute has been adopted.

MR. MCCALLUM. I propose to offer now an amendment to the whole section. I am fully convinced that there are additional cases of wrong which should come within this category than those specified by the single word "fraud." I am perfectly satisfied that in cases of malicious and willful injury to property men should be imprisoned the same as in cases of fraud. I do not see any answer, however, to the point heretofore made that "force" is too comprehensive a term, and the word "violence" does not help the matter at all. Violence may be committed accidentally, as well as otherwise, and yet using that word without qualification would make a case for imprisonment, when there was no wrong intended whatever. Now I have drafted this, and I suppose we all desire to put it in the best form possible. I submit that we should strike out the word "debt" from the first line and insert after the word "fraud," in the second line, as follows: "or in case of willful or malicious injury to person or property." Then it would read: "No person shall be imprisoned in any civil action on mesne or final process, unless in case of fraud, or in case of willful or malicious injury to person or property."

MR. BEERSTECHER. I accept the amendment of Mr. McCallum. The recess hour being at hand, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have directed me to report that they have had under consideration the article on Preamble and Declaration of Rights, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. The hour having arrived, the Convention will take a recess, under the rule, until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M. President Hoge in the chair.

Roll call dispensed with.

NOTICE.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: I give notice that on to-morrow I will move to amend rule number one, so that the Convention shall meet at nine o'clock A. M., and also rule number two, so as to have a recess of one hour and a half instead of two hours.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the Convention do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

MR. EDGERTON. I desire to make a motion on behalf of the Secretary of the Convention. I move that he have leave of absence for two days, for the reason that he has to answer in a cause called for trial to-morrow morning.

THE PRESIDENT. There being no objections, leave will be granted.

On motion of Mr. Van Dyke, the Convention then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of further considering the article on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by Mr. McCallum to section fifteen: "No person shall be imprisoned in any civil action on mesne or final process, unless in case of fraud, or in case of willful and malicious injury to person or property."

MR. McCALLUM. I am requested to say a word as to the single word struck out. I have left out the word "debt." I call the attention of the Convention to this: "No person shall be imprisoned for debt on any mesne or final process." As to the point about the word debt, of course there can be no imprisonment for debt unless it is in a civil action. Now this provides that there shall be no imprisonment for anything else. It includes all actions arising from ex contractu and ex delinquo.

MR. EDGERTON. I merely want to call the attention of the Convention to the suggestion of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman, this morning, as to the Constitution as it stands.

MR. SHAFTER. I would inquire of the gentleman of Alameda, Mr. McCallum, if the words "willful" and "malicious" are disjoined. Is it "willful and malicious," or "willful or malicious."

MR. McCALLUM. "Willful and malicious."

MR. SHAFTER. I hope the gentleman will strike out the word "malicious." There will be a great deal of difficulty in determining such a clause as that. If an offense is willful, that is enough of itself. The word "malicious" should not have been inserted at all.

MR. McCALLUM. I accept the amendment of the gentleman to strike it out.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: If the Convention proposes to enlarge the number of cases in which arrests may be made in civil cases, I think that the proposition of this gentleman is a good one. But I desire to call attention to the fact that, in all probability, if that class of cases are enlarged, the provisions of the Legislature will be about what they are now. Now, the present law itself provides that the County Judge shall, whenever it appears to him from an affidavit of the plaintiff in a case that the necessity for an arrest exists, order an arrest. That has been the general rule. All the plaintiff has to do is to make a strong enough affidavit, and upon that the party has to be arrested. Now, it appears to me that this is sufficient, and we ought to allow the Constitution to stand as it is. It allows arrests in cases of fraud, and I am opposed to enlarging the field. I do not think we are prepared to enlarge on this matter of imprisonment in civil cases. We can punish anybody for crime, and I do not see how the wounded feelings of the plaintiff are better satisfied by imprisonment in a civil process than in a criminal process. Gentlemen say the State punishes by imprisonment, but that does not help the plaintiff. Can a plaintiff gather any more satisfaction out of the fact that the man is imprisoned on his motion than by the State? You might imprison a man for ten years by a criminal process, and then give him one hundred more on a civil process. But I do not understand how the feelings of the plaintiff are going to be assuaged any more by such a course.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I would like to inquire how this motion stands. As I understand it the gentleman from Alameda has introduced an amendment, or substitute, or something or other. If it is an amendment to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, or to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, I would like to know, so as to understand what we are doing.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alameda moves an amendment to the original section by striking out the word "debt" in the first line, and inserting other words. After this is disposed of, the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, will be before the Convention. The first question is on the amendment to the original section.

MR. BARNES. Then I ask that before the vote is taken the substitute of the gentleman from San Francisco be read, so that we will have an opportunity of knowing what we are doing.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action on mesne or final process; but the Legislature may provide for imprisonment on mesne or final process in civil actions in cases of fraud or force; and no person shall be imprisoned for a military fine in time of peace."

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum, to strike out the word "debt" and insert other words.

MR. BLACKMER. It seems to me the gentleman should include in his amendment the word "for" with the word "debt," or else it will not make sense.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: It is a matter of indifference to me what may be the sense of the Convention on this proposed amendment, but I cannot sustain this proposition. The amendment, in the shape in which it now stands, provides that no person shall be imprisoned in a civil action on mesne or final process. It seems to me that if this proposition is embodied in the Constitution in its present shape, it will cut off the power of the Courts to enforce their judgments in very many cases. The gentlemen of the profession in the Convention will understand me when I say that in a very large class of cases within the jurisdiction of a Court in equity, the power of the Court to enforce judgment lies in its jurisdiction to issue process against the prisoner. A bill is filed in equity to enforce the performance of a contract. A bill is filed to compel the surrender of legal title which the plaintiff claims he has. A bill is filed in divers cases, and the judgment cannot be enforced except the arm of the Court is used by issuing a writ against the prisoner. Now it occurs to me that in cases of that kind, if there shall be a decree in a suit of "A" against "B" requiring "B" to do some act or thing which he has engaged to do under a contract, and he refuses to comply with the judgment of the Court, where is the power of the Court to compel the performance of that act if this proposition shall be inserted in the Constitution in the shape in which it now appears. In any of the cases which I have enumerated, wherein judgment may be rendered by the Court, the Court would be powerless to enforce the execution of its orders, because the Constitution steps in and interferes, and says the man cannot be imprisoned on any mesne or final process. A bill in equity to enforce a contract, and all the cases I have mentioned, as well as many others, are all in this category of civil actions. I ask the gentleman to explain to me how a Court would enforce its decrees in cases of that kind? It may be, Mr. Chairman, that I do not understand this subject, but it certainly seems to me that if you incorporate this provision into the Constitution you will shear the Court of all its power to enforce its decrees and orders which they may render in that large class of cases, and that is something I will not consent to.

MR. McCALLUM. I can see some point in the remarks made by the gentleman, and I ask that the words "for debt" be restored, so as to read, "no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action," etc. That answers the objection made by the gentleman from San Joaquin.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was lost on a standing vote—ayes, 58; noes, 59.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No person shall be imprisoned for debt, or in any civil action on mesne or final process; but the Legislature may provide for imprisonment on mesne or final process in civil actions in cases of fraud or force, and no person shall be imprisoned for a military fine in time of peace."

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I confess I am not able to understand that amendment. The original section of the Constitution is plain and can be easily understood, and therefore I shall vote against it, as it is something I cannot understand. This is one of the things which should be so plain and explicit that there can be no two opinions as to the intent and meaning, and such is not the case with this amendment.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I have been waiting for gentlemen to express their views on this matter. It seems to me that we should not at this time begin to take the backward path in this matter of imprisonment for debt. Now, we have two kinds of proceedings, civil and criminal. Any man who does anything which makes him deserving of being put in jail is liable to be put there upon criminal process, and that is the only process by which he should be confined. If a man is guilty of any of these crimes which the gentlemen mention, there is law enough to punish him as much as he deserves to be punished. If the laws are not sufficiently severe, then let the responsibility rest with the Legislature of the State, and let that body increase the punishment until it shall be sufficient for every kind of offense.

Now, I am opposed to this matter of punishment coming into civil cases, for the reason that whenever the punishment of a crime comes in a civil case, then it takes it out of the hands of the State and places it in the hands of the individual, whose interest is not to preserve the peace of the State and to protect the property of the citizen, but whose sole interest is to be revenged, perhaps, and gratify his own feelings. For that reason I am opposed to any amendment which drags into the Constitution a provision to punish by imprisonment in civil cases. If there is an offense committed there is a mode of punishment. If an offense is sufficient to entitle a man to be sent to jail, the matter should fall into the hands of the State, and the State should prescribe the punishment to be inflicted, just as it would in a case of murder; but let us not degenerate into a condition where any man can be the cause of imprisoning another in this way. Any man who has been wronged has his redress by going before the Grand Jury, or entering a complaint before the proper officer, and in that way prosecuting the man who has committed an offense, and this is the way that punishment should be meted out, and in no other.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute. Division has been called for.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I will say one word, though I know the Convention is tired. Now, the benefit of this amendment which I have offered is that the Legislature may have it in their power to make laws which are known to be necessary. A man may have been cruelly beaten or maimed for life, and his assailant, perhaps, slightly punished for assault, and he may flee the country with his money and property before any final determination of a suit for civil damages shall have been determined. Under this amendment the Legislature has power to make a law under which he can be arrested and made to give bail to answer the civil suit for damages. He can be made to pay for the damages and injuries he has inflicted. So in case of fraud, if you cannot imprison a man on mesne process and make him give bail, he will go out of the State with his money in his pocket, leaving the man he has defrauded without any redress in the world until final judgment is entered. In all cases of this kind, you should give an opportunity to hold a man to bail, and make him give security for the payment of any judgment that may be recovered. Certainly the Legislature should be authorized to pass such a code of laws as that. Of course the details must be left to them—we cannot enter details here. We are to clothe them with the authority and to restrict that authority when we think it ought to be restricted. This provision is not for the purpose of punishing anybody, as the gentleman has said, the criminal laws will do that, but to give to the injured party the right to hold his assailant to bail, so that he may not gather up his money and chattels and evade the law by flying from the State before final judgment can be entered.

MR. VAN DYKE. I think the word "force" is too broad. Now if the gentleman will say "personal violence," it would be better. If you leave it to the Legislature that will include all torts. I am opposed to leaving any such power to the Legislature.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson.

Division being called for, the amendment was lost: ayes, 42; noes, 74.

MR. MCFARLAND. I would like to offer a substitute to section fifteen:

"No person shall be imprisoned in any civil action except for contempt of Court, nor for a militia fine in time of peace."

MR. MCFARLAND. I simply offer that as carrying out my idea that there should be no imprisonment in civil cases.

MR. BARRY. There has been a great deal of time wasted in arguing this matter, and I am in hopes it will be fully determined. I will say that I believe the resolution—or substitute—offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, was a good one. I think it ought to have been retained in there. As the matter now stands, I am opposed to any change of the Constitution on this point. I believe the word "force" should remain. I believe, when a man attempts to leave the State for the purposes of fraud he should be brought back. The Legislature has passed laws covering that matter, and I don't think the word should be stricken out of the Constitution; and I don't see any good to come from making any change in the section; and for that reason I shall vote against the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. EVEY. I wish to offer a substitute. I have taken it from the Illinois Constitution, and I believe it is a good one and should be adopted. It is as follows:

"No person shall be imprisoned for debt, unless upon refusal to deliver up his estate for the benefit of his creditors, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law, or in cases where there is strong presumption of fraud."

Now I think that is a good amendment, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, it will be adopted.

The amendment was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no further amendment to section fifteen the Secretary will read section sixteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 16. No bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or the remedy for the enforcement or breach thereof, shall ever be passed.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: The old Constitution reads:

SEC. 16. No bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall ever be passed.

Now, the only change made by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights is to add the words, "or the remedy for the enforcement or breach thereof." Now, we all know—at least every lawyer on the committee knows—that the statute of limitations is understood to apply the remedy. There may be cases where the statute of limitations may destroy the right to recover. The purpose of this amendment is to reach just such cases as that. This is the only amendment to the old section, and this is the only purpose of it. It does not prevent the Legislature from changing the remedy at all, but it does prevent the Legislature from so changing the remedy as to impair the right to enforce a contract. Now, suppose there is a promissory note running four years; suppose, after it has run two years, the Legislature shall say the statute of limitations shall run only two years, and apply to existing contracts as well as to contracts to be made afterwards. There would be a very serious question to be determined; and it is to meet such questions that this amendment is made.

MR. NOEL. Mr. Chairman: I move an amendment to the section by striking out all that portion of it embraced between the word "contract" in the second line, and the word "shall" in the third line, so as to restore the section of the old Constitution. These words which I move to strike out have been interpolated by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights. It seems to me, sir, that the section as it now reads, as reported by the committee, goes entirely too far. It is true that the right of the citizen in his contract should be protected, that the right should never be impaired by the Legislature; but this section as it now reads it seems to me does more than that; it prohibits the Legislature from altering the means by which his rights were enforced. Under the old section these rights have been protected—amply protected—in my judgment, and the change proposed by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights is not necessary, and I therefore move to strike out the words interpolated by that committee so as to restore the old Constitution. We have lived under it a good many years, and I have yet to hear of any wrong done under that section, and I hope it will stand.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: The only question I understand to be raised by the amendment offered, is to the point that this is not sufficiently distinct, and may be construed to take away the right of the Legislature to change the remedy. Now, as the section stands in the Constitution, it simply prohibits the impairing of the obligations of a contract. Now, the obligation of a contract may have been understood to go to the extent of remedy for the breach as the means of the enforcement, but that is certainly a very close construction. The only object of the amendment made by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, as stated by the Chairman, Mr. Van Dyke, was to supplement the words, "impairing the obligations of a contract" by the express words "or the remedy for the enforcement or breach thereof." The mere obligation of a contract is of no value to anybody. That is to say, the legal obligation. There is nothing left; if there be anything left, they cannot be enforced at law, and there is nothing left, except the moral obligation, and when we rest upon that, we do not want the statute at all. I submit we cannot reasonably suppose that our appellate Court will not give the construction to these words which are put in here that will be perfectly safe. We cannot reasonably suppose that the highest Court in the State will hold that that means that the Legislature cannot change the remedy for the enforcement of a contract. I see no harm in the world that this amendment, which is incorporated into the section by the committee, can do, unless we are to suppose that the Supreme Court should hold that it would deprive the Legislature of the liberty of making any change in the law in regard to the remedies for breach of contract, and in regard to the means for the enforcement of a contract, which would certainly be a forced interpretation on the section which has been reported by the committee. I think the simple meaning of this is that they shall not impair these contracts. The word impair is plain, and it is difficult to make it any plainer. It is that they shall not render them insufficient, or take away the means by which they are to be enforced, or make any change which shall endanger the rights of the parties. It seems to me that is the meaning, and it is plain as it can be, and I know that there was no other object sought to be accomplished. There are contracts, of which the utility or benefit can only be attained by the enforcement of the contract itself. That is the kind of contract to which this section applies. There are other contracts which can be construed liberally. There certainly should be a requirement that the Legislature shall not take away, by any enactment, the means of having a remedy for the breach of these contracts. If this object is not accomplished by this amendment, we should change it so that it will accomplish the object sought. There certainly can be no objections urged to a proposition in the organic law that the Legislature shall not take away the means for the enforcement of a contract, or take away the remedy for a breach.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I hope this Convention will adopt as a cardinal rule of procedure that amendments to the present Constitution in all cases, except where the wishes of the people and the exigencies of the times demand a change, shall not be adopted. Now, sir, the Constitution as it stands in this case in reference to this question is identical with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which says: "Congress shall pass no bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of a contract." But the words proposed to be introduced here have a very doubtful meaning. It would be difficult to determine at this time what would be the effect of depriving the Legislature of the right to pass remedial statutes. Now, sir, the rule has always been heretofore and always acceded to as eminently proper in itself, that the Legislature had the right to pass remedial statutes, but under the limitations of the Constitution which forbids the impairment of contracts. Subject to that constitutional limitation, it is entirely proper that the Legislature should have control of the matter. I am opposed to the section as advocated by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

MR. GREGG. I offer as a substitute the sections of the old Constitution pertaining to the same subject:

SEC. 16. No bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall ever be passed.

I prefer that to the section reported by the committee, and I move it as a substitute.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Lake, Mr. Noel, leaves it precisely as it was before in the old Constitution, and amounts to the same thing. The question is on the motion to strike out so as to leave the section as it is in the present Constitution.

The motion prevailed and the words were stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section seventeen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 17. Foreigners eligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws thereof, while bona fide residents of this State, shall have the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property as native born citizens.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the section be stricken from the article. It is before another committee, has been considered, and will come up in their report before the Convention in another part of the Constitution. There is no use of considering it twice, and consuming the time, and I therefore move to strike it out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I trust the section will not be stricken out. It belongs right there where it is. I wish to offer an amendment.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: The reason why I make this motion is to save double discussion. There is a section reported by the Committee on Chinese which embraces that matter, and which will be thoroughly discussed when it comes before the Convention. It is hardly worth while to spend a day or two in discussing this now.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I wish to offer to the section, which I send up.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Foreigners who are intending to become citizens of the United States, under the naturalization laws thereof, who now or may hereafter become residents of this State, shall enjoy the same rights respecting the ownership, possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property as native born citizens. Foreigners not intending to become citizens, under the naturalization laws of the United States, shall not have the right to own any real property, nor to make a will, nor to take any property by inheritance; and all contracts made by them, with a view to the renting or occupation of land, houses, or tenements, shall in the future be void."

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question will be on the motion of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, to strike out the section.

The motion prevailed, and the section was stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section eighteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 18. No form of slavery shall ever exist in this State, and there shall be no involuntary servitude unless for the punishment of crime of which the party shall have been duly convicted.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: I move to insert in lieu of section eighteen, as read, the first section of the report of the minority of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, as follows:

"No property qualification shall ever be required for any person to vote or hold office, or to become a juror."

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: The section now before us is one of no slight significance. It involves principles vital to the stability and perpetuity of free institutions. Its adoption or rejection will mark the growth or decay of the American republic. Upon a question of such momentous consequences I cannot refrain from uttering my innermost sentiments. With a view to brevity and precision, the proposition is readily divisible into three heads: First, no property qualification shall ever be required for any person to vote; second, to hold office; and third, to become a juror. Let me briefly call your attention to the provisions relating to this subject in the various State Constitutions. Section Eighteen, Article One, Bill of Rights of the Constitution of Mississippi reads: "No property qualification shall ever be required for any person to become an elector." Section Seventeen, Article One, Bill of Rights of the same Constitution reads: "No property qualification for eligibility to office shall ever be required." These two sections are found in very nearly the same terms in the Bill of Rights of the following State Constitutions: Alabama, Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, North Carolina, South Carolina, and one or two others. As to the qualification for jurors, let me read a few lines from Proffatt on Jury Trial:

"Lately the tendency is to dispense with a property qualification, and to make the selection from citizens who are qualified voters. Thus, in Mississippi a property qualification was formerly required, but the Constitution of eighteen hundred and seventy provided that no property qualification shall ever be required of any person to become a juror; and under this it was decided that the juror shall no longer be restricted to a class possessing property of a certain value. So, in Connecticut, a property qualification was formerly required, but since eighteen hundred and thirty-seven a freehold qualification is dispensed with in talesmen as well as other jurors. Up to eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, in Alabama, the list of jurors was taken biennially from householders and freeholders, but by an Act passed in eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, the list is to be taken from the registered voters. There are about a third of our States which require a property qualification for a juror."

In no part of the Constitution of California is there any provision requiring any property qualification for anything. It has been reserved for the legislators of our day to put into the Code of California a property qualification for jurors. Had the members of the Convention of eighteen hundred and forty-nine anticipated such an illiberal and unrepublican Act, they certainly would have inserted in the Constitution of California the declaration now before us. I propose briefly to draw your attention to the scope and value of this section. Let us go to the very bottom of the subject. What qualities should a man possess to be a good citizen, an honest officer, and a faithful juror? What should be the essential attributes of citizenship, of office, and of the jury? They may all, I think, be ranged under the three cardinal virtues, honesty, ability, and patriotism. Look at these three words in their purest and broadest significations and you have before you the three primary elements which together go to form the noblest citizen, the ablest officer, and the worthiest judge. First and foremost of them all is honesty. Without that, all the others are but the echoes of treachery and the fawnings of hypocrisy. Any brain, no matter how capable, any heart, no matter how large, that is not anchored to the rock of honesty, is but the rotten wreck floating upon the polluted waters of the Styx. Now, sir, what relation is there between property and honesty? Are they in any way essential to each other? Why, in the very question is its own answer. To-day the most notorious thoroughfare to property is through perjury, gambling, and crime. It is a sad commentary that few men are now willing to drudge along the dreary road of toil to reach that precious goal.

Under our second head we have placed ability. To be sure the citizen, the officer, and the juror should be men able to discharge their respective duties. Some persons say that as it requires sense, and intelligence, and foresight to acquire property, therefore the property owner, and he only, should be intrusted with the ballot, the office, and the jury. And now while I admit that a peculiar kind of intelligence is in many cases requisite for the acquisition of property, nevertheless I am fully convinced that the possession of property is by no means a criterion of intelligence. You cannot measure a man's brains by the size of his town lots, nor his judgment by the length of his bank account. Under our third head we have placed patriotism. No man, I hold, should be permitted to serve under the American system unless he holds it in reverence and love. No man, I hold, is entitled to the rights and privileges of this republic unless he is willing to die in their defense. Now, sir, let me ask in the name of reason, can no man but a property owner be a patriot? The history of other lands besides our own has illustrated upon many battle fields the fallacy of that assumption. When we come to look into the question there is in reality no laboring man who is not a property owner — no laboring man who is not a taxpayer. Capital is nothing but accumulated labor, and he who assists in the accumulation is no less a capitalist than a laborer. The man who drives my wagon is honest, and honorable, and intelligent, but while he has no property he certainly helps me to pay the taxes upon mine. His name as well as mine should appear upon the assessment roll. He cannot feel otherwise than interested in the welfare of his State. What virtue does he lack that he should be branded with the mark of an unjust discrimination? What crime has he committed that should render him incompetent to judge of his fellow men? I tell you, gentlemen, it is a foul stain upon the statute books of California. The whole matter resolves itself into one short sentence: As political rights and privileges are not dependent on or modified by property, therefore no property qualification should affect the right to vote, to hold office, or to become a juror. Wealth is in no way the index of honesty, integrity, or intelligence. Poverty is not necessarily the brother of crime. No man is a better citizen because he is rich, and no man is a worse citizen because he is poor. If you must have a political test let it be brains and not dollars. If any gentleman will propose a just and practicable educational qualification for suffrage, for office, and for the jury, I pledge him my vote and my hand. But, sir, a property qualification is monstrous. It is unworthy of this liberal age. It is, in truth, a relic of barbarism. You can't find any approach to it in the laws of the United States, and you will not find it in any of the late Constitutions of the various States of the Union. The American republic was founded upon equality. She was born and reared under the broad panoply of liberty to all. She has grown and thrived under the imperial ægis of injustice to none. In my opinion the proudest boast of the republic to-day is that before and under her laws there is no rich and no poor, no proud and no lowly, no weak and no strong. Each citizen is the peer of all and in all each is an equal unit. That is the genius of our free institutions. In that lies their life. Vitiate that spirit and they must fall. California can never afford to depart now from a custom so sanctified and a principle so just. I am not a blind venerator of antiquity. But, sir, when a principle which more than a century ago inspired a great nation is handed down to us as the palladium of our liberties, I cannot silently witness its destruction. Property qualifications of any and every kind are not in consonance with the spirit of an American State. They are equally as oppressive and obnoxious as the infamous tests of religion. I hope, sir, as I believe, that there is sufficient manhood and patriotism in the honorable body to declare to posterity that no property qualification shall ever be required for any person to enjoy the rights and privileges of the State of California.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say only a word with reference to this question, for it is one to my mind that requires but little elucidation. The gentleman who has just preceded me, has built his argument upon the idea that property is nothing in this government. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that self-interest always governs men. Now, sir, if there is no local interest, there can be no local object to carry out anything that will protect the community. If you elect a man as Sheriff of your county, you select a man who himself has property to be protected, and then your interest is his interest. You want a man who has something at stake himself, and he will carry out your wishes and preserve order and the public peace. If this section should be adopted, instead of having jurors who feel an interest in the welfare of the community, we would have tramps, and persons who are constantly floating from one State to another, and from one county to another, and who have no interest in the local affairs of the community. I say, Mr. Chairman, it would be a dangerous thing to do: when we adopt such an idea as this, we are treading on dangerous ground, one that comes nearer to our rights and liberties than anything else we can do. I hope the amendment will be voted down, and that this Convention will declare against such a dangerous innovation as this.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud, has made an exceedingly creditable speech on this subject, to which I have listened with a great deal of pleasure. I think, however, he overlooks the clear distinction between the office, duty, function, or whatever you may call it, of a juror, and the right of a person to the exercise of the right of suffrage and the right to hold office. The two latter are clearly right. A man has a right to seek an office. He has a right to vote. Certainly that right should not be dependent upon the amount of property he owns. But, sir, when it comes to serving on the jury, it is a different matter, and he is indeed treading on dangerous ground. That is an obligation which every citizen is wont to shirk, and every lawyer knows that the very best citizens shift in every way possible to find an excuse to get rid of that duty. The law as it now stands requires that the names of jurymen shall be on the assessment roll for real or personal property. That is a custom that has been sanctioned by experience in this State for a quarter of a century. It is regarded as a conservative guard to the liberty and property and lives of the citizens of the State. I think, as far as the jury system is concerned, in this respect it should be left as it is now.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I will state the reason why the majority of the committee declined to entertain that section. One of the reasons has already been assigned by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton. The right to vote and the right to hold office are already defined in the other parts of the Constitution, and the only remaining proposition is in regard to who shall be competent jurors. Those are the reasons why the majority of the committee declined to insert that provision in the article on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out all after the word "office," and this will leave out all about the qualifications of jurors. I will remind my esteemed friend from San Francisco that if he refers to the Constitution of Missouri, I know something about that [laughter] and there they require a property qualification before a man can serve in the Senate. He must have paid taxes for twelve months prior to his election to the Senate. I ask if it is not proper for a man to be on the assessment roll before he shall be allowed to serve on a jury? I therefore offer an amendment to strike out all after the word office. Mr. President, it is well known by every gentleman within the sound of my voice, that every man wants to shift the responsibility of serving on the jury. I want them to have an interest in the community before they are allowed to sit on the jury. If my life is in jeopardy, I don't want a lot of tramps and hoodlums to try me. [Laughter and cries of louder.] Oh, I presume you can hear me, if you can't I will stop it.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: I accept the amendment to strike out all after the word "office."

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I simply wish to state, as a member of the Suffrage Committee, that that committee will report on the subject of the qualifications of voters and office holders. The committee will report a qualification that covers the whole ground proposed by the gentleman, except as to jury, and it is as well, perhaps, to strike that out, which leaves nothing but the question as to whether it is proper to insert it here or in the suffrage department. I think, however, it will be a little out of place here; that it belongs in the suffrage department, and will be reported on to the entire satisfaction of the gentlemen who are so uneasy about property qualifications in regard to this matter, for there will be no property qualification provided for in that report.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud, to insert the following: "No property qualification shall ever be required for any person to vote or hold office."

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee now rise, and recommend that this matter be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Lost.

The question being upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud, it was lost.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute to the section. It is the corresponding section in the old Constitution.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 18. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, unless for the punishment of crime, shall ever be tolerated in this State.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: The only change made in the section was to make it conform to the language of the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, "of which the party shall have been duly convicted," having been added after the word "crime." It also declares that there shall be no form of slavery existing in this State. That language is taken from the Constitution of Alabama. I call attention of the members to the fact that there is no such thing as slavery for the punishment of crimes, which is the way it stands in the old section. It has reference to slavery as well as to involuntary servitude, so we thought best to put it in this form, that there shall be no form of slavery in this State. The old section says: "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, unless for the punishment of crime, shall ever be tolerated in this State." There is no such thing as "slavery for the punishment of crime." It means involuntary servitude for the punishment of crime.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: This Convention will do well to adhere as strictly as may be with safety to the language, text, and spirit of the old Constitution; to depart from it in no instance, unless there is some real necessity for the change. The old section says: "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude unless for the punishment of crime." It is precisely the same thing, and with due respect to the gentleman, it is much more aptly expressed in the old Constitution, and I hope it will be adopted.

MR. VAN DYKE. We simply say in addition, "of which the party has been duly convicted."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, substituting section eighteen of the old Constitution.

The substitute was adopted by a vote of 79 ayes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section nineteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 19. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable seizures and searches, shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue, but on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, particularly describing the place to be searched and persons and things to be seized.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments to section nineteen, the Secretary will read section twenty.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 20. Treason against the State shall consist only in levying war against it, adhering to its enemies, or giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the evidence of two witnesses to the same overt act, or confession in open Court.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments offered, the Secretary will read section twenty-one.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 21. No special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted which may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the Legislature; nor shall any citizen, or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments, the Secretary will read section twenty-two.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 22. No money shall ever be appropriated or drawn from the State treasury for the use or benefit of any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or any other institution, not under the exclusive management and control of the State; nor shall any grant or donation of property ever be made thereto by the State.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I move that section twenty-two be stricken from the article, for the reason that the Committee on Legislative Department have prepared a section embracing the same thing, and I think that is the proper place for it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section twenty-two.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twenty-three.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 23. The provisions of this Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, unless by express words it is declared to be otherwise.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments, the Secretary will read section twenty-four.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 24. This enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: Section twenty-one was passed before my attention was called to one word in it, which ought to be corrected. I call the attention of the committee to the word "shall," in the fourth line, after the word "terms." It seems to me that the word "may" would be better in that connection.

MR. AYERS. I think the word "shall" is the better word in that connection.

MR. EDGERTON. The suggestion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds, it seems to me would destroy the very object of the provision.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion to change is not in order, unless by unanimous consent of the committee.

MR. EDGERTON. I object.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being an objection, it is out of order.

MR. REYNOLDS. I simply desired to correct the sentence; I do not desire to change the phraseology.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had an opportunity while that section was under consideration.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I ask leave of the Convention to change the language of section twenty-three, which says: "The provisions of this Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, unless by express words it is declared to be otherwise." I don't know whether it refers to provisions; if so, it should read, "they are," instead of "it." "It are" declared to be otherwise. It certainly ought to be "they are." The Constitution is not mandatory, it is the provisions of the Constitution that are mandatory. It is just as well to be right as to be wrong. There are perhaps fifteen or twenty such discreditable errors in these reports, and I think the Convention should not, knowingly, let them pass.

MR. VAN DYKE. This section was taken from the draft sent up by the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager; so the gentleman can level his batteries across the way.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the Secretary will correct it.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: It is now twenty-five minutes to four o'clock.

MR. AYERS. Not time to adjourn yet.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee now rise.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. I am instructed by the Committee of the Whole to report to the Convention that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: If it is in order I move to lay the report on the table, for this reason: two or three committees, with one of which I am connected, are anxious to complete their work, and they would like to have a chance to look this over between this and to-morrow morning.

MR. VAN DYKE. Why not make it the special order for Tuesday. I make that motion, that it be made the special order for Tuesday next.

MR. MCCALLUM. I wish to call attention to the fact that we have not yet considered the Preamble. I move that we consider the Preamble.

THE PRESIDENT. That will come off last of all in the entire Constitution.

MR. MCCALLUM. I have not heard any reason why we should not go on and finish it.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on making the article the special order for Tuesday next.

The motion prevailed.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. HUESTIS. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

MR. WHITE. I move that the report of the Committee of the Whole be printed and laid on the desks of members.

THE PRESIDENT. There being no objections it will be so ordered.

Digitized by Google

MR. EDGERTON. I desire to give notice that the Committee on Revenue and Taxation will meet immediately.

MR. BLACKMER. The Committee on Future Amendments will meet to-morrow morning.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is now to adjourn.

Carried.

And at three o'clock and thirty-five minutes P. M. the Convention adjourned.

REPORT.

MR. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Executive Department, presented the following report:

To Honorable J. P. Hoge, President Constitutional Convention:

MR. PRESIDENT: The Committee on the Executive Department respectfully beg leave to report back to the Convention the following propositions, with the recommendation that no further action be taken thereon, viz.: Proposition No. 5, by Mr. Barbour; No. 88, by Mr. Davis; No. 394, by Mr. Davis; No. 307, by Mr. McConnell; No. 149, by Mr. Shoemaker; No. 133, by Mr. Lewis; No. 22, by Mr. Townsend; No. 299, by Mr. White; No. 324, by Mr. Schell; No. 286, by Mr. H. W. Smith; No. 148, by Mr. Shoemaker; No. 265, by Mr. Joyce; No. 270, by Mr. Lindow; No. 211, by Mr. Martin, of Santa Cruz.

The committee further reports that it has prepared an article, entitled article number five, executive department, which is herewith submitted. In preparing this article we have taken the corresponding article in the present Constitution as the basis of our action, and have proposed but few alterations.

Section one remains unchanged.

In section two the time when the Governor shall enter upon the duties of his office is changed to the Monday after the first Tuesday in January.

In section three the time required for the residence of the Governor in this State prior to his election is changed from two to five years, and he is required to be thirty years of age, instead of twenty-five, at the time of his election.

Sections four, five, six, seven, and eight remain unchanged.

Section nine is altered to as to confine the Legislature, when convened on extraordinary occasions, to the consideration of the subjects mentioned in the proclamation.

Sections ten, eleven, and twelve remain unchanged.

Section thirteen is omitted, the subject-matter thereof having been referred to another committee.

Sections fourteen and fifteen remain unchanged.

Section sixteen is altered by providing that the Lieutenant-Governor shall be incapable of holding any other office during the time for which he shall have been elected, except as provided in this Constitution.

Sections seventeen and eighteen remain unchanged.

Section nineteen is amended by striking out all after the word "law."

Section twenty is omitted.

Section twenty-one is altered by fixing the compensation of the several officers therein named, except the Attorney-General and Surveyor-General, whose compensation is left to be provided for by the Legislature, for the reasons that it is possible that under this Constitution the duties of the Attorney-General may be largely increased, and he may be required by the Legislature to devote his entire time to his official duties. As to the Surveyor-General, the committee is disposed to believe that the duties of the office are less onerous than formerly, and that possibly the office might be dispensed with at no distant period.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

ALEX. CAMPBELL, Chairman.
J. R. W. HITCHCOCK,
BENJ. SHURTLEFF,
A. R. ANDREWS,
JOEL A. HARVEY,
R. S. SWING,
D. W. HERRINGTON,

DRAFT OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

The following draft, submitted by the committee, was read by the Secretary:

ARTICLE V.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The supreme executive power of this State shall be vested in a Chief Magistrate, who shall be styled the Governor of the State of California.

SEC. 2. The Governor shall be elected by the qualified electors, at the time and places of voting for members of the Assembly, and shall hold his office four years from and after the Monday after the first Tuesday in January subsequent to his election, and until his successor is elected and qualified.

SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor who has not been a citizen of the United States and a resident of this State five years next preceding the election, and attained the age of thirty years at the time of said election.

SEC. 4. The returns of every election for Governor shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of government, directed to the Speaker of the Assembly, who shall, during the first week of the session, open and publish them in the presence of both houses of the Legislature. The person having the highest number of votes shall be Governor; but, in case any two or more have an equal and the highest number of votes, the Legislature shall, by joint vote of both houses, choose one of said persons so having an equal and the highest number of votes for Governor.

SEC. 5. The Governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the militia, the army and navy of this State.

SEC. 6. He shall transact all executive business with the officers of government, civil and military, and may require information, in writing, from the officers of the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

SEC. 7. He shall see that the laws are faithfully executed.

SEC. 8. When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and law for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the Legislature, or at the next election by the people.

SEC. 9. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the Legislature by proclamation, stating the purposes for which he has convened it, and when so convened it shall have no power to legislate on any subjects other than those specified in the proclamation, but may provide for the expenses of the session and other matters incidental thereto.

SEC. 10. He shall communicate by message to the Legislature, at every session, the condition of the State, and recommend such matters as he shall deem expedient.

SEC. 11. In case of a disagreement between the two houses with respect to the time of adjournment, the Governor shall have power to adjourn the Legislature to such time as he may think proper; provided, it be not beyond the time fixed for the meeting of the next Legislature.

SEC. 12. No person shall, while holding any office under the United States or this State, exercise the office of Governor except as hereinafter expressly provided.

SEC. 13. There shall be a seal of this State, which shall be kept by the Governor, and used by him officially, and shall be called "The Great Seal of the State of California."

SEC. 14. All grants and commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the people of the State of California, sealed with the great seal of the State, signed by the Governor, and countersigned by the Secretary of State.

SEC. 15. A Lieutenant-Governor shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner, as the Governor; and his term of office and his qualifications of eligibility shall also be the same. He shall be President of the Senate, but shall only have a casting vote therein. If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant-Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the State, the President pro tem. of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease. The Lieutenant-Governor shall be disqualified from holding any other office, except as specially provided in this Constitution, during the term for which he shall have been elected.

SEC. 16. In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, resignation, or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. But when the Governor shall, with the consent of the Legislature, be out of the State in time of war, at the head of any military force thereof, he shall continue Commander-in-Chief of all the military force of the State.

SEC. 17. A Secretary of State, a Controller, a Treasurer, an Attorney-General, and a Surveyor-General shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner as the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, and whose term of office shall be the same as the Governor.

SEC. 18. The Secretary of State shall keep a fair record of the official acts of the legislative and executive departments of the government, and shall, when required, lay the same, and all matters relative thereto, before either branch of the Legislature, and shall perform such other duties as may be assigned him by law.

SEC. 19. The Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, Controller, Treasurer, Attorney-General, and Surveyor-General shall each, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected, which compensation is hereby fixed for the following officers for the two terms next ensuing the adoption of this Constitution, as follows: Governor, six thousand dollars per annum; Lieutenant-Governor, the same per diem as may be provided by law for the Speaker of the Assembly; the Secretary of State, Controller, and Treasurer, three thousand dollars each per annum, said compensation to be in full for all services by them respectively rendered in any official capacity or employment whatsoever during their respective terms of office; provided, however, that the Legislature, after the expiration of the terms hereinbefore mentioned, may by law diminish the compensation of any or all of said officers, but in no case shall have the power to increase the same above the sums hereby fixed by this Constitution. The Legislature shall, by law, fix the compensation of the Attorney-General and the Surveyor-General, and may, in its discretion, abolish the office of Surveyor-General; and none of the officers hereinbefore named shall receive for their own use any fees or perquisites for the performance of any official duty.

MR. CAMPBELL. I move that the report and draft be ordered printed and be made the special order for Monday, November fourth.

Carried.

NEW PROPOSITIONS.

THE PRESIDENT. Resolutions and propositions relative to the Constitution are now in order.

SUPPORT OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

MR. HUESTIS introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, providing for the support of the common schools of this State:

Resolved, That the following provisions be adopted in that article of the Constitution which relates to education:

SECTION —. The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools, by an ad valorem tax on all of the taxable property of this State, by which a school shall be kept open and supported in each school district at least six months in every year.

SEC. —. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to preserve inviolate, for the support of the common schools, the funds already accrued and to accrue from the proceeds of sales of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land donated by Congress for common school purposes in this State.

Referred to Committee on Education.

IRRIGATION.

MR. HOWARD introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, in relation to irrigation:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall have power to pass laws to provide for an equitable distribution of water for irrigation, preserving vested rights.

SEC. 2. The Legislature may provide for the condemnation of rights of way for irrigating canals, compensation to be first made, and for the condemnation of existing water rights, compensation being first made.

Referred to Committee on Water and Water Rights.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

MR. HOWARD introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, to secure coöperative societies between labor and capital:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall have power to pass laws to facilitate coöperative societies where the capitalist furnishes all the capital and the laborer all the labor, and secure an equitable division of property.

SEC. 2. To faciliate corporations by which the laborer furnishes both the labor and the capital.

SEC. 3. To faciliate associations in which the capitalist pays current wages, and, in addition, a certain share of the profits, after deducting interest and a sufficient sum for the renewal of machinery.

SEC. 4. To facilitate coöperative stores.

SEC. 5. To organize Courts of Arbitration by which all contests between the employer and the employé may be settled.

Referred to Committee on Labor and Capital.

STREET ASSESSMENTS.

MR. REYNOLDS introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, in relation to street assessments:

SECTION —. No municipal corporation shall have the power to levy or collect an assessment upon any property, or upon its owner, for the opening or improvement of any street, or to defray the expense of any street work, which assessment shall be greater in amount than the additional value given to such property by the opening or improvement of such street, or the doing of such street work.

Referred to Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS.

MR. ANDREWS introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, concerning the registration of voters:

SECTION —. The Legislature may, by law, provide for the registration of voters, and may make such law applicable to such subdivisions of the State as may be proper.

Referred to Committee on Right of Suffrage.

TAXATION.

MR. NOEL introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution in relation to taxation:

SECTION —. All property in this State shall be assessed, for purposes of taxation, at its actual cash value.

SEC. —. All persons in this State shall pay taxes on what they are actually worth, and no more.

Referred to Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

SECRET TRIBUNALS.

MR. O'SULLIVAN introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, entitled "illegality of secret tribunals declared—punishment of participants in them to be provided for:"

SECTION —. Secret organizations and tribunals of an extra-judicial character, which assume to impose penalties upon persons, without sanction of law, are prohibited; and the Legislature is directed to provide, by the full force of law, for the suppression of such tribunals, and the punishment of all persons participating in their proceedings.

Referred to Committee on Legislative Department.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

MR. HARVEY introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to labor and capital:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The interests of labor and capital being identical, and any legislation tending to promote the interests of the one necessarily and in the same proportion advances the prosperity of the other, therefore no arbitrary restrictions shall be imposed by law tending to deprive or curtail the natural rights of either labor or capital in this State, and all legislation in relation thereto shall be such as may be best calculated to advance the interests of the rich and poor alike; and to that end the Legislature of this State may, by law, provide for the establishment of a Bureau of Industrial Resources, to be under the management of a Commissioner, who shall be elected by the people at the times and places prescribed by law, and in the same manner as other State officers, and whose term of office shall be the same.

SEC. 2. The duties of such officer shall be defined by law, and he shall receive such compensation for the performance thereof as may be fixed by the Legislature; provided, however, that such compensation, and all the expenses of said Bureau, shall not in any case exceed the sum of —— dollars per annum.

Referred to Committee on Labor and Capital.

MOTIONS AND RESOLUTIONS.

MR. REYNOLDS. I move that resolution number eighteen be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Legislative Department.

Carried.

The resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on —— be and are hereby instructed to inquire into and report as to the expediency of so amending the Constitution as to limit the future acquisition of land by any one person, or association of persons, or corporation.

MR. STEDMAN. According to notice given yesterday, by Mr. Wellin, he not being here, I wish to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That Rule One be amended so as to read as follows.

RULE ONE—HOUR OF MEETING.

The Convention shall meet each day at nine o'clock A. M., unless it shall adjourn to some other hour.

And be it further resolved, That—

RULE TWO—RECESS.

The Convention shall take a recess each day from twelve o'clock M. to one and a half o'clock P. M.

MR. STEDMAN. I presume that there will be no necessity for debating this question at all. I think the Convention will unanimously agree to adopt that rule. We would be saved an hour and a half session each day, and it would expedite our business, therefore I will say no more in regard to it, but simply move its adoption.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. President: I hope the resolution will not be adopted. Nothing will be gained by longer sessions, and I think more time should be taken to consider these propositions out of the Convention, if the work is to be done properly, and so as to be a benefit to the State. The recess now granted is not a minute too much. For my own part, with all the diligence I can use, I am hardly able to get back here in time.

MR. GRACE. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 64 ayes to 41 noes.

MR. TINNIN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the State Controller is hereby requested to furnish this Convention with the cost of maintaining the militia of this State, commencing with the year eighteen hundred and fifty-six—said report can be made either in gross amounts or in detail.

Adopted.

MR. CASSERLY offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of Streets of the City and County of San Francisco be and he is requested to transmit to this Convention the following information:

First—The amount of money paid by private owners for street assessments in the said city and county within the past twelve years.

Second—The amount of money paid by said city and county for street work of every description for the same period.

Third—Any other information within his control bearing on the subject of this resolution.

Adopted.

MR. CONDON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Convention shall not recognize the claims for pay of any person or persons who is now or who may be hereafter working in or about this Capitol, and who has not been duly elected or appointed by said Convention.

Adopted.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: I desire now to make my motion, in accordance with notice previously given in reference to amending rule sixty-four.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No leave of absence shall be granted until the reasons therefor shall have been fully stated and approved by an affirmative vote of the Convention."

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: I would ask to amend the proposition by striking out "an affirmative vote of the" so that it will read: "No leave of absence shall be granted until the reasons therefore shall have been fully stated and approved by this Convention." It seems to me that the very least that this Convention can ask of those desiring leave of absence is that the reasons therefor shall be given. The custom under which we have been acting I know is one of long-established precedent, but I think it is a bad one. It seems to me when members enter into a contest for positions of this kind they should consider the character and nature of the responsibility they are assuming. They have no right to accept such positions unless they can discharge the duties, and they ought to resign their seats unless they can give at least half of the time to the duties they were elected to perform. The precedent is a bad one, and the privilege is to a certain extent abused here. We are entitled to the attendance of the members on this floor. We have here to-day an example—a forcible illustration—of the abuse of this privilege. Though we have not the reasons for the absence of one half the members, yet it is undoubtedly a fact that many of them are absent on trivial causes, and could as well be here as not. I know that leaves of absence have been asked for members for the most trivial causes. I, for one, would like to know, when a man asks for leave of absence, what are his reasons, and if they are not sufficient, I shall stand here to protest.

MR. STEDMAN. I second the motion.

MR. LARKIN. I think there will be no necessity for that resolution to be passed at this time, for this reason: if we avoid making special orders a week in advance it will compel members of this Convention to remain here and we will have no necessity for that rule. We have now two or three propositions that have been made special orders. Had they not been made special orders our Convention would have been full this morning. I think if this Convention would determine to have no more special orders it would be all right.

MR. HUESTIS. I think this is a question we can dispose of very quickly. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 72 ayes—noes not taken.

MR. LARKIN. I desire to give notice that on Monday I will move to amend Rule Fifty-two by striking out all after the word "to" and inserting "the Committee of the Whole," so that propositions and resolutions introduced hereafter shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole instead of the various committees. I want that this Convention shall do its work in Committee of the Whole.

MR. OVERTON. The Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings find it necessary before making their report to visit some of the State institutions. We have received a number of communications from different institutions requesting us to come and visit them, and we want to make some investigation in relation to the State Prison. In order to do this it is necessary to have a leave of absence for a few days. I move that the Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings be granted four days' leave of absence.

Carried.

MR. SWING offered the following:

Resolved, That the Adjutant-General be requested to give the number of killed, wounded, and missing of the militia since the organization of the National Guard of this State.

[Laughter.]

THE PRESIDENT put the question and announced: "The ayes have it unanimously."

MR. HILBORN. I rise to call the attention of the house to the resolution which they have adopted to permit some committee to travel around and visit the public institutions of the State. Are they aware that the adoption of that resolution involves the payment of the mileage? Is that the intent? I would like to have that resolution read again. If it is the deliberate intention of this body to allow this committee to visit the public buildings of this State and pay their expenses while they are gone, I want the house to adopt the resolution with a knowledge of that fact.

MR. BROWN. I merely rise to inquire, did the gentleman move a reconsideration? I was under the impression that we could not reconsider on the same day.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman can only give notice of his intention to move a reconsideration, if he desires.

MR. CONDON. As a member of that committee and a resident of San Francisco——

THE PRESIDENT. It is not before the Convention at all. It is disposed of.

MR. HILBORN. I give notice of a motion to reconsider.

MR. MCCALLUM. I move to suspend the rule in order to make that motion now.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 88 ayes; noes not taken.

MR. HILBORN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings were given leave of absence to visit the public buildings of the State. I cannot see what good purpose could be subserved by this roving commission. Each Legislature appoints committees of this kind to visit these institutions, for the purpose of ascertaining what appropriations should be made, but what object there is in a committee from this body paying such a visit is beyond my comprehension. It will entail upon the Convention the expense of paying their mileage, because it is the law of all parliamentary bodies of this kind, that where we authorize committees to go away we impliedly promise to pay their expenses, and so far as I know the expenses are always paid.

MR. CONDON. There is no necessity of the motion made by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Hilborn. It is not the intention of the committee to exact from this body any mileage. The members of the sub-committee are residents of San Francisco, and at the earnest request of the Secretary of the State Prison Commission, they intend to visit that institution; and I believe the Chairman of the committee well understands that it was the acknowledged intention of that body not to exact any mileage whatever. If I am in order I would move that the committee have leave of absence, provided, however, that no mileage be granted.

THE PRESIDENT. It is not in order at present. The first question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which leave was granted the Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings.

The motion prevailed.

MR. OVERTON. The committee did not anticipate any pay, and do not expect to charge this Convention a cent. It was to accommodate the State Prison Commission as much as anything else. They wanted us to meet them there in San Francisco, and let them know at what time they could meet us. We have received communications from the State Prison Commission in San Francisco, wanting to know when we would come, and we did not expect to charge this Convention a cent. We have agreed that we would invite them to meet us, and we would go down there for the purpose of conferring with them. We simply want the leave of absence.

MR. CONDON. We have already notified that Commission as to the time and place in which the sub-committee will meet them, next Monday.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: I do not see any propriety in passing a resolution so general as to include all the public buildings of the State. Almost every Legislature sends out its committees to make reports in regard to the public institutions, and these reports can be found on file for the information of every member. There is some propriety in sending the committee to the State Prison [laughter] so far as our labors are concerned here.

MR. BARNES. I rise to a point of order, and ask that the words of the gentleman be taken down. He talks of sending a committee of this body to the State Prison.

MR. HAGER. I am glad to see that my friend is so ready to come to the rescue of members here in his military capacity. I think there is some propriety in sending the committee to that institution [laughter], because there is a proposition pending here in regard to the management of that institution in the future. It has been in the charge of the Lieutenant-Governor; and it has always been a question before the Legislature whether the Lieutenant-Governor properly should be charged with these duties. It has always been a question whether we should not have a Warden or some Commission to control and govern that institution; and therefore it may be desirous for us to have some information so far as it refers to that institution. In regard to all the other public institutions of the State, I think we have sufficient information. I would propose to limit the action of the committee to that one institution.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: I cannot see the propriety of sending any of this Convention to the State Prison, unless they go at the expense of the State. If there are persons who desire to confer with this committee, here is the place to confer with them. As to the other institutions of the State, why, we have a member in one other institution, and are liable, if we stay here long over the one hundred days, to get into some of the other institutions or asylums—orphan asylums, for instance. [Laughter.] I must say, that if this is for the purpose of accommodating any of the State officials, it is their place to come here and confer with this body, so that we can go on with the business of the session. There are more of us absent already than there ought to be. There is a special order for next Tuesday, and these members ought to be here.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: While we are discussing this subject, I desire to express my thanks to my colleague from San Francisco for his compliment to me as Chairman of the Military Committee, and, in return, I do now move that he be sent as a committee of one to the lunatic asylum.

MR. BROWN. Mr. President: It appears to me from what has been said that the Legislature, at different sessions, has received information concerning the State Prison and other matters that may concern this body. That it is necessary for this body to have a special committee to attend to it and see what is necessary to be done, I do not see the point. I think there is nothing of the kind. I am convinced that there is nothing that would convince the minds of these members upon the question of the State Prison but that they can have access to without going to San Francisco and investigating the subject any farther than the records show, and the information that may be attainable here in this city. I therefore see no reason whatever for sending that committee.

MR. LARKIN. I move the previous question.

MR. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman will allow me, I desire to make a suggestion. I suggest that the committee have two days leave of absence, commencing on next Saturday. That would enable them to return on Monday afternoon and enable them to do what they desire.

MR. LARKIN. I withdraw my motion.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I desire to call attention to the fact that a majority of the Commission of the State Prison reside in Sacramento, that is, the Governor and Secretary of State. They can have their meeting in Sacramento without going to the State Prison.

MR. CAPLES. I move to amend by providing that the committee, after its arrival at San Quentin, be made "trusties."

THE PRESIDENT. The amendment is out of order.

MR. HUESTIS. The resolution is now before the house. I move to lay it on the table.

MR. TULLY. Mr. President: I would like to inquire, is there any rule that prohibits or prevents that committee from going to the penitentiary if they want to—provided they be guilty?

MR. HUESTIS' motion prevailed, and the whole subject-matter was laid on the table.

MR. STEDMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to place on the desk of each member of this Convention a copy of report of Senate committee of the session of eighteen hundred and seventy-seven and eighteen hundred and seventy-eight on Chinese.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: We will soon consider the report of the Committee on Chinese, and I think if this report is placed in the hands of each member it will be a very valuable aid to them. I understand that there are some thousand copies in the Secretary of State's office at present, useless, and that is the reason why I offer the resolution.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I move to amend by adding to the resolution, "provided they are on hand in the Secretary of State's office." Don't let us start in printing them.

MR. STEDMAN. I accept the amendment.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

MR. WATERS. Mr. President: It seems there is very little business before the Convention, and in view of the fact that there is yet a great deal of committee work undone I now move that this Convention adjourn.

MR. SHAFTER. We have some business before the Convention, and that is the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power.

The motion to adjourn was lost.

PARDONING POWER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: If it is in order I wish to call up the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Secretary read the draft of the proposed section reported by the committee, as follows:

AMENDMENT NUMBER FOUR HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIVE—ARTICLE FIVE.

SEC. 13. The Governor shall have the power to grant reprieves, and the Governor and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall have power to grant pardons and commutations of sentence, after conviction, for all offenses, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions, and with such restrictions and limitations, as they may think proper, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons. Upon conviction for treason, the Governor shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the Legislature, at its next meeting, when the Legislature shall either pardon, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. The Governor shall communicate to the Legislature, at the beginning of every session, every case of reprieve or pardon granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence, and its date, the date of the pardon and reprieve, and the reasons for granting the same. Neither the Governor and Chief Justice nor the Legislature shall have power to grant pardons, or commutations of sentence, in any case where the convict has been previously thrice convicted of felony.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: In the draft which the Committee on the Pardoning Power have submitted, there are four or five alterations of the old Constitution, only two of which are at all material. The Governor retains the power of reprieve in all cases, while the power to grant pardons and commutations of sentence is vested in the Governor and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. It was not thought advisable to trouble the Chief Justice with simple questions of delay of execution, and we thought it right that the Governor should have the power to grant reprieves until the testimony is produced, without consulting the Chief Justice. In cases of impeachment, the power remains the same as before. Now, in the fourteenth line we have made what we deem to be an important amendment, by the addition of the words, "and the reasons for granting the same." That has never been required before, and we think it ought to be stated in addition to the date of the offense and pardon. We, therefore, inserted these words so that the Governor should report to the Legislature the reasons for granting the pardons or commutations of sentence. The chief amendment is made at the bottom. "Neither the Governor and Chief Justice, nor the Legislature, shall have power to grant pardons or commutations of sentence in any case where the convict has been previously thrice convicted of felony." I am told, sir, that there are in the State Prison men who are serving their sixth term, and some who are serving their tenth term. Men sentenced three and four times are exceedingly common there. This is probably owing, in a great degree, to the manner in which they are treated there, which was well described by my friend from Alameda, Judge Campbell, the other day. They look upon it, in some respects, as the happy Valley of Rasselas, where they are free from care. I hope that we shall make the third or fourth sentence more pregnant of evil consequences to the convict than they have been heretofore. For myself, I would almost allow a jury to sentence them to death, on the ground that, being past reformation, their lives were worthless; but that is rather contrary to the opinions of the public, and I simply want to suggest that they should not be put in the category of mercy. There is no use of turning them out, as all experience shows.

The principal amendment is on the power of commutation and pardon which has been vested in the Governor and Chief Justice. It is exceedingly difficult to state the grounds that ought to govern the executive clemency. It has been left undetermined. No rules have been laid down in the Constitution, none have been attempted to be stated in the laws, because it is exceedingly difficult for any one to state the grounds on which alone executive clemency should be granted. The Governors themselves have never attempted to reduce it to any rule. There are cases where simple sentiment, simple emotion, or outside influence has operated upon the Executive and induced him to grant pardons. While they cannot fully agree with the arguments presented to them, they still have respect for those making the application and must entertain their plea, and, while not fully justifying their own course, silently acquiesce, even when their judgment cannot render any good reason for it. Such has been the system and the law. Such has been the idea of the Constitution by leaving it in the discretion of the Executive. But there have been great abuses in this State and elsewhere, as everybody understands. Men have been pardoned when there was no reason for it—at least an outsider can see no reason for it.

Now, it was thought that by associating the Chief Justice with the Executive, the latter would receive potential and important aid. In many cases of convictions for felony the reasons for and against granting a pardon or commutation of sentence would be more fully understood by the Chief Justice than by the Governor. It was suggested to place the pardoning power in the hands of a Board of Wardens of the State Prison. We were disinclined to grant it to them because they are political officers to some extent and certainly business officers. The men in command of the prisons know how to purchase beef, buy wood, make contracts, and conduct the business of the institution, but they are not men selected for the qualifications necessary to discriminate as to who ought to be pardoned. In Vermont, my native State, they have Wardens, but the power of pardon is confined to the Executive. I have taken occasion to look over various Constitutions upon this subject. Massachusetts, Maine, and New Hampshire, leave it to the Governor and a Council. This system has worked well there because the men appointed in the Council have been men of age and experience who have retired from the active affairs of life, and who are entirely removed from the political world and its atmosphere. Take the case of Dr. Webster, who murdered Parkman, and the appeal made to the Governor and Council of Massachusetts. They hung him notwithstanding all of the applications that were made to them. But I submit, without any disparagement to this State, that we should not be very likely, if the experiment were tried, to get that kind of a Council. In Maryland it is referred to the Governor and Justices of the Court of Appeals. In about four or five States it is referred to the Governor and Senate. But in seven eighths of the States—something like twenty-five or thirty—it is left to the Governor alone, just as it is in California now. If we were sure of getting the right material in the office of Governor, for one I should be in favor of retaining it there. It seems to me that in referring it to a Board one man may affect the whole of them. If, however, a Board should be attempted, it should require unanimous action on the part of the whole Board, so as to see that there should not be a loss of justice.

These were the general ideas that seemed to impress themselves on the committee. It is recommended as a sort of compromise between those who favored leaving the power in the hands of the Governor and placing it in a Board. We think that probably it ought to be referred to the Governor and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, but we are not very obstinate in this matter. I therefore move its adoption.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend by striking out "Chief Justice of the Supreme Court" and inserting in lieu thereof "Attorney-General." The reasons given by the Chairman of the Committee on Pardoning Power are certainly excellent, but there is one difficulty in the way, and that is that it is absolutely impossible for the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to attend to the business. He will have as much as he can do to attend to the duties of his Court, and it will be absolutely impossible for him to discharge the duties which it is proposed to place upon his shoulders. I therefore suggest that the Attorney-General be substituted in his place. So far as all these cases that go to the Supreme Court are concerned, the Attorney-General will have had occasion to examine the records. He is an officer entirely independent of the Governor, elected by the people, possessing that class of qualifications which ought to enable him to determine questions of this kind, and in all respects, I think, a very suitable person to be selected to associate with the Governor in this duty. While there has been a great deal of comment upon the exercise of the pardoning power, it has chiefly arisen from a few isolated cases where, undoubtedly, gross errors have been committed in the exercise of that power. But there is a very general mistake as to the number of pardons which have really been granted by the Governor during the period that he has exercised that power. I am informed by a gentleman at my left who was in the last Legislature, that upon inquiry of the proper authorities it was ascertained that the whole number of pardons since the organization of the State, is only seven hundred and three up to the first of January last. I had myself supposed it was much larger. But these are the official figures. Still, I think it would be better that two persons should concur in the exercise of this power, and I know none in official life better qualified than the Governor and Attorney-General. I therefore offer this amendment.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend the amendment so as to add the Attorney-General and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; so that the two may act.

MR. TINNIN. I move to amend by adding, "and the Judge before whom he was convicted, if living in this State."

MR. CAMPBELL. I hope not. I think there is danger in calling in the Judge who tried the case. The Judge in trying a case necessarily forms very strong impressions in regard to the party, and of course he is unacquainted with his subsequent conduct and various other matters. I had an idea myself, when the matter was to a certain extent before the Committee on Executive Department, that it would be better to have the recommendation of the Judge who tried the case or the Court where it was tried. But the objection occurred to me that the Judge might possibly have his mind strongly biased in the case, and for that reason I offered the amendment in the shape I have offered it.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I think that it is urgently necessary that the people should be represented in a case of pardon, and I offer this amendment for that purpose. The Judge who resides usually in the vicinity where the crime is committed, and who is conversant with all the facts and circumstances, is certainly more competent to judge of the crime than strangers who know nothing about it. I maintain that he is the source from whom the pardon should come. He represents the people of the place where the crime is committed. We all know how Governors are worked upon by sympathy. I hope that in the discharge of this duty the Convention will hold that it is necessary for the people to be represented, and they can only be represented by the Judge or person before whom the person was convicted.

MR. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will prevail. I hope that the people of the State will be represented in the matter of pardons, for it is evident that pardons have been obtained entirely too easy. I myself have seen many instances where the most hardened criminals, men who had led long lives of crime, have been pardoned in a very short time. It has been ably argued by gentlemen upon this floor that the law had very little terror for criminals, and it is undoubtedly true. Men who commit crime are sentenced to the State Prison, which is certainly a very little punishment. But if it is distasteful to them, if they do not like the place, they get some one who has political influence, or some one who can work on the sympathies of the Governor, and in a very short time they are pardoned out. I know a circumstance that occurred in my county, where a part of the crime was committed in my county, and the party was convicted in an adjoining county. He was a man who had led a criminal life for many years. He was convicted and sent to the State Prison for thirty years, and the Governor was about pardoning him out a short time ago upon information that was not correct, because he did not get his information from the county or place where he was convicted. I myself conversed with him, and told him something of the man's history, referred him to parties that had known the man years before, and I think, after getting the information that he has, the man will not be pardoned. I think that the Governor is often misled, and in this way criminals are pardoned and turned loose on the community to commit fresh depredations and crimes. After the people of the county have been put to all the expense and trouble of convicting them, it amounts to nothing. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin, will be adopted.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that there are two reasons why this amendment should not prevail. One class of cases in which the pardoning power is frequently used is that where a person has been convicted under the influence of some local prejudice or feeling against him. These things sometimes reach the Judge and the men who are to compose this Board of Pardons should, as far as possible, be separated from the local influence which caused the conviction. Now, if this Board of Pardons is to consist of three, the three should meet and confer together, which will involve great inconvenience. Take the case of Judge Fawcett, of Santa Barbara County, who occupies a seat here. He would either have to come from a great distance to confer with the Attorney-General and the Governor, or the Attorney-General and the Governor would have to go to his district. Now this would be a matter of great inconvenience, and it would frequently result either that he could not participate in any way in the matter, or else he would have to leave important duties to attend to it. It seems to me that it would be very improper to make the District Judge, the man who has tried the case, the man to determine whether a man is worthy of being pardoned.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I shall oppose both the amendments and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin, and for this reason: I believe that the true principle is to place it in the hands of a Commission, and that the majority of that Commission should be elected with a view to the duties and have control of the penal institutions of the State. I believe that two Commissioners could be elected who, in connection with the Governor, could discharge the duty with better satisfaction to the people of the State, both in connection with the pardoning power and with the conduct and control of these institutions. For these reasons I shall vote against both of these propositions, the one offered by the gentleman from Alameda, and the one offered by the gentleman from Trinity. I do not believe that either would work well. I believe there should be elected a Board of Commissioners who should take charge of the State Prisons and remove the Lieutenant-Governor from that place, and under its management seek to make it self-sustaining. I believe, too, that these Commissioners, residing there, knowing the men and knowing the circumstances, would know better who should be pardoned than any one else from outside reports. I shall oppose these propositions and go for the election of two Commissioners to act in connection with the Governor in the matter of pardons.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. Mr. Chairman: I hope that neither of the amendments will be adopted. It is generally conceded that the pardoning power should be taken from politics as much as possible. The office of Governor is purely a political one, and so is the office of Attorney-General. The office of Chief Justice is supposed to be non-political, or that position is intended to be left out of politics as much as possible. Now, in the committee it was thought best to unite the Chief Justice with the Governor for the purpose of putting some check upon the political influence generally brought to bear upon the Governor. If you unite the Attorney-General with him you unite still more political influence. I am opposed also to uniting the Judge of the District Court who tried the case, because I think the general tendency is that Judges in such positions grow to be prejudiced. And then again, as has been mentioned here, if they are far removed from the Capital here, it would be somewhat impracticable for the Judge of a District Court to meet with the Governor or other Commissioners for the purpose of looking into the matter of granting pardons. I do not think, either, that the proposition of my friend on the right, Mr. Larkin, is practicable, and for the same reason: these parties will not be together.

Now it has been mentioned by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell—and that is the objection he raises to the Chief Justice acting on this Commission—that he will not have the time to attend to the duties, and yet that gentleman has stated that there has been only seven hundred and three pardons granted since the organization of the State. Now it will not take much time if that is the case.

MR. CAMPBELL. That is not the number applied for. The number applied for is probably five times that.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. I presume there will be more applications when there is more hope of pardon, and their hope would increase when there was a Board that could be reached by political influence. Of course the Governor should have something to do with this, but it seems to me that the safest check upon political influence would be that of the Chief Justice, lifted high as he is in dignity and importance.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: If there is anything in the experience of the past, this thing of giving the Chief Justice the duty of assisting the Governor in this matter seems to me entirely out of place. Each of the Governors, as I read their messages, say that their time is constantly taken up with applications for pardon; that there is hardly a day that the friends of convicts do not come to them and beg of them to liberate some one. More time is occupied by the Governor on this one matter than any other matter that belongs to his duties. Each Governor, and the present Governor, in his message, requests that this thing should be taken out of his hands. Now, sir, I think we need a change in the whole government of the State Prison, including the pardoning power. I want to move a substitute which will provide for the election of three Commissioners, who shall govern both State Prisons, the insane asylums, and all the institutions under the control of the State government, and that the Governor shall pardon when unanimously recommended by these Commissioners, and under no other circumstances whatever. I would like to have my substitute read and have a word to say upon it.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at present. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Trinity.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment will not obtain. Under the present system the County Judges send a large class to the State Prison. The amendment is put upon the ground that the people ought to have something to say. I prefer that the thing should be settled by the law, which is the collective expression of the people upon this subject. It is true that the people in the vicinity where a crime is committed are very often the very persons that render it necessary to change the venue in order to get rid of prejudice. Whether they are right or wrong they are not fit to sit in judgment on the question. Their minds are made up, and when it comes to judging upon the proper weight to be given to the evidence they do not judge at all. The opinion of the Judge may be in accordance with the verdict of the jury or otherwise. It is very often the case that Judges, within twenty-four hours after the jury have rendered a verdict, petition the Governor for reprieves or pardons. I do not think that the slightest attention should be paid to them. They ought to hold on a week at least. The Judge now has a right to file his opinion. He will file an opinion and get up with the evidence before the Governor and state his views upon the condition of the witnesses, their appearance on the stand, their fairness, and all that has been gone into. I do not think the Judge below is the proper person hardly to trust this power to. He has tried the case. A man's feelings sometimes affect him when he does not realize it. To say that a Judge who has tried the case can take up the question of a pardon ab initio is rather contrary to my observation. I know that gentlemen here go upon their own experience and observation, and they are equally positive whether that experience has been large or small. But I call attention to the fact that it is difficult to get up a system of law to work correctly in all cases. Therefore I put the greatest confidence in and give the greatest weight to the opinions of the Chairman of the Committee on Executive Department, Judge Campbell. His opinions on this subject are entitled to more weight—and I am not paying unmeaning compliments—than, I think, those of almost any other man in the State of California, for he has had a larger sphere of observation. These considerations between the Chief Justice and the Attorney-General were before the committee. The question of the Judges was likewise. But the Attorney-General, we thought, was a political officer. In many cases he has to try questions in the Supreme Court; it is true, only in questions of law.

MR. CAMPBELL. It is very rarely indeed that the evidence in the case gets into the hands of the Attorney-General—merely sufficient to illustrate points of law to be argued in the Supreme Court.

MR. SHAFTER. I am not so tenacious as to who shall form the Board as I am that the judgment shall be a unit; that no majority shall have control. In regard to the Prison Commissioners having an opportunity of observation, I will say that in capital cases there is no observation on the part of the Directors of the State Prison. Convicts in capital cases do not go to the State Prison. They go from the county jails to the gallows, or are pardoned; so that the Commissioners of the State Prison will have no opportunity for observation. And in cases of felons sent to the State Prison, they may not be there a week before the application is made. The observation of these Wardens is of no importance at all, and if it was they cannot furnish it to the Executive. You cannot make it by law their duty, as it would be undoubtedly, to call upon the officers in these cases and consult them as to the bearing of the prisoners there. Persons who commit crimes have every reason for being shrewd and guarding every action, and these Wardens who have this narrow field of observation, would find very ordinary criminal cases utterly above their ability to cope with. It is only those in the State Prison that they can see. I have known Wardens for the last fifteen years. I have found them a very fair class of men, but I never knew that a man who could make a good contract and buy supplies to the best advantage, was necessarily a good judge of punishments. That is the quality of man that should be put there, so as to make good trades, take care of the interests of the State, look after the prisoners and see that the business is conducted properly, and all that sort of thing; but that quality of man is just as far removed from the power to judge correctly about how mercy and justice should be measured out as light is from darkness. I should greatly prefer that the Governor should have power to appoint the Commissioner. He would appoint a good man, and if they both agreed, then they could grant the commutation or pardon. Though I am not engaged in the practice of trying criminals, I have had some of it, and my observation is that this power of pardon should be lodged in the highest and purest hands—in men that have the least to do with every-day life. I agree with my friend, Judge Campbell, that it ought to be confined to two or three; but it ought also to be confined to this class of persons, and the judgment should be unanimous. I greatly prefer the Chief Justice; but if that is impossible, why then if we are to add any one to the Governor, perhaps the Attorney-General would be as good as anybody. I do not know that the committee would seriously resist taking that in preference to any other. I think I should prefer that the Governor should appoint the Commissioner. He would be likely to give us a first-class man.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Marin, and wish to add one or two additional reasons. The Governor of the State is at the head of the Executive Department. As one of the committee, I thought it was eminently proper that he should be on the Board of Commissioners of Pardons. The fact is, I believe that in all of the States of the Union he has more or less to do with this subject. In this draft he is associated with another head of a great department—the Judicial Department—and this matter of pardon is further hedged around by the provision that these two heads of the Judicial and Executive Departments shall concur in their action. The one is supposed to have executive qualities, the other is supposed to have judicial qualities; and these two are blended when they pass upon this important question. Now it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that no better system could be devised. The Chief Justice is removed from popular clamor, and from any influence that might be exercised by his high position and the tenure of his office—the Governor by his responsibility to the people of the State—and it seems to me that when these two heads of these great departments concur in action, that it is entitled to the respectful consideration of the people of this State. I do not know where we could lodge it more securely, or where we could lodge it better. There is no head to the Legislative Department, or we might add him to these other two; but it is no place for the legislator at all. The law is supposed to have been administered, and it is only the Executive Department and the Judicial Department whose action is required in this matter. On account of the preëminent ability of the heads of these different departments, and their comparative removal from any outside pressure, it seems to me that the suggestion of the committee is entitled to respectful consideration. Another idea: there is no compensation attached to this matter at all. It is supposed to be a part of the duty of these gentlemen. We do not constitute any particular Board, who shall receive a compensation, but say that it shall be a part of the duties of these officers. I do not think that the objection that the Chief Justice will not have time, is a good one. Let the calendar be so assigned that the Chief Justice can spare a portion of his time. It can be done by the Justices of the Supreme Court in the allotment of the calendar. It is also suggested that the reasons shall be stated, if they do anything—the reasons which induced these two gentlemen to act in this matter shall be stated, and that report has to be submitted to the Legislature. That report goes into the hands of the people, and they can see the reasons upon which these two gentlemen have predicated their action in this matter. Now it does occur to me that the suggestion of the committee ought to be adopted. The Executive Department moves in its independent orb; the Judicial Department moves in its independent orb; but in this arrangement we have these two men, the heads of these two departments, to concur in their action, and then report the reasons which induced them to act as they did to the Legislature.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: In order that my vote upon the proposition now occupying the attention of the committee may not be misunderstood, it is proper that I should say a few words to enable the committee to understand my position. I am a member of the Committee on Pardoning Power. I concur with the committee in so much of the amendment which they report as prohibits the Executive and Chief Justice from pardoning a man who has been thrice convicted; also that portion which requires these officers to report to the Legislature the reasons of their action; but to that portion of the proposed article which unites the Chief Justice with the Executive in the exercise of this power I dissent. I dissented then and I dissent now, Mr. Chairman. I do not intend to occupy the time of the committee in any lengthy statement of my opinions, yet perhaps at some future day I will have an opportunity to do so. At present I hope that the committee will allow me to say, in brief, that I object to this union of the Chief Justice with the Executive, not only for the reason which has already been assigned by some of the gentlemen, referring to the mass of business which devolves upon that high judicial officer, but for a greater reason than that. I think it was one of the most admirable features of our form of government that the three great departments of government are separate and distinct. The spirit of the Constitution now and which we shall propose, aims at the complete separation of the three essential and leading powers or branches of government, the legislative, executive, and judicial. As was very ably said the other day in the report made by a minority of the committee, on the subject of the case of the honorable delegates from Santa Barbara, there should be no junction, or overlapping, or blending, of these separate powers. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I object to the uniting of the Chief Justice with the Executive.

This power has always been, in time of peace and in other countries, vested in the Crown. It seems to me that the Executive of the State is the proper successor, if I may use the language, of the king, or the highest officer of State. For that reason, it seems to me that the Executive is the proper custodian of this power. He has exercised it in the past without detriment to the public, and certainly with benefit to the public. But there is this reason in addition—I have stated the reason why I object to the report of the committee, but I will add this—that the Chief Justice has very frequently passed upon cases where the ground of the appeal was, that the evidence upon the trial below justified the proposition that a reasonable doubt existed as to the guilt of the parties. When it comes before him, sitting in a judicial capacity, he passes upon that question. When it comes before him—if it is to be permitted to come before him—again, sir, in the form of an appeal taking on the shape of an application for a pardon—it is referring the matter to him a second time.

I object to the proposal to unite the Attorney-General with the Executive in the discharge of this duty, because he is the prosecuting officer of the State. He has been an active prosecutor; he has had the management of the case on the part of the people; he represents the people; and it seems to me that it would be unfair to the claimant himself that either of these officers should, with the bias that their minds have received, be called upon to review this whole case and determine again whether he is or is not guilty, or whether there be or be not reasonable grounds for a pardon or commutation of sentence. With much more force does this apply to the Judge of the Court who tried the case. For these reasons I must oppose them all.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have directed me to report that they have had under consideration the article on the pardoning power, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The hour having arrived, the Convention took a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and a quorum present.

MR. HUESTIS. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the article on the pardoning power.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire to occupy any time in the discussion of this subject. I have listened to this discussion with great interest, and when it commenced my mind was somewhat undecided as to what we ought to do; but I am satisfied from the discussion that the best thing we can do is to leave it where it is, with, perhaps, the exception of the amendment to the effect that a person being thrice convicted shall not be pardoned. It seems to me that there are great objections to the pardoning power being given to the Chief Justice. The business of the Chief Justice is to determine in the case of a criminal whether he has been legally convicted; whether he has had his rights. I do not think his mind should be abstracted from that duty to determine whether, notwithstanding he has been legally convicted, he ought to be free. In this State are many varied questions which crowd our Supreme Court all the time, and the Chief Justice should not be compelled to devote one half of his time to duties like this.

It seems to me that the Attorney-General would be a more inappropriate officer to discharge that duty. It is the part of the Attorney-General to argue the case for the State in all cases. We all know that when the Attorney-General makes up his mind that a conviction ought to stand he enters into it with his whole energy, and undoubtedly, insensibly to himself, he is in a frame of mind when he gets through that would render it very hazardous to put it into his hands to say whether a man should be pardoned or not.

The objections to the Judges below are numerous. It seems to me that the safest way is to allow this power to remain where it is. The greatest objection is that there is too much pressure upon the Governor. Well, sir, if we had another man there would simply be double the pressure. If we take any other officer except those named we might put it into the power of some inferior person to have coequal say with the Governor. We have been fortunate enough in this State to have men of very fair reputation and character elected by the people to the office of Governor, and it seems to me that we will make bad work by uniting with him some other person. I propose, when in order, to offer a substitute so as to leave the matter just where it is, with the exception of the provision that a man convicted thrice shall not be pardoned. I cannot come to any other conclusion.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I see no reason why the pardoning power should not be lodged where it is. What the people object to is that when a man has once been tried and convicted and sentenced, the Governor shall interfere and pardon him. It is not the power nor the lodgment of it in the person of the Governor that is objected to, but it is the exercise of it in cases in which it has occurred. It seems to me that it would be useful if there was in the Constitution some restriction thrown around the pardoning power—not only useful but necessary, and I am sure it would be a very popular measure.

It never was intended, Mr. Chairman, that the Governor of the State should play the role of a sentimental philanthropist; that he should undertake to forget what is due to those who suffer by the commission of crimes, and what is due to the State in his sympathy for those who commit them. I do not think it was expected when the power was given to him that he should yield to every importunity, and even if it has been so, that is no reason for making a change in the Constitution. It is said that the friends of criminals are permitted to beseige the doors of his office and lie in wait for him and wear out his patience, until at last he yields out of tenderness for himself—out of sympathy and tenderness for himself. I can hardly think it possible, that a Governor of this State would undertake to exercise the pardoning power upon any such miserable and cowardly ground as that. I prefer to think that no Governor ever did or ever will make that the basis for the exercise of the pardoning power. Now, I say, that it was not expected that the Governor should yield to every importunity, nor do I think that the Governor should sit as a kind of ex parte Court to review the decisions of the Courts, to pass upon questions of law, and to undertake to make himself a kind of Court of Appeal in criminal cases, which has sometimes occurred. Nor do I think it was intended by this constitutional power to give him the right to sit down as a sort of thirteenth juror to try the case, after twelve others have decided it, to pass upon it, and render a different verdict. I think the only object was that he might be able to relieve the innocent from the consequences of a judgment of conviction; for we must bear in mind that the pardoning power involves not merely a relief from the punishment and effects of the commission of the crime. It blots out the offense. It declares, so far as the law is concerned, that the prisoner or convicted man is guilty. It has an analogy to the sort of pardon, that is supposed to be extended by Divine grace. It not only relieves him from punishment, but blots out the offense altogether, and leaves him pure and white and spotless. You apply that principle to the pardoning power on the cases that have occurred in this State; criminals pardoned for political considerations and political considerations solely; criminals pardoned because of the importunities of those who suffered by reason of their incarceration, and to whom the criminals should have been a protection and support. These have been the reasons for pardons, and almost the only ones, except perhaps the consideration of great good conduct upon some occasion of great emergency in the prison, in the case of a great conflagration or something like that, where a man has merited something and deserves restoration to citizenship.

Therefore I see no reason why the power should be destributed or scattered. I agree with the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, that the more Commissioners you have, the more pardons there will be; the more men there will be to be approached. While we may have great confidence in the head of the Chief Justice and in the adamantine character of his heart, yet where there are two or three associated in a matter of this kind, it becomes a question of trade and barter. You pardon my man and I will pardon yours; and so they deal out pardons between themselves for every sort of object except the right one. I think a restriction should be made in the pardoning power. It should be contained in the Constitution, and be an inhibition upon the Governor, except for certain specified causes, as, for instance, except it should be made to appear that the person who had been convicted was unjustly convicted by reason of perjured testimony; or by reason of the discovery of material facts subsequent to the conviction, establishing the fact of his innocence of the crime; where there is proof of his insanity; or for some other good and substantial reason. This power ought not, in my judgment at least, to be exercised indiscriminately, without accountability. At the proper time I shall move that this subject of the pardoning power be referred to the Committee on Pardoning Power, with instructions to report to the Convention whether or not there can be some clause added to the section which is now here sought to be amended, under which the pardoning power may be reasonably and wisely exercised.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I ask to hear the amendment of the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin, read.

