"A subject of the greatest importance to the material prosperity of the State, which demands legislation at the earliest possible moment, is the regulation of rates of transportation on our railways. The rates now imposed by the different companies controlling these thoroughfares are extortionate, and, in many instances, run into larceny itself. So frequently outrageous have their exactions become, so unjust the discriminations they practice between individuals and places, that the continued existence of those institutions under the present regime is almost a matter of doubtful expediency. When producers are compelled to move their freights by horse and mule teams for a distance of fifty to a hundred miles right alongside a railroad, one of two conditions of things is true—either the railway managers are a set of unmitigated extortionists, or the country is too poor to support a railroad. The grinding policy of the managers of those roads in this State have made them the adversary of every interest they were created to subserve, and their managers objects of just and general condemnation. How outrageous and exasperating to the common sense of justice, is the spectacle of these great institutions, called into being by the people's power, built and equipped with their money, responsible to their sovereign will, designed to procure a freer vent for the products of the earth, to furnish new incitements to the cultivators of land, to be the most powerful instruments in increasing the quantity of money in the State, to be, in fine, the faithful handmaid of labor and industry, perverted into the mere instruments for the aggrandizement of a few selfish men into mere tourniquets, by which they may check or stop at will the circulation of the material system of the whole State. We propose to remedy these abuses, not by any attempt at empirical, retaliatory legislation, but by an adjustment of a scale of rates on freights and fares that shall be just, both to the companies and to the people. The power of the Legislature over this subject is indisputable."

It will be seen by this that my friend from Sacramento entertained very different opinions five years ago from what he does to-day, and I leave it to the candor of the members of this Convention and of the people of this State as to whether he was right five years ago or whether he is right now. I think he has made a mistake. I think he was right then and wrong now. I think his argument then was conclusive upon that subject, and his argument the other day a fallacy. Again, I find in that very elaborate speech, speaking of the power of these corporations and the necessity of controlling them, the following:

"The companies are common carriers, intrusted with public institutions—for such the railroads have been held by the Courts, both of England and America, to be—and they are in the exercise of a public employment, a sort of public office. It would be the important duty of the next Legislature, at the earliest practicable moment in the session, to appoint an appropriate committee—probably it should be a joint committee of the two houses—endowed with plenary power to investigate the whole question of freights and fares from top to bottom, to tear off the mask from the Contract and Finance Company, and from the affairs of all other companies, and ascertain the actual cost of construction and equipment of these roads, and the necessary cost of keeping them in repair and operating them, and a just scale of rates of charges for transportation that will yield a fair return on actual investment, and expense of operation and repair."

It will thus be seen that the gentleman from Sacramento, five years ago maintained the absolute necessity of taking hold of this great subject. He thought it was due to the people of the State that it should be investigated. He thought it was right and proper that freights and fares should be investigated and regulated, and I cannot forget—I have not forgotten—how eloquent the gentleman became when debating upon this question. I remember how his whole soul welled up when talking on the subject, and he seemed to be on fire, not as he said we were the other day—"with eyes aglare, head down, and tail up, crowding the best brains of this body into the dust with the mere weight of body and hardness of hoof"—but in the fullness of manhood, defending a great cause and maintaining a great principle. I would repeat the eulogium of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, paid to the bar, could I add anything to the strength and beauty of his illustration. That would be impossible, but the learned gentleman will pardon me if I take up the theme where he left it. I would add that in every instance where lawyers have stood in the front rank of their fellows, in the vanguard of human progress, it has been when they have defended the rights of man, when they have stood between the oppressed and the oppressor, when they have gathered around the altar of liberty, when they have followed the average judgment of the great middle classes, which is always right. I glory in this profession. I recognize within its ranks the defenders of the Constitution and the laws. I know their immeasurable value in a free country. I know their learning and their patriotism, their honor. Without the great names and the life-long devotion to the people's cause of the bench and the bar some of the brightest pages in our history would be left out.

But, sir, the great common people of the country, the middle classes, the people as a whole, including every class represented by every vocation, every interest, the masses in a free country, are the State. It was the people moved by one impulse, and that the sublimest that ever animated the human breast, that struck the first blow in the war for our liberty. It was the farmers, the middle class, who fought the battles of Lexington and Concord; they commenced that conflict and stood by it till the end. It was the masses who gathered around the dying Warren at Bunker Hill. It was the people who followed Washington through victory and defeat for seven years of that war. They formed the lines that encircled Saratoga, and they filled the trenches at Yorktown.

Whenever liberty demanded a martyr the people produced him. On a hundred battlefields in every part of the Union, on sea and on land. In the bivouac of the camp, and in the shock of arms. At the polls, in the church, in the school-room, by the humble fireside, at the plow, or directing the ceaseless movement of machinery by night or by day, in peace or in war, they have made our history. God bless our country, for the people are the State. And the people, the whole people, must be made secure in all their legal rights. This, and this only, we are trying to accomplish.

Now, sir, when my friend from Sacramento spoke about there being a mere temporary excitement of the people on this subject, it would have been more thoughtful in him, if he had said there is an evil somewhere, let us look for it and apply the remedy. For unless there was an evil the people would never have become excited about this matter. For one, I recognize the fact that all men are at times liable to be mistaken. I recognize the fact that it is human to err. But, sir, we are here to amend the organic law, and to make an organic law for the whole people of this State, not for the railroads, nor against them; not for any particular class; and I want to know of gentlemen here if they do not see in the signs of the times a necessity for protecting the people against the encroachments of these corporations? I took occasion the other day to say in my opening remarks that it would be but a very short time before the railroads would be owned by foreign capital. At that time I was not aware that there was any immediate probability of such an event occurring. I find in the Record-Union of this morning the following dispatch:

"CHICAGO, November 25th.—The Times has what it believes to be trustworthy information that Jay Gould has originated, and the stockholders of the Central Pacific Railroad have seconded, a plan to consolidate the Union and Central Pacific Railroads under one management, with Sidney Dillon as President; Clark, General Manager of the Union Pacific, as General Manager; and with one Board of Directors. This will greatly reduce the clerical and official force, saving enormously in salaries, and in the cost of transportation, and will form a continuous line, under one management, from Omaha to San Francisco. It is stated that the particulars are nearly arranged, a conference having taken place with General Manager Clark in New York, and with General Freight Agent Vining, of the Union Pacific, in San Francisco, during the week. A consultation will be held this week in New York between General Dillon and the President of the Central Pacific. It is further stated that the principal owners of the Central Pacific are anxious to retire, in order to take part in the construction of the Southern Pacific Railroad."

If this be true, what was foreshadowed the other day will soon occur, namely: that these great railroad and transportation companies of this coast will soon be in the hands of foreign capitalists, and the people who have grown up amongst us, who know all our necessities, whom we know, will soon pass out of the directorship of these enterprises, and how more than ever necessary will it be for the people to have some power behind the throne to control these great enterprises in the future when they shall have passed under the control and management of men whose interests are not allied with the State.

Let me say that the great necessity for regulation is shown in an article by Charles Francis Adams, upon the Railroad Commission in Great Britain. He says:

"Whenever it should appear that the railroad company abused its privileges and its power, then the time for action would have arrived. As yet this was not the case in any such degree as called for a decisive and far reaching measure of reform. To better watch over it meanwhile, and to cause its members to work with less friction among themselves, and with a more careful regard to the equal rights of private persons, an exceptional piece of governmental machinery was provided in the form of a Board of Commissioners. The powers of this tribunal were both judicial and executive in their character, and very broad. It was its duty not only to hear any complaints of private parties, but to intervene in cases of difficulty which might arise between the companies themselves. The Board was, in fact, designed to secure the community an easy and equitable interchange of traffic over its railroad lines, as well as to put a stop, in so far as might be practicable, to that unjust and vexatious system of discrimination which seems to be inseparable from all active railroad competition. Through this Board the exceptional character of the railroad system was at last recognized. An attempt was made to deal with the anomaly as an anomaly. Meanwhile, the most noticeable feature in the career of the Board, which has now been in existence five years, is the very trifling call which seems to have been made upon it. So far as can be judged from its annual reports, the cases which come before it are neither numerous nor of great importance. It would, however, be wholly unsafe to conclude from this fact that such a tribunal is unnecessary. On the contrary, it may confidently be asserted that no competent Board of Railroad Commissioners, clothed with the peculiar powers of the English Board, will ever, either there or anywhere else, have many cases to dispose of. The mere fact that the tribunal is there, that a machinery does exist for the prompt and final decision for that class of questions, puts an end to them. They no longer arise. They cease to arise, for the simple reason that the railroad corporations in these matters are not like the members of a numerous and complicated business community. The controversies among them, which do not involve legal points, are comparatively simple and confined to a few persons."

The mere fact that there is a power behind the throne; the mere fact that the sovereignty of the State has provided for a Board of Commissioners, or some representative body that can handle this subject, will render the occurrence of discriminations, and all that sort of impositions practiced upon the people, less frequent. And let me say right here, that the point made by the gentleman from Sacramento, and the gentleman from Marin, that there are no injuries now being inflicted upon the people by the railroad companies, cuts no figure. If it was true, it cuts no figure here. I claim it is not true. We are attempting to place the people out of reach of these influences—out of reach of these evils—and we must have these Commissioners vested with such power that the railroad company itself cannot veto what the Commission attempts to do. I say, whenever the railroad company can exercise the veto power over these Commissioners, we may as well abandon all hope of any good results, for nothing will be accomplished.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is claimed by some gentlemen that this matter should be left to the Legislature; that we have no confidence in the people, or else we would be willing to leave it to the Legislature; and they appeal to us by saying that we were elected by the people to this Convention, and if they were wise enough to select us to represent them in the Convention, they would be wise enough to select suitable legislators to control this matter. Mr. Chairman, I claim that this is not at all analogous. That is no argument, for this reason: it is not that the Legislature is necessarily corrupt, but it is because, under no state of circumstances can the Legislature ever act intelligently upon the matter within the short period of time allotted to that body. It cannot remedy these evils. For my part I have as great respect for the integrity of the people and the integrity of our legislators as my friend from Marin, or my friend from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton; but I challenge those gentlemen to show an instance—a solitary instance—where the Legislature of this State has acted intelligently in regulating this great question. A committee of the Legislature—which sits ninety days, or sixty days—can hardly get to the first step on this great question before the expiration of the term. We want a permanent body, that will know exactly what the people require, and what the companies require, and will thus be enabled to act wisely.

I think that was a very inapt allusion made by the gentleman from Sacramento, when he said that England had for twenty years been legislating upon this subject; that they passed over three thousand bills relating to this matter, and that this legislation had cost the companies four hundred million dollars. That is, that these railroad companies in Great Britain had spent over four hundred million dollars to curb the Parliament of England. I confess, sir, it was an inapt expression to argue in the same speech that the railroad companies should still have such opportunity to spend more money and corrupt more legislation. We want to place this temptation out of the reach of railroad companies. It is not because we say that Legislatures are corrupt—very far from it, sir—but because we want this temptation removed. And let me say right here to the gentlemen upon the other side, that if they can present some rational scheme—one that will be better than the one we have proposed—let them present it, and let us see what it is. They are always talking about the imperfections of ours. Let them present some scheme that is better for the people and more secure for the companies. I fear they are in the position of the ass in the fable that could lean against a wall and topple it over, but had not the capacity to rebuild it. Let them present some scheme, perfect in its character, that will remedy these evils. Gentlemen say to us—point out the evils. Why, Mr. Chairman, it appeals to the reason of every man that vast concentrations of power, whatever that power may consist in, are always dangerous to a free people unless it is regulated and restrained by law. Even then, sir, it requires constant watchfulness on the part of the legislative department of government. It requires the constant attention of the people to see that their rights are not infringed upon. It is human nature that if a man has a million, he wants two millions; and if he has two millions, he will want ten, and in order to attain that end he will go to the verge, if not beyond the law; and I tell you, sir, the time is coming when you will have to regulate the corporations of the country. You have an opportunity now to do it. Let us try. Let us consult together, and if you have any better scheme than we have presented—if you have any amendments to offer—let us know what they are. For one, sir, I believe, in the depth of my heart, that it is our duty to do it—that we owe it to the people of this State. We owe it to ourselves to follow the example of those Conventions in the East that have recently framed Constitutions, and put in a stringent section upon this great question, to limit their powers and circumscribe their capacity for evil, and then if you go before the people with that measure in your Constitution it will not be beaten.

I do not agree with the gentleman from Marin and the gentleman from Sacramento, that that expression at the ballot box will be fatal to the Constitution. But if it should be fatal, after we have done our best to protect the people, by framing such a Constitution as will protect them from the encroachments of these great corporations, then let it be beaten. We shall at least have done our duty. We shall at least have performed the responsible duty that has been imposed upon us. I recognize, sir, the question of taxation, and other questions which the gentleman referred to, as important questions; but I have always noticed, whenever we are discussing some subject which the gentlemen do not like, they try to evade it by saying: "Why not go to taxation; why not go on to something else, and leave this subject?" Let us stay right where we are, and consider this subject until we have done with it, and arrive at such conclusion as in our judgment is best for the people of this State; and if we do that, my word for it, no gentleman on this floor will ever have occasion to regret it. No gentleman can ever regret having done right, and this is right. Let us put such a provision in the Constitution as will forever hold these corporations to a strict accountability to the sovereign power that gave them birth.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment, to insert the word "unjust."

SPEECH OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I trust the amendment will not prevail. The section, if amended as proposed, or rather the first clause of it, will read in this wise: "No unjust discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State."

I object to this word "unjust" being interjected as proposed, because we should thereby positively, or at least by implication, sanction the idea that only unjust discrimination should be prohibited. By putting in this qualifying word, we, in effect, say that discriminations may be made which are not unjust. That is precisely the point of my objection. I insist on these two propositions. First, I say it is not true, practically, that discrimination can be made in the respects specified and yet be just. The other is, that it interjects into the clause an element of uncertainty so as to destroy its practical value.

It has been said by one gentleman, speaking of what they are pleased to call dangerous powers proposed to be conferred upon the Railroad Commissioners, that they were not only above the Legislature, and above the law, but above the people. But I answer, if this clause be left as it comes from the committee, the criticism is not well founded in fact. The one all important feature of the section, in my judgment, is that it lays down certain fixed and invincible rules of action governing alike the railroad and other transportation companies and the Commissioners. One of them is, that no discrimination whatever shall be made between persons or places, or in the facilities for transportation. But when, as by the amendment, you say no unjust discrimination may be made, it must obviously be left to the Commissioners to decide what is just and what is unjust. That is precisely, sir, what I do not wish to be done. Nor do I wish to refer such a question to any future Legislatures to determine, but I desire to prohibit all such discrimination as unjust. If you do not enact the clause as it comes from the committee it will be no rule at all. Moreover, if, by the adoption of the amendment, you say that no unjust thing shall be done, then, consistently, you must go further, and define what is just and what is unjust, else the Commissioners may decide arbitrarily and irresponsibly, or it would be left to the Legislature hereafter to determine the whole question.

MR. ANDREWS. If the gentleman will allow me a question?

MR. HALE. Certainly.

MR. ANDREWS. You believe, then, that the railroad company should be prohibited from charging more for a heavy grade than for a light grade?

MR. HALE. I intended to discuss that question farther on, but I suppose I may as well express my views upon it now as any time. One of the most notable features of our current history of progress and civilization—not limiting our observation to the State of California, but extending our observation over the whole country—is the fact that the established railroad lines through and over the country, have come to be the chief public highways, over which passes the great mass of the internal commerce of the nation. I am not prepared, at this moment, to state what proportion of the internal commerce of the United States is so conducted, or to make a statement of the aggregate value or volume of our national commerce, or the relative amount of our internal commerce as compared with the entire commerce of the nation. Probably, however, it is safe to say that the internal commerce of the United States comprises not less than four fifths of the entire commerce of the nation, and perhaps more. The commercial conditions of a people furnish the best indication of their financial condition—of the prosperity or adversity. This is universally recognized as true. Now, sir, we observe as one of the results of the establishment of great railroad lines, that the greatest bulk of internal commerce of the whole country is transacted over them. This is not a fact existing to-day merely, but every indication, prophetic of the future conditions of the country, point to the conclusion that in the future this is to be more absolutely true than now. It is therefore safe to predict that a much larger proportion of the internal commerce of the country in future will pass over these railroads than at the present time. Now, take this as a starting point: this aggregation of commerce on lines of railroads tends to concentrate capital, material, improvement, and population, along their alignments, and chiefly at their terminal points. To be more specific, as a result of the establishment of lines of railroads in the State of California, we perceive as a practical result the aggregation of nearly all commercial capital of the State, and nearly all the commercial business of importance transacted upon this coast at San Francisco. Does any gentleman challenge the truth of that statement? Now, sir, upon what condition of fact does that important result depend? I maintain, sir, it is the legitimate result of the discriminations that are now permissible, that actually are made, that have been made, and will be made, except as restrained by the provision as here reported by the committee, that there shall be no discrimination between persons or between places, in the charges or facilities for transportation. For an example, sir, can you ship goods from New York to Auburn, to Sacramento, to Stockton, to San José, with like facilities as to San Francisco? No, sir, nothing of the kind. I had a chance a short while ago to test that. I found that I could not make a shipment to Auburn, my place of business, at all, owing to an arrangement between the great railroad companies. I found myself compelled to pay through freight to San Francisco, and then pay local rates back over the same road to my place of business. The tendency and necessary result of such arrangements and policies is to discourage all business except at grand terminal points on these great railroads, and hence the necessity of the interdiction of all discriminations between places, as to charges and facilities for transportation. This provision proposes to require of these companies that they shall not tolerate any such discrimination in any case whatever. It may be said, Mr. Chairman, and I recognize the truth of the proposition, that the railroad lines can do the aggregate of their transportation business exclusively between terminal points, at lower rates and for less money then they could if governed by the provisions of this section nineteen as it comes from the committee. But I nevertheless claim that it is sound public policy, that it is sound American statesmanship, not only for us in California, but for the people of the whole country, to break down this system of concentration, otherwise, by the adoption of extended railroad lines and other modes of interior transportation for the conduct of our internal commerce, we will destroy the prosperity of all the points along their lines except the terminal points, where capital will be aggregated. That certainly is not a condition of things to be desired. That will destroy the prosperity and importance of the interior portions of the State, and transfer the wealth of the country to the few great railroad centers.

This question of discrimination between places and between persons, in the charges for freights and fares, and the facilities for transportation, is a matter of the greatest moment. If we wish to preserve the integrity of the people, as a whole, and the rights of all the people in the various parts of the State, wherever they may be, we must provide against this discrimination.

Now the gentleman from Shasta, Mr. Andrews, asks me if I would make a difference between a light grade and a heavy grade road. In the transportation over the entire line, I answer no. These railroads are State and national highways, and over them, as such, the business of the country, the commerce of the country, is and must be conducted. The people, when they travel, must travel upon these lines. A law of necessity compels this result. For instance, in some portions of the county where I reside, the railroad charges for passengers are fixed at such a rate that the old stage lines could resume their business profitably, but they are, nevertheless, deterred from doing so, for the reason that the railroad company can, without loss to itself, put the charges down to a point where the stage companies could not compete, and by so doing the stage lines would be driven off. The result is that they do not attempt to compete with the railroad, because the railroad company have it in their power to drive off all competition. The result is that if we wish to travel between points on the railroad, we must travel in the cars, or by our own conveyance. It is in this sense that the railroads are public highways. Not that any man should have the right to go upon the road and ride free of any charge or cost. He must do so upon the terms and conditions prescribed by law. But when that regulation is made—and it should be regulated—it should be made equal; it should be uniform, so that all citizens of the State of California, upon the line of the road, shall have the right to travel upon it, upon the payment of equal charges.

"But," say the gentlemen on the other side, "the risk is a great deal more on some roads; it costs a great deal more to build and operate a road over a heavy grade than where the ground is level; that more power is necessary to move freight over one than the other." That is true, sir. I recognize that fact. For instance, there is on the railroad line below the Town of Auburn, where I reside, a long, deep cut, eighty feet deep, and the actual cost, as I am credibly informed, of constructing that short piece of road, was eighty thousand dollars. Coming thence down toward the City of Sacramento, on the railroad, you pass along an easy tract of country till you come to the bridge and its approaches across the American River, which cost perhaps one hundred thousand dollars. Going still farther up in the mountains you come to a series of tunnels which cost very large sums of money, greatly disproportionate to the average cost of the general line of the road. Now does all this furnish good reason why the railroad company shall throw upon the immediate community around this cut, these tunnels, and near this bridge, the burden of the entire cost of construction? These difficult places are, after all, only parts of the general line of railroad, which is a highway. The entire railroad line has no value except as it may connect over the river, through the tunnel, and through the cut. The people who live at these points have contributed alike with all others in the construction of the entire road. In one sense you may say these roads belong to the company, but in another sense they do not. After all, sir, the cost of these roads, whatever it may be, sooner or later comes out of the pockets of the people. It must be so, because the ultimate cost of the road has been or will be realized out of the proceeds or earnings of the road. Again, it must be conceded that one of the highest duties the State owes to its citizens, that the government owes to those who are governed, is to furnish reasonable facilities for commerce, and intercommunication of the people, as by the opening and maintenance of highways. Indeed, sir, the character and condition of the highways of any people supply the most significant and important indications of the degree of progress and civilization of the country in which they exist. Therefore, sir, one of the most important duties the State has cast upon it, in legislating for the people, is to provide a system of highways for the convenient conduct of all the internal commerce of our people. This involves the transportation of all the freight, and the conveyance of all the passengers, and we should have such highways that all the people shall have equal facilities upon such roads, and be treated alike in the charges for their use.

Now, sir, if we retain this section as reported from the committee, this discrimination, which is in the interest of the terminal cities, as against the intermediate points, will be done away with, and this system will be broken up. I trust that we shall pass this section just as it comes from the committee. I believe the rule it declares to be right, and that it will work a great public good, while no wrong will be done to the carriers. I think it should be engrafted in the Constitution, and thus placed beyond the reach of legislative action or discretion.

But what I say is this, that this rule of equality shall be made permanent, strong, and inviolate, for the benefit of all the people of the State. Whatever we shall do with reference to the Commission, I hope we shall lay the foundation for future harmony between the people of this State and the railroads and other transportation companies, and secure the rights of the people and the welfare of the companies. I hope, therefore, that this amendment will not prevail, and that we shall adopt this section as it comes from the committee. I believe it is right. Let us have no element of uncertainty. Let the rule be so simple and plain that a child can understand it, so that no one can misinterpret the meaning and intent of the law, and it will, I believe, equally benefit the people and the railroad companies.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I move a call of the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. That motion cannot be made in the Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I trust the amendment will not be adopted. I do not intend to discuss it, only to say that you might just as well strike out the entire section if you put that word "unjust" in. It will throw it open to adjudication, and inject into it an element of uncertainty, and instead of being a permanent rule it is an uncertain rule. The question will have to be determined as to what is unjust discrimination. One may say it is one thing, and another would say it is another. You would have to call a jury in every case to determine that question. You might as well strike out the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Lost.

MR. TULLY. I have an amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall, after the adoption of this Constitution, establish and provide a system for the enforcement of an equitable tariff of rates to be charged for the transportation of freight and passengers by the railroad and transfer companies of this State, and all appropriate legislation to prevent undue and unwarrantable discrimination in such charges or in the facilities for the transportation of the same class of freight or passengers by such companies between persons and places, and shall compel the observance of the same by fines and forfeitures upon such railroad and transfer companies, and by an imprisonment of the officers or employés thereof, at its discretion."

MR. LARKIN. I don't think that is a proper amendment to this section. I think he had better offer it as a separate section.

MR. TULLY. I offer it as a substitute for section nineteen. I am opposed to the creation of these Commissioners by the Convention. If this is adopted it will in effect be a substitute for nineteen and twenty, as I understand. It leaves the whole matter of regulating the freights and fares to the Legislature.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Lost.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section nineteen by inserting the word 'other' between the words 'or' and 'transportation,' in the second line, and by inserting the word 'other,' between the words 'any' and 'transportation' in the fifth line."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. That is merely a verbal correction. It will then read as follows:

"SEC. 19. No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or other transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State. Persons and property transported over any railroad, or by any other transportation company or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class, in the same direction, to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates."

You will notice in the preceding section, these words are used. I think it is an omission in this section. It is simply to make the language more plain and definite. It may appear, as it stands now, as if railroads are not included in the term "transportation companies." I think there is no objection.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. DAVIS. I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section nineteen by inserting after the word 'State,' and

Digitized by Google

before the word 'persons,' in line four, the following words: 'Except freight of a perishable nature, which shall at all times take precedence.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on this amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. DAVIS.

MR. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman: I presume the committee will understand that there are many articles that are liable to decay on account of the heat of Summer and the cold of Winter. It is not necessary for me to occupy the time, as the necessity for this amendment must be apparent, and I hope it will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I think this amendment would make the section nonsensical. The truth of the matter is, that the first part of this section is aimed at discrimination as to the price of freight; it is aimed at discrimination between persons and places only; and if this amendment is added to the end of that sentence, it would make nonsense of it, and there is no use of it.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: The objection raised by the gentleman himself is not well founded. If he will read a little farther he will discover: "No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or other transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State." It says "facilities for transportation," and the proposed amendment says, "except perishable articles." I think the object of the amendment is a good one, and I think it is highly necessary. Fruits, milk, meat, etc., must be preferred over all other freights, or else they will be virtually prohibited. It would hardly be possible to supply the markets of San Francisco and other cities with perishable produce, unless these perishable goods can be shipped through without being delayed by other goods. It seems to me that this is a very necessary amendment to make. If you do not amend it, then perishable goods can have no preference.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any objection to the amendment. I do not see why it should not be adopted, to do away with any doubt.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: In the eighth line you will see the words "same class." Every gentleman acquainted with the business of shipping freight knows that all articles of freight are classified according to the nature and character of the freight. Now, perishable articles will be in a separate class—in a class which recognizes these articles. They will be shipped in that class, and under the regulations governing the shipment of that class of freight. But no discrimination will be allowed between persons having perishable goods. That is the meaning of the section, that the same class of freight offered at any depot or station, shall be taken and transported without discrimination. I do not think that the amendment is at all necessary.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: It does not seem to me that the proposed amendment is necessary at all. I take the view of it that the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. West, takes. I suppose there is a class of freight, such as produce for the cities, of a perishable nature, and I suppose the railroad company makes a regulation that all such freight shall take precedence over other freight not perishable; and certainly such action on their part could not be held to be a discrimination according to the language of this section. It is a just regulation, and in no sense discrimination. Then the section does not prohibit, as has been intimated and agreed here, a just regulation of these matters. But it does prohibit discrimination. What does the word "discrimination" mean? Why, sir, the very signification of the word is "injustice." And the attempt to interject the word "unjust" before the word "discrimination," was equivalent to saying that you shall not do any "unjust injustice." That is what it amounts to. So I think, with regard to this amendment, that there is no need of it, because a regulation that would provide for the forwarding of freight of a perishable nature, would not be discrimination in favor of or against anybody else. It seems to me so, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

MR. CAMPBELL. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, whether, when he says a man has a very discriminating mind, he means the man has a very unjust mind?

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that this amendment suggests to us that we have made a mistake in voting down the amendment suggested by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations. Now it does strike me that we should have the word "unjust" there. I have as yet heard no answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Shasta, Mr. Andrews, if a difference in charges on different roads, for instance, where the grade is different, would be a discrimination. I think it must be a discrimination, and we say here that there shall not be any discrimination, leaving out the word "unjust." Now, is it not a discrimination to say that one kind of freight shall be run through with greater expedition than another kind? Is not that a discrimination with reference to freight? It strikes me that it is, and I do not see how any man can say otherwise. It is obvious, from the fact that the gentleman suggests this amendment, that it is a discrimination. But the question is, is not that a just and proper discrimination? If it is, why, certainly, the committee made a mistake in refusing to insert the word "unjust." Some gentlemen may say that the Courts will construe that to mean only a just discrimination. That it means that you shall not unjustly and unduly discriminate. Now, if the Courts are obliged to interject this amendment in order to make common sense out of it, why leave it for the Courts to do; why not put it in the Constitution so as to take away such necessity on the part of the Courts, and make our meaning plain. If we want the Courts to construe it in that way, then it is our business to put it in here. I merely throw out this suggestion. I have not occupied the time of the committee on this subject, and have contented myself with listening attentively, and voting. But it does strike me that the amendment of the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations should have been adopted, or else the word "undue" should be inserted, as it is in other Constitutions containing similar provisions.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I think the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, mistakes altogether the purpose of this section, and the operation of it, upon the subject of railroads. In the first place, say a party is shipping from San Francisco to Bakersfield. From here to Bakersfield is a level road, and easy grade. Now, sir, there should be no discrimination between shipments over that road. When you leave Bakersfield, going south, you commence a heavy grade. Now, I do not say that more shall not be charged per ton, per mile, from Bakersfield to Los Angeles, than from San Francisco to Bakersfield. They have a right to charge a fair increase according to the increase of the grade. The section itself does not prevent them from doing so. It would prevent the railroad from charging more to one man than to another. That is the aim, and that is the effect of the section. Therefore, the gentleman misapprehends the whole thing. I see nothing in the objection. This section is right. I advise gentlemen to stick to the report of the committee, if they ever intend to make any progress.

MR. BARBOUR. Is there anybody here who can define what perishable property is? I am not in favor of allowing the railroad companies to be the judge as to what is perishable property and what is not.

MR. HALE. I desire to suggest to my friend from Nevada, whether he would not better accomplish his purpose by making the section read in this way: "except perishable freights."

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Why not leave that to the Commission, if you are going to have a Commission, and if not, leave it to the Legislature. Don't tinker with these small things.

MR. DAVIS. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Placer is a good one, and I have no objection to it.

THE CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman accept the amendment.

MR. HALE. I do not suppose he can accept it, for he proposes to amend at one point, and I propose to amend at another.

MR. DAVIS. I accept the amendment.

MR. HALE. I will interject the words "except in favor of perishable freight," after the word "freight," in the third line. It is now nearly time for recess, but if the committee desires to act upon it now, I will write it out and put it in shape.

MR. HOWARD. Let us go through with it now.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as modified. Lost.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. O'DONNELL. I call for the previous question.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, the Secretary will read section twenty.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I desire to make a motion that the committee rise, that the members may have a chance to get a breath of fresh air.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

RECESS.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that we now take a recess until seven o'clock P. M.

THE PRESIDENT, at four o'clock and fifty-two minutes, declared a recess until seven o'clock P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at seven o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair. Roll called and a quorum present.

RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twenty.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State, at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; hear and determine complaints against railroad or other transportation companies; affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in the foregoing sections.

MR. PROUTY. I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to section twenty: 'Provided that nothing in the foregoing sections shall be so construed as to prevent the Legislature, by a three-fourths vote of all the members of both branches thereof, from changing or annulling the action of said Commission, as in their opinion the public good may demand.'"

MR. WATERS. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Every railway company or corporation, and ever other common carrier by railroad, now or hereafter doing business in this State, shall be entitled to a reasonable compensation for its services, and no more. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified electors of this State, at each gubernatorial election, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years from the first Monday in January succeeding their election. Each of them shall be a qualified elector of the State, and shall not be interested as owner, partner, stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé in the business of transportation. Said Commissioners, or a majority of them, shall make a schedule of reasonable charges for the transportation of passengers, freight, and cars over each railroad now or hereafter operated in this State, as well as reasonable rates for receiving, handling, and delivering freight and cars on such roads. In any action, prosecution, or proceeding, by or against any person or corporation, such schedule, or a certified copy thereof, shall be deemed, received, and taken as prima facie evidence that the rates therein fixed are reasonable rates of charges over the road or roads for which such schedule was prepared. They shall alter, revise, and amend such schedules as they shall from time to time deem just, and shall perform such other duties and possess such further powers, not inconsistent with this section, as may hereafter be prescribed or conferred by law. No charge by any railroad company, or other common carrier, shall be deemed reasonable if in excess of the sum which it is now entitled by law to exact for a like service."

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire to say anything further in addition to what I said this morning. I ask a careful consideration of that amendment by this Convention, and hope that it will be adopted.

SPEECH OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to submit a few reasons why I cannot support the twentieth section as it comes from the Committee on Corporations, and the following sections of course follow. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest respect for that committee, and for its individual members. They are men of experience, and they have devoted a great deal of time to the preparation of this report, and to the arguments which they have presented; but after thoroughly considering the report, and listening attentively to the able arguments that have been produced here in its support, I yet cannot find it consistent with my sense of duty to support that section and those following. Now, I suppose it will be generally conceded at this time that the power to regulate these corporations exists in the State. If that has been a debatable question heretofore, since the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, reported in the fourth of Otto—more generally called the Granger cases—I presume that it can no longer be considered a debatable question merely upon that point; and the decision announces no new law, but refers to law as old as the time of Sir Matthew Hale, in support of the doctrine there enunciated; and, although corporations may desire to have a different rule, I presume that now no one will seriously contend that the power of the people, through the Government, cannot be invoked to regulate these corporations. But, sir, admitting that to its fullest extent, I cannot subscribe to the policy which this twentieth section contemplates. Now, sir, what do we understand by the power of the people to regulate these corporations? Sir, we merely understand that this power of the people is to be exercised through the Government. It is not contemplated nor imagined that the people, en masse, can regulate these questions. They must do it through their organization, to wit: the Government. Now, sir, what is the Government as understood by the American people? Why, sir, one of the great triumvirate that indited the papers known generally as the Federalist, Alexander Hamilton, at that day announced it in one of its papers that it was axiomatic that popular republican government consisted of three coördinate, coequal branches, to wit: legislative, executive, and judicial; and that constitutes popular republican government. It was because the old confederation did not conform to this, because it did not have in it and did not recognize these cardinal principles, these axioms in a popular government, that it was displaced and the present Government of the United States was installed in its stead. And it was in advocacy of the present Constitution of the United States against the weak, puerile Government of the old Confederation that this announcement was made—that now it had been admitted an axiom in government, that in order to exist as a government, it must possess these three coördinate, independent powers.

All the States of this Union, Mr. Chairman, recognize this as cardinal in all government in this country. I hope gentlemen will bear in mind the difference in this respect between adopting this and an ordinary legislative enactment. We are not now forming an ordinary legislative law, but we are preparing and formulating a Constitutional Government. We are going down to the substratum, and what we put into this instrument will control not only the Courts, but the executive and judicial departments of the Government. Then, sir, if this twentieth section is incorporated into the Constitution, what do we have? Why, we destroy that feature in republican representative government, of three distinct, independent, coördinate departments, and we create a fourth, which is greater in some respects than all the others, and, like Aaron's serpent, swallows them all up. Now, can there be any denying this? Why, a mere inspection of the twentieth section will show you that this is no exaggeration at all. It provides for the election of these men like the Governor of the State; it defines their duties; it gives them the sole power in these matters. They not only have the power of legislation, under the law, in fixing these rates, but they have the judicial power to hear and determine. It is the very essence of jurisdiction and judicial power, and they can call upon the Courts and the rest of the departments to enforce their decrees. They therefore embrace, to this great extent, all the three departments of government, and in matters more important, than can possibly come before the other three.

Now, sir, as to the argument in support of this departure from our theory of government—because it can be nothing less than that—it is a clear departure from our theory of government, and if that section prevails, we must modify that article of the Constitution which distributes the powers of the government, in order to conform to it. What are the arguments deduced in support of such an extraordinary proposition as that? That the people demand this; that the Legislature cannot be trusted. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, I deny the right of some gentlemen, the youngest members of this body—some gentlemen from San Francisco, who perhaps have been in the State only a few years—I deny that they have any authority above their fellow members here for announcing what the people demand. As the witty John Van Buren once remarked when he was answering this demagogical catch of what the people want, what the people say, and what the people were going to do, that he didn't know of any better guide or rule to ascertain what the people wanted, than to ascertain what he wanted himself, inasmuch as he claimed himself to be one of the people. How do we know what the people want except by ascertaining what we, as men of common sense, of common intelligence, as a part of the people, coming from the people, want? What we want is what the people want, necessarily. We are of the same constituents that they are, part and parcel of the State, and it is sheer demagogism to continually harp upon what the people want. In a matter of such great moment, such vast magnitude, a matter that will affect us, if adopted, for years in this State, it seems to me that it requires that we should address ourselves to it in a calm and dispassionate manner, and not be continually appealing to the feelings or prejudices of members to control them in one way or the other.

Now, sir, the other argument that we cannot trust the Legislature. Do members stop to think for a moment what the inevitable result of that admission is? It is nothing more nor less than an acknowledgment of the failure of republican government. There is no escape from it. If we solemnly declare here that experience has demonstrated that the legislative department of the Government cannot be trusted in the exercise of the necessary functions falling to such a body, I say the conclusion is inevitable, and there is no escape from it, that republican government is a failure, and some other government must be adopted. Now, sir, I challenge any gentleman on this floor to stand up in his place and admit here the logical result of this claim, that the Legislature cannot be trusted, and that is, that republican government on American soil has proven a failure. I wish no gentleman of the committee to announce that as his deliberate opinion, because that is what it comes to. Now, sir, who are these legislators? Where do they come from? Why, we would suppose if we had just come into this Convention from some other country, and were unaccustomed to our form of government, that the members comprising these Legislatures were a race different from ordinary mortals; that they didn't come from the rest of the community. Who is it that elects the Legislature? Why, the same qualified electors that elect your Governor; the same qualified electors that elect the Judges of your higher Courts. And it is claimed here, that these men who must, in the nature of things, be trusted, if you preserve the form of government, that these electors scattered through the State are incompetent, and when we cease to exercise the functions which have been committed to us by their choice, that they, forever after, are incompetent to select men to discharge their business in a legislative capacity. That is the argument. Now, sir, is there anything to justify that? Suppose there have been abortive attempts at checking evils. Does it follow from that that you cannot trust the Legislature in anything, or forever more? Why, is it not the history of every effort in this line, that it must be repeated—that you must try again? As a matter of course it requires experience to ascertain what is right in the premises, and the very gentlemen here who have so maligned the Legislatures, and who say they will not trust the Legislatures, have, of themselves, admitted that the Legislature, in the nature of things, cannot, during one session, arrive at a just schedule of freights and fares. Notwithstanding this admission, that the Legislature, with all its wisdom, and however honest it may be, cannot, during one session, arrive at a correct conclusion in reference to this subject, and still they say: "You cannot trust the Legislature; we must fix it all up right here; we must leave nothing to be done in the future." Now, this is perfectly impossible. You must trust the Legislature. Unless we conclude to do that in the future, as it has been in the past, it will be better for us to adjourn at once, and acknowledge that the whole structure was a failure.

Now, sir, I am in favor of a Commission; I think it a proper and a legitimate mode of arriving at the matter; I think it is necessary in order to place within the knowledge of the Legislature sufficient and correct data on which they can found proper action. But, sir, while I am in favor of a Commission, I am not in favor of surrendering the State government to any three men. Right here I wish to ask those gentlemen, who are so loud in their denunciation of Legislatures, and who say it will not do to trust the Legislature, how they expect to select these three Commissioners? They do not propose to disfranchise the present electors of the State. I have not heard that proposed. Here these three Commissioners are to be selected by the same electors that send us here, by the same that select your Governors, by the same that select your members of the Legislature, and your Supreme Judges—precisely the same. Now, in all these three departments of government, they have proven themselves ignorant and corrupt—these electors—but in reference to these three Commissioners, it is presumed here, I suppose, that they will select from the whole State, the only honest, the only intelligent men in the State. It is a mere delusion. Mr. Chairman, as practical business men, we must look at this question in a practical business point of view. All this talk about the people desiring this to be thrown into their hands is simply talk, because the people, en masse, cannot select these men. They send men and delegates to some Convention; that is the first movement to select these Commissioners. Where do these delegates go? They go to a State Convention composed of politicians, just like all our State Conventions are. What is the business of that State Convention? Why, they commence at the head of the ticket, usually at the office of Governor, and go along down, and among the rest, they nominate these Railroad Commissioners. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is within the knowledge and experience of all of us, that while we had a State Printer elected in this State, the whole work was a job from beginning to end, and it was so much a scandal that the whole thing was wiped out of existence, because of its demoralizing effect in the nominating Convention; because in every Convention, whether it was a Republican Convention or a Democratic Convention, the same experience followed, that this State Printing Office, being an office of considerable emolument, demoralized every Convention. It was farmed out among men who put up and put down things on purpose to nominate the State Printer. Every one knows that to be the effect, and the same result would follow in case you elect these three Commissioners. These three offices, possessing such immense power, would be sought for, not for the salary, because I do not think very much compensation would be allowed them, perhaps three thousand dollars per annum, but for the purpose of making out of the office, either in farming it out or by corruption. The result would be that the Democratic Convention, and the Republican Convention, and the Workingmen's Convention, or any other State Convention, that might meet to nominate these officers, would be demoralized, in order to secure these officers—for the purpose of nominating these officers—and the people would be obliged to vote for the Commissioners presented on one of these tickets. I say, Mr. Chairman, that we must look at this in a practical point of view. That would be the practical working of this section.

Now, the gentleman from Los Angeles referred to Boards of Supervisors as an analogy to this. Boards of Supervisors and other Commissions possess, in a measure, legislative, executive, and judicial powers. Mr. Chairman, there is a great difference between these subordinate Boards and Commissions and a Commission appointed under the Constitution. They are subordinate to the power of the State necessarily. This Commission, if we pass this section, would not be subordinate to the other powers of the State. The Chairman of the Committee on Corporations has referred to the great powers of the Transportation Commission in Great Britain. That is not a parallel case, because every lawyer knows, and perhaps most laymen, that in Great Britain they have no written Constitution. In Great Britain there is no power above the power of Parliament. Parliament in Great Britain is omnipotent—essentially so. Therefore the Commission in Great Britain is a Parliamentary Commission, and there is no analogy unless we empower the Legislature to appoint a Legislative Commission. Then there would be an analogy. Now, sir, it makes no difference, practically, how much power that Commission has in Great Britain, because if they attempt to abuse their trust the strong hand of Parliament can shut down on them and destroy their power and in fact put them out of existence by one breath. How is it here, if this twentieth section enters into the Constitution? Why, as I remarked before, it is necessarily above and beyond the reach of the legislative power. And what is the legislative power? It is the power and voice of the people—nothing else. They are the representatives directly from the people. Therefore you create a body of men who are alone and beyond the reach of the people. Is not that so necessarily? I say there is no analogy between the Commission in Great Britain and the Commission you propose to establish here. Further, Mr. Chairman, the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations and other gentlemen have referred to the powers of other Commissions in this country. I wish to ask some gentleman who has informed himself upon this subject, whether there is any case in the United States where in the Constitution there exists a provision at all like this twentieth section. I want to know if there is a single Constitution within the whole of the States of this Union where there is embodied in the fundamental law of that State, or any other State, a provision at all similar to this twentieth section, where it provides for a body of men to whom it commits the sole power to establish their rates, to hear and determine questions, and to call upon the other powers of the State to enforce their edicts. Sir, I understand that the majority of these Commissions are purely legislative Commissions. Now, sir, there is no danger in any Commission of that kind, however great its powers may be, for there is a power behind it that can throttle it whenever it attempts to abuse the high trust conferred upon it. I say there is no danger in a Commission if you reserve some power that can control it; but here there is no reservation at all. Therefore the argument that was attempted to be adduced here in favor of this, drawn from reference to other Commissions, I think has no great force.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to impress upon the members of the committee the important fact that we are liable, very liable, in the present temper of the people—and I have no doubt that the state of feeling has been produced by many abuses; I do not deny that—but I say, Mr. Chairman, in this Constitutional Convention, smarting under this feeling, or actuated by a feeling of enmity or hostility to these great corporations, we are in danger of running to excesses which we will not discover, perhaps, until too late to correct them. But the correction will come; and if we commit excesses here the result will be the defeat of this instrument. Now, sir, for one, I came here, and I have no doubt the rest of the gentlemen in the Convention all came here, with the sincere purpose of working to the sole end of revising the Constitution so as to improve it, and to better adapt it to the wants and conditions of the people of the State at the present time. There are some great and important questions that we should act upon, and that we should improve on in the present instrument. They are known to us all. I am in favor, with reference to corporations, of holding on to all we have got, making it fixed in the fundamental law of the land, but in doing so not to go to excess in such a manner that we cannot remedy it if the instrument is adopted, or that will possibly insure its defeat on the other hand. We should attempt to remedy the evils in reference to assessment and taxation. They are evils under which the people of this State are groaning. All recognize the inequality of taxation. We should reform the judicial branch of our State, and I say this without designing to reflect upon the judiciary; I attribute it to the system. I say we want a change. Every one recognizes the fact that it can be improved. We should abolish the separate judicial elections; that will relieve the people of the State of hundreds of thousands of dollars of useless, unnecessary expenses. We should transfer our elections from the odd to the even year, thereby saving other hundreds of thousands of dollars. We are necessarily obliged to have elections on even years for President and members of Congress. These things all will recognize as a vast improvement on the present Constitution. If we attend to them, and attend to the question of corporations, in a dispassionate, calm, and prudent way, and if our action is based upon judgment, and not upon passion or prejudice, we will frame an instrument here that the people will approve, and under which their prosperity also will be enhanced.

SPEECH OF MR. WICKES.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I think I rightly represent the temper of that section of the State which I have the honor to represent, when I state that they wish a change in the mode of railroad intervention and legislation, and a wave of popular indignation against corporations, and against the Central Pacific Railroad in particular, bore many of us hither. But popular clamor is silent now. The people outside await our action here, with dignified and breathless expectation. They do not wish us to indulge in invective; they will award us no credit for denunciation. They wish us to treat this question within the pure, serene atmosphere of reason and constitutional law.

Since God gave the command to man to subdue the earth, and to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, the line of evolution, in the development of industrial growth, has extended from the wants of the individual to the wants of the community. From the initial point of civilization to the present advanced age, the gradual concentration of business power has been analogous to the increasing nervous power from the coral zoophyte to organic man. There is now a web of interdependence everywhere, made up of the reciprocal relations between the producer, transporter, and consumer. Society is now a vast organism, in which the growth of industrial resources requires and has built up this greater concentration and circulation of business power. The great railroad trunks and their branches are the large circulatory blood vessels of this organism, stimulating business activities everywhere. Yet it needs a head, and its tendency is to consolidate under a head, or a combination. This head will subordinate the State to its influence, or the State must subordinate it to legislative control. The Convention seems agreed to this, yet analysis of it gives three classes of minds, differing as to the mode. Some are for leaving this power in the hands of the Legislature; some would vest it in an inquisitorial Commission, and others would vest it in this elective Commission, with plenary powers, as reported by the committee in section twenty of its report.

I am opposed to its control by the Legislature. The people know that its intervention hitherto in railroad matters has been farcical.

First—Because of the facilities presented for the corrupting of that body—responsibility being too much distributed to secure the rigid scrutiny of the public. Give due weight and consideration to the words of one whom so many of you admire—Henry Edgerton—found in a speech which he delivered, reported in the Sacramento Union August eighteenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-five, from which I read. He says: "But a few years since, a director of the Central Pacific Railroad Company said, in substance, that that concern would not then actively participate in general politics, because it was easier to buy legislators than it was (thank God)! to debauch the people." Despicable, execrable as was both the motive and the sentiment, experience has proven the observation a shrewd one; for the facility with which they have hitherto manipulated your Legislatures is proverbial. The two last, one Democratic and the other Republican, instead of exercising their constitutional functions as a coördinate branch of the government, in the true interests of the people, at once abdicated their sacred trust to that company, and became its obsequious tool. The most servile and abject of the parliaments of France never bent in more complete submission to the will of a Bourbon monarch than did those bodies to the beheats of the railroad kings.

"The evidences of the surrender were bald, convincing, and humiliating to the last degree. Visiting the Assembly chamber on the occasion of a final vote upon a measure of great public interest, the bill for the reduction of freights and fares—forgetful of the rule excluding from the floor of that august body those who were not members, or in the category of State officers—I was proceeding to a seat inside the rail, when I was courteously reminded that my irreverent feet were on holy ground, and directed to a seat in the gallery. Arriving there, I soon discovered that I had been ordered away only to make room for the leper Stanford, with his body-guard and train-bands who thronged the floor of the chamber, as well as every recess and precinct of the Capitol; and then followed such a saturnalian scene of legislative perfidy and debauch as was never before enacted since the Commons sat."

He stated further, that "the individual conscience and will shall be stifled beneath the despotic influence of powers usurped and centralized in relentless, remorseless, irresponsible, moneyed corporations." That "the authors of these rings, had they lived in the days of Publicola, would have been hurled from the Tarpeian rock!"

Second—Again, I am opposed to direct legislative intervention, because that body meets but a short time, once in two years, hence it cannot give that close and constant attention which this subject demands.

Third—The Legislature is generally composed of men who have no fitness for intervention in railroad affairs. I am in favor of the elective Commission as reported; first, because it is a representative body, elected by the people. In this connection, I deny that it is an absolute body, because its powers seem to embrace the three departments of government. The division of government into three branches is an arbitrary one for convenience of administration. The legislative, executive, and judicial functions naturally telescope into or blend with each other, and are reciprocative. Again, this tribunal is limited in various ways—they must report to the Governor; they must bring suit through the Courts; they must perform such duties as may be prescribed by law. Again, they are bound by that instinctive sense of justice in the hearts of the people, to give a fair hearing to the Railroad Directors before they fix any tariff or take any judicial action. Next, I am in favor of it because responsibility is so localized in this triumvirate, that the light of public scrutiny can be concentrated upon it in an intense focus. Third, it is the best custodian of the public interests, because it can give constant attention to this work.

Fourth—In selecting this tribunal of three from the large population of California, the people have a great margin of choice from which to secure men of fitness and integrity.

I regret to call attention, in this connection, to an invidious comparison that was drawn here, in a gentleman's speech, between the members of this body representing the legal profession, and those from other vocations in life. He declared that "the lawyers were the brains of the Convention, who, when deliberating upon any important measure, were overpowered by a rush of brawn and muscle from the other side of the house." Now, if the lawyers are the brains of the Convention, their instincts and judgment cannot be unerring, for they differ and divide upon every question. It was further stated that in the structure of our civil freedom, "every stone had been cemented by their blood." If they have thus served their country, it has well rewarded them by bestowing upon them the best part of the offices in its gift. But I have no prejudices against lawyers. Some of them upon this floor are ornaments to their profession and to society. A word, however, might have been said in eulogy of the students, artisans, yeomanry, and workingmen of our land. Of all professions, the student philosophers stand highest; men who follow in the footsteps of Newton, Galileo, Bacon, Kepler, Stephenson, Brunel, Rittenhouse, Franklin, Fulton, Howe, Morse, and Edison. These are the men who have exalted human nature above the petty round of earth, and made life sublime. They have laid the mathematic chain from star to star, and sounded the depths of the universe. They have applied the logic of mathematics to grind your corn, to lift the water from your mines, to propel your loaded trains up the ascending grade. They have made a way for navigation across the pathless sea. They have forged the electric chain and bound the lightning's wing.

A meed of praise also might have been awarded our artisans. These men, in times past, with level, square, line, and plummet, planned and raised the colossal pyramids, built the temple of Solomon, lifted the mighty dome of St. Peter, and its kindred cathedrals; found Rome brick, and left it marble; and none are more worthy to wear the crown of civic honors than those, who, at the call of our country, left the plow, anvil, and work-bench, by brawn and muscle to push roads through the swamps of the South, along which to carry the flag of the republic, 'mid storm of shot and shell, to victory.

These are the men who are now coming to the front to maintain the integrity and dominion of the Caucasian race; to redeem and ennoble their country; to whom I apply the inspired words of the prophet Balak, I bless them, and they shall be blessed. [Applause.]

MR. WATERS in the chair.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I had supposed that when we came to the consideration of this report, each section would be disposed of as we reached it, but this debate has drifted away from the proposition of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Colonel Ayers, a fusilade has been opened along the whole line—one of them assailing the whole report and the whole plan offered by the committee. I, as a member of the committee—after deliberating a considerable time upon this whole section, which seems to be the rock ahead on which the railroad corporations are liable to split, and against which all the engineering efforts of their engineers here are directed—now subscribe to it. I gave my consent to it, although in the beginning doubting very seriously the propriety of intrusting such power to any Board of men, whether appointed or elected, or in anywise constituted. I do not subscribe to the details of the plan as presented, exactly. I have a minority report, which I shall endeavor to present and have considered, which, in my humble judgment, meets some of the objections which have been made against the general plan of the Commission, as to the powers that are sought to be conferred. And when it is so amended as to meet the wishes and to meet the views of those who are sincere and earnest in their desire to respond to what seems to be a universal demand of the people of this State, I hope it will go through, and that it will receive the sanction of the people at the polls, when they come to the ratification of the Constitution we may submit.

Now, sir, my position on the subject of corporations is this: I am not to be deterred from what I conceive to be my duty, from what I think I may safely say has been the practice of my whole life, by any comparisons to "unfeathered bipeds," or "mad bulls, with horns down and tails erect." I shall not be deterred by any cry of that kind, from rescuing this country from what I believe to be the most dangerous tendencies, the most anti-republican theories, which threaten our free institutions themselves; from pernicious doctrines which have been advocated, and which have grown by legislative enactment and decisions of Courts into usages which require, in my humble judgment, the beheading process. This great legal lie which has been preached all over the United States, and which has been preached in this Convention, shall be met by an indignant people, or the representatives of an indignant people, who offset against all this sophistry that is thrown on the plain common sense of plain, practical men.

Now, sir, the subject before the committee is railroad corporations and their regulation. The argument is substantially put forth here, that the railroad property, that is to say, including the franchise of the railroad, its right of way and its right to take toll, are private property. Against that, sir, I maintain that our whole theory of government rises up against these assumptions. But for forty years, in consequence of a mistaken idea from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, that great legal lie has been maintained, and has been rammed down the throats of the people, until corporations have grown more powerful than the State, and in their blighting presence, as in the presence of the upas tree, no business can live. No honorable ambition can stir in the breast of an honorable man with any hope of success, for the path to honor lies only in servility and subservience to corporate power. I maintain that the emergency is upon the people of this State now, to come fully up to the progressive spirit of this age. Now is their golden opportunity to rid themselves of that which will ultimately destroy the sovereignty of the State, and destroy free institutions themselves. Therefore I am in favor of bringing to bear on the railroad corporations, the whole constitutional power of the State; the police power, the power of taxation, the power to regulate them as common carriers, and the roads as public highways; to punish abuses and violations of the law, and to use all the powers of the State, except the power of eminent domain, to condemn and take their property, and I shall hold that that power is reserved and declared so that the State may, whenever it sees fit, exercise that sort of power too. But at present, sir, on account of the political corruption, it may not be wise to exercise that power. When in the course of time, by returning to first principles, by returning to the principles put forth by the new party which has arisen in the State of California, that the office shall seek the man and not the man seek the office, it may be possible for the State to own and control its railroads without detriment to the public service.

Now, sir, I maintain that, at the present time, the line is being drawn. We shall soon see who are the friends of the people. We shall soon see who are upon the side of the people, on the subject of the regulation of the railroad corporations within this State. All that we have done now, all of the sections that we have adopted with regard to discrimination, go for naught. They are bald, naked declarations. The mere declarations of a Constitution are not self-executing, and the machinery must be provided by which to carry them into effect. What use is it to declare in the Constitution that railroads shall not discriminate between persons and places? You must render them effective, sir, by providing the machinery, right upon the heels of it, to make it effective, and bring a power to bear equal to or greater than the power that is guilty of the abuses.

Many arguments have been made here by gentlemen opposed to this section, and to the general scope and spirit of the report of the Committee on Corporations. We are accused here of not treating the subject in a judicial and impartial manner. It is said by one that whenever a great argument is presented, that you will hear bellowed out, "Corporation lawyer." The gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, says that whenever you talk about or in favor of a corporation, certain members act like a herd of mad bulls, that put their heads and horns down and rush madly forward with their tails up, reckless whither they go or who is in the way.

Now, upon the subject of this power, and as to the nature of the property which is here denominated private property, predicated upon some claim of vested right, I will read an authority. The Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, in his opening argument, did fall a little short in insisting that the renowned lawyer, Jere. Black, was a member of the Constitutional Convention of Pennsylvania at the time of the adoption of one of the sections in this report. I will read now from the opinion of Judge Black, when he was on the Supreme Bench of the State of Pennsylvania, with regard to the character of the property which these corporations have, and which they claim to have now in the State. This was a case of the forfeiture of a railroad franchise, and the defense set up that it was a taking of private property without compensation. He says:

"The authority given by the Act of October, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, to the defendant, to take possession of the railroad, is asserted by the plaintiff's counsel to be an act of confiscation—a taking of private property for public use, without compensation. If this be true, the injunction ought to be awarded, for no Legislature can do such a thing under our Constitution. When a corporation is dissolved by a repeal of its charter, the Legislature may appoint, or authorize the Governor to appoint a person to take charge of its assets, for the use of the creditors and stockholders; and this is not confiscation any more than it is confiscation to appoint an administrator to a dead man, or a committee for a lunatic. But money, or goods, or lands, which are or were the private property of a defunct corporation, cannot be arbitrarily seized for the use of the State without compensation paid or provided for. This Act, however, takes nothing but the road. Is that private property? Certainly not! It is a public highway, solemnly devoted by law to the public use. When the lands are taken to build it on, they were taken for public use; otherwise they could not have been taken at all. It is true the plaintiffs had a right to take tolls from all who traveled or carried freight on it, according to certain rates fixed in the charter, but that was a mere franchise—a privilege derived entirely from the charter, and it was gone when the charter was repealed. The State may grant to a corporation, or to an individual, the franchise of taking tolls on any highway, opened or to be opened, whether it be a railroad or river, canal or bridge, turnpike or common road. When the franchise ceases by its own limitation, by forfeiture, or by repeal, the highway is thrown back on the hands of the State, and it becomes her duty, as the sovereign guardian of the public rights and interests, to take care of it. She may renew the franchise, give it to some other person, exercise it herself, or declare the highway open and free to all the people. If the railway itself was the private property of the stockholders, then it remains theirs, and they may use it without a charter as other people use their own—run it on their own account; charge what tolls they please; close it or open it when they think proper; disregard every interest except their own. The repeal of charters on such terms would be courted by every railroad company in the State, for it would have no effect but to emancipate them from the control of law, and convert their limited privileges into a broad, unbounded license. On this principle a corporation might be rewarded, but never punished for misconduct. Repeal of its charter, instead of bringing it to a shameful end, would put 'length of days in its right hand, and in its left hand, riches and honor.' But it is not so. Railroads made by the authority of the Commonwealth upon land taken under her right of eminent domain, and established by her laws as thoroughfares for the commerce that passes through her borders, are her highways. No corporation has any property in them, though corporations may have franchises annexed to and exercisable within them."

That is from the 26 Pa. State Reports, 307. Again, on page 324 of the same book, he says:

"It is further objected to this law, that it is an act of confiscation—takes private property for the public use of the State without compensation. The Government of the United States is forbidden to do this by the Federal Constitution. That instrument, of course, has nothing to do with this part of the case. But the State Constitution also declares that 'no man's property shall be taken or applied to public use without the consent of his representatives, and without compensation being made.' Does this Act violate the State Constitution in that part of it? We answered this in the negative when we refused the special injunction, and gave reasons which need not be repeated. Railroads built under the authority of law for general purposes of commerce, are public highways. On this principle alone we decided that municipal subscriptions were valid. On this principle alone can land and material be seized to make them. On this principle alone can the laws be justified which limit the tolls upon them. On this principle alone have we the power, so often exercised, of compelling those who have the charge of them to keep within the boundaries of the law. On this principle alone we have always held that no individual or corporation can possibly have any right or privilege connected with them except what the law has expressly conferred. The charter of this company contained a series of regulations, presenting the manner in which a public highway should be used. The repeal abolished those regulations and substituted a different set. By the charter, and by the charter alone, were the plaintiffs authorized to interfere with it at all; the repeal necessarily took that authority away. A public highway is not private property any more than a public office is private property. The execution of the law relating to an office is intrusted to an individual; a corporation as well as an individual may be intrusted with the execution of the law which relates to a highway. In either case, if the trust be abused it may be withdrawn; but neither the highway nor the office is thereby extinguished. The people still have a right to be served in both, and it is the duty of the State to see that they are."

That is the opinion of Judge Black. Corporations, apart from their abuses, are undoubtedly good things; the principle which prompted their formation was a good principle. It sprung from the old Anglo-Saxon spirit of voluntary association. They were never understood to be independent of control at all, but were entirely under the control of Parliament. They first begun their assumptions something like one hundred years ago, in the case of the greatest corporation and the greatest monopoly on earth, the British East India Company. That company grew so powerful that it defied the Parliament of the country. They claimed the charter of rights of man, just as our lawyers talk about vested rights covered by a provision of the Federal Constitution, as of properly being taken without due process of law, and the other provision prohibiting a State from passing any law impairing the obligations of a contract. Now, I read from another very distinguished gentleman, one who is generally considered a great friend of popular rights, Edmund Burke, in a speech in Parliament on the bill to take away the Charter of the British East India Company. There the objection was that the bill was an attack on the chartered rights of man. He says:

"As to the first of these objections; I must observe that the phrase of 'the chartered rights of men,' is full of affectation; and very unusual in the discussion of privileges conferred by charters of the present description. But it is not difficult to discover what end that ambiguous mode of expression so often reiterated is meant to answer. The rights of men, that is to say, the natural rights of mankind, are indeed sacred things; and if any public measure is proved mischievously to affect them, the objection ought to be fatal to that measure, even if no charter at all could be set up against it. If these natural rights are further affirmed and declared by express covenants, if they are clearly defined and secured against chicane, against power and authority, by written instruments and positive engagements, they are in a still better condition; they partake not only of the sanctity of the object so secured, but of that solemn public faith itself, which secures an object of such importance. Indeed, this formal recognition, by the sovereign power, of an original right in the subject, can never be subverted but by rooting up the holding radical principles of government, and even of society itself. The charters, which we call by distinction great, are public instruments of this nature; I mean the charters of King John and King Henry the Third. The things secured by these instruments may, without any deceitful ambiguity, be very fitly called the chartered rights of men.

"These charters have made the very name of a charter dear to the heart of every Englishman. But, sir, there may be, and there are charters, not only different in nature, but formed on principles the very reverse of those of the great charter; of this kind is the charter of the East India Company. Magna Charta is a charter to restrain power and to destroy monopoly. The East India Charter is a charter to establish monopoly and to create power. Political power and commercial monopoly are not the rights of men; and the rights of them derived from charters, it is fallacious and sophistical to call 'the chartered rights of men.' These chartered rights (to speak of such charters and of their effects in terms of the greatest possible moderation), do at least suspend the natural rights of mankind at large, and in their very frame and constitution are liable to fall into a direct violation of them.

"It is a charter of this latter description (that is to say a charter of power and monopoly) which is affected by the bill before you.

"The bill, sir, does, without question, affect it; it does affect it essentially and substantially. But having stated to you of what description the chartered rights are which this bill touches, I feel no difficulty at all in acknowledging the existence of those chartered rights in their fullest extent. They belong to the company in the surest manner; and they are secured to that body by every public sanction. They are stamped by the faith of the king; they are stamped by the faith of Parliament; they have been bought for money, for money honestly and fairly paid; they have been bought for valuable consideration, over and over again. I therefore freely admit to the East India Company their claim to exclude their fellow-subject from the commerce of half the globe. I admit their claim to administer an annual territorial revenue of seven millions sterling; to command an army of sixty thousand men; and to dispose—under the control of a sovereign imperial discretion, and with the due observance of the natural and local law—of the lives and fortunes of thirty millions of their fellow creatures; all this they possess by charter and by acts of Parliament, in my opinion, without a shadow of controversy.

"Those who carry the rights and claims of the company the furthest, do not contend for more than this; and all this I freely grant. But granting all this, they must grant to me in my turn, that all political power which is set over men, and that all privilege claimed or exercised in exclusion of them, being wholly artificial, and for so much a derogation from the natural equality of mankind at large, ought to be some way or other exercised ultimately for their benefit.

"If this is true with regard to every species of political dominion, and every description of commercial privilege, none of which can be original self-derived rights, or grants for the mere private benefit of the holders, then such rights, or privileges, or whatever else you choose to call them, are all in the strictest sense a trust; and it is of the very essence of every trust to be rendered accountable; and even totally to cease, when it substantially varies from the purposes for which alone it could have a lawful existence."

I maintain, sir, that the only way by which corporations which are monopolies—that is all that can be said of them—the only way by which they can be maintained and be consistent with the spirit of our institutions, is to also hold that they are exercising a public trust, and that the very essence of that trust is the accountability of those exercising it, and its liability to cease whenever it perverts or becomes subversive of the natural rights of mankind, or the political rights of a community. In the beginning of this republic of ours, our wise old fathers thought but little of these things. Wealth had not accumulated, corporate power had not been asserted as in modern times, and they provided not for them in the original Constitutions, and did not contemplate them. The only one about which controversies arose, to any extent, in this country, was the United States Bank. That was held, by those who went in for a strict construction of the Constitution, to have been established without the sanction of law, and to have been established in violation of the Federal Constitution. That bank, sir, had become, as all these powerful corporations have become, desirous of political control, and General Jackson, and the great cohorts who marched to victory under his banner, put it down, and then it was discovered to be, as too many of them are, a rotten shell. Then came the question of internal improvement, when the battle raged again. Propositions to subscribe public moneys were combated vigorously by those who favored a strict construction of the Constitution, and a strict limitation upon the powers of Congress to assist and aid in internal improvements; and I suppose that the members in this committee know that the only way by which they were ever allowed to grant a single foot of land or a subsidy of a single dollar in aid of any enterprise of a private character whatever, was upon the power to establish post and military roads. Now, this corporation, which is doing the principal transportation business of the State of California, obtained a subsidy from Congress of lands and of money upon that ground and that ground alone—a contribution which was made by virtue of the power asserted in Congress to establish military roads and post roads. It was not then contended to be a creature independent of the power that created it. It was not then contended to be greater than the power that created it; but it was distinctly asserted to have been built and established by the public money, subject always to public control as such. And yet gentlemen are telling us here in this Convention that we have no right to inquire into their title. That we have no right to go back and examine what gifts they have received—gifts from the State, gifts from the counties, gifts from the Government—all of which proceeded upon and depended upon governmental control, and holding them to a strict accountability for the trust which was conferred upon them. And if it should turn out that these gifts amount to more than the whole value of the property itself; if it should turn out that the vast subsidies of lands and of money given by the Government of the United States, given by the State, given by the counties, have been sunk in the private exchequer of the directors, whilst they have got mortgage bonds to represent the money borrowed to build the road, they still tell us that we have no right to inquire what has become of this money; we have no right to look at the private fortunes swelled into millions by the individuals engaged in the work. In the days when they were soliciting this aid at the hands of Congress, of the Legislature, and of the Boards of Supervisors, they sung a different tune, and gentlemen have but to refer to the debates in Congress on the Central Pacific Railroad bills, to see that, in those days, no such tremendous power over the property was claimed, but they were only the agents of the people. Now, we have no right to inquire. Poor suffering men! Objects of compassion and solicitude, as they must be!

Another says, pass this Commission bill, and you will drive them into politics. My God! are they waiting to be driven into politics in this State? Is that what you call forcing into politics? Why, this is as good as the description by Byron of the females of Islam standing on the street corners while the city was being plundered and sacked:

> "Some voices of the buxom middle-aged
> Were also heard to wonder in the din,
> (Widows of forty, were these birds long caged),
> 'Wherefore the ravishing did not begin!'"

Forced into politics! Could they get any deeper in than they are now? Have they not made up their slates? Don't they hold the sovereignty of the State already? Don't they make Governors, Senators, Judges, and everything for you? And yet you force them into politics. The only thing I hope for then is, if they should be driven into bankruptcy, that they will have enough to retire on, and my impression is that they will.

I come now to the great American departure—the direful spring of fruitful woes unnumbered to this dear land of ours—I refer to the oft quoted Dartmouth College case. Daniel Webster, with his ponderous and massive logic, and his overmastering appeal for his alma mater, persuaded the Supreme Court of the United States to declare the inviolability of charters, and to place them under the protection of that clause in the Federal Constitution forbidding the impairing of the obligation of contracts. I know, sir, that that high tribunal never intended by that decision to declare what it has been for nearly half a century claimed they did declare. I know that the framers of the Federal Constitution, when they inserted in that instrument the inhibition of interference with contracts, never contemplated the charters of corporations. They had in their minds the private contracts of the citizens—and they never dreamed that their act would be so construed as to bind the State hand and foot and deliver it over thus bound to merciless, soulless monopolies. But this I know, that up to the time of that decision, the power of the State over all its creatures had never been questioned. Its sovereign sway over all internal subjects affecting its well-being had never been doubted; its power of self government, self preservation, and self judgment, had never been impugned. There were no corporate monopolies in existence then threatening society, nay, the sovereignty of the State itself. The Dartmouth College foundation was an old grant from the Crown of England, and it was eloquently claimed that its usefulness, nay, its very life itself was imperiled by threatened State interference and State control. The Court threw itself between the people and the college, and flung its shield of power over the doomed institution. A description of the argument of that celebrated case relates that, under the melting pathos of Mr. Webster, the grave old Justices of the Supreme Court wept. So, too, sir, the people of these United States have wept and groaned in consequence of that decision and the use made of it.

"A charter is a contract," say the Court, "and as such is within the protection of section ten of article one of the Federal Constitution, forbidding the State to pass any law impairing the obligation of a contract." No matter how grevious to be borne, the State must bear the burden. All subsequent Legislatures are bound as with Promethean bonds. "It may reserve the power," says one of the Judges, in an obiter, "to modify or annul the contract." But if a base and unworthy Legislature fails to do so, the State must pay the pound of flesh, strictly according to the bond.

This decision has been the fountain from which has flowed the monstrous assumptions of corporate power. They have sprung from it full panoplied, like Minerva from the brain of Jupiter, and they rush back there for protection like that cry of hell hounds, described by Milton, which, "never ceasing, barked with wide cerberean mouths full loud, and rung a hideous peal; yet when they list, would creep, if aught disturbed their noise, into her womb, and kennel there, yet there still barked and howled, within unseen."

It is natural for men to crave power; it is delightful to be above the law. And so they stuck an incorporation on every element and force of nature, and consolidated the corporations. The earth and the fullness thereof was theirs, by legislative grant. They incorporated on the cradle and on the grave. They came in myriads, aggregate and sole. We rise out of incorporated beds; we put on incorporated boots, hat, coat, shirt, pants, and vest; we take up an incorporated paper; we sit down by an incorporated stove, to a fire kindled by an incorporated match; we bathe in incorporated water in an incorporated tub; we breakfast on food handled by a dozen corporations; we live, move, and breathe through the day for the benefit of corporations, and at the close tumble back into our incorporated bed, lighted by incorporated gas. Not a right of way, from the obscurest deer trail up to the straight and narrow way, has been left unincorporated, and the broad road that leads to death, where thousands walked, is now plastered with incorporations, and freights and fares have been reduced on that memorable highway so that States and nations are now being railroaded through to death on better terms than sinners got afoot before.

The wealthy and powerful combine their means to control the industries of the country. The impecunious birds of prey, bummers, and drones of society, combine and incorporate their nothings—capital ten million dollars—and float their shares in the rich man's wine, and the poor man's soup. They incorporate on a hole in the ground, with a prospect in it; they incorporate on the hole, without the prospect, and they incorporate on the prospect without the hole. They incorporate to effect all ends—they end all the effects of the gudgeons and suckers who bite. Like Frankenstein's baby, there was no end to its growing, and no limit to its voracity. And, like that wonderful child, it started in to devour its author. The sovereignty of the State fled in dismay before it.

Such have been the consequences of that decision, that the operation of corporate combination and unlawful appropriation have left nothing unincorporated nor unappropriated of that common stock granted by charter of Almighty God for the use and benefit of mankind. The natural tendency of mankind is to refine, but refinement, according to them, is stealing from the hands of the many by the few. I believe it is somewhere said that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Now, it is because of the refinement of mankind—the refinements for which my own profession has been largely responsible. In the eloquent language of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, "they have been in the vanguard in the battles of freedom;" they have also been in the vanguard when the rights of man were to be denied by the refinements of the law. That is true, and it cannot be denied. We see the law, simple and plain, in a new community. Take the history of this State itself, with regard to the appropriation of mines. In the beginning, the evidence of title was simple possession. You held your title by being on the land. You held it by having your home on the ground, and by having your tools there. They called it pick and shovel representation. That was the law—a man should only hold that which he worked. A man might be sick, perhaps, and that would not be right, so they held that three days in a week would be sufficient, and then two days was sufficient, and then they said one day would be sufficient, and then they begun to refine upon that, that work done somewhere else for the benefit of the ground would suffice to hold it, and then they conceived the idea of putting a paper upon it and having it recorded; by notice and a record. Then they begun to hold by law, and kept on refining and lost the more simple rules and regulations of miners, because of the disposition of mankind to refine. Now a days you can hold it without anything almost. The tendency has been brought to bear upon them until it has gone so far that the doctrine is declared of absolute property in running water, away off from the old simpler idea of the riparian rights of the owners along the banks, and thus that tendency has been made use of. It has crept into and poisoned the very framework of our society and of our institutions. Nothing can be done, nothing can be carried on without falling back upon the corporate principle, and where a thing is not a subject of incorporation they make a ring, and ring a ring over everything. Even the law has its ring. They could not be incorporated very well, and so they make a ring. The whole evil brood has grown up, and they have fastened themselves upon the country, because of this assumption of the absolute power or ownership of private property that is essentially public, granted to them as public, held as an agency or trust, with the accountability attaching to all trusts. Now, I say, and that is my deliberate judgment, and always has been, from the time I say the disposition of mankind to display the spirit of the swine that is in all of us, wherever the law permits or tolerates appropriations of this kind, then turning round and saying, "you cannot touch me; I am protected by virtue of some vested right." I say, it is time to return to first principles. That is what I want to see done. That is what the people of this State want to see done. They want to see a return to the first principles—to the principles of our fathers—where the functions of the government were supposed to be within the control of the people, and the sovereignty to reside there, not only in theory but to be exercised by the people.

Now a gleam of light shone out over this country when the Supreme Court of the United States did better than to reverse the Dartmouth College decision. I say that they did better than to reverse it. They ignored it. They went over it, and they went under it, and they placed the corporations upon an equality with all persons. That is what the Supreme Court of the United States did, and they never so much as squinted at the old Dartmouth decision. That was a victory achieved by the Grangers. It was the power of that organization that ruled the Legislatures and disciplined the Courts. They, sir, it was, who, standing firmly, shoulder to shoulder, in defense of the rights of the people, as against the corporate assumption, carried their Legislatures and passed their regulating laws. It went to the Supreme Court, and they affirmed in the broadest manner, without reference to their charter, or their assured rights vested in a charter, that they were subject to control in the business in which they were engaged; subject to control, because their use was a public use; subject to control, because it was clothed with a public character, and affected the interests, the fundamental interests, of society itself. They affirmed it because it was indispensibly necessary that it should be affirmed, or it would soon turn out that the sovereignty of the State would give way and be administered solely by the corporations.

What is the practical effect before our own face and eyes? We see it here around us, and we hear it come up in indignant cries by the people of the State. Gentlemen say that there are no abuses; that the management is altogether lovely. The eloquent gentleman who addressed the committee so long the other day, whatever he may have thought four or five years ago, now contends that they need no regulation. In other words, that they want to be let alone. And yet I remember reading one of his speeches, where he said that the railroad management was simply grand larceny, or something to that effect. Now the question is, where is the change? What great revolution has come over that corporation, if the gentleman was right five years ago and is right now? That problem can be solved by every man for himself.

I attack no man's motive. But the practical effect in the State of California to-day, is what I wish to call the attention of this Convention to. As I said before, three quarters of the whole transportation business of the State has fallen under the control of one railroad corporation. And now, sir, the idea of the sovereignty of the State, the rule of the majority, the greatest good to the greatest number, the administration of the government for the legitimate purposes of the government, have become only child play abstractions. The sovereignty of the State has been imprisoned within the four walls of a structure at the corner of Fourth and Townsend streets, in San Francisco. Stanford and company have captured it and chained it there. They have subjected it to their will, and they have bound it to their bidding. Whenever they allow it to go forth, it goes in charge of a keeper. Whenever they bring it out to lend a semblance of popular rights, it comes in the charge of a number of keepers—their political agents—who follow it around and feed it on corporation milk. Is the Legislature about to convene? they bring it there and unchain it in the lobby. They order a Code, or laws to be enacted, and behold, in the name of the people, the law is enacted! Is a United States Senator to be elected? they bring it into the arena; they order his election, and lo, the faithful is elected. Is a convention to convene to nominate a Governor of the State, and the principal officers of the State; to nominate a county Sheriff and the other officers of the county, and the judicial officers? they bring it there and make up the slate.

What are the attributes of sovereignty? Eminent domain—the right to take private property for public use, on compensation? The Central Pacific Railroad Company goes around over the State and bullies the citizen with this assumption of power. Nay, sir, bullies the State itself, and even assumes the right to take public property for their own private use. Is it the power of taxation? The railroad company knows no limit to the boundless claim to exercise this right beyond the capacity of the people to bear. They bring the lever down and agriculture groans; they raise the lever up and agriculture proves a highway to wealth. They snatch the diadem from the brow of commerce and order trade to "stand and deliver!" while they empty its pockets. Three or four men sit down in a room and with one scratch of a pen extract a million from the industries of the country. And yet you tell me that there is no necessity for controlling a power like this. They run their car wheels over the liberties of the people, crushing in their devastating career a hecatomb of human hopes, and rear upon their ruins an empire of arbitrary power. It is against that company that I contend. It is against them that the people have rallied. It is against them the battle is to be fought. It is a question now of power. The question is, who shall exercise the sovereign power of the State? These railroad corporations never injured me. I fear not their threats and I care not for their favors. But my philosophy teaches me that if we expect to maintain our free institutions; if we expect to maintain this republic; if we expect to maintain in California anything like a republican form of government, these corporations must be controlled, and the means must be devised to do so effectually.