THE SECRETARY read:

Amend by striking out "the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Attorney-General, and the Judge before whom he was convicted, if living in this State."

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: There is one objection to the last amendment, which I understand is the amendment upon which we will vote first. There is no provision there, except that the Judge, if living in this State, has this pardoning power. By the terms of the article it must be unanimous. If that Judge were living in this State and incompetent for any of the many causes which render Judges incompetent, by disease or otherwise, of course in such a case there could be no pardon at all, and that would shut the doors of mercy on mankind. Now, sir, I, of course, shall vote against that. As it now reads it certainly would not meet the approbation of the Convention, but with a view of what may come up subsequently I propose to vote also against the other pending propositions. I am perfectly satisfied that after a gentleman has had the very extensive practice of Judge Campbell, and I suppose almost uniformly upon the side of the defendant; that if he is satisfied with the Attorney-General as being one of the Commission, that the remainder of the Convention may say that it is a very good argument in its favor. I believe that there should be three officers—the Governor, the Attorney-General, and the Chief Justice. I have looked over the Constitutions of the different States, and it is proper, perhaps, to say, if my examination is correct, that not a single instance can be found where this pardoning power is taken from the Executive. It is in the Executive of the nation, as to national criminal laws. In certain States there are Commissions—as, for instance, by the Governor and Council in Maine, by the Governor and Council in Massachusetts, by the Governor and Senate in Rhode Island; and also a similar provision in Vermont, by the Governor and certain State officers, which now comes nearly to my idea, admitting, as I do, that there is no system which can be suggested to which plausible objections cannot be made. I say that this meets my idea when it comes to the Governor and State officers. I suppose if it were any new Commission they would be paid officers, and that would unnecessarily increase the salaried officers of the State. If they be not paid they will be likely to discharge their duties, as such officers do, without much attention to them. It would be a serious duty to impose upon persons who receive no compensation.

In our sister State here, of Nevada, there is an idea which I think is better than that which is now pending, or either idea now before the Committee. The provision is this: "The Governor, Justices of the Supreme Court, and Attorney General, or a major part of them, of whom the Governor shall be one, may, upon such conditions and with such limitations as they may think proper, remit fines and forfeitures, commute punishments and grant pardons after convictions in all cases, except treason and impeachment, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons." Now, sir, by adopting the provision that there shall be the Attorney General, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and the Governor, will get very nearly the provision in the Nevada Constitution, and I think have it best. I do not see any good reason for the objection to a majority. In all Commissions which generally involve the idea of more than two, the majority act, and why not in this case?

But if that provision is not acceptable here is a provision in the Indiana Constitution which I submit is better than the one now pending: "Provided, however, that the General Assembly may, by law, constitute a Council, to be composed of officers of State, without whose advice and consent the Governor shall not have power to grant pardons in any case, except such as may by law be left to his sole power." Now I submit that if these amendments are voted down that the provisions in the Constitutions of either Nevada or Indiana are preferable. I propose, if these amendments are voted down, to offer an amendment that will vest the power in the Governor, Chief Justice, and Attorney-General, or a majority of them, of which the Governor shall be one.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I suppose there is no reason really why the pardoning power should be taken from the Governor. But the manner in which pardons have been granted is something I could never understand. A man who is sentenced from one to two years comes back to the people and is not restored to citizenship, and a man who is sentenced to serve fifteen or eighteen years is simply pardoned by the Governor and restored to citizenship. I think the matter should be referred back to the committee, so that there could be remissions of sentence instead of pardons. This thing of a man being pardoned by reason of ill health, and coming back into the community and being restored to health, I cannot understand. I really think that a remission should be given, rather than a pardon, and I say in that whatever power is here vested should be for a remission of penalties rather than the power of pardon. I think that this branch of the proposition ought to be referred back to the committee and be considered by them, and some limitation placed upon the power of pardon.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: The past history of executive interference shows conclusively that the pardoning power has been stretched to its utmost limits. I believe that this pardoning power should be vested in the highest tribunal in the State—the Supreme Court. It should be lodged in the hands of men who are made invulnerable by their position; who, by their habits of thought and their veneration for law and justice, are best fitted to exercise this high and important function. I am opposed to vesting this power in the hands of Commissioners elected by the people, because I do not believe in multiplying or creating offices. There is no reason why this power should not be vested in the highest tribunal in the State.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: As a member of the Committee on Pardoning Power, I wish to say but a few words on this question. The matter has involved considerable discussion, and I believe there would be no gentleman in this body but who would agree with me in saying that there is a great necessity for a change in the pardoning power. There ought to be no man but who is aware of the abuse of the power that has existed in the hands of the Governor. We all know the pressure that is brought to bear upon him. We all know the efforts that are made by friends to secure pardons; the lengthy petitions that are gotten up and signed, not by the friends of the prisoner alone, but by everybody that they can procure to assist in making the petitions as formidable and lengthy as possible to induce the Governor to pardon the criminals. There are many who will sign petitions simply as a matter of personal friendship. Not that they believe that the prisoner should be pardoned, but as a matter of kindness and consideration to those who present the petitions. It is often the case that the ladies, in their mercy and sympathetic feelings, will intercede with the Governor in behalf of criminals. There are but few gentlemen who can stand the persuasive eloquence of the ladies, and in a case like this, where the ladies appeal to the sympathies of the Governor, we have but a few instances, a few isolated cases, where they have withstood arguments or appeals which are presented with so much strength and power.

Now, sir, I hold that there have been a great many cases where pardons have been granted where they should not have been; that the interests of justice require that he who is convicted of a crime should suffer the whole penalty of the law. If a man deserves to be hung, unless the best of reasons shall be found to exist which could not be produced at the time of the trial, unless they are produced, then that man should suffer the penalty fixed by the offended law. The good order, safety, and peace of society requires the swift and certain punishment of criminals. The Governor will not resist the influence that is brought to bear upon him because he oftentimes is in doubt, and sooner than allow the law to take its course, and the prisoner to be returned to the State Prison, there to remain for the years for which he was sentenced, he will err on the side of mercy. I do not say but what all men should do this, but I do say that if we have a Pardoning Board, the chances would not be so great as they now are with the Governor alone.

I am opposed to associating the District Judge, on the ground that it is impracticable, and for the reasons stated by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross. The District Judges could not come here to consult with the Governor in a matter of this kind. As regards being written to, that would take too much time in a matter of such importance. The whole matter would be virtually defeated by delays. Then again, the Judge who tried the culprit would not be the proper person, because he is surounded by the influence that was brought to bear either in favor or against the prisoner. He lives in close proximity to the friends of the prisoner, who leave nothing undone at the time of the trial, and will leave nothing undone to secure his pardon. There is always a high state of excitement at the time of the trial of a person upon a charge of murder or any other case of felony, and it is necessary that we should fix the pardoning Board in such a way that they would only be inclined to do simple justice, to grant pardons only where necessary in the interest of justice—public justice, not simply personal justice. I do not think the District Judge should be selected, and as to the Attorney-General I believe that he would be a proper person associated with the Chief Justice. I do not see any particular objection to him, and I believe that he is likely to be a man of that character and sense of dignity that no political influence would prevent him discharging his duty in a matter of this kind. As regards the technical objection made by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Hall, to associating the Chief Justice with the Governor, that it would combine the judicial and executive departments, I do not see any good reason in that. It would simply be ex officio. I believe that it would have been best to associate the Supreme Court with the Governor and Attorney-General. Many members of the committee argued that it would make the Board too unwieldy, that they could not get together, and there would be a chance for too much difference of opinion. While some believed that might be best, there were others, with whom I was willing to agree, thought it might be best to leave it with the Chief Justice and the Governor. But I insist upon it that the power should be taken from the Governor alone and invested in two or more officers.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: There is one fatal objection to every proposition pending before the committee in regard to the exercise of the pardoning power, and I think that that objection will strike every gentleman at once upon the first view of the case. It is simply this: the wide margin of discretionary power that is vested in the Governor, or the Commission, or whoever may exercise this power. We have been told of the pressure that is often brought to bear and will be brought to bear—a pressure that is cruel to the functionary exercising this power, or the Commission, I care not whether it be one man, three men, or five men. It is a cruel duty to impose upon any man to make him the victim, if I may use the term, of that pressure that is brought to bear and will be brought to bear in every case. Therefore I hope that the propositions will all be voted down, and that, as suggested by Colonel Barnes, the whole matter will be referred back to the committee, with instructions to propose a mode that will limit or narrow that discretionary power and fix restrictions and limitations upon the exercise of the pardoning power. I do sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that the propositions will all be voted down, and that the suggestion made by Colonel Barnes will be carried out.

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: Let us see what would be the effect of the adoption of this amendment. Let us suppose that a man is indicted and tried in a District Court. The Attorney-General, perhaps, goes down and assists in the prosecution; the man is convicted; he makes a motion for a new trial, and it is argued and denied; he goes to the Supreme Court; there the judgment is affirmed; he petitions for a rehearing; the case is re-argued, and again the judgment is affirmed; and after all that they turn the man over, who wants to be pardoned, to the District Judge and the Attorney-General and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court—men who have listened to the trial of the case, and who have worked themselves up, either justly or unjustly, to the conviction that the man is a felon! It strikes me that the tribunal to pass upon the question as to whether a man should be pardoned or not should be unbiased and unprejudiced—without any preconceived notions as to his guilt or innocence. For these reasons I hope that the amendment will be voted down, and that the pardoning power will be left where it is—in the hands of the Governor. In regard to the idea of selecting from various parts of the State, I think, myself, that that would prove to be a trading machine. Each Commissioner would have his friend in his own district, and he would be very apt to say, "If you pardon my friend I will pardon yours." It would result in dividing the responsibility, and I do not think that any good would come from any such proceeding.

Now, it is asserted by some gentlemen that the pardoning power has been abused. I deny it. I have not seen, read, or heard of any statement that warrants that conclusion. I assert it, without fear of successful contradiction, that the statistics of this State do not warrant the assertion. Gentlemen seem to complain, and the people seem to complain, that criminals escape. If such is the case, it is their own fault. But I deny that proposition. Criminals are tried by juries that come fresh from the people, and it is their fault if criminals do escape. I am in favor of leaving this question where it now is, with the Governor. I am opposed to driving the Chief Justice into this net of criminals, or that he should be traveling around the country, neglecting his duty, and ascertaining whether a man is to be pardoned or not after he is sentenced to the penitentiary.

[MR. TINNIN in the chair.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Trinity.

The amendment was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend to this effect, that "the Governor, Attorney-General, and another to be appointed by them, shall form a Board, which shall have power, by unanimous vote, to grant pardons," etc. It is an old idea of mine that the pardoning power should be vested in a Board or Commission, and it occurs to me that a Board consisting of three such persons would be better than any other. It has been proposed that since we do not propose to pay these Commissioners anything for this particular duty that we should designate three State officers, but while the Governor and Attorney-General will always be suitable persons the third officer might not. For instance, while one Controller might be a good man for this duty the next one elected might not. Hence I propose in this amendment to have the Governor and Attorney-General designate the third member.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: In this case, in my humble judgment, as in many others, the existing Constitution is better than any of the amendments. I think, sir, that what we want in our government is concentrated responsibility in the Executive, not a divided or watered responsibility. With a concentrated responsibility you are sure to have your work well done as far as it is in human nature to do it. Without it you have something which is neither one thing nor the other. Therefore I am in favor of the present clause in the existing Constitution in preference to any of the amendments I have heard.

Mr. Filcher's amendment was lost.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an amendment reading in this way: Amend by striking out all after the word "reprieves," in the first line, down to and including the word "grant," in the third line; strike out the word "they," in the fifth line, and insert "he;" strike out the words "and Chief Justice" in the fifteenth line. That amendment will leave the section just as it is in the present Constitution, except the addition of the provision that a criminal shall not be pardoned who has been thrice convicted. It leaves the pardoning power in the hands of the Governor, except in cases of treason and impeachment, as in the old Constitution.

MR. HALL. I would like to inquire whether it retains the provision requiring the Governor to report his reasons to the Legislature.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is so much confusion that it is impossible to hear what is said.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I do not know whether the committee understands the proposition. I desire that it should understand it. My amendment simply returns to the original Constitution. It gives the pardoning power to the Governor, except that it has the provision reported by the committee that a party convicted thrice shall not be pardoned.

The amendment was lost.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I desire to have a clerical error corrected, which by some oversight has crept into the printed amendment. I see that there is a misprint in the fourteenth line. It reads "pardon and reprieve;" it should read "pardon or reprieve."

THE CHAIRMAN. The correction will be made.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer the following amendment:

Digitized by Google

"The power of pardon and reprieve is vested in the Supreme Court. It is legal only upon the unanimous motion of the members thereof. Their decision, with the facts or conditions upon which it is granted, shall then be forwarded to the chief executive, and it is made mandatory on him to issue his pardon over his signature and under the great seal of the State."

The amendment was lost.

MR. LARKIN offered the following amendment:

"The Legislature shall provide by law for the election of three State Wardens, to be elected by districts of equal population as near as may be practicable, but no county shall be divided in forming such districts. These State Wardens shall hold their office for four years, and shall have charge and management of the two State Prisons, and the two Insane Asylums, Asylum of the Deaf and Dumb, and all other charitable and penal institutions conducted and supported by the State, under such regulations and provisions as the Legislature shall prescribe by law.

"The first election for State Wardens shall be at the first general election held under this Constitution, and they shall be inaugurated on the same day thereafter as the Governor and other State officers are to be inaugurated.

"The Board of State Wardens shall constitute a Board of Pardons, and the Governor of the State shall never pardon any person convicted of crime, except at the unanimous request of the Board of Pardons.

"The Legislature shall give effect to a judicious system of credits for good behavior, to convicts in the State Prison, to be carried out by the State Wardens.

"The State Wardens shall receive an annual salary for their services of two thousand four hundred dollars a year, and such clerical assistance as the Legislature shall deem necessary; but no clerk in their employment shall ever receive a higher compensation than eighteen hundred dollars per annum."

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: The object of this amendment is to provide a complete system which will take in all the charitable and penal institutions of the State, and more especially to select men from different portions of the State who will be selected for those qualities which will fit them to discharge the duties of this important trust, instead of having them selected or appointed by the Governor. It will be a permanent institution of the State. In the past the management of our prisons has been subject to constant change. The class of men who would be elected to take these positions from their known qualities and acquaintance with the management of criminals, would be the proper men to recommend to the Governor the pardon of these men. The Legislature could regulate this matter so that there could be uniform punishment for the same crime. I believe that the power should be vested there. I believe that it is for the best interests of the State that it should be taken out of politics and placed in the hands of men who shall be selected exclusively for that high trust.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to draw the attention of the committee to one point. This provision says that the pardon shall only be granted on the recommendation of the Board of Wardens. It does not say that the Governor shall pardon on their recommendation, but that the Governor shall not pardon without the unanimous recommendation of the Wardens. It still leaves the Governor the power to refuse a pardon if he sees proper. In that way the power is concentrated.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order. The substitute suggested is not in order, because it is not germane to the subject under consideration.

MR. WHITE. It provides for a Board of Pardons.

MR. BARNES. It does refer to the subject of pardons, but it also proposes to appoint Commissioners to take charge of all the public institutions of the State, the City and County of San Francisco, and everybody else.

MR. WHITE. It does not.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule that the point of order is well taken, as the proposed substitute includes provisions relative to the Insane Asylums, Asylum for the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind, and other matters not germane to the subject of pardons.

MR. WHITE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

MR. LARKIN. I second the appeal.

MR. WYATT. I do, too.

MR. BARTON. I second the appeal.

MR. WHITE. I say that it is impossible to discuss this matter of the principle of pardons correctly, except as connected with the position in which these other institutions are placed, and that therefore it is right that this discussion should be allowed to take the whole thing into consideration at the same time.

MR. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman: The question is on the appeal, I believe. I think that if the gentleman will stop and consider for one moment, he will see that this amendment is not in order. If this amendment is in order, then by way of amendment to any other proposition we might get the whole Constitution in on a single proposition. I hope the decision of the Chair will be sustained by the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the amendment is not in order, because it refers to matters connected with the Insane Asylums, the Asylum for the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind, and is not germane to the subject under consideration. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

MR. NOEL. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Carried.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an amendment, with the permission of the Chair. It is this:

Strike out all after the word "impeachment," in the fourth line, down to and including the word "pardon," in the seventh line, and insert the following: "And such power shall be exercised only in case where new evidence is discovered after judgment establishing the innocence of the convicted party or the injustice of the sentence."

I believe that the great trouble with the pardoning power is that it is not restricted. I believe that justice should be meted out to prisoners whenever the sentence has been passed justly. I do not believe there should be any escape from the sentence. But I believe whenever there has been discovered new evidence to prove the innocence of the party convicted, or to prove the injustice of the sentence, if the innocence is not proved, there should be some power to grant a pardon or reprieve. My amendment will cover that case. It will restrict the power of pardon and reprieve to those few cases where there is evidence to prove that the power ought to be exercised; for that reason I offer this as an amendment.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me perfectly evident that this committee, with barely a majority present, is not in a proper condition of mind to discuss so important a question as this at this time. In addition, the Chairman of the committee, whom we rely upon principally to protect the report of the committee, is absent necessarily, and I submit in all candor that it would be only providential to dispense with the further consideration of the subject for to-day. I, therefore, move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. FILCHER. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee before it rises to offer a resolution, simply to test the sense of the committee on this proposition. I offer it because I believe such a test will greatly facilitate our business afterwards. [Cries of "I object."]

Mr. Huestis' motion prevailed on a division, by a vote of 48 ayes to 33 noes.

IN CONVENTION.

THE CHAIR. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. TULLY. [At three o'clock P. M.] I move we adjourn.

Lost.

NOTICE.

MR. HUESTIS gave the following notice:

I hereby give notice that at the next regular session of the Convention I will move to strike out, in the Standing Rules, Rule Seventy-one, and insert the following:

RULE SEVENTY-ONE.

In all cases where propositions or resolutions embodying matters proposed to be introduced into the Constitution are printed, it must be by a majority vote of the Convention; but reports of standing committees shall be printed without any vote being had.

PROPOSED TEST.

MR. FILCHER offered the following:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Convention that the Governor should be divested of the exclusive power of pardoning criminals.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: I offer this simply to test the Convention. If the feeling in favor of leaving the power where it is predominates let us know it and then we will know what we are doing.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: I submit that it would be no test when there are fifty of the members absent.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. President: I move that this Convention do now adjourn until two o'clock Monday. We are going to adjourn now because there are so few members here. It is evident that these absent members will not be here on Monday morning, and what would it amount to if we meet at that time. We might just as well adjourn until these gentlemen come back.

MR. GRACE. Haven't we got a quorum here now? We ain't responsible for the gentlemen who are not here.

MR. BIGGS. I move to amend by making it eleven o'clock on Monday.

MR. MCCALLUM. I suggest that these conditions be left out. The point I make is that a motion to adjourn cannot be coupled with conditions. This thing keeps coming up every day, and I make that point.

MR. MCFARLAND. Undoubtedly a motion to adjourn to a stated time is in order. Now, if gentlemen are opposed to adjourning until two o'clock, or until eleven o'clock, they will vote it down.

MR. MCCALLUM. Undoubtedly the motion is not in order. I submit that it is done as a matter of practice, because no objection is made. The very point was raised here on the rules, that a motion to adjourn should not be coupled with conditions, and everybody said that a motion to adjourn cannot be coupled with conditions. Therefore, I suggest that the time be first fixed, and in future let us confine ourselves to the question of adjournment without conditions.

MR. GRACE. I move that when the Convention adjourns, it adjourn until ten o'clock on Monday.

MR. HUESTIS. I raise the point of order that there are two motions on the subject of adjournment, and that the gentleman's last motion is not in order.

THE CHAIR. The Chair rules that the question is subject to two amendments. The first motion was to adjourn until two o'clock on Monday, the next to adjourn until eleven o'clock, and the last to adjourn until ten o'clock.

MR. WATERS. I move we adjourn.

Carried.

And at three o'clock and five minutes P. M., the Convention stood adjourned until Monday at ten A. M.

COMMUNICATION.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair has received a communication from the Controller of State, in response to a resolution adopted by this Convention on October thirtieth, in regard to the State indebtedness. What is the pleasure of the Convention?

MR. GREGG. At the request of Mr. Casserly, the Chairman of the Committee on State Indebtedness, I move that the report be printed forthwith out of its order.

The motion prevailed.

The following is the report:

OFFICE OF CONTROLLER, October 31st, 1878.

The Honorable President and members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: In compliance with your resolution of yesterday's date, I have the honor to transmit herewith a report as follows:

First—Of the State debt, etc.

Second—Of the receipts and expenditures of the State government since its organization, together with the taxable property and the State tax rate for each of said years.

Third—Of the county debts and taxable property for the years eighteen hundred and seventy-five-six and eighteen hundred and seventy-six-seven, together with the State and county tax rates for each of said years.

Fourth—Of the taxable property in the City and County of San Francisco for the current fiscal year (i. e. eighteen hundred and seventy-eight-nine), together with the tax rate for said year.

I have no data in this office from which to give the debts of the several cities of the State.

In order that you may understand fully for what the State makes her large annual expenditures, I give the items in detail, which make up the sum of three million seven hundred and ninety-seven thousand eight hundred and sixty-four dollars and sixty-eight cents expended for the twenty-ninth fiscal year, ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight.

Yours respectfully,

W. B. C. BROWN, Controller.

STATE DEBT.

First—The total funded debt of the State at the present date (October thirty-first, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight) is:

SERIES.	Rate.	Amount.
Civil Bonds of 1873	6 per cent	$2,801,000 00
State Capitol Bonds of 1870	7 per cent	250,000 00
State Capitol Bonds of 1872	7 per cent	250,000 00
Soldiers' Relief Bonds	7 per cent	95,500 00
Civil Bonds of 1857	7 per cent	5,000 00
Civil Bonds of 1860	7 per cent	1,500 00
Total		$3,403,000 00

As all the bonds of the issues of eighteen hundred and fifty-seven and eighteen hundred and sixty have been called in, and the interest ceased on the thirty-first day of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-five, the entire funded debt bearing interest at this date will only amount to three million three hundred and ninety-six thousand five hundred dollars. The annual interest on this sum amounts to two hundred and nine thousand seven hundred and forty-five dollars; but as the State has guaranteed interest to the amount of one hundred and five thousand dollars per annum on Pacific Railroad Bonds (see Act of April 4th, 1864, Statutes 1863–4, page 344, entitled "An Act to aid the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad," etc.), the annual amount of the interest to be raised is, therefore, three hundred and fourteen thousand seven hundred and forty-five dollars.

The following table shows the disposition of the funded debt of the State on the thirty-first day of October, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight:

KIND OF DEBT.	Amount.
Bonds held in private hands	$738,000 00
Bonds held in trust by State Treasurer—School Fund	1,737,500 00
Bonds held in trust by State Treasurer—University Fund	927,500 00
Total	$3,403,000 00

The interest-bearing debt of the State on the thirty-first day of October, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, is as follows:

KIND OF DEBT.	Amount.
Bonds held in private hands	$731,500 00
Bonds held in trust by State Treasurer—School Fund	1,737,500 00
Bonds held in trust by State Treasurer—University Fund	927,500 00
Total	$3,396,500 00

The bonds held in private hands and bearing interest at this date consist of:

SERIES.	Rate.	Amount.
State Capitol Bonds of 1870	7 per cent	$14,000 00
Soldiers' Relief Bonds	7 per cent	95,500 00
Civil Bonds of 1873	6 per cent	622,000 00
Total		$731,500 00

The interest on these bonds amounts to forty-four thousand nine hundred and eighty-five dollars ($44,985) per annum.

There is at the present time in the Interest and Sinking Fund the sum of eighty-nine thousand dollars applicable to the redemption of bonds, which, if the bonds could be called in, would reduce the State debt to three million three hundred and fourteen thousand dollars.

Second—Showing the valuation of real and personal property, the rate of taxation on each one hundred dollars, the receipts, expenditures, and bonded and floating debt, from first to twenty-ninth fiscal year, inclusive, "as shown by the Controller's reports:"

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: Owing to the exceedingly slim attendance here this morning, and the probability that the members will not be here until about two o'clock this afternoon, I move that the Convention do now adjourn until two P. M.

MR. BROWN. Mr. President: I do think it is wrong for this entire body to adjourn in consequence of the absence of a few men in different committees. I am under the impression that there is business that can be done, without adjourning to satisfy the convenience of these gentlemen.

The question was put, and, on a division, the vote stood thirty-six ayes to thirty-three noes—no quorum voting.

MR. GREGG. Mr. President: An adjournment until two o'clock would not accommodate those who are coming up on the train, and I therefore move to amend by substituting three o'clock.

MR. LARKIN. I demand the ayes and noes on that motion.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The ayes and noes have been demanded upon this motion. Those in favor of taking a recess until three P. M. will, when their names are called, say "aye," those opposed, "no." The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the Convention refused to take a recess, by the following vote:

AYES.

CHANGE OF RULE.

MR. LARKIN. I ask leave to introduce out of order an amendment that I gave notice of Saturday. It is as follows:

Amend Rule Fifty-two, third line, by striking out all after the word "to" and inserting "the Committee of the Whole."

The object is that all propositions shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole instead of to standing committees. The rule now reads: "Propositions and resolutions mentioned in the last foregoing rule shall embrace but one subject; they shall be read by title when introduced, and then referred, without debate, to an appropriate committee." I want to strike out all after the word "to" and insert "the Committee of the Whole," so that matters will come directly to this Convention instead of being tied up in the hands of committees. At this late day of the session it is useless to send more matters to the committees.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. President: I do not think it would be wise to make that innovation at this time. Then every proposition, no matter of what character, must be referred to the Committee of the Whole and be debated here. It seems to me that it would be much better to let the propositions take their usual course. There will undoubtedly not be a great many more, but if there are they should take their regular course instead of all being sent to the Committee of the Whole.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: There will be amendments desired to be offered as substitutes to the propositions already submitted. I desire that all propositions come directly before the Convention, rather than be referred to some committee that may retain them for two weeks. The propositions that are hereafter to come before us should be presented to this Convention and not delayed in any committee room for the next two weeks. I think that they ought to be referred to the Committee of the Whole at once.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. Mr. President: I cannot see that the proposition offered by Mr. Larkin will facilitate business here at all. On the contrary it would result in much confusion and delay. I do not see what has called forth such a resolution. The committees have certainly done their work with dispatch, and the reports before us are more numerous now than we are able to attend to. The experience of this body in the debate on the jury system and the question of the pardoning power, it seems to me, is enough to show that the body cannot transact the business before it without its being referred to the committees; that even after a matter has been referred to a committee and reported back we have hours of discussion upon minor propositions. I for one, for the purpose of getting through here as rapidly as possible, would be in favor of referring to the committees more than we have done, and doing less in Convention. I think the adoption of this amendment would be very unwise. If we should undertake anything of that kind we will soon have to change it. I certainly am opposed to the proposition.

MR. BROWN. Mr. President: I am in favor of the dispatch of business. I agree with the gentleman from Kern that it is necessary to dispatch business very rapidly, but the grand object of this change of Rule Fifty-two is for the purpose of dispatching business. Now, matters that have been before the committees have caused just as much discussion as if they had come here first. The house can judge and frequently put a final question upon a proposition that does not stand any chance of ever getting into the Constitution. I believe it is with a view to this, and to the dispatch of business, and to getting at matters of special importance, which will interest this body, that the amendment is offered. It is so that measures can come before this body direct and be dispatched. Many things will be frivolous and yet will take up a great deal of time, and unless we start right in and work hereafter, we will not be able to get through with the business that is before this body.

MR. BARTON. Mr. President: I favor the adoption of the amendment, for reasons which I believe are well understood by this body. First, as a matter of economy in two or three directions. The printing of surplus matters, or matter in addition to what we have already printed, is a useless waste of money. We have before us now enough to make fourteen Constitutions, and when this matter comes before the committees under the present plan or system, it accumulates a worthless mass of material that the committees, to a certain extent, ignore and disregard. I believe that when a proposition is presented to the Committee of the Whole, if there is any merit in it, that it can be presented by the introducer, or the author of the proposition, with sufficient force to bring the attention of this Convention directly upon the proposition and its merits. Therefore, for several reasons, I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin, will be adopted.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I would like to vote in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin, provided that he would make it apply only to committees that have already reported. There are several committees that have already reported, and propositions relating to subjects covered by their reports might as well be referred to the Committee of the Whole. I would like to have an amendment inserted to that effect. The committees that have not reported will still hold sessions, and any proposition relating to matters before them ought to be referred to them for their consideration.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: My experience in reference to this matter leads me to believe that this amendment proposed by the gentleman from El Dorado is, at this time, a little premature. I will cite a case in the Committee on Revenue and Taxation: A matter of importance with regard to revenue and taxation was brought before the committee only two or three days ago, by Judge Fawcett. The proposition offered by him was found to be an important and feasible one. The committee have consumed considerable time upon it and have put it in such shape that I am satisfied it will be accepted by the Convention.

MR. LARKIN. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman, that it shall apply only to committees that have made their reports.

MR. CROSS. This proposition which was brought before the committee was favorably acted upon. I insist that experience has shown that the work is dispatched much more rapidly in the several committees than in the Committee of the Whole. The committees have nearly completed their work, and this flow of propositions will soon be cut off, while if they are referred to the Committee of the Whole they will still continue to come in, and will take up much more time than they would in the several committees. Under the present system we will accomplish much more work in a given space of time. It seems to me that the rule has worked well as it stands, and as we have nearly two thirds of the work of the Convention left on our hands I think we should advance our work further before this change of the rule is adopted.

MR. GREGG. Mr. President: The purpose and object of referring matters to the committees was to get a basis upon which the Committee of the Whole could work. There is a committee upon nearly every subject in the Constitution. They have reported during the sitting of the body. Every proposition made in Committee of the Whole should be made as an amendment to the report of the committee. Now then, if this rule is abrogated, the result is that we have the proposition introduced and referred to the Committee of the Whole. It may be called up and discussed separately, without any connection with the report of the committee on the same subject. Then when the report comes up it may be offered as an amendment to the report, and that will simply confuse and confound business. If gentlemen wish to amend propositions introduced by committees they can do so, as they have been doing, in Committee of the Whole. Such propositions as they have can be offered by way of amendments. If they simply introduce them, and have them referred to the Committee of the Whole, we take them up as independent propositions. There is nothing to prevent any person who has an amendment presenting it by way of amendment to the report of the committee on that subject; but to send it in as an independent proposition, it confuses and confounds the whole business. We now have the report of the committee, and have the matter printed, and we cannot take it up until it comes back here. But we might say that all matters referred to the Committee of the Whole must be considered as amendments to the matters reported to that committee.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz. Mr. President: I move to lay the matter on the table.

Carried.

NEW PROPOSITIONS.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The next order of business will be the introduction of resolutions and propositions relating to the Constitution.

LIFE INSURANCE.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara, introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, providing that husbands may insure their lives for the benefit of their heirs, and the same be exempt from their debts:

"The husband may insure his own life for the sole use and benefit of his wife and children, and in case of the death of the husband, the amount thus insured shall be paid over to the wife and children, or the guardian, if under age, for her or their own use, free from all the claims of the representatives of the husband or any of his creditors."

Referred to Committee on Legislative Department.

ALIENS NOT TO BEAR ARMS.

MR. O'DONNELL introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to aliens bearing arms:

SECTION —. No alien who cannot become a citizen of the United States shall be allowed to bear arms.

Referred to Committee on Chinese.

COUNTY AND TOWNSHIP GOVERNMENTS.

MR. MILLS introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to county and township governments:

AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE ELEVEN, SECTION FOUR, OF THE EXISTING CONSTITUTION.

SECTION —. The Legislature, at the first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall establish a system of county and township governments which shall be as nearly uniform as practicable, and such system shall provide that whenever a majority of the legal voters of any county, voting at any general election, shall so determine, such township organization shall be in force therein; and whenever any county shall adopt township organization, so much of this Constitution as conflicts with such organization, as hereinafter specified, may be dispensed with; and in any county which shall have adopted township organization, the question of continuing the same may be submitted to a vote of the electors of such county, at a general election, in the manner that now is or may be provided by law, and if a majority of all the votes cast upon that question shall be against township organization, then such organization shall cease in said county, and all laws in force in relation to counties not having township organization shall immediately take effect and be in force in such county. No two townships shall have the same name, and the day of holding township elections shall be uniform throughout the State. Each county that shall have elected to adopt township organization shall be divided into so many compactly located townships as may be deemed necessary, not less than three; provided, that after three have been formed no additional townships shall be made containing less than thirty square miles. Each township shall be known as the Township of ——, of the County of ——, and may sue and be sued by such title. In each township there shall be elected, or appointed, as provided by law, one Supervisor, one Township Clerk, three Selectmen, who shall act as a Board of Directors and Trustees, one Overseer of Highways, one Overseer of the Poor, one Assessor, and not less than two Justices of the Peace, and two Constables, and such other officers as may be prescribed by law; all such officers shall be elected for such periods, perform such duties, and receive such compensation as may be prescribed by law. Each township shall maintain free schools sufficient for the education of all its inhabitants, and provide for the support of the paupers resident therein, and for the building and maintenance of necessary bridges and highways, and all taxes paid for these purposes shall be expended therein. The several townships, when organized under this Constitution and the laws to be made as herein provided for, shall be entitled to make and enforce all such police regulations in such townships, in the manner to be prescribed by law, as shall not conflict with the provisions of this Constitution, or of any general law made thereunder, and all fines or forfeitures imposed or collected in pursuance thereof shall belong to such township.

Referred to the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

CHANGE OF VENUE.

MR. MILLS introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to change of venue in criminal cases:

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE FOUR OF THE PRESENT CONSTITUTION.

Add to article four the following as section ——:

SECTION —. The Legislature shall not change the venue in any criminal or penal proceeding, but shall provide for the same by general laws.

Referred to Committee on Legislative Department.

SPEEDY TRIAL.

MR. MILLS introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, in relation to speedy trials:

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE ONE OF THE PRESENT CONSTITUTION.

Add the following as section —— to article one:

SECTION —. In all prosecutions by indictment or information the accused shall be entitled to a speedy public trial, by an impartial jury of the county in which the offense was committed, unless the venue be changed.

Referred to Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

MORE THAN ONE OFFICE.

MR. FREUD introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, to be placed among the miscellaneous provisions:

Digitized by Google

SECTION —. No person shall hold or exercise at the same time more than one office of trust or profit.

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

CHANGE OF RULE.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: I believe it would be in order now to introduce the amendment to the rule of which I gave notice at the last session of the Convention. I move to strike out of the standing rules Rule Seventy-one, and insert the following:

RULE SEVENTY-ONE.

In all cases where propositions or resolutions embodying matters proposed to be introduced into the Constitution are printed, it must be by a majority vote of the Convention; but reports of standing committees shall be printed without any vote being had.

I think it is unnecessary to argue this proposition. It seems to me that we have printed enough of this matter. I move the adoption of the amendment.

MR. WYATT. Mr. President: Since we allow propositions to be introduced for the consideration of this Convention, I hope the resolution will not be adopted. I do not see how one member can speak to another member except through the printing press. It might as well be thrown in the waste basket at once as to be sent to the Clerk's desk and read by title, and smothered either at the Clerk's desk or referred to a committee. The only way that each member has to get acquainted with every other member and let him know what his propositions are, is through the printing press, because half of the time you cannot hear anything in this body. While many of the propositions are possibly foolish, and while most of them will not be adopted, it is the only way to get the ideas before this Convention so that they can be intelligently dealt with. Whilst ideas enough have probably been submitted to this Convention to form half a dozen or a dozen most excellent Constitutions, it is possible and even probable that some of the best ideas that will be introduced into this Constitution have not yet been presented to this body. Our printing bill, I submit, is not extravagant. It has not been abused. The printing bill of the Convention does not amount to one thousand five hundred dollars. I am in favor of each member standing on the same footing. It is the right of each member to have his propositions printed. It is what he is entitled to have in order that he may not only show the Convention what he wants, but that he may show his constituents what he tried to impress upon the Convention. It is the only manner that we have got to show this Convention, and to show the State, what we desire should be incorporated in the Constitution. I therefore hope that while you allow the privileges of propositions being submitted for the purpose of being incorporated into the Constitution, that you will also couple with it the privilege of having it printed and laid on the desks of the members. It is the only way by which you can make a proposition effective.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. President: I rise to a point of order. The subject under discussion is a notice to amend a rule and is not debatable.

MR. WYATT. I submit that it is no such thing.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

MR. CAPLES. I was mistaken.

MR. WYATT. Yes. I therefore hope, gentlemen, that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis, will not be adopted. I hope that the privilege of printing will be continued as long as we permit propositions to be introduced for the purpose of being incorporated into the Constitution.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I do not see any necessity for adopting this rule at the present time. There is very little to say on the subject, except what the gentleman who just sat down has said, except, perhaps, this: we find now that there are but three, or four, or half a dozen propositions come in here on any day at the calling of that order of business. Sometimes not that many. Sometimes the order passes without more than one or two propositions coming in here. It does seem to me to be one of that class of propositions that are already coming in here that look to an early close of the business of this Convention. It is too early, Mr. President, for that. There is plenty of time left yet to bring in propositions to amend the Constitution—better than any that have yet been proposed—and it is the right of members to have their propositions printed as long as they are permitted to bring them in. There is no way to reach the Committee of the Whole without printing the propositions. If we spend time every time a single proposition is brought in here to read it over and then let the Convention consider whether they will print it or not, and go to the necessity of a motion to print, we will waste more time than it will cost to do all the printing from this on to the end of the Convention. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. President: I think the resolution offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis, has merit in it. It occurs to me that we have already been afflicted with quite an avalanche of propositions, a great many of them without merit. Under the rule as it now stands, all of these propositions have to be printed at the expense of the State. If gentlemen still have propositions to introduce, they can introduce them by way of amendment. There is no occasion for the printing of these propositions when they can be introduced by way of amendment when the reports of the committees are considered in Committee of the Whole. It seems to me that it will expedite matters. A great many will not introduce propositions if this amendment is adopted. Therefore I am decidedly in favor of the resolution.

MR. WATERS. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

MR. CROSS. I would like to hear it read. I do not know now what is before the house.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment.

Mr. Waters' motion prevailed.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATOR.

MR. TULLY introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to election of United States Senator:

SECTION —. The Legislature shall not have the power to elect the Governor, or any member of the Supreme Court of this State, to a seat in the United States Senate during the term of office for which they may have been elected.

MR. TULLY. I would like to have it read.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The Secretary will read, if there are no objections.

Cries of "I object."

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. There are objections, and it cannot be read.

MR. WATERS. I move that the rule be suspended, to allow the proposition to be read.

Carried.

THE SECRETARY read the proposition, and it was referred to the Committee on Legislative Department.

PARDONING POWER.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I believe we have some unfinished business, the resolution offered by Mr. Filcher last Saturday. We were considering it when the Convention adjourned. It was a resolution in regard to the pardoning power.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. I understand it was before the Committee of the Whole.

MR. STEDMAN. It was before the Convention, Mr. President.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved*, That it is the sense of this Convention that the Governor should be divested of the exclusive power to pardon criminals.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: I believe that resolution was deferred the other day mainly upon the ground that we had such a slim attendance here that a vote upon the resolution would not test the sense of the Convention. I believe we have a much smaller attendance here now, and it certainly seems to me that it would be inadvisable to take it up now, when there are so many absent, for the purpose of testing the sense of the Convention upon the subject. I think it would be advisable to put it off until this afternoon, and there being no further business before the Convention, I move that we now take a recess until two P. M.

MR. MCCALLUM. I understand that we have business, by going into Committee of the Whole.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. There is a special order. The special order is the report of the Committee on Executive Department.

MR. MCCALLUM. Why not take it up?

MR. SCHELL. I move to amend the motion to take a recess, by making it three o'clock.

MR. TULLY. I second the motion for three o'clock.

Lost.

On the motion to take a recess until two P. M., the ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. Larkin and Stedman, and the motion prevailed by a vote of 58 ayes to 31 noes.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President pro tem. Belcher in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present (eighty-six members).

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The special order is now in order, the report of the Committee on Executive Department. The Secretary will read the report.

THE SECRETARY read the report as follows:

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 5. The Governor shall be Commander-in Chief of the militia, the army and navy of this State.

SEC. 6. He shall transact all executive business with the officers of government, civil and military, and may require information, in writing, from the officers of the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

The Lieutenant-Governor shall be disqualified from holding any other office, except as specially provided in this Constitution, during the term for which he shall have been elected.

SEC. 16. In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, resignation, or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. But when the Governor shall, with the consent of the Legislature, be out of the State in time of war, at the head of any military force thereof, he shall continue Commander-in-Chief of all the military force of the State.

SEC. 17. A Secretary of State, a Controller, a Treasurer, an Attorney-General, and a Surveyor-General shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner, as the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, and whose term of office shall be the same as the Governor.

The Legislature shall by law fix the compensation of the Attorney-General and the Surveyor-General, and may, in its discretion, abolish the office of Surveyor-General. And none of the officers hereinbefore named shall receive for their own use any fees or perquisites for the performance of any official duty.

MR. TINNIN. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering the special order of the day.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The Secretary will read the first section of the article on Executive Department.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. The supreme executive power of this State shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the Governor of the State of California.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I meant the pardoning power. I move that the committee rise and ask leave to sit again.

MR. JOHNSON. The Chairman of the committee is not here.

MR. TINNIN. I withdraw the motion.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. There being no amendments, the Secretary will read section two.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. The Governor shall be elected by the qualified electors, at the time and places of voting for members of the Assembly, and shall hold his office four years from and after the Monday after the first Tuesday in January subsequent to his election, and until his successor is elected and qualified.

MR. DUDLEY, of San Joaquin. Mr. Chairman: As the Chairman of the Committee on Executive Department is not in his seat, I think it would be as well to pass the special order; and I move that the special order be postponed until to-morrow morning, at ten o'clock.

MR. NOEL. Mr. Chairman: The thing has just been placed on the desks of the members in printed form, and they don't understand it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion cannot be entertained by the Committee of the Whole.

MR. DUDLEY, of San Joaquin. I move that the committee now rise and ask leave to sit again.

Division being called for, the motion was lost—ayes, 30; noes, 35.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments to the section, the Secretary will read section three.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor who has not been a citizen of the United States and a resident of this State five years next preceding the election, and attained the age of thirty years at the time of said election.

MR. SHURTLEFF. I move that the word "thirty" be stricken out and "twenty-five" inserted, so as to leave it as it is in the old Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Napa, Mr. Shurtleff.

MR. SHURTLEFF. I will state, Mr. Chairman, in support of this motion, that if we look into the history of the State for a quarter of a century, ever since its organization, there does not seem to be found anything to make such a change as this necessary. Eight of the States of this Union have no limitation as to the age of the incumbent. Ohio, one of the oldest States in the Union, has no limitation whatever. The State of Wisconsin, the State of West Virginia, Louisiana, Florida, Virginia, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts, have no limitation of this kind, and I say that there is no tendency on the part of the people to abuse this power. The youngest Governor the State of Massachusetts ever had was George Boutwell, who was only thirty-three years of age when he went into that office, and he was acknowledged to be one of the best Governor's that State ever had. I will say here that if there was any danger of an abuse of this kind it would have been likely to have occurred early in the history of the State when most of the miners were young men, and might have banded themselves together to elect one of their own number. I think that old Californians here on this floor will bear me out when I say that two thirds of the electors at least who framed the present Constitution were men under thirty years of age. Now we may see whether this power has been abused by the young men of the country by tracing the history of the State from its organization down to the present time. Peter H. Burnett was forty-two years of age; Governor Bigler forty-four at his first election, and on reëlection forty-six; J. Neeley Johnson was about thirty; I am not able to give his exact age; Weller was forty-six; Latham was within a few months of thirty-three; Stanford, thirty-eight; F. F. Low, thirty-six; H. H. Haight, forty-three; Newton Booth, forty-six; and the present incumbent, Wm. Irwin, forty-nine. Now, by looking over that list, when the line of restriction was placed at twenty-five, you can see no tendency on the part of the people of this State to take young and inexperienced men to fill the first office in the gift of the people. Therefore I think it would be unwise to put such a bar as that in the Constitution. And if I am allowed to transgress upon the time of the Convention, I will say that this is not the only instance on record. You may take the other States of the Union, take the office of President, where he has to attain the age of thirty-five, and as you will see, there is no disposition to monopolize these positions on the part of young men. There have been but two men chosen President who were under fifty; one was General Grant, who was a few weeks under forty-seven, and the other was Mr. Pierce, who was forty-nine. So there does not seem to be any abuse in that direction.

Now, sir, I believe these restrictions are unnecessary, and I would, if we were starting to make a first Constitution, be in favor of inserting nothing at all. I am opposed to making any change in the present Constitution, unless there seems to be a real necessity, and this is one of the cases where, in my humble opinion, no necessity exists. This matter of restriction is sometimes upon the other end of a man's life. In some of the States this restriction is placed on judicial officers, and the Supreme Judges are required to be not over sixty years of age. I believe if there is any necessity for restriction at all, it is more needed in cases of the old and infirm than in the young. It cannot be denied that some of the officials, some of the Supreme Judges of the United States, are verging on imbecility, and are unable to perform the services that younger men could. It is a well known fact that Lewis Cass, when seventy-eight years old, as Secretary of State during Buchanan's administration, was infirm and unable to perform the duties required of him, and sometimes would sit in the Cabinet meetings and sleep for hours, during the most important discussions had before that body. But still I would be opposed to making any restrictions whatever. I believe the people are the proper judges of that. I see no difficulty about it whatever, and we can find nothing in our past history which renders such a clause in the Constitution necessary.

We know that many of the most eminent men of this country, gentlemen of remarkable capacity, have filled positions when young. Henry Clay was United States Senator before he was eligible to take the place. Newton was twenty-five years of age when he discovered the laws of gravitation, and Howe, when he placed the world in possession of the sewing machine was barely past his majority. Therefore I think this Convention ought not to make this change from twenty-five to thirty, because there is no necessity for it. There has been no tendency on the part of the people to thrust young and inexperienced men into the executive chair.

[MR. TINNIN in the chair.]

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I merely rise to add my voice in favor of this change back to twenty-five years, and in fact I would be willing to make it twenty-one, for the very reason that the people are the best judges of who they will elect Governor, and I think it highly necessary that the young men of the country should take part in the affairs of government as well as the older ones. But I would neither make a distinction as to age, either young or old; let the people judge for themselves. This idea that reason and wisdom are confined to age is all wrong. I could name several instances, but I will not detain the Convention, because I think it is well understood. Francis the First of France, at twenty-five, fought the greatest battle he ever fought in his life, and changed the whole current of affairs, and he was the greatest monarch of his time. So, Mr. President, I hope and trust the amendment will prevail.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: For myself, I am strongly inclined to view the matter in the same light. I would like very much to hear from the Chairman, or some member of the Convention who took part in their deliberations, the reasons which influenced them to make this change. For myself, I am strongly inclined to adhere to the letter of the present Constitution unless there is some strong reason given for a change, and unless otherwise advised I shall vote for this amendment. I would like to hear from some member of the committee the reasons that led them to make this change.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President: I make a motion to strike out that last clause so as to have no limit to the age whatever. Give the young men a show. If the people want to elect a young man as Governor, they have a perfect right to do it, and I don't see why we should interfere.

MR. NOEL. Mr. Chairman: The motion was to strike out the last clause; I would like to know where it begins and where it ends.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not been read yet; we do not know where it begins or where it ends.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: While the gentleman is preparing his amendment I would like to say a word on this question. I propose to say a word as to how the young men feel. It is a kind of a two-sided question. One side claims that there should be no restriction as to the age of the occupant of the Governor's chair, and that by placing the limit at thirty, we will cut off a considerable portion of those who are fitted to fill that position. For my part, I believe that no Governor of a great State like this should be younger than thirty years. While it is true that one man was a great general at twenty-six, and another a great statesman at twenty-five, it is equally true that the one was a greater general and the other a greater statesman at thirty. The interests of our State, as I understand the matter, demand that the executive officer should be a man of ripe experience, and this he is not apt to be under the age of thirty years. I, for one, am opposed to going back to the old rule. It seems to me a mistake to have a man under that age. We want a man who is acquainted with the usual active duties of public life, and ten years experience is little enough for a man to enter the list of competitors for so high and responsible an office as Governor of a great State. I am opposed to the amendment which changes it back again from thirty to twenty-five years.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed, also, to changing the restriction from thirty years back to twenty-five years, for this reason: I think that the man who is to be nominated by the people for this high office should go through some of the other offices in the gift of the people; through the legislative department, for instance.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I have my amendment now in writing.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor who has not been a citizen of the United States and a resident of this State five years next preceding the election, and attained twenty-one years of age at the time of such election."

MR. O'DONNELL. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

MR. WATERS. I would like to hear that read again. It seems to me that would allow a boy seventeen years old to vote, as I understand it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Lost.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. President: Mr. Hale, I suppose, is aware that the Chairman of the Committee on Executive Department is absent. As one of that committee, I will state that the committee was at first about to fix this limit at thirty-five years, but upon further consideration we fixed it at thirty years. I don't know that I can give the reasons which actuated the committee in making this change from the old Constitution, as to the limitation. The gentleman will find by an examination of the section that there is no change made in the period of residence required. Now, the gentleman will certainly not question that it is wise to make that change. It might have been better to have made the limitation required instead of five years' residence, required ten. But the committee concluded upon five years; and they finally concluded that thirty years was the proper age. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, men who are thirty have more experience, as stated by Mr. Cross, have more experience and are better qualified for the position than men of twenty-five. We have limitations on the President and on United States Senators. The committee took all these things into consideration. They took into consideration the fact that it required the same maturity to be Governor that it did to be a United States Senator.

In relation to the objections made by Dr. Shurtleff, that at the time the present Constitution was adopted over two thirds of the men who framed it were under thirty years of age, or at any rate two thirds of the voters were under thirty years; therefore, at the time the present Constitution was adopted, why, almost a majority of the voters of the State of California were at that time not over twenty-five years of age. I am not disposed to look at it in the same light that the gentleman does. I think there is a greater necessity for such a restriction now than existed at that time.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Napa, Mr. Shurtleff.

The amendment prevailed on a standing vote—ayes, 53; noes, 41.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section three by adding at the bottom: "The Governor shall be disqualified from holding any other office during the term for which he shall have been elected."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: My object in offering that amendment is this: it is a well-known fact that the habit has gained ground in this State of the Governor using his office for his own advancement; and if the Governor is disqualified from holding any other office, he will not meddle in State politics for the purpose of making his office the stepping stone to the United States Senatorship.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: The State of California does not have the right to pass upon the qualifications of Senators and Representatives in Congress.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. President: While I am in favor of the proposition offered by Mr. Dudley, I think it should not be passed on now, but wait until we get through with the other sections. The Governor is the only person debarred in this report, and I shall propose a section debarring every State officer from holding any other office.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. WICKES. I have an amendment to section three.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'five' before the word 'years,' and insert 'ten.'"

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no further amendments to section three, the Secretary will read section four.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 4. The returns of every election for Governor shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of government, directed to the Speaker of the Assembly, who shall, during the first week of the session, open and publish them in the presence of both houses of the Legislature. The person having the highest number of votes shall be Governor; but, in case any two or more have an equal and the highest number of votes, the Legislature shall, by joint vote of both houses, choose one of said persons so having an equal and the highest number of votes for Governor.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments to section four, the Secretary will read section five:

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 5. The Governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the militia, the army and navy of this State.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments to section five, the Secretary will read section six.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 6. He shall transact all executive business with the officers of government, civil and military, and may require information, in writing, from the officers of the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments to section six, the Secretary will read section seven.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. He shall see that the laws are faithfully executed.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments, the Secretary will read the next section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 8. When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and law for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the Legislature, or at the next election by the people.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendment, the Secretary will read section nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 9. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the Legislature by proclamation, stating the purposes for which he has convened it, and when so convened it shall have no power to legislate on any subjects other than those specified in the proclamation, but may provide for the expenses of the session and other matters incidental thereto.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend the section by striking out all after the word "it," in the second line. The section will then read: "He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the Legislature by proclamation, stating the purposes for which he has convened it." I believe the Legislature, when assembled, are as well qualified to judge as the Governor.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment in writing.

The amendment was sent up and read by the Secretary as follows: "Strike out all after the word 'it' in the second line of section nine."

MR. WHITE. Mr. President: I was only going to say that I hope it won't be adopted, as this is one of the very best sections brought in here.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any necessity for this. I see no necessity for the section as reported by the committee. If we are going to concede that one man knows more about the interests of the State than the Legislature, or has the interests of the State more at heart than the people themselves, then let us adopt the section as reported. I do not like the idea at all of acknowledging that the people are not qualified to govern themselves, and that the legislators are not qualified to judge of the interests of the people, and of the things that are necessary to be done to promote those interests.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I do not intend to occupy the time of the Convention very long on this subject, but it does appear to me that it would be wrong to strike this out; decidedly so. We do not propose——

Digitized by Google

[Cries of "louder," "louder."]

MR. BROWN. If gentlemen will wash their necks and pick their ears they will be able to hear. [Laughter and applause.] Now all I have to say is this, that we do not suppose the Governor would call the Legislature together unless there be some prevailing public sentiment for a certain purpose; and consequently it would not be one man, as the gentleman has urged, but it would be the sentiment of the people expressed through the Governor. This would leave the matter in a very satisfactory position. I think the section is correct and should stand as it is.

The question being on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley, it was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no further amendment, the Secretary will read section ten.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 10. He shall communicate by message to the Legislature, at every session, the condition of the State, and recommend such matters as he shall deem expedient.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments the Secretary will read section eleven.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 11. In case of a disagreement between the two houses with respect to the time of adjournment, the Governor shall have power to adjourn the Legislature to such time as he may think proper; provided, it be not beyond the time fixed for the meeting of the next Legislature.

THE CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments; if not the Secretary will read the next section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 12. No person shall, while holding any office under the United States or this State, exercise the office of Governor except as hereinafter expressly provided.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no amendments the Secretary will read the next section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 13. There shall be a seal of this State, which shall be kept by the Governor, and used by him officially, and shall be called "The Great Seal of the State of California."

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section fourteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 14. All grants and commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the people of the State of California, sealed with the great seal of the State, signed by the Governor, and countersigned by the Secretary of State.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments the Secretary will read the next section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 15. A Lieutenant-Governor shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner, as the Governor; and his term of office and his qualifications of eligibility shall also be the same. He shall be President of the Senate, but shall only have a casting vote therein. If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant-Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the State, the President pro tem. of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease. The Lieutenant-Governor shall be disqualified from holding any other office, except as specially provided in this Constitution, during the term for which he shall have been elected.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

Strike out all after the word "cease," in the eighth line of section fifteen.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section sixteen.

THE SECRERARY read:

SEC. 16. In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, resignation, or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. But when the Governor shall, with the consent of the Legislature, be out of the State in time of war, at the head of any military force thereof, he shall continue Commander-in-Chief of all the military force of the State.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I wish simply to inquire who is referred to in the last line of this section, when it says "he shall continue Commander-in-Chief." It is evidently intended to describe the duties of Lieutenant-Governor. "But when the Governor shall, with the consent of the Legislature, be out of the State in time of war, at the head of any military force thereof, he shall continue Commander-in-Chief," etc. Does that apply to the Governor or to the Lieutenant-Governor?

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: There is no question about that. It applies to the Governor. It says so in plain language: "When he shall be out of the State, he shall continue," etc. There is no reason why he should not continue to be the military commander of the State.

THE CHAIRMAN. Is there any amendment? If not, the Secretary will read section seventeen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 17. A Secretary of State, a Controller, a Treasurer, an Attorney-General, and a Surveyor-General, shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner as the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, and whose term of office shall be the same as the Governor.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no amendments to the section, the Secretary will read the next section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 18. The Secretary of State shall keep a fair record of the official acts of the Legislative and Executive Departments of the Government, and shall, when required, lay the same, and all matters relative thereto, before either branch of the Legislature, and shall perform such other duties as may be assigned him by law.

MR. HERRINGTON. I move to strike out the word "either," and insert the word "each," in line four, so as to read "each branch of the Legislature."

MR. WEBSTER. It occurs to me that it would be more proper to strike out the word "fair," in the first line, before the word "record," and insert the word "correct." I offer that as an amendment.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. President: Gentlemen have been objecting as a general thing to altering the Constitution unless there is some urgent necessity for the change. If the gentleman will refer to section nineteen of the present Constitution he will find that is the exact language of the present Constitution, and also "either branch of the Legislature" is used.

MR. HERRINGTON. I withdraw the amendment.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I think it is very improper to make that change. It is understood that a record must be legible. It is not a record unless it is correct. If it is not correct, not a correct transcript of the laws passed by the Legislature, it is not a record. It has to be correct to be a record, and this merely requires it to be a plain, legible record.

MR. WEBSTER. I take it that the Constitution means just what it says, or it should mean what it says. "Correct" is the proper word in order to get the sense conveyed. A "fair" record may be a legible record without being a correct record. It cannot be correct without being legible. Not very well, it can't, because it cannot be understood. I think "correct" is the proper word, because it expresses the idea designed to be conveyed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster.

Division being called for, the Convention divided, and the amendment was adopted—ayes, 48; noes, 43.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no further amendment, the Secretary will read section nineteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 19. The Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, Controller, Treasurer, Attorney-General, and Surveyor-General, shall each, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected, which compensation is hereby fixed for the following officers for the two terms next ensuing the adoption of this Constitution, as follows: Governor, six thousand dollars per annum; Lieutenant-Governor, the same per diem as may be provided by law for the Speaker of the Assembly; the Secretary of State, Controller, and Treasurer, three thousand dollars each per annum, said compensation to be in full for all services by them respectively rendered in any official capacity or employment whatsoever during their respective terms of office; provided, however, that the Legislature, after the expiration of the terms hereinbefore mentioned, may by law diminish the compensation of any or all of said officers, but in no case shall have the power to increase the same above the sums hereby fixed by this Constitution. The Legislature shall by law fix the compensation of the Attorney-General and the Surveyor-General, and may, in its discretion, abolish the office of Surveyor-General; and none of the officers hereinbefore named shall receive for their own use any fees or perquisites for the performance of any official duty.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment which I will send up.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment:

Strike out "six" in the seventh line, and insert "five," so as to read: "Governor, five thousand dollars per annum."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on this amendment.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: As far as I am concerned, I am not here for the purpose of legislating with a view of meeting the popular demand for an unwise decrease of the compensation of any public officer. I think when a Governor, having his home and his business in some remote part of the State, comes here to serve the people for a period of four years, six thousand dollars a year is not too much. And I wish to say right here that I think the salary of the Treasurer as fixed—three thousand dollars—taking in view the amount of money he has charge of and the amount of his bonds, the salary is ridiculously small—speaking respectfully of the committee. You cannot get men who will assume the responsibility; who will meet the wishes of the people of this State; who has a reputation that will commend itself to the people of the whole State, who will come here and give the bonds which the State Treasurer is obliged to give, for three thousand dollars per annum. I believe, sir, these services should be paid for in just the proportion of like services in any other capacity; the same as for a like responsible duty which might be imposed on a citizen in the private walks of life. And I want to know where the Cashier of a bank in this State, or the President of a bank is, who handles as much money or gives as heavy bonds as the Treasurer of this State, that would take the position for three thousand dollars? I know, sir, there are a great many men in this State who would be glad to be Treasurer for nothing. There are a great many men who would be glad to be Governor of this State for nothing. I know there are a great many men who would be glad to be Governor of this State for five thousand dollars; but I think, sir, that six thousand dollars for the Governor and four thousand dollars for the Treasurer is a fair and just compensation, and I do not propose, as far as I am concerned, as a member on this floor, to deny to a responsible officer a fair and just compensation. I do not believe the people who pay the taxes, nor the people who do the voting in this State, expect us to make an unreasonable deduction in the compensation of the most responsible officers in this State—the most responsible and laborious offices within the gift of the people of California.

As far as the Controller and Secretary of State are concerned, I have nothing to say; but as far as the offices of the Chief Executive of this State and the Treasurer of the State are concerned, I think that they should be amply paid in the positions they occupy, and I hope the amendment proposed will not be adopted. I think six thousand dollars for the Governor is not too much. I would put in a clause here, if it be in order—and I understand it is in order—that the Legislature might, from time to time, change the salaries of these officers, but not during the term for which they are elected; and if, in the course of time, living should become so cheap and people become so anxious to hold public offices that they can afford to hold them for nothing, the Legislature can reduce the compensation afterwards. But at present I hope the salary of the Governor will not be reduced below six thousand dollars. And I shall move to fix the salary of the Treasurer at four thousand dollars a year, because I believe it is in the interest of good government, in the interest of the people, and not in the interest of these particular officers. I believe in fair dealing. I do not believe in putting these salaries so low that poor men cannot hold these positions. A man cannot go into one of these offices and go out any better off financially than when he came in, and be an honest man.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: As one of the committee, and as a member of this body, I have my doubts about the propriety of fixing salaries in the Constitution, and I gave my adhesion to the views of the committee in this matter. But this section of the report of the committee I feel in justice to Judge Campbell, and in justice to the committee, as this question will probably be discussed at considerable length, I think they should be present when that discussion is had. I, therefore, Mr. Chairman, move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I rise, sir, to answer the remarks of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee. I, like him, am not unaware of the fact that there seems to be a popular demand, or more properly speaking, popular clamor for a reduction of salaries. Now, I wish to say exactly what I mean on this subject. The people, when they call a man to the office of Chief Executive of this State, impose one of the highest and most responsible duties that can be imposed upon the citizen. I think you will all admit that to be true. The people must at all times be able to command the services of the ablest and most worthy citizens to fill such offices of trust. Now, sir, I mean this, when I say popular clamor. You frequently hear men say, you can go out and get good workmen, and so you can, to work in some departments, for two dollars and fifty cents a day; in other departments for four dollars a day; others still for five dollars a day, and so on; and then they come to the conclusion, because these things may be so, and you fix the salaries of these officers at two or three thousand dollars, that that is an ample compensation. Such a conclusion is nonsensical. We, as wise men here, deliberating for the people of this State, must act with reference to the existing condition of things. It is desirable that the people shall always be able to command the services of the best and most worthy citizens for these positions. Can you expect, sir, to command the services of such men as the people may wish to select, unless you pay him a reasonable compensation.

Now, the people ask a man to become Governor of the State. He says, I am a poor man; I am dependent on my labor, on my efforts, on my skill, for my support. Perhaps it is not himself alone; it is more than likely that he has a family dependent upon him for support. They are dependent upon his skill, upon his enterprise, upon his exertions; and he will say to you that he cannot afford to leave his business; he cannot abandon his business in some distant part of the State to come to the Capital for four years and devote his time to the public services upon such conditions, that at the very utmost he can only be compensated for the actual expenses which he incurs.

I appeal to the gentlemen on this floor—and I see about me many gentlemen who have personal, practical knowledge upon the subject—is it not true, Mr. Chairman, that no Governor of this State has yet received one dollar in the way of compensation for performing the duties of the office beyond such expenses as he is compelled to incur during the period of his office? If any gentleman thinks I am mistaken in this assertion, let him rise and correct me.

Now, sir, I believe I am as much in favor of economy as any man on this floor. I will do as much in the interest of economy, but I truly believe that this is economizing in the wrong direction. I will say, by the way, that I know there are men who would be glad to be Governor at a salary of five thousand dollars a year, but they are not the kind of men the people want. I know there are men who would be glad to fill this office at a merely nominal salary. But what is their object? The practical effect of it is this, to limit that class—the very highest class—of services to those who are able to spend their time and their means without compensation; in other words, none but a rich man can afford to be Governor. This doctrine will not do for a free people. It will not do in a young State; it will not do in a community where we have so large a percentage of men who are dependent upon their exertions, and whose families are constantly dependent upon the affairs of the head.

Now, I hold it to be the fairest thing in the world, when you employ men in public positions of trust and honor, to provide that he shall be fairly and reasonably compensated, in view of the services, of the magnitude of the services, which he is called upon to perform. When you have done that, the next fair thing to do is to hold him to a strict accountability for the performance of that trust. Sir, I believe if we go down and hunt for the cause of popular complaint it will not be found to hang on this point. I believe that the people—the taxpayers—are willing to pay a fair and reasonable compensation for the services performed, considering the character of such services and the circumstances under which such services are rendered, and then they want to hold him to a strict accountability for the faithful performance of the duty imposed upon him. Can you point me to any young man, or to any old man either, in the State of California, who is dependent upon himself for his maintenance and support, and the support of those dependent upon him, who can take the office of Governor, come to this Capitol and fill that office faithfully and satisfactorily to the people, and be honest, for the sum of five thousand dollars a year? Is it reasonable, sir, that we should expect and demand such a thing? It is said that men will do it for the honor, and that you cannot buy honesty. Sir, I believe in the old familiar maxim, "Pay as you go, and pay honestly as you go." No man can live in these days as a private citizen, much less perform the functions of Governor, without paying out money every day of his life. He will use up all his salary, and if you fix it at six thousand dollars I think that is low enough. I would rather increase than lower it.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: There is only one amendment pending, I believe, and I desire to offer a substitute for the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 19. The Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, Controller, Treasurer, Attorney-General, and Surveyor-General shall each, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected; but neither of these officers shall receive, for his own use, any fees for the performance of his official duties, and said compensation shall be in full for all services rendered in all official capacities during their respective terms of office.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: When we get into difficulty it is a good thing sometimes to go back to the old Constitution. The amendment which I offer is taken partly from the present Constitution, but the provision is added that the compensation is to be in full for all services. Now, it seems to me that the Constitution is not the right place to fix salaries of officers. A Constitution is intended to be a permanent, perpetual thing, not going to be changed perhaps in a hundred years, and it does seem to me that the Legislature is better qualified to determine what the salaries of officers should be than this Convention, when we have it to do for all time. If you put this in the Constitution it cannot be altered, no matter what the people may think, no matter what the Legislature itself may wish, it cannot be altered except by constitutional amendment.

Now, from the early organization of this State down to the present time, this matter has been left to the Legislature, with the simple qualification that salaries shall not be raised or lowered during the term of the incumbent, and I have added a clause which says that the salaries so fixed shall include all the services rendered by the officer; that is to say, no matter what duties may be imposed upon him, the stated salary shall cover everything. I do not believe that we should undertake to fix the salaries at all. The best way, it seems to me, would be to leave that matter to the Legislature. I think it is a very small business for a Constitutional Convention to engage in. It is a matter that belongs to the Legislature. If these salaries are fixed too low it will exclude from office all but two classes—the exceedingly wealthy and the exceedingly poor—leaving out the great middle class of the people. I hope this amendment will be adopted, because I want to see this matter left where it belongs—in the hands of the Legislature.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I do not intend to take up three minutes of the time of this Convention. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland. Some years money is worth a great deal more than it is in other years; some years provisions are high, and some years they are low. Consequently, for us to fix salaries for all time equal and just, is out of the question. There are various reasons urged, but I feel to favor the amendment proposed by Mr. McFarland, allowing this matter to rest with the Legislature. There is where it belongs, where the people, through their representatives, can have control of the matter at all times, to alter the salaries as the exigencies of the times demand.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I am very sorry that I cannot agree with my honored colleague, Judge Hale, in this matter. I do not know what may be the spirit and sentiment of this Convention. I do not know exactly what is the spirit of the entire people regarding this subject; but if I have not read public sentiment wrong, it is not only clamoring, but demanding, and that, too, repeatedly, time and time again, for a general reduction in the salaries of officers in this State. If that were not a fact, Mr. Chairman, I would ask why it is that political candidates, candidates for political preferment, have almost universally incorporated this sentiment in their stump speeches, that they were in favor of economy, pointing out as one of the elements, one of the points that I propose to strike, to wit: a general reduction of salaries in this State. Mr. Chairman, I claim that there was a demand among the people existing under this condition of affairs for this very consummation, and, sir, while I indorse every word uttered by the honorable gentleman from San Francisco, and by my honorable colleague from Placer, Judge Hale—while agreeing with them that we should pay fair salaries for fair services, yet, sir, it must be patent to every gentleman on this floor that there is a limit, and a reasonable limit, to all things; and if any man will stand up here and show to me some logical reasons why we should be paying, in our present changed, modified condition, salaries so outrageously unproportioned to all the other States, I certainly would like to hear him. It is claimed here that competency and honesty and integrity cannot be obtained for any less price. I would ask these gentlemen how it is that the great State of Ohio and the great State of New York can obtain the services of able and distinguished men for Governors for the sum of four thousand dollars a year—men fit, as has been proven, to become President of the United States? I tell you this argument will not hold. We find, with the exception of a few States—a few of those States in the southern portion of the Union, so fixed and controlled by a retinue of carpet-bag Governors—the average salaries of Governors is between two thousand dollars and four thousand dollars. In a few of the States the Governors receive five thousand dollars, while in a great many of the States the Governor receives four thousand dollars. One, three thousand five hundred dollars; a number three thousand dollars; and some four thousand dollars, five thousand dollars, and even six thousand dollars, including the great State of New Hampshire, the great State of Virginia, and the State of Michigan, where the Governor receives only one thousand dollars a year. And yet, has it ever been claimed that their Governors lacked competency or efficiency; and have they not in their service as great men as there are in other States? I say, sir, you cannot measure competency by the amount of salary you pay a man; and, sir, as to the fact asserted by my friend from San Francisco, and he stated it as a fact, that no Governor of this State ever has received any more than sufficient to pay his expenses, I find from my observation and experience that gentlemen of moderation and judgment usually govern their expenses according to their incomes; and certainly if the Governor of the State of California entered upon the duties of his office, and knew that his compensation was limited to five thousand dollars a year, I stand here ready to assert, as a matter of common sense, that he will not come out in debt. Mr. Chairman, if this sweeping demand in favor of reduction, in favor of a general reduction, in favor of a sweeping reduction, in favor of universal economy, for the establishing of this Government on a more economical basis—if that is clamorous, then, in the name of God, call me a clamorer. I tell you, it is not a clamor; it is an earnest, honest demand, straight from the heart and judgment of the people, who have arrived at that view, at that determination, after a long and sore experience; a judgment formed, I say, after competent deliberation, and after it has been educated into them by those who assume to be the leaders, who declared that they were in favor of reducing salaries. Again, it is said that we should not fix the salaries at all. It has been claimed that that matter should be left to the Legislature. I say, sir, we have been leaving it to the Legislature, and while everything else has been coming down to the old modified common sense standard, while we have been brought by railroad communication to go hand in hand with the Eastern States, while wages in all departments have fallen, while the prices of money have been coming down, and while we have appealed to the lawmakers to do this thing, to reduce these enormous salaries, we find, sir, that they have repeatedly failed. And now, sir, it is my candid judgment that it devolves upon this body here to be more conservative, and to show more capability, and more patriotism, and take this matter in hand, show our indifference to the past and our regard for the future by fixing these salaries, a duty which, among other things, the people sent us here to perform, if I am not greatly mistaken.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman who has just taken his seat, has argued this question from false premises. The people of this State are not clamoring for any reduction of salaries. When was ever such a clamor raised, except by a few office seekers themselves on the stump before election? I'll tell you, Mr. Chairman, what the people are clamoring for: they are clamoring for an adjustment of taxation; they are demanding of us that we fix this Constitution so that they will be relieved from this great burden of taxation which is bearing them down. There are many other questions pending before this Convention, which are of far greater importance to the people of this State, than this matter of taking off a few dollars a year from State officers. The amount which is proposed here is not sufficient for a Governor who calculates to be honest, and to administer the affairs of his high office with justice. Six thousand dollars a year for the Governor of a great State like this, will never bankrupt the treasury, nor cause any clamoring on the part of the people. No, nor seven thousand dollars. The State officers are not now receiving any more than a just and liberal compensation for the services which they perform; not any more than the people of California are willing that they shall have in the future.

As far as this question of economy is concerned, any one who has given the subject any consideration whatever knows very well that no man can uphold the dignity of the office of Governor of a great State like this on the pitiful sum of five thousand dollars a year, or even six thousand. I for one do not wish to belittle and degrade this high and responsible office, and lower the dignity of a great State, by putting the salary down to a pitiful pittance, barely sufficient to pay the board of the incumbent. I say, sir, that the people of this State are not crying out against the compensation of her public officers. They are in favor of paying liberally as a rule. They are in favor of doing justice to all classes. But when you come to put down the salary of the Governor and other State officers to a mere pittance, you must necessarily put down the wages of laborers, because, by the very same rule that you invoke here the Chinaman will come in and say I will work for four bits a day, and because he is willing to do the work cheaper than the white man can possibly afford to do, you must take him. It follows as a logical sequence. You say that five thousand dollars is enough for Governor, and that there are plenty of men who would be glad to take the position. The same rule holds good. You must not give a white laborer one dollar a day because there are plenty of Chinamen who would be glad to have the work at four bits a day. I hope the salaries will stay where they are. The people of this State are satisfied. There is no cause for a change. There is no clamor. I hope there will be no reduction.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: Lest some one may be misled by the remarks made by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher, in regard to the salary of Governor in New York, I will say a few words. It is true, that the fixed salary of that office is four thousand dollars in that State, yet they allow the Governor a great many perquisites. He is allowed his house rent—a very fine mansion, and the actual receipts of that office, including these perquisites, amount to between twelve thousand to fifteen thousand dollars a year. The people do not complain very much of the action of the Legislature. This subject of salaries was thoroughly investigated by the Senate I think three years ago, and my impression now is, that it was found that the Governor of California receives a less sum for his services than any Governor of any of the larger States. I don't wish to occupy any time in illustrating the able arguments made by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, and the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale. My main motive was to call the attention of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, to the latter clause of his amendment, and ask if it is not redundant, and should not be left out of the section. I am in favor of the existing section as it stands.

MR. ESTEE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

MR. EDGERTON. Certainly.

MR. ESTEE. I understand that the election for the adoption of this Constitution will be next May. Well, there will be an election for new officers under the Constitution, which will come off in September or October following. The result will be that the Governor will be elected and inaugurated before the Legislature meets to fix any salary.

MR. McFARLAND. I put that clause in my amendment simply because it was in the report of the committee, but perhaps it would be better out; I think myself it is redundant. I understand what the purpose of that clause was. It was put there because heretofore certain State officers who have had stated salaries were assigned additional duties—ex officio—and they drew extra compensation for performing those duties, and it is proposed to confine them to their salaries, which shall cover all the services performed. But I do not see how the clause can do any harm. The amendment which I propose is simply section twenty-one of the old Constitution, with this addition. If adopted it will simply express the same sentiment. It would have to be amended so as to provide for the first term of officers under the Constitution.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I rise merely to state—as one of the gentlemen in this house said there is no popular clamor for these reductions. Now it so happens, during my election I traveled one thousand two hundred miles. I done so, and I spoke almost every night, for nearly six weeks, and I never was in a meeting that I didn't promise faithfully that these salaries should be reduced. Others can speak for themselves, but I am speaking for myself, and I do not want to leave this matter to the Legislature. When the people see the Governor receives nine thousand dollars, it is enormous, and they all speak of these things, and we have promised and pledged ourselves to them that these salaries shall be reduced and fixed in the Constitution at reasonable figures. Now, sir, as to the Governor not being able to live on five thousand dollars a year, I don't see why, because he is a Governor, that he should not live as well as any other man on five thousand dollars. It don't oblige him to do anything that a citizen should not do. I don't see why that is not a large salary. Certainly if a poor man gets it he would have a very good thing, and if a rich man gets it he does not need any more. I have promised my constituents that I will cut off these salaries, and I mean to do it if I can, and I hope the Convention will aid me.

MR. KLEINE. Mr. President: I am in favor of reducing salaries. I don't see why the Governor could not live on four thousand or five thousand dollars a year. I don't see why we should pay such high salaries. We are, Mr. President, sent here as reformers, and we have pledged ourselves that we will reduce the salaries not only of the Governor, but of every officer; that we will reduce the salaries of all officials, and then, Mr. President, I assure you there won't be so many of these place-hunters. Yes, reduce their salaries, and there won't be so great an inducement for these men to seek office, and spend two or three thousand dollars to get the offices, because they know they won't get recompensed. I don't see why in the name of common sense the Governor should get any more than any other human being under God's heavens. I don't see why a lawyer is more than any other man. [Laughter.] I don't see why we expect a poor man who works from morning till night, to work for a dollar a day and support his family, and leave him no redress against his oppressors, and yet we are striving to increase the wages of these officials. It is time for us to reform. If we leave it to the Legislature, we know what they have done in the past. We know that they will do nothing. You may wait for twenty-five years more and you will never see them do anything. Therefore I hope this six thousand dollar proposition will be voted down, and that when we come to the five thousand proposition we will cut it down to four thousand, and when we get it down to four thousand we will cut it down to three thousand, and then to two thousand. That's what I hope we will do. Twenty dollars a day is enough for any man to live on. Let this money go to the suffering people who are starving all over the country.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I wish to produce a few figures and make a few comparisons in regard to salaries of Governors. Let us see what other States pay. Florida pays her Governor five thousand dollars a year; Kentucky pays four thousand five hundred dollars; Maryland, the same; Ohio, one thousand five hundred dollars; Texas, five thousand dollars; Virginia, five thousand dollars; West Virginia, two thousand dollars; Wisconsin, five thousand dollars. Now, I understand these salaries are in full for all services and for all the expenses attendant upon the performance of the duties; and they receive no fees. Now, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see why the Governor of the State of California cannot live on five thousand dollars a year—yes, on two hundred and fifty dollars a month—three thousand dollars a year. I think actually that would be enough for the Governor of this State.

Digitized by Google

Their expenses are not any more than the expenses of any other man. Now, Mr. President, I know it to be a fact that you can board in this town, just as good as most of us want, at five dollars a week. That is what I pay, five dollars a week, and that is what a great many of us in this Convention pay. Now, then, I think that a man that is anyways economically inclined can live on five thousand dollars a year and save money. Five thousand dollars a year is a good deal of money. And as far as the public clamor for a reduction of salaries is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I will say that my constituents are not only clamoring, but they are demanding, that salaries shall be reduced all over California. If I return to them without having used my best endeavors to accomplish it, they will simply say that I have betrayed my trust.

I believe there is not a man in this Convention—I know many of my non-partisan friends were elected on a reform platform, pledged to economy; and this is one of the very reforms to which many of us were specially pledged, to reduce the salaries of all State officers by a clause in the Constitution. A great many gentlemen on this floor rise and say that this matter of salaries should be left to the Legislature. Mr. President, we can fix these salaries just as well as the Legislature can. I do not believe there is any danger of our getting them down too low; not a bit of it. Let us say in this Constitution what the salaries of these State officials shall be. Let us put them as low as we can and be just. I believe in being just; but I want to be just to the taxpayer as well as the official. Let us put these salaries at a figure upon which they can live. Let us not talk about economy, but let us practice it. Let us strike out six thousand dollars and insert five thousand dollars at least. That will be one step in the direction of reform.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say one word in reference to the economical idea prevailing here. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, what the people of San Francisco do want is not so much a reduction of salaries, but they want to know exactly what salary the officers are to receive. The trouble is not in regard to the salaries which the officers receive according to law, but as to the compensation which they receive outside of the law. That is the proposition. There are too many commissions and too many perquisites that are not recognized by law. That is the objection raised everywhere throughout the State. I have heard no one in San Francisco say that the salary of the Mayor, as Mayor, is too much. I have never heard any one say that the salary of a member of the Board of Supervisors is too much; and I challenge my young friend from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman, to point to an instance where there has been any complaint from any respectable taxpayer. But it is this, uncertain amounts that come from commissions and other surreptitious methods whereby men get money for services not rendered. It is against these that the people rise up and cry out, and not against the regular, square, honest compensation of officers. As far as I am concerned, I am not prepared to say, sir, that this State—that this Convention—will be doing credit to itself to send its Governor to live at a hash-house, as my friend in front of me——

MR. STEDMAN. I rise to a point of order. I don't live at a hash-house.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. [Laughter.]

MR. STEDMAN. Some of the most respectable members of this Convention—some of the members I respect and honor—live where I board.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: If it is not a "hash" house, the gentleman will accept my apology. But he stated that five dollars a week was ample to board a man, and I don't know—to put it mildly—I do not know the price of these houses. If I have made a mistake as to what was said, I am willing to leave it to the Convention, or to the reporter's notes.