Now, sir, I come to the subject of the Commission. I have said in the committee—I also argued by way of consultation with the committee—that there might be danger; that we might create another despotism more grievous and more oppressive than these corporations; and a very remarkable circumstance is, that I have seen that same kind of argument urged in notorious and well known railroad organs, and urged by corporation lawyers—I beg the pardon of the gentleman; I mean outside of here—the very self-same argument, that we were in danger of creating a despotism. Why, they say that this branch which we propose to establish here, is like something never heard of in the sky, in the earth, or in the waters under the earth. I deny it. I say that it is only proposed here to create a constitutional Board, and to give it a permanent character, differing but little from that which has been established all over the continent of Europe and in many of the States of the United States.

I maintain that we are only proposing to supplement a remedy for those very defects which their experience has pointed out, in order to make them efficient, and of more valuable service to the people. I have relied very greatly upon the report which was lately published by Mr. Adams, a member of the Massachusetts Commission. It is full of valuable information, and it brings us to the conclusions reached by the gentlemen who are composing the Committee on Corporations. They take into consideration the fact that the circumstances surrounding the communities where these Commissions have been created were totally and entirely different from anything we have upon the Pacific Coast. Two conclusions are reached by Mr. Adams. Of course, he is in favor of the Commission, just as gentlemen here say that they are in favor of a Commission—a poor, feeble Commission, which would be kicked out of the office of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, but which could march into a railroad office in Massachusetts and be listened to. The conclusion is, that the Commission has in its power to correct abuses by means of publicity. He reasons very liberally, and he reasons well, to show how a Commission, with full power to investigate, to examine books and papers, to order abuses to be corrected, can become familiar with the business of the road, and make it extremely disadvantageous for a railroad company to refuse to listen to their requests, or orders, whichever you may choose to call it. Why, when Mr. Adams' Commission went into a railroad office, in the State of Massachusetts, when they looked over their dealings and told them that they were practicing extortion, if they paid no attention to them, what happened? The next thing was a publication—an official publication—to the world, that that road was a cheating road; a notice like that, which would be put up at your toll gates, where there was an official notice to avoid that road, because if you went over it it would cheat you. In Massachusetts the traveler had the choice of seven different routes to the seaboard, avoiding the route which he had been warned against. Now, how much application has that to the State of California? How much application has it to any system of railroads that we know of in the State of California? Are not gentlemen ashamed of lugging anything of that kind into this Convention, and telling us that you can bring the railroad to terms by the fear of exposure in the State of California? Why, sir, a Commission of respectable men, created by the laws of the Legislature, at the session before the last, were unable, after two years constantly endeavoring to do so, to obtain even a sight of the books of the railroad company, when, lo and behold, they were legislated out of office. That is how much publicity would affect the railroad corporations of this State; and so all over the United States, except the State of California, if you are traveling over great trunk lines, you have the advantages of three or four routes, and if official notice is given to you by those who have investigated their business, that they will cheat you, that they are an unworthy route, you go away, and go around them. It is the transient loss of business by which they are held in control. But Stanford and company would say as old Tweed used to in New York, when they found him stealing, with both hands in the treasury, "what are you going to do about it?" That would be the beautiful working of that plan of publicity. I understand that a great newspaper, one of the best that was ever published on the Pacific Coast, or in the United States—I refer to the old Sacramento Union—occupied itself for years and years with giving publicity to railroad abuses, and the consequence was that, as powerful as that journal was, they sat down on it, and mashed it. Publicity! Too thin!

Now, what is the other plan? I find that I cannot go further to-night, on account of my throat. I yield the floor.

MR. FARRELL. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

NOTICES.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: I give notice that on to-morrow I will move to reconsider the vote indefinitely postponing the motion to take from the table the motion to reconsider the vote on adopting the resolution of adjournment until Monday, December second.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: I wish to give notice that I will move a substitute for section twenty, in case either of the amendments should be voted down. I cannot offer it in the stage in which it now stands, but I wish to give notice that I will offer a substitute for section twenty. I do it now, that it may be printed, and that members may have an opportunity of examining it. I would ask that it be received, and printed in the Journal.

THE CHAIR. If there be no objection, the gentleman will have leave.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 20. There shall be elected, at the next general election, and every four years thereafter, by the qualified electors of this State, a Board of three Railroad Commissioners, whose term of office shall be four years, with such salary as may be fixed by law, not to exceed —— thousand dollars a year. Such Commissioners shall be qualified electors, and for five years citizens of this State, and shall not be interested, pecuniarily or by employment, or in any other capacity, in any railroad or transportation company, or in the business of common carrier of passengers or freight. They shall each take the constitutional oath of office; and before entering upon, and for the faithful performance of, the duties of their office, they shall each give a bond, with two sureties, in the sum of twenty thousand dollars, to be approved by the Governor. The Commissioners, or a majority of them, shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to establish reasonable and just tariffs and rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freights by all railroad corporations: and, for this purpose, they shall have power to administer oaths; to examine the books and papers of such corporations; to summon and examine the officers and stockholders thereof, and other witnesses; to hear complaints; inquire into and correct abuses; prevent partial and unjust discriminations and extortion in the rates of charges and the tariffs for the transportation of freights and passengers. They shall publish, semi-annually, full statements of the tariffs and rates of charges established and authorized by them, and of all abuses, discriminations, and extortion, and report the same to the Governor. Whenever such tariffs and rates shall be established and published, they shall be binding upon, and must be observed by, all such corporations doing business in this State, and may be enforced by the Commissioners, or by any party in interest, through the Courts; but nothing herein shall prevent any person from maintaining an action for injury or damage against such corporations. The Legislature shall confer on the Commissioners such further powers as shall be necessary to enable them more fully to perform their duties; and it shall pass laws, with adequate penalties, to the extent, if necessary, of forfeiture of the franchises of such corporations, to enforce the action of the Commissioners. The Commissioners, and each of them, may be removed from office by the Legislature, by a majority vote of all the members elected to each house, and shall also be liable, personally and on their official bonds, to any party aggrieved, for neglect of duty or any malfeasance or corruption in office.

MR. HUESTIS. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And, at nine o'clock and five minutes, P. M., the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow at nine o'clock and thirty minutes, A. M.

SIXTY-FIRST DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Wednesday, November 27th, 1878.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Messrs. Johnson and Thompson were granted leave of absence, each for one day.

Messrs. Moreland and Overton were granted leave of absence, each for two days.

IN REFERENCE TO ADJOURNMENT.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I move that the motion of Mr. Larkin, the notice of reconsideration, be taken from the table. It was laid on the table yesterday.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. President: That motion has already been passed upon by this Convention, and I raise the point of order that the motion cannot be made again. The proceedings on that subject will be found in the daily Journal of yesterday. The resolution provides for adjourning from Wednesday noon until Monday, and provided also for two night sessions, to make up for the time proposed to be taken. Now, that resolution was adopted and carried into effect. A night session was held on Monday night, and another last night. The motion to reconsider was made, and Mr. Gregg moved to lay the motion on the table. The roll was called, and the motion was laid on the table. Then in the afternoon Mr. Tinnin made the same motion which he is now making, moved to take from the table the motion to reconsider the vote on the adoption, and I moved to indefinitely postpone the motion, and it was indefinitely postponed. I submit that that was a determination of the whole question, and that motion cannot now be renewed. I submit the following points of order:

First, the motion to reconsider, made by Mr. Estee, was laid on the table. The motion of Mr. Tinnin to take from the table the motion to reconsider was defeated. This disposed of the whole matter, and was equivalent to a defeat of the motion to reconsider. The motion to reconsider was defeated; second, there can be no reconsideration of an order, the execution of which has already commenced, and even if the motion should prevail, the Convention cannot change the order of the twenty-fifth instant, relating to adjournment, as the extra sessions, which were part of the order, have already been had.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: The statement made by Col. Barnes is correct to a certain extent. The motion made by me was laid on the table, but it could extend no farther than the particular subject-matter, and it was so ruled by the Chair at that time, and was so understood. The question was asked of the Chair at that time, and the Chair ruled that it affected only that motion. The question was raised whether or not it would carry the whole subject-matter with it, and the Chair ruled that it would not. Now, Mr. President, so far as the motion made by the gentleman from El Dorado is concerned, it is on the table. It is subject-matter before this Convention. When any matter is laid on the table it is not disposed of; if it was, the reports of committees could be passed by in this way. Committees make their reports, and they are laid on the table, and consequently subject to action by this body; and I hold to the position that the motion made by the gentleman is on the table, and can be taken up at any time. Laying on the table is not a final disposition of the subject. It is in effect saying that the Convention desires to consider the matter at some future time, and I hold that this motion is in order.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: The gentleman is mistaken. The motion made by me was to indefinitely postpone his motion, and not to lay it on the table. It is so recorded. Here is the Journal: "Mr. Barnes moved to indefinitely postpone the motion, upon which the ayes and noes were demanded, the roll was called, and the motion to indefinitely postpone prevailed." (Here the vote is stated.) Now, I contend that there should be some limit to these motions, after the subject-matter has been once, twice, yes, three times, passed upon by this body; and if this system of tactics is to prevail, there will be no limit to this thing. The Convention has executed a contract, so far as those who desire to go away are concerned. It was suggested that we should have two night sessions to make up for the time, and these night sessions have been had, and our part of the contract performed. They agreed, that if we would consent to hold these night sessions, they would take a recess; and now having held two night sessions, they propose, by a forced construction of parliamentary law, to have their cake and eat it too. I do not think it is fair.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I propose to submit my reasons why the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin, is not in order, and I think the gentleman will bear me out. A resolution was adopted by this body that we adjourn to-day until two o'clock on Monday, and also that we have two evening sessions, commencing on Monday evening and ending yesterday. That was all in the resolution adopted by this body. Now, to take this matter from the table—an attempt to reconsider it—is not in itself the original proposition——

MR. TINNIN. When a matter is laid upon the table, is it a final disposition?

MR. ESTEE. It was not laid upon the table. It never was laid upon the table. It was only the motion to reconsider it that was laid upon the table. As the matter has been partially executed, it never can be reconsidered as a question of law. It is executed in part, and as a question of law, when a proposition has a body and has been executed in part, even though notice may have been given, it cannot be reconsidered, because the same question will not be before the body again. I appeal to the gentleman if this is not law.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: The Chair ought to first decide this question. Now, the right to make a motion, and the right to hear it, always depends upon the right of the body to decide the question then and there. You decided the question the other day, and entered into a sort of a contract. You made a rule, and that rule has been partially executed, and it is too late to change that rule. We meet under the general rules at ten o'clock, and yet we are here at half-past nine under this rule which is now sought to be abrogated. If we do reconsider this vote and repeal this rule which has been partially executed, then we are here without any organization at all, because the general rule requires us to meet at ten o'clock. It shows that when a rule is partially executed it is not subject to reconsideration. It cannot be made so. Now, if we take up this motion and pass it to reconsider the vote, it stands as if it had never been passed at all, and we sit here under a rule that requires us to come here before ten o'clock. Now, this motion depends upon our right to pass upon the ultimate question ——

MR. TINNIN. The gentleman makes a misstatement. We are here at half-past nine o'clock by the rules—by a change in our standing rules.

MR. SHAFTER. I may have been mistaken about that, but we have not held the two night sessions under the general rules. They were held under this special rule, and it has therefore been executed in part, and cannot be abrogated. That is the doctrine of Cushing. We have commenced to execute this order, by holding two night sessions, and it is utterly impossible to reconsider and put ourselves back in the position we were in before. If we do reconsider, the whole resolution goes for nothing absolutely, and then we come to the question whether we will pass the resolution. Suppose we refuse to pass it, what is the result? You have sat here during two night sessions, without any authority whatever.

MR. BROWN. Mr. President: Now, we have heard of a certain agreement. We heard nothing of any such agreement or contract when the resolution came before this Convention. Certain gentlemen may have agreed to certain things in their minds, or may have agreed to one or two principles, but as to any such agreement with those who passed this resolution, I am satisfied the gentleman from San Francisco is mistaken upon that point. Now, by those who objected to the resolution there is an effort made to defeat it. In order to vote intelligently——

MR. WALKER. I raise a point of order. The point of order raised by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, has not been ruled upon, and no appeal has been taken, and it is not debatable.

THE PRESIDENT. The point of order raised by the gentleman from San Francisco, Col. Barnes, has not yet been passed upon. The Chair has no objection to hearing the views of members upon the question.

MR. BROWN. There was no such arrangement as that made, to my knowledge. Now, my impression is that Cushing and Jefferson have clearly advanced the idea that where there is a general sentiment in a body to be carried out, that parliamentary law and usage does not come in the way of carrying it out—the general principles which the body wishes to carry out. Now, if it be that this body wishes to accomplish certain things, it is not bound by anything that may have been agreed upon by certain members among themselves.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman is not directing his remarks to the point of order. He must confine himself to the point.

MR. BROWN. I have endeavored to do so. Now, this matter is clear. It is evident that the majority did not know the purpose of the resolution. It seems as though they did wish a certain division of the question. I think when the majority of this body desires to do a certain thing, they should have the right at all times to do it. I shall therefore favor taking up the resolution and acting upon it.

MR. TULLY. It seems to me we might make a compromise here—that is, that gentlemen who wish to go home shall be granted leave of absence. Those who wish to remain here and go on with the business, could do so, agreeing not to vote upon any subject until Monday, at two o'clock. It seems to me that will satisfy the whole Convention. They can make speeches during that time.

MR. DUDLEY. Rule Forty-seven of the House of Representatives makes it very clear that the point of order made by the gentleman from San Francisco, Colonel Barnes, is a good one. It says when a motion of this kind is made, and is laid on the table, it is deemed a finality. Now, it is true that the gentleman from Trinity did not move to reconsider. He moved to take the motion to reconsider from the table. Under this rule he is out of order.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. President: I do not rise for the purpose of discussing this question of order, except to concur in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Santa Clara. The President will remember that in the House of Representatives it was the constant practice to have the House meet to discuss questions, with the understanding that no vote should be taken. It seems to me if we do that it will give satisfaction all around. There are certain gentlemen here prepared to speak, to assign their reasons for the votes they may cast upon this important question, and the Convention cannot deny them the privilege. Therefore, with this understanding, those who do not wish to go home can remain here and discuss these questions for two days, with the understanding that no vote is to be taken until Monday. That will satisfy everybody, and I think it is a wise course, because it cannot be denied that these long adjournments are distasteful to the people of this State. If we do this, the time will be well occupied, and those who wish to go home can do so.

MR. GRACE. If I understand the gentleman from Los Angeles, it won't make any difference whether there is anybody here to listen to these speeches or not.

MR. HOWARD. It don't make any difference now. [Laughter.]

MR. GRACE. I think it might be just as well to let the gentlemen print their speeches at their own expense, without delivering them. I make that motion.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order now.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President: We have occupied in the neighborhood of four hours and a half in the discussion of this question, and I move that the whole matter be indefinitely postponed.

THE PRESIDENT. Out of order.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Dudley, of Solano, has quoted a part of the rule in the House of Representatives. I have never known any such rule in a parliamentary body as that a motion laid on the table is a finality. Under our rules indefinite postponement is not a final vote, because a majority may reconsider. I insist that we have a right to reconsider the vote, and I insist that a vote be taken.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Chair will state the reasons which govern him in deciding this point of order. Before doing so he desires to correct the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin, in the statement he made about the decision of the Chair. On yesterday there was a motion made to lay on the table the motion offered to reconsider, by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee. The Chair was asked whether that motion would carry the whole subject to the table. The Chair answered that it would carry nothing but the motion to reconsider to the table.

MR. TULLY. It was the motion of the gentleman to indefinitely postpone the motion to take from the table.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman is wrong, as he will see if he will permit me. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution to adjourn was adopted. Mr. Gregg moved to lay the motion on the table. The Chair was asked what the effect of that motion would be. He answered that it would carry with it nothing except the motion to reconsider. After that vote was had, and in the afternoon, the gentleman from Trinity moved to take the motion to reconsider from the table, and that motion was indefinitely postponed. The Chair made no decision on the question at all. By the thirty-seventh rule of this Convention no motion for a reconsideration can be made, except upon notice being given on the day the vote is taken, and the motion must be made the next day. This rule is contrary to all parliamentary law.

On Monday there was a resolution offered and passed by this Convention, providing for two night sessions of this Convention, and for an adjournment on Wednesday, at twelve o'clock. That resolution was carried, and notice given of a motion to reconsider. The Convention went on and performed and complied with a portion of the resolution, and two night sessions were held, and the motion now comes up to take this original motion to reconsider from the table. Very well. The motion to reconsider was made on Tuesday, and a motion was made to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and that motion prevailed. This was equivalent to a vote refusing to reconsider. The affirmative of the one proposition included the negative of the other, and was a final disposition of the motion to reconsider. It cannot be taken up under Rule Thirty-seven, because the time has expired. The whole case was decided. Now, that being the fact, this motion to take from the table cannot be entertained, because it cannot be heard. Not only that, but for the farther reason assigned by the gentleman from San Francisco, that the Convention has gone on and performed a portion of the resolution, and it is impossible to reconsider. Therefore, the Chair decides the point of order well taken.

AN APPEAL.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I dislike very much to appeal from the decision of the Chair, but as I believe there is a great principle involved in this matter, which may at some future time have an effect upon the decisions of this body, in regard to laying a thing on the table, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

MR. WHITE. I second the appeal.

MR. WYATT. I second the appeal.

MR. HOWARD. I second the appeal.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

MR. HALE. Mr. President: I desire, before voting on the appeal, to inquire of the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin, if there is not an error of fact that should be corrected. Is not this the real history: On Monday there was an effort made to adjourn. A resolution was offered adjourning on Wednesday, and that resolution was adopted. Notice of reconsideration was given by the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin. That would be taken up the following day, which was yesterday. Yesterday that motion was made, and a motion to lay that motion on the table was made and prevailed. Last evening, as I see by the report of the proceedings, Mr. Wickes, of Nevada, gave notice of a motion to be made to-day to reconsider that vote. A motion was made to indefinitely postpone that motion, which prevailed. Mr. Cross gave notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Convention laid the motion to reconsider on the table was indefinitely postponed. I suggest to the gentleman that the matter can be reached by reconsidering the vote by which that motion was indefinitely postponed, in pursuance of the notice given by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

MR. LARKIN. I demand the ayes and noes.

MR. WYATT. Ayes and noes.

MR. CONDON. Ayes and noes.

MR. TULLY. Ayes and noes.

MR. TINNIN. Ayes and noes.

The roll was called, and the decision of the Chair was sustained by the following vote:

POOLING OF EARNINGS BY CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. I move the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

MR. TINNIN. I make the point of order, that the order of business has not been gone through with, and that it requires a two-thirds vote to go into Committee of the Whole.

THE PRESIDENT. That motion is always in order.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twenty and amendments.

MR. HAGER. We have not got through with section eighteen yet. It was ruled out of order day before yesterday, in consequence of the previous question having been voted down, and I presume we must go back to the section, as the proper order of business.

THE CHAIRMAN. That depends upon the pleasure of the committee.

MR. HAGER. Otherwise section eighteen will be omitted. I move we commence with section eighteen, as the order of business.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection we will pass back to section eighteen and the pending amendments. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 18. No railroad company or other common carrier shall combine or make any contract with the owners of any vessel that leaves port or makes port in this State, or with any common carrier, by which combination or contract the earnings of one doing the carrying are to be shared by the other not doing the carrying.

Amendment by Mr. Ayers: "Amend section eighteen by adding after the word 'carrying,' in the fifth line, 'and whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any other common carrier, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not be again raised or increased from such reduced standard.'"

Amendment by Mr. Campbell: "Add to section eighteen, 'and whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any railroad constructed or in process of construction, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, it shall not again raise its rates without the consent of the governmental authority in which shall be vested the power to regulate fares and freights on railroads, nor shall such other railroad raise its original rates without similar consent.'"

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I propose to limit my remarks to the amendments. In regard to the proposition of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, I propose to support it. It has been pretty thoroughly debated, and I have not much to say upon that subject. I believe the principle involved in it to be the correct one. I believe in giving the small capitalist a sight for his money. I do not know whether your honor ever indulged in the national game of "poker" or not, but it is pretty well known that these large capitalists invariably get away with the "pot," because the small capitalist has no sight for his money. But it never has been the policy in a regular poker game—the great national game described by the ex-Minister to England, Mr. Schenck, who is a learned authority on the subject of poker—to deny to persons of small capital a sight for their money. And the reason I shall support the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles, is that I believe it involves the cardinal principles of the great national game of poker, as expounded, if not practiced, by our Minister to England, of giving every man, no matter how small his capital, a sight for his money. I shall not occupy the floor until the subject of the Railroad Commissioners is resumed; and inasmuch as my friend McCallum is looking anxiously at the Chairman, I yield the floor to him.

SPEECH OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. President: I had not proposed, and do not now, in view of ill health, to discuss any question except that which is immediately before the Committee of the Whole, and that very briefly. As to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, I am in favor of one feature of the amendment offered by my colleague, Judge Campbell, and opposed to another feature, to confine the competition only to railroad lines. The case has been cited here of the case of freights and fares between the City of Sacramento and the City of Placerville, where, until the railroad was established, the fare by stage was five dollars; and for years, when there was two lines, they both made money. But, as I happen to know, it was three dollars. Since the railroad was established is was five dollars and fifty cents. And it is that price, for the simple reason that if any stage company should attempt to run stages there, they would be crushed out by a reduction of the price. Therefore, to confine this competition simply to railroads would not remedy the mischief intended to be remedied. There is another feature, however, of the amendment which I think is good. That is, that these rates shall not be raised unless by the consent of the governmental authority having the right to control fares and freights. Now, by delegating this to the governmental authority the gentleman reaches the point which I have thought there was some difficulty about, and that is, it does not make any difference whether it be ultimately left to the Legislature or to the Commission, it is referred to the proper authority in either case. To lay down the iron rule that when the rates shall be reduced in consequence of competition, as a constitutional provision, that they shall never be raised, as provided by the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, appears, in my judgment, Mr. Speaker, to be very dangerous indeed. It does not follow that because—even if all the reasons that have been stated, that have been suggested here, are true, in support of the amendment—it does not follow, therefore, that such an iron rule should be adopted, especially when you propose, by a section already before this Convention, to give the absolute control to a Commission, which, of course, would have the right to raise or lower the rates as the circumstances might render proper.

These sections have been all considered together, and I believe, Mr. President, that we have reached that stage of this controversy—similar stages have been reached by the Legislature from time to time—and in my judgment a crisis is upon us, and in my judgment the action we are soon to take will illustrate whether this Convention is to do anything upon the subject or not. I am one of those who believe that there is now an irrepressible conflict between monopoly powers and popular rights. And we cannot escape it if we would, and I believe the majority of us would not if we could. In that section reported by the committee there are some leading ideas I favor, and I very much regret to hear gentlemen who claim to be in favor of popular rights, finding faults and suggesting no remedy. That the committee have acted honestly, intelligently, and faithfully, I have no doubt, though I differ with some of the provisions of the main section now to be voted upon. The leading ideas are right. They propose a Commission to regulate freights and fares. They are opposed to leaving the matter to the Legislature. As to the Legislature, Mr. President, it has become so unpopular that there seems to be a demand for a change in this regard. I have heard people say that they were opposed to the Legislature meeting oftener than once in ten years, and then their business should be confined to repealing what laws the Legislature had passed before that. I do not believe, however, that because there are abuses in a system that therefore it should be abolished.

A POINT OF ORDER.

MR. FREEMAN. I rise to a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

MR. FREEMAN. My point of order is that we are acting under the previous question, and no debate is admissible.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled; there is no previous question pending.

MR. FREEMAN. Yesterday the previous question was put and decided in the negative. According to Cushing, when the question again comes up, the motion for the previous question is still pending, and the question must be again put to the house, so often as the decision is in the negative.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression, when the previous question is moved, and the house refuses to order the main question, the previous question is exhausted, and the whole matter is open to argument.

MR. FREEMAN. I will read section one thousand four hundred and thirty of Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies:

"1430. If the previous question passes in the negative, the effect of the decision is the postponement of the main question from that to the next sitting day, or to a day or time when such business is again in order; when the subject again comes, or is brought up, the motion for the previous question is still the pending question, and must be again put to the house, and so on as often as the decision is in the negative."

THE CHAIRMAN. The previous question was ordered in this case, and the body refused to put the main question. It carries the subject over for one day, but then the previous question is exhausted. The point of order is overruled.

MR. MCCALLUM. I am in favor of a Commission—that this matter should be regulated by a Commission, as distinguished from the Legislature. And I don't propose in that connection to reiterate, but say in general terms that the Legislature has been tried—and I must express my astonishment at the remarks of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, as to the intelligence and honest actions of the last Legislature of this State in this respect. I undertake to say that no man can read the bill passed by the last session, without saying that the bill was prepared by the attorneys of the Central Pacific Railroad Company; that it is a bill simply in the interest of the corporations, and in no sense in the interest of the people; and they violated a great public trust, and this Convention should take no chances in any legislative Senate or Assembly. If mistakes are made they can be corrected by a Commission, because the Commission is all the time in session. If the Legislature makes a mistake, they cannot correct it. Besides, no one can expect the Legislature, during a session not exceeding sixty days, to make an intelligent bill of freights and fares. It requires time—much time—to be expended on this subject.

I am perfectly aware that in taking this position I am taking a position, not as gentlemen seem to think, on the strong side, but in a great sense the weak side. If there is any great power in this State over all other powers, political or otherwise, it is that great corporation called the Central Pacific Railroad Company. It has controlled absolutely the politics of this State for fifteen years. Why, it has more power than

Mahomet, for he could only order the mountains to come to him, and when the mountains would not come to him then he would go to the mountains. But when the Central Pacific Railroad Company orders the mountains to come to them they come. Gentlemen talk about popular ideas, and accuse us of taking this side of the question because it is popular. If I wished to rise to the skies on beds of flowery ease, as the gentleman from Santa Clara quotes the language, I would make no resistance to anything which that company might want. Nearly a quarter of a century ago, when the California Steam Navigation Company was charging ten dollars between Sacramento and San Francisco, and freights in proportion, one branch of the Legislature passed a bill on this very question, regulating freights and fares, and all this old argument of vested rights, familiar to us all, was used. It passed the Senate, but in the House it was defeated on the opinion of the then Attorney-General of the State, that such a bill, reducing the rates for freights and fares, was unconstitutional. Since then these questions have been decided by the highest Court in the nation, and several of the State Courts, and it is now no longer a debatable question as to the right to regulate freights and fares. The only question now is that of expediency, and how there can be any question as to the expediency I cannot for a moment understand. I say this because it is contradicted here and denied in some form, though not expressly denied, by those gentlemen advocating what they call commissioners of inquiry. We have had that before, and we have it now. I suppose that means that they are to suggest a bill for the Legislature to pass, provided they cannot make some equitable arrangement.

Now, Mr. President, in regard to this section twenty, reported by the committee, I propose to discuss it if my health will permit me. Now, in one place here I think it should be amended. I think the Commission should have the right to limit and reduce the rates of freights and fares, but in no case should they have the right to raise them. I think it can be safely said that in all cases they are high enough, so that there will be no need of allowing them to raise them. In some cases, I admit, in some parts of the State, they are low enough. There is no complaint about the fare between San Francisco and Oakland. But even at the present low rates that franchise is immensely valuable, and as they might want to raise them there some time, I think it would be safer to put in an amendment that these Commissioners should have the right to limit the rates, but in no case to increase them. I think that is going far enough. I do not think they should be allowed to increase them. You have provided that these Commissioners shall be elected for four years. Now, sir, the argument in favor of a longer term is, that they may become posted in their business. I do not believe the position is one so exceedingly difficult that it will require a man to give his whole time to it for exceeding one year, to be thoroughly posted on this matter of regulating freights and fares. It is true, it is more difficult than to regulate tolls on toll roads or bridges; but a man who gives his whole attention to it ought to acquire the necessary knowledge in one year. But another objection to a very great length of time is this: that if the people should make a mistake—and I concede they may make a mistake—they have made mistakes—they ought to have a chance to rectify it. If they should make a mistake there is no way to rectify it, because it is in the Constitution. I would therefore like to offer an amendment, when we reach that point, so as to provide that those Commissioners shall be divided into three classes—one, two, and three—the first Commissioner to be elected for one year, the second for two years, and the third for four years, and so provide that there shall be one of these Commissioners elected at every general election, upon the same principle of our government which provides that, as to the Assembly, there shall be an election at every general election, every two years, in order that there may be frequent changes, and bring this power as near home to the people as possible.

I do not believe that it is proper to provide that these Commissioners shall prescribe penalties. Fix penalties, and enforce them through the medium of the Courts. I am not so much troubled about this general idea of the Commission having legislative, executive, and judicial powers, because that is often the case from the very necessity of the duties of their office, that all these powers shall be exercised to a limited extent. It is not that so much, but there is no necessity that they should fix penalties, and act, as I understand it, as a criminal code. The main thing that these Commissioners will have to do, is to provide against discrimination, and fix rates of freights and fares. Of course, if these rates are fixed, and higher prices are charged, there will be a cause of action, and the party would have a right to recover damages for these higher prices, if he had removed the freight and paid the charges. But this may properly be left to the Legislature, as to the penalties that are not now sufficiently provided by law. I don't know that I would object to a little legislation in the Constitution, and these penalties for a violation of the provisions of this new and untried system might be put in a separate section of the Constitution.

Again, while I am decidedly in favor of a Commission to fix and limit the rates of freights and fares, which is substantially the ideas in section twenty, at the same time I am in favor of recognizing the fact that we have a Legislature, and that so long as they represent and control the government and the laws, we must recognize the right of the people, through the Legislature, to reach all their departments of government. Therefore, I should be in favor of giving the Legislature a supervisory right over these Commissioners. They are not to be feared so much on account of affirmative action as they are on account of non-action, and the rights of the people ignored. I have no apprehension that any legislation will ever be found in the State of California, if the Commissioners fix the rates of freights and fares, that the Legislature will raise it. Nor have I any apprehension that any Legislature will ever assemble that will remove a Commissioner because he is faithful to popular rights. Therefore, I would go further, and give the right to remove one or all of these Commissioners by a majority vote of both branches of the Legislature. I would be in favor of that, not because I would not have confidence in whoever would be elected Commissioners, but keeping all the time in view the fact that mistakes may be made, and that when mistakes are made, the power should be lodged somewhere to correct them. I would provide, first, for the election of a Commissioner at every general election; next, in case one of them should be unfaithful, that his removal should be required upon the ground of a violation of his trust, or neglect of duty, so that eventually this right may come home to the people. They have a right to exercise this great right; that has been decided by the highest Court in the nation.

Entertaining these views without an opportunity of offering any amendment at this time, I shall, when an opportunity presents itself, eventually vote with reference to procuring such amendments; and I say, once for all, that every vote that I shall give, and every amendment I shall offer, shall have no other object and aim than to reach a definite, clear expression of the constitutional right of the people to regulate, not only railroad corporations, but, when we reach it, to offer the amendment which I presented some time ago. All corporations coming under the general head of furnishing articles or rendering services for public use, that in all cases, without exception, the charges for articles furnished and services performed, shall be specifically regulated by law.

SPEECH OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: The debate on section eighteen has taken in the whole range of the question at issue. Although, when I offered my amendment forbidding the railroads from raising their rates when once lowered for the purpose of competition, I felt that it possessed a principle of vast importance to the people of this State, and I knew that it would provoke discussion, I had no idea that it would bring out so extensive, so exhaustive, and so able a debate as it has. As I said, when I offered the amendment, it was for the purpose of protecting the small capitalists as against the immense, overgrown, and almost incomputable wealth of the great corporation which handles and controls all the roads of this State; and, while speaking to this amendment, I shall ask of this Convention the liberty which has been accorded to others, to also traverse the whole subject.

It is difficult, Mr. Chairman, coming in at the heels of this exhaustive debate, for one to avoid repetition; but I will endeavor to do so, and will merely give to this Convention my views upon what I consider the best criticisms that have been made against my amendment. It has been objected that it would not be a wise policy to place in the Constitution a principle so iron-clad in its character as is presented in this amendment—one which would hold the railway corporations and transportation companies to a rigid rule, and one which could not be relaxed except by a revisal of the Constitution. But I submit that the amendment accepted by myself and offered by Judge Hager will take away that objection in a great measure. Where the rule operates unjustly—whether it be unjustly towards the railroads or whether it be unjustly towards the people—the Legislature, by a two thirds vote, may relax it. I opine, Mr. Chairman, that no Legislature, where a question of absolute justice is brought before it, will fail to give that required two-thirds vote. Another objection has been that, under the operation of this amendment, the great railroad corporation would be blackmailed by land, by river, and by sea. I take it that he who attempts to blackmail this great monopoly will need to have a purse well lined with "the coin of the realm." I take it that no prudent or sensible business man will ever undertake, by land, by river, or by ocean, to run an opposition to this great corporation for the mere purpose of blackmail, knowing in advance that whatever moneys he might put into that enterprise would be swamped irrevocably. Gentlemen say that stage coaches and mule teams will spring up for the purpose of carrying passengers and freight in opposition to this company, and that they will be protected by this clause in the Constitution. Well, sir, if stage coaches and mule teams can compete with that great modern invention, the railroad, I say let them do so. But the principle of this proposition is that the railroad companies shall not be permitted, for the purpose of driving out opposition, for the purpose of crushing out local enterprises, to use the power of the great wealth they have aggregated to themselves, and then come back, after they have crushed out that opposition, and compel the people to indemnify them for what they have spent in so doing. There may be instances of blackmail occurring under it, but we have blackmail in every business. What this Convention should look to is whether it will encourage fair competition, and if it will do so it will protect the people.

I will venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no railroad in this State, outside of the great corporation, which does not exist by permission and will, and sufferance of the Central Pacific Company. I say that it is the history of railroads in this State that whenever the great corporation has gone after a line, it has captured it and put it in its pocket. It will be conceded by every gentleman in this Convention, that the natural highways of this State ought to be as free to its commerce, as open to the enterprise of every citizen, as open to competition, as the ocean itself. But it is not so now. There is not a point of railroad vantage in this State; there is not a navigable stream; not an ocean harbor anywhere within their reach, that is not controlled by the great corporations. The Sacramento River, which is a natural highway between the mountains and this city and the bay, is as effectually in the grasp of the great monopoly as though they owned every drop of water in it; and as I am informed, not a landing can be effected on this river within the limits of Sacramento—except two hundred feet of frontage which is held under an old franchise which they have never been able to secure—but is under the control or ownership of that monopoly. If we go from this to the other points on the river, and to the bay on the Oakland side, we will find the same condition of affairs to exist. The United States Government has spent over half a million of dollars in creating for the people of the southern counties, at Wilmington, a harbor which will be available to shipping. Notwithstanding that the Government has spent this enormous sum, notwithstanding that it has created a fine harbor, one which will ultimately prove of capacity sufficient to carry on the marine business of the southern coast counties and of Arizona—notwithstanding this, Mr. Chairman, you nor I nor anybody else can reach that harbor except over the territory claimed and, perhaps, owned by this great corporation. It is as effectually sealed out from the people as though there were a Chinese wall built around it. Well, sir, this is not a fine state of affairs, and, if we can overcome it by anything we can do here, we would be false to our trust, false to ourselves, and false to the people if we did not do it. I therefore say, Mr. Chairman, under existing circumstances, that there are no competing points in this State, and there will be none unless the remedy which is here proposed is adopted.

My distinguished colleague, I think, has fairly answered the gentlemen who have asserted on this floor that this amendment is the result of merely sectional grievances. I think he has shown that it will apply to nearly the whole State. It will certainly apply with great efficacy to Sacramento, and, sir, I think it will soon apply to every place on this coast. Mr. Chairman, this amendment only contemplates holding the transportation companies to fair rates. Now, why should they go below fair living rates? If they do so, they do it for sinister, and I may say, for criminal purposes; and if they do so it is their own voluntary act, and taken in connection with the intention, they should be punished. There is one peculiarity of our State that does not exist in the other States of the Union. The conformation of our State has been greatly conducive to the creating of this one-road power. The other States are crossed, traveled, and gridironed by a great many roads, and they have, in a great measure, been relieved by competition. Here we have none—and if we can bring that relief to our people by the adoption of this amendment—why should we not do so? I was astonished when the learned gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, a gentleman whom I highly respect, and upon whose opinions I have always placed great value, used the argument which he did. He said, alluding to the amount of freight available at Los Angeles, that the Southern Pacific Railroad was losing money. In other words, because Los Angeles had not volume enough of trade to enable that company to pay their running expenses now for the entire line of the road, that, therefore, the people had no right to complain. Mr. Chairman, that road, as far as we are concerned, is but one portion of a great contemplated system. Would the gentleman have us pay for the entire system? The benefits derived from that road are to come in the future. If they intend to make it pay as they go along—make it pay interest on the capital invested, and a surplus to continue it—why, God help those who live on its line! I believe, sir, with Edmund Burke, that the medicine of the Constitution should not be its daily bread; but I believe the medicine should be of a character, in this instance, to cure the evils which the great railroad corporation has brought upon this State. And if this medicine is a drastic remedy, and will effect a cure, I think that would be reason and cause for adopting it. So much, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the amendment.

I shall now pass very briefly to a review of the other sections, particularly section twenty. I will premise by saying that I am ready to vote for section twenty as it came from the committee, or to accept such modifications as may recommend themselves to my judgment; or, I will even—if gentlemen wish to offer such amendments—I will even go farther than this section has gone, to curb the corporation in its power over the people of this State. The first clause of the section reads as follows: "Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years." The only objection I have heard to that clause is, that the term is too long. In my judgment, the term of four years is not too long. I believe that if the term were even longer the people would receive greater benefits, for railroading has become, by its amplitude of classifications, and by the great mystery thrown around it, one of the most intricate sciences known to industrial or other economy. As to the propositions that these Commissioners shall be elected by the people, I wish to be understood that I shall oppose any effort, any amendment, by which this power shall be taken away from the people. Mr. Chairman, this great corporation has been able to reach nearly every branch of our Government. It has been enabled to influence our Legislatures, and it has been enabled, by what means I do not say, to have its own way in spite of the people of this State for the last ten years. There is but one factor in this Government which it does not reach, and that is public opinion. The people are too numerous, and public opinion too diverse in its ramifications, for that power to ever reach it, and I shall oppose any other mode of appointing this Commission than that of election by the people. There is another objection made to this section. "The Commissioners shall hear and determine complaints against the railroad and other transportation companies, fix penalties, and enforce them through the medium of the Courts." It is argued that this gives the Commission too much power. Now, sir, there is only one amendment that might with safety be made to this clause. I would be willing that the Commission should hear complaints in public and determine them as against the railroads; but, as to fixing penalties, why should not these Commissioners affix penalties? Who will be better able to judge what the abuses have been than the Commissioners?

And then here is the conservative principle in that clause, "that they shall be enforced through the medium of the Courts." I think that provision is guarded. I think that even the railroads themselves cannot complain of it, and I think the section, as far as that portion of it is concerned, ought to meet the views of every gentleman on this floor. Mr. Chairman, the language and syntactical construction of this section have been criticised by gentlemen in a peculiar manner. Gentlemen have shown their knowledge of grammar, their knowledge of the nice construction of phrases, and they have exhibited a smartness which would perhaps be commendable in a public school, but which I consider entirely out of place among gentlemen who generally know what the English language means, whether it be theoretically grammatical or not. These hypercriticisms of the verbal construction of this section remind me of a great episode in history. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that in that great Convention of sixteen hundred and eighty-eight, where the leading minds of England were assembled after James the Second had thrown the Great Seal of the State into the Thames and had abdicated the throne in a most pusillanimous manner and fled to France, Parliament met and resolved itself into what is generally known now as the great Convention, from which dates all the popular Conventions since that day of the Anglo-Saxon peoples. That Convention embraced men of a great variety of views; men who were willing and anxious to stickle upon points in which prejudices of long standing were concerned, and there seemed to be no possibility of getting them together in one mind upon the grand object for which they had assembled. In a happy moment the great lawyer, John Somers, offered a resolution. That resolution at once brought the Halifaxes, the Derbys, the Rochesters, the Nottinghams, and all the leaders of antipodal opinions together. In speaking of the resolution Macaulay says:

"This resolution has many times been subjected to criticism as minute and severe as was ever applied to any sentence written by man; and perhaps there never was a sentence written by man which would bear such criticism less. * * * It is idle, however, to examine these memorable words as we should examine a chapter of Aristotle or of Hobbes. Such words are to be considered, not as words, but as deeds. If they effect that which they are intended to effect, they are rational, though they may be contradictory. If they fail of attaining their end, they are absurd, though they carry demonstration with them. Logic admits of no compromise. It is therefore not strange that some of the most important and most useful political instruments in the world should be among the most illogical compositions that ever were penned. The object of Somers, of Maynard, and of the other eminent men who shaped this celebrated motion was, not to leave to posterity a model of definition and partition, but to make the restoration of a tyrant impossible, and to place on the throne a sovereign under whom law and liberty might be secure. This object they attained by using language which, in a philosophical treatise, would justly be reprehended as inexact and confused."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I dispose of the verbal inaccuracies and of the criticisms of that section upon the same ground that Macaulay disposes of the resolution of John Somers. If the language can be construed to mean that henceforth the railroads shall be regulated by law; that they shall not be permitted to oppress the people with extortions; that they shall not discriminate against persons or places; that they shall not use their great wealth to confiscate and absorb the property of others; that they shall not corrupt our Legislatures; that they shall not continue to tax every man's goods and products as much as they please; that they shall not defy the power of the State, and ride roughshod over the people. If it shall do this, I care not whether its major agree with its conclusion, or whether its moods and tenses will stand the test of a pedagogue's criticism. If it shall give to the people of California the relief they seek, its words will be deeds, and such deeds as every lover of his State will fervently hope to see realized. My vote will go with my judgment, and my judgment is that this section, and the sections which have already been adopted, including the amendment which I have had the honor to offer, will afford to the people of California full protection from the oppressions and the aggressions of the railroad monopoly.

MR. SCHELL. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost on a division vote—ayes, 55; noes, 65.

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I take the floor for the purpose of setting myself right before the Convention and before the world. I must deprecate the practice that has been indulged in by gentlemen on this floor, who it seems have constituted themselves my censors, of taking a word here and a word there from my remarks, and perverting its meaning, and making that the basis for their criticisms. I do not think that is fair, and I regret to have to be constantly defending myself. I am very much surprised and highly delighted at the encomiums which have been heaped upon me, but the reputation of the gentlemen from whom they emanate, for learning and ability, do not justify them in talking like fools. [Laughter.] I would much prefer it if they would kindly change the medicine. They bestow their encomiums, and then the censure. I would much prefer it if they would bestow the censure first, and then smooth me down with encomiums. The gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard, has credited me with saying that a superior officer is not responsible for the acts of a subordinate; that the directors of a bank are not responsible for the misappropriation or embezzlement of funds by their subordinates. I said no such thing. I did say that certain subordinates in the bank would not fall within the meaning of this clause in the Constitution, because they are not officers of the bank, hence the directors, under this clause, would not be responsible for their conduct. Why, I learned a long time ago that the superior is responsible for his subordinate, in all cases. It is necessary, in a discussion of this kind, to observe what is said, to get at the correct meaning. These misrepresentations arise from the fact that gentlemen take a word here and a sentence there from my remarks, and proceed to criticise me upon that. My friend makes me say things which I never thought of saying; makes me give utterance to principles that any unwhipped boy ought to know better than to utter. Now, General Howard (and I will take occasion to say, that he is the Nestor of the Convention), has presented the claims and complaints of the people of Los Angeles. It was his duty to do so. No matter whether those claims are real or imaginary, it is his duty to present them for adjudication before this body. He has imputed to me the statement that I thought the railroad company had used the people of Los Angeles right. I hope my profession has taught me more justice than that. I am not one who would belittle the claims of any community. They ought to be presented and fully considered. If we find that these grievances are well founded, it is our duty to redress them. I am not disposed to find fault, but I think these gentlemen are not doing me justice in their arguments. What I did say was, that whenever an opposition has been started, the same people who make complaints here are the very ones to patronize the railroads the moment the rates are reduced, on account of the competition, and aid them directly in running off the opposition. That they look to their own temporary, selfish interests. That when they have, by assisting and patronizing the railroad, succeeded in driving off the opposition, they come up to this Convention and ask to be relieved from the rule which they themselves have put in force. That they became particeps criminis, and that they had nobody to blame but themselves when the opposition was driven off. They simply consult their own temporary interest, and under the circumstances the people are not in a position to complain. If I stand upon the corner and advise a man to commit murder, or if I peer around and tell him when the coast is clear, I would be a party to the murder, if it should be committed. These men who shove out money to these grasping corporations to help kill off competition, I say are not morally in a condition to find fault with the natural consequences of their own acts. I do not mean that they should suffer any penalty, but that they are not in a position to cry out against the men whom they aided in doing these things.

Now, the question here is whether, after the rates have been reduced, the companies should be held to this reduction? It seems to me, sir, that it is unusual and excessive punishment. It is unstatesmanlike, and is giving way a little too much to the clamors of the people. Under the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles the same thing will be done, except that it will be done in a roundabout way. The result will be the same. The railroad company will not run at rates which do not pay, and no law can compel them to do so. They will not lower the rates on the road, but when an opposition steamer is put on, somebody, no one can tell who, would put on an opposition steamer at rates that would compel the opposition to draw off. Nobody would know who owns the steamer. It is true that under this provision the owner would be prohibited from again raising the rates, but he would not want to. He would have accomplished the purpose aimed at—the retirement of the other steamer. When the next opposition comes on, the same steamer perhaps, under a different ownership, would be called into use again to baffle the opposition. Thus the law could continually be evaded. Anybody can see in an instant that this would be the result. I greatly prefer the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell.

In regard to the criminal acts which General Howard claims have been committed, I do not see why they do not arrest them and have them indicted and punished. They have the Courts and juries apparently sufficiently prejudiced against the railroads to find a verdict, if they are guilty. If any crime should be committed by the railroad companies over in Marin, I am morally certain they would be hauled up and punished. I am of the opinion that the only reason they are not punished is that they are not guilty. If they should commit any crime over in the county where I live, you bet your life they would be indicted and punished very quickly [laughter], and not much talk about it either.

Now, in regard to the steeple business, the only reason I mentioned that——

MR. HOWARD. I did not do the gentleman any intentional injustice, because I said he could raise his steeple as high as any one whenever he chose.

MR. SHAFTER. I have no ambition in that direction at my time of life. I merely alluded to this matter of palatial residences in reply to others who had mentioned the matter. If I had twenty millions I do not think I would want to live any differently from what I do now; yet, we cannot tell. I remember an ancient quotation which runs, "Is thy servant a dog that he should do this great sin?" Yet, it turns out that he did do it. Men's ideas change with their interests. A man is an extremist when he has nothing; but as soon as he gets possession of six hundred and forty acres of land he will hold on to it and see that nobody else gets a slice of it. He won't be in favor of a division of property then. I do not take anything back that I said in regard to railroads advancing the prosperity of the country. If others want to go back to the days of the gee-haw-buck—the long train of oxen, let them do it. Railroads have done a great deal to elevate mankind, and it cannot be denied, and I have no wish to dispense with them.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: One word——

MR. BARNES. (At twelve o'clock) I raise the point of order, that we have reached time of adjournment under the resolution.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman cannot raise a point of order, because the gentleman from Marin is on the floor.

MR. SHAFTER. I had finished, but I thought Judge Hale wanted to ask a question.

MR. BARNES. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. REYNOLDS. I move that this Convention adjourn until Friday, at two o'clock.

THE PRESIDENT. Out of order.

MR. HALE. I move we now adjourn.

THE PRESIDENT. In pursuance of the resolution adopted by this Convention to adjourn at twelve o'clock, I now declare the Convention adjourned until Monday, December second, at two o'clock P. M.

SIXTY-SIXTH DAY.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CONTROLLER.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. I have here a communication from the Controller of State, which the Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

CONTROLLER'S OFFICE, SACRAMENTO, December 2d, 1878.

To the honorable the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: The Convention having adjourned from November 27th to December 2d—which adjourment seems to be a "recess longer than three days," and as under the Convention Act for such recess, the members and officers are to receive no pay—I have, in accordance with the law and my duty in the premises, issued per diem warrants for members and officers for four days, ending Wednesday, November 27th, instead of for the seven days, as claimed in the payroll furnished by your honorable body.

I have the honor to add that I am in receipt of the following resolutions, to wit:

Digitized by Google

SACRAMENTO, November 20th, 1878.

Hon. W. B. C. Brown, Controller:

SIR: The following resolutions were this day unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Controller be and he is hereby authorized to draw his warrant in favor of the Sergeant at-Arms for the amount of two hundred and ninety dollars and fifty cents, to pay the expenses of the obsequies of the late Honorable J. M. Strong, a member of this Convention, and that the State Treasurer be and he is hereby authorized to pay said warrant out of the funds appropriated to this Convention.

Resolved, That the per diem for the remainder of the session of this Convention, which the late Honorable J. M. Strong would have been entitled to as a member of this Convention, be paid to the family of the deceased.

J. P. HOGE, President.

I cannot find any authority under the law for drawing a warrant for the payment of either the funeral expenses of a deceased member, or an after-death per diem to his family, and am therefore constrained to decline a compliance with the resolutions above set forth.

Yours, respectfully,

W. B. C. BROWN, Controller.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: Not merely in respect to the matters referred to in this report, but with respect to other matters, a difference of opinion has existed between the Controller of State and this Convention, with reference to the disposition of the funds set apart for the use of this Convention. Some of these questions, as for instance, the question of printing, the view is taken by the Controller and his associates on the Board, that all expenses incurred in any way by this body should be charged against the one hundred and fifty thousand dollars appropriated by the Legislature for the expenses of the Convention. We are at issue upon that. I will therefore move that this report, or communication from the Controller, be referred to the Judiciary Committee for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting to the Convention what steps, if any, are necessary to be taken, for the purpose of getting the opinion of the Supreme Court of this State upon these questions. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not agree at all with the Controller. I believe that this fund of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars was placed by the Legislature of this State at the disposition of this body, and I do not understand that the Controller has the legal or moral right to pass upon any appropriations which this body shall make. But if these questions can be brought before the Supreme Court I think they ought to be submitted for their determination. Therefore, I move that this report be referred to the Judiciary Committee for that purpose.

Carried unanimously.

MR. O'DONNELL. I will give way to Judge Campbell for the present.

POOLING OF EARNINGS BY CORPORATIONS, ETC.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President pro tem. in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on section eighteen and amendments.

SPEECH OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: As I expect to be called away this afternoon on business which cannot be neglected, I desire to present now, in a few brief words, the views which I entertain in regard to the subject under consideration. The report of the committee, it seems to me, goes too far in one direction, and not far enough in another. In one respect it confers absolute powers upon the Commission; it enables them to fix rates of freights and fares, reasonable or unreasonable, without any appeal from their judgment, without any right to contest in any way the fairness of their proceedings; but it gives to them the sole and absolute and unrestricted control of at least one hundred and fifty millions of property. In one respect it fails to make provisions of vital importance, and without which it will be absolutely impossible for them to determine on reasonable rates of freights and fares. It gives them no power—no incidental power—to examine into the books of corporations, and the business of these railroad corporations, but allows them to be refused, as other Commissioners have been in past times refused in the exercise of that duty. It gives them a farther and undefined power to correct abuses. What abuses, is not specified; how they are to be corrected, is not specified. No limit of any description is placed upon their powers; and in another part of the section they are enabled to fix penalties for fines. Such powers, it seems to me, in our free country, ought not to be vested in any Commission. I think it would be unjust, not merely to the corporations, but to the people, because they have absolute power to fix fares and freights, without any appeal in any direction; because, if they are to sit in judgment upon questions of abuse, and correct, as it is said here, such abuses as may in their judgment exist, they deprive the parties interested, on both sides, of all power of appeal to a jury as in other cases—of all power of appeal to any Court in the land—and they are made absolute dictators, a power which, in a republican government, is dangerous to intrust to any such persons. In short, I am in favor of the strictest and strongest regulation consistent with republican principles, upon the aggressions of these corporations. I am in favor of limiting them by law, and through the medium of a Commission, to just and reasonable rates. I am in favor of placing their books, and documents, and papers, under the control of the Commission, so that the Commissioners may be able to act understandingly and advisedly from first to last. I am in favor of enabling them to fix reasonable rates of freights and fares, and any person who may be aggrieved should have an ample remedy. I am in favor farther of investing this Commission with power to devise a system of accounts to be kept by all these railroad companies, which will enable the Commissioners to discharge their duties in a satisfactory way. And I am in favor here, in this Constitution, of fixing such penalties for any misconduct on the part of railroad companies, for a refusal to acquiesce in the reasonable rates of freights and fares which may be decided upon by the Commissioners—I say I am in favor of fixing these penalties here in this Constitution, and not leave it to be done by the Legislature—ample penalties for the protection of the public.

I have prepared an amendment which I will read for information. I am aware that it is not in order now, but for the information of the Convention I will read it. I think it covers the entire ground. I think it goes as far as we ought, in reason and in justice to go, and this goes no farther. The proposition reads thus—and allow me here to say that I have left out of this section the mode of selecting these Commissioners, and their qualifications, and the compensation to be given to them, to be fixed in another and separate section. I do this for the reason that I believe there is a difference of opinion in this Convention as to the mode in which these Commissioners should be selected, and in regard to their terms of office. I believe myself that the surest way to get an intelligent, honest Commission, that cannot be cajoled or bribed or influenced, would be to have them appointed by the Governor of this State. To make these Commissioners to hold at his pleasure, so that at any sign of delinquency on the part of any one or more of them, they could be removed. The plan of electing or appointing these Commissioners for a term of four years, or any other term of years, seems objectionable in this: that if you appoint, or get a bad Commission appointed—get one that is under the control of the corporations—you have no redress for a term of four years. You have no remedy. Again, there is the danger which has been continually pointed out here, that the corporations may get at and control these Commissioners, either before or after their election. Now suppose there are politicians in this State who desire to obtain these positions as a means of making money, and in order to accomplish it, they make every other nomination to bear upon it. The corporations themselves will use all their influence and power to secure these nominations and control them. They will give up everything else to subserve this one purpose, and as one gentleman has well said, the company could afford to turn out five thousand Chinamen and put in five thousand white men, for the purpose of electing a single Commissioner. The other mode is not entirely free from danger. They may control the Governor, and through him the Commission, but there is less likelihood of that, for the reason that the Governor forms the head of the ticket. It is to that part of the ticket that the people are most likely to look with a critical eye. And in the present temper of the public mind there is no question on earth but they would see that no man, of any party or any organization, is elected to that office who is not perfectly sound upon that question, and who would not make appointments satisfactory to the people. But I propose to include the mode of appointment, the compensation, and the term of office, in another section. Let us first agree upon the powers with which this Commission shall be vested. Now, this section which I shall propose reads as follows:

"Strike out section twenty and insert as follows: 'Section 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be selected in the manner hereinafter provided. Said Commissioners shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to examine the books, papers, records, and documents of all railroad corporations organized, or hereafter to be organized, under the laws of this State, or any portion of whose road shall be in the limits of this State, to investigate their affairs, ascertain their receipts and disbursements, and by a majority vote to establish reasonable rates of fares and freights upon all or any such roads, or upon any parts thereof, whenever and as often as they may deem necessary, and alter the same when in their judgment it shall be proper, and to make and publish schedules of such rates. Said Commissioners, and each of them, shall have access to the books, records, papers, and documents of all such corporations; and any officer of any such corporation, or any person having the care, custody, or control of any such books, records, papers, or documents, who shall, at any reasonable time, refuse to any Commissioner access thereto, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined not more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the County Jail nor more than one year. Said Commissioners, and each of them, shall have power, in the discharge of their duties, to administer oaths and affirmations; issue subpenas for and examine witnesses under oath or affirmation; and any witness who shall willfully swear or affirm falsely to any material matter before said Commissioners, or either of them, shall be liable to all the pains and penalties affixed by law to the crime of perjury; and any witness who shall fail to attend, or shall refuse to testify in any material matter before said Commissioners, or either of them, shall be punished for contempt by the Superior Court, as in other cases of contempt. Such Commissioners shall annually, and whenever requested by him, report their proceedings, and such information as may be proper, to the Governor. Any corporation refusing to conform to such reasonable rates as shall be established by said Commissioners, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding twenty thousand dollars, and shall be liable to the party injured for all damages sustained, and, in the discretion of the Judge or jury trying the case, for exemplary damages; and every officer, servant, or employé thereof, who shall willfully refuse to conform to such rates, or shall demand or receive rates in excess thereof, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the County Jail not exceeding one year. These provisions shall be deemed self-executing, but the Legislature may enforce them by additional legislation, and may confer additional powers and duties upon said Commissioners. The rates of freights and fares established by said Commissioners shall, in all controversies and proceedings, whether civil or criminal, be deemed prima facie just and reasonable. Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts to be kept by all such corporations, and returns thereof shall be made to said Commissioners whenever required by them, or either of them; and any railroad corporation failing to keep such accounts, or to make such returns when so requested, shall forfeit its road and franchise.'"

Now, sir, I think this section would cover the entire ground. It is said that it is bad to incorporate a Code in the Constitution, but it is likewise true that in some cases it is right to incorporate penalties in the Constitution. It is right where there is reason to fear, from past experience, that the Legislature will not perform its duty. We may direct and order a thing to be done as much as we please in the Constitution, but if we do not impose some penalty for a failure to obey the mandates of the Constitution, it is mere waste paper—it has no practical living effect, and if the Legislature chooses to omit the penalties, your Constitution is utterly valueless. Now, while in general matters I am perfectly willing to trust the discretion of the Legislature, I am not willing, in a matter where this tremendous corporate influence can be brought to bear, to leave to them the doing of any act which is necessary to curb the overweening power of these corporations, and keep them within their proper limits and in their proper spheres. I have therefore introduced these penalties applying to their case where they refuse to submit their books to examination, and keep their accounts in such a manner that the Commissioners can proceed intelligibly—can know the amount of their receipts and disbursements, the amount of capital, etc., and see if any of the pretended capital of any railroad is fictitious, how far the actual expenses corresponds with the expenses which they hold forth to the world as being the expenses of construction and repairs, or anything else connected with the road. And I am in favor of placing them under penalties which will compel them to obey the mandates of the Constitution even if the Legislature should hereafter remain silent and inactive.

Now there is one point where this amendment presented by myself, differs from that presented by the Committee on Corporations. It is this: I do not in this give them absolute power to fix just such rates as they please, without any appeal. In my amendment, if the railroad deems the rates unreasonable, it may take its chances in going into the Courts; and if it does go there, the rates fixed by the Commissioners are deemed prima facie evidence that the rates are reasonable, and the burden of proving that they are not so rests upon the corporation. And, moreover, under my amendment, if a party aggrieved, if they feel that the rate fixed by the Commissioners is an unreasonable rate, the aggrieved party has his cause of action, and may not merely recover the damage he has sustained, but may recover exemplary damages. He may not have been injured to the extent of ten dollars, and yet a jury may award him a verdict of ten thousand dollars, or what the law calls punitive or vindictive damages—damages which shall punish the wrongs. If you hedge around these corporations in this manner—if you say that the rates fixed by these Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie evidence that they are reasonable, and make their violation punishable by a forfeiture on the part of the corporation of a large sum of money, or by the imprisonment of its officers—you put the railroads in such a position that they will not dare to contest the rate fixed by the Commissioners, unless it is palpably and clearly unreasonable, and in such cases they ought to be permitted to contest it.

I think this plan will do justice to all parties. It compels them to produce their books, and to submit them to the proper examination of the Commissioners, and it imposes severe penalties if they testify falsely before the Commissioners. It gives the people every chance to have these rates regulated without oppression. I wish to see no injustice done on either side, and that the rights of the people, which have been grossly trampled upon by these corporations, shall be in the future absolutely maintained. Why, Mr. President, just look at it. I shall not go over it in detail, but we find this state of facts: That five men incorporating a railroad company, contributing but a small sum originally out of their own means, have been enabled, first, to freeze out every other stockholder, and to become owners of a most princely domain, while the other stockholders, their partners in the enterprise, through their management, through their organization of companies within companies, have been deprived of all benefit of the investment. You find that that great corporation, beginning on nothing—virtually nothing—has succeeded, out of the profits and gains which they derived from that original investment, from the subsidy which it got by means I will not now undertake to describe, that it controls the entire transportation of this State by land and by water; that it has been enabled to build hundreds of miles of railroads out of its exactions upon the people; that the people to-day are contributing enormous sums to enable them to build other railroads, and to increase their power over the State and over the coast; that they have succeeded in obtaining this control of transportation by land and by water; they have even control of the ferry between San Francisco and Alameda County. I do not begrudge them a reasonable compensation for their enterprise. I am perfectly willing that they should have palaces to live in—that they should enjoy all the luxuries of life; but I am not willing that they shall put their hands into the pockets of the people day after day, and year after year, and take millions from them for their own use and benefit without an equivalent in return.

I desire that this extortion shall cease now and forever. It is with this view that I introduce this amendment. There is nothing in it, if they act honestly and fairly, of which they need complain. They are public corporations, existing by authority of law, and they cannot expect that the public, who are interested in their acts, are to be kept from any knowledge of their inward workings. They cannot expect to say to the people that it is none of their business. In fairness and justice they cannot complain of the public being fully informed in relation to their business; they cannot complain of being compelled to charge only reasonable rates of transportation; they cannot complain at being obliged to adopt a system of bookkeeping which will show the true condition of their affairs—how much they receive, from what sources it comes, and what disposition they make of it—and if they refuse to comply, they ought to be subjected to the severest penalties. They have refused in the past, and it is time it should stop. I think it is time for the people to step in and put a stop to the system which has prevailed of allowing unscrupulous men who control these corporations to tax the people at will. They should be regulated by the laws of the land, and held to a strict accountability.

Mr. Chairman, I am compelled necessarily to be absent this evening, so I have requested another member, at the proper time, to introduce this amendment. As I said, I have omitted the mode of selecting these Commissioners. Now, one word in regard to section eighteen. That has not been passed yet. I have an amendment to that also. The amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, as amended by Mr. Hager, provides that when any railroad company shall reduce its rates to crush out competition, that the rates shall not again be raised without the consent of two thirds of the Legislature. Now, sir, I do not want the Legislature to have anything to do with this matter of consent. I want that to be vested in the Commission—such Commission as this Convention shall, in its wisdom, think proper to provide for. And farther, it seems to me that by leaving it to the Legislature, it would in many cases necessarily do injustice. Take the case which was presented by my colleague here, of the railroad between this city and Shingle Springs. Why, the gentleman says they used to run stages there and carry passengers for three dollars a head. The railroad has driven them off by putting down the rates. But, this Sacramento and Placerville Railroad, as I am informed—and I have never heard the statement denied—has never made a dollar out of any of its properties, and I do not believe they are to-day. But, it would, at any rate, be under the supervision of the Railroad Commissioners, and if it does make more than a reasonable amount, they can reduce the rates to a reasonable basis. But, there is this about it: take a peculiar railroad like that, and you may put on a competing line of stages, if you please. The stages were run on the Placerville route in the palmy days of that country. Now, a railroad line is fixed and permanent. It is built at great cost, and run at a heavy expense, whereas a stage line can be put on and off at will, for the purpose of blackmail. I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles will tend to prevent the building of short lines of railroad, and to render unprofitable some of those already established. If a man has an unemployed stage, he can put it on and run opposition to the railroad, for the purpose of blackmail. The railroad company must not lower its rates, because they cannot be raised again. So with the owner of an unemployed vessel. He can run it in opposition to the railroad on any of the natural highways of the State. He can afford to run cheaper on water than they can on land, and when they come down to his rates, they must necessarily lose money, and they dare not put the rates down.

MR. TERRY. Has not this been voted on in the Committee of the Whole. I raise that point of order.

MR. CAMPBELL. The eighteenth section has not been voted upon.

MR. TERRY. I have been informed by the clerk that the Convention has so voted.

MR. CAMPBELL. No, sir, section eighteen was passed over on account of the previous question having been moved.

MR. ESTEE. It has never been disposed of.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section eighteen has not been disposed of.

MR. CAMPBELL. It has not been disposed of, and that is the reason I am discussing it. I say it would be dangerous to put such a provision in the Constitution, compelling these railroad companies to go to the Legislature for permission to raise their rates, as the Legislature only meets once in two years, and they would be compelled to run for two years oftentimes at a loss. I say it would be rank injustice; and while I am in favor of the strongest restrictions, I am not willing to do them any injustice.

MR. O'DONNELL. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. I gave way to Judge Campbell because he wanted to go away. I wish to rise to a question of privilege.

MR. ESTEE. I object.

MR. O'DONNELL. I want to rise to a question of privilege.

MR. WATERS. The doctor had the floor for that purpose before the Convention went into the Committee of the Whole. He, at the suggestion that Judge Campbell wished to get away, gave way to him. Now all he asks is to have a few moments for a question of privilege.

MR. ESTEE. What is the harm in waiting until we come out of Committee of the Whole. I would be willing to give way, but it makes no difference whether he speaks now or not.

MR. MURPHY. I move that the gentleman have leave to make his statement now.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the committee rise?

Division was called for, and the motion was lost by a vote of 38 ayes to 39 noes.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President: I rise——

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion was lost and we are still in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles. The Secretary will read section eighteen and the amendments.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 18. No railroad company or other common carrier shall combine or make any contract with the owners of any vessel that leaves port or makes port in this State, or with any common carrier, by which combination or contract the earnings of one doing the carrying are to be shared by the other not doing the carrying.

Amendment by Mr. Ayers:

"Amend section eighteen by adding after the word 'carrying,' in the fifth line, 'and whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any other common carrier, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not be again raised or increased from such reduced standard.'"

Amendment by Mr. Campbell:

Digitized by Google

"Add to section eighteen, 'and whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any railroad constructed or in process of construction, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, it shall not again raise its rates without the consent of the governmental authority in which shall be vested the power to regulate fares and freights on railroads, nor shall such other railroad raise its original rates without similar consent.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers.

MR. WEST. My recollection is that the gentleman from Los Angeles accepted the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, and the question would therefore come on the amendment of Judge Campbell.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by Judge Campbell.

MR. RHODES. I desire to call attention to the verbal amendment which I supposed had been accepted at the time: "Constructed or hereafter to be constructed."

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. CAPLES. As Judge Campbell is not in, I will state that he agreed to make that correction, and it was my understanding that it was to be a substitute for the words, "in process of construction," and I was under the impression that he had made that correction. He agreed to do so, and I presume afterwards forgot it. I now move to make that correction.

THE CHAIRMAN. It seems to have been made here, but there is a line drawn over it so the clerk did not read it.

THE SECRETARY. The correction is in ink and has been marked out, showing that he made it and afterwards erased it.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. That is a mistake—he did not intend to erase it.

MR. CAPLES. I move as an amendment, to make that correction by inserting the words, "or hereafter to be constructed."

MR. BLACKMER. I rise to a point of order. There is an amendment to an amendment pending. I understand that Judge Campbell erased it himself.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary says he does not know how it was done. If there is no objection it will be considered as being in.

MR. HALE. I ask the Secretary to read that again, without the proposed amendment.

Amendment by Mr. Campbell:

"Add so section eighteen, 'and whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any railroad constructed, or in process of construction, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, it shall not again raise its rates without the consent of the governmental authority in which shall be vested the power to regulate fares and freights on railroads, nor shall such other railroad raise its original rates without similar consent.'"

MR. HALE. It seems to me that the language there is ample to express the purposes in view. It says roads in process of construction. It does not mean simply that it would operate simply upon roads now built, or being built. It is applicable to roads built or being built at the time of the lowering of the rates. I presume Judge Campbell struck that out, thinking it unnecessary.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I find by Rule Thirty-nine that a question of privilege shall be entitled to supersede all other business, and Rule Fifty-six says these rules shall be applicable to the Committee of the Whole, so far as applicable.

THE CHAIRMAN. A question of privilege must come before the Convention, and not before the Committee of the Whole.

MR. O'DONNELL. The same rules apply.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I would like to have an explanation, so as to see whether the committee understand this matter as I understand it, so that we can vote upon it understandingly. Section eighteen was before the committee, and the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, moved an amendment. To that amendment the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Hager, moved an amendment which, according to my recollection, was accepted by Mr. Ayers. Then came the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, as an amendment to the proposition of Judge Hager. Now, the proposition of Judge Hager, as I understand it, does not change section eighteen, but adds to it. I am not very clear in my mind as to whether the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, is a substitute or an addition to it. It seems to me it would supersede the Hager amendment.

MR. ESTEE. The gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, accepted the amendment of Judge Hager, and now the first question is upon the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell. If it is adopted it will supersede the other amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. If adopted it will operate as a substitute.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: The objection I have to the amendment is that it permits railroad corporations to reduce their fares for the purpose, at pleasure, of killing off opposition. Now, it occurs to me that if there is any object at all in preventing a reduction in fares and freight, in order to prevent opposition, it is just as important that it should be prevented whether it be a railroad or an old fashioned mule team. There is not a bit of difference. There will be no competing railroads in this State, and the only opposition the railroads will have to contend against is water carriage or by teams, so the effect of the amendment will be destroyed absolutely. The section will be of no use whatever; of no possible benefit to the people; no possible check upon the railroad companies of this State.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will be voted down. Suppose a railroad company builds a road from San Francisco to some point on the coast, and establish their rates between these two points. A corporation may be formed for the purpose of running a line of steamers from San Francisco to that point. The corporation running the steamer, under this provision, would be allowed to reduce their rates until they had compelled the railroad company to suspend; and when that is accomplished, not being a railroad corporation, the steamboat company would be allowed to raise their rates again without asking leave of anybody. They could kill off the railroads as fast as they could be built.

MR. ESTEE. Would not that be the result of both these amendments?

MR. BLACKMER. Yes, sir; and for that reason I hope this amendment will be voted down, and I shall then propose an amendment that will include all corporations or associations that are doing business as common carriers. Further, that they shall not again raise the rates unless the Legislature authorizes it. Not that the Legislature shall raise them, but to compel the corporation to go to the Legislature and get authority to put the rates up again. I will read it:

"And whenever any corporation or association doing business as a common carrier shall, for the purpose of competing with or rendering unprofitable the business of any other common carrier, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, it shall not again raise its rates, unless the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof, shall authorize such change."

MR. McFARLAND. That will require a special law. It is an exception to the general rule, that laws should be general.

MR. BLACKMER. Perhaps it would be.

MR. ESTEE. I will state to my friend that he will get things badly mixed if he undertakes that, because we have a provision that the Legislature shall pass no special laws. I hope both amendments will be voted down.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell.

SPEECH OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: This amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, seems to be very objectionable in itself. It applies only to a case where one railroad is competing against another railroad, which is a case that does not exist in any part of this State. Now if this amendment be adopted, it disposes of and does away with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers. For instance, some one starts a steamboat to run from Sacramento to San Francisco, for the purpose of carrying freight and passengers. The railroad company can put on an opposition boat, and puts the price down so low that the other boat is soon run off. Now, the railroad company is enabled to do that, for the reason that it can make up the loss resulting from carrying freight and passengers below cost, by charging an unreasonable price at other points. The result will be this, if this amendment is adopted, that whenever any boat is put on this line between here and San Francisco, the Central Pacific Railroad Company can put on a competing boat and put the rates of freights and fares at just what it pleases, and after having run off the opposition, then they raise them again, as they always have done. Now it seems to me that is the very object of this amendment, to allow railroads to monopolize the carrying business on the natural highways of the country; if it is not, I am very much mistaken.

Here is the City of Marysville, that has withstood fire and flood. And it is to-day, after the many misfortunes, one of the most prosperous interior towns in the State, for the simple reason that she has, through thick and thin, maintained an independent line of steamers between there and San Francisco. And she is to-day maintaining this line of steamers. Now this amendment offered by Mr. Ayers will prevent the railroad company from competing that line of steamers out of existence. But the other amendment, offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, will enable the railroad company, if it chooses, to put down the rates of freights and fares from Marysville to San Francisco until the steamer is run off, and tax the loss of the transaction upon the people of other portions of the State where there are no natural highways, where competition is impossible. And when they have succeeded, by these means, in running off the steamers, and crushing out the opposition on the great natural highways, which God made for the use and benefit of the people, which, by the overshadowing monopoly of these corporations, have become worse than useless in this State. I say this amendment of Judge Campbell will leave us worse off than we are now. Everybody knows there are no competing railroads in this State. It is between the railroads and steamer lines on these inland streams. This amendment will not better our condition a particle. They can lower the rates and raise them at will.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. BLACKMER. I now offer an amendment to section eighteen of the report of the committee, as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to section eighteen the following: 'And whenever any corporation or association doing business as a common carrier shall, for the purpose of competing with or rendering unprofitable the business of any other common carrier, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, it shall not again raise its rates, unless the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof, shall authorize such change.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: The question raised in regard to the Legislature, it seems to me, does not affect the amendment which I have offered. The object of this is not that the Legislature shall raise these rates, but that the corporations themselves, who do these things—lower their rates for the purpose of driving off competition, or making unprofitable the business of any other common carrier—before they can raise the rates again, they must get permission of the Legislature to do it. I think this will accomplish a good purpose. The Commissioners might do this without any publicity whatever, if it is left in their hands. Nobody would know it but the corporations until the report of the Commissioners came out. But if you compel the corporations to come to the Legislature, they will have to show good cause—show that they did not violate the provisions of the Constitution—before permission will be granted the Commissioners to put the rates up again. I think this is a good provision. I believe it is not open to the criticisms that have fallen upon it; and I believe there is justice in it, and that we should include all corporations that are doing a carrying business. I see no reason why railroad corporations should be prohibited from doing these things, and still leave it open for other common carriers to lower their rates for the purpose of killing off opposition lines, and then raising them again. I say it is no more than just that railroad and other common carriers should be placed upon the same footing.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: These amendments are all aimed at the old lines. It is not plain how it will affect new lines that have no original rates to be lowered. A new line cannot lower its rates, because it never had any rates. My experience is that the new lines are the worst, because they are generally put on to blackmail the others. I know the old California Stage Company used to carry people at very reasonable rates, and some men, who had a few old horses and a stage or two, used to put them on in opposition for the purpose of blackmail. They compelled the stage company to reduce fares or lose their business. Now, this proposed amendment would put things in this condition: A new line is put on; the old line cannot reduce, because if they do they cannot raise the fares again. But the new line can run off the old line and then raise its own rates to a paying basis, because there is nothing in the provision to prevent it. I say you are doing a great wrong. I will state to my friend from Nevada a case: A man up there, having finished some large teaming contract, and having a lot of horses and mules on hand, with nothing for them to do, could put on a line of freight teams to Colfax, and for two or three months in Summer could carry freight cheaper than the railroad does to-day. Now, what would be the effect under this rule——

MR. CROSS. If the teams can carry cheaper than the railroad, let the teams carry it.

Mr. McFARLAND. Then the gentleman does not express the wishes of his constituents, for they do not wish to dispense with the railroad. I say for two or three Summer months they might be able to carry cheaper than the rates now charged by the railroad. But they could not carry at all when Winter comes. Does the gentleman want to put them in a condition where they would have to stop running, or run at a loss? If he does, he would find that his own constituents are against him.

MR. CROSS. If mule teams can compete with railroads, then they should have a chance to do it.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: We have great difficulty in procuring a proper form of the amendment under the rule that there can be but two pending amendments. In reality, the proposition of the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, is in the nature of a substitute to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers. There ought to be some machinery by which we can perfect a substitute, if it is not already acceptable. In some respects I like the provisions of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, better than those of the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers. I find objections to both. In the first place, I think the objections urged by the gentleman from Sacramento, Judge McFarland, to the phraseology, are well founded as to both these pending amendments. In other words, while the true policy may seem to be the same as between two transportation companies, whether railroads or steamboats, or railroad against steamboat, or railroad against mule, or ox teams, that if one lowers its rates for the purpose of driving off opposition, it shall not be privileged to raise them back again, until they have secured the permission of the proper authority. For instance, a steamboat is put on for the purpose of competing with the old line. It puts its rates originally at whatever figure is desirable. It does not reduce its rates for that purpose, because it has no established rates to reduce. Now, will this provision apply to them as well as to all others? If not, the phraseology ought to be amended.

MR. BLACKMER. Under my amendment, if they are corporations or associations doing business as common carriers, then my amendment applies to them. If the gentleman thinks it is not clear, let him propose an amendment and I will accept it.

MR. HALE. I made this suggestion because I desire to see the provision properly framed. I desire to see it framed in such a manner that the rule shall be equally applicable to the old and to the new lines, whether one or both change their rates. I desire that the rule shall apply to both, that they shall not increase their rates except by permission of the proper authority. As to another point: of course, I do not know what may be the disposition of the committee when we come to section twenty. We cannot tell whether the committee will adopt the idea of a Commission. I hope they will. If the idea is not adopted, I hope this power of granting or withholding consent to raise rates after they have been reduced will be lodged in the Legislature. If the idea of a Commission is adopted, then that power ought to be lodged in the Commission. I think the words "or establish" ought to be inserted in this amendment.

MR. BLACKMER. I accept that amendment, after the word "lower" the words "or establish."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from San Diego.

MR. O'DONNELL. I sent up an amendment to this section a week ago, and it has laid there all this time and never been brought forward.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I think all these amendments proposed to this section are vicious. I do not believe they will remedy the evil complained of. I do not believe they will do any good, and I do believe they will do a great deal of harm.

MR. O'DONNELL. I have the floor, I believe.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: Is the gentleman from San Francisco entitled to the floor? If he is, I will sit down.

MR. CHAIRMAN. He was calling the attention of the Chair to an amendment.

MR. O'DONNELL. The amendment I offered was laid on the table and never brought forward. My amendment was this: "No railroad company or common carrier shall combine or make any contract with the owners of any vessel that leaves port or makes port in this State, or with any common carrier navigating the waters of the State."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order this time.

MR. SHOEMAKER. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: The question before this house is the amendment of Mr. Blackmer. I am opposed to that amendment. I am in favor of the amendment of Judge Ayers. The amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego would prevent competition between two stage lines in this State. If either one of them lowers its rates, it can't raise them again without permission. The object of the amendment of Mr. Ayers was to protect the people against the immense monopoly that has been built in this State by the great donations of land and money and bonds drawn from the people. The present owners, or pretended owners, are oppressing the people, and for that reason I shall vote in favor of the amendment of Mr. Ayers. Their property occupies a different relation from any other line in this State. A different position from railroads in other States. It is the lands, bonds, and money of the people placed in the hands of these men that built these roads, and gave them the power which they now wield over the people. That is the reason why this amendment should apply to railroads, and not to all carriers, because the people themselves built these roads. There are carriers in this State who are operating on their own private capital. They have never drawn a dollar from the State; they have never been granted subsidies of land, they have never received any bonds, and hence do not stand in the same relation with the people that the railroads do. Therefore, I hope gentlemen in this Convention will vote to sustain the proposition of the gentleman, Mr. Ayers.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I was going to say a few words upon this subject when the gentleman from San Francisco interrupted me. What I was going to say was this: that the result of the amendments now before the committee will be this: to absolutely freeze out any opposition line that may be established—and I have listened for several days here to hear any gentleman give a reason why such would not be the case. I attempted to make this point clear the other day. Suppose the people of Los Angeles establish a line from Los Angeles to Anaheim—a fast passenger line. The present line, belonging to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, would put down the rates. That road is but a short road, and they have a network of roads all over the State. The result is, the opposition line must carry freight and passengers lower than the main line, or they will not get any business. That is a business proposition, the correctness of which will not be disputed by any gentleman on this floor. Now what is the result? The result is, that the old line, having a network of railroads all over the State, can afford to cut the rates down on that short line, and make it up out of the roads elsewhere, where there never can be any opposition. There is no man in this State, insane or otherwise, who would put his money into a railroad enterprise, if either of these amendments is adopted as a part of the Constitution. There will be no such thing as competition.

MR. CROSS. As the matter stands now, could any competing company build and maintain a line of railroad?

MR. ESTEE. I will answer that question. There is not capital enough; there is not trade enough; there are not people enough to justify competition. There is no such thing as a healthy competition, and cannot be in my judgment. There is no real competition between railroad lines in the great State of New York, or in New England, or even in England, much less here in this State, with its vast extent of territory, and less than a million people. Such a thing, gentlemen, is impossible. Let us look at these things as they are, not as they ought to be. Put that amendment into the Constitution and there never can be any real competition. The result would simply be that some roads would be run at a loss in order to freeze out all opposition, and the loss so sustained would be made up elsewhere. They could not come up here to the Legislature and apply for permission to raise the rates, because we have agreed to a clause that no special bill shall be passed; at least the Committee on Legislative Department have agreed to it, and it will be adopted, of course. [Laughter.] That course is a wise one. It is admitted by all experienced legislators to be the correct course. Hence, this would fall within the prohibition of special legislation. I hope none of these amendments will be adopted. I can see nothing but evil in them. It may sound well, but it is no remedy. It is as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal, but it is no remedy for the evil complained of.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman cannot point me to a competing line that has been built anywhere in this State that has not been frozen out. This would not be the case if we do our duty, and compel these men to adopt a reasonable rate of freights and fares everywhere. We ought to provide that these corporations shall not receive above a certain per cent. upon the value of their property. These abuses will not exist if we make these provisions here in this Constitution, and declare that the rates of freights and fares shall be so regulated as to produce but that percentage, and if it overruns, have it paid into the State treasury. I shall argue upon that basis, satisfied that no wrong can be done. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer.

Lost.

MR. O'DONNELL. I now offer my amendment.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers.

Division was called for, and the amendment was adopted by a vote of 66 ayes to 39 noes.

MR. SHOEMAKER. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. ESTEE. Let the next section be read, so that this section will be disposed of.

MR. HALE. This amendment ought to be amended in one respect, and if we rise now the members will have an opportunity of amending it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to rise.

Lost.

MR. HALE. I move to substitute for the amendment as acted upon, to strike out after the word "unless," these words, "the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each house, shall authorize such change," and substitute the corresponding words in the Campbell amendment, "without consent of the governmental authority in which shall be vested the power to regulate fares and freights, authorizing such change."

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I rise to a point of order.

MR. SHOEMAKER. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. LARKIN. This amendment has been adopted——

MR. SHOEMAKER. I rise to a point of order——

MR. ESTEE. You cannot change the object of the amendment. You can perfect it, and if that is for the purpose of perfecting it, it is in order.

THE CHAIRMAN. This amendment will be entertained. The point of order is overruled.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I have no desire to occupy the time of the committee. This amendment, however, should prevail, it seems to me. Now, sir, if you are going to appoint a Commission to regulate freights and fares, and confer upon them the general power to do it, then I am unable to see the reason why this power of consent should not also be left to them. Moreover, the policy should be, if you are going to adopt this Commission system of dealing with railroads, to take the entire subject out of the hands of the Legislature and vest it in the Commission. It certainly belongs there, if you are going to have anything like harmony in this system.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I had already prepared an amendment the same as that offered by the gentleman from Placer. I think it is right and proper. We expect to organize and institute a Commission to deal with this whole subject-matter. That proposition may fail, but it is my impression that we shall institute this Commission. If we do, that is the true governmental authority to have charge of this subject. Again, it seems to me that the matter, as it stands, relegating this matter to the Legislature by a certain vote, would be to invite lobbying, and that would be in contravention of the cardinal principles of the report here of the legislative committee prohibiting special legislation. That is another serious objection to leaving this matter to the Legislature. I therefore desire and earnestly hope the amendment will prevail. In the event of a failure to agree upon these Commissioners, it would go to the Legislature, because that would undoubtedly be the proper governmental authority in that case. In the event that we do institute this Commission, it will leave the matter with them, where it will properly belong, without any conflict of terms—without contradiction. I hope the gentleman's amendment will carry.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Division was called for, the committee divided, and the amendment was adopted—ayes, 61; noes, 43.

MR. SHOEMAKER. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost on a division vote—ayes, 51; noes, 51.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twenty.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State, at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; hear and determine complaints against railroad or other transportation companies; affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in the foregoing sections.

MR. VAN DYKE. I have an amendment to section twenty.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of Mr. Prouty.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President: I rise to a question of privilege. My rights as a member of this Convention have been assailed by a venal sheet called the San Francisco Chronicle. That paper, in its issue of last Saturday, published the following false and defamatory language in relation to my action on this floor. I will read it:

"As to O'Donnell, it may be said of him that he is an adventurer in his profession, and as a politician beneath contempt; and he hates the press because it has opposed him. And that is the motive of his opposition. He was elected as a Workingman and a reformer, and on a platform which, if it had any meaning, meant hostility to the arrogance and corruptions of the railway monopoly, and he has shown a desire recently to go back on the platform and assist the corporations in one of its most vital points, namely, to defeat the proposition for a Railway Commission for the regulation of fares and freights. For this act of treachery he should be read out of the Workingmen's party, and if they fail in this duty the Chronicle now respectfully warns them that it will cause their disruption and utter failure."

Mr. President, that is an extract from the degraded Chronicle. The creatures which purport to be its proprietors are now under indictment for libel, and their trial will take place at the next term of Court in Placerville. Of their conviction I never had any doubt. As to the paper itself, it has been branded by the Workingmen's party as a Judas and a traitor to the very cause it professes to advocate. As to the statement that I have shown a desire to defeat the measures for the election of Railroad Commissioners, every member of this Convention can testify it is false; and it being false I take this occasion to brand the editor of the Chronicle as a malicious libeler and a willful liar. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. SHOEMAKER. Mr. President: I move the Convention do now adjourn.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I have a motion to make. I move that Dr. O'Donnell be appointed a committee of one to punish the Chronicle for this libel, and that the trial take place in some other part of the State.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. Not in order. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Carried.

And at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M. to-morrow.

SIXTY-SEVENTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Tuesday, December 3d, 1878.

MEMORIALS.

MR. BELL presented a memorial of the Representative Assembly of Trades and Labor Unions of the Pacific Coast on the following subjects:

First—The contract system, and praying for a law prohibiting the same on public works.

Second—Against the letting of State Prison labor to contractors.

Third—To prohibit children under fourteen years of age from being employed in shops and factories.

And also urging the adoption of certain articles reported by the Committees on Chinese, and on Corporations other than Municipal.

Representative Assembly of Trades and Labor Unions of the Pacific Coast do hereby memorialize the Constitutional Convention, now in session, on the following subjects:

First—The contract system, as practiced by State and municipal authorities, in the letting and permitting the subletting of contracts, without holding the subcontractor responsible, as provided by the Consolidation Act, passed by the Legislature in eighteen hundred and seventy-one, and thus defranding the State, as well as its citizens, this all being done under the connivance of Commissioners appointed to guard the public's interest. We, therefore, would respectfully recommend the adoption of a law prohibiting the letting of any State, county, or municipal work of any description by contracts, so as to have all public work done by the day, and eight (8) hours to constitute a legal day's work. For illustration of the above evils, see Stone-cutters' memorial.

Second—The State Prison labor. We indorse the clause introduced by John D. Condon and P. M. Wellin, as sufficient remedy for evils as now existing at our State Prison, to wit: the furnishing of prison labor at forty cents per day to unprincipled contractors, to the disadvantage of honest manufacturers and honest labor, particularly the cabinet, shoe, harness, sash and blind, door makers, and all other labor indirectly.

Third—We would most respectfully recommend the adoption of a clause prohibiting children under the age of fourteen years from working in any shops or factories.

Next, we indorse and respectfully recommend the adoption of the following sections:

By the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, sections three, seven, eight, ten, eleven, twelve, and thirteen.

By Committee on Legislative Department, we unanimously indorse section thirty-three.

By Committee on Chinese, we indorse sections one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, and nine.

Secretary of the Representatives of Trades and Labor Unions.

Referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

Also, the following memorial from the Journeymen Stonecutters' Association, of the Pacific Coast, against the contract system of labor on public works:

WHEREAS, There was a law passed at the session of the State Legislature of eighteen hundred and sixty-six and seven, enacting that all State work should be done by the day, but its effect is nullified by the passage of special Acts authorizing contract work; and, whereas, since the passage of said Act, there has been the following public buildings constructed, under the head of special legislation:

First—The Deaf and Dumb building, which was partially destroyed, in eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, by the falling of the walls, they being constructed in such a manner that they could not support the roof; and two years after, the State, by relief Acts, paid the original contractor forty thousand dollars ($40,000) to rebuild the same walls; and in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-five, when the building took fire through defective flues, the entire walls fell in complete mass of confusion, wherein, if said building had been constructed with half care, as to plans and specifications, the walls would stand for ages to testify to the solidity of their construction.

Second—The State Normal School, erected at San José, which has been a disgrace to this commonwealth since its first inception, and we believe it is to-day, after considerable expense to the State in patching up a bad job.

Third—The College of Letters building, of the University of California, which the public investigation of the Building Committee of the Legislature of seventy-four and seventy-five proved to be the poorest constructed building (both as to workmanship and material) that could possibly be constructed with any show of decency, and a personal inspection from your honorable body will show the most glaring proof of the foregoing.

Fourth—The Napa Insane Asylum, which was also by special Act, at an estimated cost, by the architects whose plans were approved, of six hundred thousand dollars, but the State was compelled to pay some one million four hundred thousand dollars, an excess over original cost of eight hundred thousand dollars, and to-day there are portions of the building which are fast decaying.

Fifth—Is the Branch State Prison building, at Folsom, where the contractor gave bonds to finish said building, but finally collapsed, cheating all the poor workingmen, and his creditors, out of their hard earned money. When the State commenced suit against his bondsmen to perform the contract, they instituted a counter suit for damages in the sum of thirty-six thousand dollars, and were granted judgment in the Sixth District Court, of Sacramento.

Sixth—Is the present contract for the same work, which is being carried on by just such said actions.

The memorialists could give a great many instances, in the contract work on the Pacific Coast, which is a living disgrace, of which your honorable body is perfectly cognizant, as they have been pretty thoroughly ventilated in the public press.

MINORITY REPORT ON CHINESE.

MR. O'DONNELL presented a minority report from the Committee on Chinese, as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT: The undersigned, a member of the Committee on Chinese, asks leave to present the following minority report:

The power which, it is conceded, is possessed by the Legislatures of the respective States to pass quarantine regulations, is conclusive of the right of a State to prevent the landing of criminals or paupers upon her soil. If a State may, by virtue of her sovereignty, pass laws to quarantine a vessel for a single day then she has the power to continue such vessel in quarantine for an indefinite period. The power to prevent the landing of the cargo of such vessel, therefore, necessarily resides in the State.

I heartily concur in the report of the majority of the committee in respect to the necessity of preventing any further Chinese immigration. It is unanimously conceded by all parties—by native Americans as well as by citizens of Irish and German descent—that the coolie is a curse, and that some power should be invoked to prevent the further importation of the revolting creatures to these shores. Upon that point I fully acquiesce with the majority of your committee. I disagree with them only as to the means to be employed to accomplish a great national result.

The cases in which the Supreme Court of the United States decided that foreign immigration into the United States ports was a regulation of commerce have no relation to the coolie question. Those cases referred to immigrants from European ports, and it was decided that in respect to such immigrants the question of their immigration was a commercial regulation, over which Congress possessed exclusive control. I take the position that there is no analogy between those cases and the case of the coolie. He is not an immigrant; he is not eligible to American citizenship; he is imported merely as a chattel; he comes here under a contract to perform labor for a menial compensation. The Southern slave was always better paid, better fed, and better educated than the coolie of Asia.

If the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States applies only to immigrants to the United States, how does it affect the power of the State to prevent the landing of a leper upon her shores?

I am distinctly in favor of a constitutional provision which shall empower the Legislature, by necessary enactments, to prohibit the coolie trade, and to prevent them from landing in any of the ports of California. Such a provision would be opposed by certain members, upon the ground that it is unconstitutional. They will pronounce it a regulation of commerce. But suppose we incorporate it in the Constitution of California. The question will then be presented to the Supreme Court of the United States for adjudication, and that tribunal will determine the question whether a sovereign State has or has not the power to prevent the importation of diseased persons or criminals into her ports.

With this view of the subject, I respectfully propose the following amendments to Article—:

The Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall pass all laws necessary to prevent the introduction of Chinese coolies into any port of this State, and may provide for the punishment of such offense as a felony.

Respectfully submitted.

C. C. O'DONNELL,
Minority Committee on Chinese.

2. No alien of Asiatic descent shall ever be eligible to American citizenship, nor carry on any trade or occupation in the State of California; nor shall they be employed on any public work within this State.

MR. SCHELL. I move that the reading of the article be dispensed with.

THE CHAIR. They will lie on the table.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIR. The question is on the amendments of section twenty.

SPEECH OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: The report, sir, of the Committee on Corporations departs at right angles from all of the provisions in the present Constitution upon that subject; provisions that have stood the test of more than a quarter of a century. It goes upon the theory also of enacting a code instead of establishing a Constitution. This committee having passed one after another of these provisions, each one, in my judgment, worse than its predecessor, has now arrived at the twentieth section, which, in my judgment, is the climax of mischievous innovation. I am opposed to that section, and I desire very briefly to give a few of the reasons why I oppose it. Now, sir, the mover of a new law is supposed to make some statement of the evil which he proposes to remedy, even in an ordinary Legislature, where new laws are mere experiments and where they are held in hand responsive to bit and rein, and in a condition to be amended or repealed at any moment. He who proposes a new law to be put into a Constitution should state, in strong terms, the evil which he proposes to remedy. But, sir, when it is proposed to put into the organized structure of the government itself a provision so startling, so unusual, so contrary to conceived notions, so destructive of the basal idea of the American system of government, so revolutionary as this, he ought to be expected to state, with every minuteness of detail and all aptitude of illustration, some enormous and overwhelming evil that calls for such extraordinary legislation. The surgeon does not apply the knife to parts near the vital organs except when life and death are in the scale. This twentieth section proposes a dictatorship—a dictatorship, it is true, of a triumvirate instead of a sole despot—a dictatorship that does not go to all the powers of sovereignty of the State, but a dictatorship that goes to many of the most important functions of the government. Well, now, sir, in the whole history of civilized nations dictatorships have only been resorted to some half dozen times, and those were times when the State was disturbed and distracted to the very center, when anarchy was impending, when it looked as though night and old chaos was about to return. Now, sir, is any such a statement of evils made here in this case?

The gentleman from San Francisco, the Chairman of this committee, and the father of this report, is an able gentleman, able to state a case strongly, and is used to that business; yet, sir, from the first of his argument to the end, he only referred, if I recollect, to one, single, solitary, isolated fact as going to prove this extraordinary evil. He stated, as I understood, that one particular railroad company in this State charged less in proportion for fares between two certain points than was charged between two other points, and therefore all this revolutionary project is to be introduced into our Constitution. So far as he is concerned, all these things are to be done only to make this railroad company charge two bits more from Sacramento to San Francisco. What a mole hill is this, where we should have been shown a mountain! Does not the gentleman know that if this law should pass nobody would be benefited by it, and that everybody would be injured? How could Sacramento be benefited? Why it would prevent the company from carrying to San Francisco by railroad at all. How would the people from Davisville to Vallejo be benefited? They would be compelled to sustain by their local trade a line of railroad that is now sustained by a large portion of the State. Does not every gentleman who has thought upon this subject know that to be true? Let us turn now to the knightly gentleman from Los Angeles, who seems to have entered upon this modern crusade with an enthusiasm as great as that which carried the chivalry of Western Europe to the plains of Palestine. He goes to another State and tells us what somebody has said occurred at Reno, in the State of Nevada, outside the jurisdiction of your Constitution, and beyond the reach of your power. And the scholarly gentleman from Sonoma, disdaining all details, contented himself with comparing these corporations to that fabled giant of Greek mythology, Briæreus, reaching out its hundred arms for mischief, and belching fire and devastation from its fifty mouths. If the gentleman were to undertake to exhaust the resources of language for purposes of unfair exaggeration upon any subject, he could not say a more unjust thing than that. Why, sir, an enthusiastic friend of railroads might, with far less extravagance, compare the railroad system of this State to some vast beneficent system of watercourses, which nature might have produced, with its branches penetrating every nook and corner of the land, stimulating activity and prosperity everywhere, and bearing to the gates of commerce, on its broad currents, the growth of every climate, and the products of every industry. Comparisons are easy; but a comparison is neither an argument nor a fact. And the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, devoted himself almost entirely to the elaboration of the statement that railroads are responsible for all the ills that flesh is heir to. He described this world previous to the era of railroads and during the era of teaming, as a paradise, free from all poverty and misery, and full of beautiful mules. He recited to the Convention, from a Scottish poet, a description of the luxuries of the rich and the wants that pinched the poor in his day. The language was very pretty, and the words were pronounced trippingly on the tongue, but the effect, "not to put too fine a point upon it," was broken, to some extent, by the fact that the poet died a quarter of a century before the railroad was even dreamed of. And the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, committed hari-kari in the beginning of his speech, by saying that he had no knowledge in the world of the question whether freights and fares are too high. But you will notice that we have personal complaints here. It seems to be argued that railroad companies make United States Senators. Well, the gentleman ought to know something about that, for he was made a United States Senator himself. How that may be, sir, I do not know. There is a little matter of history—and the gentleman refers to history—relating to the two distinguished gentlemen who now serve this State in the United States Senate, and who have served this State there for several years. It is well known that one of these gentlemen was elected by an organization or party which was based upon the sole idea and sentiment of opposition to the railroads. That is a matter of history. As to the other gentleman, he was elected because his party was in a large majority in the Legislature, and because he was and had been from the very natal hour of that party, one of its most able, consistent, and distinguished representatives. How the gentleman himself got to the United States Senate I do not know. But I do know that he would be highly and justly indignant if any one should intimate that he ever received or solicited railroad support for that position.

Now, sir, it is apparent to the unprejudiced mind that all this clamor about railroads and corporations originates in this house. It is a mania. It is evolved from the inner consciences of some men here, as spiders spin their webs. I say there is no popular demand for any such extraordinary legislation to-day. I say the people do not call for it. I insist that the relations between the railroads and the people are satisfactory—and, if it were not so, we should hear from the people upon the subject. Your Secretary, from day to day, reads from the desk petitions and memorials on various subjects in which the people set forth their demands; but there is not one there about railroads. I contend that there has been no general complaint made before the committee itself outside of this Convention, and I have been informed—though I cannot vouch for its being true—that not a single individual, outside of this Convention, has gone before that committee to make any complaints. We have had in this State, for some years, a Commission to whom complaints could be made, and we have heard from them that there were, practically, none. Under this state of facts, it would seem that this passion that afflicts some gentlemen here, is like the passion that consumed the swarthy Moor—it makes the meat it feeds on. Where are your facts? It seems to me, sir, that some gentlemen in this Convention, like some newspapers, are undertaking to build up public opinion upon which they may feed, and upon which they may ride to popularity. I have talked to the farmers of this State. There are some of them in this Convention. I have talked to other men, and I have heard no complaints. I have heard here legal arguments about propositions never disputed; plenty of declarations and assertions, but we have nothing, worthy the name, of a presentation of any fact or the indication of any evidence before the Convention, showing such state of feeling as is claimed here by gentlemen on the other side.

Why, it is a most astonishing thing that the gentlemen who advocate this report confine themselves almost exclusively to making legal arguments upon a point that the State has a right to regulate railroads. Who denies that? It was not denied by the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, nor by any other gentleman on this floor. Now, does it not look as though the gentlemen advocating the other side of this case, undertake to expend a great many words upon the proposition that the State has a right to regulate, in the hope that the people will infer that because they have the right they must therefore create such an extraordinary Commission as this is? But, sir, I am rather astonished at the arguments and authorities they cite on that proposition—a proposition that nobody denies. The gentleman from Los Angeles was exceedingly unfortunate in both his argument and his authorities upon that point. He says, sir, that the State has the right to do this thing, because there is a contract between the State and the railroad companies. Why, sir, he had better abandon that proposition at once. If it is a contract, there are two parties to it; and where there is a contract and two parties, there are rights and duties on both sides. Who ever heard of a contract where all the rights are on one side and all the duties on the other? But his argument is that here is a contract, yet the State has all the power and the corporation none; that the very condition of the contract is that the railroad company shall have no right whatever. Who ever heard of such a thing? Did the gentleman ever hear, in all his experience, of any Court that would enforce such an unconscionable condition as that? You had better say it is not a contract—that it is a law. Then he will put himself upon a safe proposition. And he was further unfortunate in the main decision he cited. He had the Secretary read from the Elevator case.

Sir, I have a great respect for Courts. I think Courts are generally right, and I know of no way in which civilized society can be conducted except through the instrumentality of Courts, which must have a final adjudication of rights; but I do not know any slavish doctrine that would prevent any man from expressing his opinion about a decision of a Court, and I pretend to say that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case alluded to, is most destructive of the leading ideas of American government, the most ruinous to personal liberty, of any decision ever made in any Court in the United States or England. I do not believe that the gentleman from Los Angeles will indorse it when free from the bias of partisanship. I do not believe that a man of his legal judgment and good sense and love of liberty will indorse any such decision. Why, what was it? Two private individuals leased a piece of land and erected upon it buildings. They had no privileges or immunities from the State whatever. They were private individuals. They built upon that land houses with their own private funds. They connected with it an elevator for the purpose of handling grain. They said to the farmers, "Come and store your grain with us, and we will take it for a certain price," and that decision is that the State shall say what they shall charge. Is there a man in this Convention that will indorse that doctrine? That if a man erects a warehouse at Stockton, at Sacramento, Marysville, or Vallejo, the Legislature can say what he shall charge for storage? If that be the law, then the Legislature can say what Booth & Company shall charge for groceries, what Holbrook, Merrill & Company shall charge for a bar of iron or a stove; what Lyon & Company shall charge for a sack of onions. It can compel every hotel in this State to reduce its board and lodging to the level of the hash-house that the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, says the other gentlemen from San Francisco live in, and can control the private affairs of every business man in the State. I say it is monstrous. I am glad that it was announced by only a majority of that Court. But I only meant to show where that doctrine leads. Now the gentleman says that he voted for every Democratic candidate for the Presidency from Jackson down, including, I presume, that life-long apostle of Democracy, Horace Greeley.

MR. HOWARD. If the gentleman will allow me. I do not wish to be misrepresented, though it is a small matter. I could not go Horace; I voted for O'Connor.

MR. MCFARLAND. I am glad of it; I am glad to know that my friend was not entirely wrong during his whole life. Now, sir, the leading principle of the Democratic party, the one asserted by its greatest leaders, and built into its platforms, was this—and it is a good principle too—there are not many things in the Democratic party, connected with it, that I can indorse, but this I can, the gentleman knows it—"that government is the best that governs the least." And, sir, the converse of the proposition is true, that that government is the worst which to the greatest extent sticks the finger of inquisitorial power into private affairs, and keeps the eye of official espionage upon the daily walk and conduct of the citizen. And I say that that decision is a blow at this doctrine, and goes to the point that every citizen in his private business is at the mercy of the Legislature. I scorn and detest such a doctrine. There is not a man on the floor of this Convention who would stand up here and defend it, and if the gentleman from Los Angeles were to assert that he believes any such monstrous doctrine, and that he is willing to follow it to its logical result, while I would not dispute his veracity, I should say that he was carried away with his feelings or prejudices, and that he would, in his calmer moments, repudiate it.

But we do not deny the power to control. It stands on a better and firmer basis than that decision. "The Court awards it, and the law doth give it." So did the bard, apparently, give to Shylock power over the life of the unfortunate merchant of Venice; but can you cut the pound of flesh nearest the heart without the life-blood of your whole political and economic system following the knife? Does it follow that you must exercise the power because you have it? The Legislature of this State has immense power; it has all the power not taken away from it by the Constitution of the State and the United States. Shall it be exercised for bad purposes as well as good? That is the question, sir. Now, the point I make is this: that there never has been presented before this Convention any evidence to warrant any such extraordinary and revolutionary legislation as this section provides for. I say you propose to put into the Constitution a proposition almost unknown to the history of nations, and when you propose to do that it devolves upon you to show that an evil exists here as great as was ever known in the history of nations. I say you have not done it—it is all declamation. I say there are no facts here; there is not a particle of evidence here showing any such condition of affairs. It is most singular if we have this condition of affairs here and have no evidence of it. Distinguished gentlemen coming here for the purpose of risking their political future upon this question, are utterly unable to give this Convention anything more than mere general assertions. Now, sir, I say this: that the judgment of men who have given the most attention to railroad matters, is that the best thing to do with them, as a general rule, is to let them alone; to hold over them the legislative power, so that it, at any moment, can, when a case of extortion comes, remedy it. That is the opinion of Charles Francis Adams. I do not want to read from the book—that is what he says, and any one can read it for himself. He has had more experience than anybody else upon the subject, and his conclusion is that the railroad problem will work itself out; that the people on the one side and the railroads on the other, are fast coming to a conclusion themselves, and there is no need of any legislation on the subject in any shape or form—and that is the opinion of all who have examined the subject thoroughly and carefully. I do not deny the power of the Legislature to regulate freights and fares, when they choose to do so, or when they think the time has come that they ought to do it. They have done it already, to some extent, and they hold that power; and if exercised wrongly, and it is shown within a year, or within six months, that the law is wrong, the Legislature is ready to alter or repeal it. But here, sir, in the report of your committee, you have put in, already, dozens of sections that are irrepealable, permanent, beyond the reach of the Legislature—that cannot be reached by any ordinary power—and you propose to give the remnant of the power to another Commission, over which neither the Legislature nor the people can have any control. That is what is proposed to be done.

It seems to me that if the statements of some gentlemen are true, that this Commission has all the powers of the State, because it is said that the railroads have all the power, that the people are mere serfs, that they are the only portion of the country that are of any importance, yet you give to the Commission power to rule them, and therefore you give to the Commission a pure dictatorship, holding all the powers of the government, and having sole power to exercise the right of sovereignty. I do not propose to answer all these personal objections that gentlemen make to railroad companies. It does seem to me that we ought not to be governed by these considerations. The relations of individuals with the railroads, and the private grievances of any man, or personal dislike of some member of the company, should not operate on questions to be decided in a constitutional body. The question is, in the first place, is there any necessity for regulation at all? I say there is not. But if there be, if there should be in the future, the question is, where should that power rest? I say in the ordinary power of the State Government; in the ordinary legislative branch of the State Government. This Commission says it must be taken away from that power and put into an extraordinary Commission, one beyond and above the government. These men do not only propose to tinker with the vital organs of the State, but propose to take away a portion of them as a surgeon would cut away a portion of the heart, or liver, or lungs; and they propose to establish a Commission of three men to whom these several parts are to be given. Was such a proposition ever heard of in a free government—in a government that pretends to have a free Constitution? The proposition was never heard of before; certainly not in America, and never heard of in England after she commenced to become free. Why, this Commission is to be a Court. They are to hear and determine all complaints. I do not know in what manner; not according to the ordinary processes of law, I suppose. Everybody who has a complaint, whether frivolous or not, could come before a Commission and it would have to spend the most of its time in hearing complaints, and would not have time to examine into the question of freights and fares or pass laws upon that subject. Their powers as a portion of the judiciary would be so much taken up that their executive and legislative powers would not have any time in which to exercise themselves. For that is what it is. They are to hear all complaints on every question connected with railroads.

Now, sir, I have only one more word to say, and I am done. I do not desire to detain this committee after the many long arguments we have heard. Sir, I believe in this American system of government. I believe it is the best system this world has ever seen. I have lived on American soil all my life, and my ancestors for three generations have been born on it. I know what the arguments are in favor of other forms of government; that the monarchy is the strongest government, because it is best able to do right; that the aristocracy is the wisest government, and knows the best how to do right, and that the republic, or democracy, or free government, most desires to do right. I believe that our American system includes to a great extent the whole three ideas. But we are subject to great dangers. Monarchies are subject to one kind of dangers, and republics or democracies to another. What is the danger? The great danger in a republican government—in a free government—comes from the unbridled license of a mob; the dangers come from a want of respect for law and order; from a want of respect for private rights and private property. There is the danger, and you see it in this country and in this State to-day. And if this Government ever falls, and a monarchy is established on its ruins, it will be the very reason that the people have not been educated properly, that the demagogues have led them to stray from the doctrine that law and order must be preserved, and that the rights of private property must be respected. There is the danger. And I will tell you this: there is a principle in the science of government that is as true as mathematics and as eternal as the stars, that men will be protected in their rights of property. If they cannot be protected as the citizens of a republic, they will be protected as the subjects of a King; and the history of the overthrow of free government, back to the very dawn of human annals, shows that free governments have been overthrown through that very fear of want of protection. It was that very fear which enabled the Cæsars to erect an empire upon the ruins of Roman liberty. It was that fear of protection that enabled the Charleses and Philips to break the ancient Constitutions of Spain and destroy her free Cortes. It was that fear that enabled nearly all the monarchs of medieval and modern Europe to establish absolute governments upon the ruins of liberty, and it is that fear to-day that stands in the way of Republicanism in France. The fear of the Commune, sir, will enable the opponents of Republicanism in France to defeat it if anything does. And it is that fear which will overthrow this Government, if it is ever overthrown. But I do not believe it will be. I believe the people have been too well educated in the principles of their government to allow it. But there is the danger. One of the ablest and most liberal of British statesman said that no Government can stand where the ballot is universal, and as to the United States he said this: "At present every man, no matter how poor, has a prospect of bettering his condition. He, therefore, is interested in maintaining law and order." But he appealed to the next century and said, "when the time comes that America was populated as thickly as France and Germany, and when a great majority of men will be compelled to remain poor, that they will not remain poor with the ballot in their hands."

We have some exhibitions of that principle in this State at this time; and it is the duty of us to try and inculcate among those with whom we associate and those who come after us a respect for the principles of American liberty, a respect for American government, a respect for the rights of private property. If that is gone, everything goes. When I look back through the history of American and English liberty, from the day when John Hampden risked his magnificent fortune and his head upon the question of constitutional liberty, and see through what sacrifices and devotions and martyrdoms from that day to this, we have arrived at this magnificent structure of American government, I feel as if I should like to do something to make it permanent, safe, and secure for those who come after us. We cannot do it, if we instill into the people a want of respect for personal rights and private property. When that is gone, your Government falls; and I say that this whole report upon corporations is impregnated with the desire to undermine and overthrow the rights of private property. From the beginning to the end of it, I say, sir, that this mania—this political malaria that has spread over the land—has reached the Supreme Court of the United States, and has caused that decision in the Supreme Court of the United States—and I say that the whole decision and the doctrines set forth in it are subversive of American liberty, and that they will, in the end, be overruled and set aside. Men will be upon the Supreme Court of the United States who will ignore and overrule that decision. If they do not, and it is carried out to its legitimate consequences, the people of this country are slaves—minorities slaves to majorities.

Now, in regard to the railroad companies in this State, the statements are wonderfully wild and exaggerated. One gentleman said here, I believe, that the railroad companies were employing seven or eight Chinamen to one white man. That is not true. I understand that there are not more than one Chinaman to seven or eight white men. Gentlemen talk about this railroad having been built to a great extent by Chinese labor. It had to be built that way or not at all. Everybody knows that the interest of this State was to push that railroad forward as fast as possible, and that could not be done except by the use of all the hands that could be employed. It was said that the railroad companies had imported Chinamen. I understand that is utterly false; but they have made use, to some extent, as other citizens have, of that kind of labor. It seems to me that every gentleman ought to understand that it is to the interests of California that the railroads of California should be under the control of California men. They have been so owned thus far. What has been the result? Why, sir, when you go as far as the Central Pacific runs eastward, to Ogden, you find that the trade to that point comes to California, and upon the other side it goes to the East. And I have been informed by a gentleman not connected with the railroad, that if the City of San Francisco had given her million of dollars, as she agreed to do, that the railroad would have been pushed one hundred miles further, and we would have had all the trade of Utah. Everybody knows that if the Southern Pacific is owned and controlled by California men, that the whole trade of that part of the country, almost to the Mississippi River, will come to California, and if it is owned by Eastern men it will go there. And yet you want to fill up your Constitution with burdens and provisions that will discourage any California man from putting a dollar into railroads.

We all know that the men who have controlled these railroads are rapidly passing away. Two or three of the most influential and able of them have lately gone, and the time must soon come when the roads must pass into other hands. Where is it going? There are not many men in California outside of the few who know how to manage it, that know much about railroad business. And of those who would be willing to try it, there are few that have the capital. And yet, if you put all these burdens upon it you simply drive out of the minds of that class of men any idea of controlling our railroad system. There are men in the East who have been in the railroad business for years, who have command of a great deal of capital, who would be glad to own our railroads, but we want to do something to encourage our own men to control these railroads. If you put these burdens upon them they go necessarily to Eastern men. I suppose that Gould to-day would give a large amount for a controlling interest in our roads. Then the trade of Nevada and every point a hundred miles east of this city would go to fill the coffers of the rich men of Chicago, St. Louis, New York, and Boston, which now comes here to build up the same city which these gentlemen represent, and which they are endeavoring to ruin by this class of legislation. Why, sir, a great deal has been said about the members of this railroad company getting rich. Well, sir, would you expect them in such a magnificent enterprise as that to get poor? Would you expect an enterprise costing the millions of money that the Central Pacific Railroad cost to be so nicely graduated at the start that the men who built it would neither lose a dollar nor be in a position where they could make more than legal interest? Why, sir, the mechanic, the carpenter, the contractor, in estimating the expense of a house costing only a few thousand dollars, will sometimes make a mistake of several hundred, and yet you expect that a railroad can be commenced at the Pacific Ocean, run over almost inaccessible mountains, over deserts, through Indian countries, through undiscovered countries you might say, and that at the start you are going to calculate this thing down so nicely that the men who build it shall neither lose a dollar or make more than legal interest. Why, sir, would any man of common sense go into a hazardous business of that kind upon any such terms? Suppose some men were going to prospect for a mine. They find a hill which they think may contain a mine; they are willing to put their money in for the purpose of determining whether there is a mine there or not, and if they lose, they lose all. If there is no mine there, everything is lost. If there be a mine there, they make money. Suppose you say to them: "If you find a mine there you shall not make more than about ten per cent. a year on your investment." Would any man of sense undertake to open a mine? Would any man in his senses undertake to go into a thing upon the condition that he might lose everything, but he should not make more than the man who loans money on a mortgage?

The Government of the United States wanted to build a railroad from the East to the West. It was a national enterprise. They considered first whether they would build it themselves as a piece of government work, or whether they would help somebody else to build it. They said: "Instead of building it ourselves, we will offer a certain proposition to a company. We will give you so much land; we will guarantee your bonds for so much a mile. If upon that condition you will build this railroad, it is a contract." Well, sir, it was accepted, and after these subsidies had been granted there was not half a dozen men in the State of California that believed it could be done. It was called the Dutch Flat swindle, and it was said that they only intended to run it to Dutch Flat, so as to draw the trade of that section and of Virginia City. The certificates of stock were hawked around the City of San Francisco, and there was not a man to buy them. The City of San Francisco, after having subscribed one million dollars, after the land grants had been made, compromised by paying six hundred thousand dollars—a little more than one half—because she believed that it never could be a successful business operation. That is history. But because it turned out successful, and a few men got rich, gentlemen say, "Take it away from them." Is that sense? Is that justice? Is that in accordance with any rule or system of laws the world ever saw? Suppose I go out upon that public domain, and the Government says I may take a piece of land if I want to prospect for a mine there. I go and spend perhaps thousands of dollars, and find no mine, and I lose it all. The gentleman over here at the right goes on, and he finds and makes maybe a million. Do I go to him and say: "Give me your mine; pay into the State a certain portion of the products of that mine; you shall not be allowed more than ten per cent. on your expenditure?" If that is not confiscation, what is it? Do gentlemen undertake to say that the State owns these railroads? I do not understand anybody to take such a position as that. Who owns the locomotives and the cars that run on them? Are they not private property? And yet you propose to hand over that property—every car, every locomotive, every station, every machine shop which that company has built—you propose to take it all and give it over to three men, with a strong hand, just as if you proposed to take from the gentleman his homestead and give it to me. Don't they own it practically under the bill? Can't they control it without any other governing power at all—without any restraint whatever? What could the railroad companies do under that bill except to say to them: "Gentlemen, upon what terms shall we be allowed to use our own property?" There is no restraint upon them; there is no limit to their powers. No man can point to the line where it stops. These three Commissioners can in the course of their four years control millions of property; property not their own; property that does not belong to the State which proposes to give it to them; property which belongs to private individuals; and yet they have the power to take that property and control it, and make it utterly worthless, if they choose. It seems to me the position is too monstrous to be entertained by any body of sensible men like this.

I have nothing further to say. I only say that I stand upon this principle: that the Legislature, under the decision of the Court, have the right to regulate fares and freights; that at the present time it is not policy to do it; that the people who are dealing with the railroad companies do not ask it to be done; and that the power it possesses should be left with the Legislature that comes fresh from the people every year—the Legislature which, if it happens to commit an error, can correct it. I shall not detain the committee any longer.

SPEECH OF MR. DOWLING.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. Chairman: I only wish to place myself in a true light regarding how I shall cast my vote on this twentieth section. I am one of those that do not want to sail on an unknown sea without any instruments with which to find out where I am going. I do not want to sanction any innovation on well-established principles without knowing the reason why. The gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, says that the railroad problem will solve itself if we let it alone. Does the gentleman know—he ought to know—that the interests of the State and the railroad are to-day antagonized, and we want to see a tribunal that will harmonize the two interests. Again he says, that the majority is the slave of the minority. Well, that is known many a day ago. It is an old thing. But, sir, Mr. Hamilton says that it is of great importance in a republic, not only to guard society against the purposes of its rulers, but to guard one part of society against the injustice of the other. De Toqueville says no matter how strong a government may be it cannot easily escape from the consequences of that which it has once admitted as the foundation of its Constitution.

Now, sir, there is a principle established—there is a grand principle underlying section twenty—and that is the principle upon which our government is established. The underlying principle is the principle of equity and justice. This corporation question is a very complex problem, no matter from which side it is viewed. I have not heard a speech delivered on this floor since this subject was taken into consideration that was not for or against this corporation question. Now, sir, I am glad the lines that separated us in the commencement here are getting to be obliterated. I am very proud, sir, that the line of demarkation is drawn so clearly and so well defined, with this monopoly on the one hand and anti-monopoly on the other. On a question of this kind, where a new idea is being considered, we should not be wafted away on the winds of popular opinion. We should be guided, sir, by reason, by common sense, and by good sound judgment. I heard one gentleman make an attempt to solve the problem, that is to express his views, so that it would be just to the railroad, and just to the people, but his uncertainty showed conclusively that he had no fixed opinions on this matter.

Now, sir, we want the Commission. A Commission is the only way to solve this question. Commissions want knowledge, they want power, they want control, they want honesty and justice. That is my idea of Commissioners—self-knowledge, self-control, self-government. These three alone raise them up like sovereign power.

Now, sir, there is a reason why we should have the Commission and there is a reason why we should not have the Commission, and they are these: The reason we should have a Commission is because the people want to be represented and protected. The reason that we should not have a Commission is because the railroad companies or the railroad monopolies do not want to be bridled. They want to be let alone. They want to be let run rampant the same as they have for the last fifteen years in California.

Again, sir. What are the functions of the Commission? Now the functions of the Commissioners are simply first to execute, and second to report to a higher authority. But gentlemen cannot see a higher authority than the Commission. That is an ignis fatuus—that is what always appears before their imagination—an absolute and autocratic Commission. But, sir, if I understand this section aright, I think that it exacts from the Commissioners a report annually to the Governor—though so far as I am concerned I would have them report semi-annually—and through him to the Legislature. I also understand that by an amendment that has been offered here by the gentleman from Sacramento, I think, Mr. McConnell, that he provides that two thirds of the Legislature can remove these Commissioners for dereliction of duty or abuse of their trust. That don't seem to me like an autocratic Commission. That don't seem to me like an imperial triumvirate. I spent my boyhood days under an autocratic government. I have been raised under a monarchical government, and I know what it is. But for the life of me I cannot see where this has any analogy whatever to a monarchical form of government. And let me confess here on this floor that notwithstanding all the political corruption, notwithstanding all the railroad oppression, notwithstanding all the rascality that exists in public places, I would rather be a dog in a republic than to be a British Lord. Now, sir, that tells exactly how I stand about monarchy.

It is a well established principle, and as old as the right of eminent domain itself, that no man can be deprived of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law. That is plain enough. Now, again, our whole system of government is Commissioners. The President of the United States, Senators, Representatives, Governors of States, in fact, all of our officers down to a common Constable, are Commissioners, deriving their power from whom? From the sovereign. Deriving their powers from the people. But, sir, our sovereign is not found 'neath the sheen and floss of crimson curtains on the bench or at the bar. If you want to find the sovereign in a republic you have got to go into the workshop, you have got to go on the farm, into the woods, into the busy market places, and down into the mines. He is the life, the center, the motive power, the pillars upon which the nation rests. He only is the monarch. It is a monarchy turned upside down. It has no analogy at all.

Now, sir, the three Commissioners proposed to be elected under section twenty of the report of the Committee on Corporations are to derive their just powers from the people, and be individually responsible to the people for the abuse of that power. If I understand it right it is a coördinate branch of government, and owing to the peculiar circumstances surrounding it, it has got to be clothed with legislative, judicial, and executive power, or else it is not worth the paper it is written on. That is not to say that it is an autocratic Commission. Not at all, sir. It is amenable to our laws; amenable to the laws of the State. They can be removed for dereliction of duty as I have already stated. They can be removed for abuse of their trust if two thirds of the Legislature see fit. Now, an eminent author says that one ounce of practical common sense is worth all the theory from here to China, and I believe he is right. The practical common sense we want in this question I think is to get three men that will solve this railroad problem. That is the common sense. Three determined, honest men, that we can depend on, and if we cannot get three honest men, as some gentlemen have remarked, in the State, well, it is time for us to change our system of government anyhow. But I am not prepared to accept any such doctrine yet. I think that the Commission cannot be so unreasonable as to destroy the corporation, but even if the Commission is a little arbitrary with the corporation it will do no harm. A man never repents while he is prosperous. It takes adversity to bring a man down on his knees. The corporation has been arbitrary, and if it had been wise and just this Convention would not have been arrayed against it as it is to-day.

Now, sir, we have such a sovereign in this country as in no country on the face of the globe. The will of the majority, in this country, is the sovereign—a majority of the industrial masses, the toiling millions before whose imperial will the most gigantic as well as the humblest citizen must bow. That is a fact I presume that every gentleman will concede.

Again, sir, the corporations, the money monopolies, the land monopolies, and the shoddy aristocracy, form a minority in this country, and they are always blowing against the will of the many. Why? Because their interests are diametrically opposed to popular prosperity, and they want, as a matter of course, to further their own aggrandizement. Now, sir, they create all the strife, they cause all the tears of grief to flow from the eye, and create all the wrinkles that are so perceptible to-day in California. It is this class of people that are to blame and nobody else. They are the Communists, and time alone will verify the truth of that assertion. The advocates of corporate power have all the machinery at their command. They have ability, they have experience, they have talent, and they have the ability to use their money to further their designs. They are deaf to the cry of distress. They are insensible to the miseries of the poor, and they are regardless of the cry of the groaning State. This may appear wild and weird, but however wild it may be there is more truth than fiction in it. Corporations have bought up conventions and swayed Legislatures as if by a magic wand. They have even entered into the sacred presence of the United States Senate chamber. Why, sir, Senators are but machines and Representatives tools in their hands. In fact they run the ship of State. They have the control of the whole government, and certainly we cannot say but that the judiciary to-day in California, as well as in every other State in the Union, is dishonored with their contaminating influence.

Now, then, what remains to be done to stop this avalanche of scandal. We have got, as far as possible, to remove the influence of corporate power from our body politic. You can remove it, and I defy any man to show a better way to remove it than by electing a Commission to supervise the highways—to correct abuses by the railroad corporations of this State. It underlies the whole structure. Because, if we have a Commission to legislate and to determine on these abuses, why Stanford and his cohorts and his minions will not come to the Legislature. They won't own Legislatures. The Hart bill, if it passed now, would not be treated, if we had a Commission, the same as it was treated here last Winter. The Record-Union says, in criticising the speech of the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, that the right of eminent domain is simply the exercise of State sovereignty to condemn private property for public use, that the prospects of benefit to the public may be enhanced thereby. Well, what the Record-Union is trying to get at is this: it is trying to say that this property belongs to the corporations, and it is nobody's business. They can regulate it to suit themselves, independent of the people. But, sir, it is a new idea. It is a new idea, indeed, that when the property of the citizen interferes with the prosperity of the State, the sovereign power can be invoked and the property of the citizen can be condemned, but when the State interferes with the property of a corporation, there is a howl raised, and it is nothing but communism; it is nothing but confiscation. I am sick of such tomfoolery as that. The Record-Union, or Mr. Stanford, need not be afraid at all. But the sooner they realize the fact that the power that can condemn the beggar's hovel, can condemn the biggest railroad, and can condemn all the railroads in the State of California, the better for themselves, and the better for the people of the State of California.

We recognize the utility of railroads, and we recognize that they are almost indispensable to the existence of the State, and the people appreciate this; but they have abused their prerogative. They have violated their trust. They have severed the links binding consanguinity between man and man. And instead of the railroads being a blessing to the State of California, they are a curse. They are getting to be intolerable.

Now, sir, I will not detain this Convention much longer; but I will say that when the railroads came they were hailed as the messengers of prosperity—the heralds of joy. But they came, and with them came hordes of Asiatic slaves, fresh from China, to compete with the citizens of this republic. I know that Chinamen were in California before we had railroads; but the floodgates of China were not opened until the great railroad magnates received subsidies from Congress, from the Federal Government, to build these railroads; and as soon as they had received these subsidies they went to work and brought hither hordes of these lepers to contend against the honest working men of this country. The gentleman from Sacramento made an allusion to mining. He compared the railroad to mining. I would like to know who built the railroad, and to whom does the railroad belong? If the question was asked on a solid basis, and answered from an honest standpoint, it would be shouted back that they belong to the people who paid for their construction; belong to the people whose money built the railroads; and belonged to those men who went to work and toiled and worked to construct them. They belong to the United States. That is the solution of it.

Again he says, that we came up here from San Francisco to buck against the locomotive. We did nothing of the kind. We came up here from San Francisco to try to frame a Constitution for the State of California. We are not localized. We do not look at the interest of San Francisco alone. We look at the interests of the great State of California. Now, sir, with such tools and amounts of money taken from the public treasury, is it any wonder that the march of railroads has been a success in this State? I don't think it is. The railroads, sir, have been a success in California. They have penetrated the remotest precincts of our State. The Sierra Nevadas, the Tehalchapi Pass, and the Colorado Desert, offer no resistance to their onward march. They span the mountains. And who owns them? They are owned by a few individuals whose concentrated wealth surpasses the wildest flights of imagination.

We have lots of railroads, but we have multitudes of men who cannot even procure the privilege of obtaining work. They cannot even get it. Something is wrong. Everything is monopolized. Everything is monopoly. Go and ask this question down in Tulara County to-day: "What is wrong?" and ask the big boa constrictor of California. The land is monopolized. The railroad owns the land. They seduced, as it were, these people to go on, a few years ago, and cultivate it, and now they want fifty and sixty dollars an acre for it. That is what is wrong.

Let us see what railroads are now. We have heard, in connection with the arguments on this question—we have listened to men resurrect the tones of Burke and the Duke of Wellington, and those dead Irishmen. I consider that we have enough wisdom here to tell just exactly what is wanted. But I will tell you what is the matter. One half of this Convention cannot see things if they would, and the other half would not see things if they could. That is what is the matter.

Now, sir, the railroad is the vehicle of quick transportation between one place and another. They have superseded your old wagon roads. They have crossed and recrossed them with reckless disdain. But the old wagon road was conceded by everybody to belong to the sovereign. It had no common property, and, secondly, it was open to everybody. Freights and fares were regulated by the common carriers, and as soon as one party would charge too high, the coast was clear, and another party had the privilege of starting. But it is different with the railroad. And, sir, we have not arrived at that stage in the world's progress when it is convenient for a man to have a locomotive hitched up in his stable. Again, sir, the responsibility of maintaining these railroads must therefore devolve on some individuals combined for that special purpose, or on the sovereign; or, in other words, on the people in common. I believe we will come to that point when the State, and the State alone, will own, and control, and run the railroads in the interests of the people. That there is an analogy between the railroads and the King's highway I will admit; every sensible man will admit; every railroad admits it when they apply to the sovereign for the right of eminent domain. The sovereign has no right to grant that except for specific purposes, and that very purpose is distinctly stated, when private property is condemned for public use. It is not for the use of a highway, but expressly for the use of a public highway—for the use of the public, and not for the use of railroad companies. The only difference between the old wagon road and the railroad is nothing more nor less than that the public have to pay for being transported over the railroad, but they have not to pay over the wagon road if they do not so choose. The railroad bed is the property of certain individuals, and can be traced as belonging to the stockholders. The railroad is a public highway owned by private individuals, as near as I can come to it. They change the time for running cars over the line to suit themselves, but the supposition is that they will regulate it to make the most money for themselves. There is no analogy between the railroad and the community at all, except that the community can live—can exist—without the railroad, and the railroad cannot exist without the community. The railroad, sir, is a public highway, and it is a public highway in the broadest sense of the term, for it is the most dependent thing in the world on the community. But the circumstances surrounding the railroad precludes the possibility or the advisability of throwing it open to the community. Even if it belonged to the State itself, it could not be turned loose—or the community would not be turned loose—to go on it, and run their trains at will.

But, sir, the sovereign is the creative power of these institutions, and the power that can create can certainly condemn, destroy, or confiscate anything that interferes with its welfare. The Legislature has proven itself in the past to be entirely unable to cope with this great question of regulating fares and freights. Hence, sir, it devolves upon the people to come to the rescue and to solve this intricate problem. There was never anything that raised in the United States but the people were able to overcome. Now we have had instances where autocratic Commissions have been established in this country. We have had an instance of it at the last Presidential campaign, where the High Joint Commission was established—and certainly it suited the purposes for which it was established.

If the legislative functions have been abused in the past, I have no doubt they will be in the future, too, more or less; but abuses always exist, and will exist as long as man is human. However that may be, sir, I have no less faith in human kind. I know we have honest men in this country, and virtuous women: I know we have as honest men and virtuous women in this country as ever graced a throne or social circle, and I know that when this responsibility is directly thrown on them they can be found. I cannot see why a Commission should not be appointed—why a Commission should not be elected. We have instances of it here. I refer to the bill that passed the Assembly last Winter, and when it came up before the Senate it was, of course, strangled. The bill passed the Senate, but the very section that was in the interests of the people was buried in a premature grave. That bill conferred legislative, executive, and judicial power on the Commission.

Again, sir, my attention was attracted by a remark that the gentleman made in the course of this debate, about this great imperial trio. I quote from his speech. He says: "First, I think the construction of the section is a violation of every principle of republican government. It sets up three men in this State, the selection of whom is left to chance," etc. The selection of whom is left to the people of this State. The selection of whom is left to the sovereign of this State, and the responsibility is directly resting upon these men. They have got to be responsible to the sovereign and to nobody else. Even as the section states, coming, as it does, from the Committee on Corporations, but it is amended so that the Governor of the State will have supervision over them, so that they are to be subordinate to him, and they can be removed by the Legislature. I do not care whether it is the Legislature or the judiciary, it matters not to me, but when a man abuses his trust, I say that he ought to be removed.

I cannot see how this great question of railroads can be solved, unless it is solved by three business men; men that will go into the field and learn the exigencies of the occasion; that will study out what is necessary for the people and what is just to the railroad. And then, whether they are appointed or whether they are elected, if they solve the question, it amounts to the same thing. But the Legislatures in the past have proven themselves unworthy of our confidence. Besides, the Legislatures were only machines gotten up by corrupt Conventions; gotten up in the interest of capital; and now, sir, let us leave this question to the people, and the people will overcome all obstacles. I will vote for the Commissioners, sir. I will vote for them should the heavens fall!

REMARKS OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: When we contemplate Leland Stanford as the railroad President and capitalist, we see that the ambition of man is unsatiated. Give him all the kingdoms of the world and, like Alexander, he will weep because there are no more worlds to conquer. [Laughter and applause.] Stanford, not content with his rule in the North, has gone into the South, and is now determined to control absolutely both lines of travel from California. The appointment of Railroad Commissioners to regulate the tariff of prices for the transportation of freight and passengers is a necessary measure; but, sir, their powers should be limited. If they betray the trust devolved upon them then the Governor of this State should have the power to remove one or all of the Commissioners, and to appoint others in their places. We are providing for their election; let us not forget also to provide for their removal from office.

Now, in regard to this section twenty, I intend to propose an amendment to it: "It shall be the duty of the Legislature to provide by law for the removal of any Railroad Commissioner guilty of malfeasance in office or breach of any trust reposed in him by the Constitution or laws of the State of California. The power to hear and determine complaints against railroads or other transportation companies shall not be construed as conferring upon them, or either of them, any judicial authority." I think, Mr. Chairman, that this section with that amendment, would be a good clause in the Constitution to control this railroad king, Stanford. I am satisfied that a majority of this Convention will be willing to adopt this amendment to section twenty. It covers everything; and I hope that the delegates in this Convention will vote for the Commissioners with these provisions. Thank you kindly.

SPEECH OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I shall vote to engraft section twenty, or something that is equivalent to section twenty, upon the Constitution of the State of California. I shall do that in obedience, first, to what I consider my own duty in the matter, and secondly, because I believe that I shall be carrying out the will of the constituents who sent me here. It was said this morning by Judge McFarland: "Why are we dealing with the railroad subject? Who has appeared before the Committee on Corporations? Who has complained of the railroads? Who has said anything about the railroads? Let the railroads alone, as you let other people alone, and let the railroads regulate themselves as other businesses regulate themselves." I submit, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Convention, that that is all very fine in a general way; but I submit that it does not meet the facts of the case with reference to the railroad corporations of the State of California. If I have any knowledge of the political history of this State for the last twelve years, every canvass that has been conducted in this State has been upon the basis of the corporation or railroad question. Sometimes the people have seemingly won in these political contests, most generally though, in the ultimate results, the railroads have got away with the people.

After having wrestled with the subject in this political point of view for the last twelve years, it was the abuse of the railroad corporations and other corporations supplemental to the railroad corporations, that induced the people of this State to call this Convention, and this Convention has been assembled for the purpose, and for the paramount purpose, of dealing with that question above and beyond all other questions. If I was followed here by petitions by my constituents; if I was followed here by lobbyists from my constituents to urge me as to what course I should pursue in this case; if I was constantly followed up here and directed about this matter, I should say it was because my constituents believed that I was not faithful in carrying out the pledges which I have made to them. If there was any one question above another before them that elected me, it was that I agreed that I would vote for such provisions, that I would present and sustain such propositions as they believed would be wholesome in regulating the rates of the railroads. And if they were to follow me here with petitions, by the thousands, it would be upon the principle that they believed I had forgotten my pledges; it would be upon the idea that I had forgotten the issues upon which I run and upon which I was elected. I then am here in obedience to the agitation of this question before the people. It was discussed before them; it was agitated before them. This subject was over and above all others in reference to voting. Not only with me, but so with almost every man that occupies a seat upon this floor. And hence it is that the people repose confidence in our honesty, in our integrity, and in our manliness, that we will discharge the duties upon this floor that we promised we would discharge when we made speeches before they elected us.

It is objected that this section providing for the Commission will give too much power into the hands of the Commissioners. Mr. Chairman, that government fails of its duty, and fails in the discharge of its duty, that is not equal to meeting the emergencies by which it is surrounded. When it is necessary to meet an evil of one kind the government must meet it. When another and a different kind of evil arises, the government must meet that. When you have no railroads you do not want any Railroad Commissioners. When you have railroads, if you deem it necessary to have Railroad Commissioners, if all other expedients fail to govern the railroads, then it is the duty of the government to form a Railroad Commission. The question is: Who shall bell the cat? That has been the question before the people of the State of California for the last twelve or fifteen years. We have been elected for that purpose, and I for one will endeavor to do it, in the shape of this Commission, if I can get a majority of the Convention to sustain me in that action.

I conceive, Mr. Chairman, that it would be worse than idle—that it would be folly—to have a figurehead Commission—a Commission such as the Legislature, at the last session, furnished the people of the State of California; a Commission even like the first Commission instituted, wanting power enough to grant any remedy to the people. If we have any Commission let it be an effective Commission. Let it be one as well in truth as in name, that can give some remedy to the people. I further want that Commission planted upon such a foundation as that it is not liable to be overturned every Legislature that meets. For we are well aware that the railroads have to elect very few members to the Legislature in order to control the Legislature. Other members, not in the interests of the railroads, come with projects of their own. The projects of the individuals are pooled with the railroad members, they succeed in getting a majority of one or two in either branch of the Legislature, and then it is that the purpose is thwarted and prevented from being put into the form of law. I, then, want the Commission above the Legislature, practically speaking. I want the Commission so that they can act responsive to the behests of the people, and not the Legislature. It is said that the Commission will be clothed with extraordinary power. Then many other officers of government are necessarily clothed with extraordinary powers, be it in a republic, monarchy, or any other character of government that you may take. Some officers of government must necessarily be clothed with authority. The Executive of this State is clothed with wonderful authority. When it is looked at in all its length and breadth, with power to award life or death, it is almost immeasurably above the power proposed to be given to this Commission.

Take the judiciary. They are under no bonds. They are clothed with a public charge. Every twenty years the entire wealth of the country passes through their hands—so the history of judicial matters informs us. They deal not only with the property of men, but with the lives of men. This Convention is clothed with no such powers as these. No other part of the Government exists with such powers as the Judicial Department of this Government. You have Generals that you send out into the field who have no law, but are a law unto themselves; and yet it is a part of the Government, and a necessary part of the Government, and an absolutely necessary part of the Government. And if it becomes necessary for us to have Commissioners clothed with the powers in order to curb the greed of the railroads, we must have Commissioners of that character. We must either govern the railroads or the railroads will govern us. We must either govern concentrated and monopolized capital, or it will govern us. We must either meet this question—and meet it in that shape that we can do effective work against the encroachments of the corporations upon the powers of the people—or else our work is useless. I do not want a Commission with limited powers. I want one with power ample to grapple with the power that they have to grapple with. Take a railroad corporation, like the Central Pacific Railroad Company, absorbing all the other railroads in the State. Having been donated government land and money, and authorized to issue first mortgage bonds on their road—having all these privileges voted to them by the Government—they say that these donations were made by the Federal Government, and that the State has no right to control them. That was about the proposition brought before the Legislature of the State by Governor Stanford and those that he pretends to represent: "We have received these liberal donations from the Government of the United States; we have been endowed with certain rights and privileges by the Government of the United States; and you, the Legislature of the State of California, being a subordinate branch of the Government of the United States, have no right to pass laws regulating fares and freights. You are interfering with our rights under the laws of the Government of the United States." For the last year or two, I believe, that point has been abandoned by those who represent the railroads, and they no longer claim this high privilege; but now they say that—notwithstanding all the millions of donations that have been given by the Government, State and Federal—yet, that the wiser policy would be not to regulate them, but to let them regulate the people. Go to them and ask them how much they have expended, and they will answer as though it is impertinence upon your part, and they will inform you nothing upon the subject. Ask them what their running expenses are, and the same answer is given you. Ask what are the gross receipts, and the same answer is given you. The only thing you do know is this, that they have the carrying trade of the State, in passengers, freight, and everything that is transported from one portion of the State to another; that they charge you so enormously that you are simply the hewers of wood and drawers of water, and they are the ones that fare sumptuously every day.

Take one of them when he commences as a member of a corporation in Sacramento, fifteen years ago, worth ten or twenty thousand dollars, at the outside. I would ask if the State of California and the United States have not reasonably rewarded him for his services by paying him a million dollars annually for his services. That certainly ought to be a reasonable compensation for the services of any gentleman that we can conceive of. You cannot set a limitation to their reaching out. There is nothing too low, too fine, or small for them to reach for. There is nothing too big or too high for them to reach for. If you travel up and down the road you will find that they are engaged with every candy boy in the monopoly of candy peddling on the cars. If you stop at one of the depots, the very hacks belong to them, and are a monopoly in connection with the railroad.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company, in connection with the Union Pacific Railroad Company, has not only spanned the continent, but it has branches throughout the length and breadth of the State of California, and is reaching down and building the Southern Pacific Railroad, to span the continent south of us, all under the grasping mind of one chief spirit. If you consult the public prints, and take what the papers say, you will find that the receipts of those railroads sum up to fifteen and eighteen million dollars per annum, and that the net receipts of these railroads are from nine to eleven million dollars per annum; that the net receipts of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, since its construction from here to Ogden, have been about forty-nine millions of dollars. Aggregated then with this vast capital, owning all the railroad lines of this State; owning largely the river transportation of this State; owning the steamship lines that ply up and down your coast to the whole extent; owning the Oriental steamships that ply between here and China and Japan, under subsidies from the Government; owning your street railroads; owning the ferry at Oakland, and the candy factories of the State; owning the lines that haul your passengers to and from the hotels; owning all these vast ramifications in society, I ask if it is not time that the governmental hand was laid upon them?

What controls this vast capital aggregated? Aggregated wealth is aggregated greed, and aggregated greed knows no point upon which to stop except to consume everything that comes within its reach in a money point of view. This very corporation, with the various ramifications that it has in the State, draws to itself the surplus money of the State, just like the free rays of the noonday sun dry up the moisture upon the damp ground. It consumes all the financial interests of this State. Four or five or six men aggregate all of the wealth—wealth that is unknown almost to this age, and to former ages unheard of. They have this wealth so vast that men speak of millions and millions of dollars, and they do not conceive of the magnitude of the sums of money that they speak of. We have got so used to big figures by reason of the civil war that we have had, that we have no conception of the vast amounts that we talk about. Then, I ask, how is any individual to grapple with this mighty corporation? How is any individual man to right himself as against the powers of this corporation? How is any individual to stand out when your Legislature, and your Governor, and your organized society is not able to put any restraint upon them as yet? I ask if it is not about time that this Convention should say that they would act upon this matter, and act upon it efficiently; act upon it as though they intended their action to reach the evil. While I do not desire to destroy railroads; while they are an institution that cannot be done away with; while they are one of the institutions of this age that the people must have, and will have; yet they will be too expensive if we have them at the cost of liberty and the rights of the people. They must be controlled. They must be put under the strong hand of the law. That people is the freest—that is the most perfect liberty, as I heard defined the other day, where there is a perfect law perfectly administrated. We want the railroads under the law, and we want the law administrated to the railroads, and we want their strong hand and their strong power curbed.

Gentlemen, I am for the Commission, and I do not want the powers of the Commission lessened from what it is reported by the Committee on Corporations. I am perfectly willing to have that section as proposed by Judge Campbell, by which the rights of the Commission will be more sharply defined, more penalties introduced; by which the section will make itself more self-operating than it is at the present time. But I do not want the powers of the Commission curbed. I want the powers of the Commission to be strong enough to meet the powers of the railroad, and in meeting the railroad you do not meet men of flesh and blood, but you meet men of capital and greed in a corporate capacity, without a soul. I hope then, gentlemen, that the section will only be modified so as to make it more specific; so as to more specifically specify the rights of the Commissioners; so as to make it more effectual in the hands of the Commissioners; but not so as to give the Commissioners less power. I am, therefore, in favor of section twenty, and am willing to vote for such further specification of powers as in my opinion will make it more effective. But I am not in favor of making it more limited or weak as regards the powers of the Commissioners.

SPEECH OF MR. DUDLEY, OF SOLANO.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer a few words upon the subject under consideration here, this section twenty of the report of the Committee on Corporations. It will take me but a few minutes, however. I am in favor of a Commission, having a foundation in the organic law of the State, and so firmly grounded that it cannot be wiped out of existence. I believe that the Commission ought to have the power to acquire the knowledge upon which intelligent action can be based. I believe the difficulty in the past has grown out of the fact that sufficient knowledge could not be obtained. But I cannot bring my mind to the support of the section as it now is. The power—the extreme power—that is there given to this Commission, is certainly, so far as the United States is concerned, unprecedented. I believe it to be unnecessary and uncalled for, and, to my mind, it is dangerous. I believe that this Commission ought to be endowed with power to investigate the affairs of the companies, to examine their books and their papers, to ascertain their receipts and disbursements, and, in fact, to acquire the requisite knowledge upon which intelligent action can be based. They should be compelled to report to the Governor, or the law-making power, and leave it to the people, through their Legislature, to take such action as may be required. It was an open question, for twelve or fifteen years, whether there was any power in the people to regulate these corporations. I believe it is generally conceded at the present time, that that power exists. Very few, if any, deny it. Having reached that point, why we should desire to get rid of that power and place it in an arbitrary Commission which is above and beyond the control of the people, as much so as the corporations have been, I do not understand. I believe that having finally established the right on the part of the people to regulate these corporations, the next step to be taken is to acquire the requisite knowledge upon which intelligent action can be based, and then to act by the law-making power of the State. With a view to modifying this section—in case no one else offers an amendment of the kind—I have prepared one. I believe it is not in order at the present time. I use a part of the section introduced by Judge Campbell, which is proposition number eighty-two on the file. I have also made use of the section as reported by the Committee on Corporations, and have modified it according to my own judgment. If the Convention should vote down the amendments pending, and an opportunity offers, I would like to offer this amendment.

I desire to say, while I am up, that I dislike very much to disagree with that portion of the Convention which thinks as I do on the main question, and that any vote I shall cast shall be cast with a view to modifying this section in the manner spoken of. I do not feel competent to discuss this question to any great extent. Nor do I propose to. I simply desire to offer a few remarks in answer to the gentleman from Sacramento concerning the decision in the Granger cases. I am not a lawyer, neither have I read the decision very carefully, but if I understand the groundwork of that decision it was this: that whatever should become a monopoly—it mattered not whether it was in corporate hands or private property—if it became a monopoly, and by virtue of such monopoly it assumed proportions that enabled it to oppress the people, or to take from them an undue proportion of their earnings, then the law had a right to interfere. I believe that to be a correct principle. Again, it has been often urged in this debate that the advantages to California of having the Central Pacific Railroad under the control of citizens of California are very great; that had it not been for the fact that men interested in California had succeeded in maintaining control of the Central Pacific road, that the trade would have gone east instead of coming here. It was urged this morning that if the Southern Pacific Railroad should be built by eastern capitalists that the inland trade would go east and not come here. Now I understand that there is no power in any railroad or other means of transportation to force the trade from one point to another along the line of communication unless it is by discrimination. Now if we admit that any man or set of men owning or controlling any means of communication have the right (the right carries the power) to so discriminate as to carry trade where they see fit, and prevent it from flowing in its natural channels, we admit what I believe to be a wrong principle, one founded upon a wrong idea of the rights and privileges of corporations. The right to discriminate is a dangerous power, and one that we ought at all times to subject to control. With the consent of the committee I will read my amendment. It proposes to amend section twenty by striking out all after the word "commission," in line seven, down to and including the word "law," in line sixteen, and insert the following:

"SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State, at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commission shall have the general supervision over all railroad corporations and other transportation companies in this State; they shall investigate all charges of extortion, of discrimination, or of unfair dealing; they shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to examine the books, papers, and documents of such companies; to investigate their affairs, ascertain their receipts and disbursements, their manner of doing business, and their rates of charges for freights and fares. Said Commissioners, and each of them, shall have access to all the books, papers, and documents of all such corporations; and any officer of any such corporation having the care, custody, or control of such books, papers, or documents, who shall, at any reasonable time, refuse to any Commissioner access thereto, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined not more than five thousand dollars or imprisoned in the County Jail not exceeding one year. Said Commissioners, and each of them, shall have power, in the discharge of their duties, to administer oaths, issue subpœnas for and examine witnesses upon oath; and any witness who shall perjure himself before said Commissioners, or either of them, shall be liable to all the pains and penalties affixed by law to the crime of perjury; and any witness who shall fail to attend, or refuse to testify in any material matter, shall be punished for contempt by the District Court, as in other cases of contempt. Said Commissioners, or a majority of them, shall have power to institute suit, in the name of the State, against such corporations, to enforce their demands for information, or to enforce their privilege of examining books and papers, and to compel such companies to comply with the law and with the terms of their charters. Said Commissioners shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; they shall make a full report to the Governor, annually, of all their proceedings, and of all information obtained which may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in this and the foregoing sections."

I know that it is urged against an amendment of this kind that it contains what may be called legislation. It is true that it is open to that objection. But there seems to be a general disposition here, and there has been in all the States that have held Constitutional Conventions in the past ten or fifteen years, to legislate to a greater extent than formerly. I see that all of the late Constitutions are more voluminous than the old ones. I suppose the reasons are the same as those that incline members here to legislate a little in this Constitution. If the principle upon which the legislation is based is right, and if the legislation is correct, there certainly can be no difficulty. If it is wrong, of course it ought to be avoided. After the Convention shall have passed upon the amendments pending, if an opportunity offers, I shall offer this amendment. The principal difference between this and the report of the Committee on Corporations is, that this Commission will not have absolute power, but it will have all the power necessary and reasonable.

I do not agree with the remarks of those who express a lack of confidence in the Legislature. It is true that some of our Legislatures have earned unenviable reputations, particularly upon this question. But I have had the pleasure of conversing with quite a number of gentlemen that have served in California Legislatures when this question—the control of corporations—has been brought up. These gentlemen are sound upon this question. They voted for the Freeman bill and they voted for the Archer bill. These gentlemen have stated to me that they were compelled to act without the information necessary to enable them to act intelligently; that they were, comparatively speaking, taking the step in the dark; that they did not know whether those acts would be just or not. If a Commission can be established with the power to acquire the requisite knowledge, that knowledge can be presented to the Legislature in a proper form. If any grievances are being suffered by the people they can be specifically pointed out, and that Commission would be enabled to point out a specific remedy. I have no hesitancy in trusting to the Legislature to remedy any grievances that can be found. I believe the people will never elect any Legislature which will not act whenever a specific remedy may be suggested. I do not believe that we are the only honest men in the State. I am satisfied that our constituents are quite as capable of electing honest men to serve in the Legislature as they were to elect honest men to serve in this Convention. There are any quantity of honest men who are just as capable as those who are representing them in this Convention to-day, and they are as likely as any others to be sent up here. Quite a number of the delegates here have been honored with seats in the Legislature of California in the past, and I believe they were as honest and intelligent then as they are now, and if their constituents see fit to send them here again, they will act just as honestly and intelligently as they will in this Convention.

MR. BLACKMER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether his amendment gives the regulating of fares and freights to the Commission or the Legislature?

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. It is patterned after the Massachusetts law, and it will leave it with the Legislature. I incorporated the same ideas that I find there. My first draft of it did not include this part as to fines and penalties, etc., but, on further consideration, I copied into it a part of the proposition of Judge Campbell, number eighty-two, which provides for fines and penalties for non-compliance with the demands of the Commission, provided such demands are warranted by the Constitution.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: According to the rule, we should each day take a recess from twelve o'clock until two o'clock.

THE CHAIRMAN. From half-past twelve until two.

MR. GRACE. I move that the committee now rise.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the committee now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, for the reason that there are one or two gentlemen absent who will be here immediately after recess, who for special reasons cannot be here to attend to it now.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote 66 ayes to 31 noes.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention take a recess until two o'clock P. M.

Carried.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President pro tem. Belcher in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President pro tem. in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. Section twenty and amendments are before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee: It has not hitherto been my practice to weary this body with long speeches. There are some considerations, however, which have not yet been submitted, and it may not be improper for me at this time to submit them. I do submit that a more practical view of this question is susceptible of being taken and considered by this committee. The committee have ranged from the doctrine with reference to the power of the Legislature to control these corporations; from the power of the people to enact a Constitution whereby this same power shall be conferred upon a Commission. Those who have opposed this Commission have taken the ground that these corporations own, in absolute right, the property which is vested in them; that they are absolutely free from all control, and ought to be free from all legislation; that they should be entirely free and absolutely absolved from all obligation to obey the mandates and behests of the Legislature in regard to the control which is sought to be exercised over them. That is the reasoning of the able and ingenious argument which the chief magnate of the corporation has placed upon our desks. They have presented facts and figures, and they have sought to establish the doctrine that these corporations were, and of right ought to be, free from all control by the Legislature, either under the police power, or under the power of administration. It is well understood by this committee, by every member of it, that the powers of this State are divided into legislative, executive, and judicial. That subsidiary to these powers are other sovereign powers which are denominated the police power, the power of eminent domain, the power of taxation, and some other authority and powers which the people of this State, in their sovereign capacity, have the right to exercise.

Judge Cooley, in his great commentary upon constitutional limitations, lays down, as a proposition settled and fixed, that it is not within the power of the Legislature to divest itself of this sovereignty. Now one of the attributes of sovereignty is the exercise of the police power. I understand that the scope of authority has been fully discussed before this committee. The great principle upon which it is exercised was announced by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, in the lucid and explicit argument which could not be misunderstood; and it is based upon the trusteeship of these corporations, which is the condition, and the only condition in which they are supposed to exercise it. That is the only way in which it can be exercised. The gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, has conceded in his argument, that the Legislature has power to regulate freights and fares. In the argument of Mr. Edgerton, a few days ago, he endeavored to prove and to satisfy this Convention that there was no such power in the United States to reach and control the railroad corporations in this State, and other corporations doing a common carrying business.

Having mentioned the questions at issue here, and the proposition being settled, that it is within the province of the Legislature and within the province of this Convention to control these corporations under the police power of the State, it becomes necessary to consider the practical effect of the section and the proposition of a Commission. Upon this proposition I maintain that the discussion has been mere logic—not confined to the direct issue, nor to those matters which should be presented and considered more in detail by this committee. I mean to say the practical effect of the powers proposed to be conferred upon this Commission. Now, what will be the effect? Let us suppose our Commission to be organized; that it is now ready to operate; that it has absolute power to pass upon the various questions that have been declared here as the foundation of its authority, and as giving scope and extent to that authority, what effect will it have? It is declared in this section twentieth, that "the Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make," etc. Now, the question is, what is the scope and extent of that power, and to what extent may the Legislature provide for its exercise? And if that power extends to adjudication, what amount of time will be spent by the Commissioners in rectifying and correcting abuses? There is the first question presented to this Convention, and it is a practical question.

The next thing is that they are to establish charges, or rates of charges, for the transportation of passengers and freights by railroad and other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make. The practical question suggested by this provision is, what amount of time would it require for these Commissioners to obtain a sufficient amount of knowledge to enable them to pass upon the question of regulating freights and fares? What amount of experience, what amount of understanding, what extent and scope of knowledge, and what degree of judgment, are requisite to pass upon these questions, and put them in shape so as to have a practical operation?