Now, sir, I am one of those who sincerely believe that the Governor of this State should maintain the dignity of his position. I am one of those who believe that there are expenses connected with the executive department—with the executive office—that are not incident to a man in private life; and I wish to say here, also, that the figures of the gentleman show that the salaries in other States, in almost every instance (at least as far as I have been able to observe), are more; for this reason, that those States furnish the Governor with a mansion, where he is not obliged to pay an enormous rent. This State, under a former administration, partly built a mansion, and afterwards it was turned into a type-setting institution. So, when a Governor comes here he is obliged to rent a house, and obliged to pay high rent. Now, we have cut down the salary from eight thousand dollars to six thousand dollars, and we have cut off all perquisites. In nearly every State in the Union there is an office known as the State Auditor, and that officer performs those duties pertaining to that branch of the government which here our Governor is required to perform. The Governor also has a great deal of work to do in connection with the State Prison, as well as all the other public institutions of the State. I think the reduction at this time to six thousand dollars is an ample reduction. I am one who believes in paying a fair compensation for fair services, regardless of what views men who never paid a cent of taxes in their lives may have upon the subject. I believe the taxpayers of the country—those who pay into the treasury the money which goes to make up these salaries—are satisfied to pay their officers sufficient to enable them to live in the community respectably, decently, and honestly.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me this discussion has got down pretty low when it comes to be a question whether the gentleman from San Francisco takes his meals at a respectable hash-house; and also that other question, whether the gentleman from San Francisco regards one or another of the taxpayers of San Francisco as respectable taxpayers. I take it to be understood, Mr. Chairman, and I hold that opinion, that every man who is a citizen of California is a taxpayer. And one is just as much a taxpayer as another; and it makes no difference to the gentleman, and no difference to the revenue of the State, whether a man's possessions amount to a million, or whether he owns nothing but the clothes he wears, he is all the same a taxpayer, and I don't know but he is just about as respectable. So I think we have very little remaining of this discussion so far as the respectability of the taxpayers are concerned; and I think we had better eliminate the question of respectable boarding houses from the question also, and try and resolve it upon something like the distinctive merits of the case. We have heard altogether too much about respectability in this Convention; let us look at this subject upon its merits.

MR. INMAN. I raise the point of order that he is not discussing the question before the house.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken; the gentleman will confine himself to the subject under discussion.

MR. REYNOLDS. I am sorry for the gentleman who raises this objection. I was only alluding to some of the arguments on the other side. Let us look at the subject. Mr. Chairman, it is a well known fact, we all recognize it, whether we admit it or not, but we recognize the fact that the State of California has been going on stilts about forty feet high, and it is just as well to admit it, and come down from these forty-foot stilts and commence walking once more on solid ground. And as good a place to begin as any is here and now, and fix the salaries of State officers in this revised Constitution. There is no question, Mr. Chairman, about that proposition, that extravagant fees and extravagant salaries lead to extravagant living. There is no disputing the other fact, that extravagant living among the officers of the State, and among officials all over the country, at the county seats, in your cities, at Sacramento, at Washington, and everywhere, reacts upon the people. Extravagance on the part of the Government reacts upon the people, and causes them to indulge in the same practice. Why, sir, there is no use in denying it, the outragous extravagance and corruption of the last two national administrations have so corrupted the people of the United States, that it has been one means of calling this Convention into existence. It is one of the causes of the hard times we hear so much about. Had the two last administrations been stern, honest, and upright, we would not have witnessed the corruption and extravagance among the people all over the country, which has become so prevalent, spending their substance as fast as they earn it.

These are a few of the reasons why we should put a firm hand on the brakes, and deal with this matter of salaries. Let us determine what is the fair thing to do and do it. I have made up my mind that about five thousand dollars is a good fair compensation for the Governor. That is a good fair salary. I think it is just about enough, and I would not vote to reduce it below that figure. I would not increase it beyond that figure. It seems to me about the average salary of the average States like California. Mention has been made of the State of Oregon. I was present, not as a member, but sitting at the reporters' desk, when that Constitution was framed. Their salaries were put at a very mean, pitiful figure, about one thousand five hundred dollars a year. It does not work well. It is a mean business. I think we should adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman on the other side of the house, and strike out six thousand dollars and insert five thousand dollars. That will strike the average citizen as about fair. It will satisfy the people of the country, and meet the views of those who are seeking office as well. There is nothing extravagant about it, nothing mean about it; is is more than the average lawyer will earn, more than the average citizen earns, two or three times over, and it is enough.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I do not think there is any reason for increasing the salary of the Governor, nor have I heard any sound argument advanced to show why it should be decreased. I recognize the fact stated by the gentleman from Santa Cruz, Mr. White, that he and others are pledged to an economical administration of the government, whenever they succeed in getting hold of it. So are we all. But I take it that no gentleman who sought to be a delegate to this Convention was under bonds to reduce the salaries of public officers of this State below the limit which should be deemed by the average sense of this Convention to be just and reasonable. Now, sir, if an officer was elected or appointed to his station for life, he could remove permanently to Sacramento to attend to the affairs of State, abandon his previous business or occupation, and turn his back upon all the pursuits of his life. He could well undertake, as a permanent engagement, to serve the State for an annual salary of eight thousand dollars, six thousand dollars, or even five thousand dollars. It would be amply sufficient. But that is not so. He comes here for a limited period of time, possibly from some distant part of the State, where he has doubtless exhibited the qualities of frugality, honesty, and integrity which have been so much lauded upon the floor of this Convention; he has abandoned his occupation or business, and his home and prosperity, for I take it the time will never come when a man who is competent to become Governor of this State will be selected because he has been a spendthrift, or because he is not anchored to property in the State, and does not possess the very qualities of honesty, integrity, and economy which are themselves a sure guarantee that he has a home, an occupation, business, and some visible means of support. Yet your Governor must turn his back upon all these. If he has a business he must provide for its continuance. He must supply the wants created by his devotion to public interests. He must leave his home. During four years he must maintain his local standing and influence. He must also maintain an establishment here. I take it that though my friend Mr. Stedman, of San Francisco, has been obliged to make unusually economical arrangements for subsistence in Sacramento—more so than I have been able to make—he will admit that the Governor of California would not be reasonably expected to subsist as modestly as he is apparently proud to do—and which is commendable and desirable in the private citizen. Such a mode of living is not expected or desired of the Governor. He should live as becomes the head of a great people. Make the poorest man in the State of California its Governor, and the people who come here from abroad must see him and be entertained by him. He has duties of hospitality to discharge which are not incumbent upon men leading a domestic and private life; and this is an item to be considered, and no small item, either. This high position should not be made possible only to the wealthy man. Nor should its emoluments be so reduced that it should seem desirable only to the poorest class of citizens, to whose struggles to maintain an existence gentlemen have so feelingly alluded. It is too much to say that the good citizen, who leaves his home and his own domestic establishment, who abandons or intrusts to strange hands his business or profession, and comes to the Capital of the State to remain during his term of office, should live upon the moderate income which would decently maintain the same citizen and his family at home. Besides, the Governor must travel about the State. He must know the condition of public institutions. He must visit the prisons, the asylums, and hospitals of the State. He must attend at public ceremonies and at public meetings involving public interests, and discharge duties that from custom, if not from law, properly belong to his high station. He also deals with another class of customary duties, which may be classed under the head of gubernatorial chair. Every man who has ever occupied public position knows how extensive and perpetual the claims of charity are upon him, simply because he is a public man. Demands of this sort upon one occupying a public position are much greater than they are upon mere private individuals. More is expected of him. He is compelled to accede to the calls of charity, however little he can afford to yield to them.

The salary of our Governor should be put at such a figure as would sufficiently compensate a man of average industry, average intelligence, and average ability for the discharge of the duties of his high office. So large that when he retires from office he shall have discharged all its duties with honor to himself and credit to the State, without impairing his private fortune, if he have one. The poorest man on the floor of this Convention, if he were unfortunate enough to be elected Governor, will find much is expected of him the moment he takes office, as if he were the wealthiest and most liberal citizen in the State. He will have all I have mentioned and a great deal more to do. How will he do it? I believe there never has been a Governor in this State, or the Mayor of any city, and hardly the Trustee of any township, who has not been compelled to give back to the people in one form or another at least half the money he receives from the people. I know from acquaintances of mine who have occupied public positions that such is the fact; and there is no man who has ever held a public position that does not know this to be the case.

Sir, it is not what we pay in actual salaries fixed by law that makes the State bleed in taxation at every pore. It is not what is bestowed by honest laws. It is stealing. [Applause.] It is the legalized brigandage of legislation that builds the burden of intolerable taxation. It is not what men have and pay taxes on that angers the people. It is what they hold and do not pay taxes on that makes the honest taxpayer suffer and sweat blood. [Applause.] The vice is in our unjust, unfair, and unequal system of taxation. Give me a system of taxation—and when we reach that point I hope we shall all unite to devise a system of thorough taxation that will meet the question—give me a system of taxation that when the citizen farmer or farmer emigrant, seeking a home where he may sustain himself and his family, shall ask the price of land, he shall not be told that its selling price is fifty dollars or one hundred dollars an acre, while if he goes to the Assessor's books, he will find it assessed at six bits or a dollar an acre! Let us stop this minimum of assessment—this maximum of sale. Here is the trouble; here is the mischief; here is where the stealing from the State is done. [Applause.] We want to make these acre-lords and Assessors' paupers pay their honest share of the taxes. We want honest Assessors, or a Board of State Equalization that will make them honest. Regulate these matters, and the people will never complain of generous salaries for honest Governors. Let us waste no more time in needless discussion on these salaries for State officers. Let us employ these fast-waning hours in discussing and devising a system of revenue that will secure and compel taxation on all property alike. I do not care then if the Governor gets twenty thousand dollars a year, but I think his present salary is small enough if he fairly and honestly and with requisite ability does execute the laws of the Commonwealth.

Mr. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I am under no pledge, but I believe we should begin to work back to a basis of economy. I believe we should get back to the times of Thomas Jefferson, that great statesman who could go to and from the Capitol without calling a carriage. Our whole nation is becoming too extravagant. But while I believe in retrenchment in these matters I do not believe in running the thing into the ground.

Mr. NOEL. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee now rise, and report to the Convention, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion was put.

Carried by an affirmative vote of 77.

THE SPECIAL ORDER—CORPORATIONS.

The PRESIDENT. The special order for this hour is the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Mr. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I hope the gentleman will let us get through with the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights before that motion is made.

Mr. ESTEE. With that in view, and for no other purpose, I will withdraw the motion to allow the gentleman to move to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the four remaining sections of the Bill of Rights. I do so with the understanding that the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal shall keep its regular place as a special order.

NEW PROPOSITIONS.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I have here a proposition that I wish to have submitted to the Committee of the Whole. I wish to have it read, printed, and submitted to the Committee of the Whole in connection with the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power.

PARDONING POWER.

MR. GRACE then, by leave, introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, in relation to the pardoning power:

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 13. The Governor shall have the power to grant reprieves, but nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the granting of pardons or commutations of sentence, after conviction, but if it shall appear to the Governor that in the case of any person undergoing sentence, additional testimony, mitigating or other circumstances, have been developed which bring into question the justice of such sentence, the Governor shall have the power to remand such person to the custody of the Court in which such sentence was passed for a new trial.

Referred to Committee on Pardoning Power.

PREAMBLE AND BILL OF RIGHTS.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I now move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THF WHOLE.

MR. VAN DYKE. I suppose, Mr. President, it would be in order to take it up by sections.

TRIAL BY JURY.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the amendment to section seven offered by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions, and in cases of misdemeanor where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both, three fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases not amounting to felony, by the consent of both parties, in open Court expressed, and in civil cases by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil cases, and cases of misdemeanor, the jury may consist of any number, less than twelve, that the parties may agree upon in open Court.

MR. HALE. Mr. President: I move to amend by striking out the words, "cases of misdemeanor where the punishment does not exceed six months' imprisonment, or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both," and insert "all criminal cases not punishable by death or imprisonment for life." When this question was formerly under discussion in Committee of the Whole I had occasion to discuss in part the question covered by the pending amendment. If I correctly understood or interpreted the sense of the Convention as then shown by the vote taken, it was to the effect that the Convention, or the Committee of the Whole, would not go to the extent of allowing a less number than all the members of a jury to render a verdict in all cases whatever, nor would the committee allow the amendment to go to the extent of allowing a less number than twelve jurors to be selected by the concurrence of both parties in all cases, nor a jury to be waived in all cases. Such a proposition was voted down.

Another proposition was presented to allow a verdict to be rendered by the concurrence of less than the jury in cases, first, other than felony, and second, in all criminal cases other than those punishable by death or imprisonment for life. The amendment that is now sent up is intended to take the sense of the committee upon this last proposition. It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that if there be reason for us to allow a jury to return a verdict without the concurrence of all the members in any case, the reason is equally potent to extend it to all cases according to the terms of the amendment proposed, which is, that this shall be allowed in all cases, except felonies punishable by death or imprisonment for life. I do not really, in my own judgment, concur in the distinction that is made, but evidently the committee is not prepared to go further, and I offer this amendment in deference to that assumed position. I submit that it will greatly aid and facilitate the prompt and certain administration of justice to allow this change to be made in these cases, and I am not able to see that any danger to the public service or to the rights of defendants will accrue. We all know, at least many lawyers having seats upon this floor know, that those cases in which disagreements of juries are most likely, have been cases not of the ordinary type. They are just those cases which have from some cause or other excited unusual public interest. No doubt as an average statement it may be said this is founded upon the serious consequences that may follow conviction to the defendant; doubtless also in many cases by reason of the real or supposed outrage of public justice whenever any crime itself becomes an element of popular interest.

Now I see no reason why, upon the principles upon which the jury system is made to rest, we should not in these cases accept the average judgment of a jury composed as provided by law as the basis of a legal and proper judgment. That it will greatly facilitate the administration of justice and secure it with promptness and certainty, I think will be conceded by all. The only question, I apprehend, that can be made against the proposition, is that there may be, in certain cases, danger of doing some real or supposed injustice to defendants on trial. Some gentlemen, on the former discussion, referred to what sometimes happens, that is, an undue excitement in the public mind while the trial progresses, and urge this condition of facts as a reason why the verdict of a jury should be unanimous to be the basis of a judgment. I submit that if there be such a state of feeling where the Court sits, as to influence or to endanger influencing the mind of the jury contrary to the established rules of law and justice, the cause should be transferred to other forum where such conditions do not exist; for certainly it is undeniable, both upon the letter of the law and in the spirit of common sense, just that every man who is on trial should have a fair and impartial trial. If he cannot have it by reason of such elements of distraction as affect a partial or unanimous verdict of a jury, it furnishes equal reason why he cannot have it by any jury trial there. Therefore it furnishes a reason for transferring the cases to other forums where such fair trial can be had.

I believe, sir, that this will be found to be the average judgment of the gentlemen on this floor. While there has been much popular dissatisfaction regarding the administration, particularly of criminal justice, that the most important factor of that dissatisfaction has grown out of what is deemed, first, the undue delay in bringing cases to trial, and second, the result of delays and defeat of justice which has resulted from it. I think I may appeal to the gentlemen of the bar, who are honored with seats on this floor, for the verification of the statement that the larger proportion of mistrials occur in those criminal cases where men are on trial for high crimes. Now, of course, if there can be any satisfactory reason given why we might not safely accept a three-fourths, or five-sixths, vote of a jury as a basis of judgment, of course that is a good reason why a man should not be put on trial on such conditions. But if that position be correct, it is equally potent to carry us to the other conclusion, that we should never allow a verdict so to be rendered. Why, sir, many cases, not involving life, or imprisonment for life, nor even felony, involve the rights of the citizen, the liberty of the citizen, all that is dear and sacred to him, almost equally with those cases I have enumerated. If, then, you may not have a fair and impartial trial without the concurrence of all the jurors in these excepted cases, it seems to me that the reason is equally potent to carry us to the conclusion that this ought not to be permitted in any case whatever. Yet I believe it is true that if you should take the sense of the bench and bar upon the question, it would be found that there would be a majority, especially of those who have had the largest experience and field of observation, that would agree in saying that there is need of change in this respect; that we must in some way accept the average judgment of the jury in these cases.

The amendment proposes to modify the present system to this extent, and allow a jury by a three-fourths vote to render an effective verdict in all civil cases; second, in all criminal cases, except where the punishment may be death or imprisonment for life. In all other cases a jury may be waived by parties in the manner prescribed by law. It seems to me that this will make a safe, simple, and complete rule, and that it will greatly facilitate the administration of justice in point of time, and will not debar any man from securing justice. I do therefore hope that the amendment may be adopted.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer a substitute for the section, which I will send up.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases, in the manner to be prescribed by law.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I desire to test the sense of the committee in relation to that amendment, and suppose it will be necessary to inform the committee that it is the Constitution as it now stands. I will say that our jury system has worked well, and I would prefer that it should remain as it is.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: This is another of the methods that are getting too common here, where there is an admitted improvement upon the present Constitution, of wearing out the report of the committee by amendments and debate, until the committee is tired of the debate and tired of spending time, and then moving the old Constitution. Mr. Chairman, if that practice is going to be kept up, we might as well adopt the old Constitution, and adjourn and go home. Now, sir, if we are going to do anything, let us stick to the work in hand and attempt to perfect it. Here we have spent a day in the discussion of this section and referring it to a committee. We have now got the report. It is again coppered by amendments, further discussion ensues, and then we move the old section in order to close the thing up.

I am opposed to that amendment. If that motion is insisted upon, I hope it will be voted down. There is no question in my mind but that this committee can evolve an improvement upon the old section. This very discussion proves that; the various amendments prove that; and examples we have of half a dozen of the latest Constitutions prove that. I hope that the motion will be voted down, and that we will stick to the report of the committee until we have agreed upon it.

At the proper time, Mr. Chairman, I will endeavor to move an amendment to the report of the committee in a very trifling respect; and I believe, from the discussion that we have had and from the various amendments proposed, that with this trifling amendment which I shall offer to section seven, that it will pass almost unanimously. There is no opportunity now for me to do so, but as soon as the opportunity does come I want to move that amendment.

I hope this last resort to defeat any action in this Convention—moving the old Constitution—will be voted down, and that we will keep on voting it down to the end of the Convention.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to have aroused the ire of the gentleman from San Francisco, but as yet I do not think there has been any test of the committee as to whether they want the old Constitution in relation to juries or not. There has been no vote upon that question. I think that the gentleman himself proposes to amend the report of the Judiciary Committee in relation to this question. I prefer the Constitution as it is to the report of the Judiciary Committee. I prefer it to any section which has been suggested. As I said before I do not see but that our jury system has worked well and I am in hopes that this Convention will adhere to that.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: By leave I will make one statement. The evident intent of this Convention is to attempt to improve upon the present jury system so as to devise a three-fourths verdict in certain cases, instead of the unanimous verdict now required; and in another respect, to provide, where the parties can agree, that the parties in criminal cases may waive a jury. These are the two points on which this committee are now trying to agree. They are direct improvements upon the old jury system. They have been adopted by many States and found to work well, and now we are attempting to agree upon these two improvements and their provisions. Let us try and see if we cannot do it.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say but one word, and I will try and make it as brief as I can. When we assembled here in this Convention to amend the Constitution as it has been, we came only to make such changes as experience showed were needed. The test of the changes needed would perhaps be derived from this: whether the people in voting for the candidates that they have elected here from the different localities placed us upon platforms requiring any change in the jury system. There may have been counties in this State where the people demanded a change in the jury system, but I do not remember of any such case; nor do I remember that the people of this State have found that they needed a change in the present jury system, or that that change was so generally needed, as that any Convention which declared its principles declared in favor of any change in the jury system. Now while our present jury system has some faults we are not sure that this change will be an improvement. But unless the people have expressed some dissatisfaction with the present system I do not see the need of any change.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. Mr. Chairman: I think the people of the State of California have already expressed themselves upon this subject, in our sister State of Nevada. It is well known that that State has been populated mostly by Californians, and in that State the propositions embodied in the report of the Judiciary Committee here have been adopted. Now it seems to me that the public sentiment in this State has demanded a change in the jury system. Why, in every Court in this State there has been trials and retrials on account of the disagreement of the jury, by one or two men hanging the jury. It has entailed an enormous amount of cost, not only upon the State but upon individuals who have rights regulated in Court.

It seems to me that there has a prejudice grown up in this Convention, and I think unfounded, too, against the Committee on Judiciary, and I believe that that prejudice is directed against this report. Now there are men upon that committee who are known to be able jurists. This is a question in which it seems to me there can be no ground for such a feeling, and I think that it is beneath the dignity of any member of this body to vote against a proposition out of feeling. It is purely a question of jurisprudence, and I cannot see why there should be any prejudice whatever. We come here to reform the organic law, to improve the organic structure of the State, and I say we should rise above prejudice and feeling in doing this kind of business.

Now there was some disagreement between members on that committee in arriving to a conclusion about this matter. Of course, the propositions are somewhat new. Some of the same differences of opinion existed there that exist in this Convention, and, with some difficulty, they were harmonized and the system agreed upon. Let that be done in its consideration by this Convention.

I presume that those who are not lawyers here will not undertake to say as much about this question as the lawyers do. I do not see how they can, in formulating this matter. Of course, as citizens, they can see how the jury system works. They can see that there has been trouble all over this State by jurymen hanging juries. In all other matters the majority rules. On the Supreme bench a majority rules, and in every matter upon which we wish to get at the right, except in a jury, the majority rules. In every case where the majority rules, it is satisfactory. Why should we stick to the old form of common law in this respect, when in every other respect we have yielded to the influence of greater civilization. There is yet too much superstition in regard to the old common law, and this is one of the evidences of it. Let us do as the Californians have done in Nevada, and where it has proved a success.

I think that the report of the committee is a good one, and I do not think that the prejudice now existing in this Convention should have anything to do in overturning it.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this committee will not adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Shasta, Mr. Andrews. If there is anything which is required of this Convention, in my opinion, it is to reform the jury system. It is recognized all over the State as an intolerable burden upon the citizens. The report of the Committee on Judiciary is certainly a vast improvement over the present section of the Constitution, and I would be in favor of going still farther in civil cases, and leaving it more to the Legislature, so that it would be somewhat flexible, and that the Legislature might reform the abuses. I am willing in criminal cases amounting to felony, to prescribe the old common law jury. In lower cases I do not see why the defendant should not waive a jury if he see proper. In civil cases I would be in favor of leaving it entirely to the judgment of the Legislature. I am aware that in this I may be radical, but I cannot see the danger of leaving the matter of trial by jury in civil cases—purely civil cases—to the wisdom and judgment of the Legislature as experience might inform them. Now what is the danger? If we provide in the Constitution—if we throw around guards and checks to protect the citizen in his life and his liberty—what danger is there in leaving to the Legislature the pure matter of practice in civil cases in the Courts?

Now, sir, we all know — lawyers know — that notwithstanding this declaration in all the bills of rights, that the trial by jury shall be inviolate forever, that it is not had in equity cases. In the case of a suit on a promissory note, or for money had or labor done amounting to three hundred dollars, the party who wishes to embarrass litigation and delay or obstruct justice, can demand a trial by jury, and the result is that twelve, or perhaps fifteen or twenty business men of the community are compelled to drop their vocations and dance attendance upon him in the Courts to determine a matter whether John Smith owes John Brown three hundred dollars on an ordinary contract. But if the question involves the settlement of a partnership amounting to half a million of dollars, John Smith has no right to demand that the citizens shall drop their business and flock to the Court House to sit upon the question and determine his rights; but he is informed that he has not, in this case, the right to a trial by jury because this is an equity case. And so you may go through the whole course of litigation. Notwithstanding we have abolished the forms between law and equity, notwithstanding all this distinction has been in a great measure wiped out, still, because the common law jury was not known in cases of equity, we prescribe this distinction without any reason whatever. I cannot see why one man, simply from pure stubbornness, should compel these twelve or twenty men to drop their business and dance attendance upon him at the Courts to decide a question on a promissory note, any more than in an action in equity. As I remarked, it is an intolerable hardship, and there is a wail coming up from citizens of every part of the State to relieve them from jury duty. Men get themselves upon the rolls of military companies, and fire companies, and resort to every expedient to avoid this tax upon them in reference to the jury trial. I am in favor of any process that will reduce this burden upon the citizen in civil cases, and I am in favor of a three-fourths verdict, because they will not then demand juries in a majority of cases. They do so now simply from the hope of getting one stubborn man out of the twelve to hang the jury. That is the reason of the demand; not because the Judge cannot administer justice just as well as the twelve men; not because three men cannot decide between John Smith and John Jones just as well as twelve men; but simply because this right of trial by jury is in the Constitution, and this stubborn man, who wishes to block the wheels of justice, says, "I demand a jury; I demand my constitutional right;" and the result is that the Court is compelled to grant that demand.

I am in favor of right here and now remedying this evil. I am in favor, as I say, of preserving the old common law jury in all cases of felony; in cases of misdemeanor to allow the defendant to waive a jury; and in all civil cases leaving it to the Legislature. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that we have the right in this Convention to claim the wisdom of ages. Not at all. Sir, you have got to leave to future legislation some discretion or you might as well abrogate republican government at once. We must leave some of these matters flexible. I am in favor of leaving the question of trial by jury, in purely civil cases, to the Legislature. I hope that the motion to substitute the old section, which has outlived its usefulness, will be voted down, and that we will amend this section according to the spirit of the times.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I understood the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Smith, to say that the people had already expressed their desires by the action taken in the Constitutional Convention of the State of Nevada, in which they adopted such a provision as is here submitted by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department. I do not understand that to be the constitutional provision in Nevada. It is very brief, and I will read it so that gentlemen can see what further encroachments we are now proposing to make upon an ancient and time-honored institution, and which, I respectfully suggest, without good cause, ought not to be tampered with. The Nevada Constitution provides:

"The trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law, and in civil cases if three fourths of the jurors agree upon a verdict it shall stand and have the same force and effect as a verdict by the whole jury; provided the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict, notwithstanding this position."

Therefore I say that the people of the State of Nevada, while they were willing to enter upon the experiment, were not willing to make it a fixed and final thing in their Constitution. It was an experiment they were about to try, and it was but an experiment. How does that resemble a provision like this that is reported by the Committee on Judiciary:

"SEC. 7. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate; but in civil actions and in cases of misdemeanor, where the punishment does not exceed six months' imprisonment or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both, three fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases not amounting to felony by the consent of both parties, in open Court expressed, and in civil cases by the consent of the parties signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil cases and in cases of misdemeanor the jury may consist of any number less than twelve that the parties may agree upon in open Court."

Mr. Chairman, I think all this discussion or suggestion in relation to the one obstinate man who hangs a jury is not well founded. How often it may have happened in the practice of the gentleman from Alameda that eleven jurors have been against him and one juror for him, or vice versa, I do not know, but to my mind the infallibility of the verdict of a jury rests upon its being unanimous. It is the unanimous conclusion of twelve good citizens that brands a man as a criminal. But why has not the man who is liable to be fined five hundred dollars or sent to the jail for six months, the same right to a trial by jury as the man who is to be sent to San Quentin. I do not see the distinction. It is a distinction without a difference, Mr. Chairman. "A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases not amounting to a felony," etc. I object to that because men are often overborne. We know that to be the case in San Francisco. It happens all the time, in the criminal Courts especially. They are sometimes run by the police and men are accused of crime, dragged into the cells, cajoled and tampered with until they do not know what to do, and they take the advice of a policeman or some shyster lawyer, and before they know it they have been convicted and gone to be a burden upon the county for six months. I see no reason why the old system which has stood so long should not be allowed to stand. I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Shasta, Mr. Andrews, will prevail.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I agree with the gentleman from Alameda that the jury system in this State has got to be an intolerable burden. As he said, two men may get into a dispute about a promissory note for three hundred dollars, and they will demand that twelve men be brought from their business to determine the question between them, whereas there may be several of these very jurymen who are damaged by reason of attendance upon the case, more than twice the amount in dispute. I have seen that myself. I do not suppose there is a lawyer in this house—or a gentleman in this house, be he lawyer or layman, but what has seen the same thing. I do not see that any of these amendments propose to remedy this evil as they should. While I am opposed to tinkering with the old Constitution any more than can possibly be helped, I think there can be a slight amendment made to it that would be an improvement. I go further, we should determine to take the old Constitution as the standard. I think it is a good Constitution, and I do not think it needs tinkering with but very little, and unless I can see a clearly defined improvement to be made in any particular instance, I will not vote for it. I would rather go back home without making any change in the Constitution at all, than to make a lot of changes that will make a worse Constitution or will set us at sea upon a system of experiment we know nothing about.

But, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that none of the evils as to the intolerable burdens of the jury system upon the citizens at large, has been reached by any of the amendments. Now if we would take the old section as moved by the gentleman from Shasta, Mr. Andrews, and add to it—and if it is in order I will offer the amendment now—but I believe it would not be in order—if it was in order I should offer an amendment to that old section, something to the effect that in civil cases, and in cases of misdemeanor, a jury might consist of any number less than twelve that the parties might agree upon in open Court, or that the Legislature might by law prescribe.

I am opposed to making this unyielding change of allowing a majority or three fourths of a jury to render a verdict in any case. I am opposed to trying that experiment in the Constitution. I would not object to another amendment allowing the Legislature to prescribe that a three-fourths majority of the jury may render a verdict. I would not be opposed to that because it is an experiment, and while I would not object to the Legislature trying that experiment, I am opposed to trying it in the Constitution. The legislative enactment, if found to work badly, could easily be changed, while the Constitution cannot be so easily altered. But I am in favor of the old Constitution with the amendment I have suggested, and I wish that the gentleman from Shasta would add that to his proposition, that in cases of misdemeanor and in all civil cases a jury may consist of any number less than twelve that the parties agree upon in open Court or that the Legislature may prescribe. That will relieve this burden of jury duty to a great extent. For instance, in all cases where the amount in dispute is less than one thousand dollars, the Legislature can provide that the jury shall consist of only six persons. I do think that in all cases where the amount involved is not very large, that parties should be compelled, if they will demand citizens to be drawn from their workshops and other places of business to settle their disputes, to leave their questions to a less number than twelve. Six, I say, is enough. I do not know but six would be enough in all cases of dispute in civil matters. But I say that unless the amount is very large, six men are just as competent to determine as twelve, and therefore I would leave it in the discretion of the Legislature to prescribe a jury of a less number than twelve.

It is well known to all lawyers that when we say "jury" in the Constitution, it means the old common law jury—the apostolic number of twelve. A jury of twelve men, that is what a jury is, and a jury prescribed by a Constitution, using no other explanation, means a jury of twelve men. I would like to have the Legislature have the discretionary power to fix the number at a less number, and if I have an opportunity —if these other amendments are voted down—I shall offer such an amendment to this proposition.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, has aptly denominated the present jury system as an intolerable burden. I concur most heartily, but I must say, at the same time, he has put it very mildly. It is more than an intolerable burden. It is a monument of superstition and folly. It is the sum of all villainies. It is very easy, Mr. Chairman, for my friend from San Francisco, living on an income of one hundred and thirty thousand dollars, to say that it is all right and has worked well, but if he was in the position of the poor farmers of Sacramento County, struggling to feed and clothe the little ones around him, and should be dragged off to serve on juries for weeks and weeks without compensation, he might change his opinion. We read of a hundred jurors being called for to attend our Courts here in Sacramento. A hundred men! Who are they? They are not so fortunate as my friend Colonel Barnes. They are poor men, dragged away from their business and labors, upon which depend the support of their little ones. They are forced to come here and sit for weeks on a pay of two dollars a day, and pay their own board. Their time is a total loss to them, and their families are in want and suffering. And I say again, that the gentleman from Alameda has put it very mildly when he says it is an intolerable burden.

In regard to the effects of this system. Don't every gentleman know that it obstructs justice? Here, now, for instance, under that beautiful system as perfected by modern civilization, if a man has formed or expressed an opinion he is disqualified, and must stand aside. Right here is the worst of the whole business. I have seen the Sheriff in the State of Nevada start out under instructions to summon every taxpayer in the county, without reserve, in a criminal case. Could anything be more monstrous, absurd, and outrageous than to summon every taxpayer in the county to serve on one jury? It was the second trial, after everybody had read the newspapers. The Court was well aware that under this system he would require all the people in the county. That case bankrupted the county! Is there any justice, is there any wisdom, in that? Where is the likeness of a policy that is so monstrous?—a policy that is in the interest of crime. I denounce it. I denounce the whole system of the common-law Grand Jury as in the interest of crime, and as being an obstruction to the administration of criminal justice.

Now, Mr. Chairman, are we here to frame an organic law in the interest of crime, or are we here to promote the interests of honest men—those who are the pillars of society; those who maintain the government; those who secure to us the blessings of law and order? I assert that this is our mission, and that we are not here to protect and defend the criminal or provide further obstructions in the way of the administration of criminal law that we have enacted.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: If I were called to select a topic upon which there has been more unmeaning declarations bestowed than any other, I should designate the trial by jury. This trial has been vigorously attacked in England by many great jurists. If there are questions of law and fact, every lawyer knows that it is not an intelligent tribunal; and with questions of law and fact there is scarcely one jury in ten that is competent for the trial. Again, sir, not only is it deficient in intelligence, but I maintain that the modern practice shows that it is even deficient in integrity; that there are five hundred corrupt jurors where there is one corrupt Judge.

I had occasion the other day to witness a case which illustrates this thing very fully. A widow lady sued a railroad company for killing her husband, by the negligence of an employé of the railroad company. The case was very fully tried and went to the jury; the jury went out, and they stood from the beginning eleven for the plaintiff and one for the defendant. Of course the jury was discharged, and the next day that one juryman appeared upon the streets with about the finest turnout in town.

I am in favor of taking from the jury the power it has, by ignorance or corruption, to defeat the administration of justice. When I resided South I used frequently to attend the Courts in New Orleans. There the party had a right to demand a jury, but whenever he did demand it, it was an understood thing that he had to pay costs. The result was that when he counted the cost he was incurring he generally submitted his cause to the intelligence and integrity of the Judge. Now I do not deny that occasionally it might be, where there is prejudice, a good thing. Occasionally it might be necessary for a party to protect himself from the prejudice of a Judge by calling a jury; but in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred a man that has a good case, a man that is accused of crime and is innocent, would prefer to be tried by one intelligent man, and he would be safer to take the judgment of one intelligent man than he would be to leave it to twelve men. It is not difficult among twelve men to find some of them who can be approached with improper motives and inducements. I read the other day in an English publication what seemed to be a clear definition of the jury trial, which said that the jury trial was a proceeding where one man was tried by the prejudice of twelve others, and that everybody knows is often the case. Therefore I say that the amendment proposed by the Committee on Judiciary is a sound one. It is one in the interest of justice. It is in the interest of the poor who are seeking justice, and who must encounter the rich antagonist upon the other side.

Again, in relation to the majority rule in cases of misdemeanor, I confess I have my doubts, because liberty appears as sweet to a man who has committed a misdemeanor as it is to a man who commits a higher offense. But there is this trouble: they are the large majority of cases; there are more hung juries, and then the State and county is put to the expense of a retrial, and perhaps two or three retrials. So it seems to me, that even allowing that there might be some evil arise in allowing three fourths of a jury to find a verdict, the evil would be less than the evils arising from bringing it down to a unanimous verdict of twelve.

Now, sir, the question is often raised here, what we should do in the way of amendment to the Constitution. I think we should do all that is necessary, and no more. Wherever and whenever it is ascertained that an institution has been abused, or does not answer the purpose for which it has been instituted, I say that we should correct the abuse and make it so that it will accomplish the purpose for which it is designed. This is precisely one of those cases. In civil cases a verdict of three fourths of the jury does tend to a perfect administration of justice, and I hold that it is shown by the experience of men, both in England and in this country, that it is a necessary improvement.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: While I am opposed to changes in our present Constitution, unless it would subserve some useful purpose and be productive of some good, yet at the same time we know that there are many changes necessary; changes demanded by the people; changes in reference to taxation and corporations. I believe that if there is one thing more than another that the people of this State desire, it is a change in the jury system. I know that as regards the people of Sierra, where I have resided so long, that they demand it. I have talked with a large number of the most intelligent men of that county, and I can say with safety that if it was put to a vote of the people of Sierra County there would be more than three fourths say that the jury system should be changed; that the concurrence of three fourths in civil cases ought to be sufficient to render a verdict. As regards the people of Nevada County, I do not know exactly how they feel in this matter; but I believe that they would approve the change. But in this matter we all represent the people of the State of California. While it is true that we are sent here from different localities, yet we are laboring, I trust, for the common good. And, sir, it seems to me, that it is an undeniable fact, and one that ought not to be disputed by any attorney upon this floor, that gross injustice has been done by the non-concurrence of juries. It is often the case in civil cases, that men come fifty, or sixty, or a hundred miles and more, sometimes two hundred, to the county seat, to attend a civil case. The result is that the jury disagrees, and a new trial is had. The people are put to extra expense in that matter. The litigants are put to extra expense in having a new trial, and it is one of the means by which justice is defeated. I say that it is a wrong to the people. It is unjust that such a system should prevail in this State longer.

There is no one has a greater love for the old common law and the institutions of our fathers than I have, yet I think it would be a wise departure if we take a departure in this case. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I believe that this amendment was necessary, and when I proposed it the committee agreed with me. I believed then and I believe now that this amendment was necessary. In the most trivial cause in the Courts and where it is tried before a Justice of the Peace, defendants, through their attorneys will, as a matter of course, ask for a jury of twelve—a constitutional jury, as it is termed—because they know their chances are better to hang the jury, and get one man at least to ride with them, and in the end it results in the acquittal of the defendant.

Now, sir, all will agree with me in saying that a change in the jury system is needed in that respect. I believe in the old law maxim, that it is better that ninety-nine guilty men should escape than one innocent man should suffer. I believe in throwing all the safeguards that can be thrown around cases involving life or liberty, but would do the same in civil cases as gentlemen have intimated. I say that all desire the full protection of the law; that the man who is charged with the simplest crime should have the full benefit of the law, but a conviction in capital cases is the most serious one. When a man's life is in question on his imprisonment for life then it is a serious question to deal with, and while it is true—and there is not an attorney upon this floor but will agree with me when I say that one juror in a capital case has often hung an entire jury to the detriment of justice—hung it on some quibble, or a feeling of sympathy, a feeling of prejudice towards the prosecution, or some fault of the prosecuting witnesses, or some matter that juries ought not to be governed by, something entirely foreign to the case, something entirely outside of his oath and his duty as a juror—this is often done to the detriment of justice; but while this has been done and may be done again, and while the guilty may escape, as I said before, I would not offer this provision to have a three-fourths verdict in a capital case—in cases involving imprisonment for life, or death.

But, sir, thousands of dollars could be saved to the people of the State in civil cases, as well as in cases of misdemeanor, if the law was changed in this respect—was to allow three fourths of a jury to find a verdict. And I say that the spirit of the times now demands a change. I say that when the people demand this change, and it can be made without sacrificing the interests of justice, it should be done. I think every member upon this floor should concur in a matter of this kind. What we desire is economy in the right direction, and I hold that this is the right direction. If instead of the system as it now stands, we had a provision that three fourths of a jury may render a verdict in all civil cases and in cases of misdemeanor, where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment, or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both, I am satisfied that it would be to the better interest of the people and to the interest of justice, and therefore I insist that the proposed change recommended by the Judiciary Committee should be adopted.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I understand that the immediate question is on the proposition to restore section seven of the Constitution as it is.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first proposition is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, to strike out the words, "cases of misdemeanor, where the punishment does not exceed six months' imprisonment or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both," and insert, "all criminal cases not punishable by death or imprisonment for life."

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: That will not, then, be the first question. I regret that, because in all these cases it does seem to me that we can arrive at a more speedy and intelligent conclusion if some one who offers a provision of the Constitution as it stands would offer it as an amendment to the proposed proposition, so that if a majority of the Convention are opposed to change, and should so vote, that would be the end of the whole matter. All the various propositions as to the best way to change would then be out of the question.

I believe, Mr. President, at the same time, that while that is the proper way of proceeding, that this is one of the few questions of magnitude where an enlightened public sentiment demands a radical change in the Constitution. I believe that if the whole bar and bench of this State were to testify as to their experience; if all who have been so unfortunate as to be parties litigant, certainly in civil cases, and if the taxpayers were called upon to testify upon this point, that nine tenths of the people of this State would demand a change. The gentleman from Los Angeles—I understood him to refer to some person who demanded a jury in a bad case. Perhaps it is no more than proper to say that it is almost a universal rule that where parties want a jury their cases are bad. There is no doubt but that it is better in a bad case to have a jury. A man demands a jury of twelve—and that is the only legal definition of a jury at common law—and must have the whole community summoned to draw from.

Again, it is an oppression upon the poor and the middle classes. It is an oppression upon all, but often it works as a special oppression in cases where suits are brought by the poor, who are worried out by the expense of litigation. So oppressive, indeed, is this, that it is a common thing for men to abandon their rights on account of the expense of maintaining them. Why, sir, I undertake to say that, if the intent is to arrive at the facts and a just conclusion, it is the judgment of bench and bar generally that this can be better accomplished before a Court than before a jury. Look at the manner in which jurors are selected. The plan is well known to you all. Well, you take jurors who have never served as jurors before. They listen to the case and hear the contradictory statements of the attorneys. Then comes a long complicated charge from the Court, and the jury are wholly unable to understand all these different questions of fact which are involved in an intricate case. I remember a case where the Court gave a charge to the jury something to this effect: "If the jury find this fact to be so and so, then, gentlemen of the jury, you will find a verdict for the plaintiff; or, if this other fact is so and so, you will find for the plaintiff; but notwithstanding that if this other fact should be in favor of the defendant, why, then, gentlemen, you will have to find out for yourselves what your verdict ought to be, for the Court don't know." I remember, too, a story told by a very distinguished gentleman, who said it came within his own knowledge. A jury had failed to agree, and one of them said that they stood six for the plaintiff and five for the defendant. They had all heard the testimony, and six of them insisted that the plaintiff ought to have a verdict, and five of them insisted the defendant ought to have a verdict. He was asked who was the twelfth juror, and he said: "Well, I was the twelfth juror." "Which party did you belong to?" "Well, I could not decide at all." The proposition here is to change to this extent, that in civil cases three fourths of the jury may render a verdict. Why should not that be so? Justice entitles one party or the other to a verdict. If three fourths, or a majority, decide everything else in our republican form of government, why should not a verdict rendered by three fourths of a jury be a fair verdict, especially with the Court to see whether there has been any wrong application of the law, and to grant a new trial, if necessary? The other system causes cases to be tried over and over again, until the party who has a just cause is worn out with litigation.

The object of this proposition is this: The jury system, which was in the first place the bulwark of liberty—some one has said—the reason for it, however, does not apply in this country. It was a bulwark against the oppressions of the Crown, and there are many ideas—and the Grand Jury is one of them—which we have got in this country that were of the utmost consequence to the English people from whom we got our laws.

Now, it is said, however, with reference to this criminal feature, as to criminal trials, that it is important that the jury should be unanimous in misdemeanors as in felony. That proposition is only plausible in one sense. In misdemeanors Courts do try cases without any jury at all, as in the Police Courts. You cannot try felonies that way. In capital cases and in felonies the defendant is entitled to more peremptory challenges than in misdemeanors. Throughout the whole system a difference in the degree of crime is recognized as reason for additional safeguards to the person. Besides, if in cases of misdemeanor a verdict was rendered by nine out of twelve, that fact undoubtedly would be taken into consideration by the Court in determining the measure of punishment. And really in most of these cases of misdemeanor it is the measure of punishment, and not the fact of the verdict, which is the essential thing to the defendant, for all misdemeanors are exceptions from that class of crimes which are known as felonies. The Court could remedy that in such a case.

But, while speaking upon this general question, I desire to say that I propose to support the amendment recommended by the Committee on Judiciary, with this exception. I shall take the first opportunity to present it. I will read it now simply as a part of my argument for a reason to vote against the other proposition. I think the proposition of the gentleman from Placer entirely too narrow. I understand it makes the exception of capital cases and cases of punishment by imprisonment for life in the State Prison. I shall, at the proper time, move to strike out all after the words "Section 7," in line one, to and including the word "verdict," in line four, and insert as follows: "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate; but in civil cases and in cases of misdemeanor three fourths of a jury may render a verdict." Then the section would read from the word "verdict" on as reported by the Committee on Judiciary. It would all read in this way:

"SEC. 7. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate; but in civil cases and in cases of misdemeanor three fourths of a jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases not amounting to a felony, by the consent of both parties, in open Court expressed, and in civil cases by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil cases, and cases of misdemeanor, the jury may consist of any number less than twelve that the parties may agree upon in open Court."

It will be seen that my amendment is only to a single point, in striking out the exception where the fine cannot exceed five hundred dollars, or the imprisonment six months, and making it apply to all misdemeanors.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The member from Sacramento, Mr. Caples, and the member from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, have presented arguments against the entire system; the one objecting that it is inconvenient, and the other that it is corrupt. Now, I would suggest to the gentleman from Sacramento that, although it may be a disadvantage to him and to his children to discharge these duties, yet, when we entered into the social compact, we bound ourselves to sacrifice our private wishes and predilections in all cases where it was necessary for the public good.

To the gentleman from Los Angeles I would say that the system which he denounces has been sanctioned by the experience and wisdom of all ages, from its institution until now. Now, sir, it is proposed that we should mutilate this system; that we should require but three fourths of a jury to render a verdict. You, in that course of action, destroy the character of the system; you deprive it of uniformity, and take from it a portion of its very essence. The human body may retain its vitality if robbed or deprived of a limb, but it loses its beauty and its harmony forever. So this system may survive under mutilation, but it has lost its character, and you enter upon an experiment entirely new. I say that when gentlemen declare that Judges are more reliable than juries, they are talking about an untried experiment, the results of which are uncertain. Throw the whole work of these trials upon the bench, and you will find in some cases prejudice, in some cases sympathy, and in some cases ignorance of the law; and you might get less justice than from twelve men who concur in a verdict, for when wrong the Judge will be radically wrong, and the wrong is incurable.

But, apart from the merits of the system, I find that there is the utmost diversity of sentiment in reference to this new departure. There is an underlying feeling in this Convention, I believe, in favor of the Constitution as it is, with such changes only as are indisputably compelled by the condition of the times and the welfare of the people. Beyond that, sir, if you advance a single step, you go in the wrong direction. It is far better, unless experience compels the change, to tread in the ancient paths. I honor the sentiment of this Convention, which I believe is fully indicated, of standing by the old Constitution so far as possible. I believe that those gentlemen who are desirous of removing every fragment of its now existence, of destroying its every plank, are going too far in the principle of reform—far beyond what the conservative spirit of the age demands; far beyond what the wisdom of our land would determine; far beyond what the exigencies of the times require. There are propositions in that old Constitution which are now attacked, which have at least the merit of having endured through long centuries, through generations of men. And now a change is proposed, the results of which are uncertain, the chances of which are imminently hazardous. But which is the change proposed? One favors the amendment of the committee, with a difference, and then favors the amendment of the committee, with another difference, and a third with a difference still other than the other two. Each man has his plan, and in the confusion and the multiplicity of amendments we have absolutely lost all idea of the right and true result. Now, sir, while every man should stand upon the platform of the Constitution in this regard, as consistent and conservative, they are utterly divided in their sentiments. Twenty propositions have been made, and others are yet to come. No two men agree, hardly. All want a change, one thinking the change should be in this point, and another in that one.

I say, sir, that unless the circumstances of the case demand a change let us stand by the Constitution as it is, and in this instance no change is needed by the people. I say that notwithstanding the invectives hurled against the jury system by the gentleman from Los Angeles and Sacramento, and by those who have been disappointed, it stands as a monument of human wisdom. As regards corruption, I do not know how placing this duty upon six or eight men, instead of twelve, will mend that. Gentlemen familiar with juries have frequently found, too, that the one juror, in cases of a disagreement, has been right, and has furthered the ends of justice, whether it involved the loss of a fortune or the sacrifice of a life.

Mr. Chairman, I prefer to stand where my fathers stood before me. I prefer to have my children stand where I stand. I prefer to stand by this system which has been our safeguard, and in all matters to remain as we are, except in needful cases.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I do not want to make a spread-eagle speech here, or occupy but a little time, but I would like to say a few words in regard to this section. "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties, in all civil cases, in the manner to be prescribed by law." That section is in every Constitution, in every State in this Union, and has been there for one hundred years, and it should be inviolate forever. I have seen the benefit of that section in San Francisco, and it was this: There was a party arrested in that city for rioting, where there was no man that was arrested that was any more of a rioter than any one of you present in this hall. A jury was summoned to try these rioters. What was the result? That jury was all men who were lumber merchants, door, window, and sash makers, from the very part of the city where there had been a fire that destroyed a good deal of property. The jury was picked from that quarter, and the result was that every man but one were in favor of convicting these men of rioting. That one man in twelve saved these men from going to the county jail for six months. For that reason, as one, I am in favor of standing by the old Constitution, and that section. Many lawyers who are present now, from the City and County of San Francisco, particularly, were, no doubt, sent here for the express purpose of making the change in that section. No doubt they will make the change, too. There are seventy-five lawyers in this body—a majority of this Convention. They have told us already they possessed the brains of this Convention. Here is a section that was referred to the Committee on Bill of Rights, and the Judiciary Committee has taken that power from them, and have taken it among themselves to change that clause. Now I shall praise the bridge that has carried me over safe, and I hope that section will be retained and will be inviolate forever; and I hope every reasonable and sensible delegate on this floor will do the same. I thank you kindly for your attention.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am inclined to think that certain gentlemen upon this floor are mistaken about the people not wishing any changes in the Constitution as it now stands, and with regard to their wishing no change in the Constitution as regards the jury system in this State. Now, it does seem passingly strange that it should be taken for granted here upon this floor that it is almost an outrage to propose any change in the Constitution of this State as it stands, especially when we notice and read the law under which this Convention is acting. We know that the Convention to a great extent was to revise, change, and make a new Constitution. I am one of those that believe in being cautious in reaching forward to matters that are new, and I am opposed to laying violent hands upon the sacred principles that are found in the old Constitution. But when public sentiment is expressed, and when it is known that certain changes are demanded as a matter of necessity, then we should attend to the wishes of the people of this State. Now, in the part of the country that I came from, this subject was discussed; this whole jury question was discussed, and the people there were decidedly in favor of a change in the jury system; decidedly so. I am under the impression that the same sentiment prevails throughout the State to a great extent. Gentlemen will hear stated upon the floor that there is nothing of the kind desired. It is desired! It has been discussed, and the defects, as the people consider, of the jury system, have been pointed out. Now, I would simply say, without entering into legal questions upon the subject, that I am convinced that the report as made by the Committee on Judiciary in this case covers just about the ground that my constituents wish, and I think the great body of the people of this State demand.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: There is a feature about this section reported by the Committee on Judiciary that I do not like a great deal. It allows three fourths of a jury to return a verdict. I am opposed to this seven to eight business. Now and then it is very agreeable to have the eight, but there might come a time when our side won't be satisfied with the eight. I think that a verdict to have any dignity should be a full verdict of the jury. I do not think twelve men should be called to determine whether John Jones is guilty of striking John Brown over the nose. I think a less number should certainly be allowed to determine in that class of cases. But, sir, a verdict, to be a verdict, it seems to me, ought to be the unanimous decision of the jury. I am opposed to this eight to seven business. I would like to see a change made so that misdemeanors could be tried by less than twelve, or by some number agreed upon. It is the general opinion of the public that twelve men should not be dragged into Court upon these cases of misdemeanor or civil suits involving fifty or one hundred dollars. They recognize the fact that justice demands the attendance of citizens upon the Courts, but a less number than twelve is sufficient to decide on these cases of misdemeanor and minor cases. There is where the people have growled. They are always satisfied with a verdict that is rendered by a full jury. I think if we make a change in the old Constitution, so as to allow a less number than twelve to be called in cases of this kind, we will meet the demand of the people, but if we change it so that three fourths of a jury may find a verdict we will not really meet the approval of the people, because we know that the eight to seven business never can become satisfactory.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I do not wish to occupy the time of the committee, but inasmuch as the question has arisen as to whether there is any demand for a change in the jury system, I think I should say a word in regard to the feeling in my own county. It seems to me that the fact that there are so many in this Convention who have already expressed themselves in favor of a change, coming as we have direct from the people, where these matters have been fully discussed, is pretty good evidence that the change is demanded, if not by the majority of the people, at least by a very large minority. I know in my own county the question was discussed quite freely, and I failed to find any who were not in favor of some change whereby justice could be arrived at more speedily and more correctly. It was the unanimous feeling in all parts of the county that the present jury system did not accomplish what it ought to, and that some change should be made in the direction of improvement. For that reason I am opposed to the amendment, as offered by the gentleman from Shasta, Mr. Andrews, and I am in favor of the amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, to except those cases where the punishment is death or imprisonment for life, and compel a unanimous verdict of twelve men, but in other cases allow the verdict of a jury to be determined by less than that number. I say this much because I want to speak the sentiment of the people that sent me here. I believe we shall not do what the people expect if we do not make change.

REPORT FROM THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL.

THE PRESIDENT. I have here a report from the Adjutant-General in response to a resolution of this Convention, which the Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read the report as follows:

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS, STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, SACRAMENTO, November 4th, 1878.

To the President and members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your Secretary having transmitted the following resolution passed by your honorable body on the second instant:

"That the Adjutant-General be requested to give the number of killed, wounded, and missing of the militia since the organization of the National Guard of this State."

I have the honor to state in reply, that as the militia includes all the male inhabitants between the ages of eighteen and forty five not exempted by law from military service, and as the time stated in the resolution embraces a period of twenty-eight years, the number is much larger than perhaps occurred to the gentleman that proposed the resolution.

The records of this office only show casualties in the organized portion of the militia

I have examined the rolls of the California Cavalry Battalion, consisting of four hundred officers and men, which left San Francisco on the twenty-first of March, eighteen hundred and sixty three, to join the army of the Potomac, and served until the close of the war, and find the following casualties:

Killed, died of wounds, and in prison	70
Wounded	55
Missing	13

As no trace of the latter have been found, it is fair to presume that they died soldiers' deaths, and lie "unknown" in battle trenches.

The following shows the casualties in the California Hundred:

Killed, died of wounds, and in prison	13
Wounded	5

The number discharged in the above commands for disability was thirty-five. Of the casualties mentioned, ten were commissioned officers, two of whom—Captain Charles Eigenbrodt and Captain J. Sewall Reed—were killed.

California also furnished eight infantry regiments, two cavalry regiments, one battalion of mountaineers, one battalion native cavalry, besides a large number who went East to serve in both armies, in all not less than twenty thousand men; and as it is conceded that Californians have done their duty in every emergency and every peril, from the fall of Baker at Ball's Bluff to the close of the war, the casualties among them must have been an average percentage of the half a million of men who fell on both sides.

In the ranks of the California National Guard at the present time are many of the survivors.

Colonel Smedberg, who commands the Second Infantry Regiment, Second Brigade, National Guard, lost a leg in battle. Major Peirce, of the same regiment, is now slowly recovering from an attack of sickness, the result of wounds received in battle.

The First Cavalry Battalion is commanded by a veteran soldier, Major Orton, as are several of the infantry companies.

Of the eleven members of the staff of the Second Brigade, six are soldiers of the war, one of whom, Major Kinne, was Assistant Adjutant-General of the regular Brigade of Cavalry, under General Sheridan.

Five out of nine of the Commanders of unattached companies have seen service, one of whom, the Commander of the Sacramento Light Artillery, served in the artillery under General Jubal Early, and since the war has served a term in the Fourth United States Artillery.

A similar proportion as above, will, I think, hold throughout the National Guard. I am not aware how many of them were wounded in the service, but if it is absolutely necessary for the Convention to know, I shall, to the best of my ability, endeavor to inform it, at as early an opportunity as possible, together with the casualties of the Indian wars.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. F. WALSH,
Adjutant-General.

MR. BARNES. I move that the report lie on the table and be printed.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I hope that it will not be printed. It was evidently intended for a joke, and I hope that it will not be printed.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: It is not intended as a jest. Perhaps the gentleman who introduced it intended it in some way to reflect upon the military, and I presume it was so, because other gentlemen this morning laid on my desk a wooden block entitled, "a list of the killed, wounded, and missing." I was sorry to find it here; sorry to see that any gentleman would part with his brains for my benefit. [Laughter.] I think the report should be printed in connection with the subject which is soon to come up for discussion. I make that motion in all seriousness as Chairman of the committee.

THE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection it will be printed. The Chair hears no objection.

NOTICE.

MR. NOEL. Mr. President: I desire to give notice that on to-morrow I will move to strike out rule seven.

REPORT.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I ask leave to present a supplementary report from the Committee on Military Affairs, signed by a majority of the committee, and ask that it be printed with the other report.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

THE SECRETARY read as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT: We, the undersigned, a majority of your Committee on Military Affairs, beg leave to report the following additional section for insertion in the article on militia, in the new Constitution:

SECTION —. Except in case of war or insurrection, the Legislature shall not authorize to be expended, or appropriated, more than twenty-five thousand dollars in any one year for organizing and disciplining the militia, which shall include all salaries, all rents, and disbursements of every character relating to the militia of the State, and care of the arms belonging to the State. Nor shall the number of uniformed militia in the State exceed ten companies of one hundred and twenty men rank and file each; provided, that at the expiration of ten years from the time of the adoption of this Constitution, the Legislature shall have the power, notwithstanding this section, to increase the allowance hereby made, and the number of uniformed militia hereby allowed.

JOHN C. STEDMAN,
E. V. SMITH,
J. C. BROWN,
WM. S. MOFFAT,
THOS. H. ESTEY,
HAMLET DAVIS.

THE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection the report will lie on the table and be printed. The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering article one, the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

So ordered.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered to section seven. The first question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale, to strike out a portion of the section, and insert the proposed amendment of Mr. Hale:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions and in all criminal cases not punishable by death or imprisonment for life, three fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases not amounting to felony, by the consent of both parties, in open Court expressed, and in civil cases by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil cases, and in cases of misdemeanor, the jury may consist of any number less than twelve that the parties may agree upon in open Court."

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. President: Before a vote is taken I desire to say something in support of the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, as to the sections which they have reported. I am very much gratified to see the feeling manifested here by so large a number of the members to stand by the old landmarks, and only to depart from them in cases of urgent necessity. Upon the general proposition I heartily concur and intend to act. It seems to me, however, that this is one of the cases where there should be a departure to some extent, and I think to the extent that the committee have gone.

Section seven, as reported by the Judiciary Committee, presents several distinct propositions. They were put in that shape by the committee in order that gentlemen might vote for one and against another, according to their sentiments and convictions of right. Several distinct propositions are involved. The old Constitution reserves the entire right of trial by jury in all cases, civil and criminal, unless in civil cases the parties themselves waive it. Independent of any consent, the general right of trial by jury in all cases, civil or criminal, is preserved. That is, in all cases considered by the Courts in which that right exists at common law.

The report of the committee preserves that right of trial by jury inviolate in all cases—all felony cases—and in all cases of misdemeanor, except a limited class of cases specified in section seven, and with this exception there is no alteration at all in the workings of the old Constitution. The change which is produced here is in the lower classes of crimes and civil cases, authorizing three fourths of the jury to render a verdict.

The proposition which I desire first to have considered by the Convention is whether it is advisable to change the old system, and instead of requiring in civil cases a unanimity of the jury, to allow three fourths of the jury to render a verdict. Now, in the old common law system of juries there were many things which have not existed for many years. We should not refuse to advance towards desirable reform simply because it makes a change, because our present jury system is a vast change from that derived from the common law. For instance, juries originally were summoned by the Sheriff. Now we have abandoned that system and have a different one, and every person admits that this was a desirable reform. Originally jurors were drawn from the immediate vicinity of the crime, and were therefore poorly qualified because they knew all about it. Now we draw them from the body of the county. It is considered a disadvantage that a juror comes from the vicinage. So, under the old system the jury rendered a verdict upon their private knowledge of the facts, independent of the evidence in the case. That is no longer admissible for a moment, and the juror who admits that he knows any of the facts is excluded from the jury; so there is a very wide departure. So, under the old system the jury were to be kept together without meat or drink, or fire, or anything of that kind. Here we have a very wide departure. Under the old common law system if a juror took a glass of water while the jury was out, the Court would set the verdict aside. We have made a very useful reform in that respect, and no such tomfoolery would be tolerated at the present day; and the jury are furnished with water, and in many instances with meat and drink, and it is the common custom to allow the jury to have all that nature demands. It was the custom in England, as everybody knows, that if the jury had not brought in their verdict at the time the Judges were ready to leave the town to visit another town to which their duties called them, the jury were not discharged, but were loaded up in a cart and carried along with the Judges to a neighboring town, and kept together there without meat and drink by the Court until they agreed upon a verdict. Nobody, of course, defends any such absurdity as that, and yet that is one of the glorious things of the common law jury system. All these things have gone away before the modern civilization.

The question is, is this an advisable reform; that instead of requiring a unanimity of the jury, we shall allow nine out of the twelve to make the verdict? I think it is, for several reasons, which I shall briefly present to the committee. I have very hastily examined the law on this subject during the recess, and I find Cooley, in his edition of Blackstone, proceeds to say that this system of requiring a unanimous verdict of twelve men was the quiet outgrowth of the dark ages, as obscure as any portion of the English law, and yet, because we have had it, must we continue to have it.

Now, in criminal cases we have not sought here to change that practice of unanimity of juries, because there are certain principles surrounding a criminal action in this particular that are not present in civil cases. Everything leans to the side of mercy in our system. Give the accused the benefit of every doubt; and if there is any rational doubt upon the mind of any one of the twelve jurors, the Court instructs him to give the benefit of that doubt to the prisoner. But when you come to civil cases, the rule is directly contrary, as every lawyer knows. There the cases are decided upon preponderance of evidence merely, upon a mere probability, a reasonable probability as to which side is right.

Now in that kind of cases—civil cases—why is it that this tribunal which we call a jury, should not conduct its business and be organized like other smaller functionaries? Why is it that in all arbitrations two out of three may decide? Why is it that in all cases submitted to commissioners, and everything of that kind, while all act, the majority decide and determine? Why is it that in Courts composed of several Judges, the majority always control and determine the judgment, and I think it is a very singular case—this over all the others—that some should insist that a jury of twelve men shall be unanimous, and it only arose and existed in the English system; it never was the law of juries in any other country but England, because juries have existed in other countries, but in England alone did this principle prevail.

Now, I say it is time for us to depart from this, as we have from many other principles affecting juries under the common law system. I say we should depart from it in this country for good reasons; because in civil cases the principle of unanimity has not worked well. It is time to depart from it. It has not worked well from the fact that, as every gentleman knows, one unreasonable man in a case can prevent a verdict from being rendered; one bad man in a case can prevent a verdict from being rendered; and I suppose it is hardly possible once in a thousand cases, that the one man would be right and all the others wrong. It has been my experience in a quarter of a century's practice in the State of California, in the trial of a long jury case, where I believed I was right, working diligently to obtain a verdict, to have a man whisper in my ear, "You will get no verdict." "Why?" "Because one of the men on that jury is a friend to one of the parties, and you will never get him to consent." How did he get there? No lawyer can tell every man who comes on the jury. No lawyer can tell what their relations are to the parties, especially in the large cities where the jurors are strangers to us in most instances; and if one of the parties can select on the jury a friend, that one man can hang the jury. And every man knows there are instances where men have hung around the Sheriff's office for the very purpose of being put on juries, and these are the very men that will prevent a verdict from being rendered when it is to their interest to do so.

Why not have nine men, so that when corrupt jurors, and partial jurors, get on the jury they will not be allowed to control the verdict? If men want to corrupt a jury, it is easier to corrupt one man than it is to corrupt three or four. If we allow nine men to render a verdict, then the man who seeks to corrupt the fountain of justice and destroy the purity of it, has got to bribe four men. Therefore, the weight of reasoning, I say, is in favor of the nine men, in civil cases and in the lower classes of misdemeanors. I know of no sound reasoning why twelve men should be required to agree. You might just as well say that a Court of five men shall be compelled to render a unanimous decision. We know that of the five Judges of the Supreme Court, three render decisions. Why not? Why not require them to be unanimous? They render decisions on great questions of law, sometimes great constitutional questions, sometimes involving whole classes of cases and millions of dollars. Why require a jury to be unanimous and not the Supreme Court? Why not allow nine men to render a verdict? Are not nine men, who have heard the evidence and deliberated upon it, capable of rendering a just and fair verdict?

If the jury does not agree, they are locked up and confined in a room. Now, is there anything rational in the idea of shutting men up to deliberate two or three hours to compel them to agree—to force them, or a portion of them, to surrender their convictions? If they do not agree, the Judge directs the Sheriff to lock them up in a room and let them remain there, and then it is a question, not of honest conviction, but it is a question of who can stand it the longest. The time for reasoning has passed, and the minority is to be coerced into an agreement by the majority. I say there is nothing rational in it. It is not worthy of a place in an enlightened system of jurisprudence. When we say that nine men may render a verdict, after they have deliberated upon the case, heard the evidence, and listened to the charge of the Judge, that is as far as we ought to go. We should not, in this class of cases, require a unanimous verdict. I think this system should be adopted in cases of misdemeanors.

In regard to the other portions of this section, I can see no reason why it should not be adopted; why a jury should not be waived in criminal cases not amounting to felony, in open Court expressed. I do not see why not. Of course, in all civil cases, the parties themselves should have the right to waive a jury, and that is all this section means. I, therefore, submit to this Convention that the old Constitution, while in all the main features is exceedingly good, there is no reason why it should not be reformed and altered in this respect. It is not a simple innovation, but a sound, rational reform.

MR. ANDREWS. I raise the point of order that the question is on the amendment to the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I wish to make a remark or two with reference to this proposed change. I will not detain the Convention long. Now, as to the reasons given in favor of this change. The reasoning of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, is that because many changes have been made in the jury system in the past, therefore this change should be made now. That is about the reasoning, for everything must have a beginning, and when you have reached a state of perfection, satisfactory to the country, is there any reason why it should be changed any further? That is about the logic of the gentleman, that you must change a thing until you get it perfect, and then change it in order to spoil it. I say when you have got a law as perfect as you can get it, you had better let it alone, and not tamper with it.

Then another reason urged against the change is, that there may be one bad man on a jury, and he may affect the result. That he may alter—or rather that he may prevent any result. Now, the one bad man is to be found in every department of our government, and if that is a reason for change in the jury system it is also a reason for changing the entire government. The whole government is rotten if that one bad man is any reason for a change. President Hayes occupies his seat to-day by reason of the action of one bad man. We might defeat our republican form of government on the same grounds. Your Honor occupies the chair to-day—was it bad men that put you there? Is there any reason in this? What examples are these that we propose to set before the people? It is mere sophistry to say that because you can point out a single error in the system, that for that reason you must destroy it. There is nothing in such talk. If the gentleman can suggest another system to replace this, and give us any assurance that it will not be subject to the same criticisms, then it will be time enough to talk about change. Unless they can find a system free from errors—which I am sure theirs is not—I see no reason why the present system should be changed. It has worked well. It is not perfect, and I presume there is no gentleman here who presumes to attain perfection in anything. The book of experience is a very good thing for us to be guided by.

Now this one man, this one bad man, seems to be a terror in this jury system. He is the man who is going to make us abolish the system that has been indorsed by every State in this Union as the mainstay of liberty. Now, how is it that there is such a wonderful unanimity in all the Constitutions upon this subject if it is such a bad system? How is it that it has overridden all criticism from time immemorial down to the present, if it was such a bad system? They must have had some wonderfully poor legislators in England, and in the other States of this Union, if it has stood the test so long; and now that we can only point to one thing, and that is that you may get a bad man on the jury. We have tested this bad man business, and it is not a new question. May it not arise in the system which it is proposed to adopt just as readily as now, is a question for us to take into serious consideration.

If nine men out of twelve render a verdict, may not one man turn the scale as well as now. Surely, it seems to me that corruption can creep into the jury box under that proposed system just as easily as under the present one. Another thing; it is not for me at this late day to speak in praise of the system, because it has already been lauded as highly as it deserves, but it has always been the great balancing power between all classes. In England, the poor demand it; the middle classes demand it; it is a beneficent thing to them, and why? Because it protects them from the encroachments of the rich and powerful. So it is regarded in the United States, as a protection to the poorer classes in society against the encroachment of the rich and powerful. I believe it is yet the great protecting power in this land behind which the poor and the weak can shield themselves from oppression in all its forms. It may be, and at no very distant day, the protection of the rich, for I believe from the looks of political corruption that it will be the rich pretty soon who will be looking for protection instead of the poor, and the gentlemen who want to do away with this jury system may regret it at no very distant day.

I claim that the jury system has worked well in this State, and it is a very rare occurrence that the verdict of twelve men is wrong. It is true that it may prove that the provisions of the criminal law are too lenient, I judge they are, by the opinions expressed here by a number of gentlemen, but from what I can learn some of these gentlemen know very little about the business they are talking so glibly about. I should like to know what the medical profession know about this business? I should like to know what the farmer who occasionally goes into Court, knows about this business? He knows a great deal. I believe there are men who know something besides lawyers. I am not one of those. I know there are other men who know a great deal. When I speak about men of the medical profession I have no reference to the gentleman from Sacramento, Dr. Caples, because I never should take him to be a doctor in the world; I hadn't the remotest idea that he was a doctor; I made no personal reference to him, but mentioned that profession for the purpose of illustration. [Laughter.]

To go back to the question, I say the jury system has worked well. I do not support it because it is perfect, nor do I condemn it because now and then a criminal escapes, but I support it because it comes to us recommended by the ablest law writers in the world, and I prefer to act upon the judgment of those great authorities than to be guided by the bare assertion of any man or any set of men on this floor, however learned he may be, because if there is anything in practice, the weight of authority is in favor of leaving the jury system just as it is.

This matter of its being an inconvenience to allow the jury system to remain as it is, is a novel reason. Really a novel argument. Don't the gentleman know that he cannot live in civilized society without being loaded down at times with inconveniences? There is no way to get rid of these inconveniences but to leave and go way off by ourselves somewhere, and that we don't like to do. This thing of objecting to the system because the farmer may have to leave his plow and go and help settle a dispute between neighbors is no objection at all. It is his duty. These disputes must be settled in some way. I will not descend into details now, but will get through in a moment.

I say these are no reasons at all why the jury system should be changed. You cannot hope to make a system that will not carry with it these inconveniences. And if we change the system on account of these inconveniences will we get rid of them? Three farmers will be left out if we make the jury to consist of nine, they are left out of the verdict if they won't agree with the majority, but they are still there—still detained on the jury. Do you not by this proposed system, as well as by the old, drag twelve farmers from the plow to the Court House? There is nothing in that argument at all. You must have twelve men, and it will not relieve the farmer from the burden in any particular. The same number of men must come to the Court House, and the same time will be occupied in selecting a jury as under the old system.

Now this is the first grand assault upon the jury system. There will be another shortly, and very soon you will destroy it if this one step does not destroy it. I think this one attack, if it shall prove successful, will virtually destroy the system, so there will be nothing left of it worth attacking. If it is not destroyed by this movement probably other assaults will be made. It may be that this one will accomplish its ruin entirely. Perhaps that may be desirable in order that criminals—those accused of crime—may be more readily reached. We will get down to the one-man system, the one-man power, by and by, and leave the jury out altogether. How would that work? Then get your whipping-post established along with this system; then let the corporations come in and put a man on the bench that suits them, with their overshadowing power which has been talked about, and they can readily accomplish whatever they may desire. They can punish their enemies and reward their friends. Let them elect their Judges in every district in the State; let them establish their whipping-posts throughout the State, and then you will hear a howl all over the United States.

I say this jury system is a protection now to the poor, and if you destroy it—encroach upon it, you will in effect destroy it—and then you can easily see the result, if there is such a power in the State as some people claim there is. Better let it alone. Every tinker is not a tinsmith. But it is said the people demand this change. I deny it. I say that when a campaign is progressing we hear nothing but the promises of the demagogues for reform—men who have nothing to recommend them to the people but their promises of reform. That is what gentlemen hear. There is no cry on the part of the people for a change in the jury system; and if you do make an attack upon it—if you put in your whipping-post clause—you will find out when this Constitution is submitted to the people whether they want any such radical change or not.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: For my part I don't see any connection between the lash and whipping-post and the jury system, as we are considering it at this time.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I will explain the connection. When you make a Constitution, we look at the whole system. This is part of a system. The whipping-post overshadows and invades the jury system, destroys it, and then this power which the gentlemen talk about can elect their Judges in the State, and if they can do that the whipping-post will come in very convenient.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I don't understand, sir, that it is the intention to abolish the jury system. As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the intention is to change the jury system, in order to answer the needs and demands of the present day. Now, Mr. Chairman, I don't consider that it is an argument in favor of this change that the present jury system is fraught with inconveniences, because, as the gentleman from Inyo, Mr. Reddy, properly says, if you have a jury of twelve men and you allow nine of them to render a verdict, you have the same inconveniences. The same number must sit on the jury during the progress of the trial; the same number must be summoned into Court; the same number of persons must sit in the jury box; the same number of persons must pass upon the question at issue; therefore, as far as the question of inconvenience of the system is concerned, the inconvenience remains just the same. It seems to me, as has been very aptly said on this floor, the time is at hand when three fourths of the jury should be allowed to render a verdict in civil cases, especially in the larger cities of the land. It is a well-known fact how easy it is for the wealthy upon one side, for the corporations, and for the monopolists, when pitted against a poor man, to demand a jury trial, and to manipulate the thing and make the expenses in such a degree that it is virtually a denial of justice to the poor man. How easy it is to purchase one man out of twelve. Every attorney practicing in the large municipalities of the country, not only in the State of California but all over the United States, knows very well how easy it is to place one man in the jury box who is susceptible of being purchased, and how often one man out of twelve is purchased, causing three or four, and in some cases eight or ten, trials of one case. These repetitions of trials work no hardship upon the wealthy of the country. It is no hardship upon the monopolies of the country; it is no hardship upon the corporation power of the country; but it is a hardship upon the poor men of the country, who are obliged to pay their hard-earned money for the purpose of bringing their cases before the juries.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this Convention will extend this boon to the people of this State, because I know as a positive fact that the people of the State of California do request this Convention, in civil actions, to allow three fourths of the jury to render a verdict. I say, Mr. Chairman, in all truth and candor, I say, knowing the facts to be as I state them to be, that the people demand that in civil cases three fourths of the jury be allowed to render a verdict.

It may not have been so in the olden days. It may not have been so when this jury system was first called into operation; but we must take times as they are. Take the condition of things as they exist, and the times as they are, and the condition of things as it exists—is that one man can be purchased, or two men can be purchased; and oftentimes, I might say a majority of cases, where a man has a good case and the jury disagrees, it is not a disagreement of a majority of those who sit on the jury, but it is that one man, or it is two men. And it does seem to indicate that when one man stands out against eleven men, or two men against ten men, that it is occasioned by something else other than the mere facts in the case.

Now, Mr. Chairman, briefly, as I understand the jury, they are the judges of the facts. The Court lays down the law in civil cases and the jury are the judges of the facts. If five Judges sit on the Supreme bench, any three of them may render a verdict, which is absolute in its effect throughout the length and breadth of the State. Then why cannot nine jurymen out of twelve render a verdict which shall have a binding force and effect. In the case of arbiters, where there are three men chosen, two of them always render a verdict.

I am opposed to abolishing the rule in criminal cases, but in civil cases I hope this Convention will consider it as the wish of the people that three fourths of the jury be allowed to render a verdict, because that is the desire of the people. They desire to have this Convention frame a provision in the Constitution allowing three fourths of the jury to render a verdict, as a matter of right and justice.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman who last spoke comes pretty nearly expressing the views I entertain on this subject. Now, as a matter of course, if we insert a provision in this Constitution, that provision becomes the law, and is not susceptible of change, except in the way provided in the Constitution itself, and therefore in dealing with the jury system, which is a conservative system, we should lay our hands upon it very lightly, unless we find some other system which suggests itself to the minds of the people in some degree preferable to the one we have.

Now, this jury system is an old one to start with, as has been already said. It has stood the tests of hundreds of years, and has formed a part of the great common law which we brought with us from England. It was thought at one time to be a great privilege to be tried by one's peers, brought from the vicinage. We have incorporated into our law only such provisions as are adapted to the circumstances of our people. We have not incorporated the whole common law of England. We have American common law, a common law adapted to our system of government, and it is that system of common law which we have imported into this country. A part of that system is the trial by a jury of twelve men; and another part of it is that they shall be unanimous in their verdict. Thus far we have imported the common law system into this country. Now, let us see what some eminent men think of this divided jury system. Blackstone, in his Commentaries, says:

"If Sparta, Carthage, and Rome lost their liberties, it must be recollected that Sparta, Carthage, and Rome had not the jury system."

That is what he says about it. The gentleman from Sacramento is very severe in his censure of the jury system. I do not believe in any of these extreme views. But, sir, inasmuch as this jury system has commended itself to the minds of statesmen and scholars for centuries; inasmuch as it has been imported into the country to form a part of our common law, I do say this, that we should touch it very lightly, and we should not change it unless we can change it for the better.

There are some things that can be changed, but they do not interfere with its conservative force. They do not interfere with any of the rich legacies that we have received. If you fix the salaries of your officers, that does not interfere with any great cardinal principle. But attack the jury system, and you are attacking a system which forms a part of our common law. And so in framing the Constitution of the United States it seems that they, as far as your Federal Courts are concerned, have adopted a provision that even for a sum as low as twenty dollars, the jury shall be preserved.

Now, sir, there are some things, as a matter of course, that cannot be submitted to a jury, and why? Because it requires a nice distinction—there are nice distinctions to be drawn, and it is not adapted to a jury trial; but when it comes to matters of fact, I think it should be different. If you put twelve men on a panel to investigate as to certain facts, I think they will be more apt to get at the facts of the case than one man who has made the law a specialty. These twelve men, drawn from different vocations, following different professions, if they agree they will pretty generally agree upon the facts, provided, of course, that their verdict is not a corrupt one. And, although the jury system has been animadverted upon, yet it is not the fault of the system itself, but from frauds upon the system.

The question comes up whether these proposed amendments are any better than the present jury system. As I understand this amendment it is that in small cases—cases of misdemeanor—three fourths of the jury may render a verdict. Then the Court will instruct the jury to that effect, that nine of them, if they believe the man to be innocent, they can find a verdict to that effect. While three men may believe him guilty, yet, under this system, nine men administer the criminal law and find him innocent. This is criminal law and civil law mixed up together.

All civil cases depend upon the weight of probabilities. Is it more probable that that man knows more than the others. It is a question of probabilities. In criminal cases it is not so. You must believe a man to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Now the same law is to be applied to both civil and criminal cases of the grade of misdemeanor. It is the principle for which we are contending. Why make this change? So far as the weight of probabilities is concerned, it is very true that nine men would be more apt to be right than three. I can see some sense in that argument so far as the weight of probabilities is concerned.

Now I think the provision in the Nevada Constitution a very good one.

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law; and in civil cases if three fourths of the jurors agree upon a verdict, it shall stand and have the same force and effect as a verdict by the whole jury; provided, the Legislature, by a law passed by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict, notwithstanding this provision."

That provides that in civil cases three fourths of a jury may render a verdict. I think we might try it, but it should be left somewhat elastic, so that if it should be found not to work well the Legislature would have the power, by a majority of all the members elected, to repeal it and restore the old order of things. But, as I said before, if we place an iron-bound provision in the Constitution, we can only get rid of it through amendment in the manner provided for in the Constitution itself, and we are adopting this Constitution not only for the present generation but for posterity, and it seems to me that we should be conservative in this respect; and so far as these heirlooms are concerned which form a part of the common law, in which great principles are at stake, we should touch them with reverent hands, and only change them when we are perfectly sure that the change will be for the better.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it would be entirely proper to adopt a provision something like that in the Nevada Constitution, giving the Legislature the right to change, by a majority vote of all the members elected, the new law, and restoring the old.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I should have preferred that a vote would have been taken without debate on the proposition of the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale, to strike out and insert "in all cases except where the punishment is death or imprisonment for life," because I think the whole debate was unnecessary and consumed the time. But since gentlemen have gone on and expressed their views on the main proposition, I feel it incumbent on me to give my views.

We are establishing now a Bill of Rights, or, as some gentlemen have wrongfully called it, a "declaration of rights." I like the old form the best, as I like the old jury system the best. It was one of those rights that entered into and became one of the fundamental rights obtained at the time the charter was granted. Now we should meddle with this jury system with extreme caution and extreme care. If we are going to tamper with this we should go ahead and change the complexion of the whole Bill of Rights. It is one of those things dear to the people. I know it. I believe it.

It is true that gentlemen have argued from the doctrine of convenience and expediency. But they do not argue from the doctrine of the light of experience as they ought to do. We know that amidst all the changes and amidst all the innovations of centuries, the jury system has stood firmly rooted in the hearts of the American people, and it should be tampered with, as I said before, only with extreme caution, and after very careful and mature consideration.

Now, I am willing, as I said the other day, that a line of demarkation shall be drawn clearly between civil cases and criminal cases. I hold to the very same proposition, that a little innovation, properly guarded, may be made with safety in the jury system in regard to civil cases. As far as criminal cases go I shall vote against any interference whatever. I shall contend for the system as it now stands in reference to criminal cases. Now, the gentlemen have argued a proposition here which is an absurdity, and which will throw this country into inextricable confusion in the proper construction of these various laws. There is an old provision carried along which is cognate to this jury right, that no citizen shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. That thing has been construed over and over again, that due process of law means by a jury—the common law jury—due process of law to deprive them at least of their liberty. Gentlemen have attempted to draw a line here between certain grades of crimes, applying one system of jury trials to one grade of offenses, and another system to another grade. The committee have drawn this line in their report, or attempted to—felonies and misdemeanors in the one case, and in the other cases specifying the amount of punishment as the line of demarkation. Gentlemen should remember, and the committee should have remembered, that this thing of felony, and this thing of misdemeanor, are matters entirely within legislative control. They can make the lesser out of the greater if they see fit. If a crime is now a misdemeanor, the Legislature can make it a felony. We know they have done so, and they may do it again.

The last Legislature enacted a law, page one hundred and seventeen of the amendments to the Code, by which they provided as follows:

"Any person who, in the presence or hearing of twenty-five or more persons, shall utter any language with intent either to incite a riot at the present or in the future, or any act or acts of criminal violence against person or property, or who shall suggest, or advise, or encourage any act or acts of criminal violence against any person, or persons, or property, or shall advise or encourage forcible resistance to any of the laws of this State, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the State Prison, or in a county jail, not exceeding two years, or by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by both."

By this they provide that to incite a riot is a felony, while a riot itself is only a misdemeanor. Now, they might preserve the right of trial by a full jury for the lesser offense, and take away the right for the greater. Now, if there is any innovation of this kind to be made, I submit that it never should be left to the Legislature to prescribe which class of cases shall be denominated misdemeanors and which felonies; but let it be made definite and harmonious, so that the object of the Convention shall not be defeated by a subsequent action of the Legislature.

Now, as regards the provision in relation to civil cases and cases of misdemeanor, where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment, three fourths of the jury may render a verdict. That is clear enough. The Legislature has no discretion then. They cannot say that a misdemeanor shall be a felony and a felony a misdemeanor.

The next provision, that a trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases not amounting to felony, with the consent of both parties, in open Court expressed. Now you take, for instance, a misdemeanor prosecuted by indictment, as it is said. Take the case of libel, and the punishment fixed by law is one year in prison or a fine of five thousand dollars, in the discretion of the Court, or both. The fine, I believe, in rebate of imprisonment in jail, can be worked out at the rate of two dollars a day. So they can put you in the county jail for two thousand five hundred days if you are not able to pay the fine, making eight years imprisonment for a misdemeanor, and from that class of cases you take away the jury. There is no limit to the power of the Legislature in fixing fines, as I understand it.

Now, the proper line of demarcation to draw, it seems to me, by the committee, would have been in Courts of record and Courts not of record. Now these Courts not of record sometimes proceed to try misdemeanors, etc.—proceed to try them without a jury, and have been sustained upon the theory that an appeal is allowed to a Court of record where there is a jury. The common law jury, I presume, is meant to be a jury in a Court of record. With a Constitution to define what are Courts of record and what are Courts not of record, this plan would work well and would not confuse the Courts. That line of demarkation should have been drawn, and that is the only one that can be drawn which would not be productive of inextricable confusion.

Then again, "In civil cases and cases of misdemeanor, the jury may consist of any number less than twelve, that the parties may agree upon in open Court."

There again they use the word misdemeanor, leaving it, as a matter of course, to the Legislature to prescribe what a misdemeanor is. Now, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen have misconceived the scope and functions of the office of a juror under our system. They seem to proceed upon the theory that a unanimous verdict of the jury is required in civil cases. That is true in fact, and a false impression exists. In a great majority of cases submitted to a jury a unanimous verdict is not required or insisted upon. Where the trial is to fix the amount of damages, there are not, probably, two men on the jury who actually agree. Now, where is the unanimous verdict? These gentlemen talk the matter over together, each giving his estimate; they make concessions on both sides, and finally converge to some point where they are all willing to agree, and hand in their verdict. Where is the disadvantage in the system which is sufficient to authorize the cutting off of three men whose figures may have some weight in modifying the figures of the other nine? Why do you propose to cut them off? It is not right. It is not insisted upon that there shall be a unanimous verdict; it is only insisted that these men shall consult together and try to agree. You might have just as much trouble in getting a verdict under this system as you have now. Men do not try cases for the purpose of hanging juries. You might have to try cases over again, just the same as now. In most all cases the jurors compromise to a certain extent; compromises sometimes disgraceful to themselves; and I believe you will be more likely to have that kind of verdicts under this plan than in the other case, because then you have less men to bring over than in the other case; cases where, perhaps, they are willing to state the point and play a game of seven up to see how to arrive at a verdict.

Some gentlemen seem to imply that the jury should be abolished, because their judgments are not intelligent verdicts—not intelligent judgments. I can tolerate a thing of that sort in the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Caples, because he has arrived at that age when he is somewhat privileged. But, perhaps, a good deal of this kind of talk about the ignorance of juries is buncombe. My experience and observation is, that in the ordinary business transactions between man and man, ninety-nine out of one hundred of the verdicts of juries are right. They are right. They are better than the judgments of a Judge sitting upon the bench. They are better, because they are the united judgments of twelve fair-minded men. The Judge is supposed to be removed away from these earthly affairs, and to only think in straight lines, and according to precedents; but these gentlemen decide upon matters that they themselves, perhaps, have been called upon from day to day to investigate in their regular vocations.

Now, as stated by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Johnson, I am willing to consent to the innovation, and take the step which the State of Nevada did take, with the privilege of receding if the experiment is found not to work well. I have no doubt that many of the Conventions which have met recently, considered this question as this Convention is considering it—in the light of inconvenience, and they have, after full deliberation, concluded not to meddle or tamper with this ancient custom. So I shall vote against the proposition of the gentleman from Placer, and I shall vote against the proposition reported by the Judiciary Committee, and I would be willing to vote for the proposition similar to that in the Nevada Constitution, or to take the old Constitution as it stands. But I am not willing to vote for any such proposition as will allow the Legislature to defeat the object of the provisions by merely reversing the terms misdemeanors and felony. It would throw the country into confusion, and I shall never vote for any such thing.

MR. WELLER. Mr. Chairman: I cannot see this matter come to a vote without expressing some ideas which I have on the subject. The right of trial by jury has been discussed and set forth before in this Convention. As long as the world has existed there have been differences between man and man, and there always will be probably. Notwithstanding the right of trial by jury is a great luxury, considered so, at the same time it is an expensive luxury which must be kept up by the people. And under these circumstances I am not satisfied with the reading of the sections reported by the Judiciary Committee, from the very fact that in my opinion it will entail a greater expense upon the people of this State, to keep up the expenditures of our Justices' Courts, in the punishment of smaller offenses; that there will be under this clause a great many more jury trials than we ever have had before. These jury trials are expensive trials. It is right and proper, and the old Constitution guarantees it, that every individual should have the right of trial by jury. Now the question is, if that right is not demanded by the party accused, why should it not be waived? Why should he be compelled to exercise that right if he does not desire to? Under this clause, the right of trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases not amounting to felony, by the consent of the parties. The Court has no control. Now, I would like to put in place of that, in regard to its being waived by the consent of the parties, the words, "unless demanded by the parties." I thin kit would look better, and would give them the privilege, but not to bring all these little cases before a jury unless it is demanded by the party. It will make our inferior Courts very expensive. The way this clause is worded it certainly will bring out more jury trials than would have been had in the lower Courts under the old system. I would be in favor of referring it back to the Judiciary Committee, to give it a more careful wording. I cannot vote for it as it is.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale; is the Convention ready for the question?

[Cries of "question," "question."]

The question being upon Mr. Hale's amendment, it was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Shasta, Mr. Andrews; is the Convention ready for the question?

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment, by way of a substitute for the whole subject-matter.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read as follows:

"Strike out and insert: The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever, but a jury trial may be waived by the parties, with the consent of the Court, in all civil cases, in the manner to be provided by law; and in civil cases if three fourths of the jurors agree upon a verdict it shall stand and have the same force and effect as a verdict by the whole jury; provided, the Legislature, by a law passed by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict notwithstanding this provision."

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire to make at this time any extended remarks upon the jury system; the ground has already been gone over. I only wish to call the attention of the Convention to the precise character of this amendment. It is copied verbatim from the Constitution of Nevada, where the experiment has been tried for fourteen years, and I am informed, to the entire satisfaction of the people of that State. I leaves the jury system as it now prevails here except in this particular, that three fourths of the jury may render a verdict, and then it provides that if hereafter the amendment should be found not to work well, the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote, may restore the old system. I would like to take the sense of the committee upon that amendment. It leaves the criminal law as it is now.

MR. VAN DYKE. The way I heard it read before differs from the section as read by the gentleman from Sacramento. The word "prescribed" is used.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment again.

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman from Alameda is right in that particular. The word "prescribed" is used in the Nevada Constitution. "A jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law." I substituted the word "provided," which suggested itself to me as a better word.

MR. VAN DYKE. I do not object to that. It may be waived "with the consent of the Court." That is not in the Nevada Constitution.

MR. EDGERTON. That is put in there for this reason. Often it might occur that the Court would be unwilling to try a case without a jury. It has happened in my experience where both parties were willing to try a case before the Court without a jury, but the case involved matters of such grave importance and magnitude that the Court declined to take the responsibility, and directed a jury to be called, and I think that privilege ought to be reserved to the Court.

MR. VAN DYKE. I object to that amendment, because I think the Judge should take the responsibility, and not throw it off on to the jury.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I object to the last amendment, because in my opinion it is not so comprehensive as the section reported by the Judiciary Committee. There has been, Mr. Chairman, a great deal said upon this proposition, and among the many propositions and arguments made upon this question, I claim, sir, that the argument of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, is unanswerable. It meets the demands of the people; it meets the urgent demands of the times. I am not myself in favor of departing from the old Constitution, as far as it relates to criminal actions; but in civil cases I am decidedly in favor of the report of the Committee on Judiciary. We have here to-day presented to us a spectacle which, I am sorry to say, has clogged the wheels and progress of this Convention. We have about seventy-five lawyers, who universally disagree upon every proposition; and it brings to my mind the proposition presented by the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, the other day, in relation to having a certain number of lawyers, but not too many, in legislative bodies. In this case we have an unlimited number of disagreeing lawyers. Here is a proposition which involves the great interests of the people, and the people are clamoring for a redress of their grievances; and one of them is, that in all civil cases the matter shall be left to the decision of the parties as to whether they will or will not have a jury trial. Now, I do not see how any rational man can disagree on that proposition. Yet the lawyers on the floor of this Convention disagree, and we are all in chaos. I hope this Convention will settle the point in a rational, straightforward, and businesslike manner, as sensible men, with the best interests of the people at heart.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I suggest to the gentleman from Sacramento, "a majority of the Legislature," instead of, "by a two-thirds vote," if the gentleman will accept the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Sacramento accept the amendment?

MR. EDGERTON. I accept the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, which the Secretary will read as modified.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties, with the consent of the Court, in all civil cases, in the manner to be provided by law; and in civil cases, if three fourths of the jurors agree upon a verdict, it shall stand, and have the same force and effect as a verdict by the whole jury; provided, the Legislature, by a law passed by a majority vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict, notwithstanding this provision."

MR. EDGERTON. I want gentlemen to understand that as this section is now amended, a majority of the Legislature may at any time pass a law, the same as any other law is passed, restoring the old Constitution in this particular.

MR. SHAFTER. I move to strike out that part of it. I am glad that my following is increasing in regard to my opinion about lawyers. I am obliged to point out to the gentleman from Sacramento that there is only one way to pass a law by the Legislature, and that is by a majority vote of both houses. You cannot pass it any other way, and I move to strike it out.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: The word "majority" has a special signification. It is a majority of all the members of the Legislature. I shall vote against it, because I think that makes the mode of changing the Constitution too easy. Two thirds even is objectionable.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. Are you ready for the question?

The question was put, and the amendment lost.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I beg leave to offer an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, which I will send up to be read.

MR. MURPHY. What has become of the Andrews proposition?

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Shasta, Mr. Andrews, moved to substitute section three of the present Constitution for section seven of this report. The next question is on that amendment. Is the committee ready for the question?

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I don't desire to trespass upon the time of the committee, and I have but a few words to say. Now, if gentlemen will look at the recommendation of the committee, they will see in that a recommendation that the jury system shall be held inviolate. I say if you adopt this amendment proposed by them, that word is out of place, for you say in the first place that it is inviolate, and in the very next sentence proceed to violate it. Why do you do that? I say the word "inviolate" would be out of place, because you are trying to render it inviolate. For that reason I say, if we are to have such a provision as is recommended, strike out that word "inviolate." [Cries of "Question, question."]

Mr. Chairman, I have the right to close the debate on this proposition. The report of the Judiciary Committee provides, in cases of misdemeanors, that two thirds of the jury may find a verdict. Now, the gentleman has submitted the Nevada Constitution. For my part I don't believe in trying any experiments. I don't believe any gentleman here would wish to try such an experiment at this time, as that in the Nevada Constitution. Even over there they tried it with fear, and provided at the same time that the Legislature might restore the old system and require a unanimous verdict. I think we had better bear the ills we have rather than fly to others we know not of. I hope the Convention will leave the old Constitution as it is.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: Would it be in order to offer a substitute?

THE CHAIRMAN. You cannot offer it at this time. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Shasta, Mr. Andrews.

Division being called for, the amendment was lost—ayes 35.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I call for the reading of my amendment, which is already on the Secretary's desk.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I believe I had the floor before the last vote was taken, and I now wish to offer an amendment, by way of a substitute. I send it up to the desk.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the substitute offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall be preserved to all and remain inviolate forever, but a jury trial may be waived by the parties by express waiver in civil actions, and the parties may agree upon a number of jurors, not less than six, to constitute the jury in civil cases. In criminal cases, amounting only to misdemeanor, the defendants shall have the right of a trial by jury, or by the Court, as they may elect."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute.

The substitute was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Merced, Mr. Jones.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate, but in all civil cases the Legislature may prescribe by law the number necessary to constitute a jury, and three fourths of the jurors may render the verdict of the jury, and a jury may be waived by the parties. In all civil cases, by the consent of both parties expressed in open Court, the jury may consist of any number less than twelve, or less than the number prescribed by law."

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I demand a division of the question.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I offer this amendment in the hope that I may be able to hit upon some middle ground upon which this Convention may be able to agree. I will occupy the attention of the Convention but a very few moments, simply to explain the effect of the amendment which I have proposed. It does not go so far as the provision of the Judiciary Committee. It goes farther than some of those which have been voted down here, but not so far as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale. It provides that the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate, as a general proposition, with this exception, that in all civil cases the Legislature may prescribe by law the number necessary to constitute a jury, and three fourths of the jury may render a verdict, and that the jury may be waived by the parties. There is this addition also, which is worthy of consideration, that in all cases, by the consent of both parties expressed in open Court, the jury may consist of any number less than twelve, or less than the number prescribed by law. In criminal cases the number would remain at twelve, but in such cases, by agreement of the parties expressed in open Court, a less number may be accepted.

In civil cases, according to this proposition, the number fixed by the Legislature for a legal jury may be seven, or nine, or any other number, and still, by consent of the parties, any number whatever may constitute a jury. I will simply say, in explanation of this matter of allowing in all cases the parties, by express consent, in open Court, to determine the number of jurors, that in my judgment, that is one source of expense and trouble and discontent among the people. We, as lawyers, know something about these matters by experience. Oftentimes it is the case that where a jury of eleven, or even nine, or ten, has been impaneled, there would be no objection on the part of the prosecution or of the defense to trying the case with that number if it could be done legally. They would be perfectly willing to go on and try the case, but under the law, as it now stands, of course they cannot do it, and I think the Bill of Rights designed primarily to take away that right from the citizen. I think a party in Court should always have the right to consent to having his case tried by eleven jurors, or even a less number, instead oftentimes of having to get another venire and exhausting the county, which has already been searched for fifteen miles around, and no qualified jurors to be found. Then, I say, this proposition, if accepted by the Convention, will provide that in all civil cases the Legislature may prescribe the number necessary to constitute a legal jury, and that three fourths of that number shall be able to render a verdict. And farther, that the parties may agree upon any number less than the full jury in any case.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions three fourths of the jury may render the verdict, and in such cases the jury may consist of any number less than twelve that the parties may agree upon in open Court. The Legislature, by a law passed by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict, notwithstanding this provision."

The amendment was rejected.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but in criminal cases the concurrence of twelve jurors is necessary to render a verdict in all cases of felony. In civil cases, or in cases of misdemeanor, the Legislature shall provide the number of jurors necessary to find a verdict; but in no civil case, or a case of misdemeanor, shall less than three fourths of the jury be competent to render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in civil cases and cases of misdemeanor, by the consent of the parties."

MR. DOWLING. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Convention: I presume it will be out of place for me to call your attention to the fact that this is the twenty-sixth day in which we have assembled here. I have waited very patiently for the legal gentlemen who have preceded me on this floor—amongst whom I see those shining lights of the bar of California—and it appears to me from their arguments that they want a change in the jury system of California, but they can't tell exactly what they want, or the reason why they want it changed. Now that the lawyers have all aired their eloquence on this subject, now that the doctors have spoken, I presume it will not be out of place for me to say a few words. I am not a lawyer, nor do I want to be one, because, if I were, I would be one of those that my friend Colonel Barnes of San Francisco calls shyster lawyers, and God knows we have enough of them—more than can make a respectable living. I am one of those, sir, who believe in the old and established maxims, and I don't want to alter them, or tamper with them, except for grave or tangent cause. If my memory is correct, this grand old jury system is contemporaneous with liberty itself. It has been the playmate of American progress and civilization, and to tamper with it now, or to change it, is a very dangerous precedent, in my opinion. I am opposed to innovations, on general principles, and in the matter of remodeling or altering the jury system, I object to very little change in these troublous times. I do not believe in condemning a man and consigning him to State Prison for life without giving him a fair and impartial trial before an impartial Judge and jury of his peers, and before twelve jurors; and, sir, I shall never sanction anything to the contrary. Regarding, as my friend Smith remarked to-day, the Constitution of Nevada. Well, sir, no matter what is in the Constitution of Nevada, no matter how good the Constitution is there, I tell you there is where fraud is rampant and crime goes unpunished. I do not believe in following the prestige of the State of Nevada.

Now, is it possible that with the seventy lawyers in this house we shall wrangle here for two days and not be able to settle the jury question? Can no man go to work and write a few lines that will suit the subject and not lead us into danger? It is admitted, sir, that a man never sinks below the zero of honesty and integrity until he unfortunately gets elected to the Legislature. A man may steal a horse, or a cow, or anything, and his friends will stick to him like a brick, but as soon as he gets elected to the Legislature, they drop him like a hot stove—his manhood gone, his self-respect gone.

Now, sir, for my part, I don't believe it is right for this Convention to go and change the jury system. I believe in leaving some power to the Legislature, and I believe in leaving the power to the Legislature of naming the number of jurors that shall render a verdict in civil cases, because, sir, I will tell you the reason why. In civil cases it is almost a matter of dollars and cents, and the man who has got the biggest purse will always win the day. That is the way I have found it. But in criminal cases I want it to be imperative that it will require twelve jurors to render a verdict.

Now, sir, I offer this amendment, believing it will meet the approbation of all honest men in the State of California, whether it meets the views of this Convention or not.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Any member of this Convention who speaks more than five minutes on any one proposition before the Convention, or the Committee of the Whole, shall forever be ineligible to any office of profit or trust in this State, or ever be elected to any future Convention."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

MR. NOEL. Mr. Chairman: I have a substitute to offer.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate; but in all cases, except felony, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute the jury; and in all civil cases the number necessary to render a verdict; and in all civil cases and criminal cases not amounting to felony, a jury may be waived in the manner prescribed by law."

Lost.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike from the section the words, "in cases of misdemeanor, where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment, or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both."

Digitized by Google

THE CHAIRMAN. It is out of order; that precise amendment has already been voted down.

MR. HERRINGTON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair in that regard.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Wickes, has the floor, and offers the following amendment, which the Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate. The Legislature may prescribe, by law, the number necessary to constitute a jury, whose verdict shall have a binding effect when unanimous. In civil cases, and in cases of misdemeanor, the principals concerned may waive a jury trial with the consent of the Court."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Lost.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: There is a misapprehension about the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington. I have been waiting myself to offer a similar amendment. The Chair will find itself mistaken on that point—that is, the striking out of a portion of the report of the committee. That has not yet been voted upon.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is the precise amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, to strike out those very words.

MR. McCALLUM. The Chair is mistaken.

MR. VAN DYKE. It was to strike out certain words and substitute others.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Convention refused to strike out the words.

MR. McCALLUM. This is an entirely different case. This is in reference to an entirely different matter. That is to make misdemeanors apply to all misdemeanors, and not limit it to any particular class. The gentleman has offered the amendment, and the Convention has not had an opportunity of voting on it.

THE CHAIRMAN. Read the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words, 'and in cases of misdemeanor, where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment, or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

MR. HERRINGTON. I call for the reading of the section as it would be if this amendment should be adopted.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions, three fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases not amounting to felony, by the consent of both parties, in open Court expressed, and in civil cases, by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil cases and cases of misdemeanor, the jury may consist of any number, less than twelve, that the parties may agree upon in open Court.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. HALL. Mr. CHAIRMAN: I have an amendment to offer to section seven.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'twelve' in the last line, and add these words: 'but not less than four.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: A single word. The section as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 7. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions, and in cases of misdemeanor where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both, three fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases, not amounting to a felony, by the consent of both parties, in open Court expressed, and in civil cases, by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil cases and cases of misdemeanor the jury may consist of any number, less than twelve, but not less than four."

As the matter now stands, it provides that a verdict may be rendered by three fourths of the jury in civil cases. Now, sir, if the parties agree upon three as the number, it will be impracticable to get three fourths of three; it would be impossible to get three fourths of two, or three fourths of one, if the parties should agree upon that number, which they may do under the provisions of this section. Now, under this state of facts there will be some confusion; in other words, it requires a unanimous verdict when the jury consists of three, or two, or one, respectively. In order to avoid that inconvenience and confusion which would result from a possible agreement of the parties, I propose this amendment, which provides that the number shall not be less than four. I like the section in other respects.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

No second.

THE CHAIRMAN. Is there any further amendment to the section?

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words 'not amounting to felony' and insert the words 'where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both,' and 'in cases of misdemeanor' and insert the words, 'and in criminal cases where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both.'"

MR. BARBOUR. That will make the section read as follows:

"SEC. 7. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions, and in criminal cases where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both, three fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both, by the consent of both parties, in open Court expressed, and in civil cases by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil cases, and criminal cases where the punishment does not exceed six months imprisonment or a fine of five hundred dollars, or both, the jury may consist of any number, less than twelve, that the parties may agree upon in open Court."

MR. BARBOUR. I offer that amendment for the purpose of making the section harmonious. I don't see any reason for at one time providing the limit by the amount of punishment, and in another part of the section using the words "felony" and "misdemeanor," and leaving it to the Legislature to transpose the terms as they may do.

The amendment was rejected by a standing vote.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In criminal cases the right of trial by jury shall remain; in all cases, except felony, the Legislature may provide by law the number necessary to constitute a jury, and in all civil cases the number necessary to render a verdict."

Lost.

MR. NOEL. I have an amendment.

MR. O'DONNELL. I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost on a division vote.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I move to refer the whole matter back to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion is out of order. Are there any further amendments to the section. If not, the Secretary will read section eight.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 8. Offenses heretofore required to be prosecuted by indictment shall be prosecuted by indictment or information, as may be prescribed by law; but a Grand Jury shall be drawn and summoned at least once a year in each county.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I offer the following amendment to section eight.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out to the word 'shall,' and insert 'all crimes or public offenses.'"

MR. VAN DYKE. Why not say "all crimes and public offenses shall be prosecuted by indictment or information," etc.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: We have just got through with a very important subject, and we are proceeding to another very weighty subject, that of Grand Juries. Whatever discussion there will be to-night will be forgotten by morning, and I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, the Committee of the Whole have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Bill of Rights, have made progress, and direct me to ask leave to sit again. What is the pleasure of the Convention?

REPORT.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I sent up this morning a report of the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask now that the report be received and laid on the table, and ordered printed.

THE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection it will be so ordered. The Secretary will read the report.

THE SECRETARY read the report as follows:

SACRAMENTO, November 5th, 1878.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred proposed amendment number one hundred and nineteen, introduced by Mr. Harvey, amendment number one hundred and thirty-seven, introduced by Mr. Mills, amendment number two hundred and seventy-eight, introduced by Mr. Neunaber, amendment number three hundred and eleven, introduced by Mr. McConnell, amendment number three hundred and eighteen, introduced by Mr. Beerstecher, and amendment number four hundred and fifteen, introduced by Mr. Harvey, have had the same under consideration, and recommend that they be not adopted. In lieu thereof your committee herewith report a draft for article seven of the Constitution, relating to the militia, and recommend that the same be adopted.

Great diversity of opinion exists in the committee with reference to limitations and restrictions upon the power of the Legislature as to the number of companies essential to accomplish the purposes designed by article seven as proposed, as well as the amount of appropriations for the maintenance of the military organization of the State. Your committee make no recommendation upon this subject, preferring to leave the members of the committee at liberty to suggest such additions upon this subject, in the article proposed, as they may be advised.

W. H. L. BARNES, Chairman.

ARTICLE VII.

SECTION 1. Organizing and disciplining the militia.
2. Officers, how elected and appointed.
3. Removal of general officers.
4. Governor to be Commander-in-Chief, and to call out the militia.
5. Exemptions.
6. Provision to be made for wounded and disabled members of militia.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for organizing and disciplining the militia, in such manner as they may deem expedient, not incompatible with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. Officers of the militia shall be elected or appointed in such manner as the Legislature shall from time to time direct, and shall be commissioned by the Governor.

SEC. 3. No general officer shall be removed from office except by the Senate, on the recommendation of the Governor, stating the grounds on which removal is recommended, or by a decision of a Court-martial in accordance with military custom. No officer of the militia shall ever be removed from office for political reasons.

SEC. 4. The Governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the militia of the State. He shall have power to call them forth to execute the laws of the State, to suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

SEC. 5. The officers, musicians, and members of the State militia, who comply with all military duties as provided by law, shall be entitled to the following privileges and exemptions, viz.: Exemption from payment of poll tax, road tax, and head tax of every description; exemption from jury duty and exemption from serving on any posse comitatus. All officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, who have faithfully served in the military service of the State for seven consecutive years, and received the certificate of the Adjutant-General certifying the same, shall thereafter be exempted from further military or jury service, except in time of war.

SEC. 6. Every officer or member of the State militia, wounded or disabled in the service of the State, shall have reasonable expenses paid him; and the widows and children of members killed in the service of the State shall be provided for by the Legislature.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention do now take a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes P. M.

MR. HUESTIS. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn prevailed, and at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes P. M. the Convention stood adjourned.

PROTEST.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I have here a protest, which I desire to present, from the Independent German Congregation of San Francisco, against the exemption of church property from taxation, against the compulsory observation of the Sabbath day, and against the recognition of God in the Constitution.

The protest was as follows:

PROTEST AGAINST THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A STATE RELIGION.

To the Constitutional Convention at Sacramento:

WHEREAS, Propositions have been laid before your honorable body for adoption demanding the recognition of the Christian God, and his so-called revelation, as the source of all moral law as well as of all civil power, the exemption of church property from taxation, and the compulsory observance of the Christian Sabbath; and,

WHEREAS, These, and all similar propositions, are simply efforts to create and establish a State religion, and as such are hostile to the great principle of absolute religious liberty, as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and solemnly affirmed by the declaration of our Government in the eleventh article of the treaty with Tripoli, of November fourth, seventeen hundred and ninety-six, George Washington, President, that "the Government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion."

THEREFORE, The Independent German Congregation of San Francisco earnestly protests against all and every measure having a tendency to establish a State religion, and prays your honorable body to uphold, in its integrity, the principle of religious liberty, the separation of Church and State, by rejecting all propositions looking to all abridgment of the right of conscience.

The Independent German Congregation of San Francisco, by

WM. WESTERFELD,
President.
H. O. REINHARDT,
Secretary.

San Francisco, November 2d, 1878.

MR. SWEASEY presented a petition from the California State Woman's Suffrage Educational Association:

To the honorable the Constitutional Convention of the State of California:

And your petitioners will ever pray, most respectfully.

REPORTS.

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco, presented the following report from the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department:

To the President of the Constitutional Convention:

Your Committee on the Judiciary and Judicial Department, to whom was referred Resolution number sixty-five, instructing this committee to inquire and report their opinion as to whether the provisions of the Constitution of the United States relating to trials by jury apply to State Courts and the administration of the laws of the State, beg leave to report that the same has been duly considered, and that in the opinion of the committee the provisions of the Constitution of the United States relating to trials by jury do not apply to the State Courts, nor to the administration of the laws of the State in those Courts.

Respectfully submitted.

S. M. WILSON, Chairman.

November 5th, 1878.

MR. WINANS presented the following report from the Committee on Education:

To the Honorable Joseph P. Hoge, President:

The Committee on Education respectfully report back to the Convention proposed Amendments number one hundred and sixteen, introduced by Mr. Harrison; number one hundred and seventeen, introduced by Mr. Harrison; number two hundred and thirty-four, introduced by Mr. Wickes; number three hundred and eighty-one, introduced by Mr. H. W. Smith; number four hundred and ten, introduced by Mr. Jones; and number four hundred and five, introduced by Mr. Lindow, with the recommendation that they be not adopted, because they embrace matters proper for legislative rather than constitutional enactment.

WINANS, Chairman.

LOCAL OPTION PETITION.

Mr. Prouty presented the following petition, signed by a number of citizens, asking for a provision for a local option law:

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention of the State of California:

The people of the State of California recognize the fact that it is the object and duty of the present Convention to promote the welfare of our people by the enactment of wise and just laws, and to advance their common interests by the encouragement of every legitimate, and the suppression of every pernicious traffic.

Your memorialists are of the opinion that a great portion of the more obstinate, painful, and moral disorders that afflict the human family are engendered by the use of spirituous and intoxicating liquors; that the common use of such intoxicating liquors is not only destructive to health and happiness, but also impairs the faculties of the mind, and thereby tends equally to dishonor our character as a nation as well as to lower us in the scale of civilization.

Your memorialists have no doubt but that the presence of the plague, or any other pestilential disorder which might sweep away thousands of our fellow citizens, would elicit the most strenuous and energetic efforts on the part of our government to subdue it, and to guard against its possible occurrence.

Your memorialists can discern no just reason why the more certain and distressing ravages of intoxicating liquors upon the lives and happiness of our citizens, and the well-being and quiet of our community, should not be guarded against with corresponding vigilance and anxiety by the present rulers of the United States, and more particularly by the present law-makers of our own fair State.

Your memorialists beg leave to add further that in their belief the use of spirituous and intoxicating liquors is in any case whatever wholly unnecessary—that they neither fortify the body against the influences of heat or cold, nor render labor more easy or more productive; and that there are many other articles of diet and drink which are not only perfectly safe and salutary, but in every way superior and preferable to intoxicating liquors for any of the purposes above mentioned.

Your memorialists also believe that it is a grave defect in our present Constitution in that it denies to the people of different counties, townships, and districts, the privilege of fairly determining, at the ballot-box, whether liquor saloons shall continue to exist in their midst, with their attendant trains of evil and vice, pollution, want, and woe.

We are fully convinced that the law passed in March, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, and known as the "Local Option Law," was a proper and just law, and one meeting with the general approbation of our people, as was evidenced by the fact that, out of over one hundred elections held under its provisions, the success of local option was in the ratio of two and a half to one. We therefore commend it to your consideration.

Your memorialists have beheld with regret the hitherto feeble and ineffectual endeavors put forth to stop or impede this giant evil, and the proportionally barren results which have resulted therefrom.

They center their hopes, therefore, of an effectual remedy, in the wisdom and power of your honorable body; and in behalf of our common humanity, entreat of you, by all your obligations, to protect the lives and comfort of our citizens, and by your regard for our national character and respect for our land in the scale of intelligent and civilized beings, to impose such heavy duties on intoxicating liquors, or adopt such other remedial and preventive measures as shall, in your sober judgment, tend most efficiently to subdue and eradicate these evils.

Therefore, with an honest belief in the justness of our demand, and with a firm reliance in the honor, wisdom, and sincerity of your honorable body, we humbly crave, at your hands, a prompt and impartial consideration of our request, and if possible, an ultimate exemption from this distressing evil.

Referred to the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

INFORMATION REQUESTED.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. President: I ask leave to introduce a resolution, out of order, to obtain some information from the Surveyor-General.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the gentleman will send up his resolution.

The SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Surveyor-General be requested to inform this Convention, as near as he can approximate the same, of the number of square miles of territory contained in each of the counties of this State.

Adopted.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

Mr. DOYLE introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, entitled, "Proposition to establish a Metropolitan Police Force for the City and County of San Francisco."

Section 1. A Board of Police Commissioners shall be established for the City and County of San Francisco, who shall, upon their election and qualification, supersede the Board now in power.

Sec. 2. Said Board shall consist of three Commissioners and one Chief of Police, who shall be elected by the people at the next regular municipal election for other city and county officers, and thereafter at each regular municipal election.

Sec. 3. The salary of such Commissioners and Chief of Police shall be two thousand dollars per annum, to be paid out of the treasury of the City and County of San Francisco; and the said Commissioners and Chief of Police shall not be eligible, while acting as such, to any other Federal, State, or municipal office.

Sec. 4. The term of office of said Commissioners and Chief of Police shall be the same as those of other municipal officers; to wit, two years.

Sec. 5. The said Commissioners shall have full and exclusive control of the said police force; the Chief of Police herein provided for being subject in like manner to their exclusive control.

Sec. 6. It shall be the duty of said Commissioners to appoint and organize the police force for the City and County of San Francisco, in numbers equal to the present force; to establish and maintain all necessary regulations for its discipline and government; and take full charge of all directions necessary to the enforcement of such municipal ordinances as may be now or hereafter established for the suppression, restriction, or punishment of crime, and maintenance of sanitary regulations.

Sec. 7. The salary of each officer shall be one hundred dollars per month, excepting those of higher grade, whose salaries shall be fixed by the Commissioners, but such salaries shall not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars per month; said salaries to be paid out of the treasury of the City and County of San Francisco; provided, the Board of Supervisors may decrease the salaries of police officers.

Sec. 8. The Commissioners and Chief of Police herein provided for, shall be liable to impeachment for any malfeasance in office, or willful neglect of the duties pertaining to said offices, any of the Superior Courts of the City and County of San Francisco being hereby authorized to sit as a Court of Impeachment for their trial; and it is hereby declared that the granting of any undue favoritism to the members of the force shall be deemed malfeasance, and a good ground for impeachment; the penalties in such Courts of Impeachment, in case of conviction, being restricted to removal from office. The verdict in such Court of Impeachment shall, however, in no manner be a bar to such further prosecution in the criminal Courts as the offenses may warrant.

Referred to Committee on Cities, Counties, etc.

ASSISTANT JOURNAL CLERK.

Mr. CROSS. Mr. President: By request of the Journal Clerk, I introduce a resolution, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the President be and he is hereby authorized to appoint an Assistant Journal Clerk, at a salary of six dollars per day.

Referred to the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses.

NEW PROPOSITIONS—COUNTY SEATS.

Mr. SMITH, of Santa Clara, introduced the following proposed amendmend to the Constitution, placing restrictions on removing county seats:

No county seat shall be removed until the point to which it is proposed to be removed shall be fixed in pursuance of law, and a majority of the voters of the county, to be ascertained in such manner as shall be provided by general law, shall have voted in favor of its removal to such point, and no person shall vote on such question who has not resided in the county six months and the election precinct ninety days next preceding such election.

Referred to Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

THE STATE CAPITAL.

Mr. O'DONNELL introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, to locate permanently the Capital of the State of California:

Whereas, The Capital of the State of California was moved from San Jose by fraud and collusion, and its location at Sacramento is contrary to law, and against public policy and public interest, to wit: this building is located on an alluvial sand bank, and is liable to overflow and destruction by each winter's flow of the Sacramento River; and further, the lives of State officers, members, and attachés of the Legislature, the chosen and honored servants of the people, are in continued jeopardy from the extreme unhealthy climate of Sacramento; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Miscellaneous Provisions be instructed to insert a clause in the Constitution leaving it to a vote of the people, at our next State election, where the future Capital of this State shall be located.

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

LOCAL OPTION PETITION.

Mr. HAGER presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of San Francisco, asking for the insertion of a provision in the Constitution for a local option law:

To the honorable the Constitutional Convention of the State of California:

We, the undersigned, respectfully petition your honorable body to insert in the new Constitution of this State, a clause similar to that now in force in the State of Texas, to wit:

Section —. The Legislature shall, at its first session, enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, voting precinct, town, or city, by a majority vote, from time to time, may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits.

The following memorial accompanied the petition:

To the President and members of the Constitutional Convention:

On behalf of the petition accompanying this memorial, transmitted herewith, your memorialists would most respectfully represent that the proposition embodied in the prayer of your petitioners, to wit: "The Legislature shall at its first session enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, voting precinct, town, or city, by a majority vote, from time to time, may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits," is identical with a clause presented by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Texas, and ratified by the people of that great commonwealth.

The proposition presented raises but a single issue before your honorable body, to wit: the expediency of the local prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. In this statement we assume that the inherent right of the people to regulate or to prohibit by law the said traffic will not be denied. The principle which commends the proposition brought before you by this petition is, that it refers the question of the expediency of prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors to the people. This principle is in consonance with the very genius of republican institutions. The people of separate localities should have the right to determine for themselves, as to whether the sale of intoxicating drink is inimical to the best interests of their respective communities. This application of the principle of local sovereignty is not new, but extends already to other questions of local character. We assume that those citizens interested in the sale of intoxicating beverages cannot reasonably object to the adoption of this proposition. No good citizen will demand protection in the right to engage in a business which, in the judgment of a majority of his neighbors, is demoralizing to the neighborhood; and if the traffic in liquors is not destructive of the morals and good order of a community, these separate communities may safely be trusted with such determination of the question as the facts warrant. In the opinion of your memorialists, any opposition to the proposition on the part of those engaged in the traffic in liquors must be based upon the ground that should the proposition be incorporated into the Constitution, many communities would decide against the continuation of the traffic. This is in effect an admission that in all such communities the traffic is now carried on against the enlightened judgment and moral conscience of a majority of the people resident in such communities. The proposition herewith presented, if adopted, would relegate the whole question to the arbitration of the ballot box; and representing those who entertain the opinion that the traffic in intoxicating drinks is destructive of the best and highest interests of the commonwealth, we cheerfully submit the grave question involved to this high arbitrament. To deny the prayer of this petition will, in the opinion of your petitioners, be in effect a denial of a sacred right. The right to determine what is necessary and appropriate to accomplish the ends of government, establish order, and promote the general welfare of society, resides in the people, and all we ask is, that this right shall be recognized in the determination of the issues arising out of contending opinions concerning the character and moral tendencies of the unrestricted traffic in intoxicating liquors. The nature of the proposition herewith presented is such as to absolve us from the necessity of presenting any considerations or arguments tending to establish the expediency of prohibiting the liquor traffic. We have no data upon which to found the assumption that in practice the proposition presented would result in such prohibition; the result would be dependent upon the will of the majority of the voters in the local subdivisions named. But it is obvious that the perpetuity or prohibition of the traffic will depend upon the verdict of the people, in whom resides the right to determine the necessity or reasonableness of all prohibitory laws.

And as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Referred to Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

CONVENTION EXPENSES.

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco. Mr. President: Some time ago a resolution was introduced in the Convention asking the opinion of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department as to what fund the expenses for stationery and printing should come out of; whether it was to be paid by the State, or whether it was to be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the Convention. The Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department reported upon that subject. That report was laid upon the table, and has never yet been acted upon by the Convention. I understand that the Controller recently, and since that report was made, has been drawing warrants against the Convention Fund for these expenses. I now move that the report of the committee be taken from the table for the action of the Convention.

MR. AYERS. I second the motion.

The motion prevailed.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report of the committee.

THE SECRETARY read:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Judiciary, to whom was referred the question as to the meaning and construction of the Act of the State Legislature calling this Convention, in regard to the fund or funds chargeable with the cost of printing, stationery, etc., necessary for said Convention, respectfully report that we had the same under consideration, and that it is the opinion of the committee that under the Act it is the duty of the Secretary of State to furnish the members of the Convention with stationery, and that the same is chargeable to the twenty five thousand dollars appropriated "for stationery, fuel, lights, etc., for the Legislature and State officers, etc."

This conclusion is arrived at by construing the Act making the general appropriations with the Act calling the Convention. (See Stats. 1877–8, p. 1007, third item from bottom of page; same Stats., p. 1008, Sec. 2, and p. 763, Sec. 5.) Reading these sections and provisions together lead us to the opinion above expressed.

Second—As to the printing, it is our opinion that it is chargeable to the one hundred thousand dollars appropriated for support of the State Printing Office. (See Stats. 1877–8, p. 1007, Sec. 1, twelfth item from top of page) See also same Stats., p. 765, Sec. 10, by which the printing is directed to be done at the State Printing Office, and the Convention is not given control of it nor required to audit the accounts therefor, but that power is confined to the pay of members, employés, etc

This view is strengthened by the fact that the Controller's estimate for the State Printing Office for the two years ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and eighty, was the sum of seventy-five thousand dollars (see last report of the Controller, p 131), while the appropriation was one hundred thousand dollars (see Stats. 1877–8, p. 1007, before cited). This large appropriation leads us to the conclusion that the printing for the Convention was included; and this is strengthened by the fact that there was only one hundred and fifty thousand dollars specially appropriated for the expenses of the Convention, and their pay was fixed at ten dollars per day, and the number fixed at one hundred and fifty-two members, while one hundred days are allowed them to sit, when it must have been apparent to the Legislature that one hundred and fifty thousand dollars would have been greatly inadequate to pay all the expenses of the Convention for a much shorter time than one hundred days.

Third—All other expenses of the Convention must, in our judgment, be paid out of the special appropriation of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars made in the Act calling the Convention.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

S. M. WILSON, Chairman Judiciary Committee.

October 23d, 1878.

Resolved, That under the law of the State calling this Convention, the stationery furnished members by the Secretary of State is chargeable to the appropriation of twenty-five thousand dollars made "for stationery, fuel, lights, etc.," and not to the special appropriation of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars made in said Act calling the Convention; and that the printing is chargeable to the appropriation of one hundred thousand dollars for the support of "State printing," and not against the one hundred and fifty thousand dollars appropriation aforesaid; and be it further

Resolved, That the President of the Convention be instructed to take such steps as he may deem necessary to be taken in the premises to carry into practical effect the foregoing resolution.

The resolutions were adopted.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: The mere adoption of these resolutions without more further action on the part of this Convention, I conceive, will not stop the payment out of that appropriation. It seems to me that if the Controller is drawing warrants upon that fund for the purpose of paying for printing, stationery, etc., that this Convention should take some action by which these resolutions would be enforced and made operative.

THE PRESIDENT. The resolutions instruct the President to take such steps as he may deem necessary to be taken in the premises to carry into practical effect the resolutions. The first step will be to certify these resolutions to the Controller, as the appropriate officer, in the first instance.

MR. AYERS. I understand that bills have already been paid since the report was made. I do not know exactly how we are going to get at it, but it seems to me that the resolutions ought to be made operative some way by the Convention.

THE GRAND JURY SYSTEM.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The eighth section, as reported by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, was under consideration when the committee rose.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to withdraw the amendment I sent up to section eight.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the section as reported by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 8. Offenses heretofore required to be prosecuted by indictment shall be prosecuted by indictment or information, as may be prescribed by law, but a Grand Jury shall be drawn and summoned at least once a year in each county.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to section eight.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 8. No person shall be held to answer for a crime, or other public offense, punishable by death or imprisonment in the State Prison (except in cases of impeachment, and in cases of militia when in actual service, and in the land or naval forces in time of war, or which this State may keep with the consent of Congress in time of peace), unless on presentment or indictment by a Grand Jury. In all other cases, offenses shall be prosecuted by indictment, information, accusation, or complaint, as concurrent remedies as may be prescribed by law. A Grand Jury shall consist of not less than fifteen nor more than eighteen persons, two thirds of whom may find an indictment or true bill. The Legislature, by a two thirds vote of all the members elected to each house, may abolish and restore the Grand Jury system.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: That section is precisely the same as reported by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights. I believe it is better than the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department. I desire to say that I am opposed to the innovations sought to be incorporated in the Constitution by section eight, as reported by the Committee on Judiciary. I believe it is dangerous to place into the hands of the District Attorney, or any single individual, to say whether a man shall be prosecuted for a felony without the finding of an indictment by a Grand Jury. It seems to me that it gives decidedly too much power to any citizen, to require a party charged with crime to put himself upon his defense in order to defend himself against a charge which any person may bring against him charging him with a felony. I do not believe we ought to do away with a system which has worked so well ever since the organization of our government. I say that when we introduce an innovation of this kind, we are going to sea without a compass and without a chart, and we do not know where we are going to bring up at. This section practically does away with the institution of the Grand Jury. I believe that there is no system so well calculated to protect the rights of innocent persons against the charge of felony as the institution of the Grand Jury, and I desire right here to place myself on record against the adoption of the section as reported by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I have sent up an amendment that I would like to have read. It is a mere verbal amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section eight by inserting after the word 'or,' in line two, the word 'by,' and after the word 'information' the words 'after commitment or examination by a magistrate,' so that the section will read: Section 8. Offenses heretofore required to be prosecuted by indictment shall be prosecuted by indictment or by information, after commitment on examination by a magistrate, as may be prescribed by law; but a Grand Jury shall be drawn and summoned at least once a year in each county."

The amendment was adopted.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment which I send up.

THE SECRETARY read:

Amend section eight so as to read as follows:

SEC. 8. No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime (except in cases of impeachment, and in cases arising in the militia when in actual service, and the land and naval forces in time of war, or which this State may keep, with the consent of Congress, in time of peace, and in cases of petit larceny, under the regulation of the Legislature), unless on presentment of a Grand Jury; and, in any trial in any Court whatever, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend, in person and with counsel, as in civil actions. No person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor shall he be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation being first made.

SPEECH OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: That will be found to be essentially section eight of article one of the present Constitution. There are two changes, one of which is inserting the word "arising" in the second line, and the other is by adding the words, "being first made," at the end of the section, so as to remove any question of construction as to whether, when property is taken for public use, the preliminary taking is a taking in the sense of the law. The main difference between this and the plan suggested by the Committee on Judiciary is, as I shall contend, the report of the Committee on Judiciary abolishes the Grand Jury system in effect. Now, I shall say nothing in this Committee of the Whole in praise of the Grand Jury system. I think I have noticed that this Committee of the Whole has no reverence for the history of the Grand Jury system, consequently I shall devote my attention exclusively to the benefits and safeguards that this Grand Jury system throws around the citizen. I will leave the history and the reverence for the Grand Jury system to others, for I have noticed that this Convention, in its feeling of skepticism, seems to care very little about time-honored institutions. They would rather have something that is new—something that they know not what would be the effect of, or the result of, and consequently I direct your attention to what I consider the actual benefits and actual safeguards of the Grand Jury system now to the citizen in this State.

It is sought by the amendment proposed by the Committee on Judiciary to set up some accusing officer, some one man, to be elected for say two or four years, who in each county in this State shall be vested with the power to place upon trial the highest and the lowest citizen in that county. They propose to set up one individual in whom shall be vested this power. I care not whether you call that individual the District Attorney, or whether you call it a Board of Committing Magistrates, or a Judge of the Superior Court of the county. It is all one thing. Instead of this impersonal power, this Grand Jury, which is never composed of the same individuals, although one individual might be upon every Grand Jury in the county, yet it is impersonal. Never do you find the same identical individuals upon any two Grand Juries. You might look over the records of every County Court in this State, you might search every set of Grand Juries that have ever been impaneled, and you will not find a single instance in which the identical men who composed one Grand Jury have ever composed any preceding or succeeding one. Therefore, it is an impersonal body; a body that comes from the people. They are responsible for every Grand Jury that has ever met, or that ever will meet. If Grand Juries make mistakes, the people themselves are at fault. They can blame nobody. But with this personal accuser, which you propose to have in each county in the State, he is one who will have political enemies. Admit that he is immaculate, and is one even who can make no mistakes, he will have political enemies, and when he indicts a person, that person will be in the Court-room creating a spite and hatred and prejudice against this accusing officer, whoever he may be. This spite will enter into the trial jury, and will have its effect there. Even granting that the accusing officer makes no mistakes, and does his duty rightfully, it will create a prejudice against him which should not exist.

The system would be wrong entirely. There is nothing to commend it. They will urge here, perhaps, that because the Grand Jury system is somewhat expensive, that it should be abolished; that it is troublesome to citizens to come to the Court House and perform, say, two days' labor once a year. It is always a good excuse for a man to give, that he has served once before that year. Now, do you suppose that the people of this State are becoming so estranged from the duties of citizenship that they are not willing to give one or two days' time for service upon the Grand Jury? I do not think that the people have cut loose so entirely from public duty as that. I do not believe they have.

There are many things about the Grand Jury system that are overlooked. Whenever you hear of mobs rising in any part of the country, or of any kind of disorder, at the very next session of the Grand Jury you will hear the Judge charge them that it is their fault and the fault of the juries themselves if crime goes unpunished. But when you get this accusing officer, who will the burden be laid upon? All the blame will be placed upon his shoulders. The people will not feel this responsibility that they now feel. This very responsibility has restrained many a mob—has restrained the feeling to rise and mob in many an instance. But the moment you take the responsibility off the people and leave it in one individual, you destroy that respect, that sense of responsibility, that now rests upon the shoulders of each and every taxpayer in this State. It is not a safe thing to do.

It was not the issue, nor one of the issues, upon which this Convention was voted for by the people in the first place. If any false issues have been raised by candidates while they were running for the Convention, I say that does not make it an issue before the Convention. I say that this was not an issue at the time the people voted for the calling of the Convention. That is the vote upon which we should act, and not the little issues or platforms that each candidate may have set himself upon in order to ride a hobby into the position of delegate to this Convention. The right way is to go back to the vote which called this Convention; and I ask any gentleman upon this floor to show where any such issue was ever raised among the people during that election. This is not one of the issues that called this Convention.

Now, that being the case, and in view of the fact that this Constitution must all go in the same boat—it must all sink or swim together—we should not put a single extra pound of ballast in the ship. From the way it looks now, even if there was no cause for voting against any Constitution that may be adopted, there are enough against it on general principles. There are plenty of people that have made up their minds to vote against it, because they think there is some change to be made in the system of taxation. There is enough of them now; let us not make wreck certain by taking on too much cargo. I think, if you abolish the Grand Jury system you will get a very respectable vote against any Constitution this Convention may adopt, because, if this one thing is taken from the people, I do not believe that they will ever ratify any Constitution that has that plank in it.

[Cries of "Question!"]

Oh, yes, "Question" is a very nice thing to call on an occasion like this. I tell you that this is a thing that the people will not stand; and even if this Convention does abolish the Grand Jury system, the people, when they are called upon to ratify it, will, by their votes, shove it down our throats. The Convention can use its own judgment. I do not propose to trouble it much in the future; but I wish to express this one thing, that I have noticed here a disposition to weigh down the Constitution with things that the people do not want, and to take away rights from them that they never will surrender; which shows, to my mind, an intention to load this Constitution so that we cannot do any good, and to destroy what little good we may be able to do. For that reason, I have some feeling upon this question, and I hope the provision of the old Constitution will be adopted.

SPEECH OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, in common, I see, with a good many other persons, and in common also with a respectable portion of the public press, has entirely misunderstood and mistaken the object and purpose of this amendment. It does not provide for the abolition of Grand Juries. It does not provide for the election or selection of any officer at whose beck or nod any citizen may be placed upon trial for any crime. It does not in any manner encroach upon the liberty of the citizen. Let me explain the proposition as it stands on this amendment. The amendment does not go as far as I, individually, would like to have it. That portion of it which requires that Grand Juries should be summoned in each county once a year, was adopted in deference to the judgment of some gentlemen who seemed to think that there was some use in the system, and that it formed a good check upon public officers, and therefore that we should retain the Grand Jury once a year at least.

Now, what this amendment provides for is this, that while heretofore we have had but one system of prosecution for the higher grade of crimes and misdemeanors, we should have two, and that the Legislature should arrange the detail and mode of process as it does now. For instance, in order to carry out the provision in a Constitution which declares that we shall have a Grand Jury, the Legislature goes in and regulates the times when it shall meet, the number of which it shall be composed, and all the various circumstances which are necessary to give the system effective operation. We propose to allow the Legislature to continue that system just as much as it pleases, to preserve, if it pleases, all the laws which now regulate it, but at the same time, we provide for another system of prosecution which may be found very convenient; not in any manner oppressive to any citizen, as I shall show, and free from the great mischiefs which exist under the Grand Jury system at present—a system which will expedite trials, which will save a very large expense to all the counties of this State. Now, the system of prosecution by information which we propose here is the one which has been adopted in Michigan. It exists in Wisconsin, where the institution of the Grand Jury has been abolished, and by a popular vote of upwards of two thirds of the people—as I am informed by a vote of forty-eight thousand to eighteen thousand. It introduces a system simple, inexpensive, free from the abuses which now attend the Grand Jury system, and which will enable justice to be administered far more speedily than it is now. Let me explain the system as it is regulated by statute in Michigan. In that State their Constitution is silent about the mode in which criminal offenses shall be prosecuted. It is left entirely to the discretion of the Legislature. Now, the Michigan Legislature has provided a complete Grand Jury system, just as we have, but it has annexed to it this proviso, that no Grand Jury shall ever be drawn or summoned in any Circuit Court—answering to our District Courts here—except upon the order of the Circuit Judge. It provides further for prosecution by information; that when a person is accused of crime he shall have a regular, open, public examination before a magistrate, where he shall be fully heard and have witnesses in his defense. Then if the magistrate, upon the evidence, thinks that there is sufficient to hold him to trial, he makes out a commitment. The papers are then forwarded to the District Attorney. The District Attorney is required then by law to examine these depositions and the circumstances of the case, and if upon that examination he is of opinion that there is not enough evidence to hold the party accused—not sufficient to place him upon trial—he then passes the papers to the Circuit Judge. The Circuit Judge examines them, and if in his opinion the party should be put on trial he is placed on trial; if not, he is discharged.

Now that, in brief, is the system. It creates no officer at whose mercy the citizen is thrown. The citizen has this safeguard. In the first instance there is a public examination, upon complaint, before a magistrate. In the next place, if the magistrate, after hearing all the testimony on both sides in an open public inquiry, thinks that he should be tried, the papers go to the District Attorney. If the District Attorney thinks he ought not to be tried the papers go to the District Judge, and if he agrees with the District Attorney the party, instead of being kept in jail for months to await a session of the Grand Jury, is discharged. If, on the other hand, the District Judge thinks that the man ought to be tried, if he agrees with the magistrate upon that subject, then the District Attorney is directed to file his information. That is immediately done and the party can have his fair, impartial trial before a petit jury. I see no oppression and no injustice, and no one-man power in this proceeding.

It has been in operation in the State of Michigan for more than twenty years. They have had, side by side, the two systems. The Grand Jury system and the system which we suggest, and which has been adopted there; they are both on the statute books, side by side. They have had the experience of the new system, and they have found that it is rarely necessary, in the judgment of any Court there, to summon a Grand Jury. One gentleman, a member of this Convention, Mr. Beerstecher, who resided in that State for ten years prior to his coming to California, informs me that in the county in which he resided there was but one Grand Jury during the period of ten years, because it was found that justice was amply done without the intervention of any Grand Jury.

Now, let us look at the Grand Jury system, and see whether it is a bulwark of our liberties at all. It is all very well to say that it comes to us surrounded by all the splendors of antiquity. That is perfectly true, and I recognize the soundness of the principle that where a system has been found to work well for a long time, we ought to be careful in making innovations upon it; but at the same time, the mere fact that a particular plan or system has existed for a great number of years, is no reason why it should necessarily exist forever—why changes of laws adapted to the changed condition of society should not be adopted. We all know that within the lifetime of many of the members of this Convention it was the recognized medical practice, in cases of fever, to shut the patient up in a close room; to exclude the fresh air and give him hot drinks when his tongue was parched, and all nature cried aloud for something to cool his burning throat. It is within our own memory how thousands were slaughtered by this kind of treatment, until one day a patient, laboring under a high fever and clamoring for something to cool his parched throat, seized a pitcher full of cold water, emptied it down his throat, and fell back upon his bed, burst out into a perspiration, went to sleep, and was cured. Then the idea dawned on the medical fraternity that it might, perhaps, be a good thing to satisfy the cravings of nature in that direction. So with regard to the old theory, that it was necessary to keep a man in a room where the light was not permitted to enter. All that has been exploded, with the most happy and fortunate results. So with the introduction of the Yankee plow into the fields where they had always plowed the ground with a branch of a tree, it would be an innovation most dangerous to society to allow this Yankee plow to be introduced.

Now let us look at this system of the Grand Jury and see what we would think of it if it was proposed to-day for the first time. Suppose there never had been any Grand Jury, and some gentleman, a member of this Convention, was to rise from his seat and say: "Gentlemen of the Convention, I have a panacea here; I have something to cure all public ills; I have something which will be an effectual safeguard to the public and to the citizen. I propose that in each county in the State, at every term of the Court, there shall be drawn at random from the body of the county, or from the taxpayers, or any other class, a certain number of men; and these men shall get together in secret conclave; their proceedings shall be entirely private; they shall be under oath not to communicate their secrets or their knowledge of what takes place among them to the outside world: but they shall sit as a private inquest upon the life and liberty of every citizen in the community. I suggest and propose it in the name of public liberty." Now let me ask you what would the answer to that suggestion be? It is needless to say what the answer would be. Such a proposition would be laughed out of this Convention.

Now, a few of the evils of it. In the first place, I think it is fair to say that the smallest expense to the counties of this State of the Grand Jury system, is from one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to two hundred thousand dollars a year. In the City of San Francisco, at one time during the present year, there were two hundred men in the County Jail of the City and County of San Francisco awaiting the action of the Grand Jury. Two hundred men supported at one time in the midst of crime and vice, in the worst school of crime possible, and there awaiting the action of the Grand Jury! In other counties it is the same. In Sacramento here, during all the time that this Convention has been in session, there has been a Grand Jury in session, if I am correctly informed. For months there have been cases accumulating before them. There have been persons committed for trial in all parts of the county; and then these Grand Juries are summoned, and the prisoners have to wait until that Grand Jury can meet before there is any chance to have a hearing. There is an immense expense entailed. There is an increase of crime and vice created by associating accused persons with others of depraved and bad character.

Then, again, what further do we find? You take it in a large city like San Francisco, and I say that it is notorious there, that so far from the Grand Jury system being a shield and a protection to the poor, that it is nothing else but a shield and protection to rich scoundrels. You take a man who will have a corporation interest to sustain him, a banking power or stock exchange power—any of those great powers which exist there—and it is absolutely impossible to indict him. I can call to mind an instance not very long ago, where three times the acts of a public officer was laid before the Grand Jury, where the proofs were clear and the acts notorious, but it had so happened that the interests of certain powerful corporations were in some manner around him as a protection, and that it was impossible to get any Grand Jury to indict him. To endeavor to cure that evil, the Legislature has undertaken at the last session to increase the number of Grand Jurors in order that there might be some hope that through this secret tribunal, whose proceedings are unknown to the public, there might be an indictment found against some rich manipulator. Now, sir, I say that so far from being a protection to anybody in that point of view, it is an institution which stands between the wealthy and powerful and a just administration of the law.

Take it in another point of view. A man desires to disgrace another against whom he has a grudge; there is an opportunity to go before a secret tribunal, and where the party accused knows nothing at all about it—where, if he had any knowledge of that accusation, he could refute it on the spot—still the party making it may steal up the back stairs into the Grand Jury room and there procure an indictment which will involve the disgrace of a man for life, without any redress or any remedy. In that city, and I believe it is the custom elsewhere, that except in very extreme or special cases, where there is a very important reason for it, the Grand Juries make it a rule that no man shall be heard before the Grand Jury unless he has first gone before a committing magistrate and given the other party an opportunity to show whether he is guilty or innocent.

Now, sir, what are the benefits of this system? Let us look. I inquired of the County Clerk of my county the other day; I went to see how many indictments were found in cases in which a committing magistrate had not first acted and committed the party. I found that between the first of January and the last of September there had been one hundred and thirty-six cases before the Grand Jury of that county. In one hundred and thirty-three of those cases the parties had been committed for trial previously by a committing magistrate. I think that will be found to be the case in almost every county, that the number of original indictments, as I call them—those indictments found without previous examination before a magistrate, is exceedingly trifling. I know that it is in San Francisco, in perhaps a greater proportion than it is in Alameda. I presume the experience of other gentlemen will bear me out in regard to their several counties. Now we give the defendant this advantage, instead of locking him up—because the vast majority of those who are committed for various offenses under felonies are persons who are unable to give bail—you give the defendant this advantage, that when the committing magistrate finds that there is a prima facie case against him, the papers are immediately transmitted to the District Attorney; the District Attorney examines them, looks at the circumstances of the case, and if he finds that really the evidence is wholly insufficient, he simply turns over the papers to the District Judge and makes a report to the Judge that the evidence is insufficient to put the man upon trial. The Judge looks over the evidence and the circumstances, and if he agrees with the District Attorney the defendant is discharged. I do not think you will find, as a proposition, once in ten times, that the Judge of the District and the prosecuting attorney will concur upon that subject, unless the man ought to be discharged, but if he ought he will be discharged.

Now, it is said that Grand Juries are useful because otherwise the District Attorney might act the oppressor. We all know as a matter of fact that Grand Juries are guided in reference to this matter of the propriety of finding indictments by the advice of the District Attorney. He is really, as a general proposition, the controlling officer there. Now, the system which I propose, and which I think should be adopted, would be perfectly free from these embarrassments which attend the Grand Jury system, and, on the other hand, would save the people of the State from an enormous expense annually. But if the system of prosecution by information did not work well, why there is the Grand Jury system still in operation. One may be summoned whenever you desire. But how is it now? We have got to consider the geography of this State and the extent of its territory. You take it in large counties with small populations. Perhaps two or three men are in the county jail. They have been committed by a committing magistrate for stealing a horse, or for burglary, or highway robbery, or something of that kind. Is there any earthly necessity that a jury should be drawn, that men should be taken from their homes hundreds of miles, for the purpose of going to the county seat and simply indorsing the act of the magistrate, or saying that the magistrate committed on insufficient evidence? Why not give the man, if innocent, a chance for a speedy trial? If the depositions are insufficient to warrant his trial it is not likely that the District Attorney will have him placed upon trial. They will discharge him as an innocent man, in their judgment, certainly, if the circumstances do not require that he should be placed upon his trial. If, however, he is to be placed upon trial, he has a speedy opportunity to vindicate his innocence before a jury of twelve men.

It is better far for innocent men; it is better for the country; it is better in every point of view. But if it should turn out that I am mistaken, then it is in the power of the Legislature and of the Courts to resort to the Grand Jury system. It leaves the discretion with the Legislature. It may fail to provide any process by which this trial by information may be had, or it may provide that Grand Juries shall be drawn at stated periods, or it may authorize the Courts to call them whenever in their judgment a Grand Jury is necessary. We do not, in this amendment, abolish the Grand Jury. For my own part there is a portion of the amendment which, as I before stated, was agreed to by myself as a matter of deference to the opinions of others, and that is that there should be a Grand Jury once a year.

I have heard but one argument which is worth an answer in favor of the Grand Jury system. It is claimed by some gentlemen that it exercises a wholesome supervision over county officers. Now, does it? It may, perhaps, occasionally. A county officer may be afraid that the Grand Jury will come around and examine his books and find something wrong in the conduct of his office. Now if you propose to examine into the affairs of a county officer, I do not know of any more unwieldly and useless body than a Grand Jury. When they do meet for such purposes they invariably employ experts to do the work—that is, to make examinations of the accounts of the public officers—which could be very easily done without any Grand Jury, by a simple order of the District Court or Board of Supervisors, without all this cumbrous machinery, this secret tribunal, the very nature of which is repugnant really to our ideas of right. It is a tribunal which can exclude evidence, for while it is true that the statute allows them to call in evidence for the defense if they think fit, yet if they do not think fit they do not do it. But take the nature of a trial before a Grand Jury and who can imagine anything worse than a sort of trial before a secret body where the prosecution is represented and the defense is not.

Now, take it and see what it does in point of fact. I am speaking now of the larger cities in the State; other gentlemen representing counties in the interior can speak of the matter for themselves. In San Francisco the Grand Jury gets together. It is charged by the Court and a whole mass of papers is sent before it. There will be probably a hundred men committed for trial whose cases it is to examine into. It is a body which remain in existence but for a brief period. It is selected without any consideration of the individual qualifications of its members. But it gets together, and under the management of the District Attorney, these cases are examined into. He governs the action of the body in relation to finding bills of indictment. In the next place, on some fine day, it starts out in carriages and takes a drive out to the county jail, walks through the city prison, goes out to the almshouse, from there to the Industrial School, and it finally comes back and makes a hasty report of what it has done; that it has visited all the public institutions; that the expenses of the county are much too great—which everybody knows; that the almshouse is a model institution—which is pretty generally believed; that the city prison of San Francisco is a perfect disgrace to civilization and the city—which it always has been and everybody knows it; and then they generally end by saying that they have been extremely diligent, and that though they are satisfied that there is something wrong in the condition of public affairs, they do not know exactly who is to blame, and it would be well to have some other Grand Jury examine into it; then with a splendid compliment to the District Attorney, the Grand Jury adjourns and vanishes into thin air. That is the regular history of a San Francisco Grand Jury, and it is the same in the larger counties of this State. In most of the counties, I am inclined to think it is a good deal in the same way, as the experience of gentlemen will tell you.

I do not desire to detain the Convention, but at the same time I think we ought to give the Legislature an opportunity to present before the people a system which will be free from these defects; which will enable men who are accused of crime, in the first place, to have an open and public examination, before no secret tribunal at all, and which will enable them to have a speedy and impartial trial if they are committed. I think we would be wrong in preventing the Legislature from adopting such a course as that.

And so far as this matter is concerned, of being spoken of before the people, I will say this, that prior to the election at which I was chosen a member, I had occasion on several instances to speak of the very evils of this Grand Jury system, and to express in public to the people my opinion that it should be abolished. I met with no dissenting answer among my constituents. On the contrary, I met with most urgent requests that if elected I should urge this matter before this body. I think if you could get the public opinion of the State to-day you would find that a large majority of the people would be in favor of doing away with a system which is useless in its results, which is incapable of good in the future, and substituting a system more simple, more efficacious, and more just to the citizen and to the people.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: There are, certainly, two sides to this question; and however much the abuse of the system may be regretted, this Convention would do well to pause and reflect as to the result of the abolition of the Grand Jury system. It has been asserted by the last speaker upon the floor that it was not intended to abolish the Grand Jury system by the provision reported by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department. The section reported was as follows:

"SEC. 8. Offenses heretofore required to be prosecuted by indictment, shall be prosecuted by indictment or information, as may be prescribed by law; but a Grand Jury shall be drawn and summoned at least once a year in each county."

Which one of these systems will be prescribed by law? Which one will your Legislature drop upon when they come to provide for the punishment of your criminals? Will they say that it shall be done by indictment, or that it shall be done by information? Give it up? You may well give it up.

Now the financial question, as connected with this jury system, is the most feeble objection that has been urged upon this floor. We hardly ever propose, when in our sober senses, to weigh character against money, life against money, or the dearest interests of society against dollars and cents. It is not the habit of the correctly thinking mind. The consideration of dollars and cents to be weighed against the dearest interests of society and the protection of human liberty, is simply an absurdity. Upon this question, however, let me ask how many petit juries are saved, so far as expense is concerned, by the sitting of the Grand Jury? When men through passion or prejudice bring complaints against men, they are generally stopped in the Grand Jury; but if this new plan is adopted, crimes of the highest nature will be charged against your best citizens, and they will be dragged into your Police Courts. I do not stand here for the purpose of defending these persons, but so far as those who are unable to help themselves are concerned, I stand here for their defense.

Now, I say that this is a consideration, and this is an argument that is well worthy of consideration. The expense of one half dozen petit juries before your tribunals, is enough to pay for all your Grand Juries for a whole year in every county of the State. One half dozen bills ignored by your Grand Jury is sufficient to pay the whole expense of your Grand Jury in each of your counties. So much with reference to dollars and cents alone. This, however, is the smallest consideration in relation to the matter. It is the effect of permitting this voluntary intermeddling with private characters by private individuals, to gratify malice and malice alone. Whereas, if these higher offenses were prosecuted before a Grand Jury, these cases would be ignored by your Grand Jury, and the disgraceful scenes that are transpiring daily in your lower Courts would not be enacted before your highest tribunals. Does any one presume to say that such a result will not be brought about if this Grand Jury system were abolished?

I decline to enter into the history of the rise of this institution. It is well understood by those gentlemen who have been practicing law for the last twenty years. What was the origin of this Grand Jury system? It is not beyond reason to assert that the same reason which gave our origin to the Grand Jury system will occur again. It is not unreasonable to suppose, that even in this country power may be asserted, and does exist to-day, that may become an oppression to the people. There is a power that is growing and gaining strength in this land, that by its influence may oppress the poor, and the Grand Jury system will be the sole protection against it. I undertake to say, that we are not free even from the toils of the ambitious on this land.

I propose now to read one little, short sentence from "Proffatt on Jury Trials," not for the purpose of proving that the position I assume is absolutely true, but simply for an illustration of the position which I take:

'In the reign of James I, it was held by the Lord Chancellor, the two Justices, and the Chief Baron, that when an indicted party is found guilty, the jury shall not be questioned; but when a jury acquitted a felon, or traitor, against manifest proof, they may be charged before the Star Chamber 'for their partiality in finding a manifest offender not guilty.' This doctrine was extended to the case of fining a Grand Jury when they ignored a bill; and an instance of it occurred in sixteen hundred and sixty-seven, when Chief Justice Kelying fined a Grand Jury of the County of Somerset for refusing to find a true bill of murder against a man; but 'because they were gentlemen of repute in the county the Court spared the fine.'"

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is an example or illustration of what I undertake to say is not beyond a probability in this land. When a gentleman of repute is brought before the tribunals for punishment he is spared the fine. Aye, and he is spared the prosecution. Why? Because the humblest citizen in the land is not permitted to approach the dignified Court that sits in state for the purpose of hearing his complaint, and he is spurned from its threshold simply because of his humble condition. The Grand Jury is supposed to come from the body of the people, and to hear complaints when they are brought, when this tribunal will turn a deaf ear. These things are occurring daily even now in the midst of our people, and the spirit is growing more and more through the land, and an aristocracy breeding here in this free America that is hardly willing even to tolerate the presence of the poor at the feet of Justice. Cut off from the people this poor boon and you have cut off from them the right to approach the judgment seat against the millionaire. Cut off from a man the right of entering before the Grand Jury, and you have awed him into silence in the presence of the magistrate. This is what the Grand Jury was instituted for the purpose of avoiding—even as a protection or bulwark against the crowned heads. It stands here to-day as a protection against an aristocracy in this free California. I undertake to say that it will be a sorry day for the poor people of this land when this system is given up or done away with. I say it matters not what may have been its origin. I take it as it is, and hold it to be the bulwark of the poor or oppressed in this land, and it is absurd for gentlemen to weigh in the scale against this system the paltry consideration of dollars and cents as an argument. I am opposed to the abolition of this jury system. I am opposed to it for the reasons which I have asserted, and for some others which I have not asserted; and I shall vote for the amendment as offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the entire annihilation of the Grand Jury system, and in that assertion I believe I am speaking the sentiments of the electors of the City and County of San Francisco. The gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, has said here that it was not an issue before the people. How it may have been with him I know not, sir, but with us it was an issue. There was hardly a meeting held under the auspices of the party which elected me at which the Grand Jury system was not denounced in unmeasured terms. The people understood that we were hostile to it, and they voted for us knowing that to be the fact. I indorse, sir, every single word stated by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, with regard to its entire uselessness any longer as an agent or functionary in the administration of criminal justice. The reasons for its establishment have long since fled, sir. Where in the beginning it was used as a means of protection to the citizen, it has now become converted into an instrument of despotism and an engine of oppression.

I speak more particularly of its operations in the City and County of San Francisco, because I have watched its operations more particularly there. I assert, sir, that it is contrary to the genius of our free institutions, and contrary to the genius of civilization itself. That one feature of secrecy alone is sufficient to condemn it, without one single other consideration. It has been maintained and adhered to because of the law and order loving spirit of the people, and because of the attachment of the American people to established institutions long after their judgment has condemned them. But it is not true that the enlightened people of the United States are longer adhering to it. All over, where modern Conventions have been held, it has been either entirely abolished or the means have been placed at the hands of the Legislature for its abolition.

I furthermore maintain that it is the necessary and logical sequence of the action of this Convention yesterday in regard to the petit jury system, that it should be followed up by the destruction of the Grand Jury system, because every lawyer knows that a trial by the common law jury was a necessary sequence to an indictment. If you abolish the petit jury you want no more indictments. Now, sir, I reiterate the statement of the gentleman from Alameda in regard to San Francisco, that the Grand Jury there present no indictments and make no accusations of their own volition, as understood and contemplated should be done by them. They have been drawn from the various sections of large counties where they are cognizant of things in their region, or the vicinity where they live, which they themselves could bring to the knowledge of their associates upon the Grand Jury, but that is never entered upon now, sir. They are all brought under the cognizance of the committing magistrates of the City and County of San Francisco, and must all come through the hands of the District Attorney. He wants a person or persons indicted, and that is all there is about it. The particular objection to the Grand Jury there has been that those who are backed by large means, or by rich and powerful associations, use the Grand Jury to escape the punishment of their crimes. They have all the time used it. Where the District Attorney, for his own purposes, or for their purposes, sees fit to do so he can make an engine of oppression out of that very institution. I myself was concerned, and these delegates elected from San Francisco, in a case that distinctly illustrates that proposition. Denis Kearney, Dr. O'Donnell, Wellock, and various parties, as is well known, were arrested in San Francisco upon numerous charges. Among other charges preferred against them was one that they had committed a riot, by holding a meeting on Nob Hill, within the sacred precincts of the magnates of the railroad corporation. They were taken before a committing magistrate. It was fully examined before the committing magistrate. I myself appeared as one of the associate counsel for the defense, and after a full and complete examination of the foundationless and groundless charge against these men he discharged them. Now he did not send it before the Grand Jury. That ought to have been the end of that charge. What happened? Hostility existed between that magistrate and the District Attorney. After the sitting of the next Grand Jury the District Attorney presents that very identical case, that very identical charge, in the shape of an indictment, before the very identical Court which had discharged them. They were compelled to undergo the expense of a trial all over again about the very identical matter, and which resulted in the fiasco, the history of which is well known.

It is called a Grand Jury. What there is grand about it I am unable to see. It is one of those relics of antiquity, of by-gone civilization, and I suppose that the word "grand" is brought in as a part of the splendor which used to surround that institution. And it is anything but grand, Mr. Chairman, especially in its character of a smelling committee. It goes around, after due and sufficient notice has been given that it will appear at a certain time before the public institutions, and they are very diligent in preparing for the reception. They wash out all the filth that is not too thick to be gotten out of the way, and by the use of chlorate of lime make it as clean as possible, and the Grand Jury goes smelling around there and perhaps gets something to drink. They do not go and talk to the prisoners; they do not go and talk to the paupers, and find out whether they are suffering. Not at all, sir. They go back and flatter and tickle one another. They put in a report lauding the fidelity and zeal of these officers. When they get through, the District Attorney rises in Court and praises the Grand Jury for the arduous services they have rendered, and the Grand Jury, in return, tickles the District Attorney with resolutions about his promptitude, and give him a lift for the next election. They have accomplished nothing; achieved nothing; done nothing that in any manner can be one particle of use in the administration of criminal justice. Therefore, I am in favor of its total abolition. The gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, has given the subject careful consideration, and I consider the reasons which he gave as being conclusive.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee: So far as I am concerned, individually, I recognize that I have some reverence for the institutions of the past. I recognize that there have people lived in the past who were as wise as we are. I believe, sir, that the institutions that have existed for hundreds of years and have met the necessities of the times and wants of the people are precedents by which we may be guided. I believe that this Convention cannot, if it tries, reform all the evils that are recognized throughout the world. I do not believe, sir, that the two last gentlemen—or rather the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, and the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour—have stated in their arguments any good reason for changing this great, and, what I believe to be, glorious system—the Grand Jury system. One or two reasons have been given, it is true. One is a purely financial one, namely, that it is expensive. The other is that the Grand Juries are corrupt. These are the only two reasons that have been submitted to this Convention for its consideration. As to its expense I have nothing to say. Liberty is expensive. Anything by which the rights of life, liberty, and property is secured is attended with expense and inconvenience to the people, and if you propose to measure these sacred rights by the amount of money it costs, then I will leave the further consideration of that question to the gentleman who first opened this debate. For one, I think that there are certain interests that are worth protection, even if they are expensive. But I deny that they would be more expensive.

We will suppose you have an honest District Attorney in a city like San Francisco. A charge is brought before him, and what is his position? It hardly matters how frivolous the charge. There is some responsible party says that a man is guilty of some offense, and he is almost placed in a position where he is bound to bring the man before a jury and have him tried.

MR. CAMPBELL. The proposition is merely this: that the District Attorney may file an information after the party has been examined and committed by a committing magistrate.

MR. ESTEE. I will come to that. This is the essence of the thing, because the committing magistrate merely says that a public offense has probably been committed, but the District Attorney passes upon it. He decides whether that man shall be tried or not. Take San Francisco, with its population of three hundred thousand—probably in ten years five hundred thousand—and let one man—I care not how pure he is, I care not how brilliant he may be in his profession, I care not how exalted his position—have the power to say that he will try you for felony, or me for felony, or this man for misdemeanor, or that man for misdemeanor, bring him before a jury of his peers and try him—see what a power he has got. See what a position it would place the District Attorney in. I claim that this is not the remedy for the evil, if there be one. I confess right here that I disagree entirely with the gentleman from Alameda and the gentleman from San Francisco, relative to the corruption of these Grand Juries. The gentleman from Alameda says that the Grand Jury system in San Francisco is a shield for rich scoundrels. I deny it. Standing here in this presence, responsible for every word I say, I say that the Grand Juries of San Francisco, for the last twelve or fifteen years, have generally been the purest men in the community. The petit jurors are the ones who let the most scoundrels free. The Grand Juries of San Francisco have always been the best class of our people, representing every interest, representing every impulse of the people, representing every emotion, if I may so speak, of the people. Coming together with no motive to oppress and every reason to see that punishment is awarded, if any crime has been committed. Sir, with some very rare exceptions, no case of a Grand Jury can be pointed out where they have let rich scoundrels out.