The next question is: "Report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important." Of course that is a subsidiary question, embracing within itself part of the proposition last read. "To hear and determine complaints against railroad and other transportation companies." Here is another question that presents itself for practical consideration. "Hear and determine complaints against railroad and other transportation companies." The general principle is declared, but there appears to be no mode provided to carry it out. A provision to enable them to carry out this principle would seem to be requisite. One of the most important questions that will rise for consideration on this subject, is the amount of time required for the consideration of the various questions that may be presented before these Commissioners for their adjudication and decision. When one of these questions shall be presented before them, and its members come to consider the force and effect of the various circumstances, and the facts produced before them, the next question will be, how many of these same questions are pending in the same localities or elsewhere in the State, and what time will be necessary for these Commissioners to devote to the subject of investigation in the various places where these charges may be made. They shall "affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law." Here is another question which presents itself for practical solution. How are these penalties to be affixed? First, they have been authorized to hear and determine complaints themselves. Then they are to affix these penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts. Well, if this Commission is established to determine these same questions, and they are then to pass through the Courts, where is the use of an investigation before the Commissioners? Now, it is true there is a provision in this section which says: "Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies." I suppose that provision, as a matter of course, will relegate parties to the Courts in those cases where they are not given their rights under the regulations and restrictions of the Commissioners. However that may be, in any case these same parties, as far as the provisions of this instrument are concerned, have a right to appeal to the Courts.

Now, I am simply suggesting a practical view that ought to be taken, and announce that I am in favor of a Commission, and it is because I am in favor of a Commission that I am suggesting the difficulties which may present themselves, in relation to these identical propositions. I desire, if it is possible, that some of these difficulties may be avoided which seem to present themselves, that I may be able to support it, and support it conscientiously and freely, as I desire to do. It seems to me that the powers which ought to be conferred upon this Commission are just such powers, and none other, as reason and common sense would suggest. Now, what are the powers that ought to be conferred upon this Commission? First, the power that the Legislature has now, to exercise control over these corporations. It is manifest upon the face of things that it would be almost impossible for the Legislature to obtain the requisite information from the time of the election until the meeting of that body, or to the close of its session, to enable them to pass intelligently upon the very questions here proposed to be passed upon by this Commission. Is it proposed, therefore, to leave the authority of fixing freights and fares in the Legislature, where it is dead to intelligent action on the part of the Legislature, unless some steps be taken whereby that body may be informed with reference to the matter? If this is proposed, we must make the necessary provisions to furnish the Legislature with data, to enable them to act intelligently.

The next question is in relation to the power of fixing and determining rates of freights and fares. There may be some little ground for this difference of opinion here, as to whether the Legislature ought or ought not to retain that power, whether it ought to be vested in the Legislature or in the Commission exclusively. As far as I am concerned I care very little. I prefer to vest it in the Legislature, and I prefer giving to these Commissioners a kind of judicial authority, which will enable them to act intelligently, that will require sumptuary action, that does not require the tedious process of an investigation in the Courts to determine the facts and circumstances of the case.

Now I am suggesting these practical considerations of this subject to the committee, fully satisfied that they are all of one view in this: that they are all endeavoring to arrange some practical system whereby this whole matter can be adjusted in a way that shall do justice to the people, and do no wrong to the corporations. It is manifest that the Legislature cannot remedy these evils. Now we can arrive at a just basis by giving to these Commissioners such powers as may be necessary in the performance of the duty assigned them. I am constrained to believe that the plan adopted here will have to be somewhat different from the plans adopted in other States. It is in vain to talk about restriction of the railroad companies, unless it be restriction that is practical and effectual. It must be effectual. There must be some restraining authority. It has been said here that this is establishing a despotism; but what greater despotism is presented for our consideration than the despotism of these aggressive corporations. It is said that when a tamer of wild beasts had placed his head in the lion's mouth, and felt the pressure of the teeth upon his head, he called to the manager of the menagerie in deep solicitude, and inquired if the animal was shaking his tail, and when informed that such was the case, replied, "Then I am done." We find ourselves in the same attitude. We have this corporation lion on exhibition, and we have our head in his mouth, and we are now inquiring if he is shaking his tail. If he is, we are done.

Now, this is the simple proposition. Here is a power that has been created and fostered by the government of the State and of the United States: It has amassed capital until—as far as financial resources are concerned—it is more powerful than the State of California or any other State. If there are any restraints thrown around them they must be effectual; and in my opinion we can make it no more permanent or effectual than by putting it in the Constitution. It is simply compelling the railroad corporations to deal justly with the people. The proposition presented to us is upon what basis will you fix freights and fares. Upon what basis? The railroad magnates, when they fix rates, go to their patrons and inquire how much profit they make, and the rates are fixed to cover the amount of profits. That is a very certain basis. It is just as sure as the profits upon the shipments. There is no mistake on the part of the railroad companies. If, upon a carload of freight the profit is eight hundred dollars, then eight hundred dollars is the price of shipment. If it is six hundred dollars, then six hundred dollars is the price of shipment. If it is five hundred dollars, then five hundred dollars is the price of shipment. That is the doctrine upon which the railroad companies fix their rates; that is the doctrine upon which their whole freighting system is carried on. Now we propose to fix them on a different basis, and if we can arrive at some solution of this question, and place it in this section, whereby these powers shall be so placed that a proper restraint can be placed on these corporations, we will deserve the thanks of the people. I believe the result can be obtained by good, patient, practical work, and in no other way.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: From the number of days this honorable body has been considering the question under discussion—section twenty, as reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal—and the number of gentlemen who have spoken upon the subject, I naturally infer that the matter under consideration is regarded as of the utmost importance. It should be so treated. But I fear my power to interest or enlighten those who may give me their attention at this late period, when the subject has been so ably discussed and probably exhausted. The traveler who has often passed over the same route no longer enjoys the scenery, but merely enduring the trip as a necessity, hastens on to his journey's end. So, I fear this Convention merely tolerates the speaker and looks only with pleasure to an early termination of the debate. Nothing, therefore, but an imperative sense of duty impels me to intrude myself at this time. I find that the governmental control and regulation of railroad companies is one which has agitated and taxed some of the best minds of the age, and that profound thinkers have admitted its intrinsic difficulties and perplexities. It is indeed a subject out of the line of ordinary business, and presents anomalies nowhere else to be met, overturning even, to some extent, or at least creating exceptions, to some of the most treasured theories of political economy. The principles of free trade, the most favored of all doctrines of the publicists, are found to have a limit in railroad affairs, for left to themselves competition ceases and monopoly results. The railroad problem, as it is justly styled, has been discussed over and over many times in England, Belgium, France, and Germany, as well as in different States of the American Union, and each time, when it was supposed the solution had been reached, the phantom glided away as delusive as human hopes.

We have gravely discussed here the questions of competition, State ownership, mileage rates, maxima rates, discrimination and abuses. We have heard the railroad kings denounced and an oppressed people bemoaned, but after all we are merely acting over again scenes and parts that have already been seen and acted in other places. How fully history repeats itself. In the language of the wise man of Israel, "the thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done, is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun." We have had great Granger excitements in the great States that border the Mississippi, and numerous remedies against railroad abuses have been proposed; numerous laws have been passed, altered, and repealed. Yet the true remedy has not been reached. I am not, therefore, disrespectful to the honorable committee here in doubting if they have reached the "consummation so devoutly to be wished," and have given us a perfect solution of the great railroad problem. It is no discredit to them if they have failed in an endeavor so often tried without success, and so difficult in its nature. I doubt if it is to be the glory of this Convention to send back to Iowa, Illinois, Massachusetts, England, France, and Germany, the news that we have mastered the subject that has so much distressed them. We should approach the subject as one to be determined on principles of reason and common sense, and if wise we will gladly avail ourselves of the experience of other States and nations on this subject. The discussion here necessarily involves:

First—Abuses and wrongs existing or likely to happen.

Second—The power of the State to regulate and control.

Third—The expediency of the exercise of that power; and,

Fourth—The special remedy of three Railroad Commissioners, with the powers proposed by the committee.

First—As to the abuses practiced by railroad companies little need be said by me. Already their sins have been detailed with great relish on this floor, and anathemas loud and deep have, in all bitterness, been pronounced against them. If we accept as true all that has been said here against them, they have indeed "done those things they ought not to have done, and left undone those things they should have done." But I am not their apologist nor panegyrist on this floor. The propositions which I seek to maintain demand at my hands neither praise nor blame of these corporations. We all agree upon the fact that corporations are necessary to the accomplishment of great ends at this period of the world. The vast enterprises of the age are beyond the reach of private fortunes on this continent, and can only be accomplished by aggregated wealth and organized corporations. They have certain advantages over private persons, and therefore have become numerous and powerful. Naturally, great railroad companies become great monopolies, and have a large capacity for good and evil. Where great power exists there is a susceptibility of abuse. Men are controlled by self-interest, and where self-interest and power combine, abuse is not only possible, but probable. Believing therefore, as I do, that the railroad companies of the country have accomplished much for the people, and are a standing evidence of our progress and greatness, I also believe that their power is so great, their importance so vast, and abuses so probable, that the State must give them especial attention and exercise over them a wholesome control.

Second—As to the power of the State to regulate and control the corporations of its own creation, there is no longer a doubt under the decisions of the Courts. It matters not whether this is derived from the original power reserved by the State under the Constitution and law, to alter, amend, and repeal all laws on the subject of corporations, or from the police power of the State—it is sufficient that the power exists, and that the question has now passed beyond the realm of discussion. The only limit to the power seems to be that it is confined to the boundaries of the State; that it must be regulation and not confiscation, and cannot divest vested rights. When, therefore, I have heard gentlemen on this floor long and earnestly contend for the existence in the State of this conceded power, I felt like using to them the language of Oliver Wendell Holmes, in his lines to an insect:

"Thou sayest an undisputed thing
In such a solemn way."

Third—As to the expediency of the exercise of the power of regulation and control within reasonable limits, it seems to me there can be little doubt. It has been exercised in all the nations of Europe as necessary and proper. It has been exercised in many of the States of this Union, and in some instances at least with success and benefit to the people.

Whether rightfully or wrongfully, there is in this State, as well as in the other States of this Union, a general feeling of dissatisfaction with railroad management. There is a general demand for regulation and control. In the language of Charles Francis Adams, Jr., "Jealousy of great corporations is a cardinal principle of American political faith." If no abuses exist, regulation will do no harm; if they do exist they will be corrected. But a great State should not exercise its governmental powers wantonly. The State is never vindictive. It only acts for the general good of all. It is just, fair, and impartial. Its action is not for injury; its movements are not for harm. A human father will not maim or torture his son because he is the author of his being; nor will the State wantonly injure or destroy what it has created. Its action is the great and majestic movement of a sovereign, looking only to the common good and general welfare. It must look to the vast importance of railroads in the progress of the State and in the development of its great resources. It must remember that this State, so enormous in its territorial limits, has a less number of miles of railroad than most of the States in the Union, and that its own companies should be dealt with justly and fairly. It should not stifle enterprise or place its ban on future works. It cannot play the role of Rip Van Winkle and go to sleep in its own mountains, to wake up twenty years hence and find itself poor, ignorant, uncouth, and a mere object of pity or ridicule. It should therefore exercise its vast powers wisely and discreetly, so as to protect the people, and, at the same time, deal justly by the companies, and in such a spirit as will not deter enterprise or impede the State in its onward career of greatness.

Fourth—But what particular remedy should be adopted? Upon great general principles those who oppose the recommendation of the committee doubtless agree with those who sustain it. The disagreement arises when we attempt a practical application and descend to particulars. The Chairman of the committee says, to those who condemn the remedy proposed by the committee, that we do not show a better one. Now, the affirmative of the issue is on the committee to show that this system is good and should be adopted. It is enough for us to show that it should not be adopted. When in India the car of Juggernaut passes along, carrying its graven images, and its priests singing obscene songs, and the devotees throw themselves under the wheels to meet a certain death, it is enough to show that this is not the religion of the true God, nor the teachings of the Divine Being. Any religion is better than that. So, here we may show that the system proposed is unwise, unjust, and destructive of the best interests of the country, though we may not be able to present the true remedy. A wrong remedy may only exaggerate the injury, as an improper prescription may carry the sick man to his grave. We have in this State a series of railroads. These are all to be placed under the control of the Railroad Commissioners, and be managed by them. They are to be elected by the people in districts. They are to have "the sole power, and it is their duty to correct abuses by railroad corporations, or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies; and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; report to the Governor annually their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; hear and determine complaints against railroad or other transportation companies; affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law." It is also mandatory on the Legislature "to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duty enjoined on them in the foregoing sections."

Now, this provision in a Constitution is without precedent. Notwithstanding the great attention which transportation has excited within the last five years in the other States of this Union, and the great amount of legislation intended to prevent railroad abuses and to regulate railroad affairs, and notwithstanding the fact that Constitutions have in the meantime been formed, not one State of the Union contains such provisions as are proposed here. The honorable Chairman of the committee, whose report is before us, frankly admits that this is an experiment. Now, a Constitution is a bad place in which to try experiments, for should the experiment fail, the process of change is very slow, and of extreme difficulty; whilst an experiment tried through the ordinary channels of legislation is easily managed. If partially successful, and more legislation is needed, it is easily obtained; if the experiment fails, the law is easily repealed, and that which experience proves to be better can be substituted. This, therefore, should be enough, if nothing else could be said, to determine us to omit this from the Constitution and leave it to the Legislature. Why not leave it to the Legislature? Other States have Commissions created by the Legislature, and they have worked well. The much-lauded Commission of Massachusetts did not originate in, and is not mentioned in, the Constitution of that State. It originated in the Legislature, and all its merit is due to the Legislature. It has been a successful experiment as there managed. Had it been of constitutional creation, it would have been a failure, because it has from time to time been altered by the Legislature, and its present perfection is the result of repeated statutes. It has been a growth, and as experience demonstrated the usefulness of a new and additional provision, it has been adopted. The superiority of a legislative discretion over an inflexible constitutional rule, is fully shown by Mr. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., in his work on the "Railroad Problem," so much eulogized by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations. He says (page 140):

"Undesignedly the Massachusetts Legislature had rested their law on the one great social feature which distinguishes modern civilization from any other of which we have a record—the eventual supremacy of an enlightened public opinion. The line of policy thus happily initiated was carefully pursued. New and wider powers were, year by year, conferred upon the Board, but always in the same direction—power to investigate and report. The Commissioners meanwhile were not slow to realize the advantages of their position, and have repeatedly put themselves on record as desiring no more arbitrary powers—as feeling themselves indeed stronger without them. * * * *

"Without remedial or corrective powers themselves, behind them stood the Legislature and the judiciary, ready to be brought into play should any corporation evince an unreasonable spirit of persistence when once clearly shown to be wrong. The policy thus described would seem to have worked sufficiently well in Massachusetts. The Commission has certainly succeeded in sustaining itself, for while at every session the Legislature has conferred upon it new powers, always in the same direction, the railroad corporations have never appeared in opposition to it as a body."—[Page 143.

The truth of this is fully shown by the changes made in the law of Iowa. That State adopted a very stern and severe system, called the "Potter law," under great excitement against railroads. Recently that law has been repealed, and the system of Massachusetts practically adopted.

Mr. Adams, in his book already spoken of, says (page 145):

"A great advance towards a better condition of affairs in this respect has, however, been secured during the last year, through the action of the Iowa Legislature in repealing the so-called "Potter law," and substituting for it a Commission, practically organized on the Massachusetts plan. It will only remain for those who compose the Commission to fairly try the effect of intelligent public discussion as a substitute for ignorant force. That the experiment should now be tried by them and made to succeed is of the utmost importance; if it does succeed, the whole movement in the west will be advanced by one entire stage."

In Wisconsin the same law was enacted and repealed. In various other States during the Granger excitements (as they were called) legislation of a crude and experimental character was enacted on this subject; but repeals, alterations, and amendments have since been the order of the day. Had the legislation, at first deemed proper, been put in the form of constitutional law, the injuries to the community would have been incalculable. "The experiment," therefore, had better not be tried in the Constitution. Whatever is done should be done through the Legislature. The power of regulation exists, independently of constitutional announcement. Whilst there may be no harm in its declaration in the Constitution, yet we cannot add to the power by such declaration. Why, then, should not the exercise of the power be left to the discretion of the Legislature? What is the objection? Cannot the Legislature be trusted with this power? Is it likely to be abused? This Convention cannot act upon any such theory. The powers of the Government of this State have always been divided into three great and separate departments—the legislative, executive, and judicial. The legislative power has always been vested in the Senate and Assembly, called the Legislature. I have yet to learn that any one objects to this system. I have yet to learn that there is any disposition to organize this State upon any other basis. We are a government of the people, but the people act through their representatives in these departments of government. Without these, our republican form of government cannot exist. They are a necessity to our form of government. Shall not the legislative department be trusted with legislative powers? The negative implies much—very much. It implies a failure of our system of government—a failure of self-government. On the contrary, I insist that our form of government is right in theory and right in practice. If abuses exist—and that they have existed no one will deny—let the abuses be prevented, not the use destroyed. Liberty itself has been abused, but let us none the less preserve it with zealous care. Do we not, and must we not, trust the Legislature with vast powers? Why, then, may it not be trusted in this? If a Legislature fresh from the people is not to be trusted, then let us have no Legislature—let us vest the legislative power in some new functionaries of government. Let some one be bold enough to devise some organism through which legislation may be effected without the intervention of a Legislature.

I am not prepared to say that our Government is a failure. I am not prepared to say that a representative republican government is not the best form of government on earth. I am for adhering to it, with its three great branches, and am for intrusting them with the necessary and usual powers with which such bodies are invested. That the power with which the Legislature is vested may be abused, is, I repeat, no sound argument against it, as power vested anywhere may be abused. Use and abuse are as wide apart as virtue and vice; for that which, when properly used, is virtue, becomes vice by abuse. Religion may turn to bigotry, and liberty to licentiousness—but shall we not still venerate religion and cling to liberty? The distinguished gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard, gives us a very low standard for the Legislature. His statements are, in substance, that men of ability cannot for such low compensation go to the Legislature, and that it falls into the hands of very bad men. If this be so, here is room for a great reform. Has, indeed, our past system led to this, that the immediate representatives of the people are men of low intellect and low morals? Why has not the Legislative Committee proposed some wholesome reform? Why does not some reformer on this floor, or the able gentleman from Los Angeles himself, introduce some section that would obviate this? The subject of railroads and railroad corporations, great as it is, sinks into insignificance compared with this wretched condition of this great branch of our government, if the views of the gentleman from Los Angeles be true. Gentlemen are not consistent here. They leave the great Legislative Department almost where it has always been, and yet pronounce it utterly recreant to its great duties. But so far as corporations—and railroad corporations in particular—are concerned, we know that the last two Legislatures have passed very stringent laws on the subject. And we find in this Convention, which, like a Legislature, is fresh from the people, the strongest disposition to hold all corporations subject to the direct control and regulation of the Legislature, and a disposition to correct and reform all abuses. In this body there are numerous gentlemen who have recently been members of the Legislature, and do not fall within Mr. Howard's denunciation—Estee, Larkin, Tinnin, Edgerton, Shafter, Murphy, Campbell, Hilborn, Laine, Graves, Dudley, Hale, and others.

Another objection to section twenty as reported by the committee is, that it changes our form of government. We have heretofore had a government in which there were three great departments—executive, legislative, and judicial—and each has been forbid to exercise any of the functions of the others. The system now proposed introduces a fourth department of the government called the "Railroad Commission," in which all the powers of government are combined. They are to a great degree independent of the other three departments of government, and above and beyond them, and exercise combined and mingled functions, at once legislative, judicial, and executive. To the extent that they are vested with these, the other departments of government are divested. The Commissioners are to have the "sole power to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies." No matter how great the abuses the Commissioners may commit, the Legislature is powerless to correct them. The Governor is powerless; and the District Attorney and Grand Jury have nothing to say—their "occupation is gone." The Commissioners have the sole power to "establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight." No matter what errors they commit, no matter what mistakes or abuses, the people and the railroad may alike groan, for there is no power in the Legislature to act, and the sole arbitrary power of the Commission knows no superior and cannot be revised. They have the "sole power to hear and determine complaints against railroad and other transportation companies." Here is a wide judicial power granted. The power to hear and determine is jurisdiction, and so jurisdiction is described. This is the exact language used in many cases to give jurisdiction to Courts, as has been shown by gentlemen who have preceded me. If, therefore, any one has a complaint against any railroad or transportation company, the Commissioners are vested with the sole power to hear and determine it—that is, not only to decide, but render judgment. The right of trial by jury is cut off and there is no right of appeal given. From all their great powers and their exercise as before stated there is no appeal, no review, no power of repeal.

Here, then, will stand in our Government a constitutional triumvirate as great in many respects as that of Rome in the olden time. In their department they are as absolute as Cæsar, Pompey, and Crœsus were in their day. How truly "history repeats itself," when we return to the government of the triumvirs. They may raise and lower the rates of freight and fare to suit their views, and thus they can play with the value of the stock in the market, and determine the value of the bonds and mortgages on the road. It will be in their power to increase the running expenses whilst lowering the freight and fares, and thus disable the corporations from paying their interest and expenses or making the payment imposed on them by law. They will be sole judges of what are abuses; of what repairs on the roads are necessary, and of what the rolling stock shall consist. They will determine complaints on their own notions of right and wrong, and however erroneous or malicious their acts there will be no remedy or appeal. The Act provides for no rules of evidence, no modes of trial, no tests of accuracy. They are to be all powerful and are to be responsible to no one. And who are to be the men clothed with these transcendent powers? What are to be their qualifications? Only that they are electors and not interested in or connected with the companies. Railroading is a special business: it requires great training and experience, yet any unskilled man is eligible. If we had to elect an architect of State buildings, we would prescribe a special qualification for the business; but here is a business requiring skill and training as much as that business. Any men who during a popular excitement or in party strife can secure a majority in the several prescribed districts, may take this very intricate and peculiar business out of the hands of the Directors and managers of the companies and destroy the property in a short time. I cannot think that this scheme can meet the support of the majority of this Convention. The power is too great and is too absolute. It is not sufficiently guarded. These men would be too far above all law and all control.

It is too capable of abuse. The Commission may demand blackmail as the alternative to ruin. They may be corrupted, and the temptation will be great. The power is alike perilous to the people and the railroads. The gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard, also says that the three Commissioners could be trusted; that they would have no motive to do wrong, and would be simply controlled by a desire to do their duty honestly. The same might have been said of the triumvirs of Rome; or of Napoleon, when First Consul of France; or of Danton, Robespierre, or Marat. Why did not they when clothed with power simply do their duty? The same able delegate read from the report of the committee of the United States Senate on taxation, showing the immense power of three or four railroad managers, and how they exercised it in raising and lowering values in a manner that Congress would never dream of exercising. Yet the same gentlemen advocated putting that same power, so far as this State is concerned, in the hands of the three Commissioners we are to create. Nay, more; for those spoken of in the Senate report were subject respectively to the control and regulation of the States where the corporations were created, but here the proposition is to vest this vast power under the Constitution in the Commissioners, and thus place them entirely beyond the power of the legislative, judicial, or executive branches of the government. This would be a grand mistake—an unpardonable sin. Lodge the power and control where it should be—on that great branch of the government which must be trusted, and that is the legislative department. The great railroad problem has not yet been solved. The best business minds of the age are at work upon it; Commissioners are carefully studying it; and statesmen are giving it their most profound attention. Some progress has been made, and the experiments continue. Great laws of political economy are working out their inevitable results. The subject will be mastered, and the end reached. What is the best to be done and the true mode of regulation will be ascertained. Let us be in a position to avail ourselves of the experience of others, and through our Legislature, from time to time, apply the remedies and control which shall be shown to be best. This will be statesmanlike; this will be true wisdom.

This State has an immense territory. Railroads are a necessity to its progress and development, and yet the small States of the Valley of the Mississippi far surpass us in extent of railroads. By a rational system of management—by discreet regulation through the Legislature—we may at once protect the people from abuses and wrongs, and deal justly with railroad corporations. We should be friendly with legitimate railroad enterprises. We should not fight railroads, but only railroad abuses. Thus, by rational management, fair dealing, and enlightened views, such judicious regulation and control may be exercised as will stimulate railroad building, elevate their credit, give them stability and strength, and greatly add to their success. Public confidence will be restored, and railroading, the greatest factor in the progress of the future, will become as popular as it is now unpopular. Then may the State go on in her career of greatness, looking to an earlier development of her great mining interests, a speedier realization of her agricultural resources, an extension of her commerce, and establishment of new and increasing manufactures. But we must, in aid of all this, perform our duty. We are to make a new and revised organic law—not a code. We are to establish a great system, declare great principles, and provide for the movements and action of a great government in its accustomed channels. We must provide for a legislative department of the government, but must not ourselves legislate. We should pass no codes; we should enact no statutes. We provide for an executive and judicial department, but we neither execute the laws nor judge of their infraction. We take the present as it is and provide for the future only.

Let us not forget our true position here, and that we are the architects and builders of the Constitution of a great State. Let it not be like the rude hut of the savage, the wretched adobe of the Mexican; but rather like our own capitol at Washington, with a foundation broad and deep, massive columns crowned with superb capitals, a mighty dome lifting itself to loftiness, and with faultless proportions throughout. Then it may long defy the ravages of time, and when compelled to fall, as all things of human origin must fall, even its broken fragments will tell what it was in the fullness of its original splendor.

SPEECH OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I have not occupied many minutes of the time of this Convention, and I do not, at this stage of the discussion of this important question, propose to occupy the time of the committee for any great length of time. I consider it my duty and my privilege to express the views which I entertain upon the questions which have been so ably discussed by the different gentlemen who have spoken upon this twentieth section. To us has been committed a great task—that of laying the foundation for a great superstructure. To us the people of this great State are looking that this foundation shall be laid in the eternal principles of right and justice, that it shall be laid in view of the contingencies and circumstances that surround the State and commonwealth. If we look back over the history of the State, and of the commonwealth, we shall find that we occupy a position very different in regard to corporations from perhaps any other State. Since eighteen hundred and sixty-sixty-one, corporations have grown wonderfully in the United States. They have assumed gigantic proportions. They have exercised great and wonderful powers. Some of those powers have been exercised for good in the development of the resources of the State and country, and some of them have been exercised for their own selfish ends, and their own aggrandizement, without due regard for the good of the people. Now, it is our duty to formulate a rule by which these corporations shall be governed; not to act with any vindictiveness; not to act in any spirit of persecution. Indeed I do not believe that a single member of this Convention, not a single member of the committee, feel that they would in the least cripple the railroads of the State. They recognize the fact that railroads are a part of our civilization, a material part of our growth, and valuable aids to the development of the material resources of this State. We would not do without them. We could not do without them, and it is a false assumption on the part of any gentleman to assume that any respectable number of the members here are endeavoring to run these enterprises out of existence, or so cripple them that their growth and construction would not be continued or encouraged by the people of this State.

Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary for me to discuss the power or the right of the State to control and regulate corporations. That is a question beyond the necessity of discussion. As the gentleman from San Francisco has said, that question has been settled. The right and the power of the State to exercise control over corporations, is undenied. The question for our immediate consideration is, what is the best policy, what is the best and most proper course in which to exercise this power? The experience of the older States has been cited, and it is right that we should learn from the light of experience. We should pay due regard to that experience. Let us take a brief view of the experience and result in those States where this subject has been adjudicated—where the best minds have considered this momentous question. Regulation by the Legislature has been tried, and has proved a failure. It has been tried in Iowa, and I have heard from the gentleman from Sacramento that that was a very bitter experience. But let us inquire why this has been so? What caused the law to be abolished in Iowa, and in other States of the Northwest? Allow me to say, right here, that I am not one of those who believe that the Legislature is necessarily corrupt, or that the people will knowingly send bad men to represent them in the Legislature. But I do argue—and I argue upon the basis, in the light of experience—that representatives coming from different localities in the State have their different local interests in charge, put those interests foremost in their endeavors to serve their local constituency, and combinations are nearly always formed in order to carry out these local enterprises. Now, if we leave this matter in the hands of the Legislature, the railroad corporations will necessarily combine with these local interests, and this has been done over and over again to carry their schemes through, or to hamper and hinder legislation on this subject.

Now, in some of the Western States, the Legislatures attempted to regulate and control these railroad companies. They passed the Potter law, so called. In that law they attempted to go into the minutiæ of regulating fares and freights; the classification of freights into classes—classifying all kinds of freight and goods to be transported over the lines. It would astonish any person to examine that array of figures. This law, for instance, would be put in force three or four months after the adjournment of the Legislature. The railroad companies would take up the law, examine its equalities and inequalities, and if there were any faults to be found, they were magnified, and the defective portions were put into full operation and execution, while the better portions were allowed to go by default. They entered into politics with the law in their hands, and the actual extortion, which was the result of their interpretation, worked great individual hardships, and created dissatisfaction among the people, and so, at the next session, the law would be amended. Thus the law was kept moving, and constantly changing all the time from one Legislature to another, from one system to another. The enactment of one Legislature would be amended by its successor, until the people finally became disgusted. Now, that has been the history of railroad legislation in every State adopting the plan of legislative control.

Then, again, one or two of the Western States tried the Commissioner system. Each succeeding Legislature, after the creation of a Commission, would tamper with the Act, changing the duties of the Commissioners, given them new and different instructions, keeping them constantly in the Courts, depriving the people of that settled policy that can alone secure prosperity and give permanent relief. That is the history. That has been the history, and that will be the history in California for the next twenty years if you remand this back to the Legislature. The prosperity and growth of the State can only be secured by having a settled and fixed policy in dealing with this great subject, and that you will never have if you leave it to the Legislature. We know that in all the affairs of life, in order to be successful, we must persevere in one course. Many a man has grown rich gathering rags, because they stuck to it. But this constitutional changing will prevent prosperity in any enterprise, I care not what it may be.

Now, we have a diversity of interests in this State. I wish to speak from an agricultural standpoint for a moment. How does this unsettled policy, between the people and the corporations, affect the agricultural interests of the State? The farmer looks over the ground. He gets his seed furnished on time; gets his agricultural implements on credit; puts in a crop, and estimates the profits on that crop from the probable market prices in San Francisco, less the cost of transportation. The harvest comes round; the crop is harvested; the grain is thrashed, and ready for market. The railroad corporation, under this unsettled system which allows them to raise or lower their rates at will, ascertains what the grain will be worth in San Francisco; ascertains just what the agriculturist can raise the crop for and make a bare living, just sufficient so that he will not be driven from the soil, just sufficient so as not to deprive him of hope for the future, and the difference between that figure and the market price in San Francisco will be the rate of freight fixed by the corporation, and if there is a raise in the market the farmer gets no benefit from it. If he succeeds in raising a good crop, and prices are good, he will reap no benefit. If failure overtakes him, he is bankrupted, as farmers have been too often in this State. Now, if we want to continue the prosperity of the commercial interests, of the manufacturing interests, of the laboring interests of the State, I care not what industry it may be, we must have a settled policy. We want a fixed policy. It would be better for the railroad companies of this State if they would acquiesce in the settled policy of the State, as they have in some other States, and in England, where there is little or no conflict. It has been ably illustrated here, by a speech which we have listened to. Now, I repeat, that it is not in the interest of any party, not in the interest of any faction, not in the interest of either agriculture or the common laborer, the mechanic, the merchant, the professional man, or any other man, to continue this irrepressible conflict between capital and labor in any of its branches. What we need more than anything else is a settled and safe policy; that is alike just to the employer and those employed; to the producer and the consumer; the buyer and the seller; and for one, I believe the only way we can secure this is by the adoption in our Constitution of a provision creating a Board of Commissioners to govern and control the railroads of the State. We are told that this is an arbitrary power, and almost unlimited power. I think not. These Commissioners are amenable to the people themselves just as any other officers elected in like manner. They are responsible for their acts. The people select them with direct reference to this special duty. They are not selected at random, as some of the gentlemen would have us believe, but we select three of the best qualified men we can find for this particular duty. Three men whose time will be devoted exclusively to the performance of the duty; whose education and experience fit them for the discharge of this important trust, and when we have selected such men, they can accomplish great good. They will be in session all the time, and delays will be avoided when wrong needs to be redressed.

Not so with the Legislature. Whatever wrong is enacted will remain until the next Legislature meets, and until it has had time to consider and digest the enactments, and until the new machinery can be put into operation. Now, I hope, and believe, that this Convention is convinced of the importance and necessity of creating this Commission. It is said here that the people do not demand this thing. Why, sir, let me state to the gentlemen that the most important part of the platform adopted by the County Convention which nominated me to the position which I now hold, was in regard to this very matter of regulating and controlling corporations. It is a living, burning issue with the people, and I know that my county does not stand alone. The people are demanding that in this Constitution the corporations shall be bridled. It is demanded in the interest of the poor and the weak. The strong need no protection; the rich need no protection; they are able to protect themselves. It is around the people that the protecting arm of the law must be thrown. There is no danger that corporations will be crushed out by the aggressions of the people. There is no fear that capital will be driven from the country, for both are amply protected. Let us enact laws that will give the people equal protection. That is all they ask.

SPEECH OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: This question has been under discussion for a great length of time, and great ability has been brought to bear upon it. There is no question but this great amount of talent, and precedent, and law, that have been presented before this wonderful body, should have an influence upon its judgment; and it is a matter of some consequence that light should be obtained upon a question of so much importance as this. Great mountains of legal lore have been precipitated upon us from far and near. History has been ransacked, law has been read and read again, authorities quoted, and I have become convinced, long ago, that so far as the evidence was concerned, and the instructions, that this body was fully prepared to vote some days ago. Still, I am convinced that there cannot be too much law, or too much authority, or too much investigation.

Now, we have heard, in this discussion, of Europe, and how they thought they had succeeded in solving this great question. In this country efforts have been made by the Legislatures of the land, in the different States, and they have evidently been only partially successful. But it is interesting to us in this way: that the many missteps that have been taken, and the many mistakes that have been made, have been rectified, and we can profit by their experience, and not make the same mistakes. It is a matter of the utmost importance here that the nicest judgment and discrimination should be exercised, and that nothing whatever should be done rashly by this body, upon whom the eyes of the people of this State are directed, and in whose acts the interests of the State are concentrated for a time. Now, I am convinced of one thing—that men will differ on the best propositions that can be presented, and that the ablest minds will honestly differ—but it is a matter of a difference in judgment and convictions. I have been thoroughly convinced that this is a question in which the people of this State feel a vital interest. It affects their interests to a vital extent, and I have to some extent doubted the propriety of giving these Commissioners the sole control. It appears to me that this is a proposition to do that thing. Now, when we come to consider this matter in its full extent, we do not know that we will be able to get the best men in the land to fill these positions; and if we did, we do not know what may befall them after they are elected. Human nature is human nature the world over, and if they should prove false to their trust, they would be entirely beyond the power of the people. Farther, Mr. Chairman, in this section twenty it seems that they have not only power to fix freights and fares, but their decrees are to be enforced through the Courts. If they are to fix them, it appears a little strange that they should enforce them through the medium of the Courts. The Court is compelled to carry out their acts, carry out their behests, and determine in accordance with what they have determined. If they are to fix fares and freights, why should we trouble the Courts to do this, if they have no discretion in the matter? In this respect, I think there is an amendment needed. I am under the impression that this unlimited power is, when we come to look at it, a little too much like the iron bed of Procrustes. I fear it. Under these circumstances, I am opposed to the Commissioners; but I feel that there should be certain amendments, and the time is passing away, and this is very soon to be acted upon; and it is a matter of great consequence that we should proceed with the business and accomplish what we were sent here for. Now, I am satisfied that the people of this State want something more in the Constitution than we have had heretofore in regard to the regulation of freights and fares. There are some amendments already in hand, and I feel somewhat disposed to vote for some of them. While I have no objections to members here speaking and giving their views; but I think we ought to come to a vote before very long.

SPEECH OF MR. GORMAN.

MR. GORMAN. Mr. Chairman: I would like to say a few words as to the way I shall cast my vote, and as to the reasons upon which I base my action. I am not prepared to vote for this Commissioner clause as it stands at present; at least, it does not suit me as well as some of the amendments which have been offered here. It would seem by the remarks made by gentlemen on this floor, that the feeling of hostility towards railroad corporations is merely a pretense of demagogues, to make political capital for themselves, and that in truth the people make no complaints; that they are perfectly satisfied and contented with the manner in which the railroads are conducted. Now, sir, if that is so, why do the people at every election of late years elect what are termed anti-monopoly men? Why do candidates of all political parties indignantly deny any affiliation with railroad rings? If railroads are honest and just in their dealings and their charges, what need can there be for rings? If they are honest and just, why is it that such a pressure is brought to bear upon the Legislature at every session? Sir, it is not in California alone that these complaints are heard. They are coming up from almost every portion of the country, and this same feeling of hostility, engendered by the same causes, is manifested everywhere, and becomes more bitter as the years go by. Is this spirit of hostility towards railroad corporations groundless? Is there no cause for it? We shall see. Let us go back in the history of railroads and see if there is not a cause for it.

Railroad corporations in this country were at first confined to short lines, reaching from one large city to another. They were built by men of small or moderate means, and were scarcely over one hundred miles in length. But as years went by these short roads were consolidated, until some of them finally reached half across the continent. Several of these great trunk lines were thus formed, which, with their branches, obtained the control of the carrying trade of a great tract of country, and of immense value. As the power and wealth of the railroad increased, their desire for more property also increased; and by sharp practice in manipulating stocks on Wall street, a few men, and in some cases one man, soon came to control each of these roads. When they had gained control of vast tracts of country, they commenced a system of discrimination and high charges for freights and fares which compelled the people to resort to the law for protection; but they were not successful. The railroads, by means of their vast wealth and power, were able to defeat the people and carry their point. To do this they did not hesitate to resort to bribery and other unlawful means. This they did with a high hand, and, as has been mentioned on this floor, they carried it to such an extent in New Jersey that that State was dubbed the "Camden and Amboy State," for years. Vanderbilt and Jay Gould always bring a tremendous pressure to bear upon the New York Legislature. As for Pennsylvania, for years it has been said that Tom Scott carries the Legislature in his breeches pocket, as has also been said of California in regard to the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

We find that they have expended vast sums of money on the India rubber account, bribing members of legislative bodies, and even invading the halls of the National Capitol, bringing disgrace on the whole nation. In Illinois, Judges of the Courts accepted passes for themselves and their families to the Pacific Coast and return, and we find that passes are given from the highest officer of the State down to the smallest county and town officers.

One gentleman on this floor says that congressional bodies take a broad and statesmanlike view of these railroad questions. Yes. Ames, Colfax, Dawes, and others did, when railroad bonds are used to mold their views. As I have mentioned, these corporations have resorted to fraud in discriminating on freights and fares, and other curious ways, as, for instance, the same amount is charged per car from Chicago to New Orleans, as from Chicago to Keokuk, Iowa. But it is not necessary for me to pursue this particular branch of the subject further, after the able manner in which the gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard, has handled it.

We read of meetings of railroad Directors and officers, representing half the railroad lines of the country. Are these meetings for the purpose of lowering freights, or are they not rather for the purpose of raising them? Upon the consolidation of the Chicago and Northwestern, they raised the rates thirty per cent. Are not many of the railroads of this country owned by foreign capitalists, and what interest can they have in the industries and welfare of this country. At home they are satisfied with an interest of four per cent. or less on their capital, but here they want fifteen per cent. The Oregon Railroad traverses the richest valleys in the State; they cannot be excelled in the whole country. The Northern Pacific Railroad is owned almost exclusively by foreign capitalists, as is the case with several of the eastern roads. In the State of Oregon, owing to their lakes, canals, and rivers, the railroads have been compelled to reduce the rates, and the people can ship their produce to market cheaper than we can. For some time these railroad corporations refused to be governed, in a great many cases, by the laws passed by the Legislatures. Although restricted in some cases, in a certain sense they would manage to evade the law. They would increase their capital stock and create fictitious values. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, in eight years, increased their capital fifty-five millions of dollars; the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in nine years, increased their capital one hundred and twenty-six million dollars; the Erie has watered its stock until it has reached two hundred million dollars. In eighteen hundred and sixty-eight Commodore Vanderbilt increased New York Central eighty-four per cent., yet in this year the sworn statement of the Directors says the road was unable to pay six per cent. on the existing capital. The New York Central and Harlem increased nine million dollars in six years. Fort Wayne leased a branch road, and on that portion increased their stock eight million dollars. In eighteen hundred and sixty-seven a report made by the leading commercial paper says: Twenty-eight roads increased their capital stock during twenty-two months, one hundred and thirteen million dollars.

The gentleman from Sacramento says: "Talk about the people wanting this thing or that thing, I say they want no such thing." I must beg leave to differ with him. The people all over the country are demanding reform, not only in regard to railroad corporations, but in every branch of government, and they speak in no uncertain tones. They have been defeated on every hand, and the burden is becoming unbearable. This is shown by the elections of late years, and the proof may be seen in this very body.

Now let us look at home. One corporation, composed of five or six persons, own and control three fourths of all the railroads in this State. All the main lines, and a great many of the branches, as has already been shown here, are controlled by them. Owing to the peculiar formation of the country, no such thing as railroad competition is possible, as in other States. Let us see how this corporation was received by the people throughout this country when the road was first built. Is it not a well known fact, that the people, wherever the railroad passed, received them with open arms, and they were given a hearty welcome everywhere? Did they not give them all kinds of support? Cities, counties, and towns gave them large amounts of money, or took their stock, gave them the right of way, and assisted the enterprise in every manner possible. Have not the people, in truth and in fact, built these roads and equipped them? What, then, has changed the sentiment of the people? Why have they demanded that the railroad shall be controlled? The reason is, that when they have got all that it is possible for the people to give, they want still more. They have become tyrannical and refuse to obey any law but their own. They have carried things with such a high hand that they have come to imagine themselves above the Government, and if matters go on in the future as in the past, they will become dangerous to republican government. They have been falling from being benefactors of the people, as a late writer has well said, like the New York Central, have become a fraud; or, like the Erie, a scandal; or, like the Pennsylvania, a political dynasty. Combining together, they may rule State and nation.

We hear a great deal said about the amount lost daily by the Southern Pacific Railroad. Well, when the company started to build that road they knew exactly how much trade they might expect, and have probably not been disappointed. One would imagine by listening to gentlemen on this floor, that the railroad company was a sort of benevolent or philanthropic society, going about building roads for the convenience of the people.

Gentlemen, when the Central Pacific built this Southern Pacific it was for the purpose of binding still closer in their toils. It was to close the only door left open for relief. Let the people not thank them for this road, but look at it rather as a curse, for by building the Southern Pacific they cut off all hopes of successful competition by any other transatlantic road, holding a still firmer grasp upon the whole State.

We have seen how railroads have from small beginnings and honest dealings at last become despotic and corrupting agencies, backed by millions of money. The morality of the whole country has been greatly lowered wherever their power is used. No officer, whether high or low, from the President of the United States and the Judges on the bench, down to the lowest official in a country village, is exempt from their contaminating influences. This is, I must say, the most lamentable part of the whole outlook on corporations. As a people we have greatly changed for the worse; where once we trusted every officer elected to fill any position, we now suspect every one in office; we look on our legislators with distrust, and no wonder, when we see men who, before election, not having money enough to pay a hotel bill, their friends going round begging people to vote for them, and saying that their children would jump for joy, and after the session is over taking a trip to Europe or to the East, and buying fine houses. When men come here pledged to certain reforms, and after coming to the seat of government scarcely get warm in their seats when they fall down, turn a complete somersault, and forget their pledges; or when a railroad magnate rolls a barrel of whisky into the Sergeant-at-Arms' room in the Capitol building of a capital city, is it any wonder the people should think it time to take the control of corporations in their own hands? Is it any wonder they think no measure too strong to curb their power? We cannot overestimate the danger these great corporations are to a republican form of government. It is like a snowball, so small at first you can hold it in the hand; but roll it in the snow, and in a short time it becomes too large to be handled. But they are unlike the snowball in this, that in one hot day one will be melted away, while the other grows still stronger every day. Millionaires, with all their riches, will die, but corporations live on forever. I will close by quoting Chief Justice Waite. Discussing the Granger cases, he says: "A good government never puts forth its extraordinary power except under circumstances which demand it." I think, Mr. Chairman, this is a case where it is demanded.

SPEECH OF MR. VACQUEREL.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. Chairman: I will only occupy your time for a moment. I have listened patiently to all the speeches here. I have learned that one author said something on the subject, and another man said another thing, and still I have not been able to know how to vote. Now, sir, the railroad, if it be an evil, is a necessary evil. The laws in force in Europe cannot be put in force here, because the conditions are different. The laws of one State might work well here, while the laws of another would fail to give satisfaction. Now, sir, I do not care what Mr. Black may have said; or what anybody else may have said, our constituents sent us here to remedy the local evils under which they are suffering, and of which they complain. Now, I have heard it asserted that legislators are corrupt. If that is so, then the Commissioners will be liable to be corrupt also. I cannot vote for section twenty as it is reported by the committee. It gives too much power to these three men. I believe it is conferring too much power. I do not believe the Commissioners should make the law. It is against republican principles. The Legislature alone has the right to make laws in a free government, therefore I will vote for Commissioners only with power to carry out the laws made by the Legislature, and report to the Legislature. The Legislature, upon the report of the Commissioners, can pass the necessary laws regulating freights and fares as proposed by the Commissioners. That plan I think would work a great deal better than the plan proposed here of giving the Commission such arbitrary and unlimited powers. This proposition affects great questions. If you try to stop the river in its course it will burst its banks and overflow the country. All violation of natural laws will bring its punishments. Now, if we give too much power to one branch of government, or too much to another, they will turn out masters of the people. Therefore, I insist that these Commissioners shall not be clothed with this arbitrary power. The Legislature is composed of direct representatives of the people, and they, are the ones to exercise this power.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried, on division—ayes, 66; noes, 54.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentleman: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move we adjourn to meet at seven o'clock this evening.

MR. MCFARLAND. I move the Convention do now adjourn, and that is a privileged motion.

MR. ESTEE. I rise to a point of order.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The motion to adjourn takes precedence. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Lost, on a division vote of 56 ayes to 57 noes.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention take a recess until seven o'clock this evening.

Lost, on a division vote of 58 ayes to 61 noes.

MR. ESTEE. I move we adjourn.

RESOLUTION.

MR. HILBORN. I desire to send up a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the sum of eighty-three and eighty one hundredths dollars be appropriated out of the funds for carrying on this Convention, to pay the bill of the Pacific Ice Company for the month ending December first, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, and that the warrant be drawn in favor of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this Convention.

MR. HILBORN. The ice has been delivered, and I hope the resolution will be adopted without reference to a committee. I move the adoption of the resolution.

MR. BARNES. I would like to inquire of the President if there is any express provision in the Act calling this Convention together for ice. If not, I would suggest that it go to the Judiciary Committee, to find out whether we can pay it or not. [Laughter.]

MR. HILBORN. There are several nice provisions in the bill.

MR. REYNOLDS. I move that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

MR. TERRY. It will have to go to a committee under the rules.

MR. HILBORN. It has not been before a committee. It was handed to me as Chairman of the committee, and I reported it.

MR. O'DONNELL. I have a resolution——

MR. HOWARD. I move we do now adjourn.

MR. CROSS. I call for the ayes and noes.

MR. GRACE. I don't know what we are voting on.

MR. MURPHY. I move we go back into Committee of the Whole.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on adjournment.

Division was called, and the motion prevailed—ayes, 62; noes, 59.

And, at four o'clock and thirty minutes P. M., the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M.

SIXTY-EIGHTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Wednesday, December 4th, 1878.

The Convention met in regular session, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M., President pro tem. Belcher in the chair.

The roll was called, and members found in attendance as follows:

SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the regular gubernatorial elections, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts; to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in this and the foregoing sections.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

MR. WYATT. I second the motion.

THE CHAIR. Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

STATE INSTITUTIONS AND PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

MR. CONDON, from a minority of the Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings, presented the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT: The undersigned members of your Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings, dissent from certain conclusions arrived at by the majority of the committee.

First—We believe that under our system of government, the people should, in every case, directly determine, by their suffrages, who shall occupy official station and be invested with public powers. That the lodging of the power of appointing to office, in any department of State, is an abridgment of the rights of the people. We therefore recommend that persons, to be chosen as Commissioners, pursuant to section one, as reported by the majority of the committee, be elected by the qualified voters of the State.

Second—Believing that the future prosperity of our State, yea, the very perpetuity of our system of government, depends upon an industrious, intelligent, and independent laboring class; that the free, intelligent workingman is the true impersonification of our theory of government; that labor creates capital; that only through intelligent, free labor has the civilization of man been made possible; labor is enobling, and the honest, intelligent, free laboring man, is the true nobleman; if the free working classes fall and are driven out, the industrial ruin of the State will inevitably follow. This country was created for a free people, and for free labor. The intelligence of the people is the safeguard of our political institutions, and every burden imposed upon the independence of free labor is a blow at the liberties of the people.

The labor of convicts is essentially, in all its elements, slave labor, criminal classes existing, convicts being a necessary evil. They should be so employed as not to conflict with free labor, so as not to ruin and destroy the happy homes of honest industry. It is the duty of the State to protect the honest toiler, in his work and in the fruits of his industry.

The contract system of convict labor must cease, as it enables manufacturers to procure slave labor at wages so far below free labor, that free labor is driven from the market, leaves the State, or sinks into want and misery, or death by starvation.

The State to-day is possessed of a large part of the machinery, tools, and material necessary to itself work the convicts.

The free laborers of this State are, as a unit, opposed to the contract system, as it competes directly with them, lowering their wages, and taking the bread from their mouths. The undersigned are of the opinion that the convicts can be employed by the State in such works as not to injure free labor, and at the same time return sufficient to make our prisons self-sustaining, thus removing a grinding opposition to free labor, and a burdensome tax from off the State. We recommend the adoption of the following section:

ARTICLE ——.

There shall be a State Board of Prison Commissioners, to consist of three persons, to be elected by the qualified voters of the State at large, at the general State election, at the times and places that State officers are elected, and the term of office shall be (6) six years from and after the first Monday in January next succeeding their election; provided, that the three Commissioners elected at the first election shall, at their first meeting, so classify themselves by lot that one of them shall go out of office at the end of three years, one at the end of four years, and one at the end of six years. If a vacancy occur in the office of Commissioner, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Commissioner, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the person so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term. The first election of the Commissioners shall be at the first general election after the adoption and ratification of this Constitution.

SECTION —. The Legislature shall, by laws, provide for the working of convicts in State Prisons for the benefit of the State; provided, however, that the labor of convicts shall not be let out by contract to any person, copartnership, company, or corporation.

SEC. —. The State Board of Prison Commissioners shall constitute a Board of Pardons, and the Governor of the State shall never pardon any person convicted of crime, except at the unanimous request of the Board of State Prison Commissioners.

SEC. —. The Legislature shall give effect to a judicious system of credit for good behavior to convicts in State Prisons, to be carried out by the State Board of Prison Commissioners.

(Signed:) JOHN D. CONDON,
P. M. WELLIN,
C. J. BEERSTECHER.

MR. CONDON. I move you, sir, that the usual number of copies be printed of that and of the report made by the majority of the committee.

THE CHAIR. If there be no objection the report will lie on the table and be printed with the majority report. It is so ordered.

HOURS OF LABOR.

MR. THOMPSON, (by request), introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to the hours of labor:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The hours of labor on all contracts performed for the State, county, and municipal governments shall not exceed eight hours a day.

SEC. 2. The hours of labor on all work done for corporations doing business under charter from this State shall not exceed eight hours a day.

SEC. 3. All State offices, county, and municipal, shall remain open for the transaction of business eight hours each business day.

SEC. 4. Eight hours shall constitute a legal day's work in each and every department of the State, county and municipal governments.

SEC. 5. This article shall be enforced by appropriate legislation.

Referred to the Committee on Labor and Capital.

REPORT—THE WINE INTEREST.

MR. REED, from the Committee on Agriculture, Manufactures, and Commerce, presented the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT: The Committee on Agriculture, Manufactures, and Commerce, having had under consideration resolutions numbers thirty three and thirty-four, report the same back, with a memorial to the President of the United States, and respectfully ask the adoption of said memorial.

CHAS. F. REED, Chairman.

MEMORIAL.

To the President and to the Senate of the United States:

The Constitutional Convention of the State of California, duly assembled by authority of law, at Sacramento, on the twenty-eight day of September, A. D. eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, for the purpose of revising the Constitution of the State, respectfully memoralizes the President and the Senate of the United States:

WHEREAS, A treaty or convention between the Government of the United States and that of the Republic of France has been proposed, and is now under consideration at the City of Washington, by which convention it is proposed to so revise the existing schedule of tariffs that a large reduction shall be made in import duties upon French products, particularly wines and spirits; and whereas, such reduction would result most disastrously to the large and growing vinicultural interests of the State of California; therefore, this body, acting on behalf of the people of California, does most earnestly protest against the proposed revision of such tariff, or any revision thereof whereby the import duties upon wines and spirits may be reduced.

And in support of such protest your memorialists respectfully show: That a large amount of capital, reaching, by intelligent and reliable estimates, the sum of fifty millions of dollars, has been invested in the vineyards of California, and the various structures and improvements connected therewith; that all conditions of people have engaged in said industry, from the laborer and small lot owner to the wealthy capitalist, and that the business has come to be the only means of support to thousands of citizens of the State; that said industry is not even now largely remunerative, but at best only yields a moderate return for the capital invested and the labor employed; and that up to a very recent period the vineyardists of California have had a close and constant struggle to place the industry upon a paying basis; that the proposed reduction of duties will, if carried out, utterly crush this industry, leave thousands without adequate means of support, and aggravate the distress prevailing among the producing classes, without the gain of a farthing to the government, or to any person or persons in the United States, except the few engaged in the business of importing.

Wherefore, said Convention has voted this protest, and caused the same to be authenticated by the signatures of the President and Secretary.

Done at Sacramento on this third day of December, A D. eighteen hundred and seventy-eight.

MR. REED. Mr. President: I ask the adoption of that memorial, and with the permission of the Convention I will briefly state a few of the reasons which give rise to that memorial. Early last Spring, at the international exhibition at Paris, the various Chambers of Commerce of France proposed to the delegates representing the various Chambers of Commerce of the United States, that in view of the necessity of a revision of the American tariff and for a treaty of commerce as between the United States and France, that a Franco-American Conference be held at the City of Paris to consider the propriety of increasing the commercial relations of the two countries by reducing the import duties now exacted by the present tariff. Various Chambers of Commerce in the United States were visited by distinguished gentlemen for the purpose of securing delegates to this Franco-American Conference. Mr. Leon Chatteau visited the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, and addressed it upon the necessity of a modification of the tariff. And here permit me to say in justice to that Chamber, that it did not indorse the present proposed treaty, as has been stated by the press, for this was in May last, and the treaty was not prepared until August, consequently they knew nothing of its provisions, but it expressed a desire to second the movement already inaugurated to connect more closely the commercial relations between France and the United States, and cordially welcomed Mr. Chatteau, and extended to him its earnest coöperation in the mission with which he was intrusted. Delegates were sent to Washington to a Convention which selected members to represent the United States in the Conference at Paris. The Conference met in August, a preliminary draft of a treaty was presented and referred to a committee of sixteen, which reported to the Conference August ninth a project of a proposed treaty. In article four of the basis of the treaty, is a request to the President of the United States to recommend to Congress a revision of the tariff of the United States bearing on the French products imported into the United States, tending to reduce import duties according to the following suggestions, viz., a reduction on still wines in casks, twenty cents per gallon; still wines in bottles, a reduction of fifty cents per dozen; brandy and spirits, a reduction to one dollar per gallon. This is a reduction of one half of the present tariff.

There is already invested in California over fifty million dollars in viniculture, outside of incidental industries, as cooperage, machinery, etc. Assessing this at one half, or twenty-five million dollars, the State tax at last year's rate was sixty-three cents, and the yield, therefore, one hundred and fifty-seven thousand five hundred dollars for the treasury. In less than ten years it will be double that amount. This is a critical period in the era of wine growing, and for the first time in many years the grape growers of the State have felt encouraged. The production in France has fallen off over fifty per cent. In California a far less percentage of poor wines is made than in France. French brandy is distilled from beets, wine lees, and other worthless stuff, and made up of American alcohol mixed with essences, etc., while that of California is made of grapes, and is pure and genuine brandy. The French have found this out, and a short time ago a sale was made in Chicago of thirty thousand barrels of alcohol, amounting to seven hundred thousand dollars, for French account, to be reshipped in shape of cordials and various liquors, at a profit of over five hundred per cent. They have also purchased all the brandy in Los Angeles, and propose to send it back to California at a reduced tariff. One year ago California brandy was one dollar and fifty cents per gallon, now it is two dollars and fifty cents per gallon to ship to France, under the operation of the present tariff. Our exports in eighteen hundred and seventy-seven were, by rail, six million pounds, or seven hundred and fifty thousand gallons; by sea, nine hundred thousand gallons. We sent to England five thousand gallons; to Hamburg, nine thousand gallons. The French pay twenty-five cents per day for labor; in California two dollars is paid. They pay for barrels, one dollar and fifty cents; we pay three dollars. The reduction proposed will be fatal to American interests, and more particularly to the wine growing interests in California. While our heavy internal revenue tax remains it is impossible to compete with France without the present tariff as a protection. The revenues of the country will not permit the loss of the internal revenue tax, neither will it be advisable to lose the custom duties at present derived from French wines and brandies. The grape growers of the State have no way of calling the attention of the President and Congress to the manifest injustice of this treaty, except through their representatives assembled in this Convention, and therefore the committee earnestly ask for the adoption of the memorial, and that one copy be sent to the President of the United States, and the other to our Senators. There are two copies, Mr. President, sent to the Clerk's desk, already prepared. I move the adoption of the memorial, and that four hundred and eighty copies of it be ordered printed.

MR. MANSFIELD. Mr. President: I move that double the usual number of copies be ordered printed for circulation.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: I think, sir, that it is very important that this memorial should be adopted and dispatched to Washington at as early a day as possible. I would suggest to the mover of the resolution that it be also referred to the House of Representatives. Whilst I was at Washington, sir, there was a constant pressure brought to bear upon the Senate and the House of Representatives in regard to our tariff laws, that they might be relaxed so as to admit the cheaper wines of Germany at a reduced rate of duty. Committees were there constantly before the committee of the Senate and before the committee of the House of Representatives that had charge of the tariff bills, to importune them for some modification of our duties in regard to the lower class of wines, in order that the products of Germany and France might be brought in at a reduced rate of duty. That pressure is being brought to bear constantly. I presume it originates mainly with the importers of these wines in New York and in the other cities. I do not know that the governments of Europe have undertaken to interfere, by bringing any influence to bear at Washington, but there is certainly, at all times, a committee there that are using their power and influence to secure some modification of our tariff laws in that respect. I have been told that wines are constantly being exported from this country to Europe, where they are mixed with French and German wines and brought back here as foreign productions. If we wish to establish the California wine interest, we must protect it by tariff laws, as all countries have protected this kind of products in their own interest. I would suggest that the gentleman modify his resolution to this extent, that it be sent also to the House of Representatives.

MR. REED. I accept the amendment.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I would also suggest that where concurrent resolutions are passed which are addressed to the Government at Washington, they are usually sent to each of our Senators and representatives in Congress. They are the special representatives of our interests at the Capital, and it would seem to me proper that that should be the course here. I ask the gentleman to accept an amendment, that a copy be sent to each of our Senators and representatives in Congress.

MR. REED. I accept the amendment, though I understand that the question of a modification of a treaty only goes to the Senate.

MR. HILBORN. Exactly so; but it was proposed to send this to the President of the United States. We have representatives there, and representatives of influence, and it certainly will be courteous for us to send a copy to them, so that they may be advised of what is in the hands of the President, that they may, by their influence, assist in bringing about this good result.

The memorial was unanimously adopted, and four hundred and eighty copies ordered printed.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: Before moving that this Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, I wish to state that it is proposed——

MR. O'SULLIVAN. On last Monday week I offered——

WOMAN SUFFRAGE DISCUSSION.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President: I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the use of this hall be and the same is hereby tendered to Hon. James Caples and Mrs. Laura De Force Gordon, for a discussion of the proposed amendment to the Constitution, conferring the elective franchise upon women, any evening they may designate for that purpose.

MR. ESTEE. I suppose that is out of order.

THE CHAIR. It is out of order.

THE TEXT-BOOK QUESTION.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I move to take from the table the resolution I offered a few days ago, calling on the Superintendent of State Printing for information

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of State Printing be requested to furnish to this Convention an estimate of the cost of composition, paper, and binding of a series of Readers, such as the Pacific Coast Readers and McGuffey's Series of Readers, the work to be done by the State under its present system. That he be requested to estimate the cost of the first edition of one thousand, and also the cost of each succeeding thousand.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. This resolution was laid on the table, I think, under a misapprehension as to the purport of it. The purpose of the resolution is simply to obtain information as to the cost of printing the school Readers in the State Printing Office. The proposition that the State shall print the school books will come up by and by for the decision of this body, and therefore it is that I desire this information laid before the Convention. I see no good reason why this simple inquiry for information should be suppressed, as it was on last Monday week. It will cost nothing, and simply asking the information, commits nobody to the plan of the State printing the school books. It is notorious that one of the worst lobbies that has ever disgraced this State, is the school book lobby. I say so advisedly, because there are gentlemen on this floor who have been in the Legislature who told me so, and I have heard so from school teachers also. I trust that this Convention will show itself above all outside influence, notwithstanding it is said that a certain book firm of San Francisco declare that they will have this book question settled in the new Constitution satisfactorily to them, so that they will not be compelled to come up here every session and use their corrupt influence in the Legislature; I therefore hope that the resolution will be taken from the table, and that the mere courtesy which has been given to all similar resolutions will be given to it.

MR. FREUD. Mr. President: I hope the resolution will pass. It is my intention to present a minority report from the Committee on Education relative to this matter; and it will be absolutely necessary that the information aimed at by this resolution be at my disposal. It is my intention to submit a proposition relative to the compilation, distribution, etc., of books by the State, to be printed at the State Printing Office. In order to make a report of that character, of course the information aimed at is necessary. Therefore, I hope the resolution will pass.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: When this question was brought up here a week or two ago, I was very much surprised to hear the gentleman move to lay it on the table. This is one of the questions that interest the people. We all know that there has been an immense power at work on school books in the State of California. We have a State Printing Office here of our own that could print these books and give them to the people at first cost. The question here asked is simply to see whether it can be done or not. Why any gentleman should propose to lay it on the table is more than I can see. No harm can possibly come from getting the information before the Convention, and then if we see we can do the people any good let us do it.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: In this State there is quite a feeling growing up in favor of having the books for public schools furnished by the State. As I understand it, there is also a feeling that the present cost of school books is about three times what the State could furnish the same books for, and a good many of the delegates to this Convention were elected on the proposition that if there was an opportunity they should favor the furnishing of books in the public schools at the State expense. Now, if any movement is to be made during the sitting of this Convention, and I understand that such an attempt will be made, this information will be invaluable to us, especially if it should appear that the State can furnish books at about one third of the cost that individuals now furnish them at. I am therefore in favor of the resolution. It will cost the State nothing, and we will have the information.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: If we attempt to investigate every evil, or supposed evil, that is claimed to have existed for the last twenty-five or thirty years, we will never get through with the business of this Convention in the next five years. The way these things accumulate, it seems that gentlemen in this Convention are determined to go into every minute affair of the State, whether it exclusively belongs to the legislative, judicial, or executive department, and with which this Constitutional Convention has nothing to do whatever. Now, I came here for the purpose of helping to make a Constitution, not to investigate any evils that have been supposed to exist heretofore, which not a half dozen members of this Convention will attempt to remedy. The remedy is with the Legislature, or some other department of the Government. Now, I say that if there has any abuse been perpetrated here in the matter of books for schools, the proper place to remedy it is in the Legislature. We cannot establish a system of books here. If the books have cost four times as much as they should have cost, then, sir, it seems to me that the place for investigation and remedy is in the Legislature. Let us go on with our other business, and let the Legislature when they meet next Spring, or whenever they do meet, attend to theirs. I hope that all such propositions as these will be voted down, and that we may get through with this Constitutional Convention by next May, if possible.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. The Legislature probably is the place to settle railroad fares and freights, too, and the tax question, but we know that the Legislature has been corrupted, and has never passed an Act in the interest of the people on this question. Therefore I want this school book question in the Constitution. Do you want to stifle information? You probably all voted for the resolution presented for the purpose of casting ridicule upon the office of Adjutant-General of the State. Why not vote for this simple resolution asking information that I desire? It will cost nothing.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: So far as the members of the Legislature are concerned I do not agree with the gentleman. I am not here prepared to say that the legislators of this State have been a set of corruptionists, thieves, and pirates. I believe that the members of the Legislature of this State have, on the average, been just as good and honest a set of individuals as the members of this Convention. I am not here to say that we are such immaculate individuals, superior to every body that has ever existed in this State heretofore; therefore, I am not willing to act upon that proposition.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I know what I am speaking of. I call for the ayes and noes.

MR. LINDOW. Ayes and noes.

The motion to take the resolution from the table prevailed.

MR. FREUD. I move its adoption.

The resolution was adopted.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. President: I rise to a question of privilege. My facetious friend from San Francisco, Dr. O'Donnell, appears disposed to have a little fun at my expense. I shall not make any objection, in view of the fact, that it seems to be his peculiar department to make fun in this Convention. But for the information of the gentlemen of the Convention, I will state that I know nothing at all of his resolution, and that when I discuss the question referred to in the resolution of the facetious gentleman, I expect to do so before this Convention at the proper time, in the proper manner, legitimately, regularly, and not otherwise.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: I desire to introduce a proposition with reference to the Constitution. I ask that it be printed immediately, out of its order, and referred to the Committee of the Whole, to be considered with the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

MR. HERRINGTON sent up the following proposition, relative to RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS.

"Amend Article —— (Proposition No. 444), as reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, by inserting therein, next after section twenty as reported, the following:

"SEC. 21. Said Railroad Commission, in the execution of its powers, shall so fix, and from time to time regulate, the charges for freights and fares collectible by said railroad and other transportation companies, that the revenue derived therefrom, over running expenses and expenses for repairs by such companies, shall not, in the aggregate for any year after the adoption of this Constitution, exceed, but may be less than, ten per centum of the true cash value of the works, machinery, and property invested and in actual use by such corporations in the business of transportation, as the same shall be assessed annually for State taxation."

MR. HERRINGTON. I move that it be printed out of order and referred to the Committee of the Whole, to be considered with the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

ORDERED PRINTED.

MR. CONDON. There was a memorial presented from the representatives of the trades and labor unions of this coast, praying of this Convention to have a clause inserted in the Constitution prohibiting the letting out of prison labor to contractors; also, embracing several other subjects of vast importance. The memorial was presented by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Bell, and, sir, in order that all should understand thoroughly the views which actuated these vast assemblages in imparting to this Convention the necessary information, I move you, sir, that four hundred and eighty copies of the same be printed.

Carried.

SUPREME COURT WORK.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. President: The Clerk of the Supreme Court, at the request of myself, as Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, and of other members of the committee, has prepared a tabular statement showing the number of cases appealed to that Court, and the amount of business from the several counties in the State. I deem it quite important that this information should be possessed by this Convention before we act upon the judicial department. I therefore move that the communication be received and ordered printed.

THE CHAIR. If there be no objection it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, CLERK'S OFFICE SUPREME COURT,
SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, December 2d, 1878.

Hon. S. M. Wilson, Chairman Judiciary Committee, Constitutional Convention:

DEAR SIR: In obedience to the request of yourself and other members of your committee, I have the honor herewith to present comparative tables (in detail) of the business of this Court during the four years preceding the amendment to the Constitution increasing the number of Justices, and during the four years commencing January first, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, since which time all the present Justices have been on the bench, showing the number of cases that have been filed from each county in the State, and writs of habeas corpus issued, with a list of decisions rendered during both periods; also, the number of cases remaining undisposed of at this date.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

D. B. WOOLF, Clerk of Supreme Court.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

MR. RINGGOLD introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to the banks of navigable waters.

SECTION —. The banks of the navigable waters within the limits of this State are hereby declared to be public highways for all purposes incident to the use of such waters for navigation, and subject to such general regulation as may be prescribed by law.

Referred to the Committee of the Whole.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President pro tem. in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. Before the motion is put I wish to give notice, at the request of a great many members of this Convention, that before we adjourn to-night, we will close the debate upon the question, if it is the sense of the Convention to do so.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: The Committee on Corporations have presented a new report this morning which none of us has had an opportunity of examining. We do not know anything about it. After this debate has been continued here for a long time, and we pretty generally understand what we have before us, the committee have presented a new report this morning, and I think it will be hardly proper to discuss that matter to-day and vote upon it to-day. I would like to see it put in print and let it be the order of business for to-morrow. I think that such an important matter as this we ought to have printed and laid on our desks. I do not suppose there are any gentlemen in this Convention who could vote intelligently upon the proposition for want of information, for want of opportunity of reading it deliberately. I hardly think it would be just. I suggest to the Chairman of the committee, whether it is right that we should be compelled to vote upon an amendment of this importance which for the first time comes before us to-day. We could go on and discuss it, but I suggest that we had better take the vote to-morrow. This amendment only extends over ten or eleven lines, while, if I recollect right, the original extended over some twenty or thirty lines.

MR. ESTEE. This amendment will be printed in the daily Journal. I merely gave notice so that gentlemen might improve the opportunity to address the committee to-day. If we are not through when night comes, I am sure that no member of the Committee on Corporations will try to press a vote.

MR. EDGERTON. I would inquire of the Chairman whether his motion contemplates merely the termination of the consideration of the report in Committee of the Whole.

MR. ESTEE. Of course, that is all.

MR. EDGERTON. Not final action by the Convention upon it.

MR. ESTEE. Only in Committee of the Whole.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: In order to bring the discussion that may arise upon this question to the questions properly before this committee, I move the previous question upon the amendments now pending—so that the discussion to-day may be upon the amendment offered by the Committee on Corporations this morning—the amendments offered by Mr. Waters and Mr. Prouty. I desire this body to stick to the question and not have the latitude they have had before.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I do not see that we can ascertain whether we wish to vote upon these amendments that have been before the committee or not until the body learns what will be presented by the Committee on Corporations. We do not know what we will have to vote upon besides the amendments, and until we know something of those to be proposed I do not think we can vote intelligently upon the subject of the other amendments which have been introduced by Mr. Waters, Mr. Blackmer, and others. I think it is but fair that this body should learn what we have to vote for besides before we vote upon these.

MR. ROLFE. I second the motion for the previous question.

MR. ESTEE. There is no motion pending.

MR. HUESTIS. I second the motion.

MR. TINNIN. I second it, too.

MR. ESTEE. I wish to present a report of the committee relative——

MR. LARKIN. I insist upon my motion for the previous question upon the two amendments pending. You can offer yours afterwards as much as you please.

MR. CROSS. I wish to ask a question. If we now order the previous question on these two amendments does that cut off debate upon such other amendments as may be offered?

THE CHAIRMAN. It does not.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me quite unnecessary to move the previous question, or to vote upon these amendments. It seems to me that the Convention is in a temper to——

MR. NOEL. I rise to a point of order, that the previous question is not debatable.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

MR. REYNOLDS. I wish merely to state——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will come to order.

On a division, the main question was ordered by 84 affirmative votes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twenty.

THE SECRETARY read section twenty, as originally reported by the committee, as follows:

SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State, at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations, or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; report to the Governor annually their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; hear and determine complaints against railroad or other transportation companies; affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts; and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in the foregoing sections.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question will be on the amendment offered by Mr. Prouty. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to section twenty: 'Provided that nothing in the foregoing section shall be so construed as to prevent the Legislature, by a three-fourths vote of all the members of both branches thereof, from changing or annulling the action of said Commission, as in their opinion the public good may demand.'"

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by Mr. Waters. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Every railway company or corporation, and every other common carrier by railroad, now or hereafter doing business in this State, shall be entitled to a reasonable compensation for its services, and no more. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified electors of this State, at each gubernatorial election, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years from the first Monday in January succeeding their election. Each of them shall be a qualified elector of this State, and shall not be interested as owner, partner, stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, in the business of transportation. Said Commissioners, or a majority of them, shall make a schedule of reasonable charges for the transportation of passengers, freight, and cars over each railroad now or hereafter operated in this State, as well as reasonable rates for receiving, handling, and delivering freight and cars on such roads. In any action, prosecution, or proceeding by or against any person or corporation, such schedule, or a certified copy thereof, shall be deemed, received, and taken as prima facie evidence that the rates therein fixed are reasonable rates of charges over the road or roads for which such schedule was prepared. They shall alter, revise, and amend such schedules as they shall, from time to time, deem just, and shall perform such other duties and possess such further powers, not inconsistent with this section, as may hereafter be prescribed or conferred by law. No charge by any railroad company, or other common carrier, shall be deemed reasonable if in excess of the sum which it is now entitled by law to exact for a like service."

The substitute was rejected.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I now offer the amendment as recommended by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, and ask to withdraw the other section and insert this in its place.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State, at the regular gubernatorial elections, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad, or other transportation companies, and publish the same, from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts; to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies; to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in this and the foregoing sections."

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty by adding thereto: 'Provided the Legislature shall have power to remove any one or more of said Commissioners from office for dereliction of duty, or corruption, or incompetency therein; and whenever, from any cause, a vacancy in office shall occur in said Commission, the Governor shall fill the same by the appointment of a qualified person thereto, who shall hold office for the residue of the unexpired term, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified.'"

MR. WILSON, of First District. I have an amendment I desire to offer.

MR. LARKIN. There was an amendment offered by Mr. Estee, and an amendment to that amendment was offered by Mr. Hale.

THE CHAIRMAN. The proposition offered by the committee takes the place of the one that was in the report.

MR. LARKIN. I simply desired to learn the ruling of the Chair.

THE SECRETARY read Mr. Wilson's amendment, as follows:

"Strike out lines one, two, and three, and insert in their place as follows, viz: 'Section twenty. There shall be appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, three Transportation Commissioners, who shall hold their office for the period of four years from and after their appointment, and until their successors are appointed and qualified.'"

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I second the amendment.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I do not understand that this is offered by Mr. Wilson as an amendment to the amendment. It is an amendment to the proposition of the committee. Mr. Hale's amendment does not go to the first portion at all.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to the proposition before the Convention.

SPEECH OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. We have had this morning the best illustration of one of the propositions I propose to argue to the committee that could have been presented. The Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, more than three weeks ago, presented for our consideration an article on corporations, the main interest of which centered in section twenty, now under discussion. It was, so far as I could understand the Chairman of the committee in his introduction, a novelty, not merely in legislation, but an experiment, so far as Constitution-making was concerned. I propose for a moment to comment merely upon the arguments advanced in support of it. If I understood the views expressed for the committee by its Chairman and by others, it was substantially that this elected Commission, with most extraordinary legislative and judicial powers, was necessary because of the universal popular distrust of the legislative department of the government. It stood upon the assumption, if I may use the phrase, that the representatives of the people, coming biennially fresh from the people, have ceased to have any partnership with the public interests, and recognize no constituents except these great corporate interests, whose cause they venally espouse and whose plunder they share; upon the idea that there is that in the very atmosphere of Legislatures which so corrupts and taints our public men that they are almost by the course of nature seduced by bribes, and become the mere venal partisans of plundering schemes and schemers, corporate and individual. What foundation there may be in individual experience, what justification there may be in the minds of those who have so expressed themselves, I know not, nor indeed do I care to know, except that it leads me to remark that this prejudice has been so far cherished and enlarged upon in the committee that there seems to be no possible restriction upon this popular branch of the government which does not meet with universal favor, and often, I fear, with unthinking support, simply because an Act sought to be incorporated in the Constitution is a restriction upon or a destruction of powers, which, if we are to have any Legislature, properly and of right belong to it. I have sometimes feared that there was something more of temper and of passion than of reason—more of what has been called the hoarse cry of the demagogue than of the voice of true statesmanship. Now, sir, it seems to me that if all that has been asserted on this floor be true, republican government is a failure; and that concentrated power, a government of the few, and the fewer the better, is our only refuge from national shame and destruction.

Certainly, sir, if these aspersions be correct, there should be not only reform, but an absolute change in the form of our Government itself. If our ballot box breeds nothing but corruption, if these halls contain biennially nothing but a seething mass of degradation, where public right and public justice lie prostrate, helpless, and discrowned, it is time that we abandon our form of government. It is time that we abandoned a ship poisoned with pestilence and rotten from bulwark to keel. It is time now that we should have a rebellion; not a rebellion armed against constituted authority, but a change, as universal, and simultaneous, and void of force as God's irresistible Spring, that blushes with flowers and clothes with more than kingly raiment the length and breadth of a barren continent. If these accusations are well founded, endurance should be no longer the badge of our tribe, and that toleration should have an end. But, sir, is there any gentleman who is prepared to abandon the principles of representative government? I think not. Are there any here who are prepared to declare that this Government should be administered by a succession of elected Commissioners; that all the powers of the State should be taken and vested in a horde of irresponsible Commissions? I think not. We know, whatever we may say, that as a whole our system of government is the best that human wisdom has as yet devised, and for one I am not willing to impeach or impair it by intrusting to any three men the powers and prerogatives which belong to either branch of the Government.

No man in his senses will pretend to deny that the power to regulate all corporations exists in the people; that it may be maintained and exercised through their appointed agents to the extent, if it be necessary for the public good, of the condemnation or confiscation of property or privileges enjoyed by any corporation which menaces public right, and the enjoyment of life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness. The only question that we have here to discuss, is as to the manner and the mode in which that power shall be exercised. Now, the most careful consideration would be demanded of us, if we were assembled here as a Legislature merely, to pass a law to go into effect and remain in force two years only; which might be revised, amended, or repealed, as experience demonstrated it was insufficient, or fruitless of the results sought to be accomplished by it. How much more essential is care and consideration necessary, how much more is prudence demanded of us in the work now intrusted to our hands. Hasty legislation may be repented of and repealed. It is simply for a moment mischievous. Hasty Constitution-making is a vice that may rot and ruin the very fabric that we are attempting to uphold. No systems of law, no principles of government, are of value except they be the result of growth, the fruit of experience, the ripe and matured result of the wisdom that flows from it. The science of government itself, of that which shall bring the highest welfare to the body politic and to the individual citizen, is a progressive science. The principles, to be sure, are immutable, unchangeable; but their application must vary and change with the growth and progress of States and peoples. They depend upon a thousand circumstances; they require to be modified and adjusted, and adapted to an infinite variety of conditions which we cannot control, which we cannot foresee, and for which no human wisdom has ever been or ever will be able to provide. Therefore, while the principles should be engrafted upon the Constitution, their application ought not, philosophically speaking, to be restricted, and made incapable of adaptation to inevitable changes. This consideration becomes the more important when we consider the vast interests with which we are dealing.

Corporations have grown to most enormous dimensions in the United States. The railroad system of this State, and which seems to cause so much anxiety, is like a single drop of rain that falls from the clouds in comparison with the deluge that descends from a Summer storm, when compared with that of other States. I find by the statements made by Simon Sterne, in his pamphlet on the railway system of the United States, so flatteringly referred to by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations—a book which I loaned him, and of which he did not make the best use that could have been made, for, certainly, the views expressed by Mr. Sterne by no means support the conclusions embodied in his report and article—that in the year eighteen hundred and thirty there were only twenty-three miles of railway within the whole limits of the United States. In eighteen hundred and forty they numbered two thousand two hundred and eighteen miles; in eighteen hundred and fifty they had increased to nine thousand and twenty-one miles; in eighteen hundred and sixty, to thirty thousand six hundred and thirty-five miles, and in eighteen hundred and seventy-six there were in actual operation in the United States, seventy-seven thousand four hundred and seventy miles of railway, representing an actual capital of six billion dollars—more money, sir, than is invested in railway enterprises in Great Britain, France, and Germany combined. In the year eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, there was in England invested in railway enterprises, two billion eight hundred million dollars; in Germany, one billion dollars, and in France, one billion two hundred million dollars. During this period railway corporations came, as we know, to absorb and engross, by the force of natural law, by the power of steam operating upon permanent roads—which made traffic open and accessible at all seasons and at all times—nearly all the carrying trade of the United States; and to-day, not only in California do the railroads control all the carrying traffic, but they control it all over the United States. All the complaints made here have been made elsewhere, and for that reason, before I get through, I desire to call the attention of the committee to what other States, who are more deeply and injuriously affected than we have ever been, have done, and what, as it seems to me, we ought to do, if anything. In eighteen hundred and seventy-six, eighty-three per cent. of the great grain staples that sought the Atlantic seaboard for the purpose of exportation and consumption, were carried by rail. Of the general internal commerce of the country, more than ninety per cent. was transported by the railroads; and Mr. Sterne says, in contrasting the railway interest with the shipping of the country, that the value of all the shipping, foreign and American, employed in moving our exports and imports, amounted to about two billion dollars, while the value of the railroad interest employed in the same carrying trade was something like six billion dollars. We exported in the year named one billion two hundred million dollars worth of articles, while our railroads carried or transported something like eighteen billion dollars worth of property.

Though the interest of California in the carrying trade of the United States is very small (for we have some two thousand eight hundred or three thousand miles of railway, representing a capital something like one hundred and fifty million dollars), yet these railroads, like those at the East, enjoy, notwithstanding all that has been said here upon the subject as to competition, a practical monopoly. Their management affects the people of this State not less seriously than that of other States. We have almost no other highways. We have no great rivers, no great canals. We never had any internal improvements, except poorly built roads, wandering over the mountains and through the plains, wherever convenience might seem to require. Everybody knows the railways were the pioneers of civilization in many parts of this State, and whatever roads there were in use before the era of the railway have been almost entirely obliterated from disuse. There is no such thing as a carrying trade but that performed by the railroad companies. We are entirely dependent upon them, just as they are dependent upon us. Now, sir, while in common with the mass of our citizens, I feel proud of the courage and enterprise which conceived and constructed these magnificent highways, I cannot but acknowledge that complaints are general and many against their management. I think I know, too, that very many of these complaints are founded in ignorance, in prejudice, and that much of the hostility exhibited has been engendered, not by the system of management, but by the personal bearing of some of the managers. Things that are done by or charged against the railways might have been done by other men without a word of complaint. It is a question of personal popularity, rather than anything else. But, notwithstanding all complaints, notwithstanding all wrongs, real or fancied, dilated on here, we cannot live without the railroad any more than the railroad can live without us. We cannot hurt it without hurting ourselves. It has accomplished a great work. It has invaded the wilderness and put to flight its repose and peace by the music of successful labor. It has ended the mission of the pioneer; it has left him no solitude to conquer. Fast and faster upon his retiring footsteps these massive columns of enterprise and capital have advanced, and made his most silent haunt their abiding place. The deserts no longer protect him; the mountains no longer give him shelter; plain and valley and mountain gorge are trembling with the hurrying commerce of Occident and Orient, and the white death that reposed on the brow of the Sierras has been transmuted into glowing life by the invisible touch of the gods of steam and electricity. Accessions of population, hitherto unknown sources of wealth, the great staples of agriculture, gold, silver, iron, and coal; cities, towns, seminaries, schools, the visible signs of progress and civilization, have sprung up in its path, and have followed wherever it has gone.

Now, in view of all these considerations, let us consider this subject fairly and candidly, and whatever is necessary, whatever is just and right for the people's protection, let us do; but whatever is not necessary, let us not do. I favor every necessary constitutional provision and all proper legislative restriction and control. Suppose that all this was a new question; that we had never known a railroad in this State; that we were here to consider the question of railroads to be built and operated in this State; that there were no complaints, no personal grievances, no signs of wrong of any kind, but had only to consider what was for the best interests of the people, what would we do? We would look at the experience of other countries and States where these railroads existed, and where the vast capital I have mentioned was invested. I have been somewhat surprised, as we have been progressing in this debate, to notice how impatient and restive some of us have been and are at the time taken up with the discussion of this question. We have been occupied two or three weeks; yet we are here seeking not only to make a general constitutional provision, but to engraft upon the Constitution—what one of my colleagues from San Francisco, Judge Hager, said he was in favor of doing—a full and complete code of laws, that should make the Constitution, if necessary, as long and detailed as the Codes of the State. Why, sir, hundreds of volumes have been written upon this subject. Systems of laws have been adopted. One system after another has been changed, modified, and altered to suit the varying complexion of the times and the exigencies of occasions. No one will undertake to say, when he considers the literature of the railroad and sees how much anxious thought has been bestowed on these questions, how very difficult it has been to deal with all these perplexing problems, that two weeks, or three weeks, is too long a period to spend in considering questions of such magnitude, when the results of our deliberations must enter into the organic law of the State, and are to be fixed, immutable, inflexible, never to be modified or altered, no matter what changes in society, in capital, or the judgments of men may be.

The English Parliament began very early to deal with railways. As early as eighteen hundred and thirty-four they commenced to consider them, and the history of the English legislation on that subject shows how futile, useless, and vicious an absolutely unchangeable system for the direction and control of this class of corporations would be. The present condition of the laws in England, which has been alluded to, but not very thoroughly examined, is the result of long experience, and has been reached after very many changes. As early as eighteen hundred and thirty-nine, a select committee on railways, of the House of Commons, expressed a strong opinion—and that was the earliest intimation that I know of reference to these Boards of Commissioners—expressed a strong opinion that a Board would be required to superintend railways for the purpose of protecting the weak against the strong, and of counteracting the evils incident to monopoly. But there was no attempt made at that time to provide that any such Board should interfere with railway legislation. Again, in eighteen hundred and forty-one, another committee was appointed by the Commons, to consider whether it was advisable for the public safety to vest a discretionary power of issuing regulations for the prevention of accidents upon railways in the Board of Trade, and if so, under what conditions and limitations. This committee, by its report, negatived this proposition, and recommended that the Board of Trade should exercise their supervision over railways, in the way of suggestion, rather than by positive regulation. In February, eighteen hundred and forty-four, a select committee of the House of Commons was appointed, which committee made six reports in six months. Many of the powers exercised by the Board of Trade take their origin from the suggestions and conclusions of these reports. It is not without interest to note that this committee, like many others, entered upon their labors with a strong prepossession against any general interference by the Government in the management and working of railways, and that they had seen no reason to change their views. But with regard to railway legislation, they were convinced that it was alike clear from reason and from experience that should thenceforth be subjected to an habitual and effective supervision on the part of the Government. They also recommended that an efficient supervising power should be constituted on the part of the public, to assist the judgment of the houses of legislation, and that general principles should be laid down to guide its proceedings, and finally they recommended that railway bills should be submitted to the Board of Trade previously to their coming into Parliament.

It will be noticed that all these powers were intended to be advisory merely; to aid by the elucidation of facts, by the testimony of witnesses competent by knowledge, habit, and opportunity, and officially responsible, and to make recommendations. For these purposes Parliament adopted various standing orders to enable the Board of Trade to exercise supervision over projected railways, and the Board of Trade acted under them. In eighteen hundred and forty-six the powers vested in the Board of Trade were transferred to a railroad Commission, called Commissioners of Railways, and that Commission continued to act until eighteen hundred and fifty-one, when it was set aside, owing to its inefficiency, and the powers it had exercised were returned to the Board of Trade. In eighteen hundred and fifty-three, a select committee of the House of Commons, to whom this subject was referred, said:

"In a country so rapidly advancing in prosperity as England, and in respect of a system so new, and where so much is still a matter of progress and experience in this system of railway communication, and where such great interests are involved, and so much ability and enterprise are constantly at work, it is futile to lay down general rules in words, unless provision be made for the steady application of those rules to the varying circumstances which from time to time arise. Hence all the most intelligent witnesses whom your committee have examined have pointed to some tribunal which might be invested by Parliament with so high a degree of authority as to give weight and stability to its decisions, and thus, by creating in the public mind a more certain anticipation of the result of parliamentary conflict, be made eminently conducive to public good."

And they considered, then, that such a tribunal could not be erected altogether outside of Parliament. And why? Why, from general considerations of representative government. But to these Railway Commissioners very great powers were intrusted; greater powers almost than those which have been outlined and indicated in the proposed amendment to the Constitution. They had authority over every projected railway scheme; they had authority over every railway that proposed to connect with any other, as to the general management and the moving of freight.

They had authority over the gauge of the road; they had the power of inspection before it was open for the public use; and no railroad could be operated except the Board of Trade had previously approved of the road, its system and management, its track, superstructure, bridges, and rolling stock, and found all ample and sufficient to supply the wants of the public in the region where it was proposed to run it. They had the superintendence of railroads after they were built. They controlled connecting lines, or separate portions of one continuous line of railway, and the orders of this Board of Railway Commissioners controlled the whole railway system. They controlled the junctions, crossings, the speed of trains, the power to condemn lands, and, more extraordinary than all, no railroad corporation could adopt by-laws for the management of its business, in respect to passengers and freights, except they were examined and supervised by the Board of Trade, and whatever was done in that respect was subject to the supervision of the Board, and they had the power not merely to approve or reject, but to direct the adoption of such by-laws for the regulation of traffic as seemed to them in the interest of the people. The Board also had the power to direct the Attorney-General to proceed against the companies for any violation of their charters, or for failure to comply with any by-laws or regulations. They also had power to require returns of traffic, and the publication of the rates of freights and fares. The companies were compelled to report to the Commissioners of all accidents and the reasons for them. And they also had the power to regulate the construction of cars, to regulate the running time of cheap trains for the use of the laboring classes in and out of London and the great commercial centers; and also the fares upon them. No corporation in England could make a scheme for freights and fares by pooling with any other railroad lines, or steamships, except under the authority and with the consent of the Board of Trade. The constitutional provisions as proposed here, as matter of detail, do not approach the severity or the extent of power conferred by Parliament upon the Board of Trade, nor upon the present Railway Commissioners. I care not how honest a man may be, he must have other qualifications than honesty to fit him for such duties as these. To put a man in command of a steamship who comes from Iowa, where salt water is worth five dollars a quart, simply because he is good and honest, would be an absurdity. To take a man unfitted for and untrained in the legal profession, for instance, and turn him loose in an intricate action at law, would be ridiculous. To take a man unskilled in the medical profession and allow him to practice the deviltries of the healing art upon a suffering public, or turn him loose to make a plan of salvation and build up a system of theology to suit himself, would be a crime.

Now, as political Conventions are managed, how are you ever going to get the best men for such a Commission as exists in England or is proposed here? The ordinary duties of executive or ministerial officers move in right lines. Their course is fixed and steady, and any intelligent citizen can make a fair Governor, or Controller, or Secretary of State, for he enters upon an office where the machinery is already at work; he is but the tender to the government machine. An elective Commission has, so far as I know, never been heard of. In the laws I have examined, the Railroad Commissions have always been appointed, and always with reference to their special qualifications for the peculiar and responsible work imposed on them. In the case of the English Commissioners (I read now from the Act of eighteen hundred and seventy-three, where the Railway Commission superseded the Board of Trade), it is provided, "for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act of eighteen hundred and fifty-four, and of this Act, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, at any time after the passing of this Act, by warrant under the royal sign manual, to appoint not more than three Commissioners, of whom one shall be of experience in the law and one of experience in railway business, and not more than two Assistant Commissioners, and upon the occurrence of any vacancy in the office of any such Commissioners or Assistant Commissioners, from time to time, in like manner, to appoint some fit person to fill the vacancy. It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, if he think fit, to remove for inability or misbehavior, any Commissioners appointed in pursuance of this Act." Look at the Railroad Commission of Massachusetts. I read from the Acts of Resolves of the State of Massachusetts, for eighteen hundred and seventy-four, chapter three hundred and seventy-two, page three hundred and forty-nine, section six: "Section 6. There shall be a Board of Railroad Commissioners, consisting of three competent persons. The Governor, with the advice and consent of the Council, shall, before the first day of July in each year, appoint a Commissioner, to continue in office for the term of three years from said day; and if a vacancy happens, by resignation or otherwise, he shall in the same manner appoint a Commissioner for the residue of the term, and may in the same manner remove any Commissioner." Such a Board of Railway Commissioners has been in operation in Massachusetts ever since eighteen hundred and seventy-four, but in every subsequent year there have been enlargements and modifications of the powers conferred upon them, showing all the while that it is not safe to undertake at any time to adopt a system which shall pretend to be in itself complete, like that suggested by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell. Perhaps he thought from our two or three weeks' railroading in this committee, we were competent to include in one single section of the Constitution of this State the ultimate reach and finish of all the labors of old legislative committees and Commissioners on the face of the globe. This descending into details seems to me to be most unwise, or if we must go into details we have by no means comprehended all that are essential to railroad control. If we have part, why not have all? But to return to the question of the Commission.

Take the case of Connecticut. There is a railway Commission there concerning which it is provided that "there shall be appointed by the Governor three Railroad Commissioners, who shall constitute the Board of Railroad Commissioners, each of whom shall hold his office for three years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified; and the term of one of said Commissioners shall expire each year." Now, here is a valuable suggestion. If we are to have a Board as provided for in this section, whether elective or to be appointed, it seems it is to be in solido for the term of four years, to come in and go out together, leaving the office and all of its business for a new Board. This seems to me to be a mistake. It should be arranged on some scaling plan, so that at all times at least two competent skilled Commissioners shall remain in office, and that when a new incumbent displaces an old one, he shall have the benefit of the experience and judgment of some who have preceded him; that the whole Commission shall not vanish in the twinkling of an eye, at the trump of some Gabriel of a political Convention. The Act from which I read provides that the term of one of said Commissioners shall expire each year. The Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall annually appoint one Railroad Commissioner, and may, at any time, remove a Commissioner for cause. Now, the report of our committee makes no sort of provision for the removal of the Commissioners for any cause. They may be corrupt through and through. The intimation given by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, in his speech the other day, was that if this Commission was made elective, the railroad company would go down into the southern part of the State and turn off Chinamen and put on four or five thousand others—I do not know who, but I am afraid he meant Irishmen—and make them vote in the company's interest, and elect at least one Commissioner. I think he expressed a truth. If you maintain this Commission in its present shape, it offers the highest kind of temptation to the corporations to protect themselves by regulating the Commission before the Commission gets a chance to regulate them. Can you blame them if they do?

I agree that it is perhaps not so easy to corrupt three Commissioners as it is to influence a Legislature, and I am sure that the concentration of responsibility, the publicity of their proceedings under such systems as have been adopted in the other States, would make them reasonably honest. But it is one of the vices of this twentieth section that it contains no power of removal. The Commissioners are elected and take their seats for four years. They are responsible to nobody. They are themselves witnesses, judges, juries, and executioners. It is the most extraordinary plan, I think, that was ever presented for the consideration of a deliberative body. It has just undergone some sensible modifications, and will do as it stands, provided we shall put in the safety-valve that other States have engrafted in their Commission laws. This will be approved by the calm judgment of every man; certainly it should be. The Commissioners should be appointed by the Governor of the State, with reference to their qualifications for their duties, with reference to their fitness and knowledge of the subject with which they deal; that they should not be elected and go out of office together, but should be so appointed that one would go out of office at a time, and there would always be two of the Commissioners old in the harness, understanding the operations of the Commission, and that we shall not be left every four years to a series of experiments started and carried on by men who have to travel over the same ground that their predecessors have traversed, before they are fit to act upon a subject so important. That is the case with the Commission in Connecticut. I read now from Wilcox's Railroad Laws of Ohio, as to the Railroad Commission of eighteen hundred and seventy-four, under which the railroad law of that State is being administered:

"There shall be appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, within fifteen days after the passage of this Act, a person to be styled a Commissioner of Railroads and Telegraph, who shall hold his office for the period of two years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified. The person who is so appointed shall be an elector of this State and shall have no official connection with any railroad, nor during the term of his office own or be interested in the stock, bonds, or other property, or in the employ of any railroad. In case of vacancy by death, resignation, removal from the State, or otherwise, the Governor shall fill the vacancy, and report the name of such appointee to the Senate, if in session, and if not, within ten days after the commencement of the next session, who, by the advice and consent of the Senate, shall hold his office for the full term of two years, as hereinbefore provided, from the day of his appointment; provided, that if the Governor shall, at any time, become satisfied that the Commissioner is inefficient or derelict in the discharge of the duties of his office, or in any way uses the advantage of his position for personal ends, to the disadvantage of the public interest, he is hereby authorized and required, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, if it be in session, to remove the said Commissioner from office; and if the Senate be not in session, to suspend him from the discharge of the duties of said office, temporarily filling the vacancy, as provided for in this section, and reporting the facts to the Senate when in session."

Now, sir, in view of such lights as these—and I have only referred to these three of the several States that now have a Railroad Commission—why should we not have Commissioners appointed, and so appointed that there should be no break in their administration, just as the Senate of the United States is organized, one third going out every odd year, so that all the time in that body there are two thirds of it who understand and are able to carry on its affairs and manage the interests of the nation? I consider that the men who are to have control of these railroads, as is proposed here, should be men of skill and education, not only honest, but as capable to perform their duties as the utmost discretion can select from the community. They need high intellectual qualifications, as well as all the political and personal integrity that can be bound up in one human being. Yet we propose to take this Commission and throw it as a prize into the political arena, to be fought over and traded for, and also make it an object for the railway companies to go into political Conventions and control the Commission at the expense of every other consideration. It ought not to be done. One of the gravest charges made against the railway company was made by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, in connection with his citation of the remark of Jay Gould. He says that Mr. Gould attended the meeting of a legislative committee in the State of New York, and in the course of his testimony stated that whenever he was in a district that was Democratic, he was a Democrat; whenever he was in a district that was Republican, he was a Republican; but that he was for Erie all the time; that he kept an account in his books called the "India rubber account," which represented money paid for influencing legislation. If the railroad companies are compelled to go into the business of controlling the election of Commissioners, they must spend money. They keep books of account. One of the things contemplated by this section is that the Commission will require publicity in railroad accounts. They will not be able to have any "India rubber" fund, but will be compelled to keep their books in such a way as the Commissioners prescribe, to the end that the Commissioners will know where every dollar goes. It may be necessary to spend twenty thousand dollars to insure the election of their candidate. Is he who has been elected by this means to be the one to expose it? Certainly not. He is bound to keep the secret. It is asking too much of any man, if he was put up and nominated by the railway corporation, that he will expose the very means by which he has ridden into power. He should be far removed from any possible influence from any quarter, and to secure his independence and defend his integrity we should, it seems to me, adopt the plan in vogue in England and the States I have referred to. They should be appointed by the Governor, solely with reference to their qualifications and honesty, and without regard to their politics. They should be dependent for office and for continuance in it upon no power except that of the Governor and Senate. No Governor would sit silent in his chair and see the duties expected to be performed by a man he has appointed left undone, without placing his hand upon him and making an official end of him.

Sir, I am opposed, not to the powers conferred upon the Commission at all, because I think they must be conceded, but I am opposed to this elective Commission. I am opposed to it because it inducts all the three Commissioners into office at one time, and removes them all from it at one time. I am opposed to it because it makes no provision for their removal if found incompetent or corrupt, or guilty of neglect of duty, and requires no bonds or security for the faithful performance of duties. It struck me as extraordinary that when we require the Directors of every incorporated company to become a guaranty for the honesty of the porter that sweeps out the office, or the clerk who stands at the desk, that here, and here only, were three men to be put in power and vested with an absolute authority, the like of which never existed, without a bond of any kind, without the power to remove them being lodged anywhere—created railroad monarchs for the period of four years—upon whose heads is poured some kind of sacred oil manufactured by this body, that, like that shed upon the heads of kings, makes their right to reign indefeasible. Do you think that is right? Are the people of this State going to tolerate any such thing as that? In my opinion it is the most foolhardy scheme that was ever submitted to scrutiny or for which men were ever asked to vote. Let us have Commissioners if you will; let us give them all necessary powers, but let them be appointed and under some bonds, pecuniary or moral, for good behavior. Provide some security upon which the people can depend, and let us not throw this triune kingship into the political arena, to become the prize of the corrupt politicians, or a weapon for the use of the demagogue, in some senseless crusade against capital, which, if successful, will wound what it pretends to protect. There is another peculiarity about this section. It entirely eliminates the corporations from the control of the Legislature. In a preceding section it is declared that "all railroads and transportation companies shall be common carriers, and subject to legislative control." But in section twenty we say that the Legislature shall have nothing to do with their control, and that all power shall be vested in a Commission to be elected by the people. It is confusion worse confounded. Let us hope that the Committee on Revision, or some other committee, will some time straighten the thing out. I understand the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, to deny that there was dissatisfaction with the railroad companies. What the reasons for the feeling are I do not fully understand, or perhaps appreciate, but I know that there is a general and deep-seated dissatisfaction with their management. I think it grows out of small and petty things; but for all that it exists, and I know when my colleague from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, one day referred to a defeated candidate for delegate at large on the Workingmen's ticket, he turned and said, "He ran as well as you did." I know very well what was the matter in that election.

It was not that the people had so much more confidence in the successful local delegates from San Francisco than they had in gentlemen who had been residents and citizens of that city for many years, and some of whom, at least, were identified with its best history, but it was because there was a general impression among the people, created by the press, that this non-partisan movement was a scheme gotten up and engineered by the railroad companies and other corporations, and that we were to be sent here with the collar of the corporations about our necks, to do their bidding. And so the people looked about to see what they should do. They could not beat us with the Democratic ticket; they knew they could not beat us with the Republican ticket, because the combination was too strong; so many a good Democrat and many a good Republican down there, who wanted to see the so-called corporation agents defeated, walked up to the polls and voted the Workingmen's ticket. They didn't love the Workingmen as much as they feared us. That was what was the matter. We propose to remove that objection before we run again. [Laughter.] The non-partisans are, and will be, right upon this record. We shall vote in favor of the legislative control of all corporations, declaring in the Constitution that that power shall be guaranteed in this Constitution—if it be adopted—for all time to come. This was the platform upon which we went to the people of San Francisco, but somehow we could not make them believe it. But in securing this popular right, we should take heed of the experience of other States who have dealt with this subject, and which have had a deeper interest in it than we can possibly have, for they have suffered more. If we have a particle of sense, and that of the commonest kind, we will not undertake to beget these elective, irresponsible, disqualified, political railroad triplets, crowned for four years, born together and predestined to die together. Give us a Commission to be appointed by the Governor, with such terms of office that there shall be always one or more Commissioners of experience in office with power in the Executive of removal; with powers ample to enable them to investigate the affairs of the corporations; to compel the disclosure of contracts and dealings with all persons and corporations; to ascertain what delinquencies, discriminations, and unjust exactions, if any, are made; to hear complaints, report the same to the Legislature with such remedial measures as they may deem proper, and by all legal proceedings in Courts of law keep the corporations within the limits of their chartered rights, and the people will be satisfied. Make these experiments, and you will be apt to discover that our people will rather bear the ills they have than fly to others that they know not of.

SPEECH OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I am anxious to say a few words upon this question, simply as a farmer. It seems, sir, like an act of temerity on my part to attempt to speak upon the question after hearing the eloquent address of the gentleman from San Francisco, Col. Barnes, who has just taken his seat. I cannot speak as he speaks, but I will try to make myself understood, while I give you the views of the farmers of my district, in my own plain way, on this subject. Now, sir, in the first place let me say that it has been argued that it is only interesting to farmers; it has been so intimated on this floor; and one of the daily papers of this city takes up the absurd idea, and says: "The Workingmen should not bother themselves about this railroad matter, it is interesting only to farmers, and they can take care of themselves; the Workingmen should attend to the land matter, and to the great taxation question; we say look out for yourselves, and let the farmers do the same." What an absurdity! Mr. Chairman, people who talk in this way must think that they are addressing fools, and their language becomes insulting to the Workingmen. I would like to ask what class, what profession or calling in life would or could succeed if the farmers fail to meet with success? Could the day laborer succeed? Could the plow makers succeed? Could the wagon makers succeed? Could the reaper and thrashing machine makers succeed? Could any mechanic succeed? Could the storekeeper succeed? I would ask, sir, what class or calling could succeed if the farmers are crushed down? Not one, and you all here in this Convention know it. Then why such silly talk here on this floor, and in newspapers pretending to address words of sense to an intelligent community?

That my fellow delegates may understand that I have the right to talk for the farmers of my district, I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, that for twenty-five years I have lived and worked on the same farm, and have raised and educated a large family there, and have in all that time never made a dollar but what I made in the track of the plow and the reaper. The farmers are overcharged by the railroads; in fact, we are kept poor by these enormous charges, and that is the reason we ask of this Convention to place our relations with them in a more satisfactory position. To illustrate, I will give you what it costs to remove the crop of an acre of land of our principal productions from our valley to San Francisco, a distance of one hundred miles by railroad. One acre of wheat, three dollars and fifty cents; one acre of barley, seven dollars; one acre of potatoes, seventeen dollars and fifty cents; one acre of beets, thirty-five dollars; in all sixty-three dollars. Now, sir, this same freighting, for the same distance, is done in the State of New York for nine dollars. This certainly is a wonderful difference, and, in my opinion, the railroad company are robbing the farmers by exacting such enormous charges. Gentlemen on the other side say: "Oh! you have the right to correct all this, but you had better not exert that right, it will only kick up a fuss with the railroad people and do you no good." I admit the correctness of this under the present system of dealing with railroads, but we want a change, and we must have it. The Supreme Court of the United States has said to the people of California, "You own the right to say what these railroads shall charge and what they shall not charge; the railroad company owns the right to receive and pocket every dollar that is charged and paid for freights and fares." We do not dispute this right of the railroad people, why do they dispute our rights?—the right to say what they shall charge, and that is all we ask.

Mr. Stanford wrote a letter intended for this Convention and laid on all our desks, that our attention might be drawn to it. In that letter he claims that it is confiscation to create this Commission to regulate fares and freights. Now, my friends, I will ask you to consider what I will draw your attention to to illustrate the absurdity of this claim of Mr. Stanford. Some sixteen years ago there was no way to get out of our valley of the Pajaro to go to San Francisco but by the way of San Juan, in Monterey County, which was a circuit of twenty-five miles. To avoid this route, we got together at Watsonville and subscribed about eight thousand dollars, and with this money graded a road across the Santa Cruz Mountains which was to be kept open as a toll road. We received no aid from either Santa Cruz or Santa Clara Counties, the money that built it and purchased the right of way was our own private money, yet did we attempt to fix our own rate of tolls as we saw fit? No, sir; we did nothing of the sort, for the law of our State would not allow us to do so; when the road was finished we sent one of our party to the Board of Supervisors of our county and got from them our schedule of tolls; and that was not all: we sent that schedule of tolls to the Board of Supervisors of Santa Clara County, as the road lay partly in both counties, and got their consent to the schedule allowed us by the Board of Supervisors of Santa Cruz County. That done, we posted on the gate the rate of tolls we were allowed to charge, and collected in accordance therewith. When the road afterwards got into bad repair, the proper authorities forbid us to collect tolls until we had put it into good traveling condition. Was this confiscation, Mr. President? No, sir, it was nothing of the sort, and yet it is a much stronger case than the one Mr. Stanford makes out in his letter on confiscation; for the money that built our road was all our own, while the money that built his railroad almost all came from grants and donations made by the State and National Government.

Now, the question before us is, will we do what we have a right to do—regulate the fares and freights to be charged by railroads? We cannot leave it to the railroad company itself. That would be absurd. Shall we leave it to the Legislature, or shall we establish this Commission, to take charge of the whole matter? The gentleman who has just sat down argued on both sides of the question in many respects. He spoke in favor of a Commission, but was undecided in his language, and wanted the Commissioners appointed by the Governor. What does that mean? It means just this: it gives the railroad people three chances to control the Commission instead of the one chance they would have if the Commissioners were elected by the people, as we propose. Under his plan, they would have their first chance in a party convention to control the nomination of Governor; if they failed in that, they would fall back on their second chance, to control the State Senate—a body they have never failed to control in the last twelve years—and thus prevent the confirmation of any Commissioners, nominated by the Governor, objectionable to them; if they do fail in the Senate, which is not at all likely, judging from the past, they have their third chance with the Commissioners themselves. Now, on our side of the question, we propose a plan by which the railroad people will have but one chance to control the Commission, and that a very slim one. We propose to elect the Commissioners by single districts. On the same day, we say to the people, "choose your men, and be sure who you choose, for it is your own property they will have charge of. As you hold your ballot in your hand, look your man in the eye, as it were, think of his record in all that is past of his life, and if you think the look he gives you back is frank and honest, and the record of his life such as you approve, then drop your ballot in the box, and not otherwise. If you forget to do this, and elect a thief, it is your own fault, and you will have no one but yourselves to blame when you suffer for your blunder."

But even then we have the consolation of knowing that we are no worse off than we are now, and besides, we gain in one respect immensely. We have saved the Legislature, the fountain from which all our laws flow, from demoralization disgusting to contemplate. It is a fact, a fact to be deplored most bitterly, that the whole people of the State have become almost unanimous in the belief that the Legislature is hopelessly corrupt and vicious. Why is this? It is, Mr. Chairman, in my belief, because of this railroad question being brought under consideration at every session, either by honest men seeking relief for the people from the grasping cupidity of this great corporation, or by dishonest men seeking to levy blackmail on that corporation. In either case the effect is the same on the morality of the Legislature. As the session opens the railroad is here with a few devoted members in its interests in each house. The managers of the railroad fight soon find out who have thieving schemes for the Legislature, and who have honest measures to put through. To the managers of the thieving scheme they say, "If you help us, we will help you," and that bargain is soon made. To the managers of the unobjectionable measures they say, "If you do not help us we will see that your measure is defeated, let come what will," and by and by they too will fall into line on one excuse or another. Thus the pool is made and a whole shoal of thieving laws go through together, to swindle the people of the State in one way or other. In this way the railroad controls the Legislature without using much gold, but gold they will use when other means fail. Is not this a terrible thing to think of, my friends, that all our laws spring from such a vicious, corrupt pool, yet these are facts that everybody is aware of. Gentlemen have stood up here and talked about our Legislature very mildly and politely. In fact they have avoided saying anything that was uncomplimentary.

Our respected Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, Mr. Estee, disclaimed any wish to make charges against our Legislature, but carried us all the way to New York to comment on the Legislature of that State, and showed us its rottenness and corruption, caused by the railroad question. Then he took us to Pennsylvania and other States, illustrating the same fact in every instance, but, as I said, he politely avoided speaking of our California Legislature. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not see any good reason for this forbearance, and I shall not practice it. I know there were many good men in the last Legislature of our State; men who could not be purchased or swerved from duty by any power on earth. But it so happened that there were forty-four men out of the eighty, here on this floor last Winter, who were always ready to jump on board the railroad car when the whistle blew, and in the Senate the majority was much larger who were pliant tools of the railroad. Now, this is a thing that every one knows; at least if it is not true, the papers of the State have been lying terribly about the character of the Legislature, for the press was nearly unanimous in its denunciation of its venality and corruption. I have collected several articles from different newspapers in this State to show you how universal this belief was in all parts of the country, but not wishing to occupy the time of the committee too much, I will only read you one, which I take from the Daily Examiner of March first, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight. The last Legislature was, I believe, about two thirds Democratic in each house. No one will, therefore, dispute the authority of the Examiner when speaking of a Democratic Legislature, for it is the acknowledged leading organ of that party:

"In Miss Charlotte Bronte's admirable novel of Villette, she makes her heroine listen to some improper suggestions, offered by a companion, for the purpose of giving the latter an opportunity of showing herself in her true colors. The serpent once seen, the gifted authoress remarks, it was easy enough to avoid its slimy trail thereafter. Recent developments in our State Legislature prompt a reference to this observation, made by Miss Bronte.

"The railroad discussion in the Senate and Assembly caused many a serpent to leave its concealment and wriggle forth into daylight. It was not a pleasant sight. It was as disgusting to the spectators as it must have been painful to the reptiles themselves. But there they were, shining in metallic-appearing scales, unfolding coil after coil, creeping on the ground, while the potent magician and snake-charmer, the great railroad corporation, piped the music, to the measures of which their slimy bodies undulated in grewsome harmony. It was a remarkable sight to see the fascination which compelled the creatures to crawl on their bellies, groveling in the dust and filth at the feet of their stern, pitiless master. It was astonishing to see the inexplicable power of the one, and the disgraceful, servile obedience of the other. But the wonder grew, and was changed into horror and indignation, when the hard task-master forced the crawling things to raise their heads and hiss and strike with their venomous fangs at the very hands which had, through mistaken pity and trustfulness, reared, supported, and protected the very creatures who essayed to reward their benefactors with insult and the blackest and most perfidious treachery. Were not the occasions so momentous, the needs of the public so pressing, it would almost be amusing to hear each reptile utter its characteristic sibilation. One said this and another wanted that. One had this excuse and his fellow another. But the whole performance was for the same object, and was actuated by the same purpose, and that was to delay, defeat, and defraud the people of their rights, and to secure, and render still more onerous, the burden imposed by a monster monopoly, which is as dangerous to the civil liberties as it is disastrous to the material interests of the people.

"Of course the men who do these things will put on airs and affect the manner of virtuous indignation. They will say that 'we acted according to our best judgment.' That 'what we did we believed for the interests of the people.' That 'it is not just to accuse them with being actuated with mercenary motives, without proof,' etc. There will be bushels and bushels voided of such stuff as this. But they can spare themselves the trouble, and not add insult to injury. The motives which actuate them and their purpose are well known.

"It is a legal presumption that what a man actually does, that it is his intention to do. When the members of the present Legislature inflict a positive and enormous injury upon the interests of the people, which they have sworn to protect; when they desert their colors, and with traitorous purpose march over to the enemy and array themselves beneath its banners, and do battle in its behalf, they will be held responsible for their acts to the fullest extent. They knew, well knew, what they were doing, its consequences and effects. They knew, and now know, that they deliberately betrayed their constituents; that they refused to be governed by their oaths; that they attempted to deliver over the people bound hand and foot to a merciless and remorseless corporation, which, in the fourteen or fifteen years of its existence, has never performed one of the obligations it undertook; which has never obeyed any law which did not further its interests; which knows neither honesty, good faith, nor gratitude for the countless favors it has received; which, at this moment, before the present Legislature, is seeking to acquire other people's property without rendering a just, or any equivalent; in short, a corporation which has become a public enemy, the aggressions of which must be restrained, or else it will soon as completely rule this coast as ever did the Czar control the Muscovites.

"Yet how blind are the poor, wretched tools who do the bidding of this giant corporation in the Legislature. Their present acts in favor of their masters are really political suicide. They will drop from sight and notice directly they have fulfilled their base purpose. They appear and fret and fume their little hour upon the stage. After they have done their disgraceful spiriting they disappear like the noisome vapors that hover over malarial marshes when the soil is reclaimed and the wholesome light and air have done their health-giving work. They will never be remembered, save as when one reads of the servile jurymen who, awed by the threats or won by the cajolery of the infamous Jeffreys, brought in verdicts whereby innocent men and women, even children, were slain. They are not known by name, but under the generic title of the corrupt servitors of power, who were as dead to the calls of humanity as they were to the dictates of honor and patriotism and the sanctity of their oaths. Such will be the fate of these railroad legislative attorneys. They will sink into—for them welcome—limbo, the gloomful, murky infamy of which will shelter their individualities. But as a body, they will, for all time, be held up to reproach as the legislators who forsook the cause of the people and espoused that of the common enemy. Why they did this—whether it was for money, for place, or because of their ignorance, or their folly—it matters not. In any case they are equally criminal, and should, and will, meet with a like punishment. They will be gibbeted for all time as the railroad hirelings who, under false pretenses, entered the Legislature for the purpose of betraying their constituents. How do they like that reputation? Do they think they have received a quid pro quo which will compensate them for bequeathing such a heritage to their children? May be they think so; but how pitiable is their mistake, and how terrible will be their punishment."

Mr. Chairman, the serpent once seen, it is easy enough to avoid its slimy trail, and I say let us be sure to do so. The comments on the Act of the Legislature that I have just read are a fair specimen of those of the press of the whole State, yet, sir, we are asked to trust this question of fares and freights to that body that has fooled us so often.

I object to doing so for these reasons: The first is that it is practically impossible for the Legislature to fix a schedule of fares and freights that would be just even to the people or the railroad company, if they were ever so honest in their endeavors to do so. Secondly, if it was practicable they would not do it; and, lastly, because thrusting this question on the Legislature demoralizes that body to a degree that makes it contemptible in the view of the whole people, and makes respect for its action on any question impossible. Gentlemen talk of the immense power we propose to give the Commission; this, in my mind, is all humbug. The power we give them is not half as much as we confer on other departments of the government. Think of the power we give the Judges of the Supreme Court, and, I may say, the District Courts. Why, we place everything in their hands, life as well as property, and yet we are not afraid to trust them, and our trust has never been abused, so far as any man in the State knows or believes. Colonel Barnes says we cannot trust the people to elect the Commissioners—that they must be appointed by the Governor, yet he forgets to tell us that the Governor is to be elected by the people; and that generally he plays into the hands of the railroad people to secure his election, and after his election for the purpose of going to the United States Senate.

I heard a railroad man, yesterday, say openly, at a dining table, that no man could be Governor of California without the consent of the railroad corporation; he boasted that it elected Haight and defeated Haight; that it elected Irwin and would be even with him if he went against their interests. Why then is it so safe to leave the appointments of Commissioners to the Governor? I will ask you to recollect, Mr. Chairman, that there were three Commissioners appointed by Governor Irwin under the provisions of an Act passed three years ago, and I will say that the people of the State believe these men were honest, and that they did their very best to do their duty so far as the milk and water provisions of that law would enable them to do. They came before the last Legislature with three bills to regulate fares and freights of railroads, recommending their passage. What was the fate of those bills? Why, sir, every clause in each of the three proposed laws that favored in any way the railroad corporation, were formulated into one bill, and that bill was passed by the Legislature, and is well known as the Hart bill; and I say that this Hart bill is an insult to the people of California. Yes, sir, I say it is a downright insult to the intelligence of our people; an insult thrown in the face of every citizen of the State, yet we are asked by gentlemen on this floor, to trust the Legislature again, with this, to us, vitally important question, notwithstanding the infamous job I have just referred to. That bill provided for the appointment of one Commissioner instead of the three it legislated out of office.

Who appointed that Commissioner? The Governor appointed him. Did he select one of the three men who had proved themselves honest and faithful to the people? Oh, no! he did nothing of the sort. On the last day and night of the session of the Legislature there were some maneuvers in regard to that appointment; a sort of sleight of hand trick played about this building that resulted in all three of the honest and tried Commissioners being thrown overboard, for no other reason that the people could see but that they were honest and true to the trust confided in them; yet Col. Barnes insists that the appointment of the Commissioners would be safe in the hands of the Governor. Yes, Mr. Chairman, he is the man to select the Commissioners, because if he makes a mistake, as Governor Irwin evidently did, and appoints honest men, he can remove them and disregard them as Governor Irwin did in this case. I do not wish to be understood as saying anything against the character of the gentleman the Governor appointed in this case; he may be all that his friends claim him to be, and I suppose he is honest and honorable, but this is a fact of no consequence to the people, for under the Hart bill he has no power worth talking of. Pretty much all he has to do is to gather railroad statistics. There are seven or eight pages of this Act taken up with high sounding statistics; the Commissioner is required to gather all the veriest humbug that ever was written or strung together. To show you this I would read for you four or five pages of this Act, but it would only weary and disgust you. If these statistics were of any use, the Secretary of State could have got them and placed them on file in his office, without a dollar of cost to the people, if directed to do so by a resolution of the Legislature; but no, they must have a Commissioner at four thousand dollars per annum, a clerk at two thousand four hundred dollars per annum, and contingent expenses of about two thousand dollars more, all to gather statistics of absolutely no use whatever to the people of this State; yet this is the work of the immaculate Legislature we are asked to trust.

Now, Mr. Chairman, why should we not trust the people to elect these Commissioners? Do we not trust them to elect every other officer of the government, including all our Judges in this case? The people, as I have said before, will realize the fact that they vote for their own pockets when they vote for an honest man; they will look to the past record of the man whom they vote for, and if dishonest politicians or the railroad monopoly get hold of the nominating conventions it will be of no use, for no corrupt scallawag can ever command votes for this important place. It will be just as it is with Judges. Some sixteen years ago, or more, maybe, a District Judge had to be elected in our district. The Judge we then had was Sam. Bell McKee. He was a Democrat in politics. The Republican party were in a majority in that district of at least three thousand five hundred votes. A Republican, a very honorable gentleman I believe, was nominated by that party, was nominated to run for the Judgeship against McKee. The result was that McKee was elected by a majority of one thousand votes; and why? Because the people knew that McKee was an upright Judge. This same disregard of party has been manifested in that district three or four times, and I say it shows conclusively that the people will throw political nominations overboard when their own material interests demand it.

Col. Barnes points to England, and says their Railroad Commissioners are appointed, and not elected by the people. Of course that is so; England has no written Constitution. Parliament is her whole Constitution, and Parliament directly or indirectly fills every office in the kingdom by direct appointment. That is no criterion for us. They do not trust the people directly with anything they can possibly avoid. Under our system the people are trusted with everything, and it is their own fault when they elect an unworthy officer. But as I said before, suppose the people are fooled into electing bad men, how much worse would we be off than we are now. Just reflect my friends on the enormous power in the hands of Leland Stanford. He can walk into his office, late in the evening, when every farmer in the whole country is asleep, and with one stroke of his pen turn every dollar the farmers have made by their work into his own pocket. What is to prevent him? Nothing. His act will be published as a necessary act of self-protection to the railroad corporation, and that is the end of it. In fact, I think there is no question but that the freights now charged are simply enormous, and I come to this conclusion by comparing them with the freights charged in the Eastern States. The railroad has not cheapened either fares or freights to us in the Pajaro Valley; on the contrary we sometimes had them cheaper before the railroad was built. Of course the facility of moving our freight and ourselves is much greater than before, and it is this fact that forces us to use the railroads. They prevent all competition by water, and besides they have a villainous system of storage at every depot that we are obliged to submit to, which is little less than downright robbery. I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that if Colonel Barnes and other gentlemen who speak as he does, were down with us for one Winter in our valley, and worked as the farmers there have to work, eat their breakfast by lamplight, and turn out in the cold, raw morning, with the mud half up to their knees, while the light was yet dim, work all day, and take the harness from their horses by the light of the lantern late in the evening, they would talk very differently about Leland Stanford's power to confiscate every dollar they had made to support their wives and children depending on them for clothes and bread.

MR. BARNES. When was it that you did that?

MR. WHITE. I did it many and many a morning, and many a night. I did it for years and years. I did it, and in that way supported a large family from childhood to manhood and womanhood. Yes, sir; by the hardest work ever done by farmer. I supported my family, and I am not complaining of it, but am proud of it, and I repeat that if Colonel Barnes had one such Winter's experience of farmer's work, and knew that Stanford had the power, with a dash of his pen, to take his earnings from him, he would not stop to quibble about the power given to these Commissioners; no, sir. He would go as far as we do and further in demanding protection against the more than monarchial power of Stanford.

Some say make the Commissioners give twenty thousand dollars bonds. I say, no! What would twenty thousand dollars be for such an offense? I say if these Commissioners sell out and betray us, let the people rise and crack their worthless necks on the first tree they can find; that is the bond I want. But, sir, I do not fear this great crime being committed, for depend on it, the people will be careful, and the single district system will prevent any combination that might result in electing bad men, and will all but insure a difference as to politics in the Commission, which will be a guard against the power of the Commission being used in favor of any one political party. The great trust imposed in these men will enable them, and serve to put them above temptation. No man elected to the position can be without a feeling of just pride that he has been so trusted, and it will be his glory to show that he deserved the trust. I believe that no money would tempt a man to barter away such an ambition. No! no! My friends, there is no danger, depend upon it. We will have an honorable and honest Commission then. Recollect that all three of the Commissioners must sell out to do any harm, for one honest Commissioner would inevitably expose the others; then if they were to sell out they would become sneaking slaves to the corporations, and would soon expose themselves as all sneaking thieves do, let them try to avoid it ever so much. The reason the railroad charges these enormous freights is that they are building new railroads down south through Arizona, Texas, and most likely into Mexico, which they could not do if they only charged us what would be fair and honorable for the work they do for us here. Now this we cannot and will not stand if we can help it, and we want to establish this Commission for the purpose of stopping it. We are not willing to put our necks in the yoke, or rather leave them any longer in the yoke to gratify Mr. Stanford's inordinate ambition in railroad building. No; we have had enough of that, and we want it stopped right here, or as soon as it is possible to organize this Commission.

But, Mr. Chairman, if this Commission plan, from any cause, should prove a failure, the Legislature can submit an amendment to the Constitution that will wipe it out if the people will agree with the Legislature; so what is the great risk about it after all? As to the objection of too great power, I am not going to say anything more on that point, for the power is only just what the Commission should have if we have a Commission at all. And I would make it even stronger if that were possible; and I am opposed to this idea of letting the Governor have anything to do with its making. But above all things I am opposed to leaving the question with the Legislature any longer, for I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that if it is left to the Legislature, that body will become, by and by, a body of sneaking thieves that no man of honor will be willing to take a seat among. It is impossible it should be otherwise. Then for Heaven's sake let us take action and guard and save our Legislature from this debasing influence. Let us do so for the sake of our children and our children's children more than for our own sake. To do it I see no earthly show but the establishment of this Commission. I will say here that I have nothing against those railroad people individually; no, not at all. I don't know one of them. I think that they are enterprising, fine fellows in their way, but they have no care for the good of the people, and we are sent here to look out for the people. We, the members of this Convention, do not pretend to be better than anybody else. We put on no airs about our ability or honesty, but we were sent here for a specific object, and that was to correct abuses that bear heavy on the people, and that a Constitutional Convention alone can correct, or remedy, or prevent in the future; and this railroad matter is one of them, and another is unjust taxation, and another is land monopoly, and the worst of all is the Chinese blight. All of these evils are destroying our material prosperity, and breaking up the small farmers and all those classes depending on them, and driving them by thousands and thousands into San Francisco to starve or do worse. They fill up that city and depopulate the country. Now we hope and trust and wish the gentlemen of the other side would take these facts into consideration, and stand by us while we try to find ways to correct this great misfortune to our State.

As to how my constituents feel on these questions, Mr. Wyatt, who represents Monterey, a part of my district, told us in his remarks, yesterday, very truly. Our people are almost unanimous, I may say, on all these subjects, and they sent us to express these views, and we are so doing to the best of our ability. The district I represent is about two hundred miles long, and I canvassed it from one end to the other before my election, and if I ever, through forgetfulness, left the stump or platform without speaking on the railroad question, or giving my views on the corporations, somebody would immediately call out, "You have not told us what you will do about the railroad corporations if you are elected." I now feel that I am responding to the wishes of my people in giving my hearty support to this plan of a Commission to regulate fares and freights, for although it may not be perfect, there is no other way to regulate fares and freights unless the State buys out the railroads, and that we are not prepared to do for the present. Many gentlemen on the other side, in discussing this question spoke with almost contempt for the opinion of the people on this subject. They say they intend to do what they themselves think right, no matter what the people think. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not of that way of thinking. I consider myself the exponent of the views of my constituents, and in all cases when I am satisfied that a majority of the people of my whole district wish me to go for a certain measure or change in the Constitution, I shall yield my own views in obedience to their demands, or resign my seat in this body. In this matter of regulating fares and freights, my own judgment, I am satisfied, is in exact accord with my people, and were I to falter in my action here to-day, I dare not go back to my district. Why, gentlemen, if I did I would have to sneak through my people like a guilty thing, for I would feel that I was recreant to the pledges that I had made them, and when I reached my home I would meet the mother of my children, who, thirty years ago pledged her troth to me in return for my vows of fidelity to her, who, while yet her bridal dress was laid not away, took my arm and faced the storms of Cape Horn to find a home in California, who stood by my side in all the vicissitudes of our California life with a faith that knew no doubt, and a courage that knew no faltering; who, when my steps might have wavered in the face of difficulties, whispered to me words of hope and courage that restored me to myself and brought me once more to the front to do a man's work in the battle of life. I say, sir, I would have to meet her there at my home, with her face for the first time averted from me, crimsoned with blushes, that I had proved myself false to my trust, and had cast a dark shadow on the pathway of my children, that no act of their own could ever dispel.

Mr. Chairman, I shall, I hope, never deserve such a reception. No, sir, I will, for my part, try to respond to the fair and just wishes of my constituents, and when I return to them, I will be met, I know, with a cordial greeting, and at my home with smiles; and I am not ashamed to tell you, my friends, that I would not forfeit or barter away the greeting of my people and those smiles at my home, for all the treasure that may be hid beneath the soil of our State. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said much more than I had any idea of saying when I arose, but my anxiety that this Convention should fully know the views and feelings of my constituents on this important subject, led me on. They demand protection, and look to you for it in this new Constitution, and if we do not get it at your hands, we will not give it up, but agitate and agitate until we do get it, we hope some time in the near future.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention then took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question before the Convention is section twenty, and pending amendments.

SPEECH OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I shall premise what I have to say upon the amendment, now pending, introduced by the Committee on Corporations, by saying that I shall vote for any proposition which can be carried by a majority vote of this body, which will in any way tend to relieve the community from the evils and oppressions under which it now lives; and if nothing better can be done, I shall vote for the amendment, although I fear that no good result will flow from its adoption. I believe that it would really be just such a proposition as the railroad company themselves would send here for our adoption, if they desired to blind and hoodwink us as representatives of the people seeking to afford the people some remedy for existing abuses, while in reality the proposed remedy is only a quack nostrum. I understand the question in this way: that, in order to do anything effectual, we must do something that will be binding; that if we give general—merely general directions to the Legislature; if we shall declare that a thing shall be done, and we impose no penalties for not doing it, it will be, in fact, remanding this whole subject to the Legislature, where it has been in the past, and where the people have been utterly unable to obtain any relief.

Now, I was in hopes a different amendment would be proposed here, which would leave the mode of appointing these Commissioners to be fixed in a subsequent section. That we would first settle the question of the powers and duties of the Commission, and then in a different section undertake to define who shall be qualified to act as members, how chosen, what bonds they should give, and all these little matters of detail. I agree entirely with the argument of the gentleman from San Francisco in regard to the mode of appointing these Commissioners. I think the section is fatally defective in itself, for the reasons stated by him, and I suggest the further one, that the appointing power should be vested in the Governor. I believe the appointment should be vested in the Governor, for the reason that the Governor, being on the head of the ticket, will be chosen with great care, and after the closest scrutiny, by the people. That the names of persons for that office are always canvassed a long way in advance of the nominating conventions, and I believe by the tone and temper of this people to-day, it will be impossible to nominate or elect a Governor who is in such close relationship with the railroad companies as would prevent him from doing his full duty in the selection of these Commissioners. In addition to the considerations presented by the gentleman from San Francisco, Col. Barnes, upon this subject, I desire to add that the position in which we would be placed is this: when it came to the nomination of Railroad Commissioners, it would be done in political conventions composed of gentlemen living three or four hundred miles apart in some instances, representing different counties and districts, widely separated geographically, and we should find a set of gentlemen gathered together for a single day, perfect strangers to one another; gentlemen would be placed in nomination for this position practically unknown to all but a few of his supporters; they would have no time to examine critically into the character of the nominees; no time to deliberate over it, and consequently there cannot be that careful scrutiny that is desired. They cannot canvass the merits of the different candidates in the manner in which the Executive of the State can, for he can take all the time necessary to examine into the merits of the men before he acts. In the nominating convention, as stated already, the nominee would probably be unknown to more than half of the men making the nomination.

Now, this office is one which requires the highest faculties, and requires the utmost care and nicest judgment in the selection of men to fill it, and a convention so assembled from remote parts of a district would be far more apt to make mistakes, assuming that all parties act honestly, than the Governor of the State. That is one objection. If, however, a majority of this Convention determine that Railroad Commissioners are to be elected by the people, then I think it is perfectly clear that they should not all go out of office at the same time. We all know that it will take considerable time for a set of Commissioners, who may be elected or appointed, to post themselves thoroughly upon the business committed to their charge. They will, before they can act intelligently, have to examine into the books and affairs of these corporations. They will have to familiarize themselves with the business of railroads. They will have to do this in order to be in a position to intelligently frame a bill of freights and fares. All this they will have to do. Well, when that is done it is proposed, as soon as they become reasonably familiar with the business, to have another election. Just when they have become most fit and best qualified to perform the duties of the office, another election is held and the whole of them turned out, and the whole thing again thrown into the filthy pool of politics, where, perhaps, by the dominance of this party or that party, a different Board of inexperienced men are elected and inducted into office.

Again, there is no mode provided for their removal in case of incompetency, inefficiency, or corruption. It is said that the process of impeachment is open. Well, in that case, you will have to wait until the Legislature meets. Then they have to be examined before a committee of the House. They are impeached. Then that impeachment has to go to the Senate to be tried there.

I say, as far as that part of the section is concerned, it is open to serious objections. When you come to the power of these Commissioners, I say there is no power given to them which can amount to anything; it can be of no substantial value unless the Legislature breathes the breath of life into this section. As it stands it is not self-executing. The Legislature may fail to legislate, or to support it by sanctioning any penalties whatever. Some gentlemen say they cannot trust the Legislature and others say they can. Well, we all know, as a matter of fact, by applying our own common sense to this question, that Legislatures of the past have been, and in all probability will be in the future, to a very great extent, under the influence and control of these corporations. You will doubtless have, as you always have had, a great many honest, well meaning men in the Legislature; and you will also have (if the experience of the past is worth anything as a criterion) men who can be influenced by selfish considerations. Experience has shown that it has not heretofore been in the power of those who are disposed to carry out the wishes of the people, to prevail over those who may be disposed to throw stumbling blocks in their way. It is true that in a great measure the failures of the Legislature in dealing with this subject have been the result of a want of information. The Legislature cannot frame a bill of freights and fares. It is out of the question for them to frame an intelligent bill of freights and fares. This Convention could not do it, and I presume it will stand fairly in comparison with the average Legislature in point of ability and intelligence. The Legislature has already dealt with this question, or tried to. A set of Commissioners was provided for and the Commissioners were appointed. They did their duty fearlessly. They presented recommendations in their report. They made suggestions. They were not clothed with power. The railroad companies refused to permit them to examine their books and affairs, and they were unable to ascertain the true condition of affairs. They proceeded to obtain a remedy in the Courts, and did get a judgment in one of the Courts. The case was carried to the Supreme Court, and was pending there when the next Legislature met and repealed the Act under which they were created, and thus destroyed the Commission. Now, that has been the course of the Legislature heretofore. What can you expect, then, judging the future by the past? Have we become any better or any more moral? Are our public servants more likely to do their duty in the future than they have been in the past? I think not.

Now, sir, that being the case, it is absolutely necessary that if you create a Commission, you impose and sanction some penalties. The objection is made that you cannot impose penalties in the Constitution. Why not? Why, they say, it would take up too much room. Well, all the penalties necessary to be imposed here without legislative action, will be comprised in twenty lines, and will an addition of twenty lines to the Constitution be such a sorry thing that we shall hesitate to secure a great popular benefit? Suppose it took ten, or twenty, or thirty pages, and yet secured the object which the people have in view, would it not be right to put it in there?

Now, the gentleman from San Francisco spoke sneeringly about the amendment I proposed the other day, and about my three weeks' railroad experience in this Convention. Now, the gentleman, in one branch, has had more experience upon this subject than I have had, but I have been seeking to be enlightened upon this subject. He has, it is true, acted as the attorney for the railroad company, but that would not give him any great amount of information upon the subject of freights and fares, no more than is possessed by any other attorney. This matter has been before the people for a great many years. It is not new in this Convention. Years and years ago, as far back as eighteen hundred and seventy-three, I was myself actively engaged in attempting to arouse the people on this subject. It is true that within the last two or three weeks I have paid some considerable attention to this subject. Instead of showing wherein the proposition I presented was wrong, he simply criticised it as foolish.

Now, sir, where is the fatal defect in this proposition reported by the Committee on Corporations? It says they shall have power to fix rates of freights and fares. It says further in another part of the section that they shall enforce their decisions through the medium of the Courts. But under what penalties? What are the Courts to do? Are they to bring their bill of freights and fares in the aggregate, and submit them to some Court, and ask the Judge of the Court, or a jury, to determine whether it is a correct schedule or not? Where are the penalties? Suppose the railroad company, as it will do, with this amendment standing alone and unsupported by legislation, suppose the railroad company says: "We don't care for your bill of freights and fares?" Where is your compulsion, where are your penalties? Of course, they must come from the Legislature, for you do not put it here in the Constitution. It holds out a delusive idea as it now stands, and if you pass it you will find that you can do nothing under it, beyond the selection of the Commissioners, without the aid of the Legislature.

Now, the proposition which I have introduced, and which has been characterized as foolish, is very simple, and I think very effectual, and is not open to the objections I have just urged. It is simply that a Board of Commissioners shall be organized with power to regulate freights and fares. That they shall fix such reasonable rates of freights and fares as they think proper. If the company fails to comply with the rates so fixed, they shall be under certain penalties mentioned in the section, and that they shall be liable to any party who may be aggrieved by their refusal, not only for the mere nominal damages—a damage, perhaps of ten dollars, or six dollars, or five dollars—but that they shall be under severe penalties; that the party may not only recover actual damages, but also exemplary damages. That is one proposition. The other is, that the Commissioners shall have the right to examine the books, papers, and documents of the company, examine witnesses, and inform themselves upon the subject committed to their charge, and then impose a penalty upon every officer or person connected with the corporations who shall refuse them permission to examine the books and papers. That is another. Then the farther provision, that the Commissioners—and that is a most important matter, one to which the late Commissioners called the attention of the Legislature in their report—shall have power to provide for a system of keeping accounts for these companies, which will enable them to act intelligently, which will enable them to determine what the receipts of the corporation are, what their expenditures are, and what their receipts are for and for what they are expended.

Now, there is not one syllable of this in the proposition of the Committee on Corporations. It does say, to be sure, that they may examine the books, papers, and records of these companies, but that is all. The former Commissioners were allowed to do so, but they showed that these companies kept their books in such a way that it was absolutely impossible for them to make the necessary examination, and unless the power is given to the Commissioners to compel these books to be kept in a way that they can be understood, it will amount to nothing.

The report speaks vaguely about the correction of abuses; they may correct abuses, and enforce their decisions through the medium of the Courts. What abuses? What kind of abuses? What penalties are there for a failure to comply with the orders of the Commission? All they can do is to say to the corporation: "You must do what we order." They are a very feeble power as against the great corporations. Take the section and examine it thoroughly, and you will find it absolutely nugatory, or nearly so. It is some advance over the existing state of things, but no material advance. It holds out a promise to the ear, but breaks it to the hope. And, sir, if you allow these companies to do as they please, which this section, unsupported by additional legislation does, you will produce no result which will result in any material reduction of freights and fares upon these roads. Well, if the railroads don't obey the Commission, they may go into Court. And do what? What will they do when they get into Court? It is not specified here. I say under this section there will be no substantial correction of any abuses whatever. I say that the whole section, as it stands now, is utterly inefficient for the intended purpose; that it imposes no penalties, and that I believe should be done in this section. If you leave these penalties to be fixed by the Legislature, the same story will be repeated. Whenever the Commission treads on the corns of the railroad, they will bring their power to bear upon the Legislature, and these penalties and conditions will be removed or changed.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that this is one of the most serious subjects to come before this Convention. I feel that if we do not put this section in a form so that the railroad companies cannot evade the performance of their duty, where they cannot trifle with the law, or with the officers of the State, we might just as well abandon our business and go home. I feel the absolute inefficiency of the proposition offered by the Committee on Corporations. I think it is one that would give very slight inconvenience to these great corporations, though I know it is introduced in the most perfect good faith. But I believe it will have no good effect, and I call the attention of the Convention to these things in order that they may adopt such amendments and make such changes as will give it force and vitality. At the proper time I propose to offer the amendment read here yesterday, and if gentlemen have any criticisms upon it, let them point out its defects. We must have something which will have some life, some force and effect, to curb the power and aggressions of these corporations.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I offered an amendment to this section twenty. I was not aware that the Committee on Corporations were going to offer another section twenty. The amendment I desire to offer is simply to make the section conform to the views of members expressed on this floor, and I ask leave to withdraw the other amendment and substitute this, which is the same in substance, but a little changed in phraseology:

"Strike out the first three lines of section twenty, and substitute the following:

'The Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall, before the first day of July next after the adoption of this Constitution, appoint three competent persons, who shall constitute a Board of Transportation Commissioners, and who shall hold their offices from the dates of their respective appointments for the term of one, two, and three years respectively, from the said first day of July. The Governor shall, in like manner and with like consent, before the first day of July in each succeeding year, appoint a Commissioner, to continue in office for the term of three years from said day, and in case of any vacancy occurring in the Board by resignation or otherwise, shall in like manner appoint a Commissioner for the residue of the term, and may at any time remove any Commissioner.'"

SPEECH OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I do not propose to detain the committee. I have but a few words to say upon the amendment now pending. I am in favor of a Constitutional Commission. As I understood the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, yesterday, he was opposed to a Constitutional Commission.

MR. WILSON. You are entirely mistaken. I am in favor of a Commission, but I am not in favor of clothing it with such powers in the Constitution. I am in favor of allowing the Legislature to prescribe its powers.

MR. ANDREWS. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. I understood the gentleman that a Constitutional Commission was not what the people want, not what is required. I may have been mistaken. The acoustics of this hall are so bad that we frequently are mistaken. But he is so reported in the synopsis of the proceedings yesterday. I am in favor of a Constitutional Commission. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he was opposed to a Constitutional Commission. We have been talking on this subject for weeks, and now let us try and come to some conclusion. Are we in favor of a Constitutional Commission, or not? I am in favor of such a Commission, because we need a Commission that will be permanent. I believe the necessity is shown by the history of railroads in this State; by the history of railroad legislation throughout the United States, and throughout the world. I believe that Commission should be a permanent Commission, so as not to be subject to change. I differ with the gentleman from San Francisco. I believe the sentiment of this Convention is in favor of a Constitutional Commission. That being conceded, the next question that presents itself is, how shall we obtain that Commission? For my part, I believe the idea suggested by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal is the correct one—that is, to have them elected by the people. Not that I am wedded to this particular proposition, but I believe it is better and safer to have them elected by the people. Gentlemen have talked and argued against a Commission chosen in this manner. They have argued that they would be politicians, or controlled by politicians, and at the same time they argue in favor of leaving this question of regulating freights and fares to the Legislature. Now, under the proposition presented by the Committee on Corporations, the Commission would be a Commission of the people, and the Legislature is a body elected by the people. Now, if we have confidence in the Legislature elected by the people, certainly we should have confidence in a Commission chosen in like manner by the people with especial reference to this one object. The people, Mr. Chairman, may be mistaken in relation to these matters, but ultimately those who are elected by the people, whether legislators or Commissioners, will reflect the wishes and sentiments of the people who elected them. Now I do not distrust the Legislature, but I believe a Constitutional Commission is better qualified to deal with emergencies arising from the question of freights and fares, than the Legislature would be, as has been thoroughly demonstrated on this floor. It seems to me that this charge which has been made against the Commission is as unjust as any charges that may be made against a Legislature elected by the same people. But, Mr. Chairman, I have believed that this Commission should be a Constitutional Commission, elected by the people.

Then, sir, the question comes, what powers should these Commissioners have? I believe that they should have power to deal with the subject of freights and fares. I think this is one of the most important questions with which this Convention will have to deal, and I do not believe in acting in haste. I believe in taking all the time necessary to mature the best provision which can be engrafted into the Constitution in relation to this question. I believe, sir, that these Commissioners should have power enough to enable them to fix freights and fares. By the plan proposed by the section under discussion, they would have control of these matters for four years, because we elect Commissioners for four years, and if they do not act in accordance with the wishes of the people, then they may elect another Commission. But while this is the case, the rates of freights and fares which might be established by the Commissioners might be unjust, and might not be satisfactory to the people. I understand that objection is to be corrected, through an amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale. I believe he proposes to reach that question by acting upon the Commissioners themselves—that is, if the Commissioners do not satisfy the people—through the Legislature, the people may remove them. I like the plan better than that proposed by Mr. Prouty. I believe that the Legislature should act upon it in that way. The amendment proposed by Mr. Prouty requires three fourths of the Legislature, and probably that would be too much. I believe the Legislature should have power to modify the rates of freights and fares established by the Commissioners. The Commissioners might get around legislative action by fixing rates, and as soon as the Legislature adjourns, set them back again to the original rates. That objection might be obviated by providing that this modification should continue for two years. I wish merely to make these suggestions in order that the committee may take these matters into consideration. I believe these modifications can be better accomplished through legislative Act upon the rates fixed by the Commissioners. I am ready to give way to anything that will reach the wishes of the majority of the committee, because I believe the majority of the committee are in favor of a Constitutional Commission; in favor of a Commission that has some power, and the only question is how to guard this power. I am willing to stay here and consult for any length of time in order to arrive at a just solution of these important questions.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: In regard to the amendment that is offered here by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, I must say that it is one of the most remarkable documents that has ever been submitted to this Convention. It proposes that the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall, before the first day of July next after the adoption of this Constitution, appoint three competent persons, who shall constitute a Board of Transportation Commissioners. I believe the Constitution is to be voted on in May; and if the Constitution were adopted, it requires the present administration of the State of California to continue the existing present legislation of the State of California; and, in fact, they are to determine who shall govern the State of California during the next three years as Railroad Commissioners. I believe the people of this State have had enough of the present administration, both legislative and executive, as regards the railroad affairs of this State; and I believe that this proposition to allow them, even after the adoption of the new Constitution, and under the new Constitution, to say to the people who shall control them in the railroad legislation, is very singular, to say the least; and I hope the amendment will be promptly voted down. I have never had anything to say upon that subject, other than what I said the other day; but as far as I am concerned, I believe this Commission should be elected. The gentleman from San Francisco, Colonel Barnes, says, that laws of this character were not staple; that experience shows that each succeeding Legislature changes the law. We admit that; and it is in order to prevent these changes; it is in order to prevent the Legislature from changing the law, or rather changing the remedy, so as to prevent the enforcement of the law—that we desire to have it embodied in the Constitution, and have constitutional Commissioners, and not legislative Commissioners, subject to change every two years; a permanent institution; not one to be appointed by the present Executive and by the present legislative department of the government.

SPEECH OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I have been a patient and silent listener to the discussion on this question, and it is no desire of my own to impose a speech upon this question that induces me now to address the Convention. But, sir, I feel that I owe it to myself; that I owe it to the members of this Convention; that I owe it to the people who sent me here, to publicly declare my views upon the important question now under discussion. I would say in the opening, Mr. Chairman, that during my private life, and such little of public station as has fallen to my lot, I have always declared myself fearlessly, though no doubt I have made mistakes in judgment, and obeyed the mandates of my conscience. If so be, that I have not lost my own self-respect, or the respect of those who know me, I do not now propose to change my course in that regard. Nor do I propose to take counsel by my fear as to whether or not my action in this Convention shall meet the approval of others. But judging, sir, from the language and seeming temper of some of the members of this Convention, it would seem that they alone know by authority what the people expect and demand at our hands; and unless we obey these demands as they interpret them, and follow out the line of policy which they think is wise, we who oppose them shall be doomed to political oblivion. If this be so, sir, I shall follow my own course and run counter to their views, and I am ready and willing to meet my doom, for, sir, there is no station, however high or exalted, that is worth the price of my manhood. I am not fully enlightened as to what effect our action here will have upon our lawful sovereign, the people, who are watching with keen scrutiny our course; but, sir, that sovereign judges more wisely than any sovereign that ever wore a crown. And while, sir, this sovereign spurns the fawning sycophant in search of place, she is ever ready and willing to overlook the errors and even the blunders of faithful servants. But, I must say here, and I say it without flattery, that I believe the members of this Convention are working faithfully and honestly for what they believe will subserve the public interest. But my own convictions of right and duty compel me to dissent from the views of many of my fellow members upon the question under consideration, for whose learning, sound judgment, and spotless integrity I have the profoundest respect. And in what I shall say in this debate, or in any other, I hope I shall not be so unfortunate as to wound the feelings, or by the slightest implication impugn the motives of any one. The vacant seats shrouded in mourning, admonish us that life is but a short, uncertain span.

But, sirs, to come more particularly to the question in hand: the most casual observer cannot fail to observe that there is a contest going on in this State, between the great corporations on one side, and the people on the other. It is a war most unnatural and wrong, waged by wealthy and arrogant servants against their lawful masters. Can any one doubt, in this contest, upon which standard victory will perch? I think not, if we are governed by sober reason, and not by prejudice. But, sir, in this matter, the people, in my judgment, have not sent us here to disembowel the State; they have not sent us here to lay a hand or finger on a single institution of this great commonwealth. Sir, it is a part of the birthright and education of every American freeman, part of his knowledge, part of the history of this great land, after which the nations of Europe undertook to fashion their institutions; it is an institution complete in all its grand powers, from the foundation stone to the topmost pinnacle—all complete. It is all complete, and we are not sent here to tear down a single column, or mar any part of the view. We are sent here simply to add strength and beauty to the structure, so as to make it as efficient as may be, and as perfect as human wisdom can make it. I know, sir, that it has been said that corporations have fashioned this fair land. No, sir. It was fashioned without them. It was because there was development here, and wealth, and strength—everything that indicated that it would be the dwelling place of a great people, that these corporations were organized. This great State was fashioned by the great architect of the universe for the use and benefit of the highest type of civilization. It was made for the human family. It was not fashioned by the corporations. It was preserved by the hand of the Anglo-American people for our use. They have built up this great government, little by little, and brought it to its present state of perfection. The structure is all complete and is inhabited by the highest type of civilization ever known. And can it be that we, here, are bent upon taking hold of the very pillars of the temple and pulling them down, that we may crush some abuse that has grown up in our midst. Are we to be like Samson, pulling down the temple in order to destroy an enemy? No, sir. We can master an enemy without touching a single column, or displacing a single stone. These corporations, rich and powerful as they are, possess their wealth and their strength as a part of this great political household. They have a right to enjoy their property, but they have no right to make their wealth and their power an engine of oppression, of extortion, and corruption. They are the means to the end, are to be used in working out our civilization; and as civilization advances farther on the plane of progress, we have the right and the power to see that they are so managed, utilized, and controlled that they will work out the objects of their creation; and if we do this, we shall have done all that an intelligent people desire us to do.

And I believe that the people are wise enough and strong enough to do this work, and no one need have any fear about the result. Why, sir, the towering monarch of the forest, with its roots struck deeply into the rocks, is overthrown and crushed by the advance guard of civilization; so if these corporations, with their vast and increasing wealth and power, place themselves across the line of our progress, they will be crushed out by public indignation. It is said here that they are soulless. Sir, I know there are many wrongs charged against these corporations. In the last fifteen years they have been adding one insult to another, one injury to another, until the people are awake in earnest, as indicated by the sentiment on this floor, and the corporations will take heed. The people are determined not to avenge these wrongs, but to stop them, and to see that they do not bar the wheels of progress.

But in dealing with this subject, we should be governed by calm judgment and sound reasoning. We are not to be governed by passion and hate; we must take counsel of reason. And in providing against these evils, we must not resort to measures entirely unknown to others—unknown to our system of government. In former times the great danger arose from power and place. In our own times, the acquisition of great wealth is the great danger. Why is it that these corporations are doing as they do? They are absorbed in their desires to gain wealth, and they want to gain it fast; they want to draw their wealth from the people of this State. I do not question their right to acquire wealth, but the people have rights which must not be lost sight of. We have heard the question of the right of the State to regulate these corporations argued at length upon this floor. Why, sir, any child attending the public schools, knows that the State has the right. It is not disputed, even by the corporations themselves. But the political question, the practical question here is, as to the means which are to be resorted to. The Committee on Corporations, I have no doubt, have labored faithfully and earnestly to solve this great question. No one questions their integrity, but I am compelled to question their judgment upon this subject. The report contains many things, however, which I can heartily support; but their project for a Railroad Commission I cannot support, I will not support. I am not ready now to confess that this is a subject which requires me to tear down my government in order to solve it. No, sir. Let not a hand be laid upon any of the institutions of this government. I know that the American system of government is as fully able and competent to deal with this question as any other question. Now, you are talking about putting this matter in the hands of a Commission. I must confess, as to this matter of Commissions, my views are extreme. I believe they are dangerous. Nowhere have I ever found a Commission that has done any good. It will compile statistics, and write volume after volume and distribute them among the people, and that is all they ever do. As to this man, Charles Francis Adams, I do not believe there is a bigger fraud in America. He has proclaimed to the world how these things ought to be managed. I believe there is no better or more subservient tool of the railroads in America, than this same Charles Francis Adams.

Now I believe in no hybrid system. It seems to me, from listening to this discussion, that there is no wisdom in it; no statesmanship in it. We are placed here in this Convention to do a great work, and we should act fairly and fearlessly. We should regulate these corporations, not by a Commission, but by the Legislature. Because, sir, as was said in Holy

Writ, a kingdom divided against itself cannot stand. If you are going to have a Commission, let that Commission stand by itself, responsible to the people, but do not mix it up with the Legislature. Let it be the sovereign, the king. If the Commission is sovereign, it needs no aid from the Legislature, and it should not be allowed to sneak behind the Legislature as an apology to the people. Let it stand alone, independent of the Legislature, responsible directly to the people. If you are going to have the Legislature do it, then throw the entire responsibility upon them, so that they will not be able to creep behind the Commission, playing battledoor and shuttlecock from one to the other. If you are going to have a Commission, I am in favor of giving it all the power and all the strength you can give it.

This Commission will be a costly affair. It will cost thousands of dollars every year. When you start with three Commissioners, as perhaps you will do, you must have some very able and distinguished men for Commissioners. You must not have school boys; you must have men of standing, of intelligence, of weight, of power; you must have men of learning, men of age, men of experience, and, above all, men of integrity. You cannot obtain them for a song. You cannot expect such men to leave their avocations, that pay large returns—for a man possessed of the qualifications necessary to fill these positions, will not fail to have a good business. You must pay for clerks and other necessary expenses, so that the cost of this Commission will not be less than twenty thousand dollars per year. Then, if you are going to have the Legislature mixed up in it, you have simply added this much to the expenses of the State, and accomplished no good to the people. I tell you, the people of the State will think of all this. They are no ignorant horde, to be amused and cajoled; but when you have framed your Constitution and submitted it to them, they will examine it and criticise it with wisdom and judgment equal to that produced in this Convention. You are not dealing with an ignorant rabble; you are dealing with the educated, free, and enlightened people of the nineteenth century, who are not to be misled or deceived. I know, at first blush, it will strike the minds of the people of this State that you have carried this question out of politics by creating this Commission, and that henceforth railroads are to be regulated, and everything is to go along smoothly. At first glance, I have no doubt they would feel this way; because, from the abuses we are hurling against the men who occupy seats in the legislative halls, the people may have an idea that the Legislature is a mass of corruption. But they will find out different when they come to reason over it. As for me, I am ready to say that I would rather trust the ills I know of now, than fly to those ills I do not know of.

Now, in our system of government we have but two departments—the legislative and executive power—nothing else. I know we do draw another distinction, and call them legislative, executive, and judicial powers, but when you come to analyze them, you find that the judicial is but a branch of the executive. They are all included in the terms executive and legislative. So the question now is, to which power does the right to regulate naturally belong? Where has it been lodged for the past one hundred years in America? In the legislative department, and it is a legislative power. Then, why wrench it from the place where it belongs? Why take it away? You will either create another Legislature, or else you will have this hybrid system at a vast cost and expense to the State. Now, sir, is it possible that the foundation of our system has become so rotten and decayed that in the very first century of its existence we have to take it away? Are we going to tear down the pillars that have been so strong and beautiful? It seems to me when the people have reflected upon it, they will say, as one man: "You did not heed my voice. This Convention was called to revise the Constitution, not to tear down and destroy this system of government; and you have exceeded your powers. You have asked us to indorse this system, unknown among any other people."