Look at all these rich scoundrels that the gentleman might refer to. Look at the Fair case. She was indicted by a Grand Jury. Look at all these cases that have become historical in San Francisco. Indictments have been found against the proper parties, and under the peculiar operations and machinations of counsel, by the circumstances of witnesses being got out of the way, and all this various modus operandi that is so familiar to gentlemen who defend criminals, they have gone clear. Criminals have been cleared by petit juries, not by Grand Juries. I am not here in this respect, however, to argue that Grand Juries have never done wrong. I am not here to say that there are not instances in San Francisco where they have done wrong, but I want to see the man, the public officer, or the institution that has never done any wrong. But if we are going to tear down the pillars of this institution that has come to us by so many years of experience, recommended by the wise men who lived before us, let us have some tangible reason for it. Let us find some abiding precedent for it. Let us find a reason that the people can see and understand and that we can point to and say, "there is a wrong that has been committed on the people and here is the remedy we are going to give the people in exchange." I disagree also with the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, about the recent action of Constitutional Conventions. I find, sir, so far as I have been able to observe, not in a single instance have they changed the Grand Jury system. The last Constitutional Convention was in Missouri, where they say:

"That no person shall for a felony be proceeded against criminally otherwise than by indictment, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger," etc.

Again, in Pennsylvania they lay down the same doctrine in their Constitution of eighteen hundred and seventy-three. The Illinois Constitution I have not yet examined on this point, but I understand that it is the same.

MR. BARBOUR. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the Constitution of Georgia in eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, where it is left out altogether; and to the Constitution of Colorado of eighteen hundred and seventy-six, where they provide that the general assembly may abolish it.

MR. ESTEE. I do not have them before me now. If the gentleman has found those cases he is entitled to that precedent. But let me say right here, that in the rural districts—that is, in a State like Wisconsin or Minnesota, or even Georgia, where there are no large cities—the reasons for Grand Juries are not so strong. I confess that in some of the counties of this State, where every man knows every other man in the county, where there are no large places, there is no necessity for a Grand Jury very frequently. I understand that perfectly. What I claim is, that it would be bad policy, that it would be contrary to the best experience of the wise men that have lived for one hundred years, to strike at this great institution, and say that from this on the Grand Jury system shall be abolished.

But they tell us, you may have a little of both. A little of both means not much of either. You may have a Grand Jury once a year. Better abolish it at once, for that amounts to nothing. Either take the whole thing, if it is right, Mr. Chairman, or abolish the Grand Jury system altogether, and adopt this system offered by the gentleman from Alameda. If it is wrong, let us abolish it. Let us not divide the responsibility between the Grand Jury and the District Attorney.

I believe that the Grand Jury system has worked well in the past, and for one, where I find in the old Constitution a provision which seems to have worked favorably for the whole people I do not propose calmly to consent to its abolition. For one, I recognize that men have lived before us whose experience may be worthy of our imitation, and whose advice and counsels we may safely follow. For one, I recognize that that old Constitution, or much of it, is among the best written organic laws adopted by any State in the Union, and I hope, sir, unless for the very gravest reasons, that this Convention will not feel it to be its duty to destroy whatever there is that is valuable and good in the old Constitution merely to make a change. Unless there is some marked evil, some great wrong to be perpetrated on the people, and some remedy enforced to remove it, I say that we owe it to ourselves, we owe it to the dignity and honor of the past, we owe it to the law, which it is the duty of every citizen to obey, that we should make no change merely for the sake of change. I hope if you are going to abolish the Grand Jury system you will take it as a whole. Instead of lopping off a part of it, let us abolish the whole of it. If it is wrong to keep it, let us take the whole of it, and let the people try the new system, pure and simple.

SPEECH OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I have three reasons for speaking upon this question. First—I differ with the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, who says this was not an issue in the recent campaign. It may not have been an issue in the gentleman's district, but as aptly stated by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, it was a matter that was actively canvassed in San Francisco in the political meetings prior to the election of the nineteenth day of June last, and the almost unanimous verdict was that the Grand Jury system, if not abolished, should at leas tbe modified. Second—The gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, has referred to myself as having lived in a State where the Grand Jury has been abolished—namely, Michigan, and having personally seen the workings of the criminal code without the aid or assistance of the Grand Jury for over nine years, during the greater part of the time being actively engaged in the practice of law. Third—As a member of the Judiciary Committee who have made the report recommending the abolition of the Grand Jury system.

Mr. President, for these reasons, and because I consider the Grand Jury system as useless in the present age and condition of government. If a crime is committed and an arrest made, an examination results. The person accused is either held or discharged—gives bail or is sent to jail—sent to jail not to await his trial—not to be placed before a jury of his countrymen, but to have his case passed upon by a secret tribunal without the privilege of being heard in his defense. He lies in jail one, two, or three months. His case is at last brought before the Grand Jury, who, after a one-sided examination, determine whether he is to remain in jail and eventually be tried, or to be discharged. In this way men are confined in prisons for months without being tried by a jury of their countrymen. It has been stated that the Grand Jury is the bulwark of the liberties of the people, that unless the Grand Jury exists it will be impossible to convict criminals. Mr. President, I deny the assertion. In conversation with one of the eminent jurists who occupies a seat on this floor, some weeks ago, the gentleman expressed himself upon the Grand Jury system by stating that a client of his committed a crime, for which he was about to be proceeded against by the Grand Jury.

I here call particular attention, Mr. President, to the fact that a person whose case is about to be examined by a Grand Jury has a right to challenge the Grand Jury as an array or as individuals, if he is financially able to secure men of sufficient shrewdness to work upon the Grand Jury. He can stave off indictments for an indefinite period. Section one hundred and eighty-three of the Penal Code provides for challenges to Grand Jurors upon the ground, among others, "That the Grand Juror has formed or expressed an unqualified opinion or belief that the defendant is guilty or not guilty of the offense charged," and "that a state of mind exists on the part of the juror in reference to the case of either party, that satisfies the Court that he cannot act impartially without prejudice to the substantial rights of the party challenging." The gentleman to whom I referred, when he ascertained that his client was about to be indicted, used the means necessary to render a sufficient number of Grand Jurors incompetent to find a bill. When the time came to examine into the case of his client, the gentleman went before the Grand Jury and challenged the several men composing that Grand Jury until he reduced the number of Grand Jurors below twelve, the number necessary to find a verdict. The same method was used for two years, and the client went free.

Mr. President, I take up the San Francisco papers of to-day, and I find therein a list of the Grand Jurors summoned to set upon the jury just called. How easy a matter it is for a man of wealth to so use his means as to form a bias of opinion in the minds of the men whose names have been published to-day. The gentlemen of whom I have spoken made use of means of that character. It can easily be done. It is not necessary to influence the whole Grand Jury, it is only necessary to prejudice, and by representations, so to form a bias in their minds, that when the attorney for the person about to be indicted appears before the Grand Jury and questions them concerning their opinions of the man about to be indicted, they say they have formed opinions. In that way in San Francisco, numberless indictments that should have been, have not been found. Yea, the men against whom they should have been found, who should have been pounding stones at San Quentin for years and years, are to-day free in the streets of San Francisco.

I deny the fact that the Grand Jury is a protection to the poor man, to the laboring man. The Grand Jury to-day is useless, as only acts as a shield to the rich rascal. The gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington, has advanced an argument—citing cases from the time of Henry IV of England, showing how Grand Jurors were brought before the Chancellor of England and fined because they had neglected their duty—failing to indict. Is not this an argument against Grand Juries—a conclusive argument? As far back as the time of Henry IV of England, Grand Juries have been subject to bribery and outward influence. This does not show to me that they are the grand bulwarks of liberty.

One objection, above all others, that I have to the Grand Jury system is this: the system removes individual responsibility—divides the responsibility among many. If the magistrate before whom a complaint is made is individually responsible to the public; if the Prosecuting Attorney, whose duty it is to prosecute, is individually responsible to the public, they will be more vigilant, more careful in the discharge of their duties, than when the responsibility is spread among so large a number as a Grand Jury.

The trouble with this government to-day is the shifting of individual responsibility from men who, occupying official stations, ought to be directly responsible to the people. What we must do to cleanse and purify the public service is to render every man individually responsible. The more individual responsibility the more security of life, liberty, and the rights of property. I revere the ancient, I believe in the antique, but in order to retain the ancient among the institutions of the living present, more should be urged in its behalf than age. Age is no argument. They must show that it is of practical living utility to-day. If age were an argument we might go back to the right of trial by battle, by ordeals. I have no doubt that the people once believed the right of trial by battle or ordeal as essential and necessary a guarantee of the liberties of old England as the gentleman from San Bernardino believes the Grand Jury system to be necessary to guarantee the liberties of the citizen of California to-day, but the people have discarded those antiquated beliefs, because having no other recommendation than age. Institutions with no other recommendation than age had better fall and be buried in the closets of the past. We can look upon them with reverence, looking down the vista of years, but they must not stand as a stumbling block in the pathway of the living present.

It has been urged that if the Grand Jury system be abolished it will inaugurate a one-man power. I deny the assertion, as was aptly said by my colleague from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. His statement shows but one case, but, were it necessary, citations might be multiplied until thousands of cases might be shown. I am willing to let it stand upon the one case. Certain gentlemen in San Francisco were arrested for inciting riot, and brought before Judge Ferral for examination, who, after hearing the evidence, discharged them. Mr. Murphy, the prosecuting attorney, actuated by personal motives, brought the matter before the Grand Jury, and, by exercise of "one-man power," procured an indictment. He brought these gentlemen to trial before Judge Ferral's Court, where a petit jury acquitted them. The Grand Jury, in every case of doubt, rely wholly upon what the prosecuting attorney tells them as to finding or ignoring bills.

But gentlemen have said, this may all be so, but there yet remains a something, that if you wipe out the system there will be nothing to supply, and that is the power of visitation and examination into public departments. These visitations remind me of my schoolboy days. The Directors came visiting once in three months; the scholars all upon good behavior, drawn up in dress parade, for a week before drilled upon certain questions and their answers. The gentlemen came into the school room, the teacher handed them a printed document upon which were the questions which we were drilled to answer. Of course no honorable gentleman would go outside the printed questions. Everything went off smoothly, we were the best and wisest scholars in the blessed land of Pennsylvania. That is just the way with the Grand Jury visitations. All preparations are made to receive them. Everything is put upon a dress parade footing. It is just no visitation at all. But there are other methods of getting at this matter. There is no reason why the Board of Supervisors of every county should not resolve themselves into a Board of Visitations. That is the method in the State of Michigan. The Grand Jury system has never in my opinion been the bulwark of liberty. The petit jury has always stood between the encroachments of capital, the encroachment of the Crown, and the rights of the people. I challenge the gentleman who spoke so favorably for the retention of the Grand Jury system, to tell me why, if the Grand Jury has been such a bulwark of liberty, the petit jury was called into life. The Grand Juries were always willing to find indictments for the corrupt monarchs of England, but it was the petit jury that stood between the Crown and the people. In this State, having counties as large as many Eastern States, if a man enters a corral and steals a horse, being seen by a dozen men in the act, if caught the Sheriff must scour the country for hundreds of miles to secure a sufficient number of qualified persons to act upon a Grand Jury, to find an indictment allowing the law to proceed against the scoundrel. This does not seem to me justice or economy. The State should be allowed to try—to punish malefactors without the intervention of a Grand Jury. The people are loudly calling for redress.

Mr. President, I do not care for buncombe speeches about liberty, and how the people are going to rise up in anguish and denounce men who are trying to wipe out this vestige of antiquity. I do not believe it. The people of California are a people of progress, and demand that the Grand Jury system be wiped out. Taking into consideration the fact that an examination results in incarceration until the meeting of a

Grand Jury. Then, after finding of a bill, there is a further incarceration until the meeting of a petit jury, the expense of the unnecessary keeping of prisoners, and of the Grand Jury—it costs the State of California hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly—uselessly thrown away on a system that has lost its usefulness. The system as practiced in the State of Michigan is simply this: If a party knows that a crime has been committed he proceeds to an examining magistrate. He states his case. If the magistrate believes a sufficient case exists, he reduces that statement to writing, and has the person making the statement subscribe it and swear to it, and upon that statement he predicates an order for arrest. The person believed to have committed the offense is sent for. The examining magistrate, with the aid and assistance of the Prosecuting Attorney, inquires into, first—whether an offense has been committed; second—whether there is reasonable cause to believe that the party under arrest has committed the offense. If he finds both of these things, in his opinion, he orders the person to be sent to jail or admitted to bail. Then, on the first day of the succeeding term of the Court, the prosecuting attorney files an information against the prisoner, to which information the prisoner pleads. If, however, the prosecuting attorney, upon reading over the evidence, should determine that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the detention, he states to the Judge that, in his opinion, he does not believe the prisoner can be convicted upon the evidence. The Judge then makes an examination of the evidence—but he does not examine the evidence unless the prosecuting attorney makes the statement that he believes the testimony to be insufficient. The Judge examines the evidence, and if he holds with the prosecuting attorney the prisoner is discharged. If, on the other hand, the Judge believes there is sufficient evidence to warrant the detention of the prisoner, then the prisoner is detained and is tried. If a person is arrested and the examining magistrate discharges him, he is subject to rearrest. A discharge is no bar to a rearrest. This system has been in vogue in the State of Michigan for almost thirty years, as was stated by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, and as I have observed personally for nine years. The system has worked well; it has worked exceedingly well; it has saved millions of dollars to the State of Michigan, and they do not desire to return to the Grand Jury system. They are very well satisfied. They can punish their criminals without aid or assistance from this cumbersome, useless machine.

I am in favor of the resolution as presented by the Judiciary Committee—it allows a restoration of the system if found necessary by the Legislature. Seven States have virtually abolished the system and others are following in the wake and sweeping away the old cobwebs, allowing direct proceedings against criminals, making the prosecuting officers in each judicial district individually and directly responsible for the misuse or abuse of power, allowing no Grand Juries to intervene as a screen for the prosecuting attorney to creep behind and say, "It was not my fault—it was the fault of the Grand Jury." The voice of the people rings in my ears, calling upon us to modify or wipe out this useless system.

SPEECH OF MR. HUESTIS.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: After all that has been said upon the question now before the committee, I would be perfectly willing to let the matter come to a vote at once, were it not for the fact that I feel impelled from a sense of duty not to let the opportunity go by, now offered, to reflect public sentiment so far as I am able to judge, upon the question under consideration, and to raise my voice in favor of economy and reform in the administration of government. If I could have supported the report of the honorable Judiciary Committee before, I certainly cannot now, after hearing the able argument of the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell; for to my mind, he has in a masterly manner refuted and demolished the recommendations of that report. The Judiciary Committee have reported in section eight, a provision that offenses shall be prosecuted by indictment or information, and each county shall have a Grand Jury at least once a year. But the argument of the gentleman demonstrates that the Grand Jury system is the most useless, expensive, absurd, dangerous and pestilent institution in our whole system of government. I agree with the gentleman to a great extent, and therefore I am in favor of the abolition of the system—at least, to the extent of placing the matter, where I think it properly belongs, under legislative control. And, sir, incidentally, I would just here give it as my opinion that when gentlemen on this floor assume that this proposed change is not in accord with public sentiment, and that the great expense of the present system should cut no figure in the consideration of the question, they are simply wrong in their premises.

Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that this is simply a question of public policy, or expediency, and as such, it is eminently proper that it should only be considered from a moral and practical standpoint. And, sir, I am in favor of the abolishment of the Grand Jury system, at least to the extent of placing the matter under legislative control, because it is a source of enormous expense to the people of this State, without corresponding benefit. And while I shall not detain the committee with a detailed statement of the expense of this system, I feel authorized in saying that it annually costs the people of California considerably over one hundred thousand dollars. And, sir, in response to the question which next presents itself to my mind, to wit, "What benefits, if any, accompany this enormous outlay?" I do not hesitate to answer, none, absolutely none, which cannot otherwise be fully attained, and at an expense of not more than one fourth of that which the present system entails.

Under the present system, in cases of the commission of crime, those of the people who are known to be cognizant of it are first compelled to appear before the committing magistrate as witnesses. They are again compelled to appear before the Grand Jury and in many cases having to travel a long distance to the county seat, where they will have to stay for several days, all at their own expense, and finally, when the case comes up for trial, they are again subjected to the same hardship. In other words, Mr. Chairman, large numbers of the people are compelled, at least four times a year, in the different counties of this State, to enter an appearance at the county seat, without subserving any useful purpose which could not be accomplished under any other system which did not impose this onerous and unnecessary burden. And, sir, I submit that to maintain that all this trouble and expense and loss of time are necessary in order to subserve the ends of justice, is simply tantamount to saying that the American people have lost all their inventive genius and power. To so maintain is to stultify ourselves, and, for one, I repudiate the idea as utterly unworthy of the serious consideration of this honorable body.

But, Mr. Chairman, in order to get a more distinct idea of this matter, let us for a moment briefly consider the functions and duties of Grand Juries; and, as I understand it, their main duty is to examine the record or witnesses, or both, and come to a conclusion as to whether persons accused of crime ought to be tried or not. This they do under the advice of the District Attorney. In many cases they are, in whole or in part, composed of persons ignorant of the law; and in a majority of cases, if the District Attorney tells them that the evidence is sufficient to convict they indict, and, on the contrary, if he tells them the evidence is not sufficient, they do not indict. They are, in the very nature of things, almost entirely under the control of the District Attorney, in all matters coming up in the Grand Jury room, and merely echo his opinions. The whole thing, then, practically viewed, merely amounts to a roundabout and very expensive method of getting the opinion of the District Attorney. And I submit that if this be necessary in order to insure the ends of justice, then, in the name of common sense, why not get the opinion of the District Attorney directly, and thus curtail the enormous expense attending the present system. This morning's Record-Union, in an editorial opposed to abolishing the Grand Jury system, after admitting that there is a strong current of opinion in favor of the abolishment, says: "But the first inquiry to be made, when it is proposed to abolish an institution, refers to the contemplated substitute."

Well, Mr. Chairman, in reply to this I have simply to say, that if it can be a question, whether any plan can be devised in lieu of the present system, which will not come in conflict with true governmental science, so far as the same is applicable to the subject under consideration? I hold that we can, with the utmost propriety and degree of safety, trust its solution to the legislative branch of the Government. I have no fears, sir, that the Legislature would sanction any system which would in the least disturb the rights or the liberties of the people. Nor can I for a moment doubt that the Legislature would, if intrusted with the power, call into existence in lieu of the present antiquated, burdensome, and expensive Grand Jury system, some less expensive system which would be more acceptable to the people, more conducive to the ends of justice and the peace and dignity of society, and more in accord with the spirit of the age.

Mr. Chairman, the question under consideration is one in which the people feel a great interest, and, as far as an expression of their views and wishes have come to the surface, it is evident enough that a very large majority of the taxpayers of California are of the opinion that the Grand Jury system has outlived its usefulness, and that it should no longer constitute a feature of the organic law of this State. A revision of the organic law, with the view of rendering the judiciary system less cumbersome, more expeditious in administering justice, and at a far less cost than under the present system, is a reasonable demand of the people which we, as their representatives, cannot in justice to them or to ourselves ignore. One of the principal obstructions in the way of these desirable ends is the Grand Jury system. Then, sir, why not place ourselves upon this question in full accord with public sentiment—at least to the extent of placing the matter under legislative control? In other States where the change has been made the results have been highly satisfactory. I grant that its origin can be traced far back into the dark ages of history, and that it was supposed to be, and possibly may have been at that time, and for centuries afterward, a protection of the people against kingly prerogative and power; and I also grant that its Star Chamber proceedings were supposed to be hidden even from the penetrating knowledge and power of royalty.

But, Mr. Chairman, suppose they were, how ought that affect us in this, the nineteenth century, with no worse despot to fear than ourselves? But, Mr. Chairman, almost every agency made use of by our forefathers has either been superseded by something better or wonderfully improved upon, but this one. That it is the antiquated, ponderous, and lumbering machinery of our ancestors I concede, but I also claim that to provide for its further continuance would be as unreasonable as it would be to provide for the resurrection and continuance of the whipsaw, the wooden plow, the sickle, or the hand printing press. That it is a greater power for evil than for good, I firmly believe. We all know the facilities it affords to a man's enemies to stab him in the dark, and the protection that it gives to the assassins of character. And, therefore, without further detaining the committee, I am prepared to vote for the abolishment of the Grand Jury system, or for any measure looking to that end.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I never have, at any time, I believe, taken up the time of this Convention for an hour or so, and I will only occupy your attention now for a few moments. I have been careful in that respect, for I know that time is precious. I am free to confess that this matter of Grand Juries has been before the people of this State for a long time. It has been before this Convention, and now it appears that we are in doubt about whether to retain the old system or to adopt a new one. I am under the impression that we have reason to doubt whether the Grand Jury system has served the grand purpose for which it was intended. The principles of justice have not been reached. Indictments have been found, expenses incurred, and yet the cases amount to nothing oftentimes when they come to be tried before the Court afterward.

Now I would say with regard to my portion of the State, which I more especially represent, the subject has been before them, and they have had a chance to investigate it; they have had experience in the matter, and that experience has brought them to give it more than passing consideration; and they are in favor of quite a radical change in the Grand Jury system. Now, as a matter of course, it should always be considered whether a thing is legal or not; and the next thing is, does the sentiment of the people back the proposition—is it sustained by the people? And if it is, I hold that it is our duty to try and answer their demands, and to suit them with such laws as they require.

We hear a great deal on this floor about certain principles of the Constitution being sacred, and that they must not be trampled upon; that sacrilegious hands should not reach forth to touch certain great principles; and the Grand Jury system is held out to be one of that kind. Now, Mr. Chairman, we understand that the great principles of carrying out the wishes of the people lie back of all this, and is the foundation of all this; and if we find it to be the sentiment of the people to change this portion of our Constitution, I hold that it is our duty to do so. I am, therefore, in favor of the report of the Judiciary Committee. I think it will about answer the purpose of the people I represent more immediately, and I think will be indorsed by the people of the State.

SPEECH OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: So much has been said on this important question, and there are so many other important questions to come before this body, that time is precious. But this is as important a question as any that we will be called upon to consider, and it is right and proper that gentlemen should give the reasons for the faith which is in them. And, sir, while a great deal has been said on both sides of this matter; while a great deal has been said in support of the report of the Committee on Bill of Rights; while a great deal has been said in advocacy of it by eminent gentlemen who are able to give their reasons for the faith that is in them; while I agree with Mr. Campbell—as they are views I have entertained for years—believing that this jury system should be changed, not simply the trial jury system, but the Grand Jury system—I think this is one of the necessities of the times; one of the things that requires to be changed—it is for that reason I now ask to be heard for a few moments; and I trust this matter will not consume as much time as the others have.

I will say that personal experience has convinced me that some change is necessary in the system. Having filled the office of District Attorney for a considerable time, I am aware of the evils that exist in the Grand Jury system. I am aware that a man may, through spite, or personal feelings, work an injury on his fellows without any good cause, without legal reasons attempt to bring a matter before the Grand Jury which never should have been brought before it, and the case presented for trial, when, in fact, investigation shows that the charge was wholly unfounded. This is not an exceptional case, and I believe there is no gentleman who has had any experience as a prosecuting officer but knows that the Grand Jury system is greatly abused like the trial jury system, and always will be. I claim that it is public opinion which asks for this change, as much so as it does for a change in the trial jury system. Gentlemen may speak of the ancient and time-honored institutions of our fathers, which have been so long before the people, and been honored so much. I will say to them, as before intimated, that while I have all respect for the views and opinions that were worthy to be respected, this is an age of progress. We are moving forward to a higher sphere, learning more and more by experience, and that we should not be governed by the opinions and laws of our fathers when it is proven by experience that they were wrong. Times have changed. There was once such an institution in this country as slavery, and there were those who defended it upon the same ground that it was one of the institutions of our fathers, handed down to us; that it had been in existence so long it ought not to be touched. So with this, you must not lay violent hands upon it because it has been in existence so long. But, sir, unanswerable logic has determined that slavery was wrong. The people rose in their humanity and wiped that stain from the Constitution. It had existed long enough, and a freedom-loving people, those who believed in the Declaration of Independence, arose and said that it should exist no longer. Such a stain had existed long enough; and in the same manner they declare now that this Grand Jury system, this grand old humbug, shall be no longer tolerated.

This may strike the gentleman from San Bernardino as being very irreverent, as being very strong language, but, sir, I believe that three fourths of the people of this State will say I am right when I make that remark. I believe they demand this change. I believe they are unwilling to reverence our fathers to the extent of maintaining this system any longer.

Now, sir, I believe that the deliberate judgment of this body, in its assembled wisdom, believing that they were sent here to express the will of the people on this and other questions of great importance, whether on issues of the campaign or not, matters not. It is true that there are other important issues before the people — taxation and restricting our corporations, making taxation more equal and uniform, which is one of the great questions we will be called upon to consider. As the gentleman from San Francisco, Col. Barnes, said a few days ago, all other questions sink into insignificance beside it. This is a great question which the people demand shall be fully considered, and when he said he was with us on that question, I know that when he gave us that assurance he meant every word he said, for he is not a man to go back on what he says. I know that he knows that the people of this State desire these things to be done, and I believe I understand the people as well as he does, and that they also desire this Grand Jury system to be modified to the extent, at least, that the Committee on Bill of Rights have recommended.

Now, sir, the question before this body is this: would it be a wise departure, would it be beneficial to the people of this State, to remodel the Grand Jury system, as provided in this Bill of Rights, so that the complaints which are now made may be done away with, so that now a complaint may be made as now made, before a Justice of the Peace, as was suggested by other gentlemen, giving a mode of procedure for the examination of criminals. With this new system of bringing criminals to trial, there will be a prompt administration of justice; the guilty will be punished, as they now are, and a vast saving will be made to the State. When gentlemen speak of economy, I say this is a move in the right direction. I say that a vast expenditure made in the other case all over the State, will be saved, and furthermore, that the power that one or two men have now, and often used corruptly, will be abolished.

The gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, has stated that it would be placing a dangerous power in the hands of one man; that he might allow his spite and spleen to find vent upon the defendant. Well, I say if there is any case where spite and spleen on the defendant can and has been used, it is under the present jury system, the star chamber proceedings, as it has very properly been termed, where a man is brought before them and charged with a certain offense, at least without the privilege of being heard, though the law says he may introduce witnesses before the Grand Jury if he so desires. But how seldom do they ever do that, and when they do there is no chance for any defense. He may be allowed to be heard, but how seldom do they allow even the defendant himself in the star chamber which serves to smirch and blacken the character of an individual. It is corrupt in its very nature, and to that extent is the product of ancient barbarism.

I say, sir, there is every reason why the Grand Jury system should be modified as recommended in the report of the committee. That it is necessary; that the public interests will be better subserved by it; that if a man is guilty I believe he would be punished under this system, and if he was innocent he would not be held by the District Attorney and Justice of the Peace, provided you elect men who are governed by a sense of duty, and it is presumed that in all cases the people will elect men who are capable and honest. True, there have been exceptions, and they are likely to arise again, but this very matter incorporated into the Constitution will cause the people to be more watchful, and men are presumed to be honest and conscientious in the discharge of their duties. It may be the case—it may possibly be in some instances—that the District Attorney will have used the power placed in his hands improperly. There may be exceptional cases, but I hold that where the abuse may arise in case this becomes a law, and this is inserted in the Constitution, that it will not be as great as it now is, and will continue to exist so long as the present Constitution of the State stands. I believe, sir, that, as was suggested, when the responsibility is left with one or two individuals, in the case of the Justice of the Peace, or District Attorney, or the Judges of the Superior Courts, which we will probably have, as recommended by the Judiciary Committee—that when this is done, that each one will recognize the power with which he is vested, and that each will strive to do his duty honestly and fearlessly. As to any abuse of power, I do not think it will be as likely to arise as under the present system. And believing that this is a necessity; that this change is needed; that it would promote the public interest; that criminals would be more likely to be convicted than now; that the ends of justice would be better subserved, I therefore give it my support, and I trust that in the spirit that the trial jury system was acted upon yesterday—that the same spirit will govern this body in incorporating this matter into the Constitution. This will not be a work of barbarism, it will be in accordance with the spirit of the age, this progressive age. It is what the people demand at this time, and there is no danger, as the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, seemed to intimate, that the Constitution would be swamped, or that it would be placed in jeopardy. I can safely say, that if these two provisions are incorporated into the Constitution, the people will gladly indorse them. I believe, sir, that the sense of this Convention is that this provision shall be incorporated into the Constitution. And I believe that this will be better for the interests of the people; the ends of justice will be better subserved if we adopt this proposed system.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters.

SPEECH OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: There has been a great deal of discussion upon this question, but it is a question of no ordinary importance. The question before this Convention is this: Shall we stand by the strongest and oldest institutions of our country? It involves, so to speak, a change of the government, and before we act upon a proposition of this sort, we should be very sure that we are right. We should be governed by sober judgment and by solid reason. I know that men are often carried away by things of this sort. Now, I have not been able to agree with the Judiciary Committee, or with a majority of them, because this discussion must have developed the fact to this body that the Judiciary Committee were divided on the proposition. Of course, a majority of the committee were in favor of the proposition as reported back to the Convention. There were gentlemen on that committee, however, who did not agree in that report. It was not thought necessary to submit to the Convention a minority report, because, upon a question of this magnitude, of this importance, we all very well knew there would be discussion, and in that discussion the views of the various members of the committee would be brought out and the matter fully considered by the Convention.

Now, sir, I do not agree with any of the propositions now pending before this body. I am in favor of retaining the Grand Jury in all its strength and power. I am not in favor of impairing it in any way, or entering upon any experiments of this sort. I am desirous of standing by the letter and spirit of the old Constitution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we should proceed with great circumspection and caution before we undertake to pull down the institutions of our ancestors. I shall attempt no eulogium upon the Grand Jury system; it needs none at my hands. Its great antiquity alone is a sufficient eulogium in its favor. We can trace it back, Mr. President, into the very remotest recesses of civilized government. It goes way back to the Anglo-Saxon period. It was instituted among a people that loved freedom then, and have loved freedom ever since. It is more than a thousand years old. It has been approved by the wise and liberty-loving people of antiquity. It has been approved by the wise and liberty-loving of our own time; and it remains for this Convention, its members, or some of them, to speak of it as a humbug, as something that ought to be swept away in a moment without a particle of consideration. Now, I feel tolerably safe to rest upon experience, even in periods of revolution. I feel very well satisfied to rest upon the experience of men of more modern times, and there must be some argument addressed to my reason that will convince my understanding that this is a bad institution before I propose to part company with it.

Now, this institution has survived conquests, survived revolutions, and commotions. It has survived the crumbling of thrones and the overthrow of empires, and has stood as a time-honored institution, respected by the liberty-loving of our own time and of times past; and it has been the shield of the weak as against the strong; the history of the world is full of it. Why, one of my young friends upon the floor of this Convention would make you believe that this has been the subservient tool of power and authority—of crowns, and monarchies, and realms. Why, you find standing out in bold relief all along the line of history, that it has stood against power. Why? Because it is the power of human yeomanry, not alone of individuals, but the yeomanry of the land—not political cliques, or political conventions, but it has been the power of the people, the protection of the people. And I am sorry to see upon the floor of this Convention those who claim to be non-partisan—elected here upon that theory—attacking and attempting to pull down the only non-partisan institution in all this broad land. Your Courts, your Judges, your officers, your District Attorneys, are brought into being and kept in power by party politics; and it is the nature of men in office to keep in power the party that placed them there. But the Grand Jury comes from the great body of yeomen of the land, and has no connection with any political faction or clique. It has been argued that under the present system the District Attorney has too much power, and may often prostitute his office for the purpose of smirching the characters of men. Why, sirs, if a District Attorney, held in check by twelve good, honest citizens, could override your rights, what may he not do when he has the same power, unhampered by a Grand Jury. I have in my mind now an instance of a very distinguished citizen of our county, who was District Attorney, indicted by the Grand Jury.

Now, are the yeomanry of America as strong against oppression as the yeomanry of England, when they rose in opposition to the Crown. I believe the American people will stand up as the English yeomanry stood. We are made of the same solid oak timber, and we have had the same experiences in the conflict for liberty. Hence, I say, that these slanders on the system are wrong and improper. We should weigh well these matters before we attempt to overthrow the system—a system which has been tried in all civilized countries.

Now, it is urged that Grand Jurors come short in their duty. Pray tell me what human institution does not? Why, you can load your Judges with reproaches. You have loaded your Legislatures with reproaches often and often upon this floor, since the convening of this Convention. You can bring to bear upon every human institution reproaches. These institutions are all the creatures of fallible minds—they are all human. But we must look at the principles and the purposes and operations of it. The Grand Jury is of the people; it is a part of the people; it springs direct and fresh from the people. When you tell me that Grand Juries are corrupt, unworthy, and subserve the demands of power, then you tell me that we have lost our liberties; then you tell me that monarchies are stronger than a republican form of government.

Then it is said that their inquiries are secret—that it is a secret tribunal. True, but you must remember that it is a tribunal for the purpose of inquiry—it is not a tribunal of punishment. Why have we so long stood to the secret ballot? Because it prevents oppression. It is the defense of the weak against the strong. The humblest citizen may exercise his will, without let or hindrance on the part of any human being. I tell you I would not like to be District Attorney in a criminal community where the one man has to stand up alone against crime and wickedness, though he might be clad in an armor of iron, still they would reach him and put him out of the way. They say here is the man who stands in our way, let us remove him from office. They would join in defeating him, either in one way or the other. Nominations would be made so that no honest man would receive the nomination. But when this Grand Jury—when you call to-morrow twelve honest men from the community, and twelve other men next week, the criminals cannot make any combination against him, because it is the will of the people expressed through their Grand Jury, and the District Attorney cannot back down. The analogy is this: suppose the District Attorney to be a man of the other stripe, how can you ever bring criminals to punishment? Only by riot, only by clamor and public indignation. That is the only way you can reach it to correct it.

It is said that fraud and corruption may creep up the back stairs into the Grand Jury room. If it can creep in among twelve honest citizens, selected from the community, how much more easily can it get into the office of one man when all that power is placed in his hands. The Grand Jury stands on a plane above political combination. It is culled from the best of all creeds, without regard to party. Right here let me call your attention to this fact: take any county in this State and you will find one or the other of the political parties in power. Then you will ask the physician to heal himself. The same one that holds the office will be the one to make complaint against brothers and political friends. Will they do it? No. But you call a Grand Jury from the body of the citizens for this especial purpose, without regard to political creeds, and who doubts but that they will perform the duty fearlessly and without favor. It is the only body which comes direct and fresh from the people.

Again, it regulates public affairs, and makes examinations, they say. It may be true that sometimes the affairs of public officers are investigated and inquired into, but they are not apt to do it unless there is good reason for it. It is true that a skillful officer may make a good showing, and so impose upon them, and they may flatter and praise him, but they will never flatter when they find anything wrong, because they have no reason to do so; they are not dependent upon him or his party for the office and high trust which they hold.

Another thing; it is a grand institution for the education of the people. Some of my young friends who have just been admitted to the bar, talk to these old gray-headed farmers about challenges. Why, sirs, most of them have served on the Grand Jury, and by that means have become familar with the administration of criminal justice. They have become familar with the institutions of their country by serving on the Grand Jury, and it is a grand school for the education of the men of this commonwealth. Twelve men serving to-day come in and examine the criminal statutes, and having the District Attorney explaining and turning them to the places, and you will find the twelve old farmers reading it and studying it; and the next time twelve other men are chosen, and thus the body of the people are made practically acquainted with the administration of the laws.

Again, it is said here that Grand Juries are costly things; that they cost the people a large sum of money. Talk to me not of the cost of liberty, sir. It is valuable above pearls, and all the diamonds of Golconda would not buy it of the people. They know its value. There is nothing worth having that does not cost money. It must cost money in the very nature of things. One of my opponents drew a fearful picture of a man stealing a horse, and forty men standing and looking at him, powerless to prevent him. Why, it occurred to me they might have shot the fellow. That is one way. Judge Lynch is a cheap dispenser of justice; take the man and execute him without calling on the Sheriff to arrest him or the Court to try him. That argument falls with its own weight. Of course it costs something for every institution we have. This is a body which moves in no set groove. You take any other office, and it moves on from year to year in the same groove; but the Grand Jury comes fresh from the people, and moves in no set grooves. It changes in accordance with the feelings and sentiments of the people. Their independence is a great feature in their behalf. They are independent of parties, independent of creeds, independent of all those influences which surround public station; it comes from the great body of the people, and they don't move in any fixed groove.

I love the institution that comes to one recommended by the experience of the world, of the civilized world; and I am in no hurry to part with an institution that has been the safeguard of freemen. But we are told that in Michigan and some other State they have done without it for twenty years. On the other hand, we have seen it in existence for a thousand years, for one thousand five hundred years; and the great State of Michigan has moved along smoothly and nicely without the Grand Jury, and the people are satisfied. This seems to me a very strange argument, that the twenty years' experience of the State of Michigan is to be set up against the experience of the civilized world for a thousand years and more.

MR. BEERSTECHER. And Wisconsin, Illinois, and Indiana.

MR. LAINE. You are mistaken, sir; you are going off half cocked. Ohio has attempted to do it. I don't know about Wisconsin. But if it is such a grand institution, it should have spread all over the United States by this time.

They say here that a man is brought before a committing magistrate and examined. Then what? Send him to the District Attorney, as he examines him; and he says in his wisdom, this man should not be prosecuted, therefore I shall not do it. If he makes that ruling, go to the Judge, to the fountain of justice. He reads the document, and whatever may be his decision, he stands there a prejudiced Judge. Suppose he says this man should not be tried, but the community demands that he should be. Or, suppose he has taken the other view, that the man should be prosecuted; he will not come to that conclusion without having some emotion of his own, because men are not made of steel. He will, then, sit upon the bench, having prejudged the man's guilt. I say such a system is wholly unworthy of a civilized people; wholly unworthy.

Again, our fathers brought this institution across the Atlantic more than two hundred years ago. They established it along the eastern seaboard; they carried it with them into the wilderness, into the pathless forests, and across the plains and deserts until it reached the Pacific, until it reached the western sea-board, and here none of our fathers ever complained of it because it cost money. Everything costs money, every department of our government costs money. The people to-day are not complaining because the Grand Jury system costs money. It puts me in mind of a hymn that religious people sing:

"Shall we be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease?"

So I say to this degenerate race, do they expect to live in peace, and happiness, and security without cost. Our ancestors have waded through seas of blood to maintain these institutions, and I am not in favor of marring or destroying any of these grand old institutions.

Now, Mr. President, I have said as much as I intended to. I simply desired to place myself on record as solemnly protesting against the assault on the grand old system in any of its features, and I now say to this Convention, proceed with your work and let skillful executioners do it quickly, and do it effectually. Strike your daggers to the very heart of the system, and let it fall and die as an institution should die; but let us not dismember it like barbarians. Execute it quickly, but let us give it an honorable death; let it not die by inches and piecemeal. And after you have done this, go home to your people and tell them what you have done; that you have put out one of the brightest lights that ever burned upon the altar of freedom; that you have overthrown and destroyed all there was in the temple that was conservative; and if they do not turn on you with hissing and cursing, and tell you that you are tinkers and not statesmen, I am much mistaken.

REMARKS OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I would not undertake to say anything on this question, only I have been referred to, and I will occupy the attention of the Convention for a few moments. I intend to vote for that section:

"Offenses heretofore required to be prosecuted by indictment shall be prosecuted by indictment or information, as may be prescribed by law, but a Grand Jury shall be drawn and summoned at least once a year in each county."

And I shall give my reasons why. My friend from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, advises to be sure we are right before we proceed. I am sure that I am right when I vote in favor of this section abolishing Grand Juries, and intend to go ahead. I will tell you why. A few months ago we were arrested in San Francisco for riot. We were tried before Judge Ferral in the City Criminal Court. That Judge was a jurist. The case was dismissed by a jury of twelve men. After that case was dismissed the Prosecuting Attorney came to the City of Sacramento; he went into the Senate chamber, and from there to the Assembly, and then to the Governor of the State, and he got a clause in the law to indict us. In the meantime the Grand Jury met. The Prosecuting Attorney had certain men selected for the purpose. [Laughter.] The head of that jury was General Coffee. I can't say whether he was a General in the horse marines—he was the General of the "Pickhandle Brigade" at that time. [Laughter.] The Grand Jury sat for two days, and indicted us for riot. I say the Grand Jury violated their oaths, because, when these indictments were brought before the Court the District Attorney said he could not support the indictments, and the cases were dismissed. For that reason the Grand Jury in that case had been selected as two thirds of the Grand Juries at that time were—principally from this "Pickhandle Brigade," and they even selected gentlemen from that brigade for the express purpose of indicting us for rioting, and I say the Grand Jurors, or most of them, violated their oaths when they sat there for that express purpose.

Grand Juries, as I understand them, will not hear testimony except on the side of the prosecution. They don't allow the defendant to bring counsel in, or to be represented at all. It is all one-sided. Therefore, I think they are an outrage upon human liberty. I, for one, shall vote against retaining this Grand Jury system, and I hope every member on this floor will do the same. I am satisfied that on this occasion, we have got the greater part of the lawyers on our side. I generally feel safe in taking the opposite side when the lawyers are in favor of a proposition [laughter], but on this occasion I shall vote for the section, and I hope every member of the Convention will do the same. I am tired of this Grand Jury system. It is a fraud. I know what I am talking about when I say it is a fraud. I thank you kindly for your attention, gentlemen.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I think it may be regarded as somewhat complimentary to the report of the Judiciary Committee that those who have argued against it have not thought proper to argue upon the question as it is really presented in their report. Gentlemen have spoken of the question as though necessarily the action of the Convention in adopting this section would be the utter abolition of the Grand Jury system. That section proposes nothing of the kind. Upon the contrary, I personally have a sincere objection to the section because it does not go far enough and permit the abolition entirely of the Grand Jury system.

Whether this system be good or whether it be bad, it is a question which the people of the State, through their representatives in Senate and Assembly, have as much right to decide as you have here. Why, the gentleman talks about assaults upon the liberties of the people, when the very object of the opposition here is to prevent the people from exercising the liberty of their own judgment. Why should we put any provision in the Constitution upon this question? Is it not a safe question to submit to the Legislature? If there is any error creeps in, the Legislature may correct it as soon as discovered. Why, the proposition that the gentleman talks about, of invading the liberties of the people, and yet they themselves seek to retain in the Constitution a clause that, however obnoxious it may be to the people, they are tied up and powerless to rid themselves of it. Certainly this is a debatable question. Certainly, well informed men can doubt the propriety of the Grand Jury system, and I shall forever oppose the placing of any prohibition in this Constitution upon which reasonable men can have any doubt.

Why, it is said that we have had this institution for years, and it stands as the bulwark of our liberties. Well, sir, so far as the State of California is concerned, it has stood as a part of the law perhaps because we have never given the people any opportunity of expressing their judgment upon this subject in the Legislature of the State. Let it be vested where it belongs, and let us give the people a chance to decide the question.

I don't know that it is necessary that we should say here to-day in Constitutional Convention that the Grand Jury system is more of good or more of evil; but I think at least the question is a debatable one that we can leave to the Legislature to discuss, for them to have or not to have a Grand Jury, and let them prescribe, if they want a Grand Jury at all, what cases, and in what instances, cases should be considered by the Grand Jury.

We have heard to-day a great deal of argument in regard to the antiquity of this institution. It was the argument of the past; the same argument that compelled Galileo in regard to the revolution of the earth; the same argument which prevented the people for years from denying the divine right of kings; the same argument that has stood in the pathway of progress and reform from the very time that reforms began. We have been making improvements for a hundred years, and we shall continue to improve so long as the human mind is capable of advancement; and if the Grand Jury system has nothing in its favor save the fact that it always was; if it has nothing that will influence my judgment or compel the people of California to retain it, I shall not vote to make them retain it if they don't wish to.

Why, sir, if this constitutional provision which has been reported by the Judiciary Committee be adopted, the Grand Jury system will stand where it stands to-day. There will not be a single case that goes to the Grand Jury now that will not go to the Grand Jury then, unless the representatives in the Legislature choose to make an amendment that will change the present Grand Jury system. Now, haven't the people a right to change it if they want to? Why do you want to take away their rights in that respect? Why, in his peroration, the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, said: "Go home to your people and tell them that you have abolished the Grand Jury." For one, I propose to go home to the people and say to them, "I have given you the opportunity of deciding for yourselves whether or not you will retain this Grand Jury system, either in whole or in part. I have refused to tie your hands for another twenty-five years so that you cannot do it if you want to." It seems to me that no man should be ashamed to go home to his constituents upon such a record as that.

Another of the arguments in favor of this system is that it worked well at one time in England. Well, we are not living under that kind of a government. The existing power of conquest was intrenched there behind the divine right of kings, as this subject seems to be intrenched here. That condition of affairs has passed away, and there is nothing in the condition of this country, present or prospective, that could make the retaining of the Grand Jury necessary.

It is said, as another argument, that if the Grand Jury system were abolished, men, upon being arrested, would be at once incarcerated in prison. Not at all. Why, sir, the whole effect of a Grand Jury—the whole object of retaining the Grand Jury—is to save men from standing up before that other divine institution which we were considering yesterday, and saying whether their guilt or innocence would be established before a jury. Is it so serious a thing to be put on trial before a petit jury, which has been so highly eulogized on this floor as the very perfection of human justice and human wisdom? Does not the present system of affairs do the same thing? Why, sir, gentlemen talk of depriving men of their liberty because the Grand Jury is to be abolished. Does any one doubt that there are thousands of men to-day in the jails of California, confined and restrained of their liberty merely for the purpose of awaiting the action of the Grand Jury that is to come. Why, sir, this Grand Jury system might result in something like this: A man is arrested for an offense and is brought before a committing magistrate. The magistrate examines the charges, and if he deems the case a proper one, he determines that he shall be confined to await the meeting of the Grand Jury. If it was not for the Grand Jury system the complaint might at once be made out, and the man, if innocent, might go upon trial, prove his innocence, and regain his liberty at once. But by this liberty loving-institution, if he be poor and unable to give bail, he must go to jail, there to remain perhaps for months to await the meeting of the Grand Jury.

But I will return again to the question of age, and to the attack upon the liberties of the people, and the dangers we shall encounter if we allow the people to decide this matter for themselves. Why, sir, the Constitution of New Hampshire was adopted in seventeen hundred and ninety-two, one of the oldest Constitutions in the United States. That Constitution contained no provision in regard to the Grand Jury. But the simple provision was this:

"No subject shall be held to answer for any crime or offense until the same is fully and plainly, substantially and formally, described to him," etc.

And that is enough to enable a man to answer to a charge. The Constitution of New Hampshire has been in existence for almost ninety years. It has been but twice amended, once in eighteen hundred and fifty-two and once in eighteen hundred and seventy-seven. No amendment has ever been made to this section; and, sir, if this liberty-destroying constitutional provision has stood in that liberty-loving land, would they not in ninety years have discovered it and amended it?

The present Constitution of Connecticut was adopted in eighteen hundred and eighteen. It has this provision:

"And no person shall be holden to answer for any crime, the punishment of which may be death or imprisonment for life, unless on a presentment or an indictment of a Grand Jury," etc.

The matter was submitted as a separate section to the people of Wisconsin, in eighteen hundred and seventy, and was adopted by a vote, if I remember correctly, of thirteen to one. In Indiana the Legislature was allowed the privilege of either retaining or abolishing the Grand Jury. By the Constitution of Illinois, in eighteen hundred and seventy, they were allowed the same privilege. The Constitution of Louisiana, of eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, provided for indictment or information. In the Constitution of Nebraska, of eighteen hundred and seventy-five, the Legislature was empowered to change or abolish the Grand Jury system. By the Constitution of Georgia, of eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, the whole matter was left where it properly belongs—to the discretion of the Legislature. We can safely place this matter there. That it would curtail expenses, there can be no doubt. In the first place, there is the expense of the Grand Jury itself; in the next place, there is the expense of a large number of witnesses, who must be called from different parts of the country; in the next place, retaining thousands of persons in the jails of the State, awaiting the convening of the Grand Jury to act upon their cases.

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I am perfectly well aware that the Convention is weary of this discussion, which has been somewhat protracted; and I am aware also that I could not say anything that will instruct the Convention in regard to this question if I should talk an hour. It is the proposition of the Judiciary Committee that this whole matter be delegated to the Legislature, after providing that at least one Grand Jury shall be drawn per annum. It leaves the power of prosecution by indictment or presentment—information it is called here—to the discretion of the Legislature. They can restore it as a whole and leave out the word "information," or they can follow out the plan indicated here, and prosecute by both indictment and information. They can direct the calling of as many Grand Juries as they see proper. The only limitation on the action of the Legislature is that at least one Grand Jury must be drawn once in each year, and the rest is all left to the Legislature. The gentleman from Santa Clara refers to the antiquity of the Grand Jury system. I acknowledge its antiquity, but I would remind the gentleman that this is a world of progress, and if its antiquity is its only merit it had better give way for something to correspond with the changed condition of society. It is said again that the Grand Jury is drawn from the people, from the yeomen of the land, and represents the intelligence and honesty of the community. They are drawn by lot out of a box. Sometimes a good man is drawn, and sometimes a bad man. That is the way Grand Juries are selected, and there is no such thing as appealing to the common sense of the community. They are selected by mere chance. If the people themselves could go to work and select a Grand Jury there might be some sense in saying that they came from the people. But they come by chance out of the body of men who pay taxes. So there is no such thing as appealing to the common sense of the people of the State.

I have a cousin in Michigan, who has lived there for thirty years. He is a Judge there, and I know from him that this new system works well there. He approves of it in the highest degree. Now, I have the greatest respect for the Mayflower men—I didn't come over with them myself—but still I have an admiration for their enterprise, but I do not necessarily indorse all the laws they brought with them; at least, I am not ready to admit that they are good laws for this age of progress. I remember the first thing they did was to enact the laws of God, and nowhere in those laws have I seen anything about Grand Juries. I say that the Grand Jury system has been weighed and found wanting. It no longer subserves the purposes of modern administration of justice. It is a secret tribunal, and almost any atrocity can be perpetrated in the Grand Jury. I would rather see the investigations of crime made openly and aboveboard. There is no more reason for secrecy in the primary investigations of crime than there is on the first trial in the Courts. Let the accused be brought before a magistrate; let him produce his witnesses there and then in his defense, and if he is not guilty of the offense charged, let him go free at once. Then there can be no possibility of fraud. If he is guilty, let him be held for trial. I trust this Convention will leave this matter where it belongs, where the people themselves, through their legislators, may have control of it.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Offenses heretofore requiring to be prosecuted on indictment, shall be prosecuted on information or complaint, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law."

Lost.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer the following amendment to section eight, in the nature of a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In all cases where offenses have been committed against the peace and dignity of this State, the party or parties so accused may be examined by a committing magistrate, and if the evidence adduced at such examination is, in his opinion, sufficient to warrant a conviction, he shall bind the party or parties over to be tried at the next term of the District Court. And a Grand Jury shall be called once a year, in each county of this State, whose duty it shall be to examine into all offenses which may have been committed, and for which the parties accused have not been placed on trial; and it shall also be the duty of the Grand Jury to inquire into the manner in which the various county officers have discharged the duties of their respective offices, and, when found derelict, to so report the same, when such officers shall be placed on trial in such District Court, and, if found guilty as charged, shall be punished under and by the provisions of law; and in no case shall the deliberations or sessions of the Grand Jury be secret."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Lost.

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to section eight.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add, after the word 'county,' 'Provided, that the Grand Jury system may be abolished by a two-thirds vote of both houses of the Legislature.'"

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the section as amended.

Adopted.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the committee now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. We cannot get through with this to-night any way.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 9. Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions for libels the truth may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives, and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to section nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the section the following: 'Trial for libel against publishers of newspapers and periodicals shall be held in the county where the newspapers and periodicals are published, subject only to change of venue, as in other prosecutions.'"

Lost.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I offer the following amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words, 'and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on that amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: The general law, or rule of American Constitutions, is that in all criminal prosecutions, as well as in civil cases, the Court shall declare the law, and the jury shall find the facts. Now, upon what grounds do they seek to make this change? Why should any special privileges or immunities be granted to any one class of crime? If you steal my property, you are tried in the criminal Courts of the land under the law, and the Court instructs the jury as to the law, leaving them to judge of the facts. But if you attack my reputation, through which alone I can acquire property, then you are tried without any law. Now, sir, is there any reason in it? Is there any justice in it? Is that standing equally before the law?

This amendment, sir, proposes to place every criminal on an equal footing before the law, and to allow no special immunities to any one class of criminals. That clause was inserted in the law at a time when there may have been some necessity for it, or some reason. It was at a time when the freedom of the press was strangled, when the Judges were the creatures of the government, and the Courts prevented even the ordinary just criticisms upon the acts of public officers. But that time has passed. That condition of things does not exist in this country at the present day. There is no reason for it now. Is there any danger to the freedom of the press in this country? Why, sir, the men who are members of that profession have not only the ordinary freedom which the balance of us have in the enjoyment of their property and in the pursuit of happiness, but they have freedom to attack the lives and characters of others, and they do it every day. They not only, as I understand it, have the freedom guaranteed by law—regulated by law—but even are allowed to indulge in licentiousness, and then when they come to trial they do not want to stand upon the common level of other criminals. I know there are many men connected with the press who have a due appreciation of the responsibilities of the position, and of the rights of others. But to talk about there being any danger to the freedom of the press is absurd. Why, sir, it is freedom in a wider, broader sense than ever used before by any people under God's heavens. As a general rule, it has been indulged to the utmost, and characters have been boldly attacked, both public and private. It has assaulted men, from the President of the United States, and the gentlemen who are selected as candidates for that position by the great parties who represent the people, down through every class, every walk in life, public or private, political or civil, down, sir, to the lone, defenseless, unprotected woman—over all, sir, they have thrown broadspread the undigested, sour contents of their own corrupt stomachs, without any compunctions; and yet, when brought to trial, you propose that the Judge shall not declare the law to the jury as it is done with every other class of crime, but you propose to allow them to be tried without any law, taking the chances on the jury, which, even if composed of intelligent men, do not understand the law—taking the chances, I say, of getting a jury who may be convinced by ingenious arguments that black is white, and what is law is not law.

I am perfectly willing to have the gentlemen who are connected with the press indulge in criticism on the acts of men, public and private. But when they assault the characters of men and women without warrant, and when they are brought to trial for the offense, I want them to be tried in the ordinary way that other criminals are tried. And why not? What reason can be produced for placing them on a different plane from other criminals? If you or I commit a crime, we must be tried in the ordinary way. Why should they not be tried in the ordinary way; according to the laws of the country, the laws by which other men are tried—other criminals are tried? Is it because character is worthless? If a thief robs you of your property, he has not done you an irreparable injury, for you can acquire more; but when he destroys your character, he destroys that by which you acquire property. I am not speaking of character in the sentimental sense. If he should assail your character, by which you earn your living, then he is in fact destroying your property. In that sense character is the dearest thing we have—the most valuable. Now, sir, the man who steals your property must be tried by the ordinary laws of the country, but the man who steals your character must stand above the law, spit in the face of the law, because he has a peculiar profession. Now, is that law?

Digitized by Google

Is that justice? Is it right or fair? I would like to know what reason, at this day and generation, there is for maintaining such a law, allowing immunities or privileges to any person or any class of persons. Why should they have them? Nobody objects to fair and just criticism. But, sir, a newspaper writer has no more rights than you or I, and he should be tried before the law exactly as you or I would be tried; they have no right to stand above the law by reason of belonging to any particular profession.

Now, sir, it seems to me that this should be stricken out of the Constitution. And that character of men should stand on the same footing as other men. And if you are going to give the jury the right to determine the law in this case, you should make it apply to all cases. Why not? I ask any gentleman of the press why he should be allowed any special privileges. There is no reason in it, there is no necessity for it, there is no justice in the demand. There was a time, perhaps, when something of the kind may have been necessary, but certainly there is no necessity for it at this day.

THE COMMITTEE RISES.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman has seen fit——

MR. VAN DYKE. It occurs to me that we cannot get through with this discussion to-night.

MR. AYERS. I shall not speak more than a minute or two.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

RESOLUTIONS AND PROPOSITIONS.

THE PRESIDENT: The next order of business is resolutions and propositions relating to the Constitution.

IN RELATION TO GAMBLING.

MR. O'SULLIVAN introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution:

SECTION —. Lotteries, and the sale of lottery tickets, are forever prohibited. Gambling transactions of any and every character shall not be allowed; and the Legislature is directed to pass such penal laws as may be necessary to suppress the evil practice of gambling, under whatever name it may be known.

Referred to the Committee on Legislative Department.

IN RELATION TO MINING BOARDS.

MR. MCCOY introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution:

Resolved, It shall be the duty of the Legislature, at each regular session thereof, to inquire into the management of all mining stock Boards doing business in this State; and if, in their judgment, the public good demands it, they shall adopt such legislation as they may deem necessary in the premises.

Referred to the Committee on Legislative Department.

IN RELATION TO GRAND JURIES.

MR. RINGGOLD introduced the following resolution to prohibit secret sessions of Grand Juries:

"That Grand Juries are prohibited from performing such duties as pertain to that office in secret session, and in all cases, when practicable, defendants shall be confronted with their accusers before a true bill shall be found."

Referred to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

RELATIVE TO LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

MR. DOWLING introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, in relation to the legislative department:

SECTION 1. It shall be a felony for any public officer, elected to any office of profit or trust in the gift of the people of the State of California, to extort, receive, or cause to be received, any money, valuables, or compensation of any kind, from any person who may make application to obtain or procure any subordinate position in the gift of said officer.

Referred to the Committee on Legislative Department.

THE LAW OF LIBEL.

MR. VAN DYKE: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland.

SPEECH OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, moves to strike out in the libel section the words, "and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact." I shall oppose the gentleman's motion on the ground that I conceive that that clause is now a protection to honest publishers against malicious prosecutions, and that it is also a protection to the people, insomuch as it is a safeguard to the freedom of the press. The clause has existed in our present constitution, down to the present time, and I find that a similar provision exists in the Constitutions of Delaware, Georgia, Michigan, Nebraska, New York, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, and Wisconsin. If I understand the gentleman aright in his argument in favor of expunging the words in this clause, it was to the effect that they were meaningless now; that they conserved no right to a defendant in a libel suit which is not conserved under the general criminal practice. At the same time, however, his argument was that citizens are being libeled in the public press, and that the individuals who are thus libeled have no redress. I submit that the argument is fallacious, and that the two positions are repugnant to each other. Either the clause has a meaning—that it is an actual protection to publishers—or else publishers, under that clause, incur no responsibility for libel. If it gives publishers a greater latitude than is given other citizens who are charged with crime, I submit to the gentlemen of this Convention that there is a vast difference between the two classes. The independent editor, the honest editor, who conducts his paper from good motives and from a just conscience, is obliged to stand between the people and public iniquity. He has frequently to stand forth as the champion of the people against concerted wrong in high places. With lance at rest and steed in high career, he must ever be charging upon public vice, if he be an honest and fearless journalist. His responsibility both to the people and to his profession is great, and certainly his immunity should be considered as being more entitled to respect than that of such gentry as the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, spoke of last evening as cutting a purse or stealing a cow. At this time, of all other times, I would not like to see this Convention, in its organic law, take away from the press one jot or one iota of its present safeguards. A new element has risen up in this country to fatten with the spoils that have been wrung from the hand of industry. Millionaires are meeting you in every place and combining together to crush out public opinion and to ride rough-shod over the people. Whom will you call upon then, when they are arrayed in all their power, to stand between the people and these men, who will arrogate themselves, as did Louis XIV., to be the State? If you take away the incentive to journalists to face and break down this power, where will you seek for a substitute for it? I tell you, gentlemen, that without the fear of the press in this country you are going to be in the toils, and from which you shall not, perhaps, escape without a bloody revolution.

Talk to me about newspapers traducing or libeling the characters of individuals! The law is ample now, without taking away this restriction, which is the safeguard of the honest and fearless publisher. It is, perhaps, not necessary, Mr. Chairman, to remind the gentlemen of this Convention that the clause which is now attacked was born amid the storms of one of the most notable debates that ever occurred in the history of England. In that country it had been the practice—but denied as an infringement of freedom by those who insisted upon the just rights of juries—it had been the practice of Judges to determine the law, while the rights of the juries were limited down to the narrow sphere of merely declaring the publication. The Judges decided the libel, and the jury decided the publication. But Lord Erskine, in his great forensic effort in the case of the Dean of St. Asaph, showed, in reasoning that could not be combatted, that the determination of the law and the fact, according to the British Constitution, in libel cases, rested with the jury; and upon his argument came forth Fox's Declaratory Act, upon which this law is based, and which has remained the law to this day. You may say to me that because juries in other criminal cases take from the Bench the law, and come to their conclusions through the direction of the Courts, that they are, in effect, in those cases determinators of the law and the fact. Admit it. But in this case, where the grand right is set forth in the Constitution, juries will not be influenced by a venal Judge, if it so happen that there be one. Shall we say that the ermine in this country will always remain as pure as it is? Are we not marching towards the period when you may see venality and corruption sitting on the bench, as it now sits in other public offices? When your great monopolies, your combinations of capital, to carry out their designs, shall attempt to place upon the throne of justice one of their tools—do you mean to tell me they will not accomplish it? They will. Then, with that clause in your Constitution, the press may defy them.

Take not away that safeguard. You may hear arguments finely spun based upon theories of reasoning drawn from hair-splitting ideas of law; but let them not prevail, for we have a safeguard in that clause which may yet prove a pillar of protection to us in our time of need. What would become of the right of a publisher before a Judge who had been installed in office by the manipulators of a party, and who was sitting in judgment upon a man who had used his paper to attack them in their most vital part? If that Judge owed his position to those men, and he could define the law to the jury and tell them what their verdict should be under the law, what honest journalist would come out of that trial triumphant? Would not the honest publisher who had sought to protect the people and to strike at rascality—would not he be consigned to a dungeon, whilst the rascals stepped forth as men who had been persecuted? As long as the jury retain in their possession the power to determine both the law and the fact, so long will the public press be preserved from malicious prosecution, so long will the public press be enabled to deal fairly, honestly and energetically with the evils that arise in our midst. But if you take away that protection, if you leave the public press to be harassed by every malevolent man who seeks to destroy its usefulness, you will heap upon it incessant charges and libel suits. You will crush it with criminal prosecutions, you will intimidate it by holding over it always the terror of costly trial; you will drive from it all but those timid or cringing men who are willing to shut their eyes to public vice and to turn their backs upon wrongs against the people. But if, on the contrary, you wish to cherish an honest, fearless and independent press, give it this protection which it has had in the past. What have been its efforts in this State? You have had a galaxy of gentlemen in the profession of journalism who have done honor to it. You have had your Gilberts and your Kings, who, in the path of duty, faced the bullet of the assassin, and went upon the ill-fated field to assert the opinions which they set forth in their journals. You have had bright minds and honest hearts to direct your best papers from the very incipiency of the State. Admit that the right has been abused; what right, what boon, has not been abused? I do not stand here to defend the common traducer and libeler. I do not stand here to defend the outrageous blackmail sheets which exist in this community, but I stand here to proclaim the principle that in your honest journals, those conducted for the public good, you have a palladium of your liberties which you cannot crush out without danger to your own liberties. Mr. Chairman, if, as it has been urged, that provision at the end of the section is useless, I submit that to leave it there cannot do any harm; but if it is useful, it is useful for good, and should be retained. I hope that the sense of this Convention will not support the amendment to strike out, by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, and, for the reasons I have given, I appeal to the good sense of this Convention to retain the section as it is.

SPEECH OF MR. GREGG.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I approve of the motion made by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, but not for the reasons given by him. The theory of the section, as the report stands, is that when a publisher commits a crime he has certain immunities over all other classes of criminals. If we turn back in history we will find that it was never intended that they should enjoy any such immunity. We find, turning back to the eighteen century, that the law of England, and the law of this country also, permitted juries in criminal prosecutions to declare the whole case, and pronounce the defendant guilty or not guilty, as they should see proper, but we find in history that the Judges became censors of the public press. They were tools of kings and nobles, who condemned free journals and free speech. It will be found, sir, that in those times the jury simply declared the fact of publication, and the Courts were the judges of whether it was libelous or not. In other words, they charged the juries that they could only find the single fact of whether there had been a publication, and it remained for the Court to say whether that publication was libelous. We certainly have an innovation of the common law as it then stood. But, sir, I do not think that any gentleman on this floor can find in the history of jurisprudence of the State, at any time, when that was the law.

Mr. Fox, in his celebrated libel bill in the Parliament of England, in the year seventeen hundred and ninety-two, declared that the jury should find on the whole case; that they should, upon the whole case, as in any other case, declare whether the defendant is guilty or not guilty, and nothing should be reserved to the Judges after the return of the verdict, where it was not guilty. That was the purpose of the Act, to remove the censorship from the press. But the necessity for it has never existed here. It does not exist to-day. This clause is not to be found in the bills of rights of the Constitutions of any of the original thirteen States. In some of them it is declared this far, that the jury shall be judges of the law and the fact as in other cases. What does that mean? It means simply that the jury shall declare guilty or not guilty upon the whole case, and they do it to-day in the administration of the criminal law.

I want it understood, sir, that for myself, I do not wish to change a letter in the old Constitution where it is not demanded. I have no attacks to make upon a free press. I think, sir, that a free, enlightened press is the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night to lead the advance of civilization, and I shall put nothing in the way of it; but I think the reasons for a clause like this have long since ceased to exist. It will have a tendency to mislead our juries. It has misled and will mislead many members of this Convention. Why should a privilege be granted to a libeler which is refused to a man being tried for his life? If you will look at the history of this thing, you will find that the original intention was to put a libel case upon exactly the same footing as any other criminal case, and let the jury declare upon the whole case, and take away from the Courts the power that they held of being censors of the press in England.

I find that in twenty-seven States of this Union there is no proposition of that kind. Two thirds of the old colonies have no such provision in their bill of rights. I find that it is not in the Constitution of Massachusetts, or the Constitutions of Maine, Alabama, Arkansas, Nebraska, Nevada, Rhode Island, West Virginia, New Hampshire, Texas, Louisiana, Missouri, Michigan—in none of these States can it be found. There is no need of it. The necessity for it never existed in this country, although it did in England. Then, if it is not needed, it should not be retained there, for the reason that it misleads the jury, when juries are told on a trial for libel—when the Court says to the jury, the law is so and so, but still you are the judges of the law as well as of the fact, the same as in any other case. This misleads them. There is no reason for that clause in the Constitution. It is giving to the press a power that no individual criminal can have. It should not be done. Anybody who cares to take the trouble to trace back the history of this thing will be satisfied that the necessity no longer exists. The people have been misled and they can be again. It has never had a place in the Constitution of the United States because no Courts in this country have become censors of the public press, and hence there has been no need of guarding against an abuse which does not exist. This clause has been misconstrued and will hereafter be misconstrued, and I think it ought to be eliminated from the Constitution.

SPEECH OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: We have heard so much of the demands that the people make upon the delegates to this Convention—and the extent of that demand seems to be so thoroughly understood—that I almost hesitate in attempting to argue in favor of the maintenance of any single proposition, or clause, in the Constitution of California which is the subject of attack. The people of this State decided to have a Constitutional Convention, by a very small majority—a very small majorty. We may consider that those who voted for it and those who voted against it stand paired upon the proposition; and we are here at the request and bidding of a few hundred citizens of the State of California who desire a change to be made, of some kind, in the organic law. I was under the impression, during my brief residence in California—now amounting to fourteen or fifteen years—that this was a prosperous and happy people. I had formed the vague and chimerical notion that, notwithstanding we needed reform in some certain directions—notwithstanding occasions had arisen which were not contemplated when this organic law was first adopted by the people—yet, that on the whole, and upon the average, the people of this State were as happy and as well contented, as prosperous, as full of growth and progress, as any people upon whom God's sun ever shone. I have learned (because I suppose it is true, since it is asserted here) that the ship of State is rotten from truck to kelson; that the three great departments of the State are full of corruption; that you cannot trust the Executive Department; that you should have no confidence in the Judicial Department; and that the Legislative Department has sunk beyond plummet reach.

I am glad to know that the virtue and intelligence, and the wisdom, of California has been rescued and put into this Convention; and I doubt not, sir, that if at this moment the Angel Gabriel, should he blow his horn to summon the just and the unjust to the judgment of the last day—should he here and now appear, that the men who make your Governors, and have made them; the men who have been your Judges, and are your Judges; the men who have been your Legislators, and are your Legislators; that the citizens of California who make your Grand Juries and compose your petit juries, will sink to the hell prepared for the evil-doers, and that the members of this Convention will rise to slow music, to be placed upon the clouds, with white robes upon them and harps within their hands, to sing for ever hallelujahs to—themselves. [Applause and laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Sacramento. I am opposed to any amendment in this Convention that does not strike at a radical, existing, and recognized abuse—abuse in reference to taxation, or difficulties in the judicial system; abuses of corporations, and abuses wherever they exist. This Convention should meet them, and handle them without gloves. But when you come to attack other parts of this Constitution, I submit that no irreverent hands should be laid upon it; and whoever rises in his seat and proposes to change or alter one word or line in that sacred charter of the liberties of this people, should show cause—which I do not think the gentleman from Sacramento has done, or, with all his ability, he can do.

Now, sir, here is the proposition: "In all criminal prosecutions for libel the truth may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it shall appear that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact." Now, sir, the proposition embraced in that section under consideration, and which the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, moves to eliminate from the Bill of Rights, "the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact," is, so far as it is contained in this Constitution, simply a reaffirmation of the ancient charter of jury rights. That is to say, the right of every person, when charged with a crime, to have the whole verdict of the jury upon the proposition of guilty or not guilty; the law and the fact all included. It is a broad fundamental principle which lies at the very foundation of every personal right that we enjoy under government. Why has it been put into the Constitution? Let us take that question first, before we undertake to say that, by a stroke of the pen, it shall be wiped out from the knowledge and the memory of the people of the State. It makes a grand period. It is historically great; and I beg the pardon of young and sportive souls like the gentleman from Marin, if I allude to history. It pains him, I suppose. Yesterday he suggested that the gentlemen who were going back into the realms of the past had better go and get a pair of knee breeches and buttons. I reverence every one of those ancient men who fought for the liberties of the English people; I reverence that great lawyer of England, who stood between a frowning Court and a quailing jury, and established the law which protected the honest publisher against the power of wealth, and against malice and fanaticism.

I say, sir, why was this put into the Constitution? Why, sir, it is not an enactment; it is a declaration of the principles of the common law; it grew out of the attempts of the judicial power to usurp the ancient rights of juries in criminal trials, by construing the privilege of passing on the law and the fact, and rendering a verdict on the whole case, to mean a mere naked, lawless power, without any right whatever to exercise it. It was not an innovation, it was a restoration. It was a proclamation that Judge-made law, as the gentleman from Marin called it, never contained in any Constitution, never found in any common law, never existing in the statute, never observed in any precedents, never practiced, should be set aside and the original instructions and practice of trial by jury should be restored with all its original intent. When did the denial of it begin? Shortly after the declaration of American Independence, when on the other side of the water, the Government and the Courts alike began to fear the restive spirit of the people. And it was applied curiously enough only to the law of libel, and to the law of what were known as seditious libels—libels against the Government, criticisms upon the Government, criticisms upon the members and directors of public institutions, such as were made by Junius, in the case of the People against Woodfall, one of the earliest cases known on the subject; in the case of the Dean of St. Asaph, who recommended the publication—as an individual, not as a newspaper-man—recommended the publication of a pamphlet in relation to public grievances existing at that time.

But it was not till after American Independence had been declared that English Judges and English law Courts commenced to deny the right of the jury to take the law and the facts of a case. I say it was done in sixteen hundred and eighty-seven, when Algernon Sidney was brought to trial before the infamous Jeffreys, and sentenced for having in his possession a paper said to be seditious. And in that case that immortal sum of all villainies declared to the jury, you are to take the law from the Court; you find the fact of the publication and we will apply the law—and the Judge did apply the law; but, sir, thereafter, in the reign of William and Mary, that principle laid down by Chief Justice Jeffreys was set aside—nay, not merely set aside, but stamped upon by the English Parliament, by an Act of William and Mary making void the attainder in which they held:

"WHEREAS, Algernon Sidney, Esq, in the term of St. Michael, in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of our late sovereign Lord King Charles the Second, in the Court of King's Bench at Westminster, was most unjustly and wrongfully convicted and attained, and afterwards executed for high treason: That it be declared and enacted—and be it enacted by the King's and Queen's most excellent majesties, by and with the advice and consent of the Lord's spiritual, and temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same: That the said conviction, judgment, and attainder of the said Algernon Sidney be and are repealed, reversed, made, and declared null and void to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever, and as if no such conviction, judgment, or attainder had ever been had or given; and that no corruption of blood, or other penalty, or forfeiture of honors, dignities, goods, chattels, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, be by the said conviction and attainder incurred; any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding. And to the end that right be done to the memory of the said Algernon Sidney, deceased, be it further enacted, that all records and proceedings relating to the said attainder be wholly canceled and taken off the file, or otherwise defaced or obliterated, to the intent that the same may not be visible in after ages; and that the records and proceedings of and to the said conviction, judgment, and attainder in the said Court of King's Bench now remaining shall, and be forthwith brought into the said Court, this present Easter term, and then and there taken off from the file and canceled."

It remains for the gentleman from Sacramento to make it visible in after ages.

Starkie, in his work on Slander, 74, declares that this attempt of the Judges to take away from the jury the right to decide the law and the fact, had its origin in the Star Chamber.

Now, when the judgment in the case of the Dean of St. Asaph was sought to be set aside, and a rule obtained to show cause why it should not be, the Court decided that the motion should be rejected and the rule discharged.

In seventeen hundred and ninety-two, the Statute of 32d George the Third, was passed, which in effect declared that the jury had the right to determine the law and the fact by a general verdict, as in any other criminal case, and that Act stands to-day. Mr. Burke says there have been passed in England over forty Acts of Parliament for the protection of the rights of jurors in various ways. We have but one; let us leave it where it is. Baron Clark and Chief Justice Bees did attempt to follow the dictum of Lord Mansfield, but it met with such universal condemnation that it was not pressed. That is the history of the English law. In America, our lawyers, our principal lawyers at least, and our pure Judges, with one or two notable exceptions, have always affirmed this right. As early as eighteen hundred and four, in the Supreme Court of the United States, Chief Justice Jay, in passing on one of the confiscation cases growing out of the war with England, said:

"Gentlemen, it must be observed that by the same law which recognizes this distribution of jurisdiction, you have, nevertheless, the right to take upon yourselves to judge of both, and to determine the law as well as the facts of the controversy. On this, and every other occasion, we have no doubt you will pay that respect which is due to the opinion of the Court, for as, on the one hand, it is presumed that the jurors are judges of the fact, it is presumed that the Courts are the best judges of the law; still, gentlemen, both of these are legally within your power of decision."

That was the law laid down in the famous case of the Commonwealth vs. Knapp, reported in 10th Pickering's Reports, page 49.

"As the jury have the right, and, if required by the prisoner, are bound to return a general verdict of guilty or not guilty, they must necessarily, in the discharge of this duty, decide such questions of law as well as of fact, as are involved in this general question, and there is no mode in which their opinions upon questions of law can be reviewed by this Court, or by any other tribunal. But this does not diminish the obligation resting upon the Court to explain the law, or their responsibility for the correctness of the principles of law by them laid down."

The same doctrine was affirmed later in a case reported in 20th Pickering's Reports, page 222, in the case of the Commonwealth vs. Kneeland: The Court say:

"In criminal cases, by the form in which the issue is made up, the jury pass upon the whole matter of law and fact. It is the duty of the Judge to give such instructions to the jury in matters of law, as in his judgment may be best calculated to aid and assist them in forming their verdict."

That was the law of Massachusetts. Now, I wish to pause a moment, and make a suggestion in reply to a statement made by my friend from Kern, Mr. Gregg, who said that he had not found in the Constitution of any of the thirteen States—the thirteen Colonies—a declaration of any principle on this subject. Why? Because it was understood to be the common law of the land at the time these Constitutions were adopted, and it was not until after the Declaration of Independence, and the American Colonies had set the whole world in a ferment with the spirit of liberty—it was then and there that the English Judges and the English Courts began to repress and suppress the rights of the people—not of the press—because the press was not half as important or troublesome as it is to-day. It was the rights of the people. I do not know to what extent the observation of the gentleman is correct. I think he is mistaken. I know that it is the Constitution of Massachusetts, and I know the reason it was put in there, was because after the decisions which I have cited in the 10th and 20th Pickering's Reports, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of the Commonwealth vs. Porter, reported in the 10th Metcalf's Reports, undertook to deny that doctrine, and say that the jury were bound to take the law from the Court. That they had a right to judge of the fact, but the Court had the right to determine the law. That the jury had the mere naked, legal right to go behind the Court, but if they did so, they violated their consciences. The Court say:

"But it is the duty of the Court to instruct the jury on all questions of law which appear to arise in the cause, and also upon all questions pertinent to the issue, upon which either party may request the direction of the Court, upon matters of law. And it is the duty of the jury to receive the law from the Court, and to conform their judgment and decision to such instructions as far as they understand them, in applying the law to the facts to be found by them; and it is not within the legitimate province of the jury to revise, reconsider, or decide contrary to such opinion or direction of the Court in matter of law. To this duty, jurors are bound by a strong social and moral obligation, enforced by the sanction of an oath, to the same extent, and in the same manner, as they are conscientiously bound to decide all questions of fact according to the evidence."

He says they have the power, but not the right. Now, when that decision was published, the mind of the people of Massachusetts took alarm, and when the Constitutional Convention met in eighteen hundred and fifty, that provision was put into the Constitution, and there it stands, and there it will stand forever. There has been only one United States Judge, I think Chief Justice Story, in a case decided in Boston, that assumed to set aside this law, by asserting and stating in a certain way, the dogma of power without the right. One word more; the provision standing in the Constitution does not mean that the jury are to violate the law, nor to make the law, nor to establish a precedent, but merely to say, "guilty or not guilty," upon the whole law of the case, upon the law which made the act in question a crime, as well as the act itself, which alleged the act to be a crime. It makes no precedent; it may be urged, I suppose it would be urged, that the jury in one county, judging, of the law and the fact, might render a verdict one way, and in another county another way, so that no two verdicts would be alike.

I say the case of the "Commonwealth against Porter," was the first case in the country where the doctrine was broached that the jury had the power, but not the right. Now, sir, I insist that when this ancient principle of right has been so often invaded by judicial determination, that it ought, for that reason, to be allowed to stand in the Constitution. Notwithstanding all that has been said here in antagonism to the jury system, I know that judicial history shows that whenever life and liberty has been at stake, the Judges and not the jury are the men to be feared. I say the books are full of cases that might be cited here to-day, showing that in such cases the Judges have been wrong and the juries have been right. I do not believe there is a case on record, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe one can be found, where juries have convicted an innocent man by disregarding the instructions of the Court, and there never will be. On the other hand, we can find cases where the jury have set free innocent men in opposition to corrupt Judges.

The gentleman from Marin made some allusion to the antiquity of witchcraft—to its being brought over with the Pilgrim Fathers, who declared they would take the law of God until they could get better ones. As far as the matter of witchcraft is concerned, I beg leave to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the juries changed on that subject a great while before the Judges did. Who hung poor Rose Colander for witchcraft, described by Hutchinson as the "fairest flower of New England?" Why, sir, it was Sir Mathew Hale who presided and compelled the jury to take from him the dictum that at common law witchcraft was a crime that ought to be punished by hanging and death. It was the same sort of Judge-made law that hung nineteen women, and arraigned seventy-nine more, to be tried and convicted and hung on a charge of witchcraft, until a Middlesex County Jury determined and passed upon the question, by their verdict, as to whether witchcraft was, under the common law, a subject of execution and death; and they found their verdict in favor of the victims, and against the instructions and will and power and opinion of the Court; and the old Judge, angered with juries, and disposed to strike them down, like the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, left the bench in high dudgeon, declaring that they were in a fair way to go to the devil; and the old fellow never sat on the bench again.

No, sir, wherever the Judges have sought convictions, and the juries have decided the law and the fact, the juries have been right. Now, sir, there is a very broad distinction, to which I call your attention, between civil and criminal cases. In a civil case either party may move for a new trial upon questions of law and fact, or the instructions of the Court. In criminal cases this right belongs to the defendant alone when he is convicted. Now here is the difference. It seems to me an answer to the whole proposition. Why, because the jury trial is the defendant's palladium of liberty, and because the Legislature and the Governor feel that there is no safety in trusting life and liberty in the hands of the Judge. Neither any Parliament, nor any Legislature, has hitherto ever allowed the Judge to grant a new trial where the defendant has been acquitted. In civil cases there always has been such power. It exists in the common law, and in our State it exists by express statute. The law takes from the jury the right to determine the law and gives it to the Court, who may control the jury by setting aside their verdict. In other words, the Court sits down with the jury as a kind of a thirteenth juror; hears the evidence, applies his judicial discretion, and if the jury renders a verdict the Court thinks right, it stands; and though the twelve men may think one way and the Court the other, the thirteenth man has power, not merely to hang the jury, but to set aside their verdict and render one for himself. Now, sir, by refusing such power to Courts in criminal cases, the law has decided that it is the jury and not the Court which is to have the whole power—to take the whole case upon the law and the fact—and the Court has no power, and ought to have no power, to interfere with the right of the jury to acquit.