Now, then, it seems to me, that one of the prominent objections to this—and bear in mind that my objection is not because it is too severe upon the railroad corporations—no, sir, I have no objection to that. My objection is not to that. Do you suppose these corporations are going to resign this vast power without a struggle? Are they going to sleep serenely while you elect these three Commissioners? No, sir. See the combinations they can make. Three Commissioners in this State and three parties in this State. There will always be at least two parties.

The railroad company has no politics and no religion. They make all their political principles subservient to their dominant interests, as other people do. They will go to political conventions ready to sacrifice the Governor, the Secretary of State, or all the State and county officers, for the sake of having their men nominated for Railroad Commissioners. They go to the man, or to the friends of the man who wants to be Governor, and say, you shall have our influence and support for the position which you seek, only let us have this one man for Railroad Commissioner. And these things are not so easily detected. They are not done openly and in the broad sunlight; they are not done as legislative business is done—upon the floor in open hall—where there are reporters for the press, and every word goes out on lightning wings. It is done in secret caucus—the most damning thing in American politics; and likely as not they will secure these men in each party. They get their men nominated, and their election is sure. Two of them would be sufficient. Whatever is said and done by the one man will amount to nothing. And having secured their election for four years, under the Constitution, the people are bound hand and foot for that time, with no possible hope of relief. The people will then be clamorous for a change, and it will then take two or four years more to make the change.

Suppose we take the other plan, as suggested by another member—have them appointed—and, sir, I enter my protest here and now against the appointing power. There is nothing on this earth that I trust as I trust the free American ballot. I know there has been corruption. I know that the people have often been deceived; but I do know that it is the safest depository of power on earth. But suppose you get them appointed, have you changed the result any? No, sir; because when it comes to nominating men for Governor, the same combinations will be made to secure the right man for their purposes. The same combinations will be made in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred—exactly the same combinations will be made. This is one of the means used at present. They throw away the House and concentrate all their strength upon nominations for the Senate.

Now, during this discussion here there seems to be no disposition to speak a word in praise of the Legislature. I know, sir, that oftentimes they have not done as we wanted them to do. But, sir, we have the Legislature, and because one fails, or bad men creep in, it is no reason why the system should be condemned. It is one of the grandest institutions that human genius has ever discovered. They are the people. The people, through their representatives, meet to do in a public and open way whatever is to be done, and their acts and utterances are open to the world. Not so with the Commission which can meet in the back office. The public cannot watch them through all their wanderings as easy as they can watch the Legislature.

Another objection I have already indicated: this Commission will be the means of new offices, from which the people will reap no benefit for the large outlay demanded. These charges against the Legislature are, in my judgment, not well founded. It seems to me that a glance at the history of the State shows that we have been impatient. This institution did not grow in a moment. Why, from the year eighteen hundred and forty-nine up to the year eighteen hundred and sixty-five, our whole people were wild upon the subject of the Pacific Railroad. It occupied our thoughts by day and our dreams by night. Why, no man's political reputation was worth anything who opposed the granting of railroad subsidies. It was the all-important subject. From one end of the State to the other men were ready to contribute of their wealth towards the enterprise. We were isolated from the balance of the Union. We spoke of the other States as "home," and we felt a desire to be bound to them—as the set expression goes—by bands of steel. They were subsidized by Federal, State, county, and city authority. They went on and organized. There began their oppressions, after which began the awakening. And when did the awakening begin in this State? Why, not until eighteen hundred and sixty-nine. We had all been on their side. We had fattened these corporations, and fawned at their feet, gave them dinners and grand receptions, and there was no such thought as regulating freights and fares. Such a proposition would have been scorned out of existence. But in eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, as I said, they began to awaken. The subject began to be mentioned in the party platforms—"stop subsidies." That is as far as they were expected to go. And you will remember, in eighteen hundred and seventy, when the lamented Governor Haight vetoed the subsidy bills, there were still other counties that desired to vote subsidies in aid of railroads. Merced County, Fresno County, Tulare, Kern, and others, asked to be allowed to give of their means in aid of these roads. And we have here to-day from Merced, Fresno, Tulare, and Kern, not a single representative who is not pronounced in favor of regulating and controlling railroads. Thus you will see that it was only about ten years ago that the tide of public opinion began to set the other way. And in eighteen hundred and seventy the tide was not yet strong, for you will remember that the veto of Governor Haight was only sustained by one majority. This was the beginning of the awakening in this State. In that memorable veto message that distinguished statesman proclaimed that he was not afraid to abide by the results of his act, trusting to the future to vindicate the soundness of his views. And this distinguished man, who had stood by the people all through this contest, was vindicated by an election to this body, and his seat is only made vacant by the hand of death. That veto was the beginning of a healthy, honest current of public opinion. Then, sir, the Legislature was acting in accord with what appeared to be the sentiment of the people. Governor Haight, peering into the future, took an advance step, and was sustained by the Senate. And while we are denouncing the Legislature as unfaithful and corrupt, the memory of that man who stood on the side of popular rights, should at least cause us to hold our tongues. Though, sir, his feet are cold and wet in the icy waters of Jordan, though his faithful hand is moldering into dust, we should revere his memory, and remember that he it was who saved the State then. Shall we so soon forget the services of Senator Burnett, who was carried on his last bed into the Senate chamber to cast his vote on the side of the people.

Then, sir, come slowly down the line of history, showing still the growth of public sentiment. In eighteen hundred and seventy-two the five per cent Acts, which had previously been passed, were repealed, except as to the Counties of San Francisco, Santa Cruz, Sonoma, San Diego, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, San Bernardino, Marin, and Los Angeles. Still there was a large portion of the State ready to give away five per cent to assist these corporations. Yet here we find on the floor of this chamber, delegates from San Francisco, Santa Cruz, San Diego, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, San Bernardino, Marin, and Los Angeles, denouncing the Legislature because it has not been more rabid than the history of public sentiment shows it to have been. And speaking of these counties that were left, we follow the tide of public opinion a little further, and in eighteen hundred and seventy-four an Act, we find, was passed, repealing and wiping out everything—every vestige of the five per cent Acts, and during that year there was not a Senator in the State who favored subsidies.

Now, since then, we have had other Acts that compelled the railroad companies to yield the ground which they occupied. I remember some very talented men who fought upon the proposition that the State had no right or power to touch these sacred institutions. That private property could be taken for public use, but the moment it came into their clutches it ceased to be public, and became at once private property. In other words, that private property could be taken for a private use. Since that, the whole theory has vanished, and no man who values his standing will stand up on this floor and assert any such doctrine now. The people having passed on that, there is no longer any room for argument. I believe, sir, that this is a very simple matter—this thing of freights and fares. Go back to eighteen hundred and fifty, and the very first Act that was passed on this subject declared that the Legislature may advance freights and fares, but not to be so reduced, without the consent of the corporations, as to produce less than thirty per cent. per annum upon the capital paid in. That was the first law ever placed on the statute books of this State on the subject. The people of the State, who then dealt with the question of freights and fares, are not less wise to-day than they were then. They are the same people, and they have lost nothing since then. Are they any less sovereign than they were then? Are they any less able to grapple with these great questions? No, sir! but it was on account of this tide of public sentiment that set in so favorably for the corporation at that time, that no stronger action was had. But public opinon has changed, and the laws of that day are not sufficient to meet the exigencies of to-day, and the abuses which have grown up. We feel to-day that these corporations should be placed under stricter control, and that they shall be compelled to deal fairly and justly with the people who have done so much for them.

Again, in eighteen hundred and fifty-one, the Legislature of this State repassed in substance the Act of eighteen hundred and fifty, except to allow thirty-five per cent on the capital stock paid in. Why was that changed? It raised it from what it had been. Because of this great and inordinate desire on the part of the people to have a transcontinental railroad. Then we come down to eighteen hundred and fifty-three, because there never was but one freight and fare bill passed. They passed a freight and fare bill just in one section—as much as we will ever need, I believe, fixing the maximum for passengers at twenty cents per mile, and freight at sixty cents per ton per mile. You will find the Act of eighteen hundred and fifty-three on page one hundred and twelve. Let the Legislature to-morrow take that for a basis of freights and fares, reducing it for the difference in the amount of earnings, cost of labor, etc., and it would make a fair bill for this time.

Again, in eighteen hundred and fifty-four, May fifteenth, the Legislature passed another freight and fare bill (Stats. 1854, p. 86), fixing the maximum for passengers at ten cents per mile, and freight at fifteen cents per ton per mile. Now, take that and bring it down to the changed conditions of the present day—the reduction in the cost of material and price of labor, and the maximum ought not to exceed three cents for passengers and two cents for freight.

Now, we come to the statutes of eighteen hundred and sixty-one, fixing the maximum of rates at ten and fifteen cents for passengers and freights. Now, in searching for precedents for this thing—this Commission—I would say, in my judgment, it would not be idolatry to worship this thing, because I do not believe there is anything in the heavens above or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth, that is like it.. There is nothing like it in any civilized government. I know there have been mistakes made, and the Legislature has not done all that it might have done. But because mistakes have been made, and errors made, is it any good reason why we should depart from our system of government? Why, sir, divide the responsibility and authority, and you carry us back five hundred years. Do we want to do it? No, sir! Let us stand by our institutions as we have them. As for me, while I am in favor of any rule, however rigid—because I do not believe it is possible that any injustice will be done to these corporations—I do not believe there is any man who wishes to destroy these means of transportation; no man desires to cripple them; but every man desires to say to them, you shall be like every other institution in this State, subservient to the laws of the country. In these matters, we know no favorite powers, no favorite individual, no favorite corporations; but all stand upon the same plane of equal rights.

I cannot support this scheme for a Commission. I believe it will prove a sorry thing for the people of this State. I do not mean to impugn anybody's motives, for your judgments are as apt to be right as mine; but that is what my reason and my judgment tells me. If I shall have an opportunity, I shall offer a substitute for the whole matter, providing that the Legislature shall pass laws to correct abuses and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion, and shall from time to time pass laws fixing maximum rates for the transportation of passengers and freights, and enforce them by adequate penalties. Having done this, in my judgment, we will have done all that the people require us to do.

SPEECH OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to see my old friend, Laine, praising the Legislature. They have been praised long enough. We have tried them long enough. The last Legislature was the most corrupt that ever convened in this State. The idea of leaving this to the Legislature! The people have sent us here for the purpose of providing for Commissioners to regulate freights and fares. I am satisfied, if I understand the temper among these railroad lawyers, when it comes to a vote they are going to vote solid against these Commissioners. Mr. President, this is a very good section. It reads well until you get to the eighth line, where it says: "The Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty to correct abuses of railroad corporations and transportation companies." Now, if you leave out those few lines, I am satisfied that this Convention will vote for it. It will then read thus:

"SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State, at the regular gubernatorial election, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad, or other transportation companies, and publish the same, from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts; to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies; to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions, and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in this and the foregoing sections."

If I am not mistaken, that is a good section. By that means we can regulate these thieving corporations. They have controlled this State long enough, and it is our duty to take this thing out of their hands. It is our duty to elect these Commissioners. It is the only way we can ever control them. It is a necessity. I am opposed to leaving the matter to the Legislature any longer. We never have had any restraint placed upon these corporations by the Legislature.

SPEECH OF MR. MCCONNELL.

MR. MCCONNELL. Mr. Chairman: The farmers have taken up but little of the valuable time of this Convention in the discussion of the subject under consideration. I will now in their behalf ask the indulgence of this body for a few moments. A few days since I made some inquiries of the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, in relation to matters now under discussion in this Convention. In their solution on some fair and just basis, the people of California and Nevada are deeply interested. A railroad has been built from San Francisco to Ogden, a distance of about eight hundred miles, not with private funds, as many claim, but by the money drawn from the pockets of a confiding and generous people. The private fortunes of those who have had the enterprise, on the whole have not been greatly impaired. It is a well known fact that their combined means would not have been sufficient to build the road from Sacramento City across the American River to the point where the Central Pacific Railroad succeeded in establishing the foot-hills of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. The United States Government and the State of California, with the municipal aid rendered, was more than sufficient to build the entire road. This aid was not rendered in order that a few men might become rich, but that a whole people might be served as the country developed. It is now pertinent to inquire how they have managed the great trust confided to them. With the vast funds thus intrusted to them they have sought to control, and do control and manage, every transportation and express company in this State, whether on land or water, and their dreams of power and universal dominion upon this coast have led them into many follies, and caused them to make many grave mistakes. They refuse to pay their just proportion of taxes, and have violated their charters by not disposing of the land, as was required.

So powerful and arrogant have they become, that they even contest the right of the United States Government to make laws which they are bound to obey, requiring them to make provisions to pay their just obligations; and they are now in litigation with the national authority. They do not fail, in any instance, along the line of the road, by excessive freights and fares and discrimination, to take every cent that can be got out of any business or enterprise that may be undertaken—and barely let it live. The distance that freight is moved has but little to do with the amount charged. Freight at Winnemucca, three hundred and twenty-four miles from Sacramento, to go East, under their peculiar financial management, must come to this city, and pay one and a half cents per pound, or three hundred dollars per car-load of twenty thousand pounds. It then must be returned over the same road, climbing an altitude of over six thousand feet, back again to Winnemucca, three hundred and twenty-four miles more; and if an equal charge is made of one and a half cents per pound, or three hundred dollars per car-load, that, added to the return trip, will make six hundred dollars per car-load—and yet the freight is just where it started from.

By this arrangement one half of a cent per pound or one hundred dollars per carload would be left to divide with the remaining roads east, the combined length of which would be at least twenty-five hundred miles. One of two things is apparent: either the roads east carry freight at a very low figure, or the Central Pacific Railroad at this end charges a very high rate. It but slightly changes the result if you examine it in the following manner: twenty thousand pounds of freight from Winnemucca to Sacramento City, three hundred and twenty-four miles, one and a half cents per pound, or three hundred dollars per carload. The same carload from Sacramento to Boston, according to established rates, four hundred dollars, a distance of nearly three thousand miles. Perhaps the Convention would understand it better by stating the facts in another way—thus:

Carload from Winnemucca to Boston	$700 00
Carload from Sacramento to Boston	400 00
Difference	$300 00

Or it would cost three hundred dollars more to send a carload from Winnemucca, than it would from Sacramento, to Boston.

And yet a legislator of nineteen years experience, with a practice of forty years at the bar, who is also a gentleman of railroad experience, being a stockholder and Vice-President of at least one road, besides, as he told us the other day, he was one of the hard and horny-handed sons of toil; still with all of this wisdom, he tells us upon the floor of this Convention that I made three hundred dollars at least by having my freight brought to Sacramento. I suppose if it had made one more trip of the same character, another three hundred dollars would have been made, and so on, without end, if the reasoning is good. I have bills of lading from the same place on which a charge is made at the rate of two hundred dollars per carload entered as advanced charges, when the freight did not come over to Sacramento or any other distance westward. Was an equal amount made on that? Will the gentleman from Marin inform the Convention? I now inform the gentleman from the other side of the Green Mountains, where the Central Vermont Railroad and much crookedness prevails, and State Prisons are located, and near the place where his Puritan ancestors hung witches, that I do not need to have any one tell me when I make three hundred dollars. Many thousands of dollars have gone to the same side of the ledger account, and I find it of as little worth in my financial affairs as Benjamin Butler's fiat money would be.

Along the whole line of the road, from Auburn eastward, freight cannot be had at any of the towns, Colfax, Truckee, Reno, Wadsworth, or Battle Mountain, from the East, without paying the freight to San Francisco and then back again. The farmers and merchants of these places have to pay nearly double the freight that the farmers and merchants do who are located in or near Sacramento and San Francisco. In other words, the railroad company charges more for a less service than they do for a greater, and this without restriction or limitation, except the sovereign will of the company. I submit to the judgment of this Convention that such a policy is not liberal, is unjust and unfair, and instead of developing the country through which the road passes, it is retarding it in a marked degree. There is no fixed and fair rate of charges established even at terminal points like Sacramento, Marysville, Stockton, and San Francisco, but every large and extensive shipper and importer of merchandise from the East, in these large places, has a special arrangement of his own, not made by Mr. J. C. Stubbs, freight agent of the Central Pacific Railroad, but by Mr. Vining, an imported man from the Union Pacific Railroad. These contracts are under the seal of secrecy, and no mercantile firm can know that his neighbor, engaged in the same business, is not getting his goods transported at a less rate, thus practically enabling the company to aid a friend, punish an enemy, or ruin a competitor in business. Inasmuch as my old friend from over the Green Mountains did not answer my questions in a satisfactory manner, I shall not feel under any obligations to aid him in any aspirations he may have in the future for high place and power. Notwithstanding he is now an honest Granger, and his hands are horny with toil, with such ideas as these he would not be admitted into the outer gate of the Granger's fold, and he could not be trusted to act for the people. I know of but one way to settle all of this trouble between the people and the railroad companies, and that is on that old and eternal principle of right, justice, and fair dealing. Let Leland Stanford and the Board of Directors of the Central Pacific Railroad order their hirelings, J. C. Stubbs, A. N. Towne, and Mr. Goodman, to rearrange their tariffs of freights and fares so that they will bear some little relation to the service rendered. Quit speculating with the people's money in town lots; let others run restaurants, peanut stands, and hotels, and they will have no difficulty with the people.

If this policy is at once adopted, it will not be necessary to issue a proclamation of this Convention in the shape of an open letter for our guidance and direction; but to their burdensome, selfish, unjust exactions, let slaves submit—freemen never will. These railroad companies have in the past largely elected our police officers, and practically they have been above the law. Their acts must be made to subserve the general good; the fight will go on until right prevails. The public will some time in the near future find a leader who will march at their head to victory. This victory must be bloodless, but it will put corporations under the law, leaving them with all their power for good, but shorn of power for evil. Great success now, as in the past, intoxicates the brain, undermines the judgment, and destroys the fine and humane feelings of ambitious men. A people who will not resist encroachments upon their rights and liberties, deserves the fate that always awaits a crouching slave.

As the best means suggested, and in view of the situation, I feel that it is my duty to vote for the Commission as proposed by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. Monopolies must be controlled, or they will control the people of this coast. By way of reply to the gentleman from Marin, who has been duly constituted, or constitutes himself the apologist for the known wrongs perpetrated by a greedy corporation, and before taking my seat I wish to remind my aged friend that the old mathematical truths still remain, that "the whole of a thing is greater than any of its parts." He may, one of these days, mount some eminence on his little farm that overlooks and lies some leagues along the Pacific Ocean, and, in imitation of a ruler, also intoxicated with power, command the tides to recede; but he can neither control the waves of the ocean nor the great flood of public opinion on this subject of freights and fares, and monopolies generally. The only way to account for the tenacity with which he clings to his old interests is, that having for forty years devoted his best energies to the defense of criminals and wrong-doers, making the worst appear the better reason, he naturally gravitates in his declining years towards the same class, and even in this Convention he finds himself unable to divest himself of his early modes of thought and take his stand among the defenders of the right.

The Record-Union, the acknowledged railroad organ of this city, has recently said that "no complaints have been made by the people, and that no indictments have been found against the company." I present the following as some of the complaints, made by the people, to go into the judgment roll:

First—The managers of the Central Pacific Railroad have diverted large sums of money from the original objects as intended by its donors, and have used said money for objects and purposes entirely foreign to its original design; and have, by a system of dealing with themselves, diverted large amounts of money, dedicated by the people to a public use, into their private coffers. They have bought up nearly all of the transportation companies of the State, and they control and manage them to the injury of the people.

Second—They charge more for a less distance than they do for a greater, in many cases, over the same road, in the same direction, and on the same kind of freight.

Third—They refuse to pay their just proportion of the taxes.

Fourth—They have not disposed of the lands in accordance with the provisions of their charter.

Fifth—They refuse to obey the laws of the United States requiring them to settle a long deferred account, and are now litigating with the National Government; and—if you will allow me to guess, I guess that Judge Stephen Field will be for the company, as usual, and that Chief Justice Waite and the majority of the Court will be on the other side.

Sixth—The original stockholders complain—those who were not within the charmed circle of the Contract and Finance Committee—that they have been swindled out of their stock by misrepresentations and double-dealing. Sacramento, Placer, and San Joaquin Counties make this same complaint.

Seventh—Samuel Brannan and O. D. Lambard complained—and they settled.

Eighth—A. A. Cohen found much fault, and a Court of competent jurisdiction said his complaints were well founded, and dismissed said suits with costs, as to himself, wherein he was defendant.

Ninth—The records of the Sixth Judicial District Court, when taken in connection with the suit first spoken of, in which A. A. Cohen figured as a defendant, are full of instructive and interesting information. The law student who carefully examines them will be deeply interested as well as astonished.

Tenth—They use the power placed in their hands by the people to control elections and secure such men for public officers as will be found pliable.

Eleventh—They discriminate in the matters of fares and freights so as to cripple commerce, and, having control of our public thoroughfares, treat them as private property in which the public are not interested.

Twelfth—The people of the State of Nevada complain that they are compelled to pay nearly double for all the merchandise, farming tools, and wagons required by the people for the proper development of the country.

Thirteenth—That our halls of legislation are invaded by their paid servants, and that, in many cases, the will of the people is defeated, and the public service debauched and corrupted to prevent legislation tending to remedy the evils complained of.

I take this occasion to say that I have nothing personal against the railroad managers. I have known the men for a long time who were instrumental in building the railroad. I gladly testify to the personal worth of each and every one of them. They were merchants in this city, of whom we, as Californians and Sacramentans, justly felt proud. Their word was as good as their bond. Personally I would do them a favor, now, as I have done in the past. I oppose them only—as it would betray my trust to assist them to rivet their shackles upon the commerce of this State—for I think they are wrong in the management of the great trusts now in their hands. There are very few men, or associations of men, who can be trusted with great and unlimited power without their abusing it. It is an unpleasant thing to be compelled to oppose those with whom you are now and have been on friendly terms. I know, however, that they themselves prefer an honest opponent to a dishonest friend. I hope any regulation attempted will be well considered, and that good results will follow, both to the people and the railroad companies. I shall support the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, as amended, believing that it is in the interest of railroad companies as well as the people. They may then get rid of the leeches and parasites that now fasten themselves upon the business of the corporation and feed upon the general prosperity of the country. They may discharge their corps of lobby members of the Legislature. They can divert the money now spent in securing and preventing legislation to the payment of debts and taxes. They can, with a wise, beneficent, patriotic Commission to arbitrate between the people and the corporations, being in fact what they are now, only in name, public benefactors. Then the laws can be executed at once, leaving only real grievances to be settled in the Courts.

My colleague, Judge McFarland, in his remarks before the committee, December third, says: "The decision of the Supreme Court in the Elevator case was monstrous and subversive of every sentiment of right, justice, and liberty." It may be a great misfortune, and hard on the United States Supreme Court, that they differ from the learned Judge; still their decisions will have to remain the law of the land until they are reversed by some future Court of competent jurisdiction, the Judge to the contrary notwithstanding.

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I regret that these gentlemen should be constantly alluding to my personal experience. I have made inquiries about the Winnemucca case, and I will give the result of my inquiries. You are undertaking to punish the Central Pacific Railroad Company for crimes it did not commit, and over which it has no control. It has an arrangement with the eastern companies by which they carry through freight.

The eastern roads originally would only take through freight to and from San Francisco, the through rates being regulated by competition by water. Finally, a contract was made, admitting Sacramento, Stockton, San José, and Marysville as competitive points, but beyond this the eastern roads have since refused to go. To ship Mr. McConnell's wool from Winnemucca directly to the East, it must go to the end of the Central Pacific Railroad, and pay the way freight rate; from there to Omaha the Union Pacific Railroad will take it at way rates; from there another road will take it to Chicago, another to Buffalo, and another to the Atlantic. All these way freights aggregate a sum far in excess of the through rates. So the goods are sent to a competitive point to get a start in order to secure for them the benefit of through rates. Thus Mr. McConnell is actually benefited in his wool shipments by the contract. The contract was made for the benefit of the business and shippers of the Pacific Coast, and they all know it. It would have been fairer for McConnell, and in the interest of truth and justice, to have stated the underlying facts relative to his wool shipments. The passion and prejudice which animates many in their declarations against the railroads, has been fully exhibited by Mr. McConnell in his fiery speech. It was not in the spirit of a judge deciding impartially between man and man. It is not befitting a dignified Constitutional Convention. The gentlemen criticise the railroad companies because they appealed to the Courts to settle their disputes betwen them and the National Government. In the name of God, are men to be trampled on by this Convention because they appealed to the law and the Courts to settle their disputes—the very Courts which the people have established for the purpose? For appealing to the Courts they are denounced. I think it is a very strange state of affairs.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: This is the section proposed by the Committee on Corporations:

"SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State, at the regular gubernatorial election, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad, or other transportation companies, and publish the same, from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts; to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies; to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in this and the foregoing sections."

By the consent of the Convention, this has been substituted for the other section twenty. Now, sir, your committee met last evening, and again this morning, and after careful consideration, in the light of the discussion had here, they unanimously report that section to this Convention. I think it is the first time in the history of that committee that they voted unanimously upon any given proposition. I cannot be positive upon that point, but that is my recollection. This section seemed to unite and combine the average judgment of the committee. It prescribes the duties and powers of the Commission, and it says they shall enforce their decisions through the medium of the Courts. My friend from Marin certainly cannot object to that, because it allows them to go into the Courts of the country and defend against any unreasonable act imposed upon them by these Commissioners.

Now I wish to address a few words to the committee in answer to some of the arguments presented by gentlemen on this floor. I wish to say, sir, that so far as I am concerned, and so far as the Committee on Corporations are concerned, we do not claim to be anything but instruments in the hands of this Convention. That as far as we are concerned, we have endeavored thus far to discuss these questions with fairness, and, I hope, with candor; and I wish to say, also, that we have to thank the most of the members of this Convention who have spoken upon either side, for the calm, deliberate, and statesmanlike manner in which they have discussed this subject. I think my friend from Marin is mistaken when he says this subject has not been discussed in the temper befitting a Constitutional Convention. If we have deviated from the proper course it has been an error of the head and not of the heart. We have in no instance, as far as I am able to recollect, appealed, or attempted to appeal to the passions of any of the members of this Convention. And let me say to this Convention, that whatever we may do to-day, or hereafter, upon this subject, we cannot go as far as the Courts of the country have gone. I appeal to the decisions of the Courts all over the Union to bear me out in that assertion. It is a very grave mistake to suppose, as far as I have been able to observe, that we are taking radical ground; that we are going in advance, in taking the action which we propose here. We are only attempting to mark out a line of policy by which to treat these great questions, and in doing so we are following, or attempting to follow, as far as the matter is applicable to this case, the steps taken by others elsewhere.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we find that in this Convention, as in all bodies of this character, almost every gentleman entertains a different view upon almost every question that arises. And that, sir, is right. It shows personality; it shows thoughtfulness; it shows that he has some mind of his own, and is not afraid to express it. As far as we are concerned, we are anxious for, and we invoke the criticisms of every member on this floor relative to this section, or any other section, which this committee has reported. But what I wish to say is this: We are now about to vote, and the friends of these measures must agree upon something, if we hope to accomplish anything. No member of this Convention can get everything he may want into this section; it is impossible. And while we do not claim that it represents the best ideas that can be produced, we do claim that your committee have done all that was in their power to perform faithfully the duty imposed upon them; they have agreed upon this section as now reported, without a single dissenting voice, and I ask you to at least believe that they have handled the subject with candor and fairness.

Now, sir, I am aware that some of the friends—as those who claim to be the friends of these measures—have attempted to criticise this report in a manner that would be far more apt to injure it than the criticisms of those who are openly pronounced against it; far more. An open attack can always be met; but, sir, one of these side hits, one of these flank movements, of those who claim to be the friends of the measures, hurts vastly more than an open, bold, manly stand, by an open and avowed enemy. Now, let us see what our friends argue. Some gentlemen on this floor came to me, and said, first, that there was too much in this section. To-day four gentlemen addressed this body, who are really, heart and soul, friendly, yet they say there is too much in the section. Others again say there is not enough in it. Now, gentlemen, I ask you, you who think there is not enough by half, and you who think there is too much by half, to average up the thing, concede something, and go for the report of the committee, and I think you will not make much of a mistake. The question now is, gentlemen of the Convention, not as to whether every "i" is dotted or every "t" crossed right; not as to whether there is some faulty construction of language, but whether this idea presented here is right and proper. And if the gentlemen who are opposed to these measures criticise our action because we have made these revised reports, I think they are wrong. I think it was our duty, when we found, during the course of this long discussion, that we had made mistakes, to correct them, because my friend from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, did admit that some regulation was necessary.

Again, some of the friends of these measures say that the Commissioners will be in the hands of the railroad companies when they are elected, and in the same argument they say you can trust the Legislature elected by the same people and subject to the same influences. We have no faith in the Legislature. I could not understand my friend from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, distinctly, a few moments since, but my understanding of his speech, as far as I could hear, was that this matter should be left to the Legislature, because, he says, you can trust the sovereign people—they are always right, but it would be utter folly to trust the Commissioners, who are elected by the same sovereign power. I cannot for the life of me comprehend his logic.

Again, Mr. Chairman, some of the friends of this side of the question say that you cannot trust the Commissioners without having some power behind them to regulate them. Don't you trust the Executive of the State? Don't you trust the judicial officers all over the State, elected by the people, and is there any power behind them except the power of responsibility to the people for the faithful performance of the duties imposed upon them, and except the other power—the right of trial and conviction by the Legislature, and expulsion from office in case of a failure to perform these duties correctly? For one, sir, I do not think this line of argument is good. I do believe if you can trust the people to elect members of the Legislature, who, our friends say, should control this subject, you can trust the people to elect Commissioners to perform like duties, more especially so, as these Commissioners will have no other duty to perform, and there will be ample time for them to obtain a complete knowledge of the subject, and to become thoroughly familiar with the duties they will have to perform. I wish to say to our friends on this floor that I have never known an instance, and I do not believe any gentleman can point to an instance, where the Legislature, however honest and well meaning, have or could have regulated this matter of freights and fares. It is not a question of honesty, it is a question of ability. I know it has been claimed by one or two members on this floor that the majority of Legislatures are corrupt. We do not claim any such thing. I never have asserted or thought it. But we do say, and challenge contradiction, that if you leave this great subject to the Legislature it will be an unending source of corruption. We do not want to tempt the great corporations of the country; neither do we want to place temptation in the way of the Legislature.

My friend from San Francisco, Colonel Barnes, said to-day that there was no doubt in the world but that we should regulate this matter; that the question was not even a debatable one. That the only objection he made to the report, after saying that there was not power enough, that the manner of electing the Commissioners was wrong. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, says the Commission is all right, but they have too much power; that their duties should be merely to observe what is going on; I suppose he would have them stand at the outside door of the railroad offices, and there they would be told that there was no occasion for them to come in, and having no authority to go in, that is all their investigations would amount to. If we are to have Commissions at all let us have a Commission with sufficient powers to accomplish something in the interests of the people. Let us have a Commission with sufficient power to place it in a position where it can enforce its decisions through the Courts of the country. Let us have a Commission with sufficient powers as will place these great corporations under the control of the people. Every one admits that they should be regulated by some power. I believe this is the best mode of regulation we can get. This Convention is expected to perform the great duty with which it has been charged fearlessly and conscientiously. I know of no reason, sir, nor have I heard any reason given, why these corporations should not be placed in the same position in their relations with the community as toll roads, bridges, ferries, in accordance with the decisions of the highest Courts in the country. These Commissioners will perform no greater duty for the State than are performed by the Board of Supervisors of a county when they fix the rates of toll upon toll roads in the county. Why, sir, for years and years the Canal Commissioners of New York and Pennsylvania performed annually greater duties than those imposed upon these Commissioners.

Now, let me say, that so far as this committee is concerned, and as far, I believe, as the friends of railroad regulation are concerned, this section represents their best judgment. That if it does not meet the views of the gentlemen who oppose it, they ought to present something for our consideration that seems to be more effectual, for nothing less effectual will meet the wishes of the people of this State. If we attempt to regulate at all, let us regulate in such a manner as, when we shall have accomplished it, we shall have accomplished something that will do some good. The gentlemen on the other side seem to think that because we favor this style of regulation, through Commissioners, we have no confidence in any regulation which may be made by the Legislature, or by any other power in the State. I claim, Mr. Chairman, that it can be best done through a Commission, because its past experience of people who have given thought to this subject, has shown that a Commission is the only power, the only body, that can give the time and attention which are necessary to qualify them to handle the subject as it ought to be handled.

The arguments made by the gentlemen who are opposed to this report seem to be, that regulation is all right; that we ought to regulate, but there ought not to be anybody to do it. That it is all right to have Commissioners; but the Commissioners should not be endowed with any power. That it is all right to have something in the Constitution on this subject; but that something should not mean anything. That it is all right for us to express our opinions in the Convention; but those opinions should be clothed in such language as that it will have no beneficial effect upon the interests of the country. For one, I am in favor of this section just as it is. I believe it ought to be adopted, and I know and feel that if it is adopted, it will meet the average judgment of the people of this State. I know it is experimental in some respects; I understand that; but, sir, not so much so as it would to leave it to the Legislature of the State, which meets but once in two years, to pass bills regulating freights and fares. The Legislature would meet once in two years, pass a bill regulating freights and fares, and adjourn. They do not meet again for two years. These Commissioners are in session all the time, and it must be assumed that these Commissioners will endeavor to treat the companies and the people with the same fairness—being elected by the same people—that the Legislature would, for, when they see that any regulation or rule which they have made, is wrong, they have power, under this section, to correct it at once; while, if the Legislature makes a mistake, it would be two years before it could be corrected. Again, if it shall be found from experience, that the Commission is not what we want, an amendment to the Constitution can be made in two years. So I do not see why we cannot trust this question to the Commission. I believe it is the safest for the people, and the best for all concerned. Let those who are in favor of regulating freights and fares come to the support of this section.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I most respectfully move the previous question.

MR. LARKIN. I second the call for the previous question.

MR. STEDMAN. I second it.

MR. CROSS. I second it.

MR. SWING. So do I.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: Does the previous question cut off all amendments.

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir, it brings us to a vote on the pending amendments. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the main question was ordered—ayes, 97; noes, not taken.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale.

Division was called for, and the amendment was adopted by a vote of 78 ayes to 50 noes.

MR. McCALLUM. I offer an amendment to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the first three lines of section twenty and insert as follows: 'Section 20. A First Railroad Commissioner, a Second Railroad Commissioner, and a Third Railroad Commissioner shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the next general election. The term of office of the First Railroad Commissioner shall be four years, and his successor shall be elected every four years after such first election. The term of office of the Second and Third Railroad Commissioner shall be two years, and their successors shall be elected every two years after such first election.'"

MR. LARUE. I offer an amendment to the substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word four and insert six, in line three. And insert after line three, 'provided, that the Commissioners elected at the first election shall at their first meeting so classify themselves by lot that one of them shall go out of office at the end of two years, one of them at the end of four years, and one of them at the end of six years.'"

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I wish to state, in explanation: the first three lines of section twenty, which my amendment proposes to strike out—my amendment proposes only as to the question of the election of two Commissioners for two years, while one shall be elected for four years. The mode proposed by Mr. Larue will not meet the difficulty desired to be met by this Convention. I do not think any considerable number here desire to elect any one of the Commissioners for over four years. That is long enough for any one of them. In order to get at this idea of dividing them by lot, it would be necessary that one of them should hold for six years; and it was for that reason, and to avoid that difficulty, so as to prevent a division of them by lot—which requires six years, four years, and two years. Now, Mr. President, I wish to say one word on this point. I am not satisfied to elect for four years these Commissioners—to hold the office for four years—so that, in case the railroad companies should get control of a majority of them, we will not have to wait for four years to get rid of them. I think it would be a very great mistake to elect all three of these Commissioners for four years. The idea that presented itself to my mind was this: we elect our United States Senators for six years, our Congressmen for two years, our members of the Assembly for two years, and our Senators for four years. In that case these Commissioners will not all go out of office together; some one of them will hold over.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I believe we have been debating this proposition for about three weeks, and we have had various propositions before the Convention; we have debated them quite fully, adopted amendments, and lopped off various objectionable things. But I understand all our work has been swept away, and that the committee having charge of this subject have brought in to-day a new proposition, which has been read over once at the desk, and now we are compelled instantly to pass on that proposition. I venture to say that not one third of the members on this floor can tell what the proposition is. I could not, and I have read it over. I would not undertake to explain it. I see it is, to some extent, substantially what we had before. But it is not, according to my notion, sufficient to meet the emergencies of the occasion. It does not, according to my notion, embody the sentiments of this Convention. It will not—and I say it with the utmost respect to the gentlemen proposing it—it will not, in my opinion, operate. It gives them power to establish freights and fares, but I cannot find where they are given any power to enforce their decrees after they have made them. If it is in there, I would like to have it pointed out. I had an amendment which I proposed to offer, but I have had no opportunity to do so. I would like to have any gentleman inform me in what single respect this is binding upon any railroad company, or any other corporation in the State of California. It gives the Commission the right to do these things, but who is to obey them. Why not insert some clause, that when these rates are established they shall be binding upon railroads. It gives them power to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freights, and to publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of railroad and other transportation companies, and they shall have the process of the Courts. Process to enforce the rates of freights and fares? Process to examine the books, records, and papers?

MR. ESTEE. Does the gentleman want an answer? Lines eight and nine provide that they shall have power to establish rates of charges for passengers and freights. They can enforce these decrees through the medium of the Courts. They enforce everything they do in that respect through the medium of the Courts.

MR. HAGER. They have the right to establish rates of freights and fares, examine books, records, and papers, and for this purpose they shall have process of Court; to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies; to send for persons and papers; administer oaths; take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action. Now, suppose their mandates are disobeyed, what action will the Courts take? Are they to pronounce judgment? If a man comes and refuses to take an oath, they have no power to enforce it, and report it to the Court. The Court says: fine this man five dollars, and let him go back. I don't see that there is any substantial power given to them here. Now, in my amendment, I have put in a provision that it shall be binding upon the corporations, and if they do not obey the Commissioners any party aggrieved may go into Court and see that these orders are enforced. That means something. I agree with the gentleman from Santa Clara, that this provision, as it stands, amounts to nothing. I say it is a delusion and a snare. It is worse. It takes away from the Legislature all power over these corporations, and fails to confer that power upon any other body. You go to the Legislature, and you find that the power has been taken away from that body by the Constitution. You go to the Commission, and you find that they have not the power to remedy the evils complained of. We have been three weeks debating this proposition, and we should not rush it through at the last. We had better make haste slowly. I do not desire to be forced to a vote upon this matter to-night, and I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz. I rise to a question of privilege. Last night my right as a member of this Convention was infringed upon. As a member of the Committee on Education, I was unable to reach the committee rooms without special permission from some parties who appeared to have charge of one of the passage ways leading to the committee rooms. Another passage way was barricaded. On the adjournment of the committee, wishing to retire, I was stopped on the staircase by some one, and informed that I could not go that way, that I must go some other way if I wished to retire. Some parties, other than proper authorities, seemed to have control of the building. I do not wish to be captious, but I do not wish to be ordered about like a dog, when I am attending to my legitimate business as a delegate of this Convention. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be requested to inform this Convention by what authority portions of this building appropriated for the use of this body are used by other parties for illegal purposes.

MR. FREUD. I second the motion.

The resolution was adopted.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into——

TRANSPORTATION COMMISSIONER'S REPORT.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman will please wait one moment. The Chair desires to present a communication from the Transportation Commissioner, in answer to a resolution adopted by this Convention.

THE SECRETARY read:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF TRANSPORTATION,
SACRAMENTO, California, December 3, 1878.

To the honorable the Members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: In pursuance of a resolution of your honorable body, passed on the twenty-second of November, ultimo, requesting the "Commissioner of Transportation to furnish to this Convention, at as early a date as practicable, a compilation of all the general and special laws hitherto passed under which railroad corporations have been formed, or franchises granted, together with an abstract of subsidies granted, and subscriptions made to corporations by the State and the several counties thereof, provided the expenses of the printing thereof be not charged to the funds provided for the expenses of this Convention," I herewith transmit a compilation, by title only, of all the Acts relating to railroads and railroad corporations (other than street railroads), from the year A. D. eighteen hundred and fifty down to the year A. D. eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, with marginal indices showing the year when enacted, date of passage, chapter, and page of statutes containing them.

It was not deemed essential to the attainment of the objects of the Convention to compile more than the titles of the Acts, with an abstract of the State, county, and municipal liability incurred and outstanding.

I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. F. TUTTLE,
Commissioner of Transportation.

Following are the documents accompanying the report:

The State of California guarantees the interest upon $1,500,000 of seven per cent. bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company for twenty years.

(a) San Joaquin County issued $250,000 of county bonds to cover her subscription to the Western Pacific Railroad Company stock. The railroad company refusing to deliver the stock, the county sued the company, and the matter is still in litigation, the company wishing to compromise for $100,000 worth of bonds, but the county refuses to accept, still claiming the stock.

(b) The principal and interest of these San Mateo County bonds have been paid by the Southern Pacific and San José Railroad Company.

(c) Funded July, 1868, into eight per cent. county bonds.

* In exchange for railroad county bonds.

† Subscription to railroad company's stock.

ORDERED PRINTED.

MR. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I move that four hundred and eighty copies of the proposition introduced by me yesterday, relative to the hours of labor, be printed.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The hours of labor on all contracts performed for the State, county, and municipal governments shall not exceed eight hours a day.

SEC. 2. The hours of labor on all work done for corporations doing business under charter from this State shall not exceed eight hours a day.

SEC. 3. All State offices, county and municipal, shall remain open for the transaction of business eight hours each business day.

SEC. 4. Eight hours shall constitute a legal day's work in each and every department of the State, county, and municipal governments.

SEC. 5. This article shall be enforced by appropriate legislation.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 46 ayes to 39 noes.

THE PRESIDENT. The article will be printed and referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

QUESTION OF INFORMATION.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I rise for a question of information. I have been in the habit, as a great many members of this Convention have, of coming to this chamber in the evening and doing writing, and studying, and reading books, pamphlets, papers, etc. Now, Mr. President, I have my room and can read there just as well as in this chamber, but I understood that this chamber was for the use of this Convention in the evening as well as during the day. Last night I came here, as several other gentlemen did; we found that the hall was not lighted, and, on looking around the chamber, we found a great many members with lighted candles on their desks. The information I wish is, how this comes? I was absent, and the Convention may have taken some action, but I understand that the lights were put out by the order of Hon. S. G. Hilborn. I desire to know by what authority that gentleman gave this order; whether it was by the authority of this Convention, or by the assumed authority of the Chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and whether this chamber is to be lighted in future, or not?

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I am very happy to give the gentleman the information he wants. In the first place, no corrupt Legislature was ever so wasteful of the people's money as to light up the Assembly chamber at night when the Assembly was not in session. It is left for this body to establish a different precedent. There never was any right on the part of the Sergeant-at-Arms to spend thirty dollars a night in lighting up this large chamber for a half-dozen stragglers to come here and read at the expense of the State. It has never been the practice in any Legislature to light up these chambers for the benefit of half a dozen men who might come in here to read. It has been the practice among corrupt legislators, when they wanted to come here to read, to have the gas lighted in some of these side brackets and leave their own desks and go there to read. They never asked that this great hall should be lighted at the expense of the State for their individual convenience. I say that this has never been asked by any one before until these reformers—these people who come up here to stand by the rights of the people—come here and demand a different practice. I certainly was not aware until a few days ago that this thing was going on; and yesterday morning I went around among as many of these people as I could see, and asked if there was any necessity of continuing this improper expenditure. Now, of course, I have no right to order the Sergeant-at-Arms—and I merely asked him why he was doing it. He said he had done it at the request of some of the members; and I merely told him that it was not the practice when the Legislature was in session, and that if I was him I would not do it. I did not order him. I merely told him that if I was him I would shut it off, and then if the Convention ordered it, he could turn it on again. I have been trying to beat some economical sense into this senseless body. [Laughter.]

MR. FILCHER. Will the gentleman inform the Convention by what authority the hall has been lighted all this time?

MR. HILBORN. I suppose at the suggestion of some of these reformers.

MR. REYNOLDS. I would like to inquire of the Chairman why he did not cut off this expense sixty-five days ago, and save the Convention Fund some one thousand nine hundred and fifty or two thousand dollars? Why wait until this late day?

MR. HILBORN. It was only two or three days ago that I heard this thing was going on. I do not come here evenings. I buy coal oil for my own hotel.

MR. WATERS. I have met the Senator here myself when the light was burning.

MR. REYNOLDS. So have I.

MR. STEDMAN. I desire to inform the Convention that the gentleman from Solano voted for an appropriation of two dollars a day for the purpose of lighting this room and other rooms, consequently I am satisfied that he did know it was lit, and I have seen him here, too.

THE PRESIDENT. There is no question before the Convention.

MR. REYNOLDS. Since economy is the order of the day, I would like to be informed where he has started the skating rink.

MR. HILBORN. I do not understand——

MR. REYNOLDS. With the three hundred pounds of ice.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section twenty and pending amendments are before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: Nothing can exceed the patience and toleration of this committee, in hearing the discussion of the report of the Committee on Corporations. I do not propose to inflict upon it any prolix speech. We are at length drifting from the open sea to the shore, slowly if not surely. Now, I wish, for the purpose of voting advisedly, to pass hurriedly over the substitute reported by the committee, and the amendments that have been suggested, and in doing so, I shall not read from this substitute, or from the proposed amendments, anything that relates to the qualifications of these officers, or to the mode of their selection, but simply as to the powers of this Railroad Commission. I do this for the reason that the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, has left out everything in respect to the qualifications of the officers, or the manner in which they shall be chosen, whether elected by the people or appointed. The substitute reported by the committee is as follows:

"Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts; to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in this and the foregoing sections."

In the first place, I will premise that if nothing better is obtained than this substitute, I shall vote for it, but at the same time I think that something else better and clearer and less ambiguous can be adopted by this committee. But I do not base my qualified opposition upon the same grounds as the gentleman from San Francisco does. He says that there is nothing binding in it; that the rates to be established by this Commission are not binding, or at least that there are no words in this substitute which say that they shall be binding. That is entirely unnecessary. If the word "shall" is used, it necessarily implies something like permanence. The received meaning is that it does not mean simply to point out or to designate, but the idea of permanence is associated with the word "shall;" therefore, when the committee say that "they shall have power and it shall be their duty to establish rates of charges," the idea of permanence is associated more or less with that expression, and it is not necessary to add that their rates shall be binding. Just as in the Constitution of the United States we have the words that Congress shall have the power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies; and the words themselves, ex vi termini, imply permanence. I do not stand, therefore, on the same ground of opposition to this substitute as the gentleman from San Francisco. The substitute says they shall have power "to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroads and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have the process of the Courts, to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions, and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor annually their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important." Now, the query suggests itself, what kind of complaints? The word complaint is understood by all lawyers. It covers a bill in equity or a suit at common law. What is the meaning of this word complaint, and why is it that afterwards it is added: "Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any such companies?" In other words, you can go into the Supreme Court and institute your suit. But what does this word "complaint" mean? Does it mean that this Board of Commissioners is to be a forum, and when we come into that forum we have a right to litigate any kind of a complaint. Or does it leave to some future Legislature to define this clause and the meaning of this word "complaint?" I say that it is ambiguous. This language would have to be construed hereafter. We know not what construction will be placed upon it, and it will be a poor subterfuge for us to say hereafter that we did not vote understandingly upon the substitute; that we did not know the precise meaning of the word "complaint;" that we did not know what meaning would be attached to that phraseology; that we supposed a different meaning would be attached to it than what the Courts will attach to it. That will be a poor and lame excuse. It is for us to feel our way, and be sure of the phraseology in framing fundamental laws. "To hear complaints." Complaints of what kind? Complaints of undue or unjust discrimination? Complaints of extortion? It does not say so. It says complaints, and therefore we will have to depend upon some future Legislature to define that word.

Now, sir, there has been a great deal said about our Legislatures. They have been attacked mercilessly, and I think often without cause, and yet it is proposed to relegate to some future Legislature to this divided body the definition of the word "complaint," and to enact laws that will carry out the supposed meaning of the framers of this Constitution. "To hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts." In the original section the word "penalties" was used. This leaves it out. The word "decisions" is used now, and seems to take the place of the word "penalties." What, then, is the nature of this forum? How will an attorney draw up a complaint in it? And after he has gone through its routine, what is the necessary process for us to get into the Superior Court? I say this language is shrouded in ambiguity. If this provision was borrowed from some other Constitution, if it had the light of judicial construction shed upon it, then we could also incorporate with it the judicial construction which has been given to it in the Courts of that State or county from which we borrow it. The parentage of this section is not shown us, but we do know that this whole language is shrouded in mystery. I read further, "and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important." Now, if it is proposed to combine the legislative, executive, and judicial departments in this tribunal, if it is proposed to make it a coördinate department of the grand departments of this State, in the distribution of powers, then it would be subject to the criticism which has been expressed against it; subject in a great degree to the criticisms of the gentleman from Alameda. It would be a kind of composite tribunal. Its jurisdiction would not be well defined. It would have legislative power, executive power, and judicial power.

Now, sir, I have gone hurriedly over this substitute. At the same time, I admit that the learned committee who have gotten it up have been actuated by the best of motives, and that their object is to accomplish a good end; but, before I vote for a proposition, I at least want to be informed of what it means. If it does not come to us from any other State or country, then we should be a little more particular as to the language, unless the language is so clear that any one can understand it at first blush.

The gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, proposed an amendment. I will leave out of his amendment so much as relates to the qualifications of this Board of Commissioners, and how they shall be chosen, and simply read so much as refers to their powers:

"The Commissioners, or a majority of them, shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to establish reasonable and just tariffs and rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freights by all railroad corporations; and for this purpose they shall have power to administer oaths, to examine the books and papers of such corporations, to summon and examine the officers and stockholders thereof, and other witnesses, to hear complaints, inquire into and correct abuses, prevent partial and unjust discriminations and extortion in the rates of charges and the tariffs for the transportation of freights and passengers. They shall publish, semi-annually, full statements of the tariffs and rates of charges established and authorized by them, and of all abuses, discriminations, and extortion, and report the same to the Governor. Whenever such tariffs and rates shall be established and published, they shall be binding upon, and must be observed by, all such corporations doing business in this State, and may be enforced by the Commissioners, or by any party in interest, through the Courts; but nothing herein shall prevent any person from maintaining an action for injury or damage against such corporations. The Legislature shall confer on the Commissioners such further powers as shall be necessary to enable them more fully to perform their duties; and it shall pass laws, with adequate penalties—to the extent, if necessary, of forfeiture of the franchises of such corporations—to enforce the action of the Commissioners. The Commissioners, and each of them, may be removed from office by the Legislature, by a majority vote of all the members elected to each house, and shall also be liable, personally and on their official bonds, to any party aggrieved, for neglect of duty, or any malfeasance or corruption in office."

The word "reasonable" is used in this amendment, and also in Judge Campbell's. "To hear complaints"—this same objectionable phraseology occurs in this amendment. "Prevent partial and unjust discriminations." I undertake to say that these words—"to prevent partial and unjust discriminations"—are not in harmony with the previous section, which we have already adopted. This committee has adopted a section that there shall be no discrimination. Why, therefore, add any words of this character: "to prevent partial and unjust discriminations?" Why, that would imply that there could be discrimination. It says that the discrimination shall not be unjust, but it implies that there may be discrimination, and that is not in harmony with the section which we have already adopted, that there shall be no discrimination. It is upon that familiar principle of law, as old as the days of Lord Bacon, "that, as exception strengthens the force of a law in cases not excepted, so enumeration weakens it in cases not enumerated." Therefore, it would seem to be implied from Judge Hager's amendment, that there may be discrimination, and I say that that is not in unison with the section we have already adopted. I read further: "Prevent partial and unjust discriminations and extortion in the rates of charges and the tariffs for the transportation of freights and passengers. They shall publish, semi-annually, full statements of the tariffs and rates of charges established and authorized by them, and of all abuses, discriminations, and extortion, and report the same to the Governor. Whenever such tariffs and rates shall be established and published, they shall be binding upon, and must be observed by all such corporations doing business in this State, and may be enforced by the Commissioners, or by any party in interest, through the Courts."

Now, the distinguished gentleman from San Francisco says: "What sanctions are there in this substitute report of the committee?" I inquire of him what sanctions are there in his amendment? He says that something may be enforced through the medium of the Courts, but I find none of these sanctions which he speaks about. Therefore, it seems to me that his amendment is equally objectionable. Now, we are all endeavoring to arrive at the same result. We should abandon this pride of opinion, this disposition simply to carry a proposition because it comes from a certain source. It is for us to be sure of the phraseology; put upon it the proper construction, and see that it accomplishes the end for which we design it. It is not to be supposed that our work will be entirely perfect; that it will rise like some Doric column, the base corresponding to the die, the die to the shaft, and the shaft to the capital; but, at least, we should know something of the materials which enter into the structure, and of the order of architecture which it attempts to illustrate.

Now, I will proceed to consider the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell. He leaves for a subsequent section the definition of the qualifications of these officers and how they shall be chosen, but he says this:

"Said Commissioners shall have power, and it shall be their duty to examine the books, papers, records, and documents of all railroad corporations organized or hereafter to be organized under the laws of this State, or any portion of whose road shall be in the limits of this State, to investigate their affairs, ascertain their receipts and disbursements, and by a majority vote to establish reasonable rates of fares and freights upon all or any of such roads, or upon any portions thereof, whenever and as often as they may deem necessary, and alter the same when in their judgment it shall be proper, and to make and publish schedules of such rates. Said Commissioners, and each of them, shall have access to the books, records, papers, and documents of all such corporations, and any officer of any such corporation, or any person having the care, custody, or control of any such books, records, papers, or documents, who shall, at any reasonable time, refuse to any Commissioner access thereto, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined not more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. Said Commissioners, and each of them, shall have power in the discharge of their duties to administer oaths and affirmations, issue subpœnas for and examine witnesses under oath or affirmation; and any witness who shall willfully swear or affirm falsely to any material matter before said Commissioners, or either of them, shall be liable to all the pains and penalties affixed by law to the crime of perjury; and any witness who shall fail to attend or shall refuse to testify in any material matter before said Commissioners, or either of them, shall be punished for contempt by the Superior Court, as in other cases of contempt. Such Commissioners shall annually, and whenever requested by him, report their proceedings and such information as may be proper, to the Governor. Any such corporation refusing to conform to such reasonable rates as shall be established by said Commissioners, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding twenty thousand dollars, and shall be liable to the party injured for all damages sustained by him, and, in the discretion of the Judge or jury trying the case, for exemplary damages; and every officer, servant, or employé thereof, who shall willfully refuse to conform to such rates, or who shall demand or receive rates in excess thereof, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. These provisions shall be deemed self-executing, but the Legislature may enforce them by additional legislation, and may confer additional powers and duties upon said Commissioners. The rates of freights and fares established by said Commissioners shall in all controversies and proceedings, whether civil or criminal, be deemed prima facie just and reasonable. Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts to be kept by all such corporations, and returns thereof shall be made to said Commissioners whenever required by them, or either of them, and any railroad corporation failing to keep such accounts, or to make such returns when so requested, shall forfeit its road and franchise."

He says they shall have power to "establish reasonable rates of fares and freights upon all or any of such roads, or upon any portions thereof, whenever and as often as they may deem necessary, and alter the same when, in their judgment, it shall be proper." Now, here is no unnecessary phraseology, and yet the power is reserved expressly, in words that are clear and unambiguous, that this Commission may at any time alter their rates. Suppose that the Courts should consider these rates as unreasonable. As soon as that decision is had the Commissioners can revise the rates. The language is clear and expressive, and is not subject to two constructions. "Said Commissioners and each of them shall have access to the books, records, papers, and documents of all such corporations, and any officer of any such corporation, or any person having the care, custody, or control of any such books, records, papers, or documents, who shall, at any reasonable time, refuse to any Commissioner access thereto, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined not more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the County Jail not more than one year." There is a sanction. We do not have to go to the gentleman from Alameda to ask him where his sanctions are, but we realize as we read his amendment that there is a sanction, a sanction founded upon an iron constitutional provision. It is not subject to the whims or caprices of a subsequent Legislature, but it is defined, and it is self-executing. "Said Commissioners and each of them shall have power in the discharge of their duties to administer oaths and affirmations, issue subpœnas for and examine witnesses under oath or affirmation, and any witness who shall willfully swear or affirm falsely to any material matter before said Commissioners, or either of them, shall be liable to all the pains and penalties affixed by law to the crime of perjury." That looks like a sanction. "And any witness who shall fail to attend, or shall refuse to testify in any material matter before said Commissioners, or either of them, shall be punished for contempt by the Superior Court, as in other cases of contempt." That looks like a sanction. "The rates of freights and fares established by said Commissioners shall in all controversies and proceedings, whether civil or criminal, be deemed prima facie just and reasonable." That is a good provision. In other words we start with the prima facie case, that these rates are reasonable, and the burden is upon the contestant or complainant to show that the rates are unreasonable. His counsel may attempt to show, and may succeed in showing, that these rates are not reasonable, but it is for him to overcome the presumption, that the rates are reasonable, and that the Commissioners have done their duty.

"Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts to be kept by all such corporations, and returns thereof shall be made to said Commissioners whenever required by them, and any railroad corporation failing to keep such accounts or to make such returns when so requested, shall forfeit its road and franchise." That looks like a sanction. Now, sir, I can understand the language of the gentleman from Alameda. It does not need any interpretation. It interprets itself. It is not dependent upon the construction which may be given to it by the Supreme Court or by the various Superior Courts of this State as heretofore established. We all understand it, and it stands there in the face of these railroad corporations and monopolies, so that while running their roads they may read it. They know exactly what they must confront, and knowing the range of these punishments, from one dollar up to twenty thousand dollars, and from one dollar up to five thousand dollars, they will understand its full significance. It seems to me that this amendment commends itself to our approval.

I do not stand here in the attitude of doing any injustice to these railroads. I fully recognize their advantages. I know that they have largely contributed to the development of this State. I know that they are doing a great deal in civilizing this State, and all the cities in this State, and I want to see more of them. I hope to see the day when the innovation upon the old ruts of the past by that taciturn man, George Stephenson, who in England essayed for the first time to build his road on the quaking morass between Liverpool and Manchester, thus laying the foundation of the great system of railways between the Tyne and the Arundel; I say, I hope to see this same innovation speeding its way over the hills and through the valleys of this great State, extending, as it does, seven hundred miles in length by two or three hundred in width, from the Sierras to the sea, rich in its mineral products and richer still in its agricultural wealth. I hope we will all live to see the day. Then, it will be asked, "Why do you take this position?" To such interlocutor I respond, "Why do you concede to us the power to establish rates of freights and fares?" You say that we have the power. In whose interests should that power be exercised? Is there only one party to be benefited—the party that has gotten the franchise—or should the benefit accrue equally in favor of the people of this State? If we have the power to regulate it, in whose interests should it be regulated? Most certainly not solely in the interests of the corporations, but in the interest of all. The distinguished gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, says that he admits the power, and I will just say here, he is always clear in his announcement of the law. He admits the power—whether by virtue of the reservation—in our present Constitution, which reserves the right to the Legislature to alter or abolish the charter, or whether it be derived from the police power of the State, he admits that the power does exist. It may be argued either from the police power or from the reserved power in our present Constitution, in respect to corporations. This power, then, existing, should it not be exercised in the interests of the people? Surely I think so.

As I said before, if nothing better can be adopted than the substitute reported by the committee, I shall give it my support, but I see the difficulties attendant upon it, and I think that by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, we will have clear sailing. No amendment has been offered in respect to the time and mode in which these Railroad Commissioners shall be chosen, but that has nothing to do with the power. We have simply been discussing the powers, and the legitimacy of their exercise as proposed by this substitute, and by these amendments. Therefore, I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda will prevail.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: Is there any such amendment before the house?

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not aware of any such amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: After this prolonged debate, I feel reluctance in further occupying the attention of the committee on this subject, but the substitute for section twenty, reported yesterday by the Committee on Corporations, has, to some extent, revolutionized the subject and this debate, by the recommendation of a new proposition upon which we are suddenly called upon to act. As I said last evening, I do not think that this new report is an improvement on the one first presented. I believe if this substitute should be adopted, it will prove to be inoperative, and will not effect the purpose intended to be accomplished by the committee. In my opinion the powers to be conferred upon these Commissioners should be ministerial—entirely ministerial. The enforcement of action should be through the judicial and legislative departments of the government. I am not in favor of clothing them with exclusive judicial powers, or semi-judicial powers, or with legislative powers, any further than may be necessary to the full performance of their ministerial duties. I must confess, this substitute to me is incomprehensible. I could not very well interpret its meaning. Perhaps my powers are inadequate, but if I were called upon as a Judge, to explain and enforce its provisions, I could not do it. I may be compelled to vote for it, as it is, if it cannot be improved, but if I do, I may live perhaps to see the day when I will regret that I ever favored a proposition of such questionable powers and doubtful phraseology. As it reads, the Commissioners shall have the power "to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freights." That is all well enough. "To examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have the process of the Courts." I presume the process of the Courts is limited to the books and records. I presume it is so intended. They are given the process of the Courts for the purpose of examining the books, records, and papers of the railroad company. Next, "to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies." To hear complaints. For what purpose and in what form? Whether it is a legal investigation on complaint, where parties are summoned to appear and answer, nobody can tell. How are they to hear and inquire into these complaints? As a Court, or as a jury, or both? And how are they to pronounce judgment, etc.? "To send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action." Does this mean that complaints shall be filed with the Commissioners against railroad companies, and thereupon a regular trial, with or without a jury, is to be had and a judgment is to be pronounced? How is all this to be accomplished, and by what machinery? Is it a Court of record with a seal, and with Clerks, Sheriffs, etc.? "Report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action." What constitutes a contempt within the meaning of this section? What action are the Courts to take? The section does not inform us. In this respect it is indefinite, and would probably puzzle Philadelphia lawyers, who have the reputation of being experts in such matters, to determine the mode of proceeding.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I will ask what our statute prescribes for the punishment of contempts, if it regulates, except to limit the penalty, and in what class of cases?

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: Our Courts of justice have powers for punishing contempts, and these are regulated by statutory laws; but this Commission is not a Court, or a part of the judicial department, as established by the old, or even this proposed new Constitution, and our statutes regulating contempts and their punishment will have no application to this proposed tribunal, unless made so by express words. It has not the ordinary powers of a Court to enforce its judgments and orders, or even to preserve order in its presence. The section further reads, "and enforce their decisions and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law." Now, what decisions are they to enforce through the Courts, and in whose name, and by what manner of proceeding is it to be done? I would like to have the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations explain these matters, and inform us as to what is intended, and the manner in which it is to be done by the authority of the section as reported. How are the Commissioners to enforce their decisions and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts? Is there to be a trial before the Commissioners only, or is there also to be a trial before the Courts?

Mr. ESTEE. I will state what the committee means. First, their decision establishing rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight; second, any action that they may take as to the examination of the books, papers, and records of railroad and other transportation companies; any action they may take as to the subpenaing of witnesses and hearing testimony.

Mr. HAGER. But that is not contempt of Court.

MR. ESTEE. They report that to the Court if they fail to obey. I suppose that the intention of that sentence relative to contempt was this: If they issued a subpœna, and the witness failed to appear, they could report that fact to a competent Court having jurisdiction of the subject matter, and of course that Court, under statute regulation, would enforce their orders and compel the attendance of witnesses, or compel the companies to produce their books, papers, and records.

MR. HAGER. If it had been sufficiently comprehensive for such purposes we would understand it; but it does not say so. It reads they shall have power to "examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have the process of the Courts," and then goes on to say, "to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action." For what?

MR. ESTEE. It was not intended to make this a code of laws. This section merely declares the powers and principles, and of course, the Legislature would have to come in and attend to the details. We admit that this section is not intended as a code.

MR. HAGER. There is the difficulty. It is inoperative of itself. It must be construed by the Courts before you can make it operative at all; and in the absence of legislation what construction will they put upon it? As I have said, I am unable to determine.

MR. ESTEE. Will the amendment proposed by the gentleman himself be self operating?

MR. HAGER. It will.

MR. ESTEE. Without any action of the Legislature?

MR. HAGER. I think so.

MR. ESTEE. Then I cannot read English.

MR. HAGER. They here have the power to establish rates of fares and freights. There is no doubt about that. But as I said last night, after they are established there is no provision that makes them binding on the companies or that requires a company to obey.

MR. ESTEE. Will the gentleman allow another question. Under the Constitution there are certain Courts organized in the State—the Supreme Court, the District Courts, and County Courts. I want to ask the gentleman, if the Legislature had given no powers or provided no means for the carrying out of their jurisdiction, if they could perform their duties at all, under the present Constitution. Take the jurisdiction of District Courts. Could District Courts operate or perform their duties, establish rights and try cases, without the enabling Acts of the Legislature prescribing the means?

MR. HAGER. They might, to some extent, exercise certain inherent powers pertaining to all Courts, and in other respects they might have none. If the Constitution of itself clothed them with express jurisdiction and authority, I presume they could exercise such without the aid of legislation. An enabling Act might confer additional powers, and regulate the procedure. But, as I said, this is not a Court; it is not a Legislature. It is a Commission, with no inherent or implied powers, and ought only to exercise ministerial functions. If the intent be to invest them with full judicial powers, then the language of the section is not sufficiently comprehensive or susceptible of easy and definite interpretation. Constitutional provisions ought to be so clear and definite that any ordinary mind can understand their meaning.

Now, in regard to the amendment that I gave notice of some time ago, it was as follows:

"There shall be elected at the next general election, and every four years thereafter, by the qualified electors of this State, a Board of three Railroad Commissioners, whose term of office shall be four years, with such salary as may be fixed by law, not to exceed —— thousand dollars a year. Such Commissioners shall be qualified electors, and for five years citizens of this State, and shall not be interested pecuniarily, or by employment, or in any other capacity, in any railroad or transportation company, or in the business of common carrier of passengers or freight. They shall each take the constitutional oath of office, and before entering upon, and for the faithful performance of the duties of their office, they shall each give a bond, with two sureties, in the sum of twenty thousand dollars, to be approved by the Governor. The Commissioners, or a majority of them, shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to establish reasonable and just tariffs and rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freights by all railroad corporations, and for this purpose they shall have power to administer oaths, to examine the books and papers of such corporations, to summon and examine the officers and stockholders thereof, and other witnesses, to hear complaints, inquire into and correct abuses, prevent partial and unjust discriminations and extortion in the rates of charges and the tariffs for the transportation of freights and passengers. They shall publish, semi-annually, full statements of the tariffs and rates of charges established and authorized by them, and of all abuses, discriminations, and extortion, and report the same to the Governor. Whenever such tariffs and rates shall be established and published, they shall be binding upon, and must be observed by all such corporations doing business in this State, and may be enforced by the Commissioners, or by any party in interest through the Courts; but nothing herein shall prevent any person from maintaining an action for injury or damage against such corporations. The Legislature shall confer on the Commissioners such further powers as shall be necessary to enable them more fully to perform their duties; and it shall pass laws with adequate penalties, to the extent, if necessary, of forfeiture of the franchises of such corporations, to enforce the action of the Commissioners. The Commissioners, and each of them, may be removed from office by the Legislature by a majority vote of all the members elected to each house, and shall also be liable personally, and on their official bonds, to any party aggrieved for neglect of duty, or any malfeasance or corruption in office."

This I have redrafted and changed as I will now explain, and I propose, if the opportunity is given, to offer it as redrafted. This amendment provides for a Commission similar to that of the substitute, but with a limited salary. By the recommendation of the committee the salary is unlimited.

MR. ESTEE. The salary is to be fixed by law.

MR. HAGER. Yes, but I propose to limit that salary by fixing the maximum. I require the Commissioners to give a bond of twenty thousand dollars, take the oath of office, and so on. Then their powers are defined, and I propose to limit these to transportation by and upon railroads. Why should we extend their powers to transportation companies doing business on the navigable waters of this State? Now, any individual may run a vessel to carry produce, etc., or a farmer, or a company of farmers, may own a boat and transport their own or their neighbors' produce by water to market, and why should we interfere in such cases?

MR. ESTEE. The reason is this: to meet the question of transportation companies like the Star Line, the Red Line, the White Line, Wells, Fargo & Co., and others, which are not railroad companies, as well as transportation companies by water.

MR. HAGER. Why did not the committee say so, and make it applicable to all railroad and other corporations engaged in transportation by railroad? I think it is better to apply it to railroad transportation only. Our people do not complain of the transportation companies on the high seas, or on the bays, or navigable waters of this State. The Act of Congress under which we became a component part of the Union—when we were admitted as a State—contains a condition that the navigable waters should be free and open to the commerce of the world. There can be no monopoly here, and I would prefer to leave them open to all, as they are free to all, and let unshackled competition regulate fares and freights on these waters. A railroad is a different thing. That is a highway over the lands of the State, conceded by authority of the Legislature, which, by our State Constitution we have the power, and ought to have the power to regulate. It is not the enjoyment of a right, but a special concession, dependent on the legislative will. Such is not the case with the navigable waters of the State. In my proposed amendment I include all railroad corporations, and all people doing business thereon. That includes all lines and companies referred to by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, and which he proposes to include in the provision.

"And for this purpose," as I provide, "they shall have power to administer oaths; to examine the books and papers of such corporations; to summon and examine the officers and stockholders thereof, and other witnesses."

I have also provided that the Commissioners shall have the direction and control of the books and account keeping of these corporations. Competent and well informed persons tell me it is essential that the manner of keeping their accounts should be directed and controlled by the Commission, otherwise they will know nothing about their business.

Then my amendment proceeds: "Inquire into and correct abuses; prevent partial and unjust discriminations and extortion in the rates of charges, and the tariffs for the transportation of freights and passengers. They shall publish, semi-annually, full statements of the tariffs and rates established and authorized by them, and of all abuses, discriminations, and extortion, and report the same to the Governor." Now, here follows an essential provision: "Whenever such tariffs and rates shall be established and published, they shall be binding upon and must be observed by all such corporations doing business in this State, and may be enforced by the Commissioners, or by any party in interest, through the medium of the Courts." Corporations shall not charge in excess of the rates established by the Commissioners. It will be binding upon all such corporations doing business in this State, and may be enforced through the medium of the Courts. The Commissioners perform their ministerial act by establishing and publishing the tariffs and rates, and the railroad companies and those doing business thereon cannot charge in excess of these rates; and then it is left for the Commissioners or any party in interest to enforce these rates of tariffs through the medium of the Courts. The Commissioners may do it; any party aggrieved may do it. Then follows the clause: "Nothing herein shall prevent any person from maintaining an action for injury or damage against such corporations. The Legislature shall confer on the Commissioners such further powers as shall be necessary to enable them more fully to perform their duties." If the powers of the Commissioners should prove to be inadequate, then the Legislature shall confer on them such further powers as may be necessary to enable them more fully to perform their duties. And the Legislature "shall pass laws, with adequate penalties, to the extent, if necessary, of the forfeiture of the franchises of such corporations, to enforce the action of the Commissioners." Now, it seems to me that this would afford a complete remedy. The Commissioners perform the ministerial act of fixing the rates of fares and freights, such as in their judgment may be reasonable and right. They have all the power to examine books, direct the mode in which they shall by kept, subpœna witnesses, hear complaints of abuses, discrimination, and extortion, and make reports in regard to these matters to the Governor, who of course will lay them before the Legislature. Then I provide, in the event of their being unfaithful to the trust imposed upon them: "The Commissioners, and each of them, may be removed from office by the Legislature, by a majority vote of all the members elected to each house, and shall also be liable personally and on their official bonds, to any party aggrieved, for neglect of duty or any malfeasance or corruption in office."

MR. ESTEE. I hold in my hand the amendment proposed by the gentleman a few days ago, and it is not the same as he is reading.

MR. HAGER. I have changed the phraseology and provisions, as I have stated, in some particulars, upon the suggestion of a number of gentlemen, and I am reading it as now amended, and which I propose to offer as a substitute for the whole section. I am not tenacious about having my name connected with this amendment. I am perfectly willing, so far as I understand it, to support the one offered by Judge Campbell, except that I prefer to have the Commission elected by the people. I do not care which may be adopted, provided we get something that will answer the purpose that we are desirous of effecting.

MR. CROSS. This will always leave it open to the Courts to determine whether the rates fixed by the Commissioners are just and reasonable.

MR. HAGER. My original draft did not contain the words, "just and reasonable," but they have been interlined at the suggestion of some gentlemen who thought they should be there. In almost all of the railroad Acts, the same clause will be found. I thought it proper and right that the Constitution should require that they be reasonable and just. That is all we ought to ask. But it is clearly provided that when the rates are once established, the railroads throughout the State will be bound by them. It is not a question for their determination, whether or no they are just and reasonable, but the action of the Commissioners might become a subject of inquiry before the Legislature in a proceeding for their removal from office. But there is no power to fix or control freights and fares, except by the Commissioners themselves.

MR. ESTEE. I find in the gentleman's amendment that he provides, among other powers, that they shall have power "to hear complaints; inquire into and correct abuses," etc. I want to know if that duty is not the same that is imposed on the Commissioners in the section as reported by the committee, and if that is not a judicial duty?

MR. HAGER. If I am led into an error by these words I have my friend's precedent as a justification. I do not say that they shall punish for contempt, and enforce their decisions through the Courts; but I say that they shall report these abuses or complaints, that the Legislature may be informed in regard thereto. There is a difference between the two propositions. One is to hear complaints, with a view to a trial and judgment by the Commissioners; the other is to hear complaints for the purposes of fixing fares and freights, and reporting to the Governor, etc., without undertaking to enforce obedience as a matter of contempt of the Commission, but it gives them, or any party in interest, the power to apply to the Courts to enforce their action; and in that respect I think it is right.

Now, as I said, I feel reluctant in addressing this Convention at this late day in the debate; but we are now on the battle-ground of this Constitution, in acting on this portion of the report of the Committee on Corporations. We stand here on the watch towers, overlooking this wide plain, with the people on the one side and the railroad corporations on the other; and it remains to be seen whether the organic law that we may present to the people will proclaim for their future emancipation or servitude. No one denies to this Convention the power of regulating fares and freights, either by putting a provision in the Constitution, which of itself will accomplish it, or by constituting a Commission for such purpose. The question which has been debated is one rather of expediency than of power. It has been said by some who have addressed the Convention that no complaints have been made against these corporations. That no petitions have been presented here; that no issue has been raised before the people in regard to fares and freights, or in regard to the charges made by railroads.

I have a copy of the platform under which you, Mr. President, and I, and some of my friends around me here were elected, and to which we have given our adhesion. In that platform I read: "That the State shall ever retain and maintain the perfect control over all its corporations and their franchises, to the end that the people may forever have full protection against all extortionate charges, unjust discriminations, or unfair exactions, of any description, by such corporations." This issue was, therefore, distinctly made at the time of our election as delegates to this Convention.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I would ask what platform that is?

MR. HAGER. That is the Non-Partisan platform.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Never seen it before.

MR. HAGER. It says "that the people may forever have full protection against all extortionate charges, unjust discriminations, or unfair exactions of any description whatever, by such corporations." If we give this power to the people do we not strictly, and to the very letter, perform our duty in regard to the injunction of this platform?

MR. BEERSTECHER. I would ask the gentlemen whether that platform was ever published.

MR. BARNES. Yes. It was read to the great meeting at Platt's Hall, where the candidates met, and where, I understood, some of the gentleman's friends had determined to attack me because I had stood up for my coachman. It was also printed and sent to every voter in the City and County of San Francisco. Myself and my colleague, Mr. Casserly, prepared that platform, and, so far as I am aware, notwithstanding the intimation of our friend from San Francisco, I know of no reason why we are not standing up to it.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I am under obligations to ascertain who was the creator and originator of it.

MR. ESTEE. It was indorsed by the entire delegation. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

MR. BARNES. I think it was indorsed by the entire delegation. That was the platform, Mr. Chairman, that I alluded to yesterday, which, I said, was a very good platform, but the people did not believe it—did not think we meant it. [Laughter.]

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I believe I have the floor. I allude to this matter, not for the purpose of intimating that any gentleman on this floor who indorsed the platform has not conformed to it in his action here, but I refer to it as a matter of history, and in reply to the position taken by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, who told us that in regard to these matters no issue had been made before the people; that no petitions had been presented here, and therefore we were not called upon to engraft into this Constitution any provision in regard to fares and freights. My purpose in reading it was to show that it was an issue before the people at the election of delegates, and I think in one section the platform of all parties contained some provision in regard to railroad monopoly, so also every platform that has been adopted by any political Convention in the last five, six—yes, ten years—has contained some similar provision. I alluded to this platform in reply to the gentleman from Sacramento, Judge McFarland, not for the purpose of calling on any member of the Convention to perform his duty, nor for the purpose of charging any one as with having violated it. But, I do say for myself, that I intend to observe this platform on which I was elected, and I believe I am doing so in endeavoring to establish this Commission.

The history of legislation in this State, in regard to railroad fares and freights charges, has been referred to. The first Act was in eighteen hundred and fifty, before we had a railroad, which fixed maximum charges. The next was in eighteen hundred and fifty-one. The next was in the session of eighteen hundred and fifty-three and eighteen hundred and fifty-four. I happened to be a member of the State Senate in that early day. A railroad bill was acted upon; but it created so little excitement that I had forgotten such a bill was before the Legislature, but I find it among the laws of that session. In eighteen hundred and sixty-one there were railroad bills. In eighteen hundred and sixty-five, when I was a member of the State Senate, another railroad bill was introduced which has not been alluded to here, but it passed both branches of the Legislature. There is another gentleman upon this floor who was a member of the Senate at the same time. I believe I was the only person that rose in his place in the Senate to resist the passage of that measure. Notwithstanding the opposition that I made, it passed the Senate and Assembly, went to the Governor, and was vetoed. That veto message may throw more light upon what was intended to be accomplished by the legislation of that day, and also subsequent legislation in this State. I will read only part of this message. It is found in the Journals of the Senate of the sixteenth session:

"I herewith return, without my approval, substitute for Senate bill number one hundred and three, an Act establishing the rates of fare on railroads, and other matters relating thereto.

"The first section of the bill provides that every railroad company accepting its provisions shall do what every company is now required to do by law, and what would be done naturally, without any law—transport passengers and freight at such times and in such convenient manner as the corporation may, by regulation, prescribe, on the due payment of the fares and tolls thereon.

"They shall also, during any war, insurrection, or invasion, give the troops and munitions belonging to this State preference of transportation over other freight, except that of the United States.

"The second section provides that all companies accepting the provisions of the bill shall have and enjoy the right and privilege of collecting certain rates, according to the elevation above the level of the sea, as follows: At an elevation of less than one thousand feet, seven cents per mile for each passenger and ten cents per mile for each ton of freight; over one thousand and less than two thousand feet elevation, nine cents per mile for passengers and twelve and one half cents for freight; over two thousand and less than three thousand feet elevation, twelve and one half cents per mile for passengers and fifteen cents for freight; over three thousand feet elevation, fifteen cents per mile for passengers and twenty-five cents for freight.

"These were considered by the railroad company as reasonable fares and freights in that day—eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

"Section three provides that in case a company collects more than the prescribed rates it shall be liable to pay to the injured party treble the amount collected, and this is virtually the only penalty for overcharging for freight or passengers.

"Section four provides, that any company desiring to enjoy the benefits of the Act shall file in the office of the Secretary of State a profile of the road, and an agreement and acceptance, duly signed and sealed, agreeing therein, in consideration of the rates and compensation provided for in this Act, to abide and perform its requirements.

"This bill, were it to become a law, would clearly create a contract between the State and every company accepting its provisions—a contract that no subsequent Legislature could repeal or repair. The rate of fare for every passenger, and price for every ton of freight passing over any road, is fixed beyond legislative control during the life of the charter of the corporation. The only consideration for this contract is that the accepting company shall, in time of war, give State troops and munitions of war preference of transportation. For such a consideration I cannot consent to give my approval to a law that will establish the fare and freight for half a century on every railroad accepting the contract proposed, and placing it beyond the power of any future Legislature to lessen the burden, if it proves so to be.

"The proposition is monstrous; and I am persuaded that the bill could not have received that scrutiny at the hands of the Legislature which its importance merited. The history of legislation in some of the Atlantic States furnishes us with examples where States have improvidently, and without due consideration, bound themselves by such contracts, which have weighed heavily upon the energies of the people.

"Travel and traffic should not by law be hampered by unbending rates and rules for long terms of years; and it is unjust to those who are to come after us, if not to ourselves, thus to tax the traveling and trading public by the enactment of laws, similar to the one under consideration, which cannot be modified or repealed."

By that veto the Governor shielded the State from a contract intended to be binding during the life of every existing corporation of this State, fixing fares and freights by a scale of charges, the maxima being, for passengers, fifteen cents per mile, and for freight, twenty-five cents per mile, and which, if a binding contract, would have been in full force at this day. The passage of that bill was pressed at the time by the railroad corporation, and that was the first time I saw them active in the halls of legislation struggling to obtain special legislation for their company. The veto message of the Governor came up for consideration on the question of the passage of the bill over the veto. I am happy to report the result of that vote—ayes, 0; noes, 33. This was in eighteen hundred and sixty-five. At a subsequent session substantially the same bill was offered, and was defeated. Then came the "Freeman bill," regulating fares and freights, which passed the Assembly and was smothered in the Senate. Then came the "Archer bill," which also passed the Assembly, but failed in the Senate. Then was passed the Act constituting a Railroad Commission, under which were appointed General Stoneman and Messrs. Doyle and Smith. Examine this Act and I think it will be found that it substantially gives to the Commission all the power necessary to control the subject. I would be satisfied to have that Commission restored and proceed in the performance of its work. But when that Commission got into operation and was actively engaged in the performance of its duties, by some pressure we have heard about, but care not to speak of, because, personally, we know nothing about it, the Act constituting the Commission was repealed, and the Commission was abolished while they were in the very act of enforcing their authority in our Courts. Commissioner Doyle says, in his report:

"You are aware that several actions of mandamus were brought to compel railroad companies to afford statistical information demanded by the present Commissioners, and which they had refused to furnish. These actions are pending in the Supreme Court on appeal from judgments rendered below in favor of the State. They were set for argument for December third last, but postponed, and finally, by consent, were set for hearing on March fourth. On that day they were pressed by the counsel for the Commissioners, but postponed a week at the instance of the railroad companies. On Monday, the eleventh instant, when they again came up, the same counsel applied to continue them for the term, on the ground that one branch of the Legislature had passed an Act abolishing the Commission, and the other would probably concur. The Court, thus called upon to discount the action of the Senate, did not hesitate to do so, and postponed the cases for the term."

The railroad company spurned and defied the action of the Commissioners under the law, and they had no fear of the Legislature. I do not think that either legislation or the judgment of our Courts has any terrors for them. This Commission Act was passed at the time the "Archer bill" was pending, in order, as it was said, to get rid of that effort to regulate fares and freights. The railroad company passed it, then defied it, and then had it repealed. The District Court decided in favor of the law and the powers conferred on the Commission, but the railroad company appealed to the Supreme Court, where the case remains undetermined at this day, in consequence of the repeal of the law. The Legislature giveth; the Legislature taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Legislature! So far as laws are concerned, they pay about as much respect to them as they would to the decrees of Emperor Norton.

MR. ESTEE. If they have no regard for the Courts, or for the Legislature, wouldn't it be wise to have a Commission?

MR. HAGER. I am in favor of a Commission. I do not intend to say our Courts cannot be relied upon. The Courts decided against them, they took an appeal, and before the Supreme Court acted upon the matter, the law was repealed. Therefore, the action of the Courts had no terror for them. I do not mean to assert that they have no respect, but no fears for our Courts.

MR. ESTEE. I see in my friend's amendment, that he proposes to offer, that "the Legislature shall confer on the Commissioners such further powers as shall be necessary to enable them more fully to perform their duties, and it shall pass laws, with adequate penalties, to the extent, if necessary, of forfeiture of the franchises of such corporations." Now, if the Legislature cannot be trusted, will the Legislature provide these penalties?

MR. HAGER. I hope my friend will read the preceding portions of the amendment, in regard to establishing fares and freights. I take good care of that, but if all things prove inefficient, I then call upon the Legislature for such additional powers as may be necessary. If my friend and colleague will read the preceding part of the proposition I offer, he will find that the ministerial duties of the Commission are complete, to fix fares and freights, and to enforce their tariffs through the Courts themselves, and also any party that has any interest therein, may do so. Now if all that fails, I provide that the legislative power may be invoked. The authority of a future Legislature, elected by the people, may be invoked to give any additional powers to enforce the acts of the Commission, if such as are conferred should prove to be inefficient. It may dismiss these Commissioners from office, if they prove unfaithful. It may provide penalties and forfeitures for disobedience on the part of the railroad companies. But it is this tendency to disregard the law, which is daily manifesting itself, and rendering the law powerless, that we should, as far as possible, guard against. It is related of Frederick the Great, of Prussia, that when at the zenith of his power, he was desirous of improving his palace grounds, at Potsdam, by adding thereto some adjoining property, owned by a miller, and upon which stood a windmill, used for grinding corn, he sent word to the miller that he wished to buy the property. The miller said he did not wish to sell. After sending several times, and with the same result, Frederick himself then went to the miller, who again declined to sell. Frederick told him if he did not sell the ground he would take it; that he wanted it, and if he would not allow him to purchase it, he would take it. The miller replied, "No, sire, you will not take it; we have laws in Prussia." The King bowed his head in acknowledgment of the supremacy of the laws of Prussia, and retired. In after years the King obtained the property by purchase. It was added to the palace grounds with the windmill standing; and by the royal order it is kept and preserved at this day in complete repair, as a monument dedicated to justice and the supremacy of the laws of Prussia. It affords an example for us. In that great nation, with its monarchical institutions, the laws are supreme, and even the King himself must yield them obedience. So they should be with us—supreme over all—the people and the corporations.

But, sir, as I have said, the Legislature has failed to give to the people the relief they demand. The Courts have failed, I do not mean because they are unwilling to do so, but perhaps on account of the intricacies or the uncertainty of the law. After this long experiment and failure I object to further trusting the Legislature with the sole power to regulate fares and freights, as has been done heretofore.

It is no secret, sir, that the railroad company does exercise an influence on legislation in this State. I presume, without any impropriety, we can say this much. During the time I was a member of the Senate of this State, they did influence legislation in all matters affecting their interest. Situated as they are, with their vast interests, perhaps they did what many others would have done under like circumstances. If their intent was merely to protect themselves from hostile legislation, introduced for purposes of extortion or blackmail, we might justify their action; but the fact exists they have obstructed and influenced legislation in regard to all matters relating to railroad corporations. They also have a controlling influence over the press—the great palladium of our liberties. I presume all who are familiar with history are willing to admit this fact. To some extent they also exercise an influence upon political conventions—not of one party only, but of both political parties—and shape nominations to subserve their own private purposes, in total disregard of the interests of the public. Some gentlemen remarked that nowadays there was but one political party—nominally a Democratic party and nominally a Republican party—but for all that, really there was but one party, and that was the railroad party. That the railroad company is a power in the land, and that they exercise a great influence over all branches of the government, and over all political organizations, no one will dispute. It remains to be seen if they will also control the people—the only lodgment of political power remaining which has not been subordinated to the interests of their corporation.

Now, sir, with these facts before us—and I suppose I have alluded to nothing more than every one knows—it is proposed that we incorporate a provision in the Constitution establishing a Board of Railroad Commissioners, who shall have charge of this matter of fares and freights. A Railroad Commission is no new thing, as we all know. We have had them in this State, and we have one now composed of one Commissioner. Many of the other States have what is called a Railroad Commission. We have also other Commissioners in this State—the Bank Commissioners, the Insurance Commissioner, the Harbor Commissioners, and others. Why should any one object to a Railroad Commission?

But this question of railroad control involves a problem which has occupied the attention of statesmen and governments in the old world and in the new, and it has become one of great importance and magnitude. I will read, in this connection, though perhaps it may be a little tedious, some few observations of others which may give us some light. I have here an article from the International Review, entitled "The Domestic Commerce of the United States." It was published by the Cheap Transportation Company, of the City of New York, composed of Benjamin B. Baker, President; Henry B. Claflin, and others, Vice Presidents, and a list of Directors. It was written by Hon. S. Shellabarger, of Ohio. There are some things in it so eloquently appropriate to the condition of things in our young State, that I would ask the indulgence of the Convention to read a portion of it:

"Here, then, we start with our mighty subject upon us. Seen at large, its field is a continent. It is a new continent. It is a continent of capabilities and of natural wealth absolutely and literally inconceivable. It is a continent untouched and virgin as to nine tenths of these natural resources—virgin as to, perhaps, three-fourths of its surface also. And then it is, as a refuge and home for our own and other civilized peoples, the last of the continents. Beyond our 'Pillars of Hercules' there is nothing. Ours is the veritable Ultima Thule. In disposing of it we dispose of 'the last of earth.'

"Such then is the dignity of this subject, seen with the telescope, and in larger aspects, as it is explored by the legislator in his search after the answer to the amazing question: Has the Republic, as such, any duty upon it touching this commerce of the people, the wealth, the productions of this continent, or has it not? Is the commerce of these States among these States, confided by the organic law to the pleasure of the supreme Legislature of the Union or to railway Presidents? Which?"

* * * * * * * * * * *

"In countries even moderately free, institutions can not be guaranteed before their time; so neither can they be long defrauded out of their coming. There never yet was any enlightened people, in whom, among whom, and over whom there was not one grand, slow-moving, aggregate thought—a force, a spirit—caused by nobody, and yet by everybody; voiceless, but the sum of all voices; nameless, but bearing every name; silent, but speaking in all whispers and in all storms; having no magistracy, but wielding all scepters; holding no Courts, but pronouncing all judgments; keeping no armies, but deciding all wars; having no Parliaments, but making all laws. This incomprehensible but all-comprehending presence indicates its duration, as well as its resistlessness, by the song of the 'babbling brook,' and reminds States that—

"'Men may come, and men may go,
But I go on forever.'

"It has not very ostentatious 'ways,' but they are very impressive. Its formulas are few, but fearfully suggestive. One is: 'The mills of the gods grind slow, but fine;' one, that 'man proposes, God disposes;' one that 'if I make the songs of the people, you may make their laws;' one, that 'bayonets think;' one, that 'war legislates;' one, that 'revolutions go not back;' one, that 'everybody knows more than anybody.' The author of Civilization in England wrote severely, but profoundly, when he said that 'every system must fall if it opposes the march of opinions.'

* * 'The vigor of public opinion is not exposed to casualties; it s unaffected by the laws of mortality; it does not flourish to-day and decline to-morrow; and so far from depending on the lives of individual men, it is governed by large general causes, which, from their very comprehensiveness, are in short periods scarcely seen, but, in a comparison of long periods, are found to outweigh all other considerations, and reduce to insignificance those little stratagems by which princes and statesmen think to disturb the order of events, and mold to their will the destinies of a great and civilized people.'"

We must sooner or later yield to this public opinion in this State. A public opinion which exists, and is speaking to this Convention; and will continue to speak in the future in tones louder and more audible than it does now. I read further:

"We have seen the hives of our common humanity in easy reach of us, but outside of our coasts, starving and clamoring and reaching out skeleton fingers for our bread, but that bread denied because some diabolical element of our Constitution is imagined to forbid its sending! We have seen millions of our own men, women, and children 'having bread enough and to spare'—and to burn—but in rags for want of those necessities of life, which those starving abroad are eager to exchange for our food; imploring their Government to permit the exchange; and having heard their Government, in the very wantonness of mockery, reply by holding weekly debating schools in Congress of Saturday afternoons, arguing the 'vested rights' of railway monopolists, under which they are licensed to pauperize the races of men, and impoverish or dwarf a continent!"

Now, sir, how does that apply to us? When the grain of the fertile valleys of this State often remains in the warehouses because it is unable to bear the expense of transportation to tide water.

"We have seen our country endowed with two thirds of the fuels of the world, two thirds of the ores of the world, nearly all the virgin soils of the north temperate zone; with natural facilities for home and foreign exchanges of production unmatched upon the earth, and to occupy, possess, and develop which population is crowding from all other lands, and augmenting in our own, until the demonstration is reached that, at the same rate of progress, this generation will end with two hundred millions here; and we have asked: May these occupy, possess, develop, and, without unjust impositions and burdens, exchange? We are answered that our Government, about all this and these, has no care; and if she had, some infernal element in her union has put upon her an eternal mandate, never to 'take care!'

"Has he learned the alphabet of history who thinks that this people will, for another decade, permit either a party, or a Constitution, or a code of laws to exist which fails to take care that interests and values like these shall be by their own Government respected and defended?"

Next he proceeds to discuss another matter, as to what has been done by other nations in regard to this railroad problem, and he says this:

"And in eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, in organizing that North Germany out of all the members of the Fatherland, which has suddenly become the first power of the Eastern Continent, and at once the terror and admiration of all surrounding States, her matchless wisdom and sagacity have created one 'Federative Empire,' under a constitutional charter, by which they form the fifteen States into one 'Eternal Union' (Ewigen Bund), for the protection of the territory of the Union and its laws, as well as for the care of the welfare of the German people," and to the Federal Council and Parliament of that Union their charter has given the exclusive legislative control over, first, the customs; second, the commercial legislation; third, the coining of money, the weights and measures; fourth, banking questions; fifth, questions relating to the rights of nations and aliens; sixth, patents for inventions; seventh, the protection of German trade; eighth, the railways and roads, the postal and telegraph services; ninth, the navigation of rivers; tenth, the common law procedure, the commercial law, and the laws upon change.

"Our limits will admit of no further appeals to the principles and practices of all enlightened States in the nurture, protection, and defense of the internal and foreign commerce of the entire people. But these are ample in demonstration of the truth that by the settled principles of such governments that commerce which is common to all the people must be under the care of that government which is over all the people, and that such care is exclusive and plenary, embracing every power and duty needed to foster, develop, defend, and regulate the commerce itself and all its instruments and channels."

My friend and colleague, Mr. Wilson, the other day in his remarks said he did not believe that the glory would belong to this Convention of sending back the news to England, and France, and Belgium, and all those countries, that we in California, with so little experience, had mastered the situation. Germany has mastered the situation by taking the control. I will inform him also that Belgium has mastered the situation by taking governmental control of the railroads, and they are the best and cheapest railroads in the world.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Do you mean that Belgium owns the roads?

MR. HAGER. Yes. I will also inform my friend that France controls but does not own their railroads. The French laws are exact and stringent. No one can even receive an injury from a French railway without the company being held absolutely liable for all damages. Whilst I was once on a visit to that country an American received an injury—a sprained ankle—whilst traveling on one of the railroads. He did not think it a very serious matter, but after he reached his hotel in Paris, a surgeon and a nurse, sent by the railroad company, came to his relief. Next a person was sent to inquire what compensation he was willing to accept for the injury. After offering various sums they finally offered him five thousand dollars, which he accepted. He was about leaving for home in New York, and they also offered to furnish him with a surgeon and nurse for the voyage. They begged him to accept the compensation rather than to go into the Courts, because by the French law they are held liable, and no excuse will be received to discharge them from liability. In all cases the presumption is the railroad is at fault.

MR. BARNES. Is not that so here?

MR. HAGER. I do not think the Central Pacific Railroad would in a like case pay voluntarily, or without litigation. If I had a case I would turn it over to the gentleman to see how he would succeed in that line. As I have said, in Germany, Belgium, and France, and, if I am not mistaken, in Italy, the railroads are under governmental control. Now, in regard to Great Britain, this article says this:

"These facts we can only point to as indicative of the ceaselessness and the magnitude of the work and the care bestowed by the British Government upon the single matter of her internal commerce, and especially the rates of charge by the railroads and canals of the Kingdom; and we cannot, for want of space, do more than indicate the principles reached in these managements of internal commerce.

"This ministerial and parliamentary attention to railroad charges had its most distinctive developments about the time of Victoria's accession to the throne. One of the very first steps taken for the securement of equable and just rates of charge for transportation was the organization of a committee of Parliament, in eighteen hundred and thirty-nine, of which Sir Robert Peel was a distinguished member, charged with this duty; and which pursued their investigations for years, and with the most thorough research. Their reports, and those of similar committees in succeeding years, resulted in the two Acts of Parliament attempting the regulation of this subject, passed in the 3, 4, 5 and 6 Vic. In eighteen hundred and forty-four, a strong committee was appointed, with Mr. Gladstone at its head, to consider the whole subject of the prices of fares and freights, competition, consolidation, etc., which made long and searching reports, three in number, and resulted in the Act of 7 and 8 Vic. (1844), regulating the rates of profit and charges allowed to railroad companies, and providing for government purchase of these roads on certain terms. In eighteen hundred and forty-five, Lord Dalhousie's Railway Board was constituted, under and with the Board of Trade, charged with the duty of reporting on all new railroad schemes, etc., and which made elaborate series of reports on these subjects to Parliament. Other series of reports were made by the Board of Trade each year, upon every possible view of all these subjects of freights, fares, leases, amalgamations, consolidation, competition, government regulation, government ownership, etc. In 8 and 9 Vic. an Act was passed allowing canals to vary their rates of tolls to enable them to 'compete' with and restrain railroad freights; and another to enable canals to lease other canals, and to thus form 'competing lines' with railroads, and to secure 'greater competition for the public advantage.'

Since eighteen hundred and forty-five the following clause has been introduced in all railway Acts:

"Nothing herein contained shall be deemed or construed to exempt the railways, by this Act authorized to be made, from the provisions of any general Act relating to railways, or the better and more impartial audit of the accounts of railway companies now in force, or which may hereafter pass during this or any future session of Parliament; or from any further revision or alteration under the authority of Parliament of the maximum rates of fares and charges, or of the rates of small parcels authorized by this Act.

"As already remarked, these samples are given as mere indicia of that thorough, systematic, eternal vigilance which England is wont to apply to every great material interest of her people, and which for a full third of a century she has already applied to this single matter of 'cheap transportation' upon the railways and water lines of the Kingdom. A mere catalogue of all the Acts of Parliament and reports of parliamentary committees and boards of trade, and the like, which her government has produced in the struggle to accomplish this single end, 'cheap transportation' for her people, would occupy more space than is allowed for this entire article. It must suffice, therefore, to add to the specimens above given, showing how early and earnestly this work was begun in England, the statement that as in the case of her foreign commerce, so in that of her domestic, there has not been an hour, day or night, in the last thirty-five years, when her government has ceased to be at work investigating, debating, reporting, experimenting, legislating, adjudicating, and solving the single problem, How shall England secure to her internal commerce the lowest rate of charge for transportation which is consistent with the just claims of the capital embarked in these channels of commerce?"

Now, what have we done as a State in regard to our internal commerce to obtain the lowest rate of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight? Nothing. It is left entirely to the railroad to charge just what they see fit, and there is no law that controls them in regard to these charges.

Whilst I was a member of the Senate of the United States, a committee made a report—the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard—of which Mr. Windom was Chairman. I will read just a few paragraphs, so far as relates to the proposition which we have here before us. Mr. Windom says: "In several of our States, and nearly all the countries of Europe, legislative regulation of rates and fares has been tried in almost every form, but I have yet to learn that such experiments have resulted in a material reduction of charges." That committee make many recommendations, which I commend to those who take an interest in this subject, and who think this whole matter should be left to legislation.

Now, I have but one more paragraph to read, and that is from one of the Commissioners under the Act of this State, which I have referred to as being repealed. He has favored me with a long communication, containing a great deal of information on this subject, and especially in regard to the regulation of fares and freights, and which would be useful to the Convention if printed so as to be easily read. It argues the question of the difficulty of attempting to regulate fares and freights by legislative enactment. It says it is impossible. It is from Mr. Doyle, who has made this subject, in all its bearings—the different classification of freights, etc.—one of personal inquiry and investigation. After reviewing the question fully, in all its bearings, Mr. Doyle concludes as follows:

"The foregoing is an outline of the considerations which lead me to suggest the following propositions for railroad reform."

Of these recommendations I only read the following:

"A Board of Railroad Commissioners, to be created by the Constitution, consisting of three or five members, with ample powers of visitation over all railroad corporations. They should have the right of investigation by written requisition or subpœna, and oral examination of witnesses or parties; their powers in this respect to be full and ample. They should also have authority to establish full or partial classifications of freights moved by rail, and the rates of transportation to be the same on all goods of the same class."

Now, Mr. Chairman, all other modes hitherto attempted by legislation, of regulating fares and freights, having failed, the inquiry is still presented: What is to be done? What is left for us to do? In my opinion, expediency, policy, and past experience point to a Railroad Commission to be created by the Constitution. Now, my friend from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, has told us that this would bring the railroad into politics. I would ask if they are not now in politics. I would ask my friend whether they did not try to defeat him two years ago when he was running for the Legislature? I think about that time he had the best evidence in the world that they were actively in politics.

My friend from Marin, Mr. Shafter, says that it will put the Railroad Commission in the hands of the railroad. Now, I ask my friend if he really has any fear that this will take place? Does he have any apprehension that the railroad will get control? And for that reason does he oppose the Commission? And if he should answer affirmatively, I would ask him if the people, in such case, would be in any worse condition than now? Do not the railroad companies now have full control of fares and freights? And if they should control the Commission would it be any more to our disadvantage? Why, in such event, the railroad could not complain, and the people would certainly say it could be no more burdensome than it is at the present time. He further said they could control the three Commissioners easier than they could control the Legislature. Others have argued here that the Commission would bankrupt the railroad companies. Thus the arguments antagonize themselves.

But, Mr. Chairman, I see no other remedy but the one suggested to create this Commission, and to give the election of its members to the people. As proposed they are to be elected by districts—three districts—into which the State is to be divided. They will not be nominated by the State political conventions, but by sectional conventions, in the respective districts, and elected by those sections. It is not like an election for Governor, which takes place throughout the whole State. But it will be in sections where the people can make their nominations and elect their Commissioners in three separate districts; and if we cannot trust the people in the performance of this work, then we must proclaim to the world that popular government—popular sovereignty—is a failure. We must admit that in this free government we cannot choose and elect three just men who will take charge of this business and do what is just between the railroads and the people.

I have heretofore alluded to the fact that this railroad was built by the munificence of the Government of the United States, and the people of the State of California—one half composed of the Union Pacific and the other of the Central Pacific—constitute our great transcontinental road. If the Central Pacific had remained satisfied with this great transcontinental road, there probably might have been less complaint against them. They have been ungrateful to their benefactors. They are not only controlling their end of this great transcontinental road, but it has been and is their intention and ambition to control all the railroads and all the avenues of commerce in this State. They have obtained by purchase, and have control of the San José road, running between San José and San Francisco, the Western Pacific, the California Pacific, the Copperopolis and San Joaquin Valley roads, the Sacramento Valley road, and the Santa Monica road. They have also purchased the Steam Navigation Company's boats which control the trade on our bays and rivers. They run a line of steamers to China in opposition to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and if they had not agreed upon terms of prorating with that company, as it has been publically stated, they would have put a line of steamers on the route to New York via Panama. They have also the control of Wells, Fargo & Company's Express. They own also the Southern Pacific Railroad, which they are now constructing—not without a subsidy, as my friend from Sacramento has told us, for they have a valuable land subsidy; not for the purpose of controlling the trade of Arizona, as has been said, but for the purpose of heading off Tom Scott and other parties in building a competing transcontinental road, which might interfere with their monopoly. For this purpose they had their lobby in Washington City, while I was a member of the Senate Committee on Pacific Railroads, opposing further subsidy to the road represented by Mr. Scott.

All this indicates that the coils of the anaconda is gradually but surely encircling the people of this State, their commerce, industrial interests, and transportation. It is the determination of this railroad company to control all the thoroughfares of travel—all the avenues by land and water, of the commerce of this State—that makes them justly censurable and obnoxious to the complaints of our people. They ought to have been satisfied with their great transcontinental road, built, not by them, but for them, through the munificence of the people and by public donations. But they have gradually obtained the control of all the carrying trade of the State, and they will not tolerate either competition or opposition.

It is a vast power to be used by five or six men, even if used wisely. I think the people have good reason to complain that the railroad company has shown this grasping disposition; and, in this condition of things, they have also good reason to expect our new Constitution will afford some relief for their produce and their industries from arbitrary exactions.

Such, I believe, sir, is the public sentiment among the people, and if they speak their sentiments, so they will tell you. My friend from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, says he has heard no complaint against this railroad, and he thinks I committed hari-kari by saying that I did not know their charges were exorbitant. I never sent freight by or did business with the railroad, and I don't know personally whether their charges for freights are excessive or not; but if he asks me if I have heard any complaints against their charges, I will tell him yes, many, and almost universal complaints. These complaints generally come in a whisper, because men have told me that they did not dare to complain. Men doing business, when that business is dependent upon the good will of the railroad, dare not complain, or they might discriminate to their disadvantage and to the destruction of their business. But that there are complaints no one who breathes the atmosphere of California can dispute. But so far as I am personally concerned I cannot say that their charges are excessive, because I am without experience. The passenger fare between this city and San Francisco is not, in my opinion, unreasonable, or in disproportion to what is paid elsewhere.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was opposed, as I said once before, to the calling of this Constitutional Convention. I voted against it. I was nominated as a delegate without any solicitation on my part, and I did not know anything about it until I saw in the newspapers that I was nominated. I did not speak to a member of that Convention in solicitation, and I had no desire to be a member. If it had depended on my own action I would not have been here. But since I am here, with malice toward none and charity for all, I intend, as far as I can, to do justice to all. For eight years I was a member of the Senate of the State of California, and for six or seven years have been on the bench. During that time I had an opportunity of observing the workings of our State government, in its legislative, its executive, and its judicial departments, and I regret that I have not been placed upon some committee concerning those departments, where my past experience would have been at least of some service to myself if to no one else. But not having been placed on any except one working committee, necessarily the labor that I have to perform must be in the Committee of the Whole, and the Committee of the Whole, as we all know by experience, is a most unfavorable place for the accomplishment of efficient work. We must sit in our places, prepare amendments, and act upon them, without sufficient opportunity of examining their phraseology or import. In this way we are framing a Constitution, by turning ourselves into a debating society, as was said by Mr. Shellabarger in regard to Congress on railroads and railroad monopolies. Our present Constitution is a good one in many respects. I think that twenty-five men might have been selected from our body, who in twenty or thirty days could have agreed upon some few amendments in regard to taxation, special legislation, corporations, municipal indebtedness, and Chinese immigration, which would have accomplished the work before us. A few provisions might have been taken from the new Constitutions of Illinois, Pennsylvania, Missouri, and Colorado, engrafted in ours, and given us all the improvements required. If the Committee on Corporations had taken from these Constitutions, or any of them, their provisions on corporations and railroads, they might have been received by our people with satisfaction.

Notwithstanding all that has been said in regard to the dimensions to which this article on corporations is expanding, it does not contain as much matter as is contained in the same article of either of the Constitutions to which I have just referred.

Now, sir, this proposition to create a Railroad Commission is not, as has been asserted, intended to confiscate the property of railroad companies; but it is intended to regulate their charges and put a check upon their powers. It may have the effect to take them out of local politics. I trust it will. We may then hope to see free and independent men elected as our Governors, our legislators, and Judges—men who will be under no obligation to them for place, and will be beyond their control—for the best of reasons: they will have no purpose in seeking to control them, in order, as they say, to protect themselves from hostile action in regard to fares and freights. This will be left to the Commission, composed of three men, selected and elected by the people, from different parts of the State. But it has been said we cannot trust the people to elect these men. Does any one here fear the people? Dare you tell them so? Go home and tell your constituents you were in favor of a Railroad Commission, but you voted against it because you dared not trust the people with their election; that you could not even trust the constituents who sent you here, with the election of these men. Say to the farmers, the merchants, the manufacturers, and miners of this great State, "Toil on, and pay tribute to the powers that be—to the railroad company—whatever they may demand; you are not capable of regulating fares and freights; the railroad company will do that for you; you are not qualified to select men who will do justice between the people and the railroad company." Tell them the railroad company will continue to transport their grain, produce, etc., when the market is good, at the highest price it will bear, and when the market is depressed, at the highest price it will bear—so that the people have the accommodation and the railroad the profits; and if it will not bear transportation with any profit, leave them in the warehouses. Tell them to submit, and toil on, and with bowed and obsequious heads to thank God that they have a railroad company and a transportation company, one and inseparable.

But, sir, the power of this gigantic corporation will be broken. It will fall by reason of its own stupendous magnitude. It has expended itself in taking within its grasp the commerce of our entire State, and it will fall before the storm-breath of public opinion. In this enlightened age no despot is so shrouded in the panoply of power but that public opinion will make itself heard; and no corporation is so surrounded by its stipendiaries but that public opinion will make itself obeyed. It may not come to-day; it may not come through this Constitution; but it will come—railroads will be regulated by law and by properly constituted authority.

I have not yet lost confidence in popular government. I am willing to trust the people with the election of this Commission, as I am willing to trust them with the election of the Governor, and other officers. I should like, however, to see some renovation of governmental administration, and some purification of the political atmosphere. Let us go back to the principles of the founders of the republic, when economy, and honesty, and purity, prevailed in the administration of public affairs, State and Federal. Let us get rid of the corrupting influence that surrounds State and Federal legislation, and let us ask the people to assist. Do this, and our country may yet live in prosperity and grandeur, to bless us and future generations, "as ages on ages its splendors unfold."

With its popular government, its free institutions, and its liberal laws, our country is worthy of our love and our devotion. Compare it with any and all the nations of the earth. How great, how grand, how beautiful it is! Great in its natural advantages, and magnificent proportions; great in all that a progressive civilization has accomplished; great in its mechanical and engineering triumphs; great in its agricultural progress; great in the better and higher development of the human family, and human happiness; and above all, great in its system of common schools, its educational institutions, and its liberal laws, by which our people are not only made equal before the law, but placed on equality in that ever enduring contest for social and political advancement. Whatever there is worth struggling for in life, in the mechanic arts, in the fields of labor and science—whatever there may be in the triumphs of eloquence and of song—is before the American citizen. The soil on which he treads is his, and wealth ample to his utmost wish may be his if he has the greed or the ambition to seize it. Every avenue that inventive genius, industry, or perseverance, may unfold, is open to him and his exploration; and the fruit of success, and all that his own brave heart and hand may accomplish, is of right his reward and his enjoyment. Yet with all these advantages, great as they are, we must admit, humiliating as may be the confession, for years in the past, corruption and demoralization in the administration of Federal and State employments, have been fast overspreading the land, and pervading all departments of government. If Legislatures, and Congresses, and Executives have failed us, where can we turn but to the power which is sovereign over all—to the people.

If we hesitate to perform our duty in exercising the public trust we have accepted—if we fail to set the seal of our condemnation upon corruption in the past—we must expect greater corruption in the future, and before another century rolls around, our republic, now so grand and beautiful, like those which have preceded it, may be remembered as a delusive meteor, which rose full of promise, dazzled with momentary splendor, and left the world in greater darkness than before.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I propose to address myself for a few moments to the amendments now pending before the committee. The Chairman of the Committee on Corporations has said, and he has said repeatedly here to gentlemen who oppose this report, that we are not stickling for any formulation of words. We are not committed to any set phrases. If you who object to this report have anything in your heads or your hands that can address itself to the judgment of this committee, show it to us and we are ready to adopt it. Now, sir, what has been the course here by the opponents of this report? It is carping at words; simple criticisms, unworthy the dignity of this subject. That has been the course here, sir. I acknowledge, however, in answer to the eloquent and forcible remarks of the gentleman from San Francisco, who has just taken his seat, and also to the observations of the distinguished gentleman from Alameda, that they have produced some just criticisms. Now, I propose to consider their amendments very briefly. In the first place, sir, let me say that I will not consent to abate one jot or tittle from the report as made by the committee; and I say to the friends of reform here, so far as the report of the committee goes, stand to your guns! and do not allow your votes to be frittered away by the carping observations of the enemy of all reform. But, sir, certain suggestions have been made by the distinguished gentleman who has just taken his seat, and others by the gentleman from Alameda, which are worthy of consideration, and which I propose to consider. Now then, as to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, who has just taken his seat, and the one proposed by the gentleman from Alameda—they are substantially, or nearly the same. And particularly, as the gentleman from Alameda has reformed and amended his, it commends itself to me. I will ask him now to have his present amendment, as he now proposes it, read.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment suggested by Mr. Campbell, as follows:

"Add to the section: 'Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts to be kept by all such corporations or companies, and they shall keep their accounts according to such system. Any railroad corporation or transportation company which shall fail or refuse to conform to such reasonable rates as shall be established by said Commissioners, or shall charge rates in excess thereof, or shall fail to keep their accounts in accordance with the system prescribed by the Commissioners, shall be fined not exceeding twenty thousand dollars for each offense; and every officer, agent, or employé of any such corporation or company who shall demand or receive rates in excess thereof, or who shall in any manner violate the provisions of this section, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. In all controversies, civil, or criminal, the rates of fares and freights established by said Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie just and reasonable, and in any action against such corporation or company for damages sustained by charging excessive rates, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damage, may, in the discretion of the Judge or jury, recover exemplary damages. The Legislature may, in addition to any penalties herein prescribed, enforce this article by forfeiture or otherwise."

Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that this is in aid of the report of the committee and in opposition to its provisions in no respect. But it does give the legal sanction which even the opponents of all action here have demanded. And above all does it give the sanction which the eloquent gentleman who addressed us yesterday demanded, for he said his objection to the report of the committee was that it did not go far enough, that it did not give the provisions which were given in the English statute and in other laws. With that I agree. If there is any objection to this report, it is that it lacks the legal sanction which the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda supplies, and for that amendment I shall vote, sir. But I regretted to see, on yesterday, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, I think it was, adopted, because if it is persisted in, it will inaugurate here the old system of lobbyism, and I need not say will make the Legislature the scenes of transactions which ought to be avoided.

Now, sir, the gentleman from San Francisco who spoke yesterday, Colonel Barnes, was eloquent when he told us that this report lacked legal sanctions and legal force, and I propose to accommodate him so far as my votes go on these amendments. I congratulate him upon his speech of yesterday. I always listen to him with pleasure, for what he says he says so well that it is always agreeable to hear him. And I congratulate him upon the address with which he managed it: with which, in certain language, he abused the railroad, and in other language he praised the railroad; with which in one sentence he favored the Commission, and in another he opposed the only practical method of carrying it out.

MR. BARNES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him in what part of my feeble remarks I approved of a Commission, and in what part I went against it; where I condemned the railroad, and where I praised it? I am not aware of any such thing. And let me say here, and now, that I am in favor of a Commission. I believe that it should have the powers necessary to carry out the work for which it is established, but that these powers should be vested in competent men, and my idea was that the Governor should appoint them.

MR. HOWARD. So I understood the gentleman, and my impression is that to give it to the Governor is to defeat it altogether. But I certainly cannot be mistaken about having heard him speak highly, and I agree with him, about what the railroad has done; and it seemed to me that he managed the subject as a very fond mother manages her child. First she whips him, and then if he cries she gives him a sugar plum to dry up and hush. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that the criticisms upon this report have failed, and failed utterly, except so far as they go to show that we have not gone quite so far as we ought to have gone. It has been said that there is no instance of a Commission being invested with these powers. Now, sir, let me read a solitary instance in regard to the law of Illinois, from the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics:

"In May, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, another law was passed prescribing what should be prima facie evidence of extortion and unjust discrimination, the burden of proof being thrown upon the railroad company. Under this law the Railroad Commissioners are required to prepare certain schedules of rates which shall be deemed reasonable until overruled in specific cases by a jury."

This report does no more. This report don't go an inch beyond it—not an iota. And yet the gentlemen tell us that there is no example of such a law. I commend them to the history of their country.

I hold in my hand the Acts of the British Parliament. In an Act regulating railway and canal traffic, passed in eighteen hundred and seventy-three, I find this:

"SECTION 12. Subject to the provisions in the last preceding section contained, the Commissioners shall have full power to decide that any proposed through rate is due and reasonable, notwithstanding that a less amount may be allotted to any forwarding company out of such through rate than the maximum rate such company is entitled to charge, and to allow and apportion such through rate accordingly."

The fifteenth section read thus:

"The Commissioners shall have power to hear and determine any question or dispute which may arise with respect to the terminal charges of any railway company, when such charges have not been fixed by any Act of Parliament, and to decide what is a reasonable sum to be paid to any company for loading and unloading, covering, collection, delivery, and other services of a like nature. Any decision of the Commissioners under this section shall be binding on all Courts in all legal pleadings whatever."

And now gentlemen come here and say there is no example for the report of the committee. The statement, to say the least, is unsupported by evidence, and without foundation. Now it does appear extraordinary that this course of comment has been pursued here. It is unwarranted; it is undeserved. I had almost said it is misrepresentation. It is unparliamentary.

There is another objection urged to this section, which I shall very briefly notice, and that is the objection which seems to alarm some gentlemen—that we have given to this Commission legislative, judicial, and executive powers. They say that it is contrary to the framework of American government. That there is no instance of any such power having been given to a Commission, and in that gentlemen are equally as unfortunate as when they say no law exists which confers upon Commissioners the power to regulate freights and fares.

The gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, the learned Chairman of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights, the patent right author of the "palladium," referred to the Federalist the other day. A more unfortunate allusion could not have been made; a more unfortunate reference could not have been found; for in the forty-sixth and forty-seventh articles of the Federalist, Mr. Hamilton examines this subject with the power of illustration and force of logic for which he has always been celebrated. He says that the truth is, that while that is the general principle, that these departments are constantly being blended, and running the one into the other. He sums up the Constitutions of the States adopted up to that time, and shows conclusively that these powers run the one into the other. He says, for instance, the President is a part of the legislative power, because he is required to approve laws unless he vetoes them. He says that the treaty-making power is conferred upon the President and the Senate by the Constitution of the United States. He says that the appointment to office as an executive power is given to the President and to the Senate—that is, to both the legislative and executive departments. He says that the power of impeachment is a judicial power, but that the power of impeachment is given to the Senate upon the presentation or preferment of articles by the House of Representatives; and he goes through the whole thing. And every writer on constitutional law in the United States, and every Judge who has spoken upon the subject, has admitted the same thing.

I shall now only refer to the learned work of Mr. Pomeroy, in which he says that while the general plan of the Government assumes three coördinate, independent departments, and while these several departments are, in the main, free from each other's control, they are very closely linked together, and one does, at times, perform some of the particular duties of the other. That, sir, is the law. I refer to a late case which has been commented upon and indorsed by the Supreme Court of this State—a case in the 1st Gilman—which holds that, although the Legislature may not divest itself of its proper functions by delegating its general legislative authority, it may authorize others to do those things which it might properly do, yet cannot understandingly or justly do itself. That is the precise case here. This provision authorizes the Commission to do what the Legislature cannot do understandingly; what the Legislature, any more than we, do not fully understand, and which only a separate tribunal, constituted for the purpose, can, after a full investigation, come to understand.

Now, sir, I desire to refer, upon this subject, to a declaration of the Chief Justice of England, Lord Campbell. In England, sir, they have felt the malign influence of corporations. The railroad corporations in England had, for years, been strong enough to override public sentiment, because the power to adjust had been delegated to the Courts of law, instead of some tribunal possessing a practical acquaintance with the subject. Upon this point, the following is the view of Lord Campbell, expressed during a debate in the House of Lords on the Canal and Railway Tariff Act of eighteen hundred and fifty-four:

"They were to form a just judgment on all matters of complaint relating to railway management that might come before them, and they were to lay down a code of regulations for the government of railways. The Judges, and himself among them, felt themselves incompetent to decide on these matters."

That, sir, is the strongest reason in favor of this Commission, that no Legislature, of any character, is competent to discharge this duty. The provision, which the committee has reported, of regulation by the Commission, with the Courts in the background, is, in my opinion, the acme of reason and the best possible disposition that can be made of the subject.

Now, sir, I submit that all of the criticisms of this measure, except the one that the report does not go far enough, are utterly futile; futile to the degree that they amount to imbecility. The objection urged, and that seems to be the only one, is that raised by Governor Stanford in his letter. It has been amplified here, and nothing more. It was, that if there was a Commission elected by the people, it might be hostile to the railroad; that it might confiscate the property of the railroad. But if it has been guilty of the corruption, of the extortion, and of all the acts, or any of them, which have been charged, it ought to go down in shame and be punished for its crimes. But, if honest, it need not fear.

As to the method of election, I have but one word to say, and I do not intend to repeat to-day what I said upon a former occasion. It has been urged in the course of this debate, that the election would fall into party management, and that the Commissioners would be elected by party. I think the gentleman from San Francisco, who just took his seat, returned a sufficient answer to that, but if it were so, it is no objection. The Judges even in England are by appointment. They are the friends and supporters of the administration, and the Minister in power at the time of the appointment. And in this country, as the gentlemen know, Judges have been elected by parties and by party machinery; and they have been appointed by party machinery. Chief Justice Marshall, perhaps as great a man as ever sat on any bench—and certainly not inferior to any—was appointed by John Adams, a party man certainly, because he would so mold the Constitution as to put some iron ribs into it. Judge Story's was a party appointment, made by Mr. Madison, because he was then a Democrat, supporting the administration of Mr. Madison, and because, also, that he was eminently qualified, and a man whose worldwide reputation in the realm of jurisprudence admits of no attack. And Chief Justice Taney; his was a party appointment—appointed by General Jackson—a man whose extended and exact knowledge of the common law is without rivalship in this country, or any other. Now, then, suppose they are nominated and elected by party. Is it in any worse condition than if they are to be appointed by the Governor? Will not the Governor be compelled to appoint his own partisan if the appointment is given to him? And worse than all that, he will have in addition to party considerations, that of his own ambition and that of nepotism. It does not become gentlemen here, with the examples fresh before us of executive appointments, to commend that to us as a perfectly safe course of action. Why, what was done by one of the late Presidents of the United States? He did not, as it has been said of some man, send all his wife's relations to war, but he appointed them all to office. Look at the Supreme Court of the United States. Who does not know that that Court was packed by the Executive for the greenback decision. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed, above all other things, to the appointment of those Commissioners by the Executive. I have had some observation in that matter.

I became a resident of Mississippi many years ago, and the judiciary was so organized that the Judges were elected by the people. I lived under the system for several years. I thought I had seen some abuses under that system. I went to Texas, and in the Constitutional Convention of Texas I joined with those who favored the appointment by the Governor and confirmation by the Senate, but the action of the Governor was so unfortunate that the Constitution was amended and the election given to the people. If you cannot trust the people you cannot trust anybody. All other departments of this government—at least the legislative and executive departments—have been weighed and found wanting, and if we cannot confide this election to the people, we might as well abandon the whole system of government at once. If the people cannot be trusted, who can? I wish that answered—who can be trusted if the people cannot? If the people cannot be trusted, then, I repeat, our government is an ignominious failure. But, Mr. Chairman, I trust the people. I do not say so to flatter the people, for all who know my humble course know that I have in no instance hesitated to put myself in opposition to the views of the people when my judgment told me that they were wrong.

Mr. Chairman, some years ago, in eighteen hundred and fifty, just before his great spirit took its flight from this earth, I heard Mr. Calhoun declare that, unless the corruptions of this Government could be arrested, it would end either in dissolution of the Union or monarchy. I have thought of it often during the last few years. The purpose of dissolution has passed by, I trust forever, but monarchy is directly in front, staring us in the face, and unless we can arrest the course of corruption, of tyranny, of corporation corruption and corporation plunder in the United States, this Government will end inevitably in monarchy. And I do not hesitate to say, that when it comes to the question of being ruled by a moneyed aristocracy, concentrated in corporations, give me one gentleman, above temptation, with a sword by his side and spurs on his heels. I prefer him to Vanderbilt, and I prefer him to Jay Gould and his trunk lines and India rubber accounts. If this Government cannot be rescued from its downward tendency by the people, it is gone, and gone forever; and I agree with what the gentleman from San Francisco has so eloquently said upon that subject. But, sir, it will be rescued! I have seen the people of this country tried. It will be rescued! They will stop its downward tendency. They will build up this republic again on its ancient foundations. They carried it through the war of the revolution. It was the people in the last conflict that maintained the Government, and not the politicians or army. It was the great, stout-hearted, and stout-handed American people. For when the history of that transaction comes to be written, it will be proved incontestably, by the evidence of Cabinet officers, that the then President and his Cabinet were willing, in the language of one, to let the wayward sisters slide; and it was only after the firing on Fort Sumpter, when they heard the roar of the multitude on the outside, that the administration wheeled into line and took sides in favor of the Union. The people of this country will preserve this Government! They will preserve its honor and rebuke the corruption with which it is now surrounded. I have no fear of the people. I prefer them to all other sources of power. In fact, there are none except the people, for take it and put it into as few hands as you may, it comes back to the people at last.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I say in conclusion, I hope we shall take time to do this thing well, for it is a momentous thing, and we should not hurry it, so as to make it imperfect and unworthy of the indorsement of the people.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention then, at twelve o'clock and forty-eight minutes P. M., took a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section twenty and pending amendments are before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire to trouble the committee at any length. There has been some fault found with those who oppose this report, because they have not offered amendments, which seems to convince them that the section ought to be adopted. It must be remembered that the committee have had this report under discussion and consideration about sixty days. We have been in session sixty-eight days, and this subject has been considered by the Committee on Corporations for nearly the whole of that time. They had plenty of time to examine the subject and make a report. They made a report, and then called upon this Convention to stand by their guns and support the committee, and carry the doctrine through, because it was all right. They would tolerate no amendments, because the report needed none. The report was all right. "Stand by your guns," shouted the Chairman; "the report is right, and let us adopt it." I and others upon this floor were endeavoring to point out the weak places in the report, but our counsels were not heeded. I do not think it comes with very good grace from the Chairman of that committee to talk about our not offering amendments, when those we did offer were voted down and brushed aside, utterly regardless of the arguments with which we supported them. It seems to me the Committee on Corporations ought to have been able to decide upon something definite in this matter in sixty days. Instead of that we find them bringing in a report entirely different from the first one. They have at last come to see that the first report was not right, and the committee themselves have been the first to abandon their guns. Mr. Hale and Mr. Campbell have presented amendments which have been taken by the committee and engrafted in their last report. Why, sir, the other day I had occasion to comment upon this twentieth section. I said that it would shake the whole basis of republican institutions; that there would be a conflict between these Commissions and the other great departments of government; that nobody would have any control over them; that the Courts would have nothing to do with them except to enforce their mandates; that they constitute a fourth department of government, superior and above all the others. I declared then, that this thing, if adopted, would sap the very foundation of our system of government. That idea has been indorsed by the gentleman from Sacramento, the gentleman from Santa Clara, and other eminent gentlemen on this floor. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Vacquerel, struck the key-note the other day when he said that there was no necessity for any such thing in a republican form of government. Now, I do not propose to go over this ground again. There has been no answer made to such arguments as these, and there can be none. There has been no attempt to answer them, on the part of any gentleman on this floor. Gentlemen have asserted here that we ought to have these Commissioners, because the people have sent us here to provide for it, and all that sort of thing. How do they know what the people want? This Commission was invented on this floor, and was not an issue in any political canvass that I ever heard of. So far as this matter is concerned, as well as in all other matters, I shall act as my best judgment and my conscience tell me to act; and, unless a proposition can be supported by reason and argument, I shall not give my assent to it. The bare unsupported statement of gentlemen that the people want this thing, or that thing, or the other thing, is not entitled to any consideration.

Now, in regard to the question of the appointment of these Commissioners. It seems to me it is time we should stop in our crazy career and reflect a little. I think there is abundant room for reflection. We were called upon to come forward and support the report of the committee. Our own sense of right and justice prevented us from doing it, and now, after all this discussion, the committee themselves come forward and acknowledge that it was wrong, and they have called themselves together, and have drawn up and presented another section, and bring it in here this morning, and have sprung it upon us without thought or time for reflection, and they expect us to adopt it, without even knowing what it contains. It has been read to us for information, but if we are forced to a vote upon it to-night, it will certainly not be an intelligent vote. I most respectfully submit that we can accomplish nothing. Now, the original section reads:

"Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight."

The committee now report the following section:

SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the regular gubernatorial elections, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts; to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in this and the foregoing sections.

They have struck out the word "sole." Now, as I have so often said, I am opposed to a Commission, upon principle. But I recognize the objects sought to be attained, and I say you cannot adopt a section that will more effectually defeat those objects than this will. It leaves great questions to be determined—questions of interpretation—and when you get to work under it, and it comes into the Courts, you will have to send your lawyers there, unless you shall conclude to send farmers and bricklayers; you will probably have to elect lawyers to the Supreme Court, and they will have to pass upon these matters. The committee have taken away the word "sole," and deprived the section of its vitality. If they are given the sole power to do these things, that would exclude the Courts and the Legislature. The striking out of this word may be decided to leave this power jointly in the hands of the Commission and the Legislature, and it certainly will be a question that will have to be decided by the Courts as to where this power belongs. Now, if that makes any change at all, what do you do? Why, you leave the power in the Board of Commissioners and in the Legislature equally. That is the legal result of it. The Legislature, undoubtedly, have the power to regulate freights and fares. How shall both of these bodies exercise that power? Suppose the Legislature does pass a statute fixing freights and fares, and the Commissioners pass another rule or order—one stands to one thing and one to another. Which is going to prevail? How are they going to enforce their decrees? The railroad cannot obey both. They will take the middle ground, and steer between them, because there is a conflict of authority. What is the result? Nobody but God can tell. No human being can tell what the result will be. That is the condition of things that will result from having the word sole stricken out.

Now comes the other point made by the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager: "They shall examine the books, papers, etc., and for this shall have process of the Courts."

Now, we have already passed some portions of the Constitution, which I do not suppose we shall change at all. I hope my friends, right and left, won't forget what I say, or recollect anything which I don't say. Section nineteen of the Bill of Rights, as adopted, reads as follows:

"SEC. 19. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable seizures and searches, shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons and things to be seized."

Digitized by Google

Now, these conflicting statements and provisions will give rise to never-ending litigation. The question will have to be determined in the Courts, as to what constitutes an unreasonable seizure and search, and all that sort of thing. This section goes on to say that they may examine the books and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for that purpose they shall have process of the Courts. There is absolutely no limit to their power in that regard; no limit as to time or place; no limit as to the subject-matter to which it applies. All books, all papers, and all records must be exhibited, without reservation, no matter whether they are applicable or not. Why, sir, is such a thing as this to be tolerated for a moment? Look at it. What do you mean by "process of Court?" Will it be held that these Commissioners, under this section, can order the companies to produce their books, papers, and documents, and if they refuse, the Courts must enforce the demand? I think not. It would be a pretty state of affairs that the railroad company could not be allowed to come before the Courts and present their side of the case. They would be. The Court would exercise a discretionary power in the matter. Is the whole course of justice to be disturbed by these men thus exercising absolute and arbitrary power? If the process of Court is resorted to, it must be upon application by them, showing what the purpose is, supported by affidavits, upon notice to the parties, charging the facts; and then the Court will make the order. It would be a singular state of things if they should be condemned without notice or an opportunity of being heard. It will be an unending source of litigation. All these things must be decided in the Courts.

Then, again, they are to hear complaints against the railroad and other transportation companies. One gentleman proposes to make the fine for a violation of the commands of the section twenty thousand dollars. Now, is that a legitimate, proper expression of the public desire to vindicate the law against a man who violates the letter of the law openly and under a claim of right? I think not, sir. My sense of justice revolts at the idea. To what madness are we coming to? Now, these Commissioners have no power of their own to enforce any of their decrees. They sit there like a bump on a log and make orders. They go to the Court. They have subpœnaed one of the officers, and he refuses to answer their questions. They go to the Court and say, this man refuses to obey us. We want you to punish him for contempt. The Court says, I will not send him to jail until I find out whether he is guilty or not. The Court has to make an inquiry. Notice must be given—for the Court will not punish this man for alleged contempt without giving him notice, and then the case is brought up and regularly tried. If he is guilty, the Court says, you must go back and answer the question, or you will be punished for contempt. Well, he goes back; the question is asked again, and he answers it. The next time the Commissioners come along they put the question to him again, and he says, I won't answer it. Then they go to Court again, and the same thing is repeated. Where will the thing end, and how will they accomplish anything?

Now, they are to enforce their decisions through the medium of the Courts, correct abuses, and so on. What decisions; what abuses? What is an abuse? I suppose when a man enters a car and fills my face full of foul smoke from a bad cigar, that might be termed an abuse. I think, perhaps it is, and if I thought this Commission could prevent it, I don't know but I might be induced to vote for it. But how are they going to correct that or any other abuse. It has no power, under this section, to enforce its decrees. They can do nothing without going into the Courts, and any private citizen has that right now.

Now, sir, if this Convention is going to have a Commission, for the sake of the credit of this body I hope we will make it of some practical benefit. If we are to have such a scheme, let us have an intelligent one, with proper sanctions and penalties. I do not believe these railroad companies have been guilty of half the things they are charged with. But there is one thing that we all know, and that is, that they have an immense power, and if they choose to do so, they can use it to the detriment of the country. This they ought not to be permitted to do.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer a corrected amendment in place of the one I presented last evening, which I think will be acceptable to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento. I ask that it be read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty as follows: In line two, strike out 'Gubernatorial,' and insert 'General;' in line three, strike out 'four,' and insert 'six,' and at the end of line three, add 'provided, that the three Commissioners elected at the first election shall so classify themselves by lot that one of them shall go out of office at the end of two years, one at the end of four years, and one at the end of six years, so that after the first election one Commissioner shall be elected at the general election every two years, and shall hold the office for the term of six years."

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: My proposition last night was to elect two Commissioners for two years, and one for four years. In presenting this amendment I have tried to consult the wishes of the members upon this floor.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer another amendment to this section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts to be kept by all such corporations and companies, and they shall keep their accounts according to such system. Any railroad corporation or transportation company which shall fail or refuse to conform to such rates as shall be established by said Commissioners, or shall charge rates in excess thereof, or shall fail to keep their accounts in accordance with the system prescribed by said Commissioners, shall be fined not exceeding twenty thousand dollars for each offense; and every officer, agent, or employé, of any such corporation or company, who shall demand or receive rates in excess thereof, or who shall in any manner violate the provisions of this section, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the County Jail not exceeding one year. In all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of freights and fares established by said Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie just and reasonable; and in any action against such corporation or company for damages sustained by charging excessive rates, the plaintiff, in addition to actual damages, may, in the discretion of the Judge or jury, recover exemplary damages. The Legislature may, in addition to any penalties herein prescribed, enforce this article by forfeiture, or otherwise, and may confer such further powers on the Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined upon them in this and the foregoing section."

SPEECH OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I have but a few words to say in explanation of this amendment. Some time ago I prepared an amendment to section twenty, as reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, with a view to offering it at the proper time. But after a lengthy discussion on the provisions of the section, the committee introduced a substitute for it, and that substitute in its main features seems to meet the approval of a large portion of this body; and so many gentlemen seem to be in favor of preserving the features of the amendment as offered, that I deem it unwise to offer the amendment which I prepared originally; but I have introduced in place of it this addition to the section, or substitute, reported by the committee. This addition embraces most of what was contained in the amendment which I had originally intended to offer.

Now, there have been some strictures made by the gentleman from Marin, Judge Shafter, upon at least a portion of this amendment. Now let us see if that amendment is prejudiced in favor of or against the corporations; or if it is not right and fair and just. That amendment provides, it is true, for the imposition of a fine of twenty thousand dollars. Some gentlemen have said that I ought to have put in a minimum also, and suggest the words, "not less than five thousand dollars." I preferred to leave that matter to the discretion of the Court, so that if the Court sees a disposition manifested on the part of the corporations to override the law and to disobey its mandates, and the case is one of such an aggravated character as to affect the interests of the community, that the Court should have the power to impose a fine to the amount of twenty thousand dollars if it thinks fit. Now, the gentleman thinks twenty thousand dollars an outrageous fine. If he will refer to the Penal Code of this State he will find that precisely such an act as that is punishable by imprisonment for not less than one year, and such imprisonment may extend to the lifetime of the person. If I steal half a dollar from the person of another, I am liable to imprisonment in the State Prison, under the same Code, for a period not less than one nor more than ten years. So that before the gentleman talks about the penalties being excessive and severe, he had better first consult the statutes of the State, which are universally recognized and enforced by the Courts of the State in dealing with crime.

Another one of his criticisms was that the provision giving the Commissioners power to examine the books and papers of these corporations is in conflict with, and inconsistent with the provisions of the Bill of Rights, because, by the latter article, the people are to be secure against unreasonable seizures and searches. Well, is it unreasonable that these Commissioners, invested with the power of fixing freights and fares, acting for the public, in regard to public corporations, which has a public duty to perform, should be authorized to examine these books and papers, for the purpose of enabling it to act intelligently? Are the books of these corporations to be concealed from their scrutiny, when it is absolutely necessary for the Commissioners to have access to them in order to make an intelligent bill of freights and fares? Is it unreasonable for them to have access to these books in order to obtain the requisite information to enable them to carry out the mandates of the Constitution? Is it in any way inconsistent with this provision of the Bill of Rights which secures persons against unreasonable searches and seizures?

Are these powers unreasonable and without precedent, as the gentleman says? Let us look at the powers which are now vested by law in the Bank Commissioners of this State—powers which are being exercised confessedly to the very great advantage of the public; powers, through the exercise of which, the greatest abuses are to-day being corrected. Let us look at those powers:

"SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of one or more of the Bank Commissioners, as designated by the Commissioners, once in six months, and as often as in their judgment may be deemed necessary, without previous notice, to visit and to make personally a full examination of each bank, saving bank, saving and loan society, or other society, association, company, or institution incorporated under the laws of this State, or any other State or country, and doing business in this State for the accumulation and investment of funds and savings, or any trust company receiving any valuable thing in trust, or money on special deposit, or any person publicly receiving money on deposit for safe keeping; to inspect all books, papers, notes, bonds, or evidences of debt of such corporations, and all securities; to ascertain the condition of every such corporation, its solvency, its ability to fulfill all its obligations, and report its condition to the Attorney-General as soon as may be after such examination."

Who in this State, the gentleman from Marin included, has complained of that power in the Bank Commissioners to examine papers, books, etc., of the institution? But, says one gentleman, it will interfere with the private books of the Directors. It does nothing of the kind. The books of a corporation are the books of a public corporation, organized under the laws of the State, and having certain obligations and duties towards the people, deriving its life from the State, and conducting and carrying on its business under the sanction of our laws; and to say that any such institution may refuse to the proper public authority the right to investigate, the right to examine the books of the institution, is to say that swindling, whether through railroad, banking, or other corporations, is not an offense under the laws of the land. That it is to be permitted and encouraged by a sort of constitutional guaranty and sanction which gentlemen seek to spread over all the frauds that may be proposed under corporate mismanagement. Why, sir, it requires but little argument to answer such a proposition. Their own statements are a sufficient refutation of them.

Another thing: the gentleman does not like it that the word sole has been stricken out. He claims that under the section the power to fix freights and fares is a concurrent power; that we have not taken it away from the Legislature, but that it remains there, and that the Legislature may at any time set aside the action of the Commission, and may substitute for any tariff of freights and fares established by the Commissioners something of its own creation. I deny that this is a correct proposition of law. The rule is, that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of the other. If this Constitution rests in a Board of Commissioners the power to do these things, to fix freights and fares, it is exclusive in its nature. You cannot have two bodies exercising the same power at the same time; and in attempting to regulate freights and fares the Legislature would in effect be repealing this section of the Constitution. The criticisms which this gentleman has presented, are all equally defective. There may be questions that will be raised by the corporations as to the construction of the language; no doubt there will be. But I would like to know where the statesman is who can draft a code of laws under which a question of construction cannot be raised. If the gentleman supposes that either he or any other member of this Convention, or any committee of this body, is wise enough to construct a provision, either constitutional or legislative, that will not be susceptible to different interpretations, he will find himself very widely mistaken. I admit that some parts of this section will necessarily be open to judicial construction. So will the language of every section which we adopt here. It is comparatively a new subject in this State, and whatever language may be adopted, either by the Convention or by the Legislature, necessarily must become a subject for judicial inquiry and judicial construction.

Now, sir, as far as this provision goes, with the amendment attached to it, I believe it is the best that can be adopted under the circumstances. I would myself, in some respects, have it go farther, and in others, perhaps, not so far; but I do believe this provision as it now stands represents the average judgment of the Convention, and I think, of the people.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I shall not detain the committee but a few moments, as I suppose they are ready to come to a vote. I wish to say that it strikes me as a little strange that my distinguished friend from Marin, who has just addressed this Convention, should say that it is time for us to reflect, and warning us about getting excited; that we must treat the subject with the utmost gravity; that these are questions of the greatest concern; that we must approach them by slow degrees; that reason must prevail. For one, he said he intended to address himself entirely to the question; that he was not going to wander from the question at issue, and would address himself to section twenty, and the amendments then pending. And then my distinguished friend proceeded to talk about everything else but section twenty and the amendments, and then closed his remarks by saying how terribly wicked it would be to punish a man for robbing his neighbor. For one, I confess I do not comprehend the logic of the distinguished gentleman, when he undertook to convince this Convention that the section did not mean anything, and in half an hour after he attempted to show you that, if it was adopted, it would be the greatest outrage ever perpetrated upon an enlightened community. That is the logic of the gentleman. That, in effect, is the logic and the argument of all the opponents of this measure. The question for us to consider, calmly and deliberately, here is, whether this amendment is right. If it is right, let the friends of the measure stand squarely up to it, and defend it against every assault. If it is wrong, then it should be defeated. There is no member of this Convention, there is no friend of regulation on this floor, who desires anything placed in the Constitution of this State that will imperil or endanger any of the great interests of the State. There is no member of this Convention who desires a word or a sentence placed in that section, or in the Constitution, which will imperil the rights of any corporation in this State, however much these corporations may have infringed upon the rights of individuals. The question, sir, is not whether the language pleases the gentleman; not whether he is afraid the corporations will be pleased with the adoption or rejection of this Constitution; not whether that section will be of advantage to this or that particular interest, but rather whether it will be a permanent good to the whole people of this great State. If it will, then it ought to be adopted. If it will not, it ought not to be adopted, and the people, when it is passed, will sustain it.

Now, I have failed to hear any argument to-day to show that this section, with all its provisions, would imperil any of the material interests of this State. I have failed to hear any argument showing that the establishment of rates of charges for freight and fares by Commissioners elected by the qualified electors of this State, would be a wrong upon any of the material interests of the corporations even. It is admitted by gentlemen all around us that the Legislature has that power. It is admitted that the Legislature has power to regulate freights and fares. Then they tell us that the Legislature cannot do it, because they have not the time to devote to the subject. Now, in reply, we admit that the Legislature, under the power which they have, could do it if they would—they possibly might do it honestly if they knew how—but they have not the time, opportunity, experience, or learning, to qualify them to go on and deal with this important question. But we do say that if you elect three citizens of this State for that specific purpose, that they will soon become capable of handling the subject, and that they will handle it so as not to destroy any of the interests of the State. Where is the State officer that ever has? Why, sir, your Governor, year after year, has stood between the Legislature and the people and vetoed bill after bill in defense of the people's interests. When some great corporation has succeeded in passing measures through that were detrimental, the Governor has come to the rescue and exercised the veto power in their behalf; and why? because the Governor, as the Chief Executive of the State, occupies a position towards the people whereby he is held strictly accountable for what he does. He knows the whole people of the State will look upon him as their protector; that it is his constitutional duty to defend their rights; and, occupying that sacred and exalted position, he exercises that power in the interest of the people, and not in the interest of the corporations. I remember when a bill was passed here giving to one corporation nearly all the tide land around San Francisco, and your Governor vetoed it, and his veto was sustained only by a small majority. I do not see why the Commissioners, elected by the same people, under the same circumstances, will not stand between the people and the corporations, and do justice to both. I believe they will. I believe the powers, if they were absolute—if they had absolute and unrestricted powers—these three men, elected by the people of this State, would endeavor to do justice alike to the people and to the corporations, when elected for that specific purpose.

Now, sir, ridicule is said to be the strongest argument that can be made by the enemies of any just cause. Ridicule is always resorted to when the enemies have no other kind of argument to advance. It is sometimes easy to get up a laugh and laugh a thing down, but when a distinguished gentleman, like the gentleman from Marin, gets up and makes an illustration that will make somebody laugh, he need not think it takes the place of argument. It does not. Some of his illustrations are exceedingly illogical. He went on to say that this provision would amount to nothing; that it was absolute folly—the idea that one hundred and fifty men elected and sent here to make a Constitution, should be carried away by such irrational, irresponsible propositions as these. He went on to show that no railroads could exist if this provision should be enforced. O, no; you must not destroy them. They ought to be free to carry on their own business. This thing of compelling them to obey the mandates of the Constitution, and not allowing them to discriminate as they see fit; stop their cars here and not there, and only carry freight through to certain points ——

MR. SHAFTER. I said nothing of the kind—nothing in reference to it. I only spoke about discrimination between places where it is material to have stations.

MR. ESTEE. If it is material enough to have a station, it is material enough to ship freight from it. I may have misunderstood the gentleman. I could not hear all that he said. I understood him to justify the practice of the railroads in closing up certain stations and refusing to ship small shipments. Now, if it is true that they do that, I think we had better have Commissioners to say that it shall be shipped where the freight is; and they should see to it that the man who lives five miles from a town shall not be compelled to pay a higher price for passage to that town than the man who lives twenty miles away. If that is justice, I cannot see it. I think the illustration given by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McConnell, in reference to shipments over the Sierra Nevada Mountains, a very apt one; and I have heard no answer to his argument yet. The strangest thing is that rational men will make any such contracts as these men say they have made with the Eastern companies.

Now, a great deal has been said relative to the interpretation of this language. I took occasion recently to say that language represents ideas; and when language fails to represent some great idea, then language is a failure. Some of the most beautifully rounded sentences which may be placed in this Constitution which might attract a great many gentlemen on this floor, when you come to take them into Court for judicial determination, may, in fact, mean very little. I wish to read a few lines from McCauley's History of England, page 579, second volume:

"It was moved that King James the Second, having endeavored to subvert the Constitution of the kingdom by breaking the original contract between King and people, and by the advice of Jesuits and other wicked persons, having violated the fundamental laws, and having withdrawn himself out of the kingdom, had abdicated the government, and that the throne had thereby become vacant. This resolution has been many times subjected to criticism as minute and severe as was ever applied to any sentence written by man; and perhaps there never was a sentence written by man which would bear such criticism less. That a King, by grossly abusing his power, may forfeit it, is true. That a King who absconds without making any provision for the administration, and leaves his people in a state of anarchy, may, without any violent straining of language, be said to have abdicated its functions, is also true; but no accurate writer would affirm that long continued misgovernment and desertion, added together, make up an act of abdication. It is evident, too, that the mention of the Jesuits and other evil advisers of James, weakens, instead of strengthening, the case against him; for surely more indulgence is due to a man misled by pernicious counsel than to a man who goes wrong from the mere impulse of his own mind. It is idle, however, to examine these memorable words as we should examine a chapter of Aristotle or of Hobbs. Such words are to be considered, not as words, but as deeds. If they effect that which they are intended to effect, they are rational, though they may be contradictory. If they fail of attaining their end, they are absurd, though they carry demonstration with them. Logic admits of no compromise. The essence of politics is compromise. It is therefore not strange that some of the most important and most useful political instruments in the world should be among the most illogical compositions that ever were penned. The object of Somers, of Maynard, and of the other eminent men who shaped this celebrated motion was, not to leave to posterity a model of definition and partition, but to make the restoration of a tyrant impossible, and to place on the throne a sovereign under whom law and liberty might be secure. This object they attained by using language which, in a philosophical treatise, would justly be reprehended as inexact and confused. They cared little whether their major agreed with their conclusion if the major secured two hundred votes, and the conclusion two hundred more. In fact, the one beauty of the resolution is in its inconsistency."

The highest evidence we have that this section means something is, that all the gentlemen who are opposed to it say it means nothing. It means a great deal, and that is what troubles them. One gentleman says that it will cost from six thousand dollars to twenty thousand dollars a year to get a man capable of acting as Railroad Commissioner. I don't know. I admit that it would be impossible to secure the services of the gentleman for twenty thousand dollars a year, but I think there are many gentlemen in this State who are perfectly capable of acting in this capacity, and doing absolute justice to the people and to the corporations, for two thousand dollars or three thousand dollars a year. I do not see why we cannot educate somebody up to this position as well as the company. I can remember very well when the gentlemen who own these railroads knew nothing about railroads. They lived here in this city. They educated themselves up to it. I do not believe but what there are plenty of men capable of filling this position, who will serve the people for a reasonable salary. I do not wish to detain the Convention any longer, as they are anxious to come to a vote. I merely wanted to answer some of these criticisms.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. INMAN. Mr. Chairman: I believe we have spent time enough on this thing, and I call for the previous question.

MR. WEST. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, and see if he will not accept it.

MR. INMAN. I will withdraw the motion temporarily.

MR. WEST. I move to amend the amended section by striking out all after the word "company's," in the third line from the bottom, and adopt the amendment of Judge Campbell. The latter portion of the section, as printed in the Journal, reads as in the latter clause of the Campbell amendment. The language will be duplicated if the Campbell amendment is adopted. Therefore, I hope Judge Campbell will accept the amendment.

MR. CAMPBELL. I accept the amendment.

MR. INMAN. I now insist upon the previous question.

The previous question was seconded by Messrs. West, O'Donnell, Larkin, and Cross.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

Division was called for, and the amendment was adopted by a vote of 70 ayes to 41 noes.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment which I wish to send up.

THE CHAIRMAN. No amendment is in order at present. There is another amendment pending. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts, to be kept by all such corporations and companies, and they shall keep their accounts according to such system. Any railroad corporation or transportation company which shall fail or refuse to conform to such rates as shall be established by said Commissioners, or shall charge rates in excess thereof, or shall fail to keep their accounts in accordance with the system prescribed by said Commissioners, shall be fined not exceeding twenty thousand dollars for each offense; and any officer, agent, or employé of any such corporation or company, who shall demand or receive rates in excess thereof, or who shall in any manner violate the provisions of this section, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. In all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of fares and freights established by said Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie just and reasonable. In any action against such corporation or company for damage sustained by charging excessive rates, the plaintiff, in addition to actual damage, may, in the discretion of the Judge or jury, recover exemplary damages. The Legislature may, in addition to any penalties herein prescribed, enforce this article by forfeiture, or otherwise, and may confer such further powers on the Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined upon them in this and the foregoing section."

Also, amend by striking out of the section all after the word "companies," which was accepted by Mr. Campbell.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I ask to have the words read that were stricken out.

THE SECRETARY read:

"It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to perform the duties enjoined on them in this and the foregoing section."

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I would inquire whether the language of the amendment, as presented, is not broad enough to strike out the amendment offered by myself and adopted by the committee last night?

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to move to strike words out of the section.

MR. WEST. Is it not in order to strike out?

THE CHAIRMAN. Not under the previous question.

MR. WEST. To strike out that with other matters?

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

MR. JOYCE. I ask to have the amendment of Mr. Campbell read as amended—both amendments.

THE SECRETARY read them again.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell.

Adopted.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, by adding after the word 'therein,' in the fourth line, the words 'by impeachment, as in other cases.'"

MR. McCALLUM. I raise a point of order. The point of order is, that the amendment having been adopted cannot be amended.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The amendment is not in order. It should have been offered when the amendment was pending.

MR. ESTEE. It only adds to the section. I have never known of an instance where such an amendment could not be made.

THE CHAIRMAN. Well, you know of an instance now, then.

MR. REYNOLDS. And I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

MR. JOYCE. I move an amendment to the original proposition.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding between the words 'companies,' in line eleven, section twenty, 'provided that the profits accruing from such charges shall not exceed eight per cent. on the assessed value of such railroad or other transportation company.'"

MR. JOYCE. My reasons for offering this——

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I may as well raise a point of order here——

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I ask to have the section read, as amended, with all the amendments adopted. We had better know how it reads.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read the section as amended as follows:

SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the general election, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be six years; provided, that the three Commissioners elected at the first election shall so classify themselves by lot that one of them shall go out of office at the end of two years, one at the end of four years, and one at the end of six years, so that after the first election one Commissioner shall be elected at the general election every two years, and shall hold office for the term of six years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts; to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies; provided, the Legislature shall have power to remove any one or more of said Commissioners from office for dereliction of duty, corruption, or incompetency therein; and whenever, from any cause, vacancy of office shall occur in said Commission, the Governor shall fill the same by appointing a qualified person thereto, who shall hold office for the residue of the unexpired term, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified. Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts, to be kept by all of such corporations and companies, and they shall keep their accounts according to that system. Any railroad corporation or transportation company which shall fail or refuse to conform to such rates as shall be established by said Commissioners, or shall charge rates in excess thereof, or shall fail to make their accounts correspond with the system prescribed by the Commission, shall be fined not exceeding twenty thousand dollars for each offense; and any officer, agent, or employé of any such corporation or company, who shall demand or receive rates in excess thereof, or who shall in any manner violate the provisions of this section, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. In all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of fares and freights established by said Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie just and reasonable. In any action against any such corporation or company, for damages sustained by charging excessive rates, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damage may, in the discretion of the Judge or jury, recover exemplary damages. The Legislature may, in addition to any penalties herein prescribed, enforce this article by forfeiture or otherwise, and may confer such further powers on the Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined upon them in this and the foregoing section."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by Mr. Joyce.

MR. JOYCE. The reasons why I offer that amendment is simply this. Most all the parties favoring the original proposition are in favor of giving the Commissioners all the power absolutely necessary for them to regulate freights and fares. With that all agree as far as that is concerned. But it is a very well known fact that the people never set out to bribe their own officers. Now, the great question is, can we put any more confidence in the Commission than we can in the Legislature. I say if the people be fairly represented in this Convention, and I think they reasonably are, that we had better limit the possibilities of both the Legislature and the Commission on the side of the people. We are very careful about abolishing special legislation. Now the Commissioners stand within the power on the part of the people. I say let us limit them as to the height they can allow freights to be risen. Might they not escape the order to lower them—they being so well known as Railroad Commissioners—they being so much infringed on year after year with millions upon millions. I think there is a wide margin for fraud, and we ought to limit them. I say lest these Commissioners might be bought up we had better limit them to the height at which fares and freights can be risen. Now, Mr. President, I think this limit is a just one. They must go to the Assessors' books and find the assessed value. That is fair. Then the question will rise, how did that assessment come there? Were the corporations in the habit of placing such assessments there. If they are unjust let them be raised, and then the people will be the gainers for the raise in taxation. If they are satisfied with this manner of doing business, I don't see what they should want. It is as easy to get a valuation on railroad property, as any other property. If they were to bring them down to first principles, I think it is very easy to do it. But by going to the Assessors' books they will compel them to prove what the value of the property is, and it will be for the Commissioners to dispute such facts as they prove were facts. By this means we will be able to get the actual value and allow them a fair assessment upon it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer a substitute for the entire section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out section twenty of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, and substitute therefor the following: 'The Legislature shall pass laws to correct abuses and prevent unjust discrimination in the rates of freight and passenger tariffs on the different railroads of this State, and shall, from time to time, pass laws establishing maximum rates for the transportation of passengers and freight on such railroads; provided, such maximum rates shall not exceed three cents per mile for passenger rates, nor three cents per ton per mile for freight, which maximum rates are hereby fixed and established until the same shall be lowered by the Legislature. The Legislature shall enforce this section by adequate penalties."