The tendency of the Bench in every age has been to contest the power of juries, to control their verdicts, to regulate, from pride of place, pride of intellect, pride of high station, the judgment of the men who are put into the jury box to decide cases. We all know, who have practiced law, how common and universal that tendency is. Now I make no charge against Judges; I do not want to be understood as making any assault on Judges, for I am proud to believe that we have in the State, and in the United States, a learned, and impartial, and just judiciary. I have no complaints to make, though, like some gentlemen here, I have not the greatest respect for our judicial system, but I have no complaints to make as to the Judges. I may have had decisions that were distasteful; I may have had some imaginary injury done me. But I lay all that aside. I merely want the law to stand as it is, and I hope the obstacles between the Courts and juries may never be removed.

I might go on, if time would permit, and cite to the gentlemen of this Convention instances where unjust laws have been stayed from execution, how the fierceness of public sentiment, and the tyranny of fanaticism, have lost their sting in the jury box, until the people have time to rally and sweep them from the statute books. I do not think the citizen should be shielded from a just law, but, sir, who is to judge? For my part I prefer an honest jury instructed by an honest Judge. Why, sir, what is your law? Let it but once outrage justice, let it violate a natural right, let it run counter to the public conscience, and your preachers may preach, and your Judges may howl instructions until they are hoarse, but no jury will ever convict. They have never done it. They have never done it even in this State; only in a few rare instances have they ever failed to uphold a wholesome enactment against the violator.

These are my views, not as a lawyer, but they are my views as a citizen, standing upon the plane of a citizen and not upon the plane of that much abused professional man, the lawyer: and I appeal to you to maintain this clause as it stands. I have felt the cynicisms uttered here by those who are less skilled in dealing with that profession. I have felt hurt many times by the slurs and insinuations made on the floor of this Convention against lawyers and members of the legal profession, and I insist it is most unjust. I say that wherever liberty, wherever humanity, wherever the rights of men have demanded vindication, there in the front of the fight, with shield and sword, you will find the members of the legal profession. I want no better record for lawyers than that of Erskine, in his fight with Justice Buller, when he stood up there and contended for the rights of juries, and for the rights of the citizen. Look at Curran, standing up amidst the armies, and breathing out his last words of defiance. I want to point to Otis and to Adams, who stood all day in the Courts and argued for the rights of the people. The charge is unjust; it is cruel. You appoint a man to a high position; you take a bond from him; you exact security. No man ever asked it from a professional man. You place your life, your honor—all you have in the world—in the hands of a professional man. If you are accused of crime, you go to him for protection and advice. Your property is at stake—you come to him and put your property in his hands, lay your head down on his bosom and sleep, and leave it all to him. I know the vulgar prejudices which are fostered and pampered on the stage. I know how apt men are to repeat them, and indulge in them; but, sir, they are unjust, not only unjust, but criminal. But I make no appeal upon the ground of our being lawyers to keep this provision in; for the moment I forget that I am a lawyer. But as an American citizen, asking of American citizens to preserve in the organic law of this land this declaration which has been the bulwark of a free press, which should stand forever as a monument, piercing the very heavens, shining white as the snow that crests the tops of the Sierra Nevadas, marking the progress of the human race towards liberty, freedom, justice and peace. [Applause.]

SPEECH OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope, sir, that the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, will not prevail. Speaking for myself, sir, I had rather have a licentious press than a trammeled and restricted press, and I think it is not too high a eulogium upon the press of the United States, nor upon the press of England, to say that they have been the palladium of liberty. And they are the right arm of liberty now. And with the press trammeled, with the press in any way hampered, with the press troubled, liberty will faint and die. I hope this Convention will take no backward step in this matter, but that we will maintain all the ground that has been acquired in this fight between liberty and despotism, and take another step forward if we are capable of doing it. We have not so much need of dealing with the past as with the present. We must deal with the present, for it can only be neglected at the expense of liberty itself—at the expense of those rights which are dear to every American citizen.

Does not the history of the past twenty years warn us that no step which we have taken upon the subject of the rights of the press should ever be retraced? Is there no warning in the action of the people of the State of New York in crushing the rascally Tweed ring—the corrupt ring that he and his creatures held over the people? Was he in any way checked, was he in any way controlled, was the power of that ring for robbing the people in any way interfered with by the Courts, by the Judges, by any private individual, until the press alone grappled with the monster? No one to interfere on behalf of the people until, finally, the press came to the front, and did interfere in behalf of the people. They attacked this corrupt and thieving ring alone and single-handed, and after a hard struggle they broke their power, and struck the shackles which had so long bound the people in absolute slavery. It was through the exertions of an honest and fearless press alone that the power of this ring was broken, and the ringleaders brought to account for their misdeeds—finally to die in felon's cells.

Is it not a notorious fact that the Republican party wrecked itself more, in attempting to foist the Poland Bill upon the people of the United States, than by any other act they have committed in the Congress of the United States in the last fifteen years? It was that, in connection with the various steals, which the Poland Bill was intended to hide and cover up, and prevent their being discussed which, in eighteen hundred and seventy-four, turned out three fourths of the Republican members, and sent two thirds of the Democrats in. It was not the fact of the Credit Mobilier frauds; it was not so much the fact that corruption was oozing from every pore of Government, but the fact that the free press of the country was attempted to be bridled, that the press was endeavored to be corrupted, and silenced, and trammeled—it was that fact alone which caused the political revolution in eighteen hundred and seventy-four, and the change of political power in the House of Representatives of the United States.

But, sir, without discussing this subject further, I will say that I would rather have a licentious press than a bridled press. The press is the right arm of liberty, and whatever steps we have taken, whatever advances we have made, whatever position the press has attained in advancing the rights of humanity and of liberty, I want us to hold, and I will never consent to take one backward step. I had much rather go forward. Therefore, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, will not be adopted, and I hope that the unanimous voice of this Convention will be such that the propositions reported by the Committee on Judiciary shall stand in the Bill of Rights untouched by our hands. It is right and just, and politic as well. It has been there, let it remain there. There is no good reason to be advanced for its removal.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: The section, as reported by the committee, is the section of the old Constitution, with a simple amendment to make it conform to the action of this Convention in reference to the Grand Jury. It strikes out "by indictment." It is the same section reported by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights; and, Mr. Chairman, while I have great respect for the opinions of the gentlemen who moved the amendment, I think this is one of the subjects that the people have not asked to be interfered with at all. I think it is one of the things that ought to be allowed to remain in the Constitution, as it is; and I hope that the Convention will not spend any more time upon it, but pass on to some of the live questions for which this Convention was called—reforms in the system of taxation, corporations, and those various questions which were considered of so much importance by the people when they called this Convention. I prefer to retain the old section, with the simple amendment to make it conform to the change in the Grand Jury system. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

SPEECH OF MR. CASSERLY.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: I do not intend to indulge in any lengthy remarks on this important question. I have before me now a report of perhaps the greatest trial that ever occurred in the United States, in regard to criminal indictments, and that is, the case of the People vs. Croswell. The Judges found the case so difficult that they agreed to divide upon it. Judge Kent was on the bench, and, conservative as he was, he delivered the opinion, which at every point sustains the views of those of us here who are not disposed to make this change in the present Constitution. He refers, as a thing naturally to be respected, to the great fact of public opinion. On that point allow me to read from the book, because it is shorter and better expressed than I can express it. He says:

"The jury must judge of the seditious tendency of the libel. Some would have every censure upon the measures of government a libel. If this were the case, the voice of truth would cease to be heard amidst the notes of adulation. It ought to be left to a jury to decide whether what was called calumny was well or ill founded.

"I have thus shown that the rule denying permission to give the truth in evidence was not an original rule of the common law. The ancient statutes and precedents, which are the only memorials to which we can resort, all place the crime on its falsity. The Court of Star Chamber originated the doctrine, and it was considered an innovation. When it was brought into a Court of common law it was resisted and denied. The Court dared not practice upon it, and the jury gave it their negative. Lord Holt totally disregarded the rule in the case of Fuller; and it did not become an express decision of a Court of common law till Franklin's case, in seventeen hundred and thirty-one; and there the counsel made a zealous struggle against it, as new, dangerous, and arbitrary. In the trial of Horne, Lord Mansfield laid the rule aside, and the counsel for the Crown rejoiced at an opportunity to meet the defendant upon the merits of the accusation. In seventeen hundred and ninety-two it was made a questionable point, in the House of Lords, and one of the highest law characters in the House seems to have borne his testimony against it. I feel myself, therefore, at full liberty to examine this question upon principle, and to lay the doctrine aside if it shall appear unjust in itself, or incompatible with public liberty and the rights of the press.

"But, whatever may be our opinion of the English law, there is another and a very important view of the subject to be taken, and that is with respect to the true standard of the freedom of the American press. In England, they have never taken notice of the press in any parliamentry recognition of the principles of the government, or of the rights of the subject, whereas the people of this country have always classed the freedom of the press among their fundamental rights. This I can easily illustrate by a few examples:

"The first American Congress, in seventeen hundred and seventy-four, in one of their public addresses (Journals, vol. 1, p. 57) enumerated five invaluable rights, without which a people can not be free and happy, and under the protecting and encouraging influence of which these colonies had hitherto so amazingly flourished and increased. One of these rights was the freedom of the press, and the importance of this right consisted, as they observed, 'besides the advancement of truth, science, morality, and arts in general, in its diffusion of liberal sentiments on the administration of government, its ready communication of thoughts between subjects, and its consequential promotion of union among them, whereby oppressive officers are shamed or intimidated into more honorable and just modes of conducting affairs.' The next high authority I shall mention is the Convention of the people of this State, which met in seventeen hundred and eighty-eight. They declared, unanimously (Journals, pp. 44, 51, 52, 73, 74), that the freedom of the press was a right which could not be abridged or violated. The same opinion is contained in the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and to which this State was a party. It is also made an article in most of the State Constitutions, that the liberty of the press was essential to the security of freedom, and ought to be inviolably preserved; and in two of these Constitutions (Pennsylvania and Ohio) this freedom of the press is specifically defined, by saying that in prosecutions for any publications respecting the official conduct of men in a public capacity, or where the matter is proper for public information, the truth may always be given in evidence. I shall mention, lastly, the Act of Congress, of the fourteenth of July, seventeen hundred and ninety-eight, which prescribed penalties for certain specified libels upon the government of the United States, and allowed the truth to be given in evidence on every prosecution under that Act; and it is worthy of notice, that the part of the Act allowing the truth to be given in evidence was declaratory, and thereby conveyed the sense of Congress, that such was already the existing law.

"These multiplied acts and declarations are the highest, the most solemn, and commanding authorities, that the State or the nation can produce. They are generally the acts of the people themselves, when they came forward in their original character, to change the Constitution of the country, and to assert their indubitable rights. And it seems impossible that they could have spoken with so much explicitness and energy, if they had intended nothing more than that restricted and slavish press, which may not publish anything, true or false, that reflects on the character and administration of public men. Such is the English doctrine of the liberty of the press, as asserted in Franklin's case. (See also Hawk., tit. Libels, 7.) A treatise on hereditary rights has been held a libel, although it contained no reflections upon any part of the subsisting government. (Queen vs. Bedford, Str. 189; Gilbert's Rep. K. B. 297.) And if the theory of the prevailing doctrines in England (for even there it is now scarcely anything more than theory), had been strictly put in practice with us, where would have been all those enlightened and manly discussions which prepared and matured the great events of our revolution, or which, in a more recent period, pointed out the weakness and folly of the Confederation, and roused the nation to throw it aside, and to erect a better government upon its ruins? They were, no doubt, libels upon the existing establishments, because they tended to defame them, and to expose them to the contempt and hatred of the people. They were, however, libels founded in truth, and dictated by worthy motives.

"I am far from intending that these authorities mean, by the freedom of the press, a press wholly beyond the reach of the law, for that would be emphatically Pandora's box, the source of every evil. And yet the house of delegates in Virginia, by their resolution of the seventh of January, eighteen hundred, and which appears to have been intended for the benefit and instruction of the Union, came forward as the advocates of a press to-day unshackled, and declare, in so many words, that 'the baneful tendency of the Sedition Act was but little diminished by the privilege of giving in evidence the truth of the matter contained in political writings.' They seem also to consider it as the exercise of a pernicious influence, and as striking at the root of free discussion, to punish, even for a false and malicious writing, published with intent to defame those who administer the government. If this doctrine was to prevail, the press would become a pest, and destroy the public morals. Against such a commentary upon the freedom of the American press, I beg leave to enter my protest. The founders of our government were too wise and too just, even to have intended, by the freedom of the press, a right to circulate falsehood as well as truth, or that the press should be the lawful vehicle of malicious defamation, or an engine for evil and designing men, to cherish, for mischievous purposes, sedition, irreligion and impurity. Such an abuse of the press would be incompatible with the existence and good order of civil society. The true rule of law is, that the intent and tendency of the publication is, in every instance, to be the substantial inquiry on the trial, and, that the truth is admissible in evidence, to explain that intent, and not in every instance to justify it. I adopt, in this case, as perfectly correct, the comprehensive and accurate definition of one of the council at the bar (General Hamilton), that the liberty of the press consisted in the right to publish, with impunity, truth, with good motives, and for justifiable ends, whether it respects government, magistracy, or individuals."

The result was, Mr. Chairman, that the Judges disagreed, standing two and two, but the Legislature of the State of New York, on that day, had two bills before them. One was a bill framed by the Council on Revision, and was supposed to be in favor of the freedom of the press; and that bill was lost by a large majority; and almost immediately afterwards a bill concerning libel was introduced by Mr. Van Ness, which passed both houses and became a law, in 1805. That Act is as follows:

"WHEREAS, Doubts exists, whether, on the trial of an indictment or information for libel, the jury have a right to give their verdict on the whole matter in issue:

"1. Be it therefore declared and enacted by the people of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, That on every such indictment or information, the jury, who shall try the same, shall have a right to determine the law and the fact, under the direction of the Court." Under the direction of the Court, mark you, sir. "shall have a right to determine the law and the fact, under the direction of the Court, in like manner as in other criminal cases, and shall not be directed or required by the Court or Judge, before whom such indictment or information shall be tried, to find the defendant guilty, merely on the proof of the publication by the defendant of the matter charged to be libelous, and of the sense ascribed thereto, in such indictment or information; provided, nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall be held or taken to impair or destroy the right and privilege of the defendant to apply to the Court to have the judgment arrested, as hath heretofore been practiced.

"2. And be it further declared and enacted, That in every prosecution for writing or publishing any libel, it shall be lawful for the defendant, upon the trial of the cause, to give in evidence in his defense, the truth of the matter contained in the publication charged as libelous; provided always, that such evidence shall not be a justification, unless on the trial it shall be further made satisfactorily to appear that the matter charged as libelous, was published with good motives and for justifiable ends."

Mr. Chairman, the Constitution of New York to-day has embodied in it a declaration substantially the same as that for which we are contending here. I am not enamored of old things because they are old, nor am I an enemy of old things because they are old. This has been tried for a long period, and having been found beneficial, I think we should not change it. I contend that this is not the sort of a change which the people whom I represent sent me here to make. I do not believe that any change in this respect is required, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: Notwithstanding the very able and very interesting arguments I have heard in support of the report of the committee, I cannot see that these arguments apply in this case. On the one hand the amendment is objected to because it tends to the protection of the freedom of the press, and on the other hand it is objected to because it trammels the freedom of the press. Now, in regard to the objection that the amendment tends to the abridgment of the freedom of the press, I submit that there is nothing whatever in the amendment tending in that direction. It seems to have been treated here as though it was the first part of the section, which provides for the freedom of the press, which this amendment aims to strike out. It is merely the last clause which is proposed to be stricken out. The freedom of the press is fully guaranteed and provided for in both of the sections, to which this amendment does not apply at all, in the words: "Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right," and "In all prosecutions for libel the truth may be given in evidence." We are not seeking to restrict the citizen from freely writing his sentiments, nor to prevent him from giving the truth in evidence. The amendment does not do it—can not do it—but simply to strike out that clause, and put libel on the same footing with every other crime. The amendment is simply to take away that provision which does not apply to other criminal prosecutions; to take away that provision declaring that in this particular class of crime —libels—the jury shall find upon the law and the fact. I cannot conceive how any gentleman can suppose that this amendment in any way interferes with the freedom of the press, or prevents any person from freely writing or expressing his sentiments. It goes simply to this question: If your statutes define libel to be a crime, and define forgery to be a crime, and define various classes of malicious mischief to be a crime, shall they be tried by one law, or some by one system and some by another? That is to say, shall the jury have the same right to decide the one as the other, the same rules of evidence, and the same method of trying the cases in one as in the other, or shall they not; shall certain ones be selected and preferred?

Now, I know that the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, on the other hand, claims the need of that clause in the section as a guarantee to the jury against the usurpation of Judges; but if that be so, why then take that clause away from where it is and put it in the section that provides for trial juries in general? There is an answer to that. I understand the object of the gentleman from Sacramento to be simply to take it away from where it is; then if any gentleman wants to provide that juries may, in all criminal cases, determine both the law and the fact, let it be added to section seven. Otherwise we have this state of things. Whatever the theory upon which this clause became attached here, we do know, as the gentleman from Kern has stated, that it is a source of deception; that juries are misled, on libel trials. They are not told, upon the trial of a case of libel, "You must find a verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole case." They are not so instructed. They are told: "Gentlemen, in this case you are the judges of the law" They treat this class of crimes entirely on a different basis from other crimes.

Now, I do not know that the press asks anything of the sort. I do not believe that the press is asking any immunity which a person charged with any other offense before the law is not entitled to receive. I do not understand that the press asks that they shall be permitted to publish articles against the honor and reputation of citizens or officials without being held responsible. I do not understand that any gentleman will rise here and ask the privilege of defaming character without being held responsible. It is contemplated, in the very beginning of the section, that they are to be held responsible for the abuse of that right. I do not understand that gentlemen of the press ask to be relieved of that responsibility. The amendment does not attempt that at all; but it is merely this, that you are not to select certain cases to be tried by a different rule from other cases, but that all criminal cases are to be tried and considered by the jury in the same manner. If you are going to allow the jury to be the judge of the law and the fact in libel cases, then it would only be just to insert a provision here that in cases of forgery, malicious mischief, and the various classes of misdemeanors and felonies, the jury shall judge of the law and the facts: that in no case shall they be trammeled by any instructions from the Court. That would make the law harmonious. It would be just, at least, and the law would have a uniform operation. As it stands here I do not see the justice of it. I will simply repeat my proposition once. The amendment is designed to make the law harmonious—to treat one class of offenses the same as all others. Whatever the law declares to be a crime, goes before the jury, and is tried by the jury, and a verdict rendered on it upon the same principles as in any other case where a man is charged with any crime; and no class of offenses shall be preferred. As it now stands, it guarantees the freedom of speech—the right to publish one's sentiments.

For these reasons I hope this amendment will be adopted. Then, if these gentlemen wish to define the powers of the jury plainly—if they wish to provide that the jury shall be the judge of the law and the fact in all criminal cases, let it be provided in another place. Let this clause be attached where it belongs. Let us make the law uniform in its bearings. Let it not apply to one case and not to another.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

SPEECH OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: It is somewhat amusing to me, sir, to see how certain gentlemen here one day clinging with all their powers of eloquence to the sacred charter of liberty, in order to advance their favorite propositions, and the next day they are for making a change, and against sticking to the relics of the barbarous ages. One day, like a balky mule, with clenched teeth, standing with their faces to the past, peering into the darkness, and trying to stop the revolutions of the world; and the next day we find them tugging at the wheels of the great triumphal car of human progress. One day the most conservative, and the next day the most overflowing radicals. Whenever anything new is mentioned that gentlemen do not like, "I stand by the old Constitution." Whenever a new proposition is presented which meets their views, then they are opposed to clinging to a relic of barbarism. Now, sir, it is not an argument in favor of a proposition that our fathers indorsed it, because we have rejected nine tenths of their arguments. Neither is it an argument in favor of a proposition because it is new. Why, gentlemen talk one breath about sticking to the old Constitution, and the next breath about amending it. What right have gentlemen to tell us what the people want? How do they know what the people want? I am not aware that the people have ever voted on this proposition, so as to give us any intimation of what they want, and it is amusing to hear gentlemen on this floor proclaiming what the people demand of the members of this Convention. Gentlemen seem to think that all they have to do is to get up here and talk about capital, capital, capital. The gentleman from San Francisco, where they have a great deal of money and not much land, thinks the evils of capital lie in landed estates, and I presume my friend, Colonel Barnes, is in favor of making every farmer give up half his land to the man who has none. And then, my friends, the farmers who have land and not much money, say that the people want the money of San Francisco cinched.

MR. BARNES. I am in favor of taxing that, too, right up to the handle.

MR. McFARLAND. I did not hear much about it in the gentleman's speech. The gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, says the fear of the press is a most healthy sentiment in public life. Sir, that was a most unfortunate expression. That fear of the press is a most unfortunate thing. The best men in America have a fear of the public press. We see it everywhere, and if it does not show its head in this Convention, it is the only political body I ever saw in which it did not. I do not believe there is but one live American to-day who is entirely free from this fear, and he is traveling abroad.

MR. AYERS. I said evil men have a fear of the press.

MR. McFARLAND. And who is to say who are evil men? You may consider a man evil whom I consider good. You may consider a man an evil man for advocating doctrines which do not meet your views, and I may think the reverse. I have seen the best men in this country driven out of public life by the press, by utterly irresponsible charges, without any foundation in fact, crammed into the ears of the people, day after day, until finally they come to believe it. You may say that men can outlive it. You may outlive the itch or small-pox, but you will suffer in the meantime. Sir, men are outliving these charges now, but they are still under the ban of public suspicion. As this Convention knows, the best men of this country have been driven out of public life by an irresponsible, licentious press ——

MR. AYERS. Belknap and Babcock, for instance.

MR. McFARLAND. Perhaps they were not bad men. Do you know that Belknap was a bad man? He was charged with a public crime, and the whole power of the administration was used to punish him; he was tried by men adverse to him in politics, and in a community where prejudice existed, and still he was acquitted.

MR. BARNES. I wish to put in a couple of counter-weights. I suggest Tweed and Tilden.

MR. McFARLAND. As I said, he was tried before a jury composed of men opposed to him politically, and the law officer of the government used his best endeavors to convict him, special counsel was employed, and yet he was acquitted. That is some answer to the charge. I am sorry that gentlemen have introduced party politics here to-day.

Now, I understand the gentleman from San Francisco, Col. Barnes, to argue this, if anything, that the jury should be the judges of the law in the case. Is not that it? I do not understand him to make any distinction at all between any other class of crimes and libel. He read authorities advocating the doctrine that the jury should have the right in all criminal cases to judge of the law and the fact. He read authorities to the effect that the jury in all cases should judge of the law and the fact. Now it is well understood that the jury is to determine the fact, and take the law from the Court. That is the law in every other case, every solitary case except libel. Now why should it not be the law in libel cases? Is there any reason for it. The gentleman talks about crushing the press. Who is trying to crush the press. What more can they ask than this: "Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish, his sentiments, being responsible for the abuse of that right," is not that as much liberty as they want? Doesn't it give them all the liberty in the world? How can they come here and ask to be put on some higher plane, more irresponsible position than that which is occupied by other men charged with crime. Why, sir, go back to England. Why, the public press was first started in England at the expense of the government. It was considered and held as an agency, subject to the government. They could not publish anything except with the permission of the government. There is no such state of things here. What constitutes the government here? It is not the crowned heads. There the people have no voice in the government, and the Courts and judges are the creatures of the Crown. Here the government is the agency of the people themselves, and our Courts are the creatures of the people, responsible to the people. Government is an agency created by the people themselves, and there is nothing to fear from the Courts. I am rejoiced that my learned friend from San Francisco has read so many authorities to show the infamous political character of judges, and he then closed his speech with a eulogium upon lawyers, from among whom the judges are selected.

Now, I say the only question here is this: Shall men charged with libel stand on the same plane as other men charged with crime? If not, why not? Why should there be any exception? Why should there be any immunity granted to one class of crime over another? I say they should have no such immunity. Every man knows their power. They have more power than any other class in the State. Every man knows the power of the newspapers. When you run a paper it costs no more to print one thing than another. It costs no more to print a libel than it does to print an article on the price of potatoes. Then, how are you going to defend yourselves against these attacks? Can you talk to the people as cheaply as the paper can? Can you go around where the paper circulates and see and talk to every man who reads it? It is utterly impossible. If you write a communication, the chances are they will not publish it for you. Then how are you going to fight the papers? They are the most powerful agencies in the land, and they should not ask for these special privileges which other men do not have. My eloquent friend from San Francisco, Colonel Barnes, might stump the State from one end to the other for two years, and yet, with all his eloquence, he could not reach one half of the people who had read the paper. There is no defense against the paper. Even when a man is accused of some crime, and is cleared by a jury, the paper comes out the next day and says that he was whitewashed. [Laughter.] Now, with all this power in their hands, gentlemen want to give them these special privileges. It is unreasonable and unjust. I do not desire to make any attacks upon the press. I simply want newspaper libelers to stand before a jury just where every other man must stand when he is accused of crime.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the committee now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland.

MR. FAWCETT. I have an amendment to offer.

THE COMMITTEE RISES.

MR. SMITH of Kern. Mr. Chairman: I move that the Committee now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion prevailed.

THE LAW OF LIBEL CASES.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. FAWCETT. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment which I desire to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words 'and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact' from the last two lines, and insert the following: 'and the jury shall have the right to find a general verdict as in other criminal cases.'"

SPEECH OF MR. FAWCETT.

MR. FAWCETT. Mr. Chairman: In order to understand the purpose and scope of the proposed amendment, it will be proper, perhaps, to go back a little for the purpose of inquiring into and ascertaining the facts and reasons which led to the Constitutional provision as it has existed heretofore. At English common law, as it was originally declared, the functions of the jury and of the Court were separated by a clear and distinct line. In all criminal prosecutions in English jurisprudence, I believe, at the common law, as it was finally crystalized and declared, and as it finally assumed a well defined shape, juries were empowered to declare and find upon all the issues submitted to them in the form of a general verdict of "guilty" or "not guilty." This, I think, was the case in all criminal prosecutions. In no case, as the common law finally assumed shape, if I recollect aright, was the jury limited to the duty of finding specially and solely upon the facts of the case by a verdict in the form of a special finding. In all cases under the instructions of the Court or Judge, the jury had the final power of deciding for themselves questions of law and fact by finding a general verdict of "guilty" or "not guilty," which necessarily embraced all that there was in the case. But, about the middle of the last century, in the expanding freedom of the English people, periodicals and newspapers began to assume the privilege of criticising the Government of England in its various agencies and officers. This tendency, this assertion of liberty upon the part of the people soon grew to be exceedingly distasteful to the British officials, to the Crown, and the Courts, perhaps, and to others whom the press and the publishers were in the habit of attacking. So that about the year seventeen hundred and fifty, the Courts of Great Britain in which prosecutions for libel were urged, began to arrogate to themselves the power of directing special verdicts from juries on prosecutions for libel. That is to say, the Courts or Judges claimed the right to decide whether or not a publication was libelous on its face, and leave the jury the single question as to the fact of the publication by the defendant. The Courts began to direct and did direct juries to limit their verdicts to a special finding as to the fact of publication, taking from them the right, which up to that time had been exercised in all criminal cases, to cover all the issues in the case, both of law and fact, by a general verdict of "guilty" or "not guilty."

In the case of Woodfall, which has been cited here, where the publisher of the Morning Advertiser attacked, in seventeen hundred and seventy, a high officer of the government, or permitted a correspondent—who, I believe, was no other than Junius—to attack in his journal certain high officers of the government, Lord Mansfield, whose word was law in Westminister Hall for a quarter of a century, declared that juries in libel cases had power only to find upon the question of fact as to publication. The assertion of this doctrine, sir, was disputed by the liberty loving people of England. It was disputed by their advocates, by the lawyers of the time, led by the noble Erskine. This contest was carried on in Parliament, where the opponents of the new and dangerous doctrine were led by Fox. It continued for years and years. Fox brought forth his libel bill to defeat no less than six times.

In the year seventeen hundred and eighty-four came the now famous case of the Dean of St. Asaph, the case which gave rise to the difficulty between Justice Buller and the Advocate Erskine, and in which, allow me to say, Erskine, who belonged to what seemed to be a much disposed class of advocates or lawyers, stood in his place like a rock, clad, it may be, in purple and fine linen, even in a silken gown, with a wig, and with kid gloves on his hands, a gentleman and an advocate—stood like a rock between the liberties of the English people and the oppression of the Courts and Crown. In that case, sir, the jury undertook, as we say in these days, to take the bit in their teeth, and in spite of the injunction of the Judge to find a special verdict upon the fact, added to that the word "only," so that the verdict read in this way: "guilty of publishing only." Buller refused to receive the verdict in that shape, and insisted that the word "only" should be stricken out, because it was evident that if that word was permitted to stand that would dispose of all the issues embraced within the charge pending before the Court. Upon the question of whether that word should be stricken out this contest arose between Erskine and the Justice Buller, and which will ever make that case memorable. The result was that the foreman of the jury, speaking for himself and his fellows, coming to the rescue of Erskine, the word was permitted to stand, and in that case, for the first time in many years, the jury, through the exercise of nerve and will and determination, was allowed to find upon the law and fact which was properly before them in the case.

Then the struggle was renewed in Parliament, and in seventeen hundred and ninety-two it culminated in the famous libel Act known as "Fox's Libel Act," upon the seventh effort which had been made in Parliament to make that the law of the land. The evil to be cured by that Act was the unwarrantable assertion of power upon the part of the Court—an unwarrantable infringement upon the course of the common law, taking away from the common law jury one of the functions which it had invariably discharged in criminal cases, with the single exception of a prosecution for libel. The evil to be cured was the restoration to the jury of the power to pass generally by a verdict of "guilty" or "not guilty" upon all the issues embraced within the indictment; not to give them any greater power, not to extend their power one iota over that which was exercised habitually in other criminal cases, but simply to put a prosecution for libel upon exactly the same plane and same footing that prosecutions for the violation of other criminal laws occupied. It was a return to the ancient landmarks alone, and vindicated the power that the jury exercised in all other cases. It was not to confer additional powers upon the jury, and not to interpose any other rule in a libel case than that which was habitually interposed in all criminal prosecutions. That law declared, in fact, that "the jury may give a general verdict of 'guilty' or 'not guilty' upon the whole matter put in issue upon indictment or information, and shall not be required or directed by the Court or Judge before whom it shall be tried to find the defendant guilty merely on the proof of the publication of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to the same in the indictment or information. Provided, that on every such trial the Court or Judge before whom it shall be tried, according to their discretion, give their opinion and direction to the jury on the matter in issue, in like manner as in other criminal cases."

So that the effect of that legislation was not to take away from the Judge the power to charge the jury upon questions of law, and to make the jury the ultimate and exclusive judges of questions of law, but simply to allow them to find a general verdict of "guilty" or not "guilty," which embraced within its limits a finding upon the question of intent, and as to whether the writing or printing was intended by the publisher to be libelous or not. That was the evil that was struck at and was cured by the Act known as the "Fox Libel Act." That was passed in the year 1792—not before the Declaration of Independence, as the gentleman from San Francisco, I think, asserted; not so that it became a part of the common law of this land; not so that it was in force and effect to the thirteen colonies of this nation—but in the year 1792.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I do not like to be credited with saying what I did not say. What I said was, that it was not until after the Declaration of Independence that this contest began in England, and that the libel bill was passed.

MR FAWCETT. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman asserted that this clause under discussion was not found in the laws of the original thirteen colonies, because it was already the law of the land by virtue of the enactments of the British Parliament. There was no enactment upon that subject until 1792, so that these enactments could not have been a part of the common law of these colonies at the time of the formation of the original Constitution. There was the abuse and there was the whole corrective. It restored the English common law to its original scope, and restored the functions of the jury to its limit. That remains the law until this day, so that Judges participate with juries in the legal propositions precisely as they do in other criminal prosecutions. It has not been thought necessary to clothe the press with special immunities or privileges to put it on a plane a little different or a little higher than that occupied by others within the limits of the realm, but it occupies and stands exactly in the same position before the law as the lowest citizen or the greatest and noblest in the realm occupies to-day.

Now it seems to have happened, sir, in this country, that in attacking an evil which had been found to be gigantic—the encroachment of the Courts or the government upon the rights of juries in cases of this kind—the people, as they have often done, as they are liable to do, and as they have done here and probably will do again in this Convention, went, I think, too far the other way. The corrective was simply to restore the power of juries in libel cases, and fix it precisely as it exists in all cases. But, sir, we seem to have gone a little in the other direction, so that in this single class of cases—as the constitutional enactment is interpreted by many jurists, and as it has been interpreted by the lawmakers of this Commonwealth in the penal code—the prosecution in this country stands upon a plane by itself, and the jury is made the exclusive judge of the law as well as of the fact in the case. That is to say, we have a constitutional provision here as a part of the same section which reads as follows:

"In all criminal prosecutions for libels, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact."

I say that although we have this provision in our Constitution, which prescribes to the jury the cause on which a verdict shall be rendered, that there is left no power in the Courts, as this law has been construed, to give this part of the constitutional law to a jury and say that they are bound by it as the law of the land. We have a Constitution which says that if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted. That is the rule by which the jury is or ought to be governed, and yet the remaining clause of the Constitution, as it has been found by the law-makers and by many of the Courts, takes away the power to read that part of that section to the jury, and to say to these gentlemen: "That is the law of the land, and you are bound by it." But if the Court is asked to give that part to the jury as an instruction, it must say in the same breath; "Gentlemen, this is the Constitution, you ought to be bound by it; you have no right to convict except in the cases pointed out; but the law obliges me to say at the same time, you need not be governed by it; you are the judges. You, if you see fit, may override the Constitution; may disregard its plain language and set it aside."

I hold that this is worse than absurd. It is criminal to permit such a provision as that to stand in the Constitution. It takes away from the Judge the power to give a constitutional provision to the jury in the nature of a charge, and to state to the jury that they are bound by that as by the law of the land. I say, sir, that the honest newspaper publishers, of which the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, I am happy to say, is one, does not need any such protection as that. There is a class of publishers who do need it, and all the immunities from prosecution that they can get. But the respectable and honest editor or publisher, he who is actuated by a desire to do justice, to combat and destroy wrong, who has truth and right upon his side, needs no such immunity or privilege granted to him as that. He is ever ready to take his chances with the other citizens of the commonwealth, and to occupy the same plane that you do and I do, or any other person who may be charged in a criminal case.

The amendment proposed by myself I think covers the ground exactly. It says that the jury shall have the right to find a general verdict as in other criminal cases. It puts a person charged with libel upon the same plane exactly that all occupy in other cases.

Now, this discussion has been limited, so far as the effect of these amendments has been concerned, to the cases of publishers. But there is another large class of libels which have not been mentioned yet. A libel may be printed or may be published without being found in the columns of a newspaper. Any sort of a writing, caricature, or printing, whether found in the columns of a newspaper, or found in type, is defined by law as libelous; so that under this law, as it stands, the grossest libels, whether seen in the columns of a newspaper or not, whether in caricature, placards, or writings, enjoys the immunities and privileges granted here equally as much as newspapers. Now, is it right? Supposing a person having a grudge against another publishes a defamatory writing himself, and circulates it, not through the columns of a newspaper, but through some other medium. The arguments advanced by the gentleman from Los Angeles and others, in favor of the freedom of the press do not apply to a case of that kind. There is the case of a very common malefactor—a low-bred cuss; if you will allow me to use the expression—why should he enjoy any immunity or privilege that is not extended to any other assassin or cut-throat when placed upon his trial. I do not see.

There is one thing certain, Mr. Chairman, that I stand pledged to here, and which I think every honorable member here should stand to, and that is to prevent, by all honorable means, anything and everything in the nature of class legislation. I do not care whether legislation is sought in favor of a corporation, or whether it is sought in favor of the newspaper press, or whether it is sought in favor of any other class or occupation, or condition, or profession; I stand here, for one, to denounce it, and to say that in a Convention like this, which is framing the superstructure of society, the edifice in which we are to dwell for a quarter of a century, we should lay aside all feeling and legislate for all alike, and put everybody on the same footing. I do not recognize the right of the press any more than I do that of the corporations, to stand up before a Court and say "I am above the law; I enjoy here special immunities and privileges which others of my fellows in other avocations and employments do not enjoy." I say that this is unnecessary to the protection of the press, and that the honest editor and the honest press does not need any such protection as that.

However, this amendment performs this function. It might be said that in case this clause be stricken out, as here moved, that a doubt might arise as to whether the common law was thereby restored to force in this State, as declared by Lord Mansfield, and as to whether or not juries may not be required to find a special verdict in cases of libel. Therefore, I, for one, voted against striking that clause out. This amendment, however, will remove all doubt upon that subject, and will leave prosecutions for libel in exactly the same condition that prosecutions for other criminal offenses occupy. I submit and maintain that it is right and just, and that no fair-minded newspaper editor, or other person, when he comes to examine the matter—to examine it, and look into it, and ascertain the full bearings of the subject—can object for a moment to the insertion of this clause into the Constitution.

MR. BROWN. Now, Mr Chairman, it seems to me that this question has not been treated entirely fairly, although there has been a great deal said. We hear, for instance, advanced by every able authority it is true, and against which I feel diffident in making any reply whatever, the idea that there is class legislation here, and that we should be particularly cautious when a matter of class legislation comes up, and that no class should be favored by legislation. Now, if we will examine with very great care, section nine, which is before us, we will find that every citizen may freely speak, but also may be prosecuted for libel in his speaking as well as writing, and we see here that freedom of speech is protected by this clause. He may also publish his sentiments upon all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of the same. Now, it does appear to me that there is a misapprehension with regard to the latter clause of this provision, and that is with regard to the jury, and what it has a right to do. Now we find that it is stated plainly that "in all criminal prosecutions for libels, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted." That all appears to be strictly right. No one appears to find any fault with that, but when it comes to the last clause, "and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact," the apprehension appears to exist that the jury can create law, can form law to act upon. There is no such thing. They can determine the law and the fact. They are to determine both. It does not mean that they create law or that they create fact in the case, but they are there given the opportunity to judge and the widest range in order to protect freedom of speech and the freedom of the press.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend at present, as so much has been said about antiquity and law and prestige and former things, to dwell upon anything of the kind, even if I were able, for I am under the impression that we are not under obligation here in this body to respect or regard as sacred, short breeches and knee buckles, which were worn by traitors as well as good men, but that every question comes before this body upon its merits. Taking that view of the subject I shall certainly vote against the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I did not intend to offer any remarks upon this question, but I desire to give the reason why I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett, should not be adopted. The principal reason is that the clause as it stands has been construed. It has been a part of the Constitution for nearly thirty years. If we amend it now by striking out the provision that the jury may judge of the law and the fact, will not the presumption arise upon the construction of the section as passed by this Convention, that it was the intention of the Convention to change the rule? That having striken out a provision giving the jury the right to determine the law and the fact, that therefore it was the intention of this Convention, and the Constitution must be construed as having been intended—to restore the rule contended for by the common law Judges, that the judge should determine the law and the jury the fact. Now, of what benefit would be the privilege to render a general verdict upon a construction of the law like that? We might have as many decisions as there are District Judges. Every Judge would construe the law for himself. The questions of law and fact in prosecutions of this kind are not separate as they are in other cases. It is difficult to tell where the question of fact ceases and the question of law begins. It is not sufficient in this prosecution to prove the truth in this case. If it were, there would be no difficulty. But, it is not sufficient to show that the fact is true. You must go farther and show the motives were good and the end justifiable. Now, the fact as to whether the ends were justifiable or not is a question of law. As to what ends will justify the speaking of slanderous words, even though true, is always a question of law as to whether it was a privileged communication. I have no right to speak about a private citizen if it reflects upon his character. But if he is a candidate for office, or if he is applying for a position of trust, and a man comes to me and asks me about his character, then I have a right to tell the truth about him and the communication is privileged. But it is always a question of law as to whether it is privileged or not.

Take the case of a man prosecuted for libel. The question seems to be argued here as if newspaper publishers were the only persons ever prosecuted for libel. To be sure they are more likely to be. It applies as well to the individual as to the publisher of a newspaper, and the question arises first whether it is true. Then the question arises was the publication made with good motives and for justifiable ends. That is a question of law. What is to hinder the Judge from telling the jury, "I instruct you, as matter of law, that the ends of this publication were not justifiable. All you have got to do, gentlemen, is to vote whether this man published the thing or not. I instruct you that these words are libelous. I instruct you that the motives are not good or the end justifiable." What is the jury going to do in a general verdict, if it pays any attention at all to the instructions of the Court, although the words be true?

If the law stands as it now is the jury in considering the law might determine that the motives were justifiable and proper; that it was right that the publication should be made. The danger in striking out the words as they now stand is, that it would justify the Courts in concluding that they were stricken out with the intention of giving that question to the Courts instead of the jury. I hope that the section will be allowed to stand as it has stood in the Constitution since eighteen hundred and forty-nine. We have never heard any complaint against it until the amendment was proposed yesterday. It is understood that the juries are to determine the fact and the law. To be sure in all criminal cases they determine the fact and law when they return a general verdict. But if this change is made the defendant in a libel case would be worse off than any other criminal, for the reason that the Court would have the right to consider that the change of this section was intended to give the law to the Court and the facts to the jury, and that the jury would only determine the facts. That is not the rule now. A distinguished judge in charging the jury informed them that they were not bound by the instructions of the Court. He said that the Court is a sort of a thirteenth juror. He has more experience and gives his opinion upon these matters, and the jury may give them just the importance that they think they merit, but the decision of the question rests with them. That is where it should be left. The Court may advise the jury if it pleases. The Constitution places it with the jury in all cases, as it ought to be, because it is not at all likely that juries would oppress any defendant; and it might and does frequently happen that Courts do undertake by strained rules of law to throw obstacles in the way of a free expression of opinion either by publication or by word of mouth.

SPEECH OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to make one or two suggestions, but before I do so I would ask the Secretary to read the amendment offered by Judge Fawcett.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words 'and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact' from the last two lines, and insert the following: 'and the jury shall have the right to find a general verdict as in other criminal cases.'"

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: In reply to the suggestion made here by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry, if I have understood him correctly, his objections to the amendments are covered by these two points: First, the danger of a misconstruction of the rule applicable to libel cases if the amendment prevails; and, second, that there is no practical danger in allowing the jury in all cases of this description, as provided in the section coming from the committee, to find both the law and the fact. The proposed amendment subjects cases of libel to the same rule that is established and in force in all other criminal cases. If, then, there be ground for complaint, it is in the application of that general rule, else it does not exist. As to the second point, that it is always safe to leave to the jury in this class of cases to determine the law as well as the fact, I have listened very patiently and I may say anxiously, to hear some good reason, if it exists, why this departure should be sanctioned in this case, when we so persistently refuse to apply it to any other case. If a good reason has been given, I have not heard it.

Now, it seems to me that there is one view that I have not heard taken here that possesses much force. It is this: it would seem here from the argument made on Wednesday, and apparently conceded on the other side, that this rule is invoked for the benefit of defendants on trial, and that it may have no pernicious application otherwise. Right here, it seems me, is the defect in the argument. Let us see now what this rule is, as it stands, and if this amendment does not prevail, will go into the Constitution. Bear in mind the general rule that a State Constitution is a limitation of power. We, of course, are all familiar with the distinction between the limits of a State Constitution and that of the Federal Government. The latter comprises a grant of power, and the powers of the government constituted under it cannot transcend this grant and those impliedly granted to carry them into effect; whereas, it has been uniformly held that the Legislature of a State or State Government is clothed with all governmental powers, except as they are restrained by the Federal Constitution first, and second by the State Constitution. Therefore, the primal object of the State Constitution is a limitation upon the powers of the State Government. True, it has an office further to regulate the organization, but after the organism of the State Government is provided for, almost the whole object of a State Constitution is to place a limitation upon the powers of the various departments. I apprehend this view will not be controverted. Now, then, taking this provision in its entirety, it is a departure from this general rule. For instance, we have not held, nor have other Constitutional Conventions deemed it necessary in Constitutions to provide a rule by which Courts and juries shall arrive at the conclusions on which judgments are made to rest. These matters are ordinarily left to the law to determine and for the Courts to administer. Departing from this rule, however, we say: "Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press." That is all well enough, except that we might still find this expression in law instead of Constitutional enactment. Here comes the rule. Here is the departure, contained in the next clause. Here in the Constitution we propose to enact a libel law. We say:

"In all criminal prosecutions for libels the truth may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives, and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact."

Now then, we understand, historically speaking, why this provision finds its way into our Constitution, as indeed it has into the Constitutions of other States. Its true history is only to be readily comprehended when you understand the relation between the Crown and the subject in the early, or comparatively early, part of the English history. It was made first an English statute. It grew out of a great struggle in the Courts. It was established for the purpose of maintaining the subject against the oppression of the Crown, its magistrates, and its Courts. Its history is familiar to every student. It need not be repeated here. We have imported it, and it may possibly have had some useful office sometime within these United States. None at present occurs to me, as a matter of history. But to recur: As I have said, we have proposed here to enact a libel law. The old rule was, the greater the truth the greater the libel. This enactment is for the purpose of repealing that old rule. Again, it was not permitted for a man to defend himself upon a charge of libel by showing, in addition to evidence of its truth, that it was done without malice, or for justifiable ends, or for good purposes. The question was, was it libelous; was it injurious; did it tend to a breach of the peace? Now, perhaps that will be well enough. So far as I am concerned, I do not complain of it, except that it has no place in the Constitution.

Now we come to the last clause: "The jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact." Why, I beg to know, shall the jury determine the law and the fact in this case more than in any other criminal case? As I have said the argument has proceeded upon the assumption, and I think a false one too, that this provision only can work to the benefit of the defendant. Let us see how that is. In the first place this amendment proposes to subordinate this to the common rule applicable to other criminal cases. The jury shall have power to render a general verdict just as in other criminal cases. Suppose a defendant to be on trial for any crime. The jury are sworn not to find a verdict according to the law; not to render a verdict according to the law, but to render a true verdict according to the evidence. That is the law. That is the oath administered to the jury, both in England and in America. I think there is no departure from that. The jury are sworn to render a true verdict according to the evidence. Now then a man is on trial for murder. How does it proceed? The witnesses are examined. The jury hear the testimony. The Court, after the argument of counsel, instructs the jury as to the law of the case, and they are usually told that it is their province to determine the facts; they are the judges of the credibility of witnesses and weight of testimony, and from the consideration of both they are to determine the fact; that the law of the case will be given them by the Court and they are obligated to take the law as given by the Court. Well, some juries, notwithstanding that, find the facts to suit themselves and they apply the law to suit themselves, and we will assume they render a verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty." Suppose the Court and the District Attorney both know that the jury has disregarded the law of the case as given by the Court. What remedy have you got? Neither in England nor America, nor in any State of this Union, have you got any power to review that decision. The verdict of a jury being once for the defendant, he stands acquitted. What is the result. Why the jury have had the power, and they have exercised it, of not only finding the fact, but they have determined the law and they have made it final and conclusive forever by their verdict. There is no appeal, no remedy. Whether the case be libel or murder that rule obtains uniformly. There are no exceptions to it. So that in all cases, whenever the verdict is a verdict of acquittal, the jury have found the law and the fact and they have found them conclusively, so that if there be any reason why a different rule should prevail in this as distinguished from other cases, they get the benefit of it through the force of that simple practice or rule.

Let us take the other side of the case. It will not do to suppose that juries may never depart from the plain instructions except for the benefit of the defendant. It has happened, and may happen again, that men may be charged with the crime of libel, when, upon the law as contained in this clause of the Constitution—that is to say, that the matter charged as libelous has been proven to be true, and that it has been done without malice and for justifiable ends—the jury may say: "Damn this fellow; we will convict him any way." Juries sometimes render unjust verdicts for conviction as well as for acquittal. It is not always that prejudice has spoken for the acquittal of guilty men. Sometimes it shows itself for the conviction of innocent men, and as it may be the former so may it be the latter. Now let me see how this rule will apply in that sort of a case. Recollect you have put into the Constitution that in a libel case, if you prove that the matter charged as libelous in time, that it was published with good motives and for justifiable ends; that as a matter of law— as a matter of Constitutional law— constitutes a complete legal vindication and entitles the defendant to an acquittal at the hands of the jury. But, as you have said that the jury may determine the law and the fact, the jury take it into their heads that, notwithstanding this rule of Constitutional law, they will convict him, although the matter charged as libelous was true and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends. Now the defendant has been convicted and is suffering the pains and penalties of the law. He naturally asks: "What remedy have I got? I have clearly proven to this jury that what I charged is true—that it was done with good motives and for justifiable ends." But he is at once pointed to this clause in the Constitution, which says that the jury are judges alike of the law and of the fact, and they have reversed the law of the Constitution and found you guilty and you are remediless forever. Will any gentleman on this floor tell me what remedy that man has got? The jury have the power to define or determine the law, and determine therefore against the Constitution as well as for it. They have found the man guilty when he is shown to be innocent, and in place of a remedy he is told that the jury are the only arbiters, and having determined against him he has no remedy. Suppose he make an appeal to the Supreme Court. That Court would be compelled to answer: "My dear sir, the jury was authorized in this case—a solitary exception in the law—to determine the law, and, having determined it against the law of the Constitution, you must stand the consequences." If there be any answer to this—if there be any remedy for that man—I confess that I am not lawyer enough to see where he is going to find it. Why not, in view of such a contingency, subject this to the same common rule applicable to other criminal cases, so that if a jury find a party guilty and if he can show to the Supreme Court on review that there has been a misapprehension or a misapplication of the law, he can have a reversal of that judgment and have a new and a fair trial? Why not subject it to a rule that has been found so uniform and just and fair in its operation? I submit that no injury can come; no chance of misconstruction can arise; for if it is safe to apply this rule to the one case, it is to the other.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I don't propose to detain this committee by a very long argument. I will be as concise as I can, but I wish merely to state the reasons which will influence my vote. My vote on the pending question will be controlled by the central idea of uniformity. In all criminal provisions, especially the boundary line between the province of the Judge and that of the jury should be the same, and no one class of citizens should be protected above any other class. If I thought that the proper liberties of the press would be restricted by the proposed amendment of the gentlemen from Santa Barbara, I should certainly vote against it. But I propose to act here as consistently as I can, upon the various propositions which may come before this committee or the Convention.

I believe the great palladium of our liberties is a free and untrammeled press. I have no sympathy with that sentiment which we find in the response of Sir William Berkeley, a Colonial Governor of Virginia, to the Commissioners of Foreign Plantations in London, when he says:

"I thank God there are no free schools, nor printing, and I hope we shall not have these hundred years; for learning has brought disobedience into the world, and printing has divulged them and libels against the best government. God keep us from both."

But in this sentiment of that fiery adherent of Charles, and opposer of Cromwell, we find some of the early jealousy of the printing press, and fear that it would bring the government into ridicule and contempt. A hundred years later on this subject we find the contestants in hostile array, Mansfield crippling the power of the jury and adjudicating in favor of the prerogative, while Junius maintained, and rightfully too, that it was the law of England that a jury could render a general verdict in every criminal case; Mansfield maintaining in effect that the jury should render a special verdict, while the Court should decide the law and the guilt; Junius maintaining that the verdict of guilty or not guilty exclusively and entirely belonged to the jury.

Whoever the writer of these fiery phillipics may have been, he deserves the grateful homage of every freeman for his vigorous maintenance of the spirit of the early common law.

But the circumstances here are different. Let us look at the reason of the thing, and I think the logic is decidedly in favor of the amendment.

In the first place the star chamber exercised a censorship over the press. The Long Parliament abolished the star chamber, and proceeded to exercise the same censorship that the star chamber had previously exercised. In sixteen hundred and eighty-eight, when the Bill of Rights was passed during the reign of William and Mary, what is most remarkable, there is not one word said about the freedom of the press. Then up to that time, as far as the English press was concerned, the freedom of the press stood entirely upon a negative ground. There was no affirmation on the subject. Is that so here, sir? I imagine not. I read here in the report of the Committee:

"Every citizen may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press," etc.

That constitutes a portion of our Bill of Rights. England had no such thing. She had no such Bill of Rights. So we have our guard against any infringements of the rights of the press.

In the Woodfall case, which came up before Lord Mansfield during the reign of George the Third, Lord Mansfield instructed the jury that "the printing and sense of the paper were alone what the jury had to consider of, and if the paper should really contain no breach of the law, that was a matter which might afterwards be moved in arrest of judgment."

The judges and lawyers for the most part, in those times, claimed that the province of the jury was only to determine the fact of publication, and whether the innuendoes were properly made out; that is to say, whether the libel meant what it was alleged in the indictment to mean, but that it was a question of law for the court to decide, whether such meaning was criminal or innocent. It was admitted that the jury might acquit, but it was claimed that they violated their oath if they rejected the opinion of the judge by whom they were to be guided as to the general law. Others maintained that the jury could determine the defendant's guilt or innocence according to the nature and circumstances of the publication.

The decision in King vs. Woodfall caused Junius to thunder over England—from one end of it to the other—that the decision of Lord Mansfield was not the law of England. Fox followed in the wake of Junius, and in 1792 the Fox Libel Bill was passed. It declares the right of the jury to find a general verdict upon the whole matter, which includes the guilty or innocent intention of the publication. That was a right which was against the opinion of Mansfield.

Now, sir, some have argued that this bill did not give the jury the right to determine the law, while others have argued just the reverse, that inasmuch as the jury had the right to render a general verdict as in other cases, it might be construed that they had a right to pass upon the law. But I argue that it was simply to pass upon the facts, the innocent or guilty intention being one of the facts, and that the instructions of the Court were still binding. But say it was otherwise. I should have voted for that Act of Parliament. Why so? Because England had no Bill of Rights on this subject, and if she had had one, the Parliament could have repealed it. But that reason does not apply here. We have our Bill of Rights on this subject. In the absence of any Bill of Rights, I should say that if the previous law had been construed in effect so as to authorize a jury to return a special verdict only, or a general verdict according to the opinion of the Judge, I would have supported that Fox Libel Bill, so that the jury might render a general verdict, and decide the law in so doing. Some immunities should be thrown around the citizen in arbitrary times, when he is placed at disadvantage, and the Government occupies the vantage ground. The law might be repealed, so might the Constitution of the realm, but for the time being the Judges were to act under it and be its expositors.

There is no contest in this country, as there was in England, between the liberty of the citizen and prerogative. Why should a jury here pass upon the law in a case of libel, any more than in a case of murder? I cannot see the distinction. The law in either case should be given to the jury by the Court, and under the instructions of the Court the jury should render their verdict on all the facts in the case. This is the uniformity which should prevail in the administration and construction of the penal laws. If the Government was arbitrary and encroaching, and the Judges of our Courts its subsidized tools; if there was danger that the rights of the people would be subverted by overweening judicial power, it might be some argument that the jury should be a law unto themselves. So it might be proper if our position was the position of England in 1792. But the Bill of Rights in our Constitution impends, like the sword of Damocles, over any aggression on the freedom of the press.

There is another thought which I wish to suggest. We have heard this jury system derided heretofore by gentlemen of this committee. I have, in my feeble way, endeavored to say something for it; but while I have maintained that the jury are the proper and best judges of the facts, I have never taken the position—and never will take the position—that they are the proper and best judges of the law. And I ask those gentlemen who have voted heretofore in favor of the abridgement of the jury or a curtailment of its powers, if, after having taken that position, they are now ready to reverse arms and say that the jury shall not only judge the facts, but they shall also judge the law in one case—in the case of libel—only.

Suppose the jury were to abuse the privilege; who shall guard them? Admit that they are guardians; but who shall guard the guardians? Who shall watch the watchmen? Who shall take into custody the custodians?

I say that the learned Judge who is to administer the law in all other cases should be the custodian of that power, under the solemnities of his oath and the accountability for his acts which this Constitution will secure.

I do not believe in allowing a jury of twelve men in one particular and exceptional case to say what is the law of this great State. It would depend upon the social status of these twelve men, the locality where they happen to live, their intelligence, or the want of it, their prejudices; and thus the law, as administered, would vary in different neighborhoods.

There ought to be some power which would secure something like uniformity to this freedom of the press. I was much pleased with the effort of the distinguished gentleman from San Francisco. He made an elaborate argument; but it seems to me it must have been apparent to this committee that there was a great deal of artistic grouping for effect. I vote, therefore, in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Santa Barbara. His amendment assures a general verdict of the jury. And, with all due deference to the Judiciary Committee and its learned chairman, I think that the logic and weight of the argument is in favor of this amendment. At any rate, I am not willing, although I am in favor of all possible freedom of the press, to see the symmetry of our work marred by exceptional provisions, when there is no occasion.

ARGUMENT OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: This question is one which, it seems to me, deserves all the consideration that it has received at the hands of this Convention, and if there is any subject which invites discussion and consideration, that at least this is one of them. Now in this matter of libel, there is something more at stake than the mere individual who is accused of injuring or who claims to be injured by the libel. There are a great number of cases in which a prosecution for libel arises in which the conduct of some official is attacked. Now let us see for a moment what the result may be with the changes which have already been made and the change which this last amendment proposes. We have already in a sense concluded that this Constitution, when adopted, shall have this provision: that a prosecution for libel may take place without a grand jury ever having found a bill; or in fact that one man may determine as to whether or not, any man shall be prosecuted on a charge of libel; and the discussion here yesterday and the day before indicated that the man upon whom the decision of this question should rest, should be the Judge of the Court. Now we have taken another step in advance, and that is that in this class of cases, being a class not amounting to felony, that the accused shall not have the protection even of a unanimous verdict, but shall be subject to be punished for an offense of this character by the concurrence of three fourths of a jury.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what further have we had decided in this State? We have had it decided that a paper published in San Francisco and distributed throughout the entire State, if it contains matter claimed to be libelous, the libel may be prosecuted in any county of the State where the paper is circulated. Now, is it unreasonable to suppose that if some man high in public position in this State should have had something said about him by some paper that he disliked, which might be true or false, that he could find somewhere, in the numerous counties of the State, a Judge who would agree with him in the proposition that that publication was injurious to his character. He might wander the State over and hunt through all the Judges for his Judge, and may bring the charge even without an indictment. Having had the man properly informed against, he may have him brought to trial before that same Judge; and having brought him to trial, what then? A unanimous verdict is not required, but only a three fourths verdict—the mere dictum of nine men out of twelve. Is that all? No. This amendment as proposed will provide, that in this great range of cases where one man may speak or write ill of another, the Judge shall have the right to decide what particular words spoken or published shall amount to a defamation of character or constitute a libel. With the changes proposed a man has one chance. It is a chance of himself against the Judge from first to last. It is the rights of one man in the hands of another one man. And now, if from first to last of this whole proceeding he has been in the hands of the Court, in the hands of an unjust Judge—and I regret to say that sometimes men do find themselves in such a position—then what chance is there for him? From first to last this Judge has ruled against this man's rights, and yet he is in that class of cases in which there is no appeal; and in a class of cases which concern not merely the interests of a private individual, but which concern the interests of the people of our State. If the gentlemen ask why one manner of procedure should be adopted in one class of criminal cases, and a different one be adopted in this particular class, I pretend to say that the experience of the last eighty or one hundred years has affirmed the wisdom of such a provision. If the gentlemen say that the time was when such provisions were necessary, but that that time is not to-day, let me remind them that we make not a Constitution for a day. We make a Constitution, perhaps, for fifty or one hundred years, and no man can say whether or not this Constitution shall not prove a shield, not merely to the people of to-day, but whether or not it may not prove a shield and protection to generations yet to come; and that before it has ceased to be the Constitution of the State of California it may be a blessing and protection at one time to ten millions of people.

Let us not forget that as to the rights of men and as to the contests between the powerful and the weak, that history repeats itself, and that as our State grows rich, and great, and strong, the same questions which presented themselves in the days of Woodfall and of Junius may be the very same questions with a different coloring, which shall appear in Congress and in this very building. It is due to ourselves that in this matter which involves the liberty of the press, we should be very careful. It is not merely an ordinary type of crime. It deals with that which is our only real safeguard. Now we have done away with the Grand Jury, for I claim that is the result of the provision we have adopted: we have broken down the essence of the petit jury, and to-day we propose to do away with the old law of libel. If, in one session of the Constitutional Convention, we should succeed in sweeping away these three grandest barriers of liberty, then shall we have done more iniquity than I hope any other body of men will ever do in this State.

SPEECH OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: In what I have to say I shall endeavor to avoid the repetition of anything which has been said, and to refer in the first place to the provisions of some Constitutions which I believe have not been introduced. The fact has been shown that in two thirds of the States of the Union the language that is in our Constitution does not occur. It was shown by the gentleman from Los Angeles, on the other side, that in ten States of this Union that language does occur. I propose to read very briefly as to six out of the other eight—and I have not referred to the other two, which would make the number complete—to show that in six other Constitutions a provision like that offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett, has been adopted. In the State of Connecticut the qualifying words are: "Under the direction of the Court." That is, "the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact under the direction of the Court." In Missouri, also. In Tennessee the provision is: "And in all indictments for libel the jury shall have a right to determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the Court, as in other criminal cases." In Kentucky and Texas the provision is: "And in all indictments for libel the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the Court, as in other cases." In Maine they have this peculiar provision: "And in all indictments for libels the jury, after having received the direction of the Court, shall have a right to determine, at their discretion, the law and the fact."

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara is substantially the same as I had drawn up, and it seemed to me to be so much better than either of these various qualifying phrases, and striking out the very reason of the original provision in what is called the Fox Libel Act, that it occurred to me at once that the Convention would certainly be disposed to adopt that as an amendment to the section as it now stands in our Constitution. "The jury shall have the right to return a general verdict in all cases of libel." It has been shown, and I will not repeat it, but merely allude to it, that in England the jury was allowed only to return a special verdict, and that was as to the simple fact of publication. Take the language of the section: "In all criminal prosecutions for libels, the writ may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted." Is there a question of fact that can arise in the case that is not there specially stated shall be decided by the jury? And yet the gentleman from San Joaquin tells me that there is confusion as to what is fact and what is law, and therefore the necessity of giving it the one and the other. I say that there is not a question of fact that is not enumerated in the Constitution as it is, and which it is not proposed to amend. Then all matters of fact are specifically referred to the jury. In England, this justly lauded provision, known as the Fox Libel Act, which has been read, contained several specific provisions, as will be found by referring to "Proffatt on Jury Trials." There were two provisos made showing that that was the whole object and purpose, that the jury should give a general verdict, which is proposed in the best language which could be suggested in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett. In England, however, it is absolute. Here we propose to put it in the Constitution. Is not that going far enough? The Code provides now that the jury shall be the judge of the law and the fact in libel cases. I presume that Act will continue, notwithstanding our amendment. We are not legislating. If experience shall show that this distinction should be continued let it be so in the Code. There is nothing in the Constitution, as we propose to amend it, that will prevent it.

But how long shall this Constitution, if adopted, stand? If it is made as it should be made, it may stand for a generation; it may stand when the youngest of us here shall be dust, and if we make it as it should be made it will stand for a century. Why, then, govern the people in this way in which they do not ask to be governed? Gentlemen talk about the liberty of the press and the same gentlemen are continually attempting to restrain the people in their liberties. Experience may show that we are right to believe that libel ought to stand like any other offense, and be punished like any other offense. But it will be said, in times to come, that the gentlemen in Sacramento in eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, did not leave you that liberty.

I shall indulge in no eulogium upon the liberty of the press. I certainly have as high an opinion of it as those who deliver the highest eulogiums that have ever been delivered, either in ancient or modern times. But, on the other side, I have no sensitiveness on account of the abuse of that liberty. For my own part, Mr. Chairman, if it were a proper thing to put in a Constitution, I would be willing to vote for a proviso, as some gentleman suggested to me that he proposed to offer it, making men personally responsible for an abuse of that liberty; provided, however, that in case any gentleman should be a candidate for Secretary of a Constitutional Convention, and should be defeated by a majority of that Convention, that if he should see proper to call that majority a rabble, it should not be deemed an abuse of liberty. [Laughter.]

Nor have I any sympathy with any man who may be justly censured. I may be excused, as the matter has been referred to, to state here—and take all the responsibility, and that is not much, as I am not a political aspirant and can afford to be entirely independent, as I have been for many years—that I have no sympathy whatever with those leaders in political life who have been justly censured. I shall not attempt to specify them, but I believe the people sympathize with all that an honest, independent, and untrammelled press have said upon the subject. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Los Angeles tells us that there is a vast difference between different kinds of crime—between theft and libel. I confess that I concur in that sentiment, but I do not concur in conclusions that he appears to reach. If there is one crime that is greater than another,, that is the crime of stealing a man's character. The abuse of this liberty is that crime. The gentleman from Los Angeles has no reason to fear anything that he would do. No honest man has any reason to fear what he may publish in any newspaper, through pictures, letters, or any other manner; but it is this abuse of liberty—an abuse, sir, which, if it continues, will lead to a condition of things which it is the duty of law-makers to avoid. Some things are in the books which are laid down as law, but some are not in the books. Some things are written law, some things are as well understood in this age as unwritten law. I believe it has been understood for about a score of years that a man who defends his honor in social relations cannot be punished. I am not aware of any conviction at any rate in the last ten years in the United States. It has not yet been written in the books, and it has not yet perhaps got to be understood as the unwritten law; but I undertake to say, if this provision remains in the Constitution, and it is there for the purposes that some gentlemen assume, that there shall be forever a hung jury when a man seeks the only defense which the laws of his country gives him, it will be understood that another provision of the Constitution, which gives him the right to personal security, is to be construed to mean that he shall have personal security as to character as well as to person, and that he may defend his character to the same extent that he does his person, and that the unwritten law will acquit him before his countrymen. The gentleman says there is a vast difference between these crimes. I admit it. The greatest philosopher, perhaps as well as the acknowledged greatest poet in our language, has expressed that difference very well when he said: "He who steals my purse, steals trash; but he who filches from me my good name, robs me of that which naught enriches him and makes me poor indeed."

The gentleman from the First District, Mr. Barnes, says he prefers an honest jury instructed by an honest Court, and he has given us some instances where it seems there was not an honest Court. I do not know what conclusions he means to draw from these premises. I do not understand it. I am aware that there have been political parties who have denounced all the Courts as corrupt. I suppose he is not prepared to go so far. Then another gentleman from the First District has read something, in which I was very much interested, from a most celebrated case, showing the great value of this liberty of the press and how that the truth should be given in evidence, and how if it should appear to the jury that it was published for justifiable motives the party should be acquitted; but that has nothing to do with the question as to whether the Court should instruct the jury as to questions of law, and that is the important point before us.

Now, Mr. President, let us make the application of the rule here as it is contended for, and how any gentleman claiming simple justice can ask it I cannot comprehend. The defendant is interested in having the Court give the law as well as the plaintiff—the State. Suppose a case. There is proof of a gross libel having been published, but there is no legal proof that it is published in the county where the prosecution is had. The Court says to the jury: "Gentlemen, it is necessary in order to maintain this case and convict the defendant that there should be proof of publication in this county." The jury, as they may be sometimes, and are sometimes governed by their feelings, think it would not be very wrong to punish the defendant anyhow, and they return a verdict of guilty in that case. Now, I want to ask the legal gentlemen how this man who has been illegally convicted, unjustly convicted, is to avoid the penalty in that case? His counsel moves for a new trial. The Court answers that the jury under the Constitution as it is are the judges of the law and the fact. Plainly he must suffer the penalty under the law as it is. These questions are clearly of law. No question of fact at all; that is, where there is no testimony at all upon that point.

Again, somebody in moments of maliciousness writes an infamous libel and puts it in his desk. Somebody looking through his desk finds this paper. He shows it to the person against whom it was written and he prosecutes for libel. The Court says to the jury: "Gentlemen, this was not published." The jury think that although it was not he ought to be punished anyhow. As a gentleman said to me in discussing this point before the meeting this afternoon: "A man that would think such a thing ought to be punished for thinking it." The jury find the defendant guilty and the counsel addresses the Court and moves for a new trial. The answer is that, though there was no evidence of the publication the jury is the judge of the law and the fact.

The gentleman from San Joaquin speaks of the law with reference to the two propositions, as to whether a libel is true and whether it is published for justifiable purposes. I submit that there never has been known a case in the history of the State where if a publication was proved to be true it has not been deemed to be published for justifiable motives.

As to these illustrations of what might happen I will cite a case with which we are all familiar, and I am justified in referring to it in the Committee of the Whole as a matter of illustration. A gentleman is a candidate for a position and is defeated, which causes a bitter personal feeling. He publishes that everybody that helped to defeat him, or that nobody who voted against him, had any decency or intelligence, and that all those who voted for him had. And he says, he thanks fortune that he is not contaminated with the sand lots. The question is investigated, and it appears on the trial according to the proof, as I understand it, and there are plenty of witnesses, that he sought to be contaminated with the sand lots, and they would not contaminate worth a cent. The question would be whether that is libel, and I would be willing for a jury to determine, but I certainly would not be willing to be the prosecutor in any case of that sort. A man connected probably with political affairs, whose political associations are the same as those who wish to be candidates, prepares to unite old parties in the presence of a giant young party rising in the land, and he gets committed and the leaders of another committee fail to unite. The people in the meantime, without reference to what the politicians are doing, in their own quiet way do unite, and send people to the Conventions to unite those who have defeated them as delegates to State Conventions and Congressional Conventions, for the same purpose. The people unite them, and for all I know, he may have had considerable agency in nominating the gentleman upon the State tickets for the Convention. I know nothing about that. If anybody made any promises directly or indirectly, he should keep his promises; I made none. It is not pretended that I made any, so far as I am personally concerned, but I will suppose that this scheme, mainly for the good of the country, but partly for the purpose of being Secretary of the Constitutional Convention miscarried. It only proves what the Scotch poet has said: "The best laid plans of men and mice aft gang aglee." And it proves too what another poet has said, perhaps with more application where schemes of this kind are formed:

> "The piece well aimed at duck or plover, > Kicked back and knocked the marksman over."

But there is no libel in this. That is my judgment as a legal proposition. I think the court ought to tell the jury so. And if a man were convicted for having said these things, though he says them repeatedly and promises to continue to say them to the last day of recorded time, and sends his paper to every delegate in the Convention—though so far as I know very few are subscribing for it—and even abuses parties because they do not answer, I still say that I do not deem it libel and I have no personal concern in the matter. But perhaps in this connection I may be excused if I speak briefly of these things. I will suppose that I have proved what is simply the facts, which every gentleman knows to be the facts. So far as I am personally concerned, I voted for a candidate from our county, who, in our judgment of matters, was fully entitled to the vote of his local delegation. He, also, in our judgment, lost nothing by not having the powerful surroundings which the other candidate claimed, I have no doubt justly, to possess. On the contrary, it was an argument, in favor of the one and against the other, sufficient, without descending, as I never have descended in any political contest in my life, to personal charges or personal considerations. So far as any combinations in the case I am supposing, this truth would also appear, that there never was a caucus of any kind on any individual candidates—not a single one—and I appeal to any gentleman of the Convention as to the correctness of that statement. But further, that there was no caucus with any party with reference to any combination. I will go still further and say that there never was a caucus between one individual of one party with another individual of another party, and I ask any gentleman to state whether that is correct or not.

I beg pardon for referring to the matter. I spoke earnestly upon the general proposition, and it seemed fitting and proper that I should say this much for fear my motives might be misunderstood in asking that this amendment now pending may be adopted.

The argument is in a nutshell. It has been stated. It has been urged. I say that the whole matter is presented in the brief proposition that our Constitution should provide that libel cases may be tried the same as all other criminal cases. Honest men have nothing to fear from that. As to rogues, we know what has been said of that class. It is a great and fearful responsibility to charge men with infamous crime. The man who publishes a newspaper, if he is honest and faithful, deserves the highest credit for standing as a sentinel upon the ramparts of liberty. But, on the other side, it is equally important that honest men should be protected from the malice of the designing and the malicious. We propose it shall stand as in all other cases; that the jury shall render a general verdict; that the court shall decide questions of law in that case as in other cases; that there shall be intelligence in arriving at the truth in that kind of cases as in every other case; and not a kind of a trial, so-called, where the presiding officer, in fact, has nothing to do whatever, except to watch the proceedings of the jury and hear the jury decide upon questions of law. These are my views, Mr. President, and these are some of the reasons why I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman; I propose to say a single word in regard to this proposition offered by the committee. I propose to vote for it, and for one reason—because it is in the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine. I care nothing about its being antiquated, as I am getting a little antiquated myself. Like my eloquent friend from San Francisco, I have great respect for the institutions of the past. Now, sir, this provision, as it stands in the report of the committee, has been the law of England and this country ever since seventeen hundred and ninety-two. I am ready to vote for any of the provisions of the old Constitution where they have proved to be good. But, as in the case of a unanimous verdict of a jury where abuses have grown up that I think demand correction, then, because it is a hoary-headed abuse, I do not propose to support it. What is the situation here? What is the proposition which we have before us? It is, that the truth may be published; that if a libel—if asserted to be a libel—is true in fact, and published for good motives and justifiable ends, it shall be a defense. As to whether the motives are good, and whether it is published for justifiable ends, are questions of fact, as well as the question as to whether the subject-matter is true. But what class of motives are good, and what class of ends are justifiable, are questions of law for the Courts. I do not propose to give the Courts the right to instruct the jury; for this reason, that trials of libel are proven by long practice to be the most subtlely blended questions of law and fact, in all our Courts and in all our practice. Now, then, the question is, by whom, in that class of cases, is to be settled the questions of law? Experience has shown that, in point of fact and in point of history, the jury is the safest tribunal. That being the fact—that in libels the jury is the safest tribunal to determine the matter—I propose to adhere to that experience, and to stand up for this section. There have been no abuses under it: I may say that there is nothing to reform; and when there is nothing to reform, the safest way is to leave it alone. Some strange positions have been taken here on this matter. It has been said that a defendant may be found guilty when the facts are all in his favor. I deny that proposition. If he states his case and the facts do not sustain the verdict, and he appeals to the Supreme Court, under all the rulings the Supreme Court is bound to send it back.

MR. FAWCETT. He cannot appeal to the Supreme Court.

MR. HOWARD. I say he can appeal to the Supreme Court.

MR. FAWCETT. Not being a felony, he cannot appeal to the Supreme Court.

MR. TERRY. It is a misdemeanor.

MR. HOWARD. That is true. If there be no appeal then to the Supreme Court it is the fault of the law. It is the fault of the statute, and not the fault of the law of libel. We could remedy that in the Code, or we could remedy it even if it requires a remedy. But I place my argument on this ground, that the experience of nearly a century having shown that this provision in the Constitution is a safe one, and that in these particular cases the judgment of the law by a jury is a protection to the citizens of the country, it would be best to adhere to the Constitution as it was framed in eighteen hundred and forty-nine, and that by actual working and actual experience has been proven to be safe and reliable.

SPEECH OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: The clause of the Constitution under consideration in relation to prosecutions for libel is, "and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact." Now, sir, what does that mean? In order to arrive at a correct determination of the meaning of the clause it may be profitable to make a brief historical review of this subject. Towards the close of the last century there was a series of cases in England growing out of publications against the government or against officers of the British Government, and in these cases the practice was, after the evidence was in, for the Court, or the Judge, to say to the jury: "The only question"—(of course I state this in my own form, but it is substantially correct)—"for you to determine, gentlemen of the jury, is, did this man on trial publish the alleged libelous matter; and there your duty ceases. It is for you to pass simply upon the fact of publication and I, the Judge, or Court, will pass upon the questions of intent, the question of criminality, and pronounce the judgment." Now, sir, it was that usurpation of power, it was that distinction between other criminal prosecutions and the specific prosecution for libel that set all England and Ireland in a blaze. Out of that state of affairs, sir, arose the much talked about Fox statute which was passed in seventeen hundred and ninety-two.

Now, sir, I think my friend from Los Angeles entirely misapprehends that statute when he says that this clause in the Constitution means nothing more than what was sought there, according to the interpretation of the Constitution as it now stands. Let us see what that statute is, and whether it does not place prosecutions for libel on the same basis that the gentleman from Santa Barbara is now attempting to do by his amendment. That statute was passed in 1792, and will be found in the thirty-second of George III. It reads as follows:

"Whereas, doubts have arisen whether on the trial of an indictment, or information, for the making or publishing any libel, where an issue or issues are joined between the King and the defendant, or defendants, on the plea of not guilty pleaded, it be competent to the jury impaneled to try the same to give their verdict upon the whole matter in issue: Be it therefore declared and enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with advice and consent of the Lord's spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this Parliament assembled, and by authority of the same, that on every such trial, the jury sworn to try issue may give a general verdict of "guilty," or "not guilty," upon the whole matter put in issue upon such indictment or information; and shall not be required or directed by the Court or Judge, before whom such indictment or information shall be tried, to find the defendant or defendants guilty merely on the proof of the publication by such defendant or defendants of the paper charged to be a libel and of the sense to be ascribed to the same in such indictment or information.

"II. Provided always, that, on every such trial, the Court or Judge, before whom such indictment or information shall be tried, shall, according to their or his discretion, give their or his opinion and directions to the jury on the matter in issue between the King and the defendant or defendants, in like manner as in other criminal cases.

"III. Provided, also, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to prevent the jury from finding a special verdict, in their discretion, as in other criminal cases.

"IV. Provided, also, that in case the jury shall find the defendant or defendants guilty, it shall be lawful for the said defendant or defendants to move in arrest of judgment on such ground and in such manner as by law he or they might have done before the passing of this Act; anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

That is all that great statute did. It placed the prosecution for libel upon the same ground as any other criminal prosecution in England. It meant nothing more than this: that the Judge was supposed to know more of the law than the jury. He was to give the law to the jury, and then the jury would take the whole case into their hands and pass upon it. That is, they were to determine whether it was libelous or not, whether it was published for good motives and justifiable ends or not, and whether it was true or not. And that is all that statute did. That is the law in England. The first proviso made it the duty of the Judge to charge the jury, as in all other criminal cases. The next clause provided for a special verdict, as in other criminal cases, as stated by the gentleman from Placer. I had some difficulty in hearing the gentleman from Placer, and do not know exactly what he said. At all events, that is the Fox Bill, and that is all there is of it.

I say that the law of England that was established in seventeen hundred and ninety-two is precisely the law as the gentleman from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett, is attempting to establish by his amendment. Now let us look a moment at the law in the United States. About the year eighteen hundred and five a great case came up, a leading case, a case that established the law, and out of which this constitutional provision subsequently grew. It was the case of the People vs. Croswell, in New York, for a libel upon Thomas Jefferson. To show that the press of this day does not monopolize all the scandal I wish to show what a newspaper of those days said about these men. The libelous matter appeared in a newspaper called The Wasp. Whether it is the same that is now published in San Francisco I do not know. Here is the libelous matter complained of as charged in the indictment: "That the said Harry Croswell did, on the ninth day of September, eighteen hundred and two, with force and arms, at the said City of Hudson, in the said county of Columbus, wickedly, maliciously, and seditiously, print and publish, and cause and procure to be printed and published, a certain scandalous, malicious, and seditious libel, in a certain paper or publication, entitled The Wasp, containing therein, among other things, certain scandalous, malicious, inflammatory, and seditious matters, of and concerning the said Thomas Jefferson, Esq., then and yet being President of the United States of America, that is to say, in one part thereof, according to the tenor and effect following, that is to say: Jefferson (the said Thomas Jefferson, Esq., meaning) paid Callender (meaning one James Thompson Callender) for calling Washington (meaning George Washington, Esq., deceased, late President of the said United States,) a traitor, a robber, and a perjurer: for calling Adams (meaning John Adams, Esq., late President of the said United States) a hoary-headed incendiary, and for most grossly slandering the private characters of men who he (meaning the said Thomas Jefferson) well knew to be virtuous."

That case was argued by Alexander Hamilton for the defendant, and he claimed nothing more than that these questions were questions of mixed law and fact, that they were like all other criminal cases, and that the jury should have the power to determine the question of intent. It never was contended that the Court should not have the direction of the law of the matter. Now let us see how Mr. Hamilton argued that:

"But it is not only the province of the jury, in all criminal cases, to judge of the intent with which the act was done, as being a parcel of the fact, they are also authorized to judge of the law as connected with the fact. In civil cases the Courts are the exclusive judges of the law, and this arose from the nature of pleadings in civil suits, for anciently matters of law arising in defense were required to be spread upon the record by a special plea, and the jury were liable to an attaint for finding a verdict contrary to law. But in criminal cases the law and the fact are necessarily blended by the general issue, and a general verdict was always final and conclusive both upon the law and the fact. Nor were the jury ever exposed to an attaint for a verdict in a criminal case, and this is decisive to prove that they had a concurrent jurisdiction with the Court on questions of law."

The whole aim and purpose of Mr. Hamilton, was to bring this prosecution for libel upon the same plane and basis that all other criminal prosecutions occupied. The result was the introduction of a bill in the Legislature of New York which was passed in eighteen hundred and five, which contains this clause: "That on every such indictment or information, the jury, who shall try the same, shall have a right to determine the law and the fact, under the direction of the Court, in like manner as in other criminal cases." Now, that is all there is of it. And that is copied into the Constitution of the State of New York. I contend that that is the law and has been for nearly one hundred years; not that the jury is to take the bit in its mouth and cut loose from all legal restraint in a case of libel, but they are to take the case and determine the law and the fact as they do in other criminal cases, and they are bound by it and they ought to be bound by it. I believe that is really a fair construction of the Constitution to-day, but it has been perverted from its real meaning. For some cause the latter part of the law of England, the Fox Bill that has been so highly eulogized, has been omitted from the Constitution. I would like to ask the gentlemen from Los Angeles, General Howard and Colonel Ayers, or any other gentlemen who has taken that view, why should the jury be released from the restraint of instructions of the Court in a libel case when they are not released from the instructions of the Court in any other criminal case known from that of stealing a chicken to the murder of a man? Is it because of the liberty of the press? Is that any more sacred than the liberty of the citizen in any other case? I deny it. It seems to me, sir, that the jury, not in all libel cases, but of all cases should be under the instructions of the Court as to the law of any case. For that reason, as I understand it, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara.

MR. HOWARD. I will read the present Constitution of the State of New York, adopted in 1846-7: "And the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact." So that if the gentleman is right in the construction of the statute, the Constitution of the State of New York has made a different rule.

MR. EDGERTON. If the gentleman from Los Angeles, will look farther he will find that the new Constitutions of Pennsylvania and of Missouri have restored the language of the statute of New York in 1805, which grew out of the Croswell case. It never was intended, neither in England or America, by any law or any lawyer, that the jury should take the bit in their teeth in a libel case and disregard the instructions of the Court. The only object of this provision was to get rid of that old rule which allowed the Judge to tell the jury to find only as to the question of publication. That was the evil attempted to be cured by this American statute in New York, and these provisions in American Constitutions and by the Fox Bill. I do not believe that any of those Judges would have entertained for one moment a proposition that the jury was to disregard the instructions of the Court as to matters of law involved in a case of libel, when they were bound by it in every other conceivable case in the nature of a criminal prosecution. I do not see any reason for a different rule in a libel case.

But what is a prosecution for libel? Why, the Judge determines upon the admissibility of testimony, and then after that the jury determines upon the character of the libelous publication. They determine whether it was published for a good motive and for a justifiable end. No question of law now occurs to me. If one should arise I insist that it should be a man learned in the law who should instruct the jury as in all other cases. My reason, my good sense does not dictate to me any reason why there should be a distinction in favor of the editor of a paper or the writer of a calumny any more than in the case of any other man.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I rise for the purpose of expressing my opinion and for the purpose of saving my distance. It seems to me that there is a controversy between certain gentlemen in this Convention, as to who shall be entitled to the appellation of the most numerous speaker. I have not spoken yet to-day at all. I understand that a prize will be given to the most numerous speaker and I propose to contest for that prize. I give notice to the gentleman from San Francisco, two or three gentlemen from Sacramento, and the gentleman from Alameda that I have not been very well. [Laughter.] I am going for that prize, if I recover my voice and my throat gets well, a little oftener.

I propose, when this amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara is voted down, to offer another amendment. I shall offer it with fear and trembling. I have heard so much during the last two or three days about irreverent hands, that whenever I wish to propose any change in the existing Constitution, I feel like a culprit. I have gotten it from the right in a voice like the fog-horn of San Francisco, which is like unto the wail of some spirit that was condemned to Goat Island; and I got it from the left, in a voice like the wail of a dying bull calf, where we are appealed to not to lay irreverent hands on the Constitution. I get it from the front and I get it from the rear, I get it from the enemy's camp and my own camp, not to lay irreverent hands on the Constitution.

This proposition, Mr. Chairman, as it stands at present in the Constitution, is the invariable subject of an incessant conflict between Courts and lawyers whenever a libel suit arises. The Penal Code has provided, as plainly as language can provide, that the jury shall not only determine the law and the facts, but the Court is prohibited from charging the jury, and I propose to offer an amendment to that effect. Our only Judge—and we ought to have more of them—has offered an amendment here to preserve the power of the Judges over this subject. That very thing, sir, was the cause of the struggle that took place over this very subject—the efforts of the Judges to preserve the power to punish those who might make an attack upon them, or on the government of which they were a part. Now, sir, the plain and simple man, not versed in the law, but who takes language in its ordinary acceptation and meaning, when he sees a positive and distinct statement that the jury shall determine the law and the fact would conclude that the Court was debarred from charging the jury. Else why the distinction? Why not simply let it go, as all other criminal cases do go, upon the well understood line of demarkation between the power of the Court and the power of the jury. I say, therefore, that it is intended to mean more than to place it upon the ground of ordinary criminal actions, where a general verdict comprehends both the law and the fact, and wherein it is always understood that it is an obligation upon the jury to receive the law from the Court. It is stated here that the jury are under obligations, even in cases of libel, to receive the instructions of the Court upon matters of law, find the facts, and then apply the law to the facts. If any gentleman ever takes the trouble to investigate the authorities which are grouped together by Greenleaf, in section one hundred and seventy-nine, wherein he reasons himself into that conclusion, he will find not one of those authorities, except the opinion of Judge Story, in the 4th Sumner, supports the position that he takes, and that the plain intent and meaning is that the Judges under our system, elected as a part of the political machinery, shall not only be deprived of the power, but they shall not be required to charge the jury. There are but two propositions. They shall not be required, nor shall they be allowed of their own volition, to instruct the jury. I say that was the plain intent and meaning, and it is fixed in the Penal Code. I grant that the Legislature is not particularly high authority, especially upon matters of private or special legislation, but on a matter of this kind it is not improper that we should take the views of the Legislature as the views of the people upon this very subject. The Legislature has re-enacted the Constitution in the Penal Code. In section five hundred and fifty-one, under the head of "libel," it has re-enacted the identical language of the section proposed here. In section one thousand one hundred and twenty-five it re-enacts it again. That section reads:

"On the trial of an indictment for libel, the jury have the right to determine the law and the fact."

Now then, in section one thousand one hundred and twenty-six they show the purpose or the idea of the Legislature with regard to the power of the Court over the verdict of juries, for they say:

"On the trial of an indictment for any other offense than libel, questions of law are to be determined by the Court, questions of fact by the jury; and, although the jury have the power to find a general verdict, which includes questions of law as well as of fact, they are bound, nevertheless, to receive as law what is laid down as such by the Court."

Now, the exception from that general rule of the case of libel shows the intention of the law-makers, who come fresh from the people, that in cases of libel the Judges shall not have the power to charge the jury upon matters of law. Again, gentlemen say that it proceeds upon the power of the jury to render a general verdict. Section eleven hundred and fifty illustrates the proposition. It says:

"The jury may render a general verdict, or, when they are in doubt as to the legal effect of the facts proved, they may, except upon an indictment for libel, find a special verdict."

That declaration clearly shows that in cases of libel the jury may not avoid their obligation to pass upon the law and the fact by a general verdict, whilst they may do so in any other criminal case. And, therefore, it is, I say, that it is appropriate that a declaration should be distinctly made in this Constitution, which will in the first place avoid the confusion into which this question has always thrown the Courts and lawyers, and in the second place afford a substantial protection to the parties. I warn gentlemen now, since they have abolished the Grand Jury, and since there is a disposition on the part of this Convention to reduce the power of the petit jury, that they must lodge a complete and absolute power in the jury to pass upon questions of law and fact, or the press will be in continual danger. Why so, sir? It is for this reason: The Judges upon the bench are elected by the people just as any other officers are. They may become a target for the newspapers whilst they are candidates. They may become a target for their shafts after they get on the bench. Now the intention is to remove from the Judge upon the bench all possible temptation that he shall be influenced by any publication that has been made in reference to himself, or his political party, or his personal friends, whereby the purity of the administration of the law through him may be affected. It is because of the wide-spread influence of the press, the immense ramifications of the press, that this obligation is imposed upon the Judges to abstain from charging the jury, because it never can be determined when some such influence will not operate on his mind. These questions that gentlemen speak about as questions of law, or mixed questions of law and fact, are such as can be determined in all cases without difficulty, save and except the bare question of jurisdiction, which every lawyer knows can well be settled in another way.

I shall vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara, and when it is voted down I shall propose an amendment that the Judges in cases of libel shall not charge the juries.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I did not intend to say anything upon this subject, or participate in the discussion, and I will not now say much. What I shall say will be merely an explanation of the position in which I find myself. As Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary, I made the report of the section now under consideration, and therefore I might be supposed to favor the section as reported. On the contrary, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara. The section was taken up before the committee at a late hour—after the discussion of other subjects—and it was adopted, because it was in the old Constitution, without further consideration. I suppose every gentleman then present is now free to act upon his own convictions on the final vote.

The hour being now very late, and the matter having been very generally discussed by the Convention, and, I think, very ably discussed, there is very little left for any person to say, and I do not intend to say much in explanation of my intended vote. I understand that when a citizen is injured he has two remedies under the law—a civil remedy and a criminal remedy. It is very true that the criminal remedy is prosecuted in the name of the people, and for an offense against the people, but at the same time there is always an injured citizen. That injured citizen, or his friends, make the complaint, and he is practically the party seeking to be vindicated. If a man attacks me with a weapon, with an intent to take my life, I may sue him civilly for such danger as I may have suffered, or I may resort to the criminal Courts for the purpose of vindicating myself. So, in cases of libel, as a private individual I have my civil remedy and my criminal remedy. I may go into the civil Courts for my personal remedy, or I may call upon the people, in their name, to proceed with the criminal prosecution, and thus vindicate myself. And, after all, it is a personal remedy as well as a remedy on behalf of the people. If my life is assailed and I resort to a criminal prosecution for the offense, I bring the accused before a tribunal consisting of a Judge and jury. We clothe the different officers of that Court with certain special functions. The Judge is selected because of his legal learning; because of his familiarity with the great principles of jurisprudence which we invoke in the administration of justice. We summon a jury as a part of the machinery of the Court, for the purpose of passing upon the facts, and the jury performs that particular function—being believed, under our system, to be better judges of the fact than the Court. Such a tribunal has been considered the best that can be devised. Yet, in such a case, concerning my life or my personal safety, the Judge lays down the law to the jury and the jury finds the facts. The jury, upon their oaths, are bound to take the law from the Court, and the Court is bound to tell the jury that it is their special province to pass upon the facts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when my character is assailed—more precious to me than life or limb, more precious to my family; more precious to my children—what is my remedy? I say to the State, this accusation has been made against me. This libel has been perpetrated; this crime has been committed, and I demand its prosecution. I bring this libeler before the Court, to be prosecuted in the name of the people. I stand upon the one side, seeking a vindication for the injury to my character. Upon the other hand he stands accused of libel. What tribunal is best for the purpose of determining whether I committed the infamy that the libeler may have charged against me? What tribunal is best to determine between him and me? Why is it that that tribunal I have just spoken of should not be trusted, when my character is assailed? Why is it that that Judge, chosen for his legal acquirements, should not exercise the same powers? Why is it that that jury, qualified only to pass on the facts, should not be limited to their accustomed powers? Why is it, when my life has been assailed, the trial is to proceed in one way, and when my character has been assailed, the trial must be conducted in a different manner? Why is it that the Judge, learned in jurisprudence, calm and impartial, who is required to lay down the law to the jury in the case when my life has been assailed, is forbidden to state the law to the jury when my character and my good name are involved?

This question involves something more than the liberty of the press. It involves the rights of the whole people as well as the press. This proposition to make the jury judges of the law as well as the fact, may cut both ways. It may endanger the press as well as the citizen at large. Each may need the protection of the Judge against the ignorance and prejudice of the jury. But the question here after all is a question of good common sense. Why should there be a distinction made between different criminal actions?

A great deal of eloquence has been heard here; a great deal has been ably and forcibly said, and I have listened with admiration to many gentlemen who have spoken on this subject. It has been a source of gratification to find so much ability, learning and eloquence in this Convention. One would suppose from the argument of the gentleman from San Francisco, Colonel Barnes, that Algernon Sidney died in order that this clause might be put in the Constitution. But when we turn to the Fox libel act, we do not find any such clause as this. We do not find that Sidney died for any such purpose. We do not find that he had anything to do with it. It was a different cause that led to the passage of that law. The distinguished gentleman from San Francisco, Colonel Barnes, has stated that the English Judges had innovated upon the common law; they had made libel cases to occupy a different position from ordinary criminal cases. He says that in ordinary criminal cases the law and the fact were presented to the jury; that is, the facts were presented to the jury, and the Court charged the jury, and the jury rendered a general verdict. But the Judges, he says, had innovated upon the common law in the case of libel against the Crown, and they only submitted to the jury the one question as to whether the publication had been made, taking into their own hands the question as to whether the publication constituted a libel, and as to what was the intent of the publication. He says, and says frankly, that the object of the Fox libel law was to restore libel cases to the same platform as other criminal cases; and undoubtedly this discussion has developed and demonstrated the fact that the Fox libel act brought libel cases from the position they held, to the common level of all other criminal cases. It never was intended to advance it to a privileged position over and above, or beyond any other criminal case. And the object of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara is to put it upon that basis, and to keep it exactly where other criminal cases are. That is the reason why the amendment commends itself to the judgment of all. Why should the jury be permitted to judge of the law in this case any more than in any other? Are they disposed to lean toward the press? If they lean toward the press when it has defamed my character, then they lean against me, and they are an improper tribunal to submit the question to. I do not want any tribunal that leans against any man. I want it impartial, fair, and disinterested; otherwise it is unfit to determine the question. If they are biased against the press they are equally unfit to determine the law.

Why should the jury determine the law in libel cases, any more than in other cases? Are they better judges of the law? No gentleman has said that they are better qualified than the Judges to say what the law is on questions of libel; or that they know better the vital principles underlying all questions of jurisprudence. Why then should they judge of the law? Why not take the law from the Judge whom the people have elected because of his proficiency and learning in the law? Why should we elect a Judge to determine questions of law and yet submit questions of law to a jury who are uninformed on questions of law? Would not the Judge in any event determine questions of evidence? Would not the Judge determine according to his idea of the law what evidence should go to the jury, and would not the jury be compelled to pass upon such evidence as the Judges admits to go to the jury? The jury has no right legally or morally to take notice of evidence which is excluded from their consideration by the Court. I say that the mere fact, that in this case there is no appeal, is sufficient to warrant the adoption of the amendment in the law, for there is no remedy if the jury commit an error. The chances are about equal whether they will decide the law wrongly against the accused or rightly in his favor. There seems to be an idea that the jury is going to decide always in favor of the defendant. I do not understand that there is any guarantee of that; if there is then we should adopt the amendment. But in fact, the jury are just as likely to find against as in favor of the defendant. I say there should be no difference in the trial or mode of procedure in criminal cases; they should all occupy one common platform. The tribunal, composed of Judge and jury, should respectively perform the same functions in libel cases that they do in other criminal cases.

I do not think the question of the liberty of the press is involved in this amendment. The rights of the people, the liberty of the press, and of everybody else is preserved by the provisions of section nine, reported by the committee, excluding entirely the last clause. The provision is just, and everybody admits it, that the citizen who writes and publishes his sentiments should be held responsible for an abuse of that privilege. A libel case charges that the defendant has abused that privilege, and that is the question that comes before the Court. In other words, has he published such an article against an individual? if so, then is it true? And if true, was it published with good motives and for justifiable ends? These are questions of fact. Now, I say that the better portions of the press are interested in having the law severe upon libel. Why? Because the better portions of the press do not commit libels. If I were the editor of a newspaper that I intended to conduct with decency and propriety, I would be in favor of the severest libel law, because the decent portion of the press is controlled by a wholesome public opinion, and does not require any such protection as is supposed to be obtained by authorizing a jury to find a verdict against the law and the right. I recollect very well Macaulay's happy description of the emancipation of the press in England. He says:

"From the day on which the emancipation of our literature was accomplished, the purification of our literature began. That purification was effected, not by the intervention of senates or magistrates, but by the opinion of the great body of educated Englishmen, before whom good and evil were set, and who were left free to make their choice." He concludes by saying: "At this day foreigners, who dare not print a word reflecting on the Government under which they live, are at a loss to understand how it happens that the freest press in Europe is the most prudish."

I pray God the time may soon come when we may truly say the same thing of the press of California.

REMARKS OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I will not detain the committee bnt a moment.

[Cries of "question."]

As far as I am concerned they can have the question in about five minutes. Mr. Chairman, when the proposition was made to refer these four sections of the Bill of Rights to the Committee on Judiciary, it was a close struggle in relation to carrying that reference. I was in favor of that reference, and probably it may be that my action in that matter carried the reference. I had no idea that every single recommendation that was made by that Committee on Judiciary would be against the interests of the people or I should never have advocated that reference. But I did think that in one respect where the vote had been in favor of the people that they would stand by that report, but it seems that even in this I was mistaken, and that the committee surrenders its own report. I listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, and I do not think he has drawn this picture too heavily. I ask this committee to pause. I ask them to consider whither we are drifting, and where these innovations are about to carry us. That is all that I have to say, only that I do regret that on the only proposition where the Judiciary Committee had stood by the people that they have surrendered it.

REMARKS OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I have understood that every man that voted for this amendment of Judge Fawcett would be published in the Chronicle. [Laughter.] I am going to vote for that amendment, and I say that every member of this Convention that don't vote for it is a weak-kneed man. [Laughter.] When that section was placed in the old Constitution a man had a right to stone to death the blackguard libeler, but to-day we have no redress except with the pistol. I say that we should have a clause in the Constitution to treat every libeler the same as any other criminal. The amendment which I intend to vote for is this: "And the jury shall have the right to find a general verdict as in other cases." That is the amendment that was made by Judge Fawcett, and that is the amendment I am going to vote for. We should treat these blackguard libelers the same as we would any murderer. I hope that every member upon this floor will vote for that amendment. I picked up the Chronicle a few minutes ago and read an article that I would like to read.

[Cries of "read," "read."]

I will read it. It says:

"McFarland moved to strike out the clause making the jury judge of the law and fact in libel cases. He said this would not abridge the freedom of the press, as it was freer now than anybody else, and used its freedom to malign reputable citizens and break up good names. When brought to trial they say: "For God's sake don't try us according to law;" and they call on a jury who are ignorant of the law, and the Constitution makes them judges of the law as well as of fact. He was willing to accord to the press all the freedom necessary for ordinary criticism, but he wished to bring men to justice who ruined other men's character."

The members in this hall that don't vote for that amendment, it appears to me, are afraid of that press. [Laughter.] I thank you kindly for your attention. [Applause and laughter.]

REMARKS OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman ——

[Cries of "question!" "question!"]

Mr. Chairman: The time is short and ——

[Cries of "question!"]

I shall not detain the Convention. As one having the honor of being on the Judiciary Committee; as one, believing at the time that the provision in the Constitution was right, I still stick to that proposition. I propose to stand by my opinions, even though the honorable and distinguished gentleman who is Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary, the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, has receded so far as to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara, Mr. Fawcett.

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco. I never voted for it.

MR. BARRY. He has the privilege, of course, which every man has and which I claim myself, to vote according to the dictates of his own judgment, regardless of what the Chronicle may do. I propose that every vote I shall cast here shall be according to what I regard to be right, regardless of what any man or any paper may say. Believing that this provision in the Constitution is what it should be, like the gentleman from Shasta, Mr. Andrews, who is opposed to change, except when the change is necessary, and is willing to stand by the Constitution when he believes it is right, I am opposed to this amendment. I say for another reason that if there is a corrupt Judge upon the bench that he might give instructions to the jury as a matter of law that might be against the liberty of the press, which for reasons urged to-day, are potent. I do not wish to deprive them of the liberty that I claim they ought to have; and if they abuse their right then we have laws sufficient to punish them. I am as much against the corrupt press as any living man.

I shall support the report of the Committee on Judiciary, believing it to be right. I say let the Constitution, in that particular, stand as it now stands.

[Cries of "question," "question."]

REMARKS OF MR. MILLS.

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: I desire to call the attention of the committee to one point. Now, sir, if it be proposed that the Judge shall not charge the jury and shall have nothing to say in respect to the law in regard to libel cases, then there should be some provision to allow the Judge to retire from the bench, and possibly have the Sheriff take control of the jury, and let the attorneys argue the law to the jury. This, sir, would certainly be very proper. Why should the Judge sit upon the bench when he has nothing to say—when he has no control of the case? Why don't you provide that he can leave the Court House and go fishing or somewhere else, and leave the Sheriff and attorneys to conduct the case, and the jury to proceed to a verdict? I cannot see any business for a Judge there in such a case.

It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the honorable gentleman from Santa Barbara should be adopted. In all other cases the main question is, what was the intent; and it is so here. Our statute provides at present that the act must be willful, with an intent to injure another. Now so far as regards the matter of law, should the Judge be permitted to charge what is a willful act? Should he be permitted to charge what are the elements of intent? It seems to me that we should consider this law as we do any other law. It seems to me that the law should be the same for this case as all others. It is said that this crime is only a misdemeanor. How long will it be made a misdemeanor? How long should it remain so? Ought it not to be made a felony? Would that not do away with some of this wholesale slander and libel? You may traduce my character or do what you please in that respect, and it is only a misdemeanor. I say, ought it not to be made a felony, and ought not these cases to be prosecuted with more care than they are?

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 74 ayes to 67 noes.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration certain sections of the declaration of rights, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

REPORT.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I send up a report of the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses.

THE SECRETARY read the report, as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses have had under consideration Resolution No. 78—to provide for the payment of certain expenses incurred by the Sergeant-at-Arms, in the purchase of ice, etc., for the Convention—herewith report the same back, and recommend that it be adopted.

We have also had under consideration Resolution No. 67, presented by Mr. Barnes, to provide for the payment of Edward Wason, and Resolution No 79, presented by Mr. Estee, to provide for the payment of Hiram Clock, for work as Porters of the committee rooms, and herewith report both resolutions back and recommend that they be adopted. We have no doubt but these Porters were absolutely necessary to the proper performance of the business of the Convention. The Convention neglected to authorize the employment of the Porters, and the Sergeant-at-Arms, seeing the necessity, assumed the responsibility of having the work done. In doing so he probably made a mistake. He would have acted wiser had he permitted the committee rooms to remain in darkness and filth, in which case the several committees would have moved in the matter, and authority to employ Porters would have been sooner granted. We hope, however, that this is the last case of the kind which will occur in this Convention.

S. G. HILBORN, Chairman.

ICE BILLS.

THE PRESIDENT. The first question is on the adoption of the first resolution. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the sum of thirty-eight and thirty one hundredths dollars be and the same is hereby allowed to pay the bill of Pacific Ice Company, and bill of Sacramento Post-office, the same to be paid out of the appropriation for expenses of the Convention, and drawn in favor of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The resolution was adopted.

PAY OF PORTERS.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the next resolution, No. 67.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That Edward Wason be and he is hereby allowed the sum of eighty-eight dollars for services as Porter twenty-two days in caring for committee rooms, and that the same be paid out of the appropriation made for the Convention.

MR. CONDON. I call attention to the resolution adopted here on November second, which, I think—the recommendation in relation to this resolution—is a violation of that resolution in reference to this matter.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as recommended by the committee.

MR. CONDON. I move that the report be laid on the table—that part of it.

MR. HILBORN. I hope some action will be taken on this matter. The resolution spoken of is not a rule of this Convention, and it can be rescinded at any time by this Convention ——.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion to table is not debatable. (Laughter).

MR. HILBORN. If there is no objection I would like to make a statement in connection with this matter. When the rooms were apportioned to the different committees, there were fifteen rooms, all unprepared, and they had to be put in condition to be occupied by the various committees. No provision had been made by this body for cleaning them up, and putting in the necessary furniture. The Sergeant-at-Arms, desiring to facilitate the operations of the Convention, thought best, and did employ these two gentlemen to do that work. As suggested by the committee, it would have probably been wiser to refrain from doing it, and then these various committees would have found them in darkness, and with the filth which had accumulated since last session of the Legislature. But feeling that he wanted to accommodate the Convention, and doing what he thought was for the best, and believing it was for the best, he employed these two faithful men and set them to work, and they did the work until the Convention authorized other persons to do the work. As soon as the resolution was referred to this committee they investigated the matter, and found that it was absolutely necessary that two men should be employed. I think the resolution ought to pass. They are here on expense, and I hope the Convention will do something for them.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on laying the resolution on the table.

Lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

It was adopted.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the next resolution, number seventy-nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Controller of State be and he is hereby directed to draw his warrant in favor of Hiram Clock for one hundred and eight dollars, for twenty-seven days' services as Porter, and the State Treasurer to pay the same out of the appropriation for the Convention.

I hereby certify that Hiram Clock has been employed since the organization of the Convention in the capacity of Porter and Watchman, and that he has performed all the duties faithfully.

T. J. SHERWOOD, Sergeant-at-Arms.

THE PRESIDENT. Mr. Clock was appointed by the Governor at the opening of the Convention, and has served under that appointment.

The resolution was adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PREAMBLE AND BILL OF RIGHTS.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: A report from the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

THE SECRETARY read:

MR. PRESIDENT: The Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, to whom was referred the following propositions, to wit: Number three hundred and eighty-two, introduced by Mr. Schell; number three hundred and ninety-three, introduced by Mr. Dudley of Solano; number three hundred and ninety-seven, introduced by Mr. Beerstecher; number four hundred and nineteen, introduced by Mr. Freeman; number four hundred and twenty, introduced by Mr. Mansfield, and number four hundred and twenty-one, introduced by Mr. Ringgold—beg leave to report that the propositions relate to matters on which the committee had already acted, and had embodied their action in the draft of article one of the revised Constitution. The committee, therefore, return said propositions, and recommend that they be not adopted.

Respectfully submitted,

WALTER VAN DYKE, Chairman.

THE PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table.

AMENDING THE RULES.

MR. NOEL. Mr. President: I gave notice that I would move to amend the rules by striking out rule seventy-one. If it is in order I will make that motion now.

THE PRESIDENT. It is not in order at this time. The next order of business is: Propositions and Resolutions relating to the Constitution.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS—STATE OFFICERS.

MR. TINNIN introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, to allow State officers to appear, in certain cases, before the Legislature.

Digitized by Google

SECTION —. Any State officer, who is the head of any of the departments of the State Government, shall be permitted to appear in person before either or both branches of the State Legislature, to explain any subject relating to his department that is then being considered.

Referred to the Committee on the Legislative Department.

DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

MR. LAVIGNE introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, in relation to disposition of property:

ARTICLE - -.

SECTION —. No person possessing property, real, personal, or otherwise, and who has one or more direct heirs, shall ever be allowed to dispose of more than one third of said property, either by will or gift, in favor of any other person, corporation, society, or association. The remaining two thirds shall become the property of his heir or heirs. And any sales which may have been made during the life of the testator or owner, which shall be proved illegal or fraudulent, of any part of said property, shall be declared null and void.

Referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

CITIES AND TOWNS.

MR. E. O. SMITH introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution in relation to restrictions on cities and towns, against their including adjacent farming lands within their corporate limits for purposes of taxation:

Resolved, That it is wrong in principle, and unjust to parties concerned, for cities and towns to extend their limits over tracts of adjacent farming lands in any direction for the sole purpose of taxing them for the corporate benefits of such cities or towns, and that no town or city in this State should be permitted to incorporate within its limits, and to subject to corporate taxation, any adjacent farm or lands whatever without the consent of the owners thereof, or a majority of them.

Referred to Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS.

MR. BARBOUR introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, concerning fees and salaries of officers:

SECTION —. No State, county, or municipal officer, whose salary is fixed by law, shall receive to his own use any fees or moneys coming into his hands as such officer, or retain the same, or any portion thereof, on account of his salary; but he shall account for the same as public money, and shall forthwith, or as soon after the receipt thereof as may be, deposit the same in the treasury of the State, or county, or municipality, as the case may be. The Legislature shall enforce the provisions of this section by suitable penalties.

Referred to the Committee on Legislative Department.

TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATIONS.

MR. HAGER introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution relative to City, County, and Township Organizations:

SECTION 1. Any city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with and subject to the Constitution and laws of this State, by causing a Board of fifteen freeholders, who shall have been for at least five years qualified electors thereof, to be elected by the qualified voters of such city, at any general or special election, whose duty it shall be, within ninety days after such election, to prepare and propose a charter for such city, which shall be signed in duplicate by the members of such Board, or a majority of them, and returned, one copy thereof to the Mayor, or other chief executive officer of such city, and the other to the Recorder of Deeds of the county. Such proposed charter shall then be published in two daily papers of largest general circulation in such city for at least twenty days; and within not less than thirty days after such publication it shall be submitted to the qualified electors of such city at a general or special election, and if a majority of such qualified electors voting thereat shall ratify the same, it shall, at the end of sixty days thereafter, become the charter of such city; or if such city be consolidated with a county in government, then of such city and county, and shall become the organic law thereof, and supersede any existing charter and all amendments thereof, and all special laws inconsistent with such charter. A copy of such charter, certified by the Mayor, or chief executive officer, and authenticated by the seal of such city, setting forth the submission of such charter to the electors and its ratification by them, shall be made in duplicate and deposited, one in the office of the Secretary of State, the other, after being recorded in the office of the Recorder of Deeds of the county, among the archives of the city, and thereafter all Courts shall take judicial notice thereof. The charter so ratified may be amended at intervals of not less than two years, by proposals therefor submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified voters thereof at a general or special election, held at least sixty days after the publication of such proposals, and ratified by at least three fifths of the qualified electors voting thereat. In submitting any such charter, or amendment thereto, any alternative article or proposition may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to others.

SEC. 2. In counties or cities having more than one hundred thousand inhabitants no person shall, at the same time, be a State officer and a city or county officer, nor hold two city or county offices.

Referred to Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section thirteen is before the committee.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment to be added to section nine.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this time.

MR. HOWARD. Then I offer it as an independent section.

THE CHAIRMAN. We are now considering section thirteen. You can offer it at a subsequent time.

MR. VAN DYKE. I offer an amendment to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add, after the word 'counsel' the words, 'to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, and to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair was mistaken as to the action on section nine. That section is still before the committee.

MR. VAN DYKE. I withdraw my amendment to section thirteen.

THE LAW OF LIBEL.

MR. HOWARD. I now offer my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the end of the section: 'The judge may state the law, but the jury shall not be bound by the instructions of the Court. The Legislature shall provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court in questions of law in convictions or prosecutions for libel.'"

MR. HOWARD'S REMARKS.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I wish merely to state to the Convention that this is the substance of the provisions in several State Constitutions. That it is not the law, and has not been since seventeen hundred and ninety two; that the jury was bound by the instructions of the judge in libel cases. I read from the 14th Times Reports, 801, in the case of Harle vs. Catherall, in which the judge said, in summing up: "The first question was whether the correspondence which appeared in the paper was a libel at all—and according to the construction which had been put upon the Act of Parliament as regarded libel, the jury must judge for themselves. They were, perhaps, aware that it was for the Judge or the jury to decide what was a libel; but recently that question had been set at rest by Act of Parliament, which said that the jury were to decide, and not the judge. It had always been the practice, since the passing of the Act, in these cases to leave the decision to the jury. He believed also that, according to the opinions of many eminent persons, the judge ought to state to the jury what his opinion of the case submitted to a Court was; so that was only the opinion of a Judge as a thirteenth juryman, as it were, and not a matter of law, which aided the jury in arriving at their decision upon the question of libel."

That, Mr. Chairman is the law in the case.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I may be permitted to express my astonishment at the action of the Convention on this matter on yesterday evening — astonished that in the morning, by a very large majority they should have agreed to retain this substantial right in the Constitution, while in the evening of the same day they gave it away. A great deal of historical research was brought forward on yesterday in support of the position which I took on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland. I think the amendment now offered will restore in part the safeguards which were eliminated on yesterday. Great cases were alluded to, which may be called celebrated. I wish to read a line or two more from the same authority cited by my colleague from Los Angeles, General Howard:

"If the law be clear, we may presume that the Judge states it clearly to the jury; and if he does, undoubtedly the jury, if they are well advised, will find according to such directions."

I think the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles will be a good one. The Judge will be able to communicate to the jury what is law in his opinion, while the jury will be left as before to decide for themselves the law and the fact.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I think this is all out of order, for this very question has been voted upon by the Committee. The gentleman can reach the matter when it comes up in Convention, by refusing to adopt the report of the Committee of the Whole. We are traveling over the same ground again.

THE CHAIRMAN: Does the gentleman from Alameda raise the point of order?

MR. VAN DYKE. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not well taken.

MR. AYERS. I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, for the reason that I believe it will restore in part to the press the safeguards eliminated by last night's vote. I would like to know of any gentleman on the floor of this Convention what mischief has been committed under the old Constitution? Has there been any wrong done? Has there been any difficulty in convicting libelers under that clause? Have there been any escapes from just and merited punishment? I say there has not; and I say there is no need at this moment, in this State, of taking away this safeguard which now surrounds a free press. This Convention will act wisely, and it will do an act of simple justice to itself and to the people by adopting the amendment proposed by my colleague, General Howard, thereby undoing a portion of the wrong you did yesterday.

SPEECH OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard. I am convinced that there are many cases in which the Judge decides points of law before the jury, which might have a very unhappy effect. I am convinced that the great liberties of the people are to be defended, and the great object is the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press. Now, to illustrate my position in regard to this matter—and the President will excuse me—it is this: For instance a newspaper publishes certain things, certain statements considered to be libelous—regarded as libelous; that paper is connected with one or the other of the great political parties, representing the political sentiments of the country. It may be a Democratic paper and it may be a Republican paper—and I wish not entirely to ignore the Workingmen—it may be a Workingmen's paper. Now, we must understand that Judges, high as they are, have their feelings. We are apt to conclude that Judges should be free from politics—and perhaps it would be well if they were—but our experience has taught us that they, in common with the rest of us, have their political sentiments. They have their political feelings; they have their political friendships as other men have; and we have seen evidences enough that these things have some influence upon Judges as well as other men.

Now, the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press are the dearest rights we have. Suppose, for instance, that the Chronicle, or any other paper, is sued for libel and taken off to be tried before some Judge. Suppose the Judge is their friend: and suppose that this paper has advocated the claims of that Judge to the position, advocated them ably, in the most efficient manner, we all know human nature well enough to know that the mind of that man would lean toward the defendant more or less strongly, and the friendship thus existing would be apt to exhibit itself in the conduct of the case; and he would be more than human if it did not crop out in his charge to the jury. Now, the matter is this: If the Judge decides the law—determines the law—it will have a tremendous effect. If he determines what the law is before the jury, it will have its influence with them; it will trammel them; they cannot act independently of the instructions of the Court under the amendment which has already been adopted. And we find that this Judge will have certain politics, and these politics may influence, as any other gentlemen would be influenced. Not so with the jury. The jury is not liable to be composed of men of the same political sentiment, neither are they liable to be under obligations to any paper, as the Judge, who is to be elected, is. I believe this matter is safer with the jury. They can take up the law, investigate it, arrive at their conclusions; and they will not feel that the paper has benefited them, or laid them under obligations in any way, or injured them in any particular. Here is where the grand point comes in. The Judge is only a kind of a thirteenth juror, and merely gives his opinion in regard to the law, and they can let his opinion go for what it is worth; and he will not have authority to control the jury in this respect. He cannot control or influence the jury—which I do not think he should be allowed to do—when it is on so great and important a matter as the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press. I shall therefore, for the reasons I have stated, vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I have seldom witnessed, in any similar assemblage, so earnest and able discussion as has been devoted to this subject now under consideration. I have been equally astonished at the doctrines enunciated, not only by the gentleman who introduced the amendment yesterday, but by those other gentlemen this morning with reference to the section as it now stands becoming a part of the Constitution. If this amendment, as it is proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles is not adopted, then the libel law will stand as it stood in the days of Lord Mansfield, when the great contest was had between the people and the Crown, particularly with reference to the questions involved here now.

It will be recollected by gentlemen themselves who were arguing upon the other side, that, at that early period, the instructions of Lord Mansfield in the Woodfall case were: "Gentlemen of the Jury, if you will take it upon yourselves to decide the question of law you can do so, but you must be careful how you decide upon your oaths and your consciences."

What difference is there between the law as it stood then and the law as is attempted to be established here now? The gentlemen who are fighting for this section as it stands now have fixed it in the very condition which it was in at the time that Lord Mansfield gave his famous instructions, and against which the protests of the ablest minds in Europe were hurled with terrible force and effect. It is not the province of the Judge to say to the jury, "you may disregard the law." It has been argued here, but the fact was overlooked that the jury are as much sworn officers as the Judge himself, and sworn to obey the law as much as the Judge himself. Will it be said, then, that the Judge may tell the jury, "Gentlemen, you are at liberty to disregard the plain provisions of the Codes?" No, sir. It is the province of the Judge to say to the jury, "Gentlemen, you are on your oaths. This is the law, but as far as the questions involved in this case are concerned, the Constitution intended that the jury should be the judges of the law. In this case the law and the fact are so closely interwoven that it is virtually impossible to draw the line of demarkation." In libel cases, they should not stand on any other basis. The jury should be the absolute judges of the law, as it is intended by the Constitution they should be. And the law was not intended to stand as it stood in the days of Lord Mansfield, when he took upon himself to dictate to the jury what their verdict should be. It is true that the Judge may state his opinions to the jury, but under these circumstances he should not be allowed to force his views of the law upon the jury. That state of things should not be allowed for the most weighty reasons in the world.

This class of prosecutions do not stand upon the same plane as cases of murder, or cases of treason, or any other class of cases, within the history of American jurisprudence. They stand upon a higher plane. The law and the fact are so closely connected and blended, that it is utterly impossible for the Judge to undertake to determine where the line of demarkation shall exist, so as to instruct the jury at what particular point the verdict must tend in favor of the defendant or in favor of the people. This is the reason why, and there is no other reason given in heaven or among men, why this class of cases should stand on a different basis from other criminal cases. This rule has stood since the days of Lord Mansfield, and it should be permanently established by placing it in the Constitution, so that no Judge shall be allowed to say, "Gentlemen, you are at liberty to disregard the law if you will." That is the most absurd proposition that ever was made by any enlightened Judge in this or any other age.

Now, sir, I am not here to defend the press of the State of California, or of the United States, for there is no class of citizens in the land so well able to protect themselves. They are the greatest power ever wielded by the hands of mortal man. Some of the newspapers may be corrupt; they may be run in the interests of corporations, or otherwise; their hands may be raised against every man who is not of the same opinion. I am not here to defend them. They stand as their own defenders, and they are well able to protect themselves. But it is the principle I am contending for. I am violently opposed to sacrificing a principle for the sake of wreaking vengeance on some individual evil-doer, and thereby endangering the liberty of innocent men. The newspapers are not to-day the bulwark of liberty in California. They stand rather as the bulwark of railroad corporations, banking associations, and all other classes of associations, and he who runs may read, that they make no assaults upon railroad or other great and powerful corporations. But I say that I am not contending for the press; it is a principle I am contending for. They need no defense at my hands. It is the people at large who are demanding that this plain provision shall be fixed in the Constitution; that this arbitrary power shall not be lodged again in the hands of the Judges, who may use it to oppress innocence. I do not say that we shall go back to the original provision as it was reported by the committee. I am simply asking that this last amendment may be added to the section so as to give some little protection against the usurpation of the Court.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment, to be added to section nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Indictments or information for publications in newspapers shall be tried in the county where such newspapers have their publication office, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause."

MR. ESTEE. That has been voted down.

MR. CAMPBELL. No sir; the amendment that was voted down embraced that and other matters.

MR. VAN DYKE. There was a direct vote on that matter.

MR. CAMPBELL. I think the committee will soon see the necessity of adopting such an amendment as that, under the existing circumstances. By the vote of yesterday the crime of libel was put upon the same footing as all other criminal prosecutions—as I understand the effect of the amendment—that is, that the Judge who tries the case is permitted to declare to the jury, in a form that binds them, the law of the case. The Judge has a right to declare whether the publication is a libel or not, and all that the jury have to determine is merely the fact of the publication. It is said that they may render a general verdict, but you have placed it in this position, that they may have the privilege of disregarding their oaths, for the Constitution declares that the jury shall be judges of the fact, and that the Court shall declare the law.

MR. WILSON, of First District. I will ask the Chairman whether this same motion was not made by the gentleman before, and whether it was not voted down by the Committee. He moved in the first place that actions of this kind should be tried in the county in which the newspaper was published. I raise the point of order that it has already been voted down.

THE CHAIRMAN. There was no vote taken on the former amendment, as I am informed by the Secretary.

MR. AYERS. It was put to a vote at the very heels of adjournment.

THE CHAIRMAN. Since that amendment was offered another amendment has been made to the section, which changes the character of the section; and the amendment now offered includes less matter than was included in the former amendment. The Chair therefore decides that the amendment is in order.

MR. FAWCETT. Mr. Chairman, I most respectfully appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Messrs. McCallum, Tully and Keyes seconded the appeal.

THE CHAIRMAN. An appeal has been taken. The Chair decides that this is not the same amendment as offered before and voted down. Further, that since the other was offered, an amendment has been adopted which changes the character of the section, and renders this amendment in order. From which ruling the gentleman from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett, appeals, and the appeal has been seconded. The question is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention.

The appeal was lost, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell.

SPEECH OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: With this section as it has been amended, in connection with the other sections of the Constitution, and the provision of law which declares that Judges shall determine questions of law, and the juries questions of fact, it takes away from the jury all discretion in prosecutions for libel, except to pass upon the simple fact of publication. They cannot determine, under the amendment which you have adopted, whether or not the language used was libelous. You may say they can render a general verdict, but if in rendering a general verdict, they go counter to the instructions of the Court they commit perjury. That is the position in which the amendment heretofore adopted places the jury in this country.

Now, with that change in the law, and with the doctrine maintained, as it is sought to be maintained in this Convention, that if a paper circulates anywhere, from San Diego to Siskiyou—if it is even purchased of the agent by a party in San Diego, or sent to somebody in Siskiyou, that the publisher may be brought to answer in Siskiyou, or in any part of the State in which that paper circulates, and you then have this state of things: That a man may be dragged eight hundred miles from his home to answer to a charge of misdemeanor before a selected Judge, and before one whose political convictions and associations are such, or whose present associations are such, that the Judge is the intimate friend of the prosecutor. The prosecutor may select any county in the State in which to bring the action, or all of the counties in the State, as has heretofore been attempted. They have their choice of all the Judges in the State, and all the advantage which locality can give them. They can take the victim from one end of the State to the other, and there is no one to prevent them, no law to interfere, and you will then have what you are pleased to call the freedom of the press.

Why, sir, this whole matter arose out of the fact that in political prosecutions the Judges undertook to control and influence the action of the jury. It is a mistake to suppose that in this republican country there will be no efforts at judicial tyranny. If you go back to the early politics of the State of New York, you will find that an attempt was made there to establish the old English doctrine, notwithstanding what the law and the Constitution declared there that the jury should be the judge of the law as well as the fact. Take away this safeguard, and you put it in the power of any man who chooses to prosecute a paper to prosecute him in every county in the State; and though the paper may have a complete defense, you put it in the power of any scoundrel, whose misdeeds may be exposed, to ruin the publishers of the best paper in the State. All that he needs to do is to follow the paper up with prosecution after prosecution, and persecution after persecution. You put it in the power of any politician who may not desire his career to be exposed, or commented upon, as in the light of justice it should be, to drag the editor of the paper all over the State, and if he cannot get a verdict against him in some one of the different counties, ruin him by the expense of defending himself.

After this, gentlemen, let me ask you where will be your boasted freedom of the press! The press, as far as public abuses are concerned, will be as dumb as oysters. There will be no incentive for them to defend the rights of the people, and expose corruption in public places. If the press is to be subjected to this kind of hazing, there will be no such thing as the freedom of the press. I trust that, after all that this Convention has done in this matter, you will at least say, that the parties shall be prosecuted at the place where the publication was originally made.

REMARKS OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not rise to make a speech, but I do desire to impress upon the minds of gentlemen in this Convention the absolute necessity, as one of the safeguards that is now left to us, to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell. I do not understand what all this backing and filling means. Is it for the purpose of centralizing the power of the press in the hands of one man—and I believe that is the tendency of our action here. One of the grandest objects for which we are here to-day should be to prevent this; if possible, prevent history from repeating itself. If you desire to throttle, if you desire to strangle the press—the freedom of the press—then, gentleman of the Convention, by all means vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Alameda. If you propose to allow the jury to stand between the people and a corrupt bench, then in God's name vote for the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell. As I stated upon taking the floor, I do not desire to consume the time of the Convention, but I do desire to call the attention of every candid mind in this Convention to the fact that I believe this to be the only safeguard left, and it is for the Convention to determine whether it shall remain or whether it shall be eliminated. I hope sincerely that the amendment will be adopted.

SPEECH OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I have but one word to say on this matter. It seems to me in the first place that the gentleman on my left, Judge Campbell, has made one mistake when he says that under the amendment which the committee has adopted all that the jury have to do is to determine simply whether the publication was made as charged. I do not understand it so. Under this section, in criminal prosecutions for libel, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury. That is a matter of fact which the jury have to determine, whether the alleged libelous matter is true, and it is a most important fact. There is another fact which they have to determine, and that is whether it was published with good motives and for justifiable ends.

Now, I am in favor of putting libelers upon the same footing as any other class of persons charged with crime. I say a man who will assail the character of my wife, by circulating papers in the streets of the city where I live, should be tried right there where he circulates the libels, just the same as he would if he comes there and makes a personal assault upon her. I say a man who publishes a libel—sets it up and prints it here in Sacramento—has his headquarters here, and then sends these libels throughout the length and breadth of the State, should be prosecuted wherever the libelous papers circulate, the same as a counterfeiter who sets up his machinery and manufactures coin of the United States, here in the city of Sacramento, and disposes of it throughout the State. If he coins the money here and goes to San Francisco and spends it, and circulates it there, there is where he should be prosecuted just as well as here in Sacramento. If a man sets up an office here in Sacramento and prints forged bills of exchange, or executes promissory notes, and goes to Nevada, or San Bernardino, or San Diego, or Siskiyou, and circulates them, he should be prosecuted there just the same as in Sacramento where his headquarters are, where he first manufactures them.

Why confine the prosecutions for libel to the place where it was originally instituted, where he has his machinery for making and printing the libel, any more than the man who is engaged in the business of forging notes or coining money. A libel is not a libel until it is published. The mere fact of setting down and writing a promissory note, and signing a name to it, does not constitute a crime. It is no crime until he attempts to issue it, until he takes it out and attempts to dispose of it. These libelous publications go into every county, and therefore I say where it is issued and circulated is where the crime is committed, and where he should stand his trial. The mere fact that a man has a printing office here in Sacramento, and publishes certain things, or sets them up, does not constitute the libel. It is circulating them broadcast where people can see and read them. There is where the crime is committed. I may live a thousand miles from the City of San Francisco, as I do about, and some people there may print an article that is libelous on me, and send ten thousand copies into the little town where I live, circulate them in every hamlet in the county: throw them broadcast, so that every man, woman, and child will get to see and read it, and then if I want redress I must travel a thousand miles with my witnesses to prosecute the perpetrators of that libel, and punish the criminal. I say I will never support any such provision as that. I am as much in favor of the freedom of the press as anybody. I say it has been the bulwark of our liberties; but I say the freedom of the press, in some instances, has been abused, and they have become licentious. But where they do commit offenses which are punishable by law there is where they should be prosecuted. They should answer for the offense where that offense has been committed. And if they commit an offense in every county in the State, then prosecute them in every county in the State, just the same as you would a man who commits a forgery, executes forged paper, and circulates it all over the State.

SPEECH OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: There is one very important difference which will apply to the illustration of the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe. The profession of the forger is an unmitigated evil from every point of view. He is an outlaw and a criminal from the very day and hour that he conceives the idea of forging bills, and even before he circulates those bills, or false money, he is committing a crime. You cannot say that forgers subserve any great end in government, or that while some of them are good forgers, the majority are bad men. They are all bad men. It is different with the press. Newspapers are conducted, as a rule, by reputable citizens, and generally comprise the best talent and the highest grade of intellect. They are acknowledged to be a great public benefit. Now, in the first case, we should use all means within our power to prevent the forger from accomplishing his dangerous designs, and all means within our power to punish him for the offense. In the other, we should place no weight upon it except it be absolutely necessary. It is only a constructive commission of crime where the paper is circulated. The actual commission of the crime is where the paper is published. I do not consider that the gentleman has given a fair illustration at all.

For instance, you can take the forger up in Siskiyou County, as he suggested, and try him and convict him of forgery, and send him to the Penitentiary for the term of years prescribed by law. But will the gentleman undertake to say that after he has been sent to prison for six years from Siskiyou that he can be tried by every other county in the State, for the same batch of money, and sentenced to an additional term in every county in the State? Or does he mean to say that, failing of conviction in one county, he can be hawked over the State until a jury in some one of the counties does convict? I hardly think the law permits anything of the kind. Therefore I hope this amendment will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: When a paper is charged with having libeled a man, it is presumed that the publisher is innocent of the offense charged until the contrary is shown. But if a paper libels me—declares that I am a thief—then on the face of the paper there is an offense committed, and the burden is thrown on the paper to show that the statement is true, and that it was published with good motives and for justifiable ends. The newspaper ought to be in itself a protection to the liberties of the people. But the liberties of the people are just as much to be looked after as the liberty of the press, for the liberty of the press is nothing more nor less than the liberty of a limited number of people. The papers are to be protected only because they are supposed to subserve the cause of liberty and right. When a man is charged with being a thief, he has as much right to be vindicated at his own home as the newspaper has. I therefore move this amendment, which I think is eminently right and proper. It is to be added to the amendment already presented by Judge Campbell, and I hope that gentleman will accept it as a part of his amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. Send up the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Or in the county where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication."

MR. SHAFTER. That will confine the trial to two places, either to the place where the paper is published or to the place where the libeled party resided at the time of the publication.

MR. CAMPBELL. I accept the amendment.

Digitized by Google

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: Is an amendment in order?

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir; there is already an amendment to an amendment.

MR. CAMPBELL. I have accepted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter.

THE CHAIRMAN. If the amendment is accepted, then an amendment to the amendment will be in order. The gentleman from Sacramento will send up his amendment.

MR. EDGERTON. I move to amend so as to read as follows: "Indictments or informations for publications in newspapers shall be found and tried in the county where such papers have their publication office, or in the counties where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause."

MR. VAN DYKE. The amendment is unnecessary.

MR. EDGERTON. I am opposed to the whole thing, but I suggest this merely.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

MR. SHAFTER. I move to insert the words, "indictment found or information laid."

MR. McFARLAND. I would suggest that something be left to the Legislature, when they come to arrange the details.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the section as amended, with the proposed amendments.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 9. Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions for libels, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to find a general verdict, as in other criminal cases. Indictments found or information laid for publications in newspapers shall be tried in the county where such newspapers have their publication office, or in the county where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Adopted—ayes 107.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the Judiciary Committee as amended.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 13. In criminal prosecutions, in any Court whatever, the party accused shall have a right to a speedy and public trial, and to appear and defend in person and with counsel. No person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor shall he be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

MR. VAN DYKE. I have an amendment, to come in after the word "counsel," which I send up.

THE SECRETARY read:

"To be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted by the witnesses against him, and to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor."

So that the section will read as follows:

SEC. 13. In criminal prosecutions, in any Court whatever, the party accused shall have a right to a speedy and public trial, and to appear and defend in person with counsel: to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted by the witnesses against him, and to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor. No person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor shall he be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: That amendment is taken from the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and is to be found in nearly all the State Constitutions. It was substantially the same as reported by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, but the Judiciary Committee, in reconstructing this section, have omitted it. I do not know why they should have omitted it. They are right, as well as any other in that section, and they are enumerated in pretty much all the State Constitutions.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute for both.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In criminal prosecutions in any Court whatever, the party accused shall have a right to a speedy and public trial; to have process of the Court to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf; to appear and defend in person and by counsel. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, nor be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order. There is an amendment to an amendment pending.

REMARKS OF MR. FAWCETT.

MR. FAWCETT. Mr. Chairman: I think the proposed amendment perhaps is dangerous in one of its principles. That part of the amendment which provides that the party charged with crime shall be confronted at the time in Court with the witnesses against him, it seems to me, will revolutionize the whole practice of the State. Is it not true, that if that clause is admitted, the dying declarations for instance, can no longer be offered in evidence on criminal trials? I think that will follow as one of the consequences of adopting this amendment. It is also the law at present that depositions may be introduced in evidence, and the effect of that change made in that particular a few years ago, has been remarkably beneficial, and that is a very material issue in the administration of criminal justice in this State. If this amendment prevails, that practice will be destroyed. Depositions can no longer be offered in criminal cases at the trial, even though the depositions might have been taken at a former examination, still, at the same time the defendant is entitled to be confronted with the witnesses—the living witnesses—which would exclude all such things as depositions. It is dangerous, and should not prevail in my opinion.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I will simply say that this matter was canvassed by the Judiciary Committee, and for the reasons stated by the gentleman last on the floor it was deemed advisable to adhere to the old Constitution, and this section thirteen, as now reported by the Judiciary Committee is the old Constitution, being the latter part of section eight, and we saw no reason for altering it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to ask of the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, what reason there is for leaving out the right that is secured in all the State Constitutions of the defendant being informed of the nature of the accusation against him. That is contained in the Constitution of the United States, and in the Constitution of pretty much all of the States, and I would like to know why we should not put it in here.

MR. WILSON, of First District. That has always been given to a party in this State and always will be. He could not be brought up and tried without it. It is a matter of detail, and section thirteen declares the general principles, and secures the general rights.

MR. VAN DYKE. If we are to depend on the matter of principle, we may as well strike out the whole section. I understand this to be one of the most important rights which the defendant has, and it is recognized as such in every State in the Union. Now, sir, is it not right to give the accused the right of compulsory process to obtain witnesses in his behalf? Are we to depend on the general principle for that right? It seems to me that this is the very essence of the rights of accused persons, and they ought by all means to have a place in the Constitution. If we are to leave out this matter we may as well leave out the whole section. The Federal Constitution provides that the accused shall be confronted with his witnesses, and if it was considered necessary to put it in there, it certainly cannot be held to be immaterial in our State Constitution. There has never been any inconvenience resulting from it. It has found a place in pretty much all the State Constitutions—perhaps all of them—and it does seem to me that we should preserve these rights to the accused, for we know that it is very important to have the witnesses against the accused present, so that their conduct can be seen, so that the jury can judge of the weight of their testimony. I think the amendment should be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me there is one provision of the amendment that is very important. Whether it is necessary to put it in the Constitution, I do not know, but it does seem to me that no man should be compelled to be tried for his life or liberty upon depositions, and it has been the universal rule of criminal practice, that depositions cannot be taken against the defendant. Men who are charged with crime are oftentimes poor men, and any one can see at a glance how this would work. A man is arrested here in Sacramento without money and without friends, and the prosecution proposes to take the deposition of a witness down in San Francisco, or Los Angeles, for instance, and the defendant is utterly unable to go there, or to employ counsel to appear for him, and the universal rule is that he must be confronted with his witnesses. Now, as to the objection made by the gentleman from Santa Barbara, Judge Fawcett, that it would exclude dying declarations, I do not remember now—perhaps there are others who do—a case in point.

MR. TERRY. It was in the case of the People vs. Glenn that they were admitted, I think.

MR. McFARLAND. I understand it is admissible in this State, because the Constitution does not exclude them, but there are other Constitutions that do. I am opposed, sir, in toto, to compelling a defendant to be tried upon depositions, unless he may have had the power of confronting the witnesses. I know this right has been given by the laws of the State, and I suppose it will be hereafter. I do not understand now that on a trial for felony you can introduce depositions against the defendant—I do not understand that to be the law of the State to-day, if it is I am mistaken, but it was not the last time I examined it. I do not believe you can try a man for felony upon depositions.

REPLY OF MR. FAWCETT.

MR. FAWCETT. I think the gentleman has misunderstood me. Perhaps I do not make myself plain. When I spoke of depositions I had in my mind a case where there had been a preliminary examination, and the testimony reduced to writing by question and answer. It is provided in the Amendments to the Codes of eighteen hundred and seventy-three, that in such, where the witness testifying afterwards dies, that the testimony could be introduced in evidence at the trial. The reason for that was, I suppose, that at the preliminary examination the defendant had had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, and all his rights were preserved. In that case there could be no injury done. The Legislature provided that in such cases the deposition can be used on the trial, in evidence. Now it is questionable whether that could be done under this proposed amendment. I say this plan has worked well, and I think it should be continued. This proposed amendment will defeat it entirely. There is no method by which the testimony of a dead witness can be preserved. I spoke of depositions in that sense when I used the words. I hope the amendment will not prevail. The present law works satisfactorily, and I have yet to learn of any injury being done by it to the rights of a defendant.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: In confirmation of the statement made by the gentleman, I will say, that a few weeks ago there was in the Fifteenth District Court, a criminal case of considerable importance, before Judge Dwinelle. The prisoner was confined on a charge of having murdered his own wife. The officers narrated some of the circumstances, showing it to have been a most brutal and fiendish murder. The preliminary examination had been had, such as was referred to by the gentleman from Santa Barbara, and would have been sufficient to establish the case against the accused, but on account of some informality in preserving the evidence, it was ruled by the Court to be inadmissible. In the meantime the witness had died. Now, such cases as this frequently occur, and under this proposed amendment it will be impossible to admit these depositions. Such a doctrine would be dangerous.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke.

Lost.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I will now offer my substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 13. In criminal prosecutions, in any Court whatever, the party accused shall have the right to a speedy and public trial; to have the process of the Court to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and to appear and defend, in person and by counsel. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor be compelled in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I call attention to this, that it simply allows the party to have compulsory process. I do not know of any other clause in the Constitution where that clause is put in. It may be said that they will have compulsory process as a matter of course. This makes it a matter of law, not as a matter of course simply; it makes it compulsory upon the Courts, and this is a right which cannot be gainsaid. I think it should be there if it is anywhere. I think this is the proper place for it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. CAMPBELL. I propose the following, to be added to the section as amended, which I send up.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall have power to provide for the taking and using of depositions of witnesses in criminal cases when there is reason to believe that from any cause the witness will not attend at the trial, or may be unable to do so."

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: The reason of that amendment is simply this: There has been some doubt expressed whether the present statute upon the subject of taking depositions is constitutional, and I know that the District Attorney should always have such power. I think it is necessary, and I hope it will pass.

ARGUMENT OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: If that amendment is adopted, it will, in my opinion, be a very dangerous thing. If it had been limited to a case where the deposition had been taken of a witness on preliminary examination, and the witness had died, I would not make any objection to it; but, if I understand it rightly, it would make it possible to try a man absolutely upon depositions taken from time to time, at different places, previous to the trial. It seems to me, sir, that it would take away all safeguards and protection. Suppose a man is on a ship which runs into San Francisco, and on the arrival of the ship into port the captain may throw him into jail upon a charge of mutiny, or any other charge in the catalogue. He is a poor man, unable to give bail, unable to procure able counsel. The captain wishes to sail again, and so the prosecution takes the deposition of the sailors, and the ship, with its crew, is away again. And when the man comes to trial, he may be tried purely upon depositions, there being no witnesses present. No chance to confront the witness; no opportunity of cross-examining them. I think it is no more than reasonable and right that the testimony of the witnesses, taken in the proper manner, in accordance with law, upon a preliminary examination, should be used. But to make it possible to try a man solely on depositions, I say is not right, because, in the case of a poor man, unable to employ counsel, great injustice may be done. This amendment is dangerous; it is going too far. If the gentleman would be satisfied to modify it so as to confine it to cases where the testimony is procured and used on account of the death of the witness, I see no objection to that, because on the preliminary examination the accused has an opportunity of confronting the witnesses, and cross-examining them. It is oftentimes the case that the accused cannot afford to employ counsel, and has to accept the services of counsel appointed by the Court—young men just beginning in the practice of the law. He would therefore not be prepared to face the witnesses with counsel when these depositions are taken. In the case where the testimony of a witness is taken on the preliminary examination, and that witness dies before the trial, I think likely we can safely admit it without opening the door of danger. But to throw open the door to all classes of depositions is not wise, in my opinion; and I hope, for these reasons, that the amendment, in its present shape, may not pass. It seems to me to be dangerous.

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I think the gentleman hardly comprehends the scope and purpose of the amendment which I have offered. It leaves to the Legislature the duty of throwing the proper safeguards around the taking of testimony in such cases. And I think the Legislature can be safely trusted to that extent. Now we have an immense number of cases, with our migratory population, where men come to the city to-day, and want to transact their business and go to their homes to-morrow. They come from the neighboring States of Nevada and Oregon, and from remote parts of this State, and it is difficult to get them at the trial without imprisoning them. The result is that justice often is defeated, because all that class of migratory persons are glad to get out of the way, and there is no way of securing their testimony unless they are thrown into jail. The prosecuting officers have not felt themselves safe in relying upon any section which has been enacted upon that subject, for the reason that they fear it will conflict with the Constitution. Now this merely leaves this matter to be regulated by the Legislature; it does not propose any precise system that shall be adopted, but leaves it where it should be left, to the legislative wisdom to determine the details. It is barely possible that such cases may arise as were alluded to by the gentleman from Mariposa, Mr. Jones. But such cases are decidedly improbable, and where an attempt is made to pile up depositions by any fraud such as that, I think it is safe to say that the jury would look at the matter in its true light, and regard the depositions as of no more force than so much waste paper. I think this amendment is really necessary in order to make the administration of our criminal law effective and prevent the defeat of justice. Take that class of crimes in San Francisco, swindling games of all kind, banking games, strap games, etc., by which strangers are often robbed. They either have to be put in jail for several months, or the criminal cannot be punished, for many times they would rather lose their property than go to the expense of staying, or of making another trip. That is the actual result of it. I believe the Legislature can frame a law which will be applicable to cases of that kind without endangering the rights of accused persons.

THE CHAIRMAN: The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Adopted.

MR. MILLS. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word counsel, 'and to have a jury selected from the district, county or township in which the crime is charged to have been committed, unless the venue be changed as provided by law.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order. The committee have adopted a substitute for that. The question is now on the amendment of the Judiciary Committee as amended in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary will read the section as it now stands, with the amendments adopted.

THE SECRETARY read:

Sec. 13. In criminal prosecutions, in any Court whatever, the party accused shall have the right to a speedy and public trial; to have the process of the Court to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and to appear and defend, in person and by counsel. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. The Legislature shall have the power to provide for the taking and using of depositions of witnesses in criminal cases, when there is reason to believe that from any cause the witness will not attend at the trial, or may be unable to do so.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section fourteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

Sec. 14. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation being first made to, or paid into Court for, the owner.

MR. HALE. I desire to make an amendment to section thirteen.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is too late. The committee have adopted it as amended.

MR. HALE. I ask leave of the committee.

"Object," "object."

MR. BLACKMER. I move that the committee now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. I offer an amendment to section fourteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

"And no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money to the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley.

MR. DUDLEY. Mr. Chairman: It has been a rule of the past that when damages were assessed for a right of way, to allow the prospective advantages to offset the damages. There is something unjust in permitting corporations to take for their own use the property of individuals, without rendering just and fair compensation therefor. They may run across thousands of acres of land, and ruin it, leaving the owners absolutely paupers. I hope the Convention will adopt this amendment.

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman is entirely in error in his statement of the law.

MR. DUDLEY. I stated the proposition, I did not pretend to state the law.

MR. BARNES. There was formerly a statute, the Act of eighteen hundred and fifty-one, as amended in eighteen hundred and sixty-two, in reference to this matter. Afterwards the principles of eminent domain were so stated that in no event could the land be taken without being paid for. Then you can proceed to assess the damages to that portion of the land not taken, and against that class of damages you can offset the benefits derived by the owner of the tract, but in no event can the land be taken without it is paid for at its full cash value. The damages and benefits form entirely different subjects.

MR. LAINE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

The Convention took a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and a quorum present.

CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: At the request of several gentlemen who will be obliged to leave to-morrow, I move that the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal be made the special order for Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, to take precedence over all other matter.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I shall oppose any special orders by this Convention, for this reason: In order to do any work in this Convention the members must stay here and not be away every Friday, Saturday, and Monday, as they do when special orders are made. I have seen enough of it. Whenever a special order is made these men go away and leave us here. We have been here now forty-four days. The reasons of our coming here were to amend our Constitution in relation to corporations, in relation to taxation, in relation to the judicial system, and in relation to the legislative department. We have not reached them. We have wasted the time and passed it all away on the Bill of Rights, and it is not finished yet. We have had special orders, and postponements, and delays, week after week, and have not touched the actual work that we came here to do. The people who voted for the Constitutional Convention demand of every member that we should oppose further delay, and see that no special orders are made.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I am rather amused at the enthusiasm exhibited by the gentleman from El Dorado, when I consider that this is already a special order, and there are other matters that can come up. I will say to the gentleman that I am not going away. I will be here ready to attend to it. This motion was made for the reason that it was considered by a great many of the friends of business—if I may use the term—those who desire to advance the business of this Convention, that we ought to have a full house when this important subject is taken up. The fact is that there will not be a full house to-morrow when this report will probably be reached. That is the fact. They will not be here. Now it is important that a matter of such grave importance should be considered by a full Convention, and I therefore hope that it will be made the special order for Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal. So far as I am personally concerned, I am ready to take it up now, but because the gentleman from El Dorado will be here, and because he hates to make the matter a special order, does not keep people here.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to this thing of special order for a day in the future. I have seen how this has worked before. We are told that certain gentlemen are going to be away, or will not be here. Do we expect the great business of this house to be carried on to perfection by a class of men, who are so exceedingly negligent that they will go away when they know that there is business of importance before the house. It is urged that these men are going to be away; that though there is important business before this body, and matters that they are expected to participate in, yet they will leave; and in view of this we must put it off until they happen to be here to suit their convenience. That is substantially the position, and the gentleman from San Francisco can see it as plain as any of the rest of us. The class of men who will be away are not the men to be depended upon in the great work of this Convention. I am in hopes that the members will not go, and that they will stay here and attend to business. It is necessary that we should, or else the one hundred days will be out and no Constitution perfected. If they will go let such gentlemen depart, and if there are some gentlemen indolent and others careless and will leave, let them leave, but let the true and faithful remain here and work regardless of the negligence of others.

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco. Mr. Chairman: Just about one week ago the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, made a report of some very important amendments to the Constitution—exceedingly important. Probably this Convention has no business before it of greater importance that what is involved in the recommendations of that committee. This was printed and laid upon our desks, if I recollect, on Saturday last, less than a week ago. Every day this week gentlemen have been engaged in discussing the Bill of Rights, and every night if they have been doing what I have been doing, they have been sitting on committees. Now, I would like to know what gentlemen are ready to take up so important a question. I, for one, am not, and I have probably got about as much good hard work in me as any other man of my weight. I have been working every day in the house and at nights in the Committee on Judiciary. I take it for granted that every other gentleman has been working too. I do not believe that a crude and hasty discussion here is going to advance business at all. We had better make haste slowly. I do not think that when gentlemen are working upon committees, or are at work in the examination of a report that is to come up, are neglecting their business here. I know that the best part of the business of the Convention is done when it is not in session. Very little of the work of this Convention is done in the sessions of the Convention. We came here to debate questions and present what we have prepared outside of the house, and it is a very great mistake to suppose that because gentlemen do not answer roll call that they are neglecting business. Most of them study propositions outside of the house. I do not think this Convention is going to advance business by the discussion of any hasty and inconsidered ideas. I am in favor of the postponement because I think the gentlemen will be better prepared to discuss and decide the question if the postponement is made.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I am aware that there has been work in the committee; but at the rate we have proceeded it will probably take three or four weeks to dispose of this report of the Committee on Corporations. We can commence the discussion of that question whenever it appears on our file. We can take it up and we can proceed with it section by section, and we can examine it better here where we can consult together. After we amend it and discuss it for about three or four weeks, we may finally act upon the report of the Committee on Corporations. I am in favor of proceeding without delay or further postponement. It will take three or four weeks to dispose of it any way.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, that the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal be made the special order for Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, to take precedence over all other matters.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. Larkin, Barbour, Larue, Stedman, and Gorman.

AMENDMENTS TO RULES.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: A few days ago I made a motion to amend rule twenty-four, simply to the effect that where the ayes and noes are demanded, the names of the gentlemen making the demand shall be entered upon the minutes. I move to take it up now.

Carried.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: The rule now requires that "on all motions whatsoever the President shall take the sense of the Convention by ayes and noes, provided five members present shall so require." Now, my amendment is simply to add after the word "require," the words "whose names shall be entered upon the minutes." There is a great deal of time expended in calling the ayes and noes here; and if gentlemen think enough of a matter to demand the ayes and noes, they ought to be willing to have their names go into the Journal as having made the demand. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. NOEL. Mr. Chairman: In accordance with previous notice, I

Digitized by Google

now move to amend the rules by striking out in the Standing Rules rule seventy-one, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

RULE SEVENTY-ONE.

In all cases where propositions or resolutions embodying matters proposed to be introduced into the Constitution are printed, it must be by a majority vote of the Convention; but reports of standing committees shall be printed without any vote being had.

MR. HAGER. I do not think any one understands the proposition. I have not heard it read.

THE SECRETARY read the proposed amendment as above.

MR. McCALLUM. I like that rule very well except the last clause of it. I noticed that we have the reports of committees printed twice. Where it is desired to print the report of a committee separately we can do it, but as it is, gentlemen will notice that the reports of committees are duplicated by being printed in the Journal. I move to strike out that last clause, "but reports of standing committees shall be printed without any vote being had." We can order them printed when we desire to. These things are printed twice now. The rule does not need to say anything upon that proposition. They will be printed in the Journal as a matter of course.

MR. NOEL. I accept the amendment.

MR. HUESTIS. Inasmuch as that is my notice and my proposed change of the rule, I also accept the amendment.

MR. WYATT. Inasmuch as Mr. Huestis claims the parentage of that resolution, and inasmuch as he called it up the other day and it was voted down by the Convention, I hope the Convention will not pass that in the style it is brought here. If Mr. Noel is willing to father the resolution he may do so, but I do not want Mr. Huestis to stand godfather to a child that has already been buried. [Laughter.]

The amendment was adopted on a division by a vote of sixty-three ayes to fifty-five noes.

THE REPORT ON CORPORATIONS.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I move that there be ordered printed two hundred and forty extra copies of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. Gentlemen are receiving letters from lawyers and other gentlemen all over the State to get copies of that report and the supply is exhausted. I am out myself. I have sent one away and I cannot get another. I suppose there are many gentlemen in the same fix.

MR. WYATT. I move a thousand copies as an amendment.

MR. CONDON. Forty thousand.

MR. AYERS. Nine hundred and sixty.

MR. ESTEE. Four hundred and eighty.

MR. EDGERTON. I accept the amendment making it four hundred and eighty—that four hundred and eighty extra copies of number four hundred and forty-four be printed.

The motion prevailed.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to take into consideration the remainder of the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the section as reported by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 14. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into Court for the owner.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to section fourteen, offered by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley. The gentleman from Solano moves to amend by adding the following: "And no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money, to the owner irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law."

REMARKS OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer one word upon that matter before the vote is taken. The only idea in the amendment is simply this, that damages shall be assessed and paid irrespective of the benefits that may be supposed to accrue to property because of any proposed improvement. It was stated just before the recess that the present law prevented the offsetting of the value of land by prospective damages. Undoubtedly that is correct. But it has been the rule, and I presume that it is yet the rule, that damages outside of the value of real estate condemned, damages arising from the surveys run, or from cutting a farm into irregular shape, are assessed by the offset prospective benefits which will accrue to that property. In this there is very little of justice. The whole community, in the case of a railroad, for instance, are equally benefited with the person who is suffering, and there is no good reason why one man should be compelled to suffer damage to his property for the benefit of a whole community.

Now it was urged here before dinner that the Courts had already construed this matter, and we were requested to let it alone and not interfere with it. The amendment reported even by the Committee on Judiciary is different from the old clause, which is the last clause in section eight of the Bill of Rights in the old Constitution. That is, the ideas are expressed in a greater number of words. Being a change of course it will be subject to a reconstruction by the Courts. It must be borne in mind that we are engaged in manufacturing a new Constitution, which will involve the passage of new laws, and will require a construction by the Courts on these new laws. I do not think that such reasoning as that will lie against this amendment.

Under the law which was passed, as I understood the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, in eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and what remained upon the statute book until eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, it was the rule, or at least it was the practice, particularly on the California Pacific road, to offset the entire damages by the supposed prospective benefits. Now, if under the old Constitution such an act was passed and was in force, unless it is prohibited, there is a possibility of the reënactment of such a law and the reëstablishment of such a rule of construction. I submit that there is that possibility, and I ask the attention of members of the Convention to this matter, particularly those who are residents of the agricultural districts, and are liable in the future to be damaged in this way. It must be borne in mind that, as land becomes more valuable, as it is more generally taken up and cultivated, and as the railroads increase, they can not be run across the country without doing very material damage; without severing farms into irregular shape; without separating buildings and destroying orchards, and there is no justice in permitting the general advantages accruing to the community to offset that class of damages.

SPEECH OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: The provision recommended by the Committee on Judiciary is as follows: "Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into Court for the owner." This is a subject that has been very frequently before the Legislature in this State, and it has been very frequently before the Supreme Court of the State for adjudication. It has been a very vexed question, and the rule in regard to it has, until lately, been a very shifting one. But, finally, a system has been perfected—I say that because I so think in regard to it—a system has been adjusted to the Constitution, or that clause of the Constitution as it now exists; and this only modifies that clause by the insertion of the word "first," at the suggestion of the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, so that it reads "compensation first made to or paid into Court," etc.

Now, sir, it will be well enough to examine this system briefly, as it is now established, to see whether any change should be made in the Constitution, as it now stands, but the simple amendment made by the Judiciary Committee. The rule as to the compensation for the condemnation of land is as follows:

"The Court, jury, or referee must hear such legal testimony as may be offered by any of the parties to the proceedings, and thereupon must ascertain and assess:

"1. The value of the property sought to be condemned, and all improvements thereon pertaining to the realty, and of each and every separate estate or interest therein; if it consists of different parcels, the value of each parcel and each estate or interest therein shall be assessed."

We have got thus far the compensation for a thing taken—a thing taken out of the ownership, possession, and control of the individual and surrendered to a public use—no matter what it is. It may not be a railroad bed that is the thing taken under the exercise of the right of eminent domain. The whole value of the thing has to be paid independent of any considerations of benefit resulting to an adjoining property.

"2. If the property sought to be condemned constitutes only a part of a large parcel, the damage which will accrue to the portion not sought to be condemned, by reason of its severance from the portion sought to be condemned, and the construction of the improvement in the manner proposed by the plaintiff."

That is, if it is a part of a thing, the remainder of which is left in the ownership and fee—the control and possession of the owner then that is to be considered in the manner indicated in the section I have read.

"3. Separately, how much the portion not sought to be condemned, and each estate, or interest therein, will be benefited, if at all, by the construction of the improvement proposed by the plaintiff; and if the benefit shall be equal to the damages assessed, under subdivision two, the owner of the parcel shall be allowed no compensation except the value of the portion taken; but if the benefit shall be less than the damages so assessed, the former shall be deducted from the latter, and the remainder shall be the only damages allowed in addition to the value."

Let us see a moment as to the flexibility of this rule. A railroad company desires to lay its track right between a large house on the one side and a man's barns and granaries, a couple of hundred yards distant, on the other. Neither the house nor barns are taken, but only the land between, but the whole value is paid for. Now, it would be unjust not to pay these secondary damages in that case, and these damages are secured to the owner of the property. But take this case, where a man has got a tract of land, two hundred and fifty acres perhaps, and you want to lay it out into streets, and the very prospect of laying it out into streets increases the value of the property five, ten, or fifteen per cent., and makes a man rich in a night, before he knows it, ought he to be paid for any damages in such a case as that? That is the flexibility of this rule. My friend from Solano must take into consideration the fact that in the case of a company it is the agent of the public, the agent of the State, because that power resides in the State alone. It is the very highest prerogative of any government to walk into a man's land and take his property. It is not railroad companies alone that are affected by this rule. It affects every swamp land district, every county or municipality that desires to open roads or streets, and every community that is interested in the construction of public works. The provisions of the law as it now stands have been adjusted to the decisions of the Supreme Court, not only in this State but in other States, and are approved by the writers on Constitutional Limitations and Law, like Sedgwick and Cooley.

Now let us see about the Act that was passed last winter. In the first place the citizen here has a privilege which so far as I am advised is not enjoyed by the citizens of any other State. I know that in a large majority of the States they do not give the citizen the right to a jury in these cases. It is a great principle in this country that the rights of a private individual must always yield to the rights of the public. In this State a person has the right of trial by jury, and as soon as a verdict is rendered the Court makes an order that the money which the jury awards shall be paid into Court, and such sum as in the discretion of the Court may be required to answer to further damages, if upon a new trial being granted by the Supreme Court, they should be awarded. This money is to be paid into Court for the use of the individual. He has a right to withdraw it, reserving his right to proceed on motion for a new trial. If he does not take it the corporation has to keep that deposit good. If it is lost, the corporation has to make that deposit good before it can take that property. If he desires to appeal to the Supreme Court, it has to be paid into the State Treasury and kept for him. I submit that the system as it is adjusted to the decisions of the Supreme Court under that clause of the Constitution as it now stands, is as judicious, safe, and guarded, as it can possibly be made for the citizen, and it does not need any handling by this Convention.

Mr. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: If this matter refers to municipal corporations as the gentleman says it probably might need some amendment, and I ask the privilege of amending my amendment by inserting after the word "corporation," I think in the second line, between the words "corporation" and "until," the words "other than municipal," so that it will read: "And no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money to the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will have leave to make that amendment. Hearing none, it is so ordered.

Mr. WATERS. Is there more than one amendment now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. Two.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Solano will prevail. Everybody knows that the provision read from the Practice Act by the gentleman from Sacramento was a provision adopted under the influence and in the interests of the railroad. And everybody knows, also, that this provision of deducting the improvements from the value of the property has been abused and always will be abused in the interests of large and wealthy corporations. I hope the citizen will be protected from this abuse by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Solano.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I say, sir, and I know whereof I speak, that the Act referred to was passed against the interests of the railroad company and I know they opposed it. And I know that it was passed under the influence of certain gentlemen interested in swamp land matters, and other gentlemen interested in other public enterprises. The Supreme Court decided these questions right against the corporations from beginning to end. The money was to be paid or deposited at the end of a verdict by the jury, and even then, under the order of the Court, they must deposit such additional sum as might be required to cover any additional damages. This law was adjusted to the decision of the Supreme Court. Now, sir, I know these facts.

REMARKS OF MR. WATERS.

Mr. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: As the history of this eminent domain bill, as it is called, has been asserted by one member to be one way and by another member to be another way, it appears to me to be pardonable in me to state what the history of that bill is. In the first place the eminent domain law, as you might call it, as it stood prior to this last act, was such as to allow the corporation seeking to exercise this right to file a bond in the District Court, and upon that to take the property of a citizen and fight him about the compensation afterwards. A suit under that act was carried to the Supreme Court, and it was held to be unconstitutional. When the last Legislature met a bill was handed to a Mr. Young, who then represented Santa Cruz county in the lower house of the Legislature, which he introduced, seeking to get over that difficulty. I forget the exact phraseology of that bill, but I think it authorized the payment of the money into Court, as the Supreme Court, in the case to which I refer, had said that a mere bond could not be considered sufficient security, as the bondsmen might flee the State or get out of its jurisdiction. Secondly, the bill handed to Mr. Young to introduce had a provision that the money might be paid into the State Treasury and the bond of the State Treasurer held good for it. That bill was reported back from the Judiciary Committee, and Mr. Young, becoming somewhat suspicious about it, one day asked leave to withdraw the bill, mentioning it by number and not by title. Of course he got leave to withdraw it. The next day the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee introduced a bill containing another amendment to Mr. Young's section. That went to the Judiciary Committee, and various distinguished gentlemen representing corporations, and others interested in the right of eminent domain, came before the committee and argued very fully this question, and also various gentlemen who opposed that scheme. Now, this bill that is upon the statute books is a forced compromise, and I think, in the main, is a very good one, or as near right as you can get it where strong powers are brought to bear upon the Legislature. I considered it at the time a very fair compromise measure. There is one thing in it that I do not like. If the man whose property is taken concludes to contest the matter as to whether the taking is for a public use, he must leave the money on deposit, for if, under the bill, he takes an appeal, after taking the money, he waives everything else except the measure of damages. Now, with that one exception, the bill is a good one as it stands.

Mr. EDGERTON. Is the gentleman aware that the very first section provides that the Judge shall order an additional sum to be paid into Court to cover further damages?

Mr. WATERS. The gentleman knows that if a man desires to get anything for his property in the meantime, while the corporation is using it, he must relinquish that question as to whether it is a public use or not. In other words, if the Legislature was to say that the right to take land upon which to dump tailings was a public use, and was to pass a law to that effect, the party could come into Court and defend that it was not a public use. If the company could put up money enough in the Court, and the Judge of the District Court should hold that it was a public use, the company could cover that farm five hundred feet deep with tailings, if it chose, and the farmer, if he had not wit enough to take his appeal, and leave the money in Court where it was placed for him, would have the satisfaction, at the end, to have his farm with an additional territory above it. I think that principle is wrong. In order to have his right to an appeal he should not be compelled to waive that question as to whether it is a public use or not. With that one exception, I say that the law passed last Winter is a good one. I contended, last Winter, that the Supreme Court had decided against the argument of those gentlemen who were in favor of the first bill proposed. I contended that the Supreme Court had adjudged that the preliminary taking is a taking in the sense of the law, and that compensation should be simultaneous with the preliminary taking. In order to remove any doubt, I propose to add after the word "or," in the amendment offered by the Judiciary Committee, and before the word "paid," the words "ascertained and," so that it will read: "Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made to or ascertained and paid into Court for the owner." If you leave it as it is, it might be open to the construction by the Courts and by the Legislature, that if the money paid into Court will be in the nature of security which may remain there for years, and the party have no right to draw it out. Before the taking is had the compensation should be ascertained and paid into Court, and the money should lie there subject to the order of the owner, and not merely as a security. With that amendment I think it is a very good section now. I think the position as to the damages is correctly stated by Mr. Edgerton. I have no factious fight to make upon this. I think we ought to be satisfied if we can get this matter good enough without having an extreme matter put into the Constitution.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I have but one additional word, that is as to the last amendment. I do not care anything about it. I do not think it would make it any stronger or any weaker. As to this question of fact I do not know anything of the compromise the gentleman refers to. I do know this, that this law—this amendment to the Code that I have read—was made by gentlemen not connected in any way with a corporation. They were connected with large tracts of territory that had been flooded by the Sacramento River. A large number of them came here attempting to get legislation through, providing for the construction of canals, to straighten the Sacramento River, and to relieve the swamp land districts; and these gentlemen concocted this law; these gentlemen pressed it; and these gentlemen waited upon the Executive of the State and brought him to give his approval of the bill.

SPEECH OF MR. BARNES.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: This subject of eminent domain is one of paramount interest, and from a professional standpoint, having been engaged in some of the heavy litigation upon that subject, I will invite the attention of the committee very briefly to the history of this right of eminent domain in this State. In the year eighteen hundred and sixty-one, when the amended railroad Act was passed, and long before the people had felt the oppression and difficulties that have grown up out of the management of the railroad system in this State, the people were very lenient to railroad corporations. They were not only lenient, but they laid down everything they had before them. They sought to encourage their construction in every mode in which they could express themselves by legislation. You will see by reference to the Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-one—"an Act to provide for the incorporation of railroad companies and the management of the affairs thereof, and other matters relating thereto," approved May twentieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-one—and it will be found in the statutes of that year, page six hundred and seven, that in section twenty-two of this Act it was provided:

"Any railroad company, organized under the provisions of this Act, or any railroad company now organized under the laws of this State, which shall accept the provisions of this Act, as herein provided, is hereby authorized to enter upon any land for the purpose of surveying the line of its proposed railroad, the company being responsible for any damage occasioned by such entry; and such company is also authorized to acquire, purchase, and hold, any real estate, or any right, title, or interest therein, which may be necessary or proper for the purpose of the construction or maintenance of the track or tracks, water stations, depots, machine or workshops, turn-tables, or other building or structure, necessary for such railroad; but such company shall not hold such real estate, or any right, title, or interest therein, acquired or used solely or mainly for the construction or maintenance of the track or tracks of said railroad beyond the time of the legal existence of said company, nor after the location of said track or tracks has been changed therefrom, nor after the said company shall have failed, or ceased to use the same, for the maintenance of such track, for the space of five years consecutively; but in each of such cases, the said real estate, and all the right, title, and interest therein, shall revert to the person or persons, and his or their assigns, from whom the same was acquired by said company."

Special proceedings were provided in that Act, under which land might be condemned. It is simply provided that a petition should be filed in the County Clerk's office setting forth the estate sought to be condemned, and its extent, the names of the persons interested in the land and the nature of their interests, and the Court thereupon should fix a time for the hearing of the petition, and the owner should be notified, and notice of the hearing should be given by publication. The parties owning the land were permitted to make such answer as they could to the petition in the matter of condemnation. Then Commissioners were appointed to fix the value of the lands sought to be condemned. Section thirty says:

"The said Commissioners shall proceed to view the several tracts of land, as ordered by said Court, or Judge, and shall hear the allegations and proofs of said parties, and shall ascertain and assess the compensation for the land sought to be appropriated, to be paid by said company to the person or persons, having or holding any right, title, or interest in or to each of the several tracts of land."

Now, here comes the provision to which the gentleman from Solano objects, and I think with great reason—

"And in ascertaining and assessing such compensation, they shall take into consideration and make allowance for any benefit, or advantage, that in their opinion will accrue to such person or persons, by reason of the construction of the railroad as proposed by said company."

It provided, also, for a new trial, and for the confirmation of the reports. And that—

"Upon the report of the Commissioners being filed for record, as above provided for, and upon the payment, or tender, of the compensation and costs, as prescribed in this Act, the real estate, or the right, title, or interest therein described in such report, shall be and become the property of said company for the purposes of its incorporation, and shall be deemed to be acquired for, and appropriated to, a public use."

The effect of that statute, Mr. Chairman, was simply this: that any railroad company, after it had determined upon the line upon which it would run, and complied with the provisions of the statute in respect to the filing of the proper papers, might enter upon and take possession of any man's land they saw fit, and while still being in the possession of it have a proceeding to condemn it, and Commissioners appointed upon whose judgment the land should be paid for. But the Commissioners were allowed to take into account the benefit the party was to derive from it, and if they thought he got a greater benefit than the value of the land amounted to, the railroad paid him nothing for his land, and it was considered an act of grace that they did not require him to pay for the additional benefit obtained. That law continued until the adoption of title seven of the Code of Civil Procedure. Eminent domain is there defined as follows:

"Eminent domain is the right of the people or Government to take private property for public use. This right may be exercised in the manner provided in this title."

We all know that the right of eminent domain is a right as old as government. I believe it was either Cæsar or Nero in Rome that undertook to take the ground of a private citizen for his private garden. That brought about revolution. It is a right that is imported here from monarchical countries. In America the Legislature, instead of exercising the right itself for strictly public purposes, has granted to these quasi public corporations the right to exercise it as an agency of the State. That right is conferred upon railway corporations in the discretion of the Legislature, and they provide the means by which that right may be exercised. It provided, in fact, for Commissioners, and compelled the party to resort to a judicial proceeding in the Courts of the land. The corporation seeking the condemnation of a man's land commenced a suit, and it must all be tried according to the forms of law and under the safeguards which the law provided, and after providing what shall be done, as was stated by the gentleman from Sacramento, they made this change in the railroad law. Instead of the Court being allowed to offset the benefit against the value of the land, the law declared that in any event the value of the land, as proven, must be paid. They paid for what they got. Then the Court was directed that—

"If the property sought to be condemned constitutes only a part of a large parcel, the damages which will accrue to the portion not sought to be condemned, by reason of its severance from the portion sought to be condemned, and the construction of the improvement in the manner proposed by the plaintiff."

In other words, they direct the Court to consider what a man suffers by reason of his land being cut up into inconvenient shapes; by taking a fair open field where plowing and agricultural work would be done and diagonally cutting it by a railway, so that a man instead of having a fair field to plow would have it divided into an irregular and inconvenient shape, by the railway running through his land in such a way as to divide his upland from the lowland so that it ceased to be valuable for pasture, and diminished its value. All these things were taken into consideration by this section. These were the two elements against the corporation: first, the value of the land; and second, the damages the parties sustained by reason of the severance. Then the Court was directed to take into account how much the property remaining was benefited by the construction of the improvement, and if the benefits should be equal to the damages he should have no damages. If the benefit was less he should have the difference, but in no case was the property owner required to pay anything for the blessing of a railroad passing through his property. Then they also required the Court to find out how much the fences would cost. The company might elect to build the fences and cattle guards and make proper crossings, and that forms an element also in the judgment. If the company give a bond they need not pay the cost of the fences. They give a bond in double the valuation of the fences, cattle guards, etc., and if they built the fences within three years they need not pay the money.

But in connection with this was the proposition that "at any time after the service of the summons"—and there was the injustice of it—"the Court may authorize the plaintiff, if already in possession, to continue therein; and if not, then to take possession of and use the property during the pendency and until the final conclusion of such proceedings, and may stay all actions and proceedings against the plaintiff on account thereof; but the plaintiff must give security, to be approved by such Court or Judge, to pay, as well the compensation in that behalf, when ascertained, all damages which may be sustained by the defendant, if for any cause the property shall not be finally taken for public use."

It fell to my lot to contest the constitutionality of that provision in this State. It was in the case of the Spring Valley Waterworks vs. the San Mateo Waterworks. Under that statute the Judge of one of our Courts made an order allowing the plaintiff to go into possession of property sought to be condemned, upon filing a bond in a very small amount. He affirmed the constitutionality of the act, and I invited him to the Supreme Court upon a petition for a writ of review. It is to be found in the fiftieth volumne of California Reports, the case of the San Mateo Waterworks vs. the Judge of the Twelfth District Court. I read from the syllabus:

"After summons had been served on the defendant, the Court made an ex parte order, upon the application of the plaintiff, permitting the plaintiff to take possession of and use the land during the pendency of the proceedings, upon executing a bond in the sum of ten thousand dollars, for the payment to the defendant of the compensation to be ascertained, and also for the payment of damage if the property was not finally taken. This was on application to the Supreme Court to review the order as in excess of jurisdiction."

Now, by the Court:

"The taking in this case amounts to a taking of private property for public use in the sense in which that phrase is used in the Constitution, and can only be effected upon the conditions prescribed in the Constitution—that is, upon just compensation being simultaneously made. Order annulled."

They followed that up with another case, Sanborn vs. Belden, in the fifty-first of California Reports. Gentlemen will find it on page two hundred and sixty-six of that volume. It was a railroad case, where the Santa Cruz Railroad Company commenced proceedings in the Twentieth District Court, County of Santa Cruz, to condemn certain lands of Sanborn and others for the use of its road. After summons had been served, the Court made an order, under section one thousand two hundred and fifty-four of the Code of Civil Procedure, authorizing the company to take possession of and use the land sought to be condemned until the final conclusion of the proceedings, upon giving bonds to pay damages. The bonds were given and approved, and a writ of assistance issued out of the Court to the Sheriff, who, by virtue thereof, placed the Railroad Company in possession of the land. The owners of the land thereupon obtained a writ to have the proceedings certified to the Supreme Court for review. Now the Court says:

"It is not necessary, in this case, to decide whether, under the Constitution of California, it is essential to the validity of a law for the exercise of eminent domain (when the property is taken directly by the State, or by a municipal corporation by State authority) that it should provide for tender of pecuniary compensation before actual taking.

"When property is taken by a private corporation, which, although for this purpose it is regarded as the agent of the State, appropriates it as well for the benefit and profit of the members of the corporation as for the public use, it is at least essential that an adequate fund (in the custody of an agent of the public other than the corporation or its officers) be provided, from which the owner of the property can certainly obtain compensation. As remarked by Mr. Justice Cooley: 'It is not competent to deprive him (the citizen) of his property, and turn him over to an action at law against a corporation, which may or may not prove responsible, and to a judgment of uncertain efficacy.' (Con. Lim. 562.)

"We are satisfied that wise policy and sound constitutional principles require us to hold that a bond, executed by sureties who may be supposed to be, or who in fact may be, responsible, when the preliminary order is made, does not constitute a certain and adequate compensation.

"If the corporation has acted on the order of the District Judge, the property of the petitioners has been actually taken. (San Mateo Water Co. v. Sharpstein, 50 Cal. 284.)

"If it be competent to the Legislature to declare that a mere bond shall constitute compensation upon a taking at the commencement of the condemnation proceedings, it might also declare that such bonds should constitute compensation upon the final taking—which would operate a plain violation of the provisions of the Constitution restraining the exercise of eminent domain."

They then put the corporations in this fix. They could no longer march upon a man's land and go to work to construct their railway; break up his farm, march down his crops, and make their way through by giving him a bond; but when they came to the line of a party's property there they had to stop and wait until the Court had determined what they should pay, under this provision of the statute, and pay it before they got through. These cases proceeded in that way, and it was found that notwithstanding a man's neighbors came forward and testified in favor of the owner of the land, at least putting what might be called a fair valuation on the land, and the company was willing to pay that price, after the case was tried and the judgment rendered and the damages assessed, there were still questions upon which a party might appeal and take it to the Supreme Court, and prevent a needed public improvement from being advanced as it should be. In other words a man could lie like a hog as against the rights of all his neighbors, as against the right of every farmer, as against the right of every traveler, and could stop them until he could take it up to the Supreme Court and could make it the means of extorting more money than the Courts or the jury of his own county in their wildest and most generous extravagance could see fit to give him. The Legislature was again resorted to, and it was provided that:

"At any time after trial by jury and judgment entered upon their verdict, or pending an appeal from the judgment to the Supreme Court, whenever the plaintiff shall have paid into Court, for the defendant, the full amount of the judgment, and such further sum as may be required by the Court, or Judge thereof at chambers, as a fund to pay any further damages and costs that may be recovered in said action, as well as all damages that may be sustained by the defendant. If, for any cause, the property shall not be finally taken for public use, the District Court in which the action was tried, or the Judge thereof at chambers, may, upon notice of not less than ten days, authorize the plaintiff, if already in possession, to continue therein, and if not, then to take possession of and use the property during the pendency of and until the final conclusion of the litigation, and may, if necessary, stay all actions and proceedings against the plaintiff on account thereof. The defendant, who is entitled to the money paid into Court for him upon any judgment, shall be entitled to demand and receive the same at any time thereafter, upon obtaining an order of the Court, or Judge thereof at chambers. It shall be the duty of the Court, or Judge, upon application being made by such defendant, to order and direct that the money so paid into the Court for him, be delivered to him upon his filing a satisfaction for the judgment, or upon filing a receipt therefor, and on abandonment of all defenses to the action, except as to the amount of damages that he may be entitled to in the event that a new trial shall be granted. A payment to the defendant, as aforesaid, shall be held to be an abandonment, by such defendant, of all defenses interposed by him, excepting his claim for further compensation. In ascertaining the amount to be paid into Court, the Court, or Judge thereof at chambers, shall take care that the same be sufficient and adequate. The payment of the money into Court, as hereinbefore provided for, shall not discharge the plaintiff from liability to keep the said fund full and without diminution; but such money shall be and remain, as to all accidents, defalcations, or other contingencies—as between the parties to the proceedings—at the risk of the plaintiff, and shall so remain until the amount of the compensation or damages is finally settled by judicial determination, and until the Court awards the money, or such part thereof as shall be determined upon, to the defendant, and until he is authorized or required by rule of Court to take it. If, for any reason, the money shall at any time be lost, or otherwise abstracted, or withdrawn through no fault of the defendant, the Court shall require the plaintiff to make and keep the sum good at all times until the litigation is finally brought to an end, and until paid over or made payable to the defendant by order of Court, as above provided. The Court, or the Judge thereof at chambers, shall order the money to be deposited in the State treasury, and it shall be the duty of the State Treasurer to receive all such moneys, duly receipt for and safely keep the same in a special fund, to be entered on his books as a condemnation fund for such purpose, and for such duty he shall be liable to the State upon his official bond. The State Treasurer shall pay out such money, so deposited, in such manner and at such times as the Court, or Judge thereof at chambers, may, by order or decree, direct."

In other words, the money has to be paid into Court. The County Clerk deposits it with the State Treasurer. It does not make any difference if it is lost or stolen, the fund has to be kept good by the corporation all the while, fully and completely. Now, it seems to me that if the right of eminent domain is to be maintained at all, that there can be no fairer mode than that provided by this statute. It is, as gentlemen will see, in harmony with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the State. The Courts have infringed upon the privileges of the corporations so that they can no longer take a man's property without paying for it. They can no longer take it at their own valuation, but they must take from the jury a judgment, and if, during an appeal, they want to take it, they must go to the Judge and he shall name a further sum which shall be sufficient, in his judgment, to cover all further costs. And that is all of the right of eminent domain to be maintained, that the citizen ought to have. The early legislation was all in favor of the corporation. The later legislation acts, as it ought to act, and as I hope it will always act, in favor of the individual and against the corporation.

There are a great many purposes contemplated in this eminent domain law. The right to condemn land for the purpose of providing a deposit for the material from the mines, for canals and waterways, for a thousand purposes as necessary to agriculture and to mining as they are to any of the railroads. And when we have now, at last, after so many years, pushed this question back upon the corporations until it puts them in the position that they cannot take any man's property until they pay for it, and at its full value, I do not see why we need alter the Constitution. It may be said that the Legislature that has encroached upon the privileges of the corporations may recede from that position and put them back where they were. It may be well, and it seems to me that we ought to put in the Constitution some clause that shall epitomise and give eternal effect, in the shape of an organic declaration, to these principles laid down in this line of decisions, so that the Legislature shall not have the right to recede from the position into which they have been urged by the people. We want to see that the corporations do not get a verdict in their favor and secure the reënactment of the Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-one. That we all want to look out for. That, I am sure, I am as anxious to prevent as any gentleman on this floor. Then let us take hold of it and make sure of that law.

I do not like the idea of the gentleman from Solano, because you take the case of county roads; that is a matter in which every neighborhood in this State is interested. Now, when you go to condemn a piece of land——

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: The amendment as it now stands does not apply to the county roads, nor swamp land districts, nor streets in towns, or anything of that kind.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: That is what I am coming to. That is what I understood. There can be no doubt of this, Mr. Chairman, that any man who owns property should not, under our Constitution or under the principles of the Government under which we live, be deprived of it for any purpose or object, except upon just compensation being made. Now, the motion of the gentleman from Solano is that if a man has a farm, and a county road is put through it, he should not have pay for his land, provided that the benefit is equal to the damage. I say that in all cases the man is entitled to be paid for his property, no matter who takes it, whether it is a county or municipality seeking to condemn land for any purpose, or whether it is a railroad seeking to condemn it for its road. That is the first principle that the Constitution must look to—payment for the land; and payment in money, not promises. The principle of assessing benefits and damages seems to be somewhat misunderstood. The rule of the Courts in this State and in the other States is that the assessments of land shall not be reduced by reason of the general benefit that accrues to the country. A railway coming through any sparsely populated country must, of course, increase the value of the property. There is no question about that as a general proposition. But that is not the benefit that is meant. It is where the benefit is peculiar and especial to him, and not one shared by him in common with all the rest.

Under these decisions, and with these principles in view, there certainly cannot be any difficulty in our arriving at a proper conclusion. These principles have been established and stand upon the provisions of these Acts as construed and maintained and directed by the Supreme Court of the State, and the Constitution ought not to be amended, except that the rights of the citizen as now guarded, as against this great and growing power, should be maintained, so that never hereafter shall the State recede from this position, or place the citizen for an hour at the mercy of combinations, from whatever source they may come. I think the people of the State require it and ought to have it. The tendency of the times is towards popular rights and popular liberty, and wherever a guard can be put about it, there is where the good work here will be put in.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I would ask to have the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Solano read.

THE CHAIRMAN: The Secretary will read the amendment for information.

THE SECRETARY read:

"And no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation, other than municipal, until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money to the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law."

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the Convention will retain the section precisely as it comes from the Committee on Judiciary, and for the reasons which have been so clearly given by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes.

The rule adopted in the formation of our earlier Constitution was to confine its provisions to a general declaration of principle, leaving all that related to their execution to the Legislature. In case of simplicity of object and expression, the Constitution often executed itself, and in other cases, on account of jealousy of the legislative department, elaborate provisions were inserted providing for all the details necessary to the accomplishment of the general principle. This latter course, it seems to me, is only to be justified in case of actual necessity. It is an open attack upon and assumption of the purely legislative function. The existing statutes seem to be attempts to effectuate the promise of our present Constitution, that private property shall not be taken for public use "without just compensation" shall be made therefor. It has always seemed to me, that the statutes of eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and other years, violate, instead of executing this provision. I know the books say, that the deposit of money in Court, or perhaps, in the hands of some public officer, subject absolutely to the call of the owner of the property taken, is sufficient, and that by such deposit the compensation is made. But how the county liability, or that of some individual who has given security, is the equivalent of money, it is impossible to see. In the one case, the injured party gets his compensation—money; in the statutory case he has a right of action merely. It doubtless is the purpose of the Committee of the Judiciary to prevent such legislation in future. As to corporations other than municipal, the committee proposes to provide that the owner of the property condemned shall be compensated in money before his property is taken. As they propose the provision stands.

"Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made to, or paid into Court for, the owner."

The phrase "having been" involves the idea of a completed transaction, and the word "first" seems to add nothing to it. It, however, is there; it may add something to the precision of the idea involved, and may as well stand. The gentleman from San Bernardino now moves to insert "ascertained and." I do not see that these words change in any way the true construction of the provision into which it is proposed to insert them. They neither add to, nor take from, the force or effect of the words already used. What is the compensation spoken of? It is an ascertained sum agreed upon by the party that takes, and the party that pays, as settled and adjudged by some competent authority. The objection to this proposed amendment is, that it covers more space, creates a question of construction without any necessity therefor, and leaves the true interpretation, after it is ascertained, just what it was before the interpolation. The character and intention of this section fourteen is well worthy of further attention. For what is the compensation provided for therein given?

The old Constitution provides that "just compensation shall be made" when private property is taken for public use. Under this provision the increase in value of adjacent property belonging to the party whose land is taken, may be deducted from the value of such land, the balance being treated as the just compensation intended. That is, the party shall be made whole. This liability to pay applied to all corporations alike. This section proposes changes, not only vital in themselves, but unjust in their discriminations. The right in the owner of private property taken, is now declared to be, to pay for that taken and for damages to all other property of his which is incidentally damaged by the proposed public use. But when it comes to the question, shall the benefits resulting from such improvement be considered and deducted from the value of the land taken, and damage to other property, there is an important distinction made. The municipality, by legislative enactment, may be enabled to deduct the benefits from the sum it would otherwise have to pay, while the railroad or turnpike corporation is prevented from acquiring any such right of offset. The right of the owner is just the same in both cases—to be made whole. If the owner of the property taken has any just or moral claim to be paid, without regarding his improvements, the municipality shall so pay; if not, the railroad should not pay.

Originally, there was serious question whether railroad corporations had the right of condemnation. This right was at last judicially declared—with many wry faces—upon the sole ground that these corporations were quasi-public; that is, the use to which they devoted property was public, and to the extent of such use they were performing a part of the functions of the State, by maintaining a variety of highway. That the corporation which charges itself with the performance of a duty which the State owes its subjects can be rightfully charged with liabilities which the State does not recognize as to itself, does not seem philosophical or just. The discrimination between different classes of corporations is no more unjust than is the provision itself. A corporation runs its road along the side of a hill; on the one side the excavation leaves a bluff, or embankment; on the other, the cut is left at the grade of the road. The upper lot, or field, rendered less accessible, is damaged a hundred dollars; the lower portion is benefited a thousand dollars. The road must pay the hundred dollars, but is entitled to no recoupment for the augmentation of value which it has created. That this provision is intended to punish or penalise railroad corporations, and not to do justice, is not only apparent from the considerations which I have already stated, but the fact is made further apparent by the provision now before us relative to counties, cities, and towns. In the report of the committee having charge of those matters, it is proposed that the expense of roads and streets shall be cast upon the property benefited, however remote from the road or street to be opened. In this latter case "benefits" are set-offs against "damages." The object attained is just compensation to the citizen who is injured. The natural persons assessed are required to pay money enough, and no more, than the person whose property is taken or damaged is entitled to have. The moment, however, five persons incorporate, their liability is enlarged; not because the person to whom payment is to be made has suffered any more, or is morally entitled to more or less, but because it is thought a fit and proper exercise of governmental authority to wrongfully take a corporation's money and give it to a man who has no just claim to it. It makes, in the minds of some, a marvelous difference whose ox is gored, and whose bull it is that has offended. From these considerations, I think that the proposed section is unjust, and ought not to be approved. There is another difficulty important to be considered. There is, doubtless, an appeal to be allowed from the judgment fixing damages. This will create large delays, seriously postponing important and pressing public improvements, including streets and highways as well as railroads. Now, is it advisable to allow such appeal to have the effect of producing great inconvenience and public loss; or is it not better to allow the work to proceed upon depositing the assessed damages with the Court, leaving the corporation subject to any increase which may result from a new trial?

These questions, it seems to me, are properly subjects of legislative action, and to the Legislature they ought to be left. It is, however, useless to press this consideration. This section presents a feature quite common here—a general declaration of a principle—an attempt at inserting executory provisions but half accomplished, and leaving to the Legislature the task of finishing up the work, and of extricating, if possible, the subject from the muddle which the Constitution creates.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I would like, myself, to offer an amendment if it were possible to be done. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Solano, and for this reason. It permits precisely the very thing which we have always attempted to avoid—that is, allowing in the exercise of the eminent domain, the parties to take the property in the first instance, and then compel the other parties to sue for damages that may accrue. That ought not to be done, and I submit, in engrafting upon the organic law measures of that character, I am opposed to considering the effect that it will have upon the interests of the general public. It is well understood that the exercise of the right of eminent domain, is vastly different in its character from the established proceedings in a Court of justice, and under that state of circumstances the jury need not necessarily appraise the property. The consequence is, that if the Legislature see fit they may appoint any other tribunal to determine that question. "Due process of law," as was defined the other evening by my friend from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, had reference, as was stated, to twelve jurors—to a trial by twelve good and lawful men. I know that such has been some of the decisions. I know that among the many opinions rendered upon the subject—in a case in the Thirteenth N. Y., Wynehamer vs. The People—I believe, three or four Justices gave the opinion that it had reference to the common law jury. Now, Judge Cooley defines "due process of law" to mean "such an exertion of the powers of government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs." Now, to what class does it belong when it comes to the question of property? Unless you put it in your organic law, and in language that cannot be mistaken, the present provision you have in your Constitution, securing jury trial, will not give you a trial to fix your compensation for damages after the taking of the property. I desire to have it fixed in this identical provision that a jury trial may be had. And I desire that the jury shall determine in the first instance, the amount of compensation which any party shall be paid whose property is taken. There are none of us but want that. I am not desirous that any different rule from that which has prevailed, with reference to municipal corporations, should be adopted, but I am desirous that in every instance the jury shall determine the compensation to be paid. It is the most fatal blunder in the world to incorporate anything of that kind in a constitutional proposition. I propose to offer this amendment, if this one now pending is defeated:

"Amend section fourteen as amended by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, by adding thereto: 'And the amount of compensation shall be without rebate for benefits to accrue, and shall be first determined by a verdict of a jury, or as the parties interested shall agree.'"

There is nothing lumbering about that. That cuts to the marrow bone. It fixes your railroad companies and binds them to have the question tried before a jury. It makes one law govern all cases. I am opposed to allowing bonds to be given. I did not feel that under my duty here before this body I could sit still and permit a provision of that character to be voted upon without entering my protest against any such measure. It has been engrafted in our laws in the very teeth of the Constitution, and the Courts have gone so far even as to issue orders directing the Sheriff to put parties in possession of property under such circumstances. Of course the Supreme Court held that that could not be done under the Constitution; but it has put a great many of our private citizens to a great deal of trouble. These are the things which we seek to avoid. If there is any hardship, let these other parties undergo the hardship.

I am opposed to this amendment for the reasons I have alleged. I think it is a fatal provision to insert allowing any such things as bonds to be given and property taken in that way. I hope the amendment will be voted down, and I shall have an opportunity to present this amendment, and that it will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I did not expect, when I offered that amendment, that it was going to create so much discussion. It is admitted finally by the gentleman on my left that the rule is to offset absolute damages by supposed benefits. Now, my amendment covers that one single idea alone and no other; that is, that absolute damages shall not be set off by supposed benefits. There is no question of bonds. Neither does it enable any individual to lie in the way of any corporation in any manner that does not now exist. The amendment refers simply to corporations other than municipal. So far as swamp land districts, counties, towns, or any other municipal corporation is concerned, it does not affect them the least. The clause provides that "no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money, to the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law." That is the one idea in the amendment—simply to prevent the offsetting of absolute damages against supposed benefits. It does not affect streets or public roads. And there is this difference between a railroad and a public road. A public road is generally run at right angles, and does not cut up farms into inconvenient shapes, while railroads are the very reverse of that rule. That alone might form one reason for making a little difference. Gentlemen have sought during this discussion to mystify and lead astray gentlemen of the Convention upon this subject. They have tried to make it appear that it is all right now. It is asserted that after a good deal of trouble we have Judge-made law to cover the case. We have got the decisions of the Supreme Court. Now we are providing a new Constitution, and under that Constitution there will be new legislative enactments. For the purpose of not troubling our Judges to make law, I propose that this Constitution shall have this clause, which shall make it a law unto itself.

REMARKS OF MR. MILLS.

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: I have listened with a great deal of interest to this discussion, and it has mainly been on the question of what is compensation. Now, the law respecting the taking of private property, provides that before property can be taken, it must appear, first, "that the use to which it is to be applied is a use authorized by law; second, that the taking is necessary; third, if already appropriated to some public use, that the public use to which it is to be applied is a more necessary public use." Under that proposition, sir, the question as to the necessity of its being taken for that particular use, is made a question of law alone, and is never submitted to a jury. The right to submit that question to the jury is denied by the Courts. Whether it be necessary to take property or not, it seems to me, ought to be the first question and the main question for the jury to determine. An attempt may be made to locate a public highway across an orchard or through a man's garden, or through his door-yard. Now, should that question not be submitted to the jury? It seems to me, sir, that it should. I am in favor of the amendment. The rule has been well settled that general benefits are not to be counted, but it not infrequently happens that the damage to the land that is taken is very small while the damage to other property not taken is very large. It seems to me that this amendment places it beyond question. How can it be said that there are any other benefits than the benefit to the whole community? What particular benefit is it to a man to have a railroad run directly through his place? It seems to me that this amendment will put that question at rest and settle it.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: This right of eminent domain is perhaps the highest right exercised by government; a right under which one individual really gets the benefit of taking away the property of another without the consent of the owner. Now, if that is the highest prerogative of this goverement, it ought to be guarded, and pretty well guarded too. In framing a Constitution, we should put into it such provisions as we think will protect private rights, and the proposition of the gentleman here that it is not the proper place to guard these rights in Constitutions, is disputed by the fact that a large number of Constitutions have incorporated similar provisions. One of them has almost the words in which Mr. Dudley has proposed it. The Constitution of the State of Iowa has a provision which I will read:

"Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation first being made, or secured, to be paid to the owner thereof, as soon as the damages shall be assessed by a jury, who shall not take into consideration any advantages that may result to the said owner on account of the improvement for which it is taken."

Now, the proposition clearly stated, as I understand it, is this: The proposition first proposed to the committee amounts to this, that if the railroad company means to take half of my land, and takes it in such a way that not merely the land is taken but adjoining lands are injured, then the question will take the shape stated by Mr. Barnes. If the railroad runs between my house and my barn they pay for the acreage taken. They may also be assessed for the damage which it is to me to have a railroad between the house and barn, but they may offset against that the fact that I may derive some advantage by having the railroad so located. Now the objection to leaving the definition in the shape that the benefits may be offset against the damages, is illustrated by a case like this, which came within my personal knowledge. The railroad which runs from the City of Chicago to the City of Joliet, in condemning a right of way, had to take from a large building the ground upon which a wing of the building stood. Now the community were greatly interested in having that railroad constructed. Their minds were inflated with ideas of the great advantages to be derived. So they took the ground upon which the wing of the house stood and the railroad track run within thirty feet of the side of the building. When the jury came to assess the damages the evidence introduced as to the benefit which would result was to this effect: that this building was a large building; that it could be turned into a boarding-house or a place for the traveling public to put up; people would put up at the house on account of its proximity to the railroad; and that the advantages to accrue in that way would more than offset the increased danger of fire and the inconvenience of alarms at unreasonable hours, and other prospective damages. And the jury brought in no damages on account of the proximity of the railroad track to the building. But when the man came to try it on and make a boarding-house out of it, he found the station located at another place, and the result was that the man's property was ruined. The danger in this class of cases is this—and I refer to General Howard for the experiences of southern California during the late construction of railroads in that country—that when men hear of a railroad coming they almost think that it is heaven come down to earth. Land worth five dollars an acre is going to be worth fifteen or twenty dollars an acre. Sometimes that happens and sometimes it don't. But the ordinary jury, as to the question of benefits, do become inflamed until they give unreasonable benefits, and that will be the observation and experience, I think, of men who have seen the thing. I have seen railroads constructed in a certain town where a man could hardly get the government price for his land, on account of the inflamed sentiment of the public as to benefits. But what is the fact? The land adjacent that is not taken is benefited even more. The men whose lands are immediately adjacent do not get the benefit. Who does not know that the lots one or two or three blocks off are even more benefited? Then the result of the rule amounts to this: that the man over whose ground the railroad is constructed receives really no benefit from the construction of the road, because they take from him the measure of damages, or take it in such a way that he receives no benefit. But other men, through whose land the railroad does not run, get the benefit of the railroad and stand no part of the damage.

Now, as to this legislative provison, it seems to me that in the main it is a very good one. But we have not merely to inquire as to the quality of the present legislative enactment. We have to inquire as to the certainty of its being a permanent provision. If this enactment of the Legislature is in that shape that no railroad influence can shake it; if it is in that shape that twenty-five years from now it will stand just as it does to-day, it might answer the purpose very well. But who is not familiar with the fact that not only in this State, but in every State in the Union, the railroad power has been strong enough, whenever it took the matter thoroughly in hand, to control legislation, and to get such legislation as it seemed to want. Now, sir, we have a duty to perform here in making such a permanent provision in regard to this matter as seems to us necessary and right. The question is asked, what difference is there between the method of assessing damages for laying out a public road and for laying out a railroad? My idea of the matter is this: when you have laid out a public road every man has a right to the benefits of that road without cost or expense, and it is maintained by the public taxes. But when we come to talk about a railroad, railroads are not built for the public good. They are built for private gain, and if any man desires to have the benefit of the railroad he can have it by paying just what the railroad company asks him for enjoying the privilege. This is one difference, or one reason why the rule for laying out a public road and for damages in such a case is not a good rule for damages in the case of these quasi public corporations who may take private property for their public use. As was suggested here, these prospective damages can be taken into consideration as well as the prospective benefits, and I will give you a true example of it from the words of one of the gentlemen who spoke on the other side. It was said that under these provisions a farm might be taken to be used as a place to deposit tailings. Suppose that can be done under the principles which they want left in the Constitution, whenever parties propose to take a farm as a place to deposit tailings upon, the man who proposes to take it as a field to dump his tailings on has the right to say to the man whose land is taken, "Sir, tailings will improve your land. True, I take your land to deposit tailings on, but in five years the tailings will make better soil than you have to-day." Then the jury take into consideration the fact that at some future time the soil will be better than it is now. That is an illustration of the result of what the gentlemen want to engraft upon this system. But if, as they say, to put this provision in here will have no effect, I ask why it is that since this question has been up certain gentlemen, whose motives and intentions are not known, are standing about the doors of our Convention, and sending in for gentlemen to come out and talk with them on this very provision? I ask, if this has nothing to do with these matters, why it is that gentlemen who have been guardians of these rights for some years back are excited, and make such eloquent speeches on these matters? I wish that some abler man than I could deal with this question, some man who could rivet the attention of this body to the real question at issue for a moment, would stand up here and advocate this matter. But the principles we advocate are right and we must stand for them. That is what we are here for, and if we cannot talk—well, we know how to vote right on such propositions. [Applause.]

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not intend to make a speech upon this proposition at all; but, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words. If the members of this Convention desire to do the people of this State a good—if they desire to render the people of this State a safeguard—they will not listen to the sophistries of the gentlemen opposed to this amendment, but they will put this safeguard in the Constitution in behalf of the people. I shall support this amendment, and these are the reasons why I shall support it: because I believe that it is the only safeguard that can be placed in this connection.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley.

The amendment was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Committee on Judiciary as amended.

MR. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Private property shall not be taken for private use, with or without compensation, unless by the consent of the owner, except for right of way for drainage ditches across the lands of others for agricultural, mining, and sanitary purposes, in such manner as may be prescribed by law."

MR. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman: My reason for offering that amendment is to cover an interest in the county in which I live, and I think the same interest exists in a large portion of the State. It is to secure the right of drainage. During the Winter our land is subject to overflow, and now we have no means by which we can get drainage. One individual can block up a country of ten or fifteen thousand acres of land, and you cannot buy a right of way from him. There was a bill to cover our case, but it was inoperative because it was considered unconstitutional. We think there should be some way provided in this Constitution by which we could have the power, by paying for the right, to reclaim our lands. That is all.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to that, to follow after the last word of that.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Provided that any resident of this State who is, or who has filed his declaration of intentions to become, a citizen of the United States, and who is not the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of land, may enter upon, take, and hold, for the purpose of cultivation or residence, any unoccupied or uncultivated land in this State, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, upon his paying the owner thereof, or depositing to his credit in a solvent bank, the value of such land, as the same is entered upon the assessment roll for State and county taxes made last before such entry, with twenty per cent. in addition to such assessment value, and from the time of such payment or deposit the party so entering shall be the owner of, and be entitled to the exclusive possession and use of such land."

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order. It is that the amendment is not germane to the subject before the house.

THE CHAIRMAN. This amendment was only read for information. It was offered as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Hitchcock. The Chair is of the opinion that both are in violation of Rule Twenty-eight, which says: "No subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment."

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend section fourteen so that it will read: "Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or ascertained and paid into the Court for the owners."

I will state briefly the object of my offering this amendment. The reason is this: the amendment proposed by the Committee on Judiciary is good, with the one exception that it allows the property to be taken when the complaint is first filed in the suit, by making a deposit in

Digitized by Google

Court. Now, it seems to me that is not the object of this Convention, but that is the way it reads, and it has been adopted. In other words, it says the taking shall be when the money is paid into Court as security. Now, as I understand it, the Convention does not wish the deposit put there as security. It seems to me that this Convention adopted that amendment without consideration, or without understanding it. That is its effect, unless I have mistaken its reading. Now, the reason why I support this amendment in preference to that part of the old Constitution upon the same subject is this: this clause, as Judge Cooley says, is liable to construction, one way or the other, and while we are sitting here we should do away with the chance of misconstruction. I think we should make the terms so plain that the Supreme Court, or the Supreme Court lawyers, may not be able to get around it. It says that the damages shall first be ascertained and paid into Court, where they can get them, after being ascertained by the jury; that he can receive his pay, if he desires to receive his pay, or he can let it remain there until the final termination of the case. I think that that is all we could ask, and it seems to me that the Convention should adopt it. But the amendment you have already adopted, although it allows them to take the property of that man, he may not have the right to go there and draw down the money. I think that is a mistake you have made.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: During the remarks of the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, I had occasion to speak to a member in another part of the room, and I went there and did not hear his speech, at least not all of it. But following that the amendment was adopted. I think that there should be some little care about the adoption, and certainly about the phraseology of an article that is to stand for so long a time.

[Cries of "louder."]

A very distinguished gentleman was once making a speech and somebody kept halloing "louder, louder," and he said he doubted not that at the last day, when the heavens should be rolled away as a scroll, and the elements were melted away with fervent heat, and men should be summoned to the judgment, there would be some fellow from that part of the hall halloing "louder, louder." I think if the gentlemen wish to listen they can hear. But with reference to this amendment, I wish it to be understood that I desired, and I so stated, to see the results of the statutes and the decisions of the Supreme Court crystallized into this Constitution, so that they will stay there. That was my idea, and I supposed that the debate would continue long enough to enable us to effect that object. I would suggest now that this section be referred back to the committee for to-night, to present to-morrow a properly phrased amendment to the section, if the committee so desire, which shall fix it so as to conform to the statutes as now determined by the Courts of the State.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: That amendment that I offered is couched in the identical language contained in the Constitution of Alabama. I did not trust my own ability to express ideas in language to suit the gentlemen here.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I did not mean to reflect on his language or upon the law of it as it stands, only to put it together properly. I was not criticising any particular thing.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I do not know what objection there is to it. The first part of the section stands exactly as reported by the Committee on Judiciary. The latter part of the section reads: "The right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation, other than municipal, until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money to the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation; which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law." Now I have no pride at all with regard to the manner in which the ideas shall be expressed. I only ask that this Convention shall stand by the decision it has made. I have no objection to its being couched in other language. But I believe, that considering the fact that it is expressed in English, that one part is written by the Committee on Judiciary, and that the balance is expressed in the language that has been adopted in the Constitution of the State of Alabama, you might as well stand by it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters.

MR. DUDLEY. Mr. Chairman: I would like to ask whether, if this amendment is adopted, my amendment will stand as a part of the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir; it will not. If this is adopted it will strike out the amended section.

MR. ESTEE. I rise to a point of order: that there can be no amendment made to it that strikes that amendment out. If I understand that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Bernardino will entirely wipe out the amendment that was presented by the gentleman from Solano, I hold that it is out of order.

MR. WATERS. If that is the case, in view of the fact that I do not think the Convention desires to put in a clause that this is a mere security to be placed in Court, and as that seems to be the evident construction, I move that the vote by which that amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

MR. HERRINGTON. I second the motion.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I think the same object can be accomplished in a different way, if the gentleman will change his amendment by simply moving to insert the two words "ascertained and" between the words "or" and "paid."

MR. WATERS. I would state to the gentleman that only having heard it read, and not having it before me, I cannot put in the amendment there.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I would like to hear the proposition read in a way that we can hear it. I am unable to tell what it is. I thought that the amendment as reported by the Committee on Judiciary would stand as reported, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Solano would come in after it. If I understood it properly, the section reported by the Committee on Judiciary still stands and is not stricken out. Now, then, if I can hear it read, and if we can all hear it read, we will understand it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section fourteen, by adding the following, namely: No right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal, until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money, to the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law."

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I ask that the proposition be read as amended. The Secretary reads the amendment. I want the proposition read as amended.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 14. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into Court for the owner. No right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal, until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money to the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law.

MR. HAGER. It reads as I suppose it was intended to be. That is the first proposition as reported by the Committee on Judiciary stands as it was reported by them: "Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into Court for the owner." In that it is provided that private property shall not in any case be taken without compensation being made to or paid into Court for the owner. That stands as it is. Then comes the succeeding amendment about the right of way. Now, there may be a little conflict between the two propositions. The one relating to the right of way seems to adopt a rather different rule in order to ascertain the damages from what the first proposition does in regard to private property. That is, that one must be paid to the owner, or into Court for the owner, and that the other seems to squint at the idea that it may be in some way secured. It would open the door for a bond, or something of that kind. I think it should read right; that compensation being paid to the owner, or being placed in Court for him, he could be able to obtain it; and so that those who wish to make improvements shall pay it after the jury has made the award of the proper compensation. It ought to be secured beyond a peradventure that he should have a right to get the money out whenever they are put in possession.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I have but one word to say. The author of this amendment, in his zeal to wrestle with a question that has exercised the finest jurists in this country, who have sought to place this right of eminent domain on a footing that would be just to the people and to those who want to condemn, has run off to a foreign Constitution and abstracted a provision which restores the whole question to the place where it was before this last legislation was had. The gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, is entirely right when he says that it robs the owners of private property of the benefit of every beneficent provision as contained in the laws as they stand. Any railroad corporation, under this amendment, can walk into any man's farm and file a bond and take his property and go ahead with it. A deposit of money or security——

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Secured by a deposit of money.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I certainly think that this thing is a little mixed, and I think that in order to clearly express the views of this Convention, as indicated by the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Solano, that it would be wise to re-refer it to the committee to formulate it so that it will express the idea desired. Certainly, I hope it will not be adopted in its present shape. In that respect I agree with the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, and to some extent with the gentleman from Sacramento. I move that the committee rise and recommend that this section be re-referred to the Committee on Judiciary, with instructions to formulate it so as to contain the ideas expressed in the amendment.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I have one word to say in regard to the reference. I wish to advise the Convention of this fact, that this subject was most maturely considered in the committee. I do not see any use in sending it back to the committee, because it would undoubtedly come back from them with the same recommendation that they have made.

MR. ESTEE. Let it come; but we do not want that section as it now is to go into the Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

MR. BARTON. I desire to make an amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

MR. BARTON. I wish to amend the gentleman's motion, that it be referred back to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, moves that the committee rise and report this section to the Convention, and request that it be referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

The motion was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the precise condition of the question: Section fourteen, as reported by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, is reported as an amendment. It has not been adopted by the committee. It stands as an amendment offered. The gentleman from Solano moved an amendment to that amendment, and it was adopted. The gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, moves to strike out and insert a substitute which he has offered, and which is as follows: "Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made to or ascertained and paid into Court for the owner."

MR. MCCALLUM. I understand that the question is on the motion to reconsider.

MR. WATERS. I withdraw that motion to reconsider.

MR. BARBOUR. I would like to know how on a question of order that amendment was withdrawn?

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not withdrawn. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, to strike out the whole of this section as amended, and insert this substitute, which I have just read.

The amendment was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Committee on Judiciary, as amended.

MR. LAINE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the last amendment was adopted. It seems to me that the word "secured" has crept in there. It will drive us back to the place we have been laboring out of for the last ten years.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: He is entirely mistaken. The language employed in the amendment of the gentleman from Solano is: "Until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money." It is secured by the money paid into Court. All that any of the provisions which have been adopted or proposed will effect is simply that. The money is paid into Court, and the money remains in Court for security. There is no ambiguity about it. There is no trouble about it.

MR. WHITE. I think that word "secured" is most objectionable, and I trust the Convention will reconsider it.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. I ask leave to amend it by striking out the words, "secured by a deposit of money," and inserting the words, "or deposited in Court." Then it will conform to the section as reported by the Committee on Judiciary; that is, in that respect it will be just like their report.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or deposited in Court for the owner."

THE CHAIRMAN. It will require unanimous consent of the committee.

MR. WATERS. I move to amend that so that it will read: "Until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or ascertained and paid into Court for the owner."

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. I am willing to accept that amendment if the committee is willing.

THE CHAIRMAN. It cannot be done except by general consent.

No objection was made.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I call attention to the fact that this provision of the Alabama Constitution has been repealed for several years.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Committee on Judiciary as amended. The Secretary will read the section as it now stands amended.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 14. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into Court for the owner, and no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or ascertained and paid into Court for the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation; which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. MCCALLUM. I move that the committee rise and report this article to the Convention as amended.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the Article on Preamble and Declaration of Rights, have adopted sundry amendments thereto, and ask the Convention at what time it will receive and act upon the report of the Committee of the Whole.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that four hundred and eighty copies of the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole, together with the plan as reported by the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, be printed, and that the amendments be printed in brackets so that they can be distinguished.

MR. EDGERTON. I hope the gentleman will withhold that motion for the present.

MR. VAN DYKE. I wish to state that the copies are all exhausted. We want some printed with the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The motion prevailed.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. GRACE. I move that the Convention adjourn.

The motion prevailed, and at four o'clock and fifty minutes P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow at ten A. M.

A CORRECTION.

MR. JOYCE. Mr. President: In yesterday's Journal I am incorrectly reported as having moved to lay the resolution on the table, and I want it fixed. The resolution was number sixty-seven.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS.

THE PRESIDENT. Propositions and resolutions relating to the Constitution are now in order.

RELATIVE TO RAILROADS.

MR. HUGHEY introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, in relation to purchase of railroads by the State:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION —. The Legislature shall, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, pass all necessary laws to submit to a direct vote of the qualified voters of this State, the proposition, that the State shall take possession by condemnation and purchase, at a fair and just valuation, of all railroads, their franchises, rights, and privileges, which may be in operation in this State, paying therefor in bonds of the State, bearing six per cent. interest, and payable in full in thirty (30) years or sooner if the State desire. Said railroads so purchased to be thereafter the property of the State, to be operated for the benefit of the State by duly appointed Superintendents and officers.

Referred to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

UNITED STATES CURRENCY.

MR. BARTON introduced the following proposition, relating to United States currency:

Resolved, That a clause be inserted in the Constitution declaring that all moneys issued by the Government of the United States of America shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, and that no law shall ever be enacted by the Legislature of this State to discriminate against the currency of the National Government.

Referred to the Committee on Legislative Department.

ON EDUCATION.

MR. BARRY introduced the following proposition to amend sections one and two of article nine:

SECTION 1. A Superintendent of Public Instruction shall, at the general election for Judicial, State, and county officers, to be held in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and every four years thereafter, at such general elections, be elected by the qualified voters of the State, and shall enter upon the duties of his office on the second Monday of January ensuing his election.

The following shall be prefixed to section two:

"The diffusion of knowledge, as well asof virtue, among the people, being essential to the preservation of their rights and liberties, it shall be the duty of the Legislature to promote public schools, and to adopt all means which they may deem necessary and proper to secure to the people the advantages and opportunities of education."

Referred to the Committee on Education.

NOTICE TO AMEND RULE FIFTY-SIX.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I give notice of a motion to amend Rule Fifty-six, by striking out the words, "and that the previous question shall not be moved."

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

MR. SHOEMAKER. Mr. President: I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Reporting and Printing, out of order.

THE SECRETARY read:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Reporting and Printing, to whom was referred the matter of the cost of printing for the Convention up to and including the nineteenth day of October last, beg leave to report that they have had the same under consideration, and find the following facts:

Due to employés in the composing and press rooms of the State Printing Office, as per time book	$674 23
Cost of paper, estimated on each job	488 90
Folding, stitching, and binding (at contract price)	226 50
Making a total of	$1,389 63

You committee report that the estimates are correct, and that the amount should be allowed as a proper charge.

Respectfully submitted.

SHOEMAKER, Chairman.

THE PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table. The Convention has now gone through the order of business, what is the further pleasure of the Convention?

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I move that the consideration of the article on Preamble and Bill of Rights in Convention be set for Monday next, at two o'clock.

MR. LARKIN. I desire to hear some reasons.

MR. VAN DYKE. There is nothing set for Monday, and they cannot be printed in time for the morning session.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke.

Lost.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move, then, to set it for ten o'clock on Monday, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

MR. LARKIN. I ask if it is not printed now.

MR. VAN DYKE. No, sir, it has been ordered printed, but has not gone to the printer yet.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: It seems to me to be a bad idea. Generally, the Convention is very thin on Monday morning. Last Monday morning there was only just a quorum here. There will be a small number present on next Monday morning. I think this report of the committee should be considered when the Convention is full, or nearly so. Monday morning is a very bad time to set it.

MR. VAN DYKE. The greater portion of it will be acted upon without any discussion. If any of the sections produce discussion and provoke amendments, then action upon them can be postponed. I would like to have it set down for Monday.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: I voted against the motion, for the reason that I thought we might consider it to-day. If it has gone to the printer I do not think we can act upon it to-day. We have gone through it once in the Committee of the Whole. If it be not printed, I do not think we can act upon it to-day, and therefore I move to reconsider the motion for setting it for Monday, at two o'clock. The printer should have had it here this morning, as the order to print was made yesterday. I understand it is against the rule to reconsider, and I move that it be postponed until Monday, at half-past two o'clock.

MR. MCCALLUM. I voted against the motion to make it a special order, because I didn't see where we would accomplish anything by doing so. If the report should be printed and upon the tables on Monday morning, or if it should come in to-day, we can take it up whenever it comes. We have a number of special orders, and there is no necessity in making this the special order. Take it up when it comes in is the best way.

MR. VAN DYKE. It was on the file this morning, and my purpose was to get rid of it.

MR. MCCALLUM. It will come up in its regular order.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, to make it the special order for half-past two o'clock on Monday.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. President: I find that nearly a week ago we had printed all the report of the Committee of the Whole except these sections which were referred to the Judiciary Committee. I see no reason why we cannot take up and consider those sections which were printed a week ago.

The motion was lost.

MR. NOEL. Mr. President: I now move that it be made the special order for Monday morning, at ten o'clock. It seems to me that the report of the Committee of the Whole ought to be printed and placed before us by that time. If we delay another week the consideration of the propositions contained in that report, there will be two weeks discussion upon it. I therefore move that it be made the special order for Monday morning, at ten o'clock.

Lost.

PARDONING POWER.

MR. FREEMAN. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of taking into consideration the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the section as reported by the committee.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 13. The Governor shall have the power to grant reprieves, and the Governor and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall have power to grant pardons and commutations of sentence, after conviction, for all offenses, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions, and with such restrictions and limitations as they may think proper, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons. Upon conviction for treason, the Governor shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the Legislature at its next meeting, when the Legislature shall either pardon, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. The Governor shall communicate to the Legislature, at the beginning of every session, every case of reprieve or pardon granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence and its date, the date of the pardon and reprieve, and the reasons for granting the same. Neither the Governor and Chief Justice, nor the Legislature, shall have power to grant pardons and commutations of sentence in any case where the convict has been previously thrice convicted of felony.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is that of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, to strike out "Chief Justice of the Supreme Court," and insert in lieu thereof, "Attorney-General."

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: At the time this article was under discussion I had offered an amendment to the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. That will come in after this amendment.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: Is another amendment in order?

THE CHAIRMAN. An amendment to an amendment is in order.

MR. MCCALLUM. I move to amend so as to make the Governor, the Chief Justice, and the Attorney-General, the Pardoning Board. I will write it out. That is one of the improvements in other Constitutions that I read here the other day.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: My recollection is that I offered an amendment, so as to strike out the word "Chief Justice," so as to leave it exactly as it was in the old Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment pending is that offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell.

MR. MCFARLAND. I certainly offered an amendment so as to leave it to the Governor.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman simply offered a verbal amendment. The Chair directed him to send it up in writing, and before the written amendment was sent up the Convention adjourned.

MR. MCCALLUM. I send up my amendment now in writing.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add after the word 'Chief Justice,' in line two, and before the word 'shall,' in same line, the words 'and the Attorney-General.'"

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. President: The section will then read as follows:

SEC. 13. The Governor shall have the power to grant reprieves, and the Governor, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and the Attorney-General, shall have power to grant pardons and commutations of sentence, after conviction, for all offenses, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions, and with such restrictions and limitations, as they may think proper, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons. Upon conviction for treason, the Governor shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the Legislature at its next meeting, when the Legislature shall either pardon, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. The Governor shall communicate to the Legislature, at the beginning of every session, every case of reprieve or pardon granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence and its date, the date of the pardon and reprieve, and the reasons for granting the same. Neither the Governor, Chief Justice, and Attorney-General, nor the Legislature, shall have power to grant pardons or commutations of sentence in any case where the convict has been previously thrice convicted of felony.

My colleague moved to strike out "Chief Justice" and insert "Attorney-General." My proposition is to add the Attorney-General to the Board. In looking over the Constitutions of the different States, I have found no place where there was anything in the nature of a Commission or Board of Pardons where it did not consist of more than two persons. I think the section requires some further amendment, but that is the general feature, that the Board shall consist of the Governor, Chief Justice, and Attorney-General, and that any two of these, of which the Governor must always be one, shall have power to grant pardons.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not now in order. It will be in order if this amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, is voted down. The question is now on that amendment, to strike out "Chief Justice" and insert "Attorney General."

Lost.

Digitized by Google

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

MR. McFARLAND. I ask the gentleman to allow me to offer my amendment.

MR. McCALLUM. I give way temporarily.

MR. McFARLAND. The committee will notice that my amendment simply leaves the matter in the hands of the Governor.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment:

"Amend by striking out the words 'Chief Justice of the Supreme Court,' in the second line, and the word 'they' in the fifth line, and insert the word 'he' and strike out the words 'and Chief Justice' in the fifteenth line."

MR. McFARLAND. It will then read:

SEC. 13. The Governor shall have the power to grant reprieves, and the Governor shall have power to grant pardons and commutations of sentence, after conviction, for all offenses, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions, and with such restrictions and limitations, as he may think proper, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons. Upon conviction for treason, the Governor shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the Legislature, at its next meeting, when the Legislature shall either pardon, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. The Governor shall communicate to the Legislature, at the beginning of every session, every case of reprieve or pardon granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence, and its date, the date of the pardon and reprieve, and the reasons for granting the same. Neither the Governor nor the Legislature shall have power to grant pardons, or commutations of sentence, in any case where the convict has been previously thrice convicted of felony.

I argued this amendment the other day. I still think it is safer to leave it where it is.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: It occurs to me that the Chief Justice is the very last person to be on that commission. The complaint is made that the Court is not able to keep up, and it requires the attention of one of the members of the Court in listening to cases of pardon. It seems to me that he should be the very last person to be put on that commission.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Cries of "Division, division."

MR. McFARLAND. If that is adopted it leaves it as it is in the old Constitution, except that provision that a man three times convicted shall not be pardoned.

The amendment was adopted on a standing vote; ayes, 46; noes, 41.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: The pardoning power, as it has heretofore been exercised, has been subjected to some considerable criticism, and I have been thinking about it so as to know how to remedy this state of things. I notice in a great many of the Constitutions the Governor has the exclusive power of pardon. In other Constitutions we find that the Governor and Senate in some cases, and the Senate alone in other States; and in other States, which is still better I think, they constitute a Court of Pardons, so that parties coming before the Court make their applications, introduce testimony, and it is then passed upon judicially.

MR. TULLY. What is the question before the house.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee.

MR. HAGER. I was going to offer an amendment, and I was explaining the amendment which I intended to offer. I will offer it first.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must offer his amendment and get it seconded before he can debate it. Send up your amendment.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment:

"In line seven, before the word 'pardon,' insert the words, 'and granting.'"

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: That amendment I will read and explain it. It is a matter of discretion as to where we shall lodge the pardoning power. In some cases it is left to the Governor simply, and in other States the Governor and Senate, and in other States, which I think is the better way, they form a sort of Court of Pardons. Here, with the report of the committee, I do not suppose we can undertake to establish a Court. I am therefore inclined to adhere to the present provisions, that it shall be left to the Governor, subject to such legislation as the Legislature may pass, not only to the mode of applying for pardons, but the mode of granting pardons. The Governor shall have power, in case it rest with him alone, to grant pardons and commutations of sentence, etc., upon such conditions and such restrictions and limitations as may be thought proper, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law, in the matter of applying for and granting pardons. As it now reads, the Legislature can only regulate the matter of applying for pardons. This is the purpose of the amendment, to regulate the manner of applying for pardons, and the manner in which they shall be granted. They may say, for instance, that it shall be upon consultation with the Judge that tried the case. They may put in any provision of that kind, and the Governor must confine himself to the provision of the statute. I am of the opinion that the first person for him to advise with would be the Judge who tried the case. Not that the advice so obtained should be binding, but I think the pardoning power should always consult about the facts. I have known cases of pardons being obtained through misrepresentations; cases where the Governor has been imposed upon. Most everybody will sign a petition as an act of courtesy. But sometimes misrepresentations have been made, letters have been presented to the Governor which have turned out afterwards were not true in fact. The Legislature, therefore, might impose certain rules and regulations upon the acts of the Governor, not only as to the matter of applying for pardons, but also as to the manner of granting pardons. If you do nothing more than to leave the pardoning power with the Governor, then the Legislature may regulate it as the circumstances may induce them to do.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: My amendment proposes to strike out this whole clause, and insert other words in the place. I would like to ask what position my amendment is now in, whether it should not now come up under this head.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, is the first amendment.

MR. BLACKMER. This amendment does not touch the question as brought up by Judge Campbell, but it is in reference to the section proposed to be amended. My amendment, if it should prevail in the committee, would strike out the clause proposed to be amended by the gentleman from San Francisco, and insert other words.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, comes up first, and then your amendment to strike out the whole of it. The question is on that amendment.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I did not just exactly understand the explanation made by the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager. I think the language is equivocal in regard to terms. Is it intended to confine the Act of the Legislature to simply regulating the manner in which the pardon shall be granted—the language in which it shall be couched, and the particular circumstance under which it shall be made, or is it intended to cover the grounds of pardon. It seems to me that the language admits of both constructions. I shall object to the Legislature passing laws to fix and define the grounds upon which a pardon shall be granted. The whole theory of our government is to leave that entirely with the Governor. Perhaps the Legislature might say there shall be no pardons at all. I do not propose to trust that power with the Legislature. It seems to me the amendment is not plain. If it does not touch the power and right to grant pardons, then it cannot affect that part of it. But as to letting the Legislature specify what that power shall be, and under what circumstances it shall be exercised, seems to me is going entirely too far.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I do not think there is anything in the objections urged by my friend from Marin, Judge Shafter, except the general distrust of the legislative power. He might as well say he distrusts the Governor, or that he distrusts the judicial power. We must confide in the legislative power of the State. I can see no harm in lodging with them the power to say, in case the Governor did abuse his power, that he should be restricted in the exercise of that power. I do not think there is any danger of the Legislature passing a law that will do an injustice and take away the power of pardoning any man. On the contrary, the inclination is always on the side of mercy. If mistakes are made they will always be found upon the side of mercy. Where appeals have been made to the Legislature, and errors have been made, they have always been made on that side. There is no difficulty on that ground. In some States the Legislature has the entire pardoning power, and in that view of the case I do not see why we need hesitate about saying that both branches of the Legislature may pass a law regulating the mode of granting pardons, especially when the Governor has the veto power on that as in all other cases. I fail to see the objection.

ARGUMENT OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: He proposes to have the Legislature exercise the pardoning power. That is the whole proposition. To take it away from the Governor virtually by giving the Legislature power to control it. When it comes to a difference between the Legislature and the Governor in regard to the grounds upon which a pardon shall be granted, the Legislature will control. The whole proposition is, that the Legislature is to have the pardoning power, and to that I object. If this Convention thinks it worth while to change the whole system, and put this pardoning power into the hands of this Board—this town meeting—I have nothing to say against it. But let us understand this matter. I protest against it. My friend from Alameda, General McCallum, gives an epitome of the Constitutions of the various States on this subject. I have looked over the Constitutions and I do not get exactly the same result that he does. In Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, California, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin, the pardoning power is confined to the Governor. Now, in Louisiana it is by and with the approval of the Senate. In Maine, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire, it is with the Senate. In Nevada it is with the Legislature. They simply allow the Governor to reprieve within sixty days, and the Legislature operates directly. In Rhode Island the Governor and Senate pardon. In Georgia the Governor pardons, except in cases of treason and murder. There are twenty States where the Governor exercises unlimited authority. But the committee here thought that a Commission would be preferable, and we compromised and put the Governor and Chief Justice together. I do not think that the majority of the Convention are satisfied with it. They wanted a more numerous Commission, and the gentleman from Alameda proposed adding the Attorney-General, the Commission to be appointed by the Governor, by and with the consent of the Senate, to consist of three members. As far as my opinion goes, the three should concur, and not a majority act. There exists to-day too much leniency, too much regard for the feelings of the criminals, and too little for the rights of the community. That is a thing we should all try to avoid. It is a fair difference of opinion as to whether this power should be left with the Governor and two other persons, or with the Governor alone. I have prepared an amendment in case a Commission is decided upon, to make their decision unanimous. As to the amendment giving the Legislature any control, I am most decidedly opposed to it, and I trust it will not prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. TOWNSEND.

MR. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman: This leaves the pardoning power with the Legislature. It is not objectionable, sir, I think. I believe in allowing the Legislature to deal with it, either by creating a Court of Pardons, or by associating some other persons with the Governor, or creating a separate Commission. Now, I am not afraid of the danger which the gentlemen speak of in leaving it with the Legislature to regulate it. They are representatives of the people; come direct from the people, impressed with the views and wishes of the people. I fail to see any danger that will follow the leaving of this matter to legislative wisdom and discretion. If we should be unfortunate enough at some future time to have a corrupt Governor, we might see the absolute necessity of taking the pardoning power out of his hands. Then, again, I believe the Governor would be relieved of a great deal of care and labor by such a course. He has letters from all parts of the State; he is importuned by women with tears, and gray-haired men—every phase of sympathy that can be brought to bear, is used upon him to induce him to grant pardons, and of this he would be relieved, while the pardoning power would be in just as safe hands. I cannot see any objection to it, and I shall vote for the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: Whatever may be the opinions of this Convention, it certainly owes to the people of the State the duty of expressing those opinions in intelligent language. Now, I think one of the first objections to the amendment is this: that if its author should happen to die we would never be able to understand what it means. It would seem, upon first glance, that the amendment was directed to the mere mode and manner, as for instance, that the pardon should be in writing, or that it should be attested by the great seal of State, or that it should be connected with some other formality. But upon the debate which has arisen, and particularly from what has been said by the author, he is aiming, not at the mode and manner, but at the substance. He is aiming to accomplish something which the Convention does not intend shall be accomplished. He is aiming to subvert the vote which has already been taken, by which we have determined to vest this power in the Executive. Now, if any gentleman here desires that this power should be vested in the Legislature, or that it should be vested in a Commission, or that it should be vested in any way or manner whatever, let him formulate that idea in such language that a man of ordinary comprehension can understand it, and then let us vote upon it. But at present it certainly would be unsafe to allow this amendment, because the Convention could not understand what it was doing, and because perhaps different Judges and different men would put different constructions upon this provision. If it is desired to vest the power in the Legislature, let it be proposed in an amendment which all can understand, and let the Convention vote intelligently upon the proposition. This amendment should be promptly voted down, both on account of its ambiguity, and on principle. It is unsafe and unwise.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me this matter has got into the shape of a question that is often debated in the lyceum. If a man has hold of a tiger's tail, what is the best thing to be done; to let go or hold on? I would say that I think the pardoning power should be vested in the Supreme Court.

SPEECH OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: If I understand the proposition, it is that the Legislature may create a Board to act with the Governor; and following out that plan they may take the power entirely away from the Governor, and provide, if they see fit, that in certain classes of crimes, no pardon shall be granted at all. The majority of the Legislature may be disposed to pardon some notorious criminal whom the Governor has refused to pardon; and if the Legislature is so disposed, they can issue the pardon themselves. It says they may create a Board to act with the Governor, and the majority of the Board shall have power to grant pardons and to overrule the decision of the Governor. I say if we are going to place such a power in any one, let it be done by the Constitution, and not leave it in the hands of the Legislature to fritter away this power. If we are going to make the Governor take the responsibility of pardoning criminals, or refusing to pardon, then let us in this Constitution place that power in his hands, and not leave it to the Legislature to change it and tinker with it from time to time. As the section would stand the Legislature would have the power of saying in what manner pardons may be granted. We will all admit that this pardoning power has been abused. Not that the Governor has done any willful wrong, because I do not believe it; but Governors have been imposed upon. It is proposed by the old section to give the Legislature the power of regulating the manner of applying for pardons—simply the manner of applying, which I think is just and proper; and I think that much should be left to the discretion of the Legislature. I am willing to leave that to the Legislature. The object is this: that the Governor is liable to be imposed upon by false statements and false rumors. They are approached and besieged in private as well as in public. I think for one that a legislative enactment regulating the mode of applying for pardons, requiring that all applications for pardons must be made in public, heard in public, and decided in public; and making it a misdemeanor for any person to approach the Governor privately to ask for a pardon—make it as much a misdemeanor as it would be to approach a Judge privately to solicit a decision in a case being tried before him. I think this is a great improvement in that respect.

This matter of the mode of applying for pardons can with entire safety be left to the Legislature, because that in nowise affects the power itself. It in nowise interferes with the Executive in the exercise of that power. But any change in the Constitution which would make it possible for the Legislature to take the pardoning power out of the hands of the Governor, or out of the hands of any Board of Officers which this Convention may decide to provide, I shall most strenuously oppose. I say if this Convention is going to say that the Governor, and the Governor only shall have power to grant pardons, then do not leave it to the Legislature to tinker with it, but make him shoulder the responsibility, or any other Board that you may decide to vest with this power. If this Convention says that the Governor, Chief Justice, and Attorney-General shall constitute a Pardoning Board, then give them the power and make them shoulder the responsibility, but do not leave it to the Legislature to fritter away that power by creating an additional Board whose decision shall be binding in any way upon the Board or individual upon whom we shall confer this power.

SPEECH OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the amendment for several of the reasons already advanced. I believe we had enough of the legislative power as exercised at the last session, whereby more than eighty prisoners were discharged from the State Prison, two thirds of whom have since committed high crimes, and have been returned to prison, at an enormous expense to the various counties. I say, sir, the exercise of a power of this kind should be conducted with the greatest caution. I say that if it is placed in the hands of the Legislature it is more liable to be abused than where it is now. I shall not now take the time to comment upon the acts which have been passed by the Legislature upon this subject. I am satisfied that it is not a safe place to lodge this power—in the hands of the Legislature—as provided by the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager. I am also opposed to allowing this power to remain in the hands of the Governor, for reasons already given. We all know how that power has been abused in the past, and I believe this body sufficiently understands the reasons why the Governor should no longer be entrusted to wield this power alone. The Attorney-General should be associated with him at least, and perhaps the Chief Justice, as has been suggested here. I think three would be enough. As gentlemen have remarked, we do not charge the Governor with corruption, but, we all know that one man is more liable to be influenced by sympathy than two or more. I think for these reasons that the Attorney-General at least should be associated with the Governor, and perhaps one other. When the proper time comes I shall move an amendment to carry out the ideas which I have advanced.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: Would an amendment be in order.

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir; there are already two amendments pending.

ARGUMENT OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I have a word to say in defense of myself, at least. I regret exceedingly that the gentlemen have so misinterpreted the language and purport of this amendment. Certainly I had no intention of giving this power to the Legislature. On the contrary I would vote against any such proposition. I understand the Committee on Legislative Department have prepared and will report a proposition taking it entirely away from the Legislature. I hope they will do so and I shall support the proposition. I make this declaration to satisfy gentlemen that I have no such intention as represented, of giving the pardoning power to the Legislature. The amendment does not so read. The report of the committee reads now, "subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons." That is the language of the report of the committee. Now my amendment proposes to read in this way: "subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for and granting pardons." Does that authorize the Legislature to grant pardons? My friend from Sacramento, who writes law books, ought to know better than to put such an interpretation upon that language. It says by general law. They shall regulate by law the manner of applying for pardons, and also the manner of granting pardons. Does that give the power of granting pardons to the Legislature? My understanding of it is simply this, that the law should regulate the mode, not only of applying for pardons, but the mode of granting them. And suppose the Legislature should pass a law that when the Governor is applied to for a pardon he shall notify the Judge that convicted the man, and give him an opportunity to be heard before the pardon is granted. There is nothing wrong in that, is there? I understand that it is merely to throw some restrictions around the pardoning power; that it will not be absolutely left in the hands of one man who may be unduly influenced by manifestations of grief to the side of mercy. Suppose the Legislature should say that the Governor should set a day at which the District Attorney who prosecuted the man could be present, or the Judge before whom he was tried, or both—is there anything wrong in that? Would that be giving to the Legislature the right to grant pardons? Why, sir, I do not see how any man of sound mind could put such an interpretation as that upon the language here; nor can I see any reason why any member of this Convention should object to the Legislature prescribing by law the manner in which these pardons may be acted upon and granted. Does the amendment say the Legislature may grant pardons? On the contrary, it says the Governor shall have power to grant pardons himself; not the Governor and the Legislature, but the Governor shall have power to grant pardons. The language of the section is that the Governor shall have the sole power, because the Chief Justice was stricken out, and the amendment to add the Attorney-General was voted down, and it stands now that the Governor alone shall have power to grant pardons and reprieves. And then what follows, "subject to such regulations as may be provided by general law, as to the manner of applying for pardons," etc. The power is not taken from the Governor; there is no attempt to take it from him; there is no excuse for saying that it is to be taken away from him by this amendment, and I am surprised that gentlemen learned in the law should get up here and attempt to put any such forced interpretation upon the language of the amendment. It will bear no such construction.

SPEECH OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: There are two propositions which it seems to me ought not to be considered at all. One is giving the Legislature power to grant pardons. That we certainly cannot do, because it would take up a great deal of the time of the Legislature for which they would have to be paid by the State. They would have to adjourn their committees, and no matter how important the business, their time would have to be taken up in the consideration of these applications for pardon. Therefore, it appears to be foolish, and against the principles of economy, to give this pardoning power to the Legislature.

Now, in respect to the third party on this Commission. If we are to have a Commission, it will hardly do to take those who are not State officers, because if we do we will have to pay them a salary. I think that whatever is done by this Convention—and this power will, of course, have to be lodged somewhere—whatever is done, it should be lodged somewhere where we will not have to pay any extra salaries. I understand that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Sacramento has been passed, and the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, proposes an amendment to it. The amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento applies only to the manner of applying for pardons—the manner of the application. That would not necessarily include notice to the Judge who passed the sentence, or notice to any other persons to be present in open session and defend against the application for pardon. But as I understand the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, it does contemplate something of that kind. It has a great deal more in it. It adds to the mode of applying for pardons the mode of granting pardons. That would include notice; it would give the power to the Legislature to demand that notice be given to all persons they might see proper to designate. Therefore, I am not in favor of the amendment. My notion is that it is best to lodge this power in the hands of the Governor and Chief Justice. One is a political office, and the other is a judicial office. The one would hold in check the other.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I think the gentlemen who favor this amendment are laboring under a serious misapprehension as to its scope. Now, if this power is given by the Constitution to the Legislature to regulate the manner of applying for pardons, the Legislature can prescribe that notice can be given. They can prescribe that notice must be given, before the application can be heard, to the Judge and the District Attorney, or to any other person. They may prescribe that this notice shall be published in the newspapers for thirty days. All that power the Legislature has. That is the manner of applying for pardons. Therefore, I say it is not necessary to put in this additional word "granting." The Legislature can prescribe that before an application can be heard, notice shall be given, and there is no need of the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. SCHELL. I move to strike out all of line two, and the words "power to grant," in the third line. I can see no reason for such repetition.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question comes first on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, is now in order. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'impeachment' to and inclusive of the word 'pardon,' and insert in lieu thereof, 'and such power shall be exercised only in cases where evidence is newly discovered after judgment establishing the innocence of the convicted party, or the injustice of the sentence.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: It has been conceded by all who have spoken on this subject in the Convention, that there has been an abuse of the pardoning power, and I believe there is no one in this committee but will agree to that proposition. I believe if they were questioned further in regard to it they would also take this position, that the abuse has not been in the interest of innocent parties, but in the interest of those who had been sentenced, and justly sentenced. The leniency has been shown to those to whom it should not have been shown. Now, sir, I believe that the great evil of our present system of punishment is that the punishment is not sure to follow after the sentence. First, the criminal takes his chances that he will be able to escape without being arrested, and next that by some flaw or some error in the proceedings of the Court he will be able to escape conviction. Then, as another important factor in his calculations, if he is sentenced and incarcerated in prison, there is a very fair chance for him to be pardoned out. And it has its effect upon all criminals, and upon those who are apt to be criminals, who hope that sentence will be light. Now what is the remedy? It is, in my judgment, to make the sentence as sure to follow conviction, when it is just and equitable, as sure as the sun is to rise. I believe if it was understood by the criminals that whenever sentence was passed upon them justly there could be no escape from one moment of that sentence, that it would have a very salutary effect.

I move this amendment in the interest of just such a principle as that. I believe the pardoning power should be placed, first of all, in the hands of one man. That the Executive of the State should be the responsible party. I believe, as this amendment states, that no pardon should ever be granted, except in cases where evidence has been newly discovered, after judgment, that would show the innocence of the convicted party, or go to prove that the sentence had been an unjust one, and that then the application should be made, and that the Governor should be held responsible; and that such evidence having been brought to his notice, it is for him to determine whether it is true and correct, and then he may entertain it. In that way we would relieve this power of a very great amount of work that is now imposed upon the Governor. The applications for pardon would be very few. The criminal classes would be given to understand that whenever sentence is passed there is absolutely no escaping, unless they can find evidence to establish their innocence. I believe this Convention could do nothing that would be a greater benefit to this State upon this subject, than to pass an amendment of this kind. The Legislature, perhaps, it will be said, has the power to make these regulations which have been spoken of. Well, it has had the power, but has never done it; and I believe the time has come when we should place this matter in the fundamental law of the State, so that the Legislature shall not have the power to open wide the doors and allow those who are justly convicted and sentenced, to be turned loose again, to commit the same crimes for which they have been once imprisoned. By doing so you will put an effectual stop upon such proceedings. I think the time has come when the State should take that ground upon the subject of pardons, and I hope this amendment will prevail. If this amendment is adopted, I shall move to strike out the last clause, in order to perfect it, because it will be useless to say, after this amendment has been adopted, that "Neither the Governor, and Chief Justice, nor the Legislature shall have power to grant pardons, or commutations of sentence, in any case where the convict has been previously thrice convicted of felony." I had better, perhaps, include that in the amendment, so as to perfect it, and put it all in one motion.

SPEECH OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: This amendment would deprive the Governor of the pardoning power, except in the single instance of newly discovered evidence which tends to show the innocence of the party convicted. Now, it occurs to me that there are very many instances where a party properly convicted should receive executive clemency. On account of some prejudice in the Court, his sentence may be altogether disproportionate to the crime.

MR. BLACKMER. The amendment provides for cases where the sentence has been unjust simply.

MR. TERRY. Yes, where the sentence is unjust; but what is an unjust sentence? For instance: for a certain offense the statute allows a punishment of from one to four years. It is absolutely in the discretion of the Judge. And in case of a first offense, where punishment has been wrongfully inflicted, why should not the Governor have a right to step in, after the lapse of a reasonable time, and relieve him from the remainder of the sentence? There may be instances where boys have wandered away from home and have committed crimes, and have been tried and properly convicted, and sent to prison. Suppose a case of this kind. The friends of the party, living in other States, think they can reform the boy. Nobody was ever reformed in San Quentin. No man ever left there a better man than when he went in. He is sent there to mingle with the most hardened criminals, and he becomes more and more degraded, and he leaves there an accomplished criminal. Why should not the Governor be permitted, if the parents of the boy come from another State and ask that he be pardoned on condition that he leave the State never to return, to grant the request? This is only one out of many cases that might be cited where wrong would be done. There are many other cases where, under the law, the party is rightly convicted and punished—where there may be mitigating circumstances which excuse the offense in the minds of a large majority of the right-thinking people of this country. A man may commit murder under the influence of a knowledge of an outrage upon wife or sister, and be technically guilty, to be sure, but in such cases why should not the Governor be allowed to pardon him? I say it is not well for this Convention to take away the pardoning power; and this amendment, in effect, will do it. I say every man who is consigned to prison by a prejudiced Judge should have a right to have his application for executive clemency heard. This Convention ought not to take away the power to grant relief to any one who is wrongfully imprisoned or too harshly punished. I do not believe this Convention is prepared to adopt an amendment of this kind.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: That amendment reverses every rule of criminal law. In criminal law it is not for the party to prove his innocence, it is for the State to prove his guilt. By this amendment he has to prove his innocence, therefore I am opposed to it.