MR. LAINE. In submitting that substitute, I desire simply to say that I believe this is essentially a legislative power. I have no confidence in the Commissioners. Now, if we mean to do anything, let us do it. This is the place to do it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine.

Lost.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the committee rise—["No." "No." "No."] Wait until I get through. I move the committee rise, report progress, and recommend to the Convention that this section be referred back to the Committee on Corporations to formulate it—["No." "No." "No."] Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, and I know what I am doing.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee.

MR. HALE. Allow me to make one suggestion. There are one or two sections of this report that have been passed over. I would ask the Chairman of the committee whether he recollects that fact.

MR. ESTEE. Certainly, I do. That is the only way to reach it. I make the motion that the committee rise, and recommend to the Convention that this section be referred back to the committee to formulate it, with the ideas contained in it. If the gentlemen will allow me, the reason for this is that these various amendments do not all come in their proper places, and the section ought to be rearranged. Let it go to the Judiciary Committee, if you wish. ["No." "No." "No."]

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on referring the section back.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman——

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

MR. HOWARD. I don't want the report tinkered by the committee.

Lost.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I move to take up the section offered by myself on December fourth, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole, to constitute section twenty-one.

THE CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to section twenty?

MR. HERRINGTON. I will read the proposed section:

"Amend article (proposition number four hundred and forty-four) as reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, by inserting therein, next after section twenty as reported, the following:

"SEC. 21. Said Railroad Commission, in the execution of its powers, shall so fix, and from time to time regulate, the charges for freights and fares collectible by said railroad and other transportation companies, that the revenue derived therefrom, over running expenses and expenses for repairs by such companies, shall not, in the aggregate for any year after the adoption of this Constitution, exceed, but may be less than, ten per centum of the true cash value of the works, machinery, and property invested and in actual use by such corporations in the business of transportation, as the same shall be assessed annually for State taxation."

THE CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to section twenty?

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I have a suggestion to make. These Commissioners will be elected at the general election, at the time the Legislature is elected, and before the Legislature meets to fix their salaries. Now, I do not think they should be elected upon any uncertain salaries. Therefore I offer this amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Provided, that each of the Commissioners elected at the next general election shall be allowed a salary of five thousand dollars per annum, during their term of office, respectively."

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles: I hope it will be voted down.

MR. HUESTIS. I should like to offer an amendment. It will be voted down, I expect.

THE SECRETARY read:

"But the Legislature shall have power, by a two-thirds vote of both houses, to modify and control the actions of said Board of Commissioners in all matters of fact passed upon by them."

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I rise to a question of order. It is inconsistent with the section, and therefore out of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is further adding to the section as it stands. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Lost.

MR. KLEINE. I offer an amendment to section twenty.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty by striking out the words 'fined not exceeding twenty thousand dollars,' and insert the words 'hanged by the neck until he be dead.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. Out of order.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I trust we shall not proceed to the consideration of section twenty-one before the committee rises. I will state the reason why. I have a proposition which, in its nature, is germane to section twenty, but it really ought to be framed as an independent section, and ought to be acted upon by the committee at this stage. I hope, therefore, that the committee will rise, and allow me to present it to-morrow morning; and in that view I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

MR. HALE. I beg leave, then, to offer a section, to be known as section twenty-one.

THE CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to section twenty?

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to section twenty.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the section: 'But no member of this Convention shall be eligible to the office of Railroad Commissioner at the first election under this Constitution.'"

["Division!" "Division!"—"Ayes and noes."]

MR. LARKIN. I don't think it is necessary. I think the action of this Convention here for the last sixty days will determine that question.

MR. WILSON, of First District. I think it better to be sure, and put it in the Constitution.

[Laughter.]

THE CHAIRMAN. Division has been called for.

The amendment was rejected, by a vote of 55 ayes to 61 noes.

MR. JONES. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost on division—ayes, 38.

MR. TULLY. I offer a substitute for section twenty.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 20. The Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall establish and provide a system for the enforcement of an equitable tariff of rates, fixing the maximum that can be charged for the transportation of passengers and freight by the railroad and transportation companies of this State, which may be altered or amended from time to time; and by all proper legislation prevent undue and unreasonable discrimination in such charges, or in the facilities for the transportation of the same classes of freight and passengers, by such companies, between persons or places, and shall compel the observance of the provisions of this section by fines and forfeitures upon such railroad or transportation companies, or by the imprisonment of the officers and employés, at its discretion."

REMARKS OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. I hope there will be no more tampering with the section. The majority of this Convention are tired of these amendments. They are offered for no other purpose than to get up a discussion. We have been here sixty-five days, and have not got a single section of the Constitution. We have spent about twenty-five thousand dollars to get in this one section. Now the idea of gentlemen offering such amendments as that to go in the Constitution is ridiculous. [Laughter.] Who has any confidence in the Legislatures that have been in this State for the last fifteen or twenty years? Look at the last one. It was one of the most corrupt and venal Legislatures that ever convened in this State. Most of us members were sent here for the purpose of regulating freights and fares. This thing has been settled in San Francisco. They came up and wanted fifteen millions for the waterworks, and if it had not been for the Workingmen's party getting up a big indignation meeting, it would have passed both houses. You all know that to be a fact. [Laughter.] Now don't you leave this thing to the Legislature. We are sent here for the purpose of electing these Commissioners to regulate freights and fares. Most of the corporation lawyers say it is confiscation. If it means that, I say it is just and right. Let the people get back some of the land they have been robbed of. I hope there will be no more tampering with this section. The majority of the members on this floor honestly intend to vote for the section, and nothing else. I hope we will not leave here to-day without passing the section.

[Cries of "Question," "Question."]

MR. O'DONNELL. What do you want of the question? You have spent thirty-six hours yourself on this floor for nothing. [Laughter.] I don't want to detain this committee any longer. ["Go on; go on." Laughter.] We are ready now to vote on this section. We want no more tampering. It has been said that they intend to get up amendment after amendment, and discuss them, until we get disgusted and leave here. I want them to distinctly understand that I am the last man to leave this hall until this Constitution is framed. I will now give way to my friend from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I wish to raise a point of order. My point of order is, that the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, offered a substitute to section twenty, embracing precisely the same matter which is embraced in this substitute. I maintain that the substitute having been voted down, it is not competent to entertain the same matter again.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not the same matter. The question is on the substitute.

Lost.

MR. HUESTIS. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, the Secretary will read section twenty-one.

MR. McCALLUM. I desire to insert a single word in this section, in order to express the idea intended. Insert, between the words "transportation" and "company," in line five, as printed in the report of the committee, the word "railroad."

THE CHAIRMAN. That is the way it reads now. [Laughter.]

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to make an amendment by way of a new section, to be known as section twenty-one. I desire to have the ruling of the Chair upon it. I understood from the ruling of the Chair, the other day, that it could not be done until the report had been gone through with. If that is the rule, of course this section would be out of order at this time. I desire to understand the ruling on that point.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer it as an independent section after we get through with the report, but not now. The Secretary will read section twenty-one.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 21. The State shall be divided into three railroad districts, as nearly equal in population as practicable, from each of which one of the three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: There was a section referred to this Committee of the Whole, by the Convention, on the fourth of December, the one which I read a few moments ago. I call for it now.

THE CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section twenty-one.

MR. HERRINGTON. That is an amendment to section twenty-one, which I offer.

MR. ROLFE. I don't know as I understand this——

MR. HERRINGTON. I have the floor. I am offering this section as section twenty-one.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 21. Said Railroad Commission, in the execution of its powers, shall so fix, and from time to time regulate, the charges for freights and fares collectible by said railroad and other transportation companies, that the revenue derived therefrom, over running expenses and expenses for repairs by such companies, shall not, in the aggregate for any year after the adoption of this Constitution, exceed, but may be less than, ten per centum of the true cash value of the works, machinery, and property invested and in actual use by such corporations in the business of transportation, as the same shall be assessed annually for State taxation."

MR. ROLFE. I rise to a point of order——

THE CHAIRMAN. That is not an amendment to section twenty-one.

MR. HERRINGTON. Then I will offer it as an independent section.

THE CHAIRMAN. Not at present.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I move that section twenty-one be stricken out. It is unnecessary, and it is in conflict with the previous section already adopted. It commences by saying that three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State. Now, this section says the State shall be divided into three railroad districts, as nearly equal in population as practicable, from each of which one of these Commissioners shall be elected. Now, the only fair construction is, that each railroad district shall elect one Commissioner. The other provision is, that they shall be elected by the qualified voters of the State. I think the two sections are in direct conflict. If it is passed, it will put us in the condition so forcibly described by the gentleman from Marin, Judge Shafter, when he said that the Courts would be constantly called on to construe the language.

MR. HALE. We certainly should have time to consider this matter, and I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

RESOLUTION.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: I ask leave to offer a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the debate in the Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal shall be closed at twelve o'clock M., on Friday, December sixth, eighteen hundred and seventy eight.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution. Division was called for, and the resolution was lost—ayes, 56; noes, 60.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. WHITE, Mr. President: I move the Convention now take a recess until seven o'clock.

Lost on division—ayes, 58; noes, 63.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at four o'clock and fifty minutes P. M., the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M.

SEVENTIETH DAY.

TEXT-BOOKS.

THE PRESIDENT. I have a communication from the Superintendent of State Printing in reply to a resolution adopted by this Convention. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

MR. PRESIDENT: In compliance with certified resolution from the Convention, dated December fourth, I have the honor to submit the following estimates. These figures are made upon the basis that the State possessed the text and copyright, and all the appliances necessary for doing such work. For the first one thousand, complete series, of a book in every respect equal to the Pacific Coast Readers, it would cost the State:

For composition	$449 06
For paper	352 90
For press-work	150 50
For binding	665 00
For engraving cuts	3,750 00
For electrotyping	568 80
Total	$5,936 26
Each additional thousand	1,168 40

The cost of publishing a series, equal in all respects to the McGuffey Readers, would be for the first thousand:

Composition	$489 61
Paper	267 50
Press-work	161 75
Binding	665 00
Engraving	3,500 00
Electrotyping	534 00
Total	$5,617 86
Each additional thousand	$1,094 25

Respectfully submitted.

F. P. THOMPSON,
Superintendent State Printing.

THE PRESIDENT. It will lie on the table.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. President: I move that the usual number of copies be printed.

USE OF CAPITOL ROOMS.

THE PRESIDENT. It will be printed in the Journal. The Chair also has a communication from the Sergeant-at-Arms, in answer to a resolution passed by this Convention, which the Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

To the honorable President and Members of the Constitutional Convention.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to a resolution of inquiry, passed by your honorable body on yesterday, asking me for information as to the authority by which others than members of the Convention occupy committee-rooms and other parts of this building to the inconvenience of members of the Convention, I will say that the rooms now used by the Convention for committees and other purposes were obtained from the Secretary of State, on request, by resolution passed for that purpose.

I gave no one authority to occupy the rooms, and I retained the keys in my possession; yet some of them were occupied Wednesday and Thursday evenings by others than members of the Convention.

On inquiry, I was informed that permission was obtained from the Secretary of State.

Respectfully submitted.

T. J. SHERWOOD,
Sergeant-at-Arms.

THE PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table.

LAND MONOPOLIES.

MR. BEERSTECHER presented the following memorial, signed by several hundred citizens of San Francisco, in regard to land monopoly and equal taxation:

To the Constitutional Convention:

Your memorialists, believing that the monopoly of land is a denial of natural right which should not be tolerated in a republican State; believing that it inevitably produces an undue concentration of wealth on the one side, and distress and pauperism on the other; that it is mainly responsible for the hard times, low wages, and business depression, that now prevail in California; that its abolition would give new life and vigor to every branch of trade and industry, and would cause an unprecedented increase in population, in wealth, and in everything which constitutes real prosperity, respectfully recommend to and urge upon your honorable body that in framing a new Constitution to be submitted to the people no provision shall be included which shall in any way forbid or hamper the abolition of this monstrous injustice.

Referred to Committee on Land and Homestead Exemptions.

RAILROAD SUBSIDY.

MR. DOWLING offered the following resolution:

WHEREAS, The Honorable Alexander H. Stephens has introduced a bill in the House of Representatives of the United States, providing government aid in building the Texas and Pacific Railroad, and as the government is fully secured in said bill by a first mortgage on the road, and on all the land granted said railroad company by the United States and the State of Texas; and, whereas, by the provisions of said bill, the said Texas and Pacific Railroad is to remain forever an independent and competitive transcontinental line, to be constructed solely by white labor; therefore, be it

Resolved by the Constitutional Convention of the State of California, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to support the said bill, and use all reasonable and honorable means to secure its enactment into a law.

Resolved, That the Secretary be requested to forward to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of these resolutions.

MR. AYERS. I second the resolution.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. President and gentlemen of the Convention: I offer that resolution in consequence and in harmony with the spirit of the speech delivered on this floor, by Colonel Barnes, of San Francisco. His argument was beyond criticism, as solid as a cannon ball, and as true as fate. We are, to-day, at the mercy of one great monopoly, having charge and sole control of all the avenues of transportation, from Mount Shasta, where it kisses the sky, to San Diego, and from the Sierras to the sea, sir. Every imaginable place of egress or ingress is controlled by the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Now, sir, in this dilemma, it is absolutely necessary that we should turn our attention to some other means of egress and ingress to the State of California. The only place we have to look at is the Texas Pacific Railroad. It is to be maintained as an independent company, and consequently, if we have it, we shall be no longer at the mercy of this great monopoly.

Now, in the course of Mr. Barnes' speech, he says, referring to the railroad: "It has invaded the wilderness, and put to flight its repose and peace by the music of successful labor. It has ended the mission of the pioneer; it has left him no solitude to conquer." It was the same way when Rome was in her grandeur. Her sons were dying on her battle fields when they were substituted at home by hordes of slaves. In California we have no pioneers to-day. The music which summons the railroad pioneer is no more to be heard. He has gone; and where has he gone to? He has gone to destruction, to crime, to despair, to death, and on his prostrate form stands the noble Chinaman. He has no alternate section of railroad land. He has no home to go to. He has no pillow to repose his head on. And, sir, I looked at the twentieth section of the report of the Committee on Corporations, as the Magna Charta of California, as the second Declaration of Independence, to raise up this State from the iron heel of corporate power; but I do not look at it in that light now, for in the condition it is now in, it is worse than the non-partisan platform, which is nothing at all. It is forsaken by its mother, and disowned by its father. It is like a shorn sheep, sir. It is a nullity. It is like a lamb without a tail.

Now, sir, it will be remembered that last Winter we had thousands and thousands of idle men parading the streets of San Francisco. It will be remembered that they went up in thousands to the Mayor of the city, to try to get a day's work. He had no work to give them. They were there. They were almost goaded by hunger to desperation or despair. I am not a champion of any class, nor a political aspirant, but I tell you that the handwriting is on the wall, and we have got to get some avenue in which to place these men to earn their daily bread, and this is the only immediate avenue that I see, the opening up of this great continental line. It will be a ray of joy penetrating the gloom that hangs over our State to-day, and it will let one beautiful ray strike upon the form of our golden State. I hope this resolution will be adopted, gentlemen; and, if it is, we will have something to compete with the great Central Pacific Railroad Company.

For the information of the Convention, I will read from the evidence taken before the Chinese Commission that assembled in San Francisco nine months ago. F. F. Low testified under oath:

"A.—That is my belief; I do not know. These people deny that such are the facts; practically, the Chinese come here through means advanced by these companies or individuals, or by people here through these companies. I think it is by no means sure that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company is not importing Chinese to-day through these companies. I know the Central Pacific Railroad Company did it.

"MR. EVANS. Oftentimes friends and relatives here send for their friends and relatives there, don't they?

"A.—There may be individual cases, but not many. I know the Central Pacific Railroad Company imported thousands and thousands of coolies through Chinese agents, and that they advanced money for passage, and took it out in work, with a bonus."

Now, sir, if that is not true, ex-Governor Low is a libeler; and if it is not true the Central Pacific Railroad Company should stand up and deny it. But on this great railroad there are no serfs or slaves to be employed. There are thousands of white laborers to-day wandering over the State that would be only too glad to get work.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: I am very much surprised at the position assumed by my friend from San Francisco. It seems to me that the voice of the people from one end of the country to the other has been expressed long and loud, that the Government should do no more towards building railroads and enriching a few privileged citizens. I for one object to it, and shall never vote for the resolution. I think our good old friend, Uncle Sam, has had business enough with railroads, and somehow they get the best of him. I think that to start in and build the railroad that the gentleman has referred to, would only result in some millions of dollars for the people to pay, and more corruption. I hope that the resolution will not be acted upon by this body. I hope that it will meet that fate which it deserves, and I move that it be laid upon the table.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. President: I second the motion. I concur with my friend from San Francisco, who has just spoken.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable. The motion is to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion prevailed.

LAND AND HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION.

MR. WYATT. I ask leave to introduce a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption be requested to make a report to this Convention at as early a day as practicable, and if unable to report soon, that the committee make a statement of the reasons for its delay.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. President: I will state that the committee will make a report to-morrow or next day, or on Monday.

MR. WYATT. That is satisfactory.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

MR. AYERS presented the following memorial, signed by a number of citizens of Los Angeles County, against any mention of God in the Constitution:

LOS ANGELES, California, September 10, 1878.

To the Constitutional Convention:

WHEREAS, We have heard that an effort will be made to have the new Constitution recognize God, the Bible, and the Christian religion. We therefore respectfully but earnestly protest against such partiality against many religions to favor one religion. Our State is not a church State, and should be entirely separated from all church matters of gods, creeds, faiths, ordinances, and finances, and should alike protect the worshippers of Joss, Jehovah, Jupiter, Allah, Bramah, and believers in no God and other gods. We also protest against the Legislature having a right to grant charters, except general ones, or make donations of money or land, or any special privileges to any church, corporation, or society, nor to make special laws for churches, societies, companies, or individuals. We believe that all laws should be general, except that some laws, well defined and carefully limited, should be optional by a vote of the people, but not for the benefit of companies, churches, or individuals.

Referred to the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. VACQUEREL offered the following new proposition, which was read, to be supplementary to the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal:

Resolved, That after said Commission shall be duly constituted, each railway or transportation company doing business in this State shall issue to said Commissioners a free pass over their line, said free pass not transmissible to any other person, and to be available only when on official duties. After the Commission shall have established a just rate of freights and fares, the charge in no case shall exceed three cents per mile for passengers, and three cents per mile per ton for freight. Any railway or transportation company doing business in this State shall be obliged by law to run at least a train daily on each line, or branch, or section now running, and any infraction of said section shall forfeit the franchise and legal rights of said company or corporation. After the report of the schedule establishing the value of the property of the railway companies in this State, and after a mutual understanding between the Legislature and the managers of the companies for the acquisition of such property of the railways, it shall be submitted to a vote of the people at the next general election, asking them for their consent for such acquisition of property by the State.

MR. VACQUEREL. I move it be printed.

MR. GRACE. I move that the resolution be allowed to lie on the table, and that it be not printed.

The motion prevailed.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President: I offered a minority report the other day, which was laid on the table. I wish it taken up and ordered printed.

THE PRESIDENT. It was printed in the Journal.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for——

POWERS OF THE CONVENTION.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. President: I have a report from the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department which I am requested to present:

THE SECRETARY read:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your committee to whom was referred the communication of the Hon. W. B. C. Brown, dated December second, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, concerning the pay of the members of this Convention during its late recess, from November twenty-seventh to December second, and concerning the funeral expenses and per diem of the late Hon. J. M. Strong, beg leave to report that they have duly considered the same.

In view of the doubts which exist as to the true construction of the statutes and the rights of this Convention, we recommend the passage, by the Convention, of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President appoint a committee of three members to confer with the Attorney-General of this State, and present, with him, an agreed case, so as to obtain from the Supreme Court, at as early a day as possible, a decision involving the true construction of the Act of the Legislature of this State, entitled "An Act to provide for a Convention to frame a new Constitution for the State of California," approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, and a determination of the various questions pending regarding the power of this Convention over the fund referred to in said Act, and whether the stationery and like things furnished the members, and the printing, are payable out of said fund; and also, a determination of the other matters in which the views of the State Controller are in conflict with the views of this Convention.

S. M. WILSON,
December 5th, 1878. Chairman Judiciary and Judicial Department.

The report was received, and the resolution accompanying the same unanimously adopted.

The President appointed as the committee under the foregoing resolution, Messrs. Laine, Shafter, and Terry.

SPECIAL ORDERS.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move that the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation be made the special order immediately after the disposition of the report of the Committee on Legislative Department. I suppose it is a matter which involves a considerable discussion, and it seems to me that in view of the great amount of time we have expended that we should get to the consideration of that subject at an early day. I therefore make that motion.

Carried.

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: I ask that the report of the Committee on Legislative Department be made the special order immediately after the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

MR. MILLER. Mr. President: The report of the Committee on Chinese was made the special order immediately after the disposition of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

THE PRESIDENT. The report of the Committee on Chinese is the special order after the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal is disposed of, but it can be superseded by a vote.

MR. MILLER. Then the motion is to substitute the report of the Committee on Legislative Department.

THE PRESIDENT. If the motion should prevail it will supersede the other order.

MR. MILLER. Great interest is felt on this proposition in regard to the Chinese. If the Convention sees proper to make the substitution, of course I shall not complain, but I desire members to understand how they are voting upon this motion and what would be the effect of it. The Convention made the report on Chinese the special order, and I doubt whether this motion now is in order.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

THE PRESIDENT. There is a motion pending.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I hope the motion will not prevail. The consideration of the report of the Committee on Chinese has been made the special order immediately following the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. A great many gentlemen in this Convention are anxious that that matter should come up and be disposed of. I do not think it well that it should be postponed indefinitely.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: If I am not wrong in my remembrance, this report of the Committee on Chinese was made the special order to follow the report of the Committee on Corporations, and I submit that we cannot change that order unless we reconsider that vote. I think I am correct. The Convention voted to make that the special order.

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: I withdraw the motion.

RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The pending question is the motion of the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe, to strike out section twenty-one. The Secretary will read the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 21. The State shall be divided into three railroad districts, as nearly equal in population as practicable, from each of which one of the three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I merely brought that matter up for the purpose of showing the inconsistency of that section twenty-one—as it now stands—with section twenty. I understand that there are gentlemen who favor the election of these Commissioners from certain districts—that is, elect them by the voters of the State at large, but who shall be residents of respective districts. I can say that I am not particular about that matter, but I do see an inconsistency between section twenty-one as it stands now reported by the Committee on Corporations, and section twenty as finally adopted by the Committee of the Whole. Therefore, I made this motion to strike out section twenty-one, that the matter might be properly passed upon and corrected by this committee. I understand that there are gentlemen who are going to suggest or offer amendments to the effect that these Commissioners, when they are elected, shall be respectively residents of different sections of the State. I am not prepared to say now whether I shall be tenacious on that question one way or the other. I now send up the motion in writing.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out section twenty-one as reported by the committee."

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. I offer the following amendment: Add to the end of section twenty-one as follows: "By the qualified electors of such district." If that amendment to this section be adopted it will settle the difficulty which the gentleman from San Bernardino seems to desire to obviate by striking out the section, and it is plain to see will provide that the Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified electors of the respective districts. That section, with this amendment, will qualify section twenty as already adopted, and will make the whole consistent and plain. I ask that the section be read as it would stand when amended.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 21. The State shall be divided into three railroad districts, as nearly equal in population as practicable, from each of which one of the three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified electors of such district."

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the gested amendment is in direct conflict with section twenty, as adopted. Section twenty reads: "Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State." In section twenty-one the gentleman from San Francisco would have it read so that one Commissioner should be elected from each district, by the qualified electors of their respective districts. It seems to me, speaking of section twenty-one, that we have made a great mistake in the adoption of the amendment to section twenty, offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum. His amendment, as I understand, provides that one of these Commissioners shall be elected every two years. Now, if, as indicated by section twenty-one, they are to be elected by districts, I can readily perceive, Mr. Chairman, how the railroad corporations might colonize these districts, if it is true that they sometimes do such things, and thereby, at each biennial election, secure a man for that position suitable to them, or as nearly as possible in sympathy with their interests. Since we have provided that these Commissioners shall be elected, one every two years, it occurs to me that it is a better plan, in the interests of the people, that they should be elected by the whole State.

MR. ESTEE. But from the districts.

MR. FILCHER. But residents of the districts. I have no objection to that. In fact, I think the idea is a good one. They ought to be selected from different parts of the State.

MR. WEBSTER. I send up an amendment, to be read for information, and if the other is voted down, I shall offer it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert the following: 'Said Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the State at large, one of whom shall be chosen from each of the three districts, as hereinafter provided.'"

Digitized by Google

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I have no objection to the idea suggested in that amendment. It occurs to me that it is the right idea. In fact, as I understand section twenty-one, taken with section twenty, as amended, one of the Commissioners must come from each of the districts herein specified, and by leaving that section as it is, section twenty, as adopted, would carry with it the idea that they must be elected by the people of the whole State. In defense of right and the interests of the people, and to prevent the corporations from controlling the election of this Commission, and thereby defeating the whole object that we have been here two or three weeks trying to accomplish, I would suggest that the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco be defeated, and the section be allowed to stand as it is, provided it is clear that it covers the idea that these Commissioners shall be residents of the various districts. If that idea is not clear from the section as it now stands, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, would make it so.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: After the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum, providing that one of the Commissioners should be elected every two years, I think it would be quite necessary to have the Commissioners elected by the whole State, but coming from the districts as reported by the committee, and the reasons seem obvious. It would be very easy, I apprehend, if it was a very closely contested election, to control that election by the colonization of three, four, or five hundred votes in that district. I think the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, is a good one, and I think the words convey the proposition very clearly that each Commissioner shall come from his particular district, and that he shall be elected from the State at large. That becomes necessary after the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum. It cannot do any harm, and it certainly would relieve us of the danger of colonization which might occur otherwise.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: It is wholly a matter of indifference to me which one of these amendments is adopted. I offered the amendment for the purpose of precisely defining what we meant, and also to meet the objections of some gentlemen. In conversation with some of the friends of this measure, I have suggested that the Commissioners be each selected at large, and not from the several districts, as is provided in this section twenty-one. To that objection was immediately raised that they wanted to have the Commissioners to come each from a separate district. One gentleman said: "I want to see the man I am voting for;" and hence I offered this amendment. The difficulty arises from patching the report of the committee by making one of the Commissioners elected once every two years, instead of all every four years. And, further, the whole State at large has to vote upon one Commissioner from only one district. Objection is also made to that. That is another reason why I offered this amendment; but, if the committee desires to accept the other, I will agree to accept the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I regret that the amendment of the member from Alameda was adopted, yesterday, changing the term of office, so that one Commissioner shall be elected every two years. As I understand it now, there are three Commissioners, whose term of office shall be six years, and they shall be elected every two years; and it is proposed that they shall be elected by districts. As reported by the committee, they would be elected all at the same time, in three districts, throughout the State. No, sir; I think there is safety in that mode of election. They should be elected at the same time in three distinct districts of this [illegible], and then there could be no colonization from one district to another, by the railroads transporting their workmen from one district to another. If they are elected throughout the State one at a time, it will perhaps give them the control; but if they are elected at the same time in three different districts, according to my opinion it will be under the control of the people; and I would prefer that this section should stand as it was originally drafted by the committee, so far as these Commissioners are concerned; that is, that they should be elected at the same time in three distinct districts throughout the State; that the people in each district may select their own man and elect him. They can reëlect him if he turns out to be a good man. Let them be elected at the same time. It is stated they will acquire experience. They will be continued in office if they are good men. If the people understand them to be good men, they will be continued in office; and if they are not good men, let them not be continued in office—let them be changed every four years, if necessary. I would suggest to the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, if I could get his ear—I would suggest to the Convention, that this section twenty be recommitted to the Committee on Corporations, with instructions to restore that provision as it was originally reported; that is, to amend section twenty so that it will provide for the election of the Commissioners every four years. Now, we can get that back, and then elect them by districts, as proposed originally; and we will accomplish a purpose that would be for the safety of the State. I think we had better adopt that course—recommit section twenty to the Committee on Corporations, with instructions to amend it so that these Commissioners shall be elected at the same time, one in the north, one in the middle, and one in the south, so that there can be no colonization from one district to another. If the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations will accept that proposal, I will move it, or leave it for him to move that it be recommitted, with instructions to change it back. I will make the motion. I move that section twenty be recommitted to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, with instructions to amend so that it shall provide for the election of three Railroad Commissioners, by districts, at the same time, and make their term of office four years.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion is not in order. The Committee of the Whole cannot recommit.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I understand that the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco is not entertained. A question is pending, first, to strike out section twenty-one, and next to amend it so that the Commissioners shall be elected by districts, or so that the Commissioners shall be residents of the different districts, but elected by the State at large. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that while it was no part of my object to effect the election of these Commissioners by the State at large by offering the amendment, and the reasons were stated at the time, I believe it has accomplished a good thing if it has had a tendency to secure the election by the State at large. And I must say that the views of the gentleman from San Francisco are about as crude on this question as they were on his proposition, in arguing it the other day in his general speech, that if it was by districts then we would not have any party connected with it. Who ever heard of a District Convention being made up except by parties, and the State Convention being divided by its delegates into different districts?

MR. HAGER. I am still in favor of electing by districts, and that will take it out of party.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: District Conventions are simply the State Convention divided up into districts, and the parties nominate just as in the State at large. The fact is, that these different delegates make their arrangements beforehand as to who they will vote for in the different districts when in the State Convention. Now, Mr. Chairman, in my humble judgment, we have done remarkably well so far as we have gone on section twenty, but we would lose much if we adopted the idea of electing by districts. I prefer to have the whole people of the State vote for the Commissioners. Make the field wider, the voters more numerous, then there is less opportunity for that concentrating of the power of one great element in our politics. The more you narrow that element—the fewer the voters, the better the opportunity for control. The argument used the other day by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, has not been answered as to the probable ability, in a particular district, to colonize voters, by which means the great corporations may secure the election of a delegate from that particular district. No, sir, in this mighty conflict, now fully inaugurated, culminating in these last few days in the State of California as nowhere else in the nation, and as we are told nowhere else in the world, I am glad that we have to make the conflict first, here, on the great and main question of absolute control. In that conflict I want to see the whole people of the State of California have an opportunity to stand up on one side or the other on the election of every Commissioner. As to the amendment of my colleague, that these Commissioners shall be elected by the State at large, but one shall be chosen from each district, I care very little; but I think the best amendment is simply to strike out section twenty-one. Section twenty implies that they are to be elected by the State at large, but to come from districts. I am in favor of striking it out, because it ought to be stricken out. Then, as to selecting them—they would undoubtedly be selected from different parts of the State. Districts to be formed for what purpose? Simply for the purpose of selecting the locality in which these three gentlemen may reside. There is no such thing as a railroad district in the State. There would be, it is true, if section twenty-two was adopted; but in my judgment section twenty-two should also be struck out, when we come to it. In case that section was adopted, it would only be to say, "you shall select one of these Commissioners from this list of counties, and another from that list, and another from this other list of counties." Even then two Commissioners out of the three would be elected almost in San Francisco, because I notice Alameda in one of those districts and San Francisco in another. I understand that gentlemen have anticipated, or feared, that the City of San Francisco would get all or most of these Commissioners. I do not apprehend it, sir, for one moment. There will be at least two parties, perhaps three. I believe it is understood that there are three, and we might as well look at the facts. A party that would select all the delegates from one part of the State would furnish an argument against itself; and the managers of each party would be anxious enough to distribute these Commissioners throughout the State, without any constitutional provision to say that they shall be so and so distributed. It is unbecoming the dignity of a Constitutional Convention to say that these Commissioners shall be elected one from each of three particular parts of the State. I have no doubt it would likely result in that now, without a constitutional provision to that effect. I care little; but it seems to me that the better way is simply to strike out section twenty-one, and then strike out section twenty-two.

I must say, that in taking this position, in defending as I try to, and voting as I try to continually to give the most absolute control consistent with justice, I am governed by no such prejudice as seems to be implied in the resolution here this morning; no prejudice against any corporation, but a desire to assert the authority of the government to control the corporations. If the resolution which was offered here and laid on the table, had not taken up more than enough time, I would like to have urged an amendment expressing the very opposite of that resolution—that is, requesting, as the Constitutional Convention, our Senators and members in Congress to vote against the proposed subsidy to the Texas Pacific and all other roads. The idea of inviting competition to regulate this question! We want control. Competition results in nothing but an agreement not to compete. Absolute control is what we want. I care not if the Central Pacific Railroad Company owns every road now, or should own every road in the State hereafter.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: This illustrates the mischief of interfering with the report of the committee. The system of rotating, which struck the fancy of the gentleman as a good thing, is dependent entirely upon what shall be done in other articles. For instance, there may be no more biennial elections in this State. I understand that the Legislative Committee will report a section abolishing biennial elections, and providing for four years terms for county officers, as well as State officers. I do not know whether it will actually——

MR. McCALLUM. The Legislative Committee have done no such thing.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: That makes no difference. The proposition will be considered. We had this matter discussed in the Committee on Corporations, and we determined, in the first place, that the Commissioners should be elected, not by the State at large, but by districts. Now, it is said that there is a difficulty or confusion with regard to the construction placed upon the language of sections twenty and twenty-one. The twentieth section seems to provide that it shall be by the State at large, although the words "at large" are not used, and in section twenty-one that the election is by districts. Now, it ought to have remained as reported by the committee. The proposition of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, is that whilst the candidates shall be residents of the districts, the election shall be by the State at large, and the Chairman of our Committee on Corporations immediately gives up the only vital thing there was in the whole proposition, and says he has no objection to that amendment.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I stated that if the amendment presented by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum, remained in section twenty, then I think that we ought to have some such provision. I am still in favor of the original report, and it ought to be adopted.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: It makes no difference, it seems to me, whether the rotating principle of the gentleman from Alameda be incorporated or not, but the gentleman to be elected from a district should be voted for only by the residents of that district. Now, that is all there was in the idea of districts, because there was a presumption that the voter would have some acquaintance with a candidate presented where he lived in the district, and the vote was confined to the district, and he would have no acquaintance with him if he was voted for by the whole State. In other words, that a voter in Siskiyou County, voting for a candidate in the southern district, would not be presumed to have acquaintance with him. I insist, sir, that the only way for the Convention now to get out of the confusion into which this whole subject has drifted, is to retrace their steps and recommit it to the Committee on Corporations to provide for the election of these Commissioners at the same time, at the gubernatorial election. That is the only way by which these difficulties can be avoided, such as the colonization of voters. I therefore hope that it will be recommitted, and I move that the committee rise, report progress, and recommend that sections twenty-one and twenty-two be rereferred to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, to correct only the matter in reference to the election of these Commissioners.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I second the motion.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman——

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not debatable.

The motion prevailed on a division, by a vote of sixty-seven ayes to thirty-eight noes.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, and report it back with the recommendation that sections twenty and twenty-one be recommitted to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, with instructions to reconstruct the same so as to harmonize section twenty-one with the action of the Committee of the Whole on section twenty.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole be adopted, and that it be so referred.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. President: I understand a resolution was adopted here upon yesterday that the discussion on the report of the Committee on Corporations be closed to-day at twelve o'clock.

THE PRESIDENT. That motion was lost.

MR. McCALLUM. I am very sorry that it was lost, or that at any rate some motion was not adopted for the conclusion of the discussion and action upon the report of the Committee on Corporations. I believe we have been in session upon that report about four weeks, and I fully concur in the sentiment expressed by General Howard, that this report ought not to be referred back to the Committee on Corporations for any more tinkering. If it is proposed to amend section twenty, or any other section after the consideration it has received in Committee of the Whole, it can be amended in Convention.

MR. ESTEE. I rise to a point of order. There is no question before Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit.

MR. ESTEE. I thought that had prevailed.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. President: I am a little surprised that such a parliamentary gentleman as the gentleman from San Francisco is continually making these mistakes. If the gentlemen should agree with the idea of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, that amendment can be adopted in Convention. All of these questions, or the most important ones, will come up in Convention. Then, why have another two weeks of discussion in Committee of the Whole by referring them back at this time. Now, when the discussion is fresh in the minds of all, and when we have reached the last two sections, why not take it up and dispose of it. I think that a large majority are opposed to electing by districts, and for reasons that it is not necessary to reiterate. And it is that sole idea, and the idea that there is something adopted yesterday which prevents it. We can take a vote on that. The judgment of the Committee of the Whole can be obtained on the pending amendments. I cannot see any necessity for a further delay. I have listened to the set speeches of many hours, occupying the time about one month, and the idea of referring it back now and not finishing up the business, it seems to me is wholly unfounded on any good reason.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. President: I hope that the report of the Committee of the Whole will be adopted. I differ with the gentleman from Alameda. I believe that a majority of this Convention are in favor of electing the Commissioners from districts, by the people of the districts from which they are elected. I am in hopes that the report of the committee will be adopted.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I hope my friend from Alameda will not urge his objection. I have no disposition to take anything away from the section, but section twenty is passed, and we can do nothing with it in Committee of the Whole. I took this course so as to get it into a place where we can harmonize sections twenty and twenty-one.

MR. WATERS. Mr. President: I rise for information. I do not know that I understand the scope of the report of the Committee of the Whole. Is it to be the understanding that these sections, twenty and twenty-one, are to be referred back to the Committee on Corporations, with full power to do as they please with them?

MR. BARBOUR. It is only in reference to the subject of the election of the Commissioners.

MR. WATERS. With that understanding I shall support the report.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. President: I hope it will not be referred back to the Committee on Corporations. I think the past history shows that it is entirely out of the power of the Committee on Corporations, or any other Committee, to harmonize anything in this Convention, and I do not consider that it stands any better show to be reported back to this Convention in a way that will be satisfactory to the Convention, than it did before, and it seems to me that it is taking an unnecessary time for the disposition of this section. I hope the Convention will not refer it back to the committee.

MR. HALE. Mr. President: I do hope that this will not be done. What necessity is there for this action? What the Committee of the Whole has already accomplished, after nearly four weeks work, is that three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the State. That is one of the propositions. That is in section twenty. Another proposition adopted is that these Commissioners shall hold office for a term of six years, except that those elected shall determine among themselves by lot, the terms that they shall hold, two, four, or six years; and that at each general election, after the first election, one Commissioner shall be elected by the electors of the State. That is the next proposition adopted. Then follow the powers of the Commission, and the penalties inflicted under the supervision and direction of the Commission for violation of the rules they may prescribe. Another provision is adopted, placing the Commission itself under the restraint of the Legislature; giving the Legislature the power to pass all needed legislation to carry the powers of this Commission into effect. Now, sir, there is a compact, unified, harmonious whole, consistent in all its parts, amounting to a system both in the personnel of the Commissioner, the powers to be exercised, and the restraint under which they are to be placed. Now, what difficulty requires this to go back to the committee. The motion here made is to give the committee power to remodel according to their ideas. I think we have had enough of their work. The Convention has passed upon their work and adopted this language in lieu of theirs, adopting as much of theirs as was applicable, and modifying it where, in the sense of the Convention, they deemed it wise to do so. Why not complete the work of this article and have done with it, and pass to something else? It is suggested that section twenty-one does not seem to be in harmony with section twenty. One single, simple amendatory clause will bring them into perfect harmony. Bear in mind that we have already enacted in section twenty that the electors of the State at large shall elect the Commissioners. We have decided in the same way in Committee of the Whole, that they shall be elected at each general election, two years apart after the first election. Now, what further requires to be done? Section twenty-one reads now: "The State shall be divided into three Railroad Districts, as nearly equal in population as practicable, from each one of which one of the three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected." Now, sir, section twenty says that the electors of the State shall elect. Then this one prescribes in addition to that, that the electors of the State shall elect from each one of these districts one of these Commissioners. Now, sir, if there is any doubt about the interpretation of the two sections, then add after the word "elected" in section twenty-one, these words only: "by the electors of the State at large." But it is not necessary, because section twenty already enacts the same thing. Then, sir, section twenty-two proposes to divide the State into these three districts, as provided in section twenty-one. We do not need to go back unless we are dissatisfied with the work of the Committee of the Whole; and I submit that after we have spent as much time as we have upon this subject, and in view of the lapse of time, we cannot afford to go back and fight the battle all over again. We can adopt that single amendment, and I believe we shall give satisfaction to the body of the Convention, and to the people that sent us here. I hope that we shall not send it back, but that we will complete our work upon this article and go on with the other work.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I wish to address the Convention for a few minutes, with regard to the plan proposed to divide the State into three districts and elect simultaneously the three Commissioners. Some of the reasons urged in the committee for a course of that kind were: first, that the election simultaneously in the several districts would prevent the colonization of voters in the localities to be affected. In the second place, that in conformity with the growing sentiment in the State we should adopt the system of local self government. That we should bring the election of the officers and servants of the people right directly under the control of those whose interests would be immediately affected thereby. It has been urged, and urged by a very respectable number of people, that even the members of the house of representatives of the State Legislature should be elected by single districts, and that each locality should be represented on the floor of the Legislature by a man selected from their own locality. We are situated very peculiarly as a State. Our geographical limits are somewhat unique—somewhat peculiar to California—some seven or eight hundred miles by the shore line. It is very expensive for the people to properly represent themselves in State Convention; and I refer to this simply because the affairs of the State must of necessity be controlled by political organization; and it is a very expensive task to send delegates from the remote parts of the State to Sacramento to attend a State Convention. The result is, that you place the nominating conventions in the hands of the political managers of the respective parties. Then you elect a man from the southern part of the State, and a man from the northern part of the State, with whom, perhaps, the majority of the voters in the remote part of the State have no personal acquaintance. They know nothing of the qualifications of the men they are voting for. Again, sir, the committee proposed that these elections should be held simultaneously, and that the term should be four years. Then the people of the northern district and the central district and the southern district——

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I feel impelled to rise to a question of order. The question before the Convention I understand to be a motion to refer to the Committee on Corporations, and the adoption of the report of the Committee of the Whole.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman's point of order is correct.

MR. REYNOLDS. Tally one for the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will enter it on the record. [Laughter.]

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I am very much pleased that the gentleman has been gratified for once, and I will endeavor to conform to the ruling of the Chair. Another reason for electing by districts is that the people, who are the only sovereigns, can reëlect a man if he has been a good and faithful servant, and if the corporations should get control of this Board the people will have an opportunity to pass upon the fitness of these men once in four years. I am in favor of referring the sections back to the committee, and I shall move that the further consideration of the report of the Committee on Corporations be laid on the table for the time being, and that the Convention proceed to the consideration of the next question—the report of the Committee on Chinese. In that way we will not lose any time and yet effect what the Convention seeks to do—perfect the section.

MR. REYNOLDS. It does seem to me that I shall be obliged to call for another tally.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman will confine himself to the question.

MR. WEST. I sympathize with the gentleman's fastidiousness. I am in favor of this reference, from this consideration. There has been a new construction of this section. While we were in a demoralized condition last evening—while we were in a rather combustible condition—there was interjected into the bowels of this bantling a poison, a virus, that has thrown it into convulsions, and I think it should be permitted to be referred back for a little nursing, for it will certainly die if left in the demoralized condition in which we left it last night.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I will not go all over this question in any remarks, but I rise simply to state that I offered the amendment to section twenty-one in good faith, in order to construe the amendment adopted to section twenty.

MR. HAGER. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not at his seat. He is violating the rule.

MR. REYNOLDS (from his own seat). That amendment, gentlemen, seemed to me to confuse the committee. The committee rose for the purpose of referring the matter again to the Committee on Corporations, in order to straighten it out and construe this matter to suit their views. Now we are in Convention, and the question is on the adoption of the report of the Committee of the Whole. The friends of that measure are anxious to proceed and perfect that report and explain the action of the committee already had, so that it will be made consistent with itself. But what do we find here? The enemies of the measure commence a system of guerrilla warfare for the purpose, not of doing anything, but of obstructing everything. And hence this debate, not for the purpose of perfecting the article so as to be consistent with itself, and so that the Commissioners can be elected by districts, or all at once, or at large, or any other way. That is not the object. It is the same kind of guerrilla warfare that this Convention meets at every step, on every question. It is for the purpose of wasting the whole session; of destroying the Convention; of bringing the Constitution into disgrace. It is a part of the programme that has gone forth, and every little bucolic editor is singing his little tune that the Convention will never amount to anything, and that the Constitution which it proposes will never be adopted. That is what these obstructive speeches mean when we attempt to get this thing referred back to the Committee on Corporations. I hope that the motion will be adopted; that the Committee on Corporations will have an opportunity of straightening out and defining what the Committee of the Whole intended by adopting these sections.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I would like to have the motion read, in order to ascertain exactly the nature of it.

THE PRESIDENT. It is a motion to recommit sections twenty and twenty-one to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, with instructions to harmonize these sections in conformity with the action of the Committee of the Whole.

MR. McCALLUM. What is the action of the Committee of the Whole?

THE PRESIDENT. To reconstruct sections twenty and twenty-one, in relation to the election of these Commissioners—whether by district or by the whole State.

MR. McCALLUM. To reconstruct how? Are they instructed to direct that they shall be elected by the State at large?

THE PRESIDENT. No, sir. The Chair understands that they are to harmonize section twenty, as it now stands, with the action of the Committee of the Whole.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I am in favor of a recommittal, providing that recommittal be limited in its terms; that is to say, that they have the power, and the power only, to so arrange the section that the Commissioners may be elected from districts. But if this matter is to be recommitted, and this committee is to have power to reconstruct everything, then, in my humble judgment, we are going to have a rehash of everything that has been said here for a month. We will be obliged to go over the whole matter again. As the matter now stands, I shall be obliged to vote against the motion.

MR. STEDMAN. I move the previous question.

MR. TULLY. Mr. President: I hope this motion will not prevail. We have had four weeks' discussion upon the matter, and when I have to take bad medicine, I want to take it at the earliest moment. I do not see any reason why it should be referred. It has been discussed and rediscussed from every standpoint conceivable. And why refer it back to the Committee on Corporations? It is well known that they never change front. When the Chairman makes a speech he stands by it. It is an unnecessary consumption of time. I hope that the committee will take charge of the matter and dispose of it at once.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: I am opposed to any more recommittals. We can do all this just as well in Convention. I do not propose to debate it, but call for the previous question.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I second the motion.

MR. WYATT. Second the motion.

MR. BROWN. I second the motion for the previous question.

MR. STEDMAN. So do I.

MR. HAGER. If the gentleman will allow me to put in writing the instructions, I would like to instruct the Convention as to what they should do, and I have drawn up a proposition on which they should act. That is, to recommit to the Committee on Corporations, with instructions to amend, so that it shall provide for the election of three Railroad Commissioners, by districts, at the same time, and making their term of office four years.

MR. SCHELL. I rise to a point of order.

THE PRESIDENT. There has been a call for the previous question and it has been seconded. The gentleman from Los Angeles has no power to accept anything under the previous question. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

The motion prevailed.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit sections twenty and twenty-one to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, with instructions to harmonize them with the action of the Committee of the Whole.

MR. HALL. Mr. President: I call for the ayes and noes.

The ayes and noes were also demanded by Messrs. McCallum, Wyatt, Joyce, and Van Dyke.

The roll was called, and the sections were referred, by the following vote:

FURTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I desire to offer a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That further instructions to Committee on Corporations other than Municipal:

That section twenty be amended so as to provide for the election of three Railroad Commissioners by districts, at the same time, and making their term of office four years.

Also, that the Legislature may remove a Commissioner by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each house.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: It is evident to me, sir, that as section twenty now stands, it is not worth the paper it is written on, and if this Convention would be consistent with itself it would strike out the section. As amended by the gentleman from Placer, simply a majority of the Legislature can remove any and every Commissioner thereon; and it simply relegates the whole subject-matter back to the Legislature, where it is now; and if this Convention desires to do anything on that subject we must adopt some system by which these Commissioners will have some status or standing before the people, and not subject to the biennial meetings of the Legislature to destroy them and take them from power.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: I concur with the remarks of Mr. Tinnin and the resolution which he offers. We have got that section in this shape and think it is time we understood it. There was a power in this State to regulate fares and freights—the Legislature. We have now taken the power away from the Legislature. We have placed that power in a Commission of three men. When we have placed that power in the hands of three men, we say that whenever the Commission has established the rate of freights and fares that that rate is prima facie just and reasonable. I say that those rates can be upset in Court by one witness swearing that they are not reasonable, for they are in Court merely prima facie rates. Now the condition in which we have got the thing is this. The Legislature cannot establish rates of freights and fares, but the Commissioners can draw up a schedule of rates, and any man injured by a company charging him higher than those rates can have an action in Court. He brings his suit in a Court, and to make a prima facie case he presents the rates as established by the Commission. Having his rates as established by the Commission, he proves that the railroad company has charged him higher rates, and with that he rests his case. Now these cases will be tried where there is a station, because there is the only place where the railroad company can commit the offense. The case being tried in Court having reached this point, Leland Stanford runs a train there with a load of employés, every one of whom swears that the rates are unreasonable. When he is done with those witnesses, here comes another train, and so on with six or seven thousand employés, every one of whom will be in favor of high rates, because that means high wages. And when they have brought into this Court and sworn their six or seven thousand men that these are not reasonable rates, where is the man who is in the case to find six or seven thousand witnesses to swear that they are reasonable? What man has the ability to do it? We have fallen in the snare of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the fact is, that it has the Convention in its hand and shakes it up and down, and has us under its feet. There could not be a more favorable provision to the railroad company than the one we have adopted. After we have removed from the Legislature the power to regulate fares and freights, and placed it in the hands of the Commission, we say that the rates established by them shall be the prima facie rates. Leland Stanford's oath is more binding under our rules of civil proceeding than are the rates established by that Commission.

Let us understand it. Let us see what we are doing. We have got to send this back to the Committee on Corporations and change this, or let it go out to the people of this State that this Convention has fallen into the hands of this railroad company; that a gentleman here by a strong anti-railroad speech, and sandwiching in this word prima facie, blinded this Convention, and made us the tools of the railroad. I assert, and stand by it, that the result of this whole provision, as adopted, is that the oath of one of Leland Stanford's employés is stronger in a Court of this State than is the prima facie case of the rates of fares and freights established by the Commission, for the rate of freights and fares is merely prima facie evidence that they are just, and one witness beats a prima facie case.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: I move to amend the resolution so that it shall read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal——

[Cries of "louder."]

MR. HERRINGTON. I will send it up.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal so report this action upon sections twenty and twenty-one as to have the Commissioners elected by the State at large, but selected from districts.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: I desire, if it is possible, to be heard upon this question, and the only possible way to be heard is to keep the newspapers quiet, and to cease whispering and talking. The question is a very interesting one, and requires a very little argument on either side. In the first place, by the election at large—as the Committee of the Whole have determined that the Commissioners shall be elected for six years, one member of the Commission every two years—it places the advantage of the election in the hands of the people of the State at large. It compels the expenditure of labor and money on the part of the railroad company at the election of each Commissioner that it would require to expend in the election of two Commissioners upon any other basis. By an election in districts, it is but a little trouble for the railroad companies to colonize for the election of any member of that Commission. I care not whether you have the election in two districts at the same time or one district, it only amounts to a question of numbers with the railroad company as between one district and two. When the election is at large, the whole body of the people are called upon to pass in judgment upon the question. Each time we have a jury of the whole people, and we are not compelled to abide the results of the action of the railroad company in shipping a portion of their employés from one district to carry by the weight of numbers in another. That is an advantage which we cannot well do without. This is a proposition which we cannot put aside and permit to be engrafted upon the Constitution in any other form. Any other action on the part of this Convention places us as completely in the power of the railroad corporations as we could possibly be, either in organizing a Commission or giving to the Legislature the power which they already have to control railroads. I am not particular as to the mode of the election of these Commissioners, whether two for two years, or one for four years, or whether, as the Committee of the Whole have established it, by electing one every two years to serve six years. I say I am not very particular about that; but that the Commission should be elected by the whole people of the State, we cannot dispense with. It is an indispensable method to the election of this Commission. Now, I say that this committee ought to be instructed to so arrange sections twenty and twenty-one that one Commissioner should be selected from each district, but elected by the State at large.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I am unalterably opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington, for the reason that I do not want the agents of the San Francisco Gas Company, and the San Francisco Water Company, or the San Francisco railroad delegates who happen to get into the political conventions, to say to me who shall be nominated in the northern district of this State. We have but little of that element among us, and the people of that portion of the State are fully competent to say who shall represent them as Railroad Commissioners. If this idea is proceeded upon, the people who live in the districts of the State outside of San Francisco can say nothing about who shall be the nominee from those districts. We all know that these corporations control, to a great extent, the political conventions of this State, I care not what that convention is, whether Democratic, Republican, or Workingmen. The power of these corporations will be felt in these bodies, and they have the whole control of nominations; and this has invariably been through the San Francisco delegations that come into the several conventions of this State. For that reason I hope the gentleman's amendment will be voted down.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: I am in favor of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin. I am in favor of stopping there. I think the Committee on Corporations are pretty well instructed out of their boots already. I am opposed to destroying the Commission by indirection, and therefore I am opposed to the Trojan horse of the gentleman from Placer.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. President: It seems to me we occupy a very peculiar position this morning. We have been in Convention and in Committee of the Whole discussing very largely section twenty of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. We thought yesterday we could see the end of this discussion and labor; at least so far as the action of the Committee of the Whole is concerned. This morning, however, we have a new style of attack—new to me at least—in parliamentary usage. I do not rise for the purpose of raising any point of order. Of course I understand that what is done in Committee of the Whole only becomes the action of the Convention when the Convention adopts the action of the Committee of the Whole, and therefore the Convention, at the proper time, would proceed to the adoption or rejection of the work of the Committee of the Whole. But we have got a new style of getting at it now. We have got the committee to rise and recommend the Convention to refer back the matter to the Committee on Corporations, with instructions to harmonize the two sections, and then comes the gentleman from Trinity, with his new dodge, and asks the Convention to instruct the committee to review, in substance, all we have been doing in the Committee of the Whole for the last two weeks. That is the motion. Now, of course, if this question is to come up in this manner for determination, I suppose those who have favored these various propositions which have been adopted in the Committee of the Whole will be called upon to defend them now in Convention, under this modified form of attack, and also to argue and defend all the questions so that the Convention may pass upon each of these questions seriatim, just, in substance, as the Convention would do on a motion to adopt the action of the Committee of the Whole.

In the first place, the gentleman says he wants the committee to report back section twenty-five, so as to eliminate the amendment which is called the Hale amendment. Now what is that amendment? I propose to speak of that first, because it appears to be the most prominent in the mind of the gentleman. He says the Convention never should adopt section twenty with that amendment in. Now sir, that amendment is in these words, at the end of section twenty, and as qualifying the preceding clause:

Digitized by Google

"Provided, the Legislature shall have power to remove any one or more of said Commissioners from office for dereliction of duty, corruption, or incompetency therein. And whenever, from any cause, a vacancy in office shall occur in said Commission, the Governor shall fill the same by the appointment of a qualified person thereto, who shall hold office for the residue of the unexpired term, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified." Of course I expected that when we came into Convention there would be a resistance to the adoption there of the action of the Committee of the Whole on this amendment. But by this modification of attack it comes up here for trial again. Now, sir, I offered this amendment, and it was adopted in Committee of the Whole. On account of the previous question being called, I did not have the opportunity of which I intended to have availed myself of discussing this question a little in detail, and, perhaps now, that this attack is made upon it, it is proper that I should do it.

Mr. President, I find it very difficult to even hear myself speak on account of the confusion and noise in this hall.

THE PRESIDENT. Order! Order! Gentlemen will take their seats and preserve order.

MR. HALE. Mr. President: In support of the proposition in this amendment which is under discussion and examination, to allow the Legislature, by a majority vote of all the members of each house, to remove a Commissioner, I wish to say a word. It is objected, first, that the proper way to reach this, if by the Legislature at all, should be by the power of impeachment. To that, I answer that this remedy is cumulative. In other words, this proposition does not cut off the right of impeachment. It is merely an additional remedy. Then it is objected that it ought not to be done by a simple majority of each house of the Legislature. Now, that, of course, is the principal point of objection. Upon that point I wish to say a word. Let us take the converse of this proposition. For instance, it is suggested that it should require a two-third vote of all the members. Let us take that proposition and see where we are left. Two thirds of each house is required to remove a Commissioner, and I may say before entering upon that branch that the grounds upon which they may be removed, are dereliction of duty, corruption in office, or incompetency in office.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I am compelled to rise to a question of order. As I understand it the resolutions before the house touch the election, and not the impeachment or removal of these Commissioners.

MR. HALE. Mr. President: I am speaking to the pending motion to instruct this committee, and for the purpose of showing that I am within the rule, I ask the Secretary to read the pending resolutions.

THE SECRETARY read:

"By Mr. Tinnin:

"Resolved, That further instructions to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal:

"That section twenty be amended so as to provide for the election of three Railroad Commissioners by districts, at the same time, and making their term of office four years.

"Also, that the Legislature may remove a Commissioner by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each house.

"By Mr. Herrington:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations so report their action on sections twenty and twenty-one as to have the Commissioners elected by the State at large, but selected from districts."

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman is in order, and will proceed.

MR. HALE. Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Convention: The precise proposition presented by the pending instruction, then, is to amend the amendment which was offered by myself so that the Legislature only could remove for dereliction of duty, for corruption in office, or for incompetency in office, by a two-thirds vote of each house. Now, Mr. President, what are the probabilities?—and here no rule of law can be invoked—it is simply that common sense which every member on the floor possesses, founded upon the common experience pertaining to matters in the community in which he lives. What is the probable danger which will invoke the power of the Legislature to remove one of these Commissioners at all. Why, I answer, in the sentiment, if not in the language—for I am unable to quote—of the gentlemen who have addressed the committee upon this whole subject during the last three weeks—that the State by this plan of a Commission proposes in general terms to invest this Commission with its powers of regulation, and its discretionary powers over railroads in the management of their property as involving the rates of freights and fares. It has been objected by many members on the floor, and with large reason, that while they concede that the State had the power to regulate, and the exigencies of the case are such that it is expedient for the State to exercise that power, yet that it is dangerous to put this power in the hands of a Commission of three men, who, as they say, will be in the power of the railroad company, who will always be interested in regulating their own fares and freights without the dictation of the public, or the control of these Commissioners; that they would, if possible, get control of this Commission, so that through the Commission they will have the power of making their own rates. Now it cannot be denied that this consideration is entitled to very serious consideration. When you have placed all the power of the State in the hands of three men, and in so important a matter as this, obviously there will be strong temptation, strong inducements, for these transportation companies to exercise all possible influence to get the control of that Board, and through such control to dictate the action of this Commission. And it is obvious that if they should accomplish this result, that this Commission, so far from being a means of security to the people against oppression, would become an engine of oppression beyond all precedent; because, as the power will have been placed in the hands of the Commission, and taken away from the Legislature, if, then, the railroad company can obtain such control, they would in fact control the whole question, though every citizen in the State be aggrieved at the manner in which they had done it. There, I suspect, is the real point of danger.

That is the strongest objection that has been urged against the system of the Commissioners. Of course on the other side it has been said, and I think with conclusively good reason, that because the Legislature will not have the practical ability, will not be sufficiently informed upon the matters involved in the regulation of fares and freights, for that reason the Legislature in the future will not, as in the past it has not, make any beneficial regulation. Moreover, that by reason of the flexible, changeable condition of circumstances under which the rates of fares and freights must be established, that what might be proper on the first day of January, might be improper on the first day of July. What might be proper on one route might be improper upon another. It is, therefore, one of those matters that must be exercised by a Board or body having discretionary power to deal with any subject so as to have more flexibility in the application of the rule to different localities. Hence the necessity of giving this power of regulation to a Board who may be fully informed. That is a good idea. Then assuming that the State will regulate, and that it will do it by a Commission—I think, sir, that the other conclusion is also inevitable, that you must place your Commission under some responsibility. You must not put this Commission above the law, above the Legislature, and above the Government, and place ourselves unreservedly in the hands of these men. This might be a means of oppression. It would be a worse despotism than anything that has occurred in modern history. First, you have the power of impeachment applicable to every State officer. This amendment does not infringe upon that, and the object of the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole was, that it should be done by the Legislature, by a vote of two thirds of all the members. Now—and I will assume that the report of the Committee on Legislative Department will be adopted—they propose that the Legislature shall consist of sixty members of the lower house, and thirty members of the Senate; that the Assemblymen shall hold office for two years, and Senators for four years, therefore one half of the Senate will be elected at each election, and all the members of the house. Now, gentlemen, let us take the case of a Commissioner, who, having been elected by the people, by them believed to be qualified and faithful, has been induced to fall down, to use a popular phrase. The railroad company have induced him to disregard his oath, and duty to the people, and make him their servitor. Take that case. How will the people protect themselves against that corrupt policy, and the perpetuation of that wrong for the whole period of his term of office? Why, the transportation companies have need to secure only one third of one house. They can choose for themselves whether they will go to the Senate or the Assembly. The house will consist of sixty members. One third of sixty is twenty; twenty-one is more than one third of the whole body. If they can get twenty-one votes in the Assembly to maintain them, or deny the application to remove the Commissioner for dereliction of duty, corruption, or inefficiency in office, they have defeated the action of the whole Legislature, though every other member of both branches was in favor of his removal for notoriously good cause. Take the Senate. They say, "the Senate is our point of attack; we have more brains there than we have in the house." Ten is one third of thirty. If they can get eleven Senators, though eighty members of the Legislature are in favor of the removal these eleven men can stand in the way of any action, and prevent the removal of a corrupt, inefficient, and derelict officer.

In this way you might fasten upon the State a bad Commission, and the people have practically no power of removal. Suppose the power of impeachment is invoked. Impeachment articles must be adopted by the Assembly, and the Senate constitutes itself a Court. A Commissioner can only be impeached by a two-third vote there. That is no efficient remedy. Unless you give this power of removal to the Legislature, as proposed by the amendment now sought to be modified, you have lost all practical control over the Commission. Although they, or any one or more of its members, shall become derelict, so as to destroy its usefulness, the people will be practically remediless. In favor of the proposition as it stands, I suggest that to have the control of this Commission wisely and discreetly applied, it should be under the control of the people in the most direct and efficient manner in which it can be brought to bear. How can that be done? A man who is about to be removed has his case before the Legislature, all of one house and half of the other of which have just come from the people. If a man is known to be derelict in his office of Commissioner, the people will know it. They will elect Senators and Assemblymen with a view to that fact. I think there is no danger of the people sending their representatives here in favor of removing an officer from this Commission who has performed his duty to the people under the Constitution. I hope, therefore, that this portion of the resolution of the gentleman from Trinity will not be adopted. I leave to other gentlemen whose propositions are attacked to defend themselves, as I find myself unable to talk longer.

MR. HOWARD. I call for the previous question.

MR. HALE. I call for a division of the question.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. President: I hope the call for the previous question will not be made. I desire to make some remarks in answer to the gentleman from Nevada.

MR. HOWARD. I will withdraw it.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. President: I did not hear the remarks of the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, but, as they have been reported to me, I understand that they were to this effect: that the amendment introduced by me yesterday was an inspiration from Leland Stanford; that it was got up by him, or in his interest, and that it was introduced here in the interest of the railroad by a gentleman pretending to be in favor of curbing the power of the corporations.

MR. CROSS. You have not been correctly informed. I am sorry that you did not hear what I said. I said that the result of the word prima facie in that amendment was, with the rest of the amendment, to place this matter where the Legislature could not regulate freights and fares, and it placed it where, whenever a case came in Court, the oath of Leland Stanford would be more in law than the rates of freights and fares, as established by the Commission, upon this one point, whether the rates should control the price allowed to be charged.

MR. CAMPBELL. Of course, if that is the remark of the gentleman, I have been misinformed in regard to it, and have nothing further to say. But I doubt very much whether the vote of Leland Stanford, a party interested, would be preferred to the prima facie presumption of the law that the rates established are reasonable and preferred, also to the testimony of the Commissioners who would give evidence of the cause of establishing the rate, as to the basis on which it was established, and as to its reasonable character.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: I renew my call for the previous question.

Messrs. Wyatt, O'Donnell, McComas, Tully, and Evey seconded the call.

The motion prevailed.

THE PRESIDENT. The main question has been ordered. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington, to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations so report their action on sections twenty and twenty-one as to have the Commissioners elected by the State at large, but selected from districts.

The amendment was lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Trinity.

MR. CROSS. I wish to ask a question with regard to the resolution, if it be in order.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it first.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That further instructions to Committee on Corporations other than Municipal:

That section twenty be amended so as to provide for the election of three Railroad Commissioners by districts, at the same time, and making their terms of office four years.

Also, that the Legislature may remove a Commissioner by a two-third vote of all the members elected to each house.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: I wish to ask if it be in order to offer an amendment to the resolution.

THE PRESIDENT. No amendment will be in order.

MR. BARBOUR. I call for the ayes and noes.

Messrs. Stedman, Brown, O'Sullivan, and Gorman seconded the call for the ayes and noes.

MR. STEDMAN. I call for a division of the question.

MR. HALE. Mr. President: Is it in order to call for a division of the question? There are two distinct propositions in the resolution.

MR. TINNIN. The house has just voted down one of the propositions, as offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara.

THE PRESIDENT. The resolution is divisible. Does the gentleman ask a division of the question?

MR. HALE. Yes.

MR. SHAFTER. How is it possible, when the house has already ordered the main question to be put?

THE PRESIDENT. The main question is the resolution, and a division is called for, which is in order.

MR. SHAFTER. That would be putting two separate questions to the body.

MR. JONES. I ask for a further division of the question. There are two distinct propositions in the first part—one in regard to the election of Railroad Commissioners from districts, and the other in regard to their term of office.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the resolution not capable of any further division. Call the roll.

The roll was called on that portion of the resolution relating to electing the Commissioners, and it was adopted by the following vote:

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: I move that the Committee on Corporations be instructed to further amend section twenty, so as to give the Commissioners power to punish for contempt of their orders and process in the same manner, and to the same extent, as Courts of record. As the section now stands, there is no power to punish any person for contempt of that Commission. They may summon a person. He may refuse to answer questions; he may refuse to produce papers. The Courts may say they have no power; that the Court has no power to punish, except for contempt of its own process. It is a separate, independent tribunal of its own; and it ought to be independent. I think this is absolutely necessary to the efficiency of the Commission.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations be instructed to further amend section twenty, so as to give the Commissioners power to punish for contempt of their orders and process, in the same manner and to the same extent as Courts of record.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: I hope that the committee will follow out its original views now. This was proposed and pointed out by three or four gentlemen, and it was declared by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations and others that the provision was all perfect in the form in which it stood, and the committee so voted by a large majority. I trust that they will show their consistency by voting down these things. We have had several weeks' work on it, and the Committee of the Whole has got right, and there can be no mistake; and I hope that they will not stultify themselves by voting to-day contrary to what they voted yesterday.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: This is another exhibition of obstruction over again—always from the same side of the house—to any action of the friends of this measure. Whenever they undertake to perfect it, or to make it acceptable, or to suit themselves, they are eternally met with some obstruction, proposed from the same side of the house. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

Digitized by Google

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: I want to say a single word in regard to this obstruction. I pointed this difficulty out in a speech yesterday, and dilated upon it. So did two other gentlemen. We put the Convention and the gentleman from San Francisco in full possession of the argument, and he was too stupid to see the force and effect of it. And, now, I wish that the other side of the house would relieve itself of a little of this prejudice which refuses to listen to the voice of reason, simply because it comes from the other side of the house.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

MR. McCALLUM. I wish to offer a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations be further instructed to so amend section twenty as to strike out so much thereof as provides that the charges fixed by the Commissioners shall be only prima facie evidence of the correctness of such charges.

MR. CROSS. Would the gentleman not consent to amend his resolution so as to have the words "prima facie" stricken out and the word "conclusive" inserted?

MR. McCALLUM. I think it would be better, and would have no objection to it; but I propose to submit the sole idea to the Convention that to make their fixing of rates only prima facie destroys the whole object. There is no more reason that it should be prima facie in the case of the railroad company than on a toll road by the Board of Supervisors. If you make it a case of prima facie evidence you end the whole matter. Nothing can be done. The point made by the gentleman from Nevada this morning occurred to me yesterday, and I think it is conclusive. There could be no conviction under the section as it reads.

THE PRESIDENT. The hour having arrived, the committee will take a recess until 2 o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

IN REFERENCE TO RAILROADS.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal be instructed to further amend section twenty, as adopted by the Committee of the Whole, by striking out the words "prima facie," as they occur near the last of the section, and inserting instead thereof the word "conclusively."

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. President: It does seem to me that this is a very queer manner of defeating all we have done in the last month. I certainly cannot regard it as a fair way of reconsidering the action of this Convention. When you consider and view this matter in all its various motions—all these various instructions; when you consider the vote by which these motions were carried, I think you will find it a dangerous course to pursue. Now, a certain gentleman moves to instruct the committee to amend this section in certain particulars. Now, when that motion comes up, all the opposing elements combine to carry that motion. In the first place, say there are thirty upon the floor who are opposed to regulation. They will all vote for it. Why? Because it tends to demoralize and destroy the combination made here yesterday of all the different elements who are in favor, in different ways, of regulating corporations. In other words, it combines the strength of those who are opposed to that particular part of the provision. Those, together with the thirty votes against regulation, can carry it. Then other gentlemen who voted against this particular clause, or that clause, will move to scratch out this thing, and put in that thing, and the motions will be carried by the same combination. Consequently, the wheel takes one more revolution backward. Then another gentleman gets up and moves that the committee be further instructed to put in another thing, and these same elements will combine and defeat the action. Now, the only way to avoid a disastrous result is for each one to give up his own individual ideas. We cannot expect to carry out all our own individual ideas. We must compromise on something. We must give way at this point and that point in order to accomplish anything at all. But by this going backwards, as we have been going since ten o'clock this morning, we will by night have accomplished nothing, and the enemies will gain a complete victory over us. The minority will, by these tactics, be able to defeat the will of the majority. Now, I cannot say that I think the section is good in every particular as it stood last night—it is not altogether perfect—but taken in the main, it is far better than nothing, and nothing is what you are fast drifting towards. I think we had better let this thing stand. If we do anything at all, let it go to the Committee on Revision, and if they cannot harmonize these different things, then let us take it up when we have thought about it more deliberately. Just think of it. Yesterday, we carried this section by a vote of eighty, and to-day, by combining these different elements against it, we are fast undoing all that we have done. I think we should rest here awhile. After we have worked a month, and finally agreed upon a plan that the majority of the Convention can indorse, we go to work the next day and refer it back to the committee to tear out this clause and the other, to put in this thing and that thing, and when we get through it will amount to nothing. Now, I think there ought to be some mutual concessions made here. We have already made a great many concessions, but the work must not be overturned now.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: I must say that I do not agree with the gentleman who has preceded me. It does seem to me that this Convention should have the right and the privilege of correcting what may seem to be an error in its judgment; if it has not, it ought to have. We acted in somewhat of a hurry yesterday in reference to some of these amendments that were adopted to the section submitted as a substitute by the Committee on Corporations. But in reading the section and amendments as an entirety, we find it more or less unsatisfactory in certain particulars, and I want to know, sir, whether it is not right, whenever we find that we have made a mistake, to stop and correct it. We are not stultifying ourselves in any manner when we do it.

Now, in reference to the amendment or resolution sent up by the gentleman from Alameda, I wish to say this: I am opposed to the section containing the words "prima facie." The argument, as far as the Commissioners were concerned, was in favor of leaving the matter to the Commissioners. When it was suggested here that even the Legislature should have revisory power over them, it was voted down. This maiming the proposition to allow the Legislature to behead the Commissioners by a two-thirds vote was adopted. Now, it seems to me, as the section reads, allowing these rates to appear as prima facie correct, that instead of leaving this matter entirely to the Commissioners, we are merely giving them inquisitorial powers, and they can do nothing without appealing to the Courts. Now, it becomes a question whether you will give the Commissioners this power or not. Will you give them conclusive power, as the Legislature has, or will you give them merely inquisitorial power, that is the question? As it stands here, the Commissioners are to establish rates. These rates are taken into Court and declared prima facie just and reasonable. The railroad and other corporations are presumed to own two thirds of the Courts of this State. Through their influence the Judges are elected to place, who favor their cause. The case comes into Court, and they have to show to the Court that these rates are not just and reasonable.

The judgment of the Commissioners, whose power we have established for that particular purpose—to establish these rates—must go to the wall, and the judgment of the Court takes precedence? Now, sir, it appears to me that this is the situation. If I am wrong, I am open to conviction. It is with a view of reaching the conclusion we desire to reach, and of giving to these Commissioners the power we desire and intend to give them, that of regulating freights and fares, that I make these suggestions.

It is said that if these railroad corporations can secure the election of these Judges, they can also secure the election of Commissioners. I will admit it; but, sir, on that depends the whole weight of this provision. If the corporations can control the politics of California, then we are gone. If the people cannot elect competent and honest men for these places, then we are gone. If the people are in favor of regulating these corporations, let them combine and vote for Commissioners whom they know they can trust to deal fairly by all parties. There is a higher motive than any mere political consideration. But, sir, when we do elect competent and faithful Commissioners, we do not want to find that we have made a fatal mistake, one which will render them powerless to accomplish any good. I claim that these words will cripple the section. They ought to be stricken out, and the word "conclusively" inserted.

SPEECH OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. President: I had supposed that some of these gentlemen who are so much shocked at the words "prima facie," would in the course of the discussion in the Committee of the Whole, have presented their objections, and done something towards sustaining them by argument, not by mere declamation.

Now, these words were put in that amendment advisedly and correctly. I think I stated pretty freely on a former occasion, perhaps on more than one occasion, that the object of these words was to provide that in all controversies of any kind whatsoever, there should be a presumption in favor of the Commissioners, which presumption would have to be overthrown; that, for instance, when the question comes up in regard to these rates, if it should come up in Court, the presumption ought to be on the side of the people as against the corporations. Now, let us look at what the course of proceeding would be in a law suit under that provision as it stands now. The party injured by any oppression on the part of the corporations, by charging him rates in excess of those fixed by the Commissioners, brings a suit against the railroad corporation, setting forth in his complaint that on a certain day he transported by railroad from one point to another certain goods, and that the charge per ton fixed by the Commissioners was, say, $10; that the railroad company charged him in excess of that and received from him the sum of $5, making $15 in all; that would be his complaint. Now, what would be the answer of the corporation? It could not deny that the rates had been fixed by the Commissioners, because that would be a matter of record which no man would undertake to deny, or if he did, it would avail nothing. But the corporation would set up in its answer that the rates fixed by the Commissioners were unreasonable rates, that they were below living rates, and that it was impossible for the corporation to carry on business because of the unjust rates. It would have to make such an answer. Then upon the trial the plaintiff would not have to introduce any evidence whatever. It would stand admitted that these were the rates fixed by the Commissioners, and the law declares them just and reasonable; and it would then devolve upon the corporation to show affirmatively, by evidence, that the rates were unreasonable; and then the plaintiff would have the privilege of replying to that evidence by introducing testimony to show that the rates were just and reasonable; in other words he would be entitled to introduce testimony in support of the legal presumption. I presume there is no lawyer who will deny the fairness of that proposition. That being the case, the question simply comes to this; whether the Commissioners are to have absolute power, against which there is no restraint anywhere; whether they are to be regarded as absolutely infallible, and whatever they do, whether just or unjust, is to be final and absolute, without remedy before any tribunal upon earth. That is now the question. Or whether, when they act unjustly towards the corporations, the latter shall be at liberty to show before a Court or a jury that the act of the Commissioners was unjust. The Commissioners can be there as competent witnesses to testify in relation to the cause of their action, and their reasons for it. They could show, having access—as is provided for here—having access to the books of receipts and expenditures of the corporations, conclusively from those very books that their action was right and reasonable, and that the rates established were not unjust rates. Then the question would be brought before the jury. Now, I am not going to assume, as the gentleman who last addressed the Convention seemed to assume, that all the Courts are going to be corrupt; that the railroad corporations are going to own them absolutely, in fee-simple; or that they are going to own even two thirds of them, as the gentleman says. Whenever the time comes that two thirds of the Courts of the country are owned by any set of corporations on earth, it is time then to abandon republican institutions. I go upon no such violent assumption as that. Then, too, you must assume that juries will be equally corrupt, for you can always have these cases tried before a jury. The right of trial by jury is secured in the bill of rights, not cut out as one gentleman seems to infer. It is secured, and under the present condition of things they would have to corrupt three members of the jury in order to prevent a verdict, so that the opportunities for corruption are infinitely reduced.

There is another provision, also, which would tend to prevent the railroad companies from disputing the rates fixed by the Commissioners, except in very clear cases, and that is this: that in all cases where complaint is made upon that ground, the party, if successful, may, in the discretion of the jury, recover exemplary damages. If he is damaged to the amount of five dollars, he may recover five or ten thousand dollars. There is no limit fixed to the discretion of the jury. The jurors come direct from the people, and surely there is no danger of their being in the interest of the corporations. Now, while I am ready and willing to put any reasonable check upon the corporations, I am not willing to go to the length of creating a tribunal of three men, a majority of whom, by their action, can absolutely and without possible appeal to any human tribunal, in effect confiscate property to the amount of one hundred and fifty or two hundred millions; where, if at any time two of these Commissioners shall perpetrate an act that is absolutely unjust, there shall be no check, no appeal to any Court or tribunal on earth, and the only check which there will be upon their proceedings will be simply that the Legislature, when it meets, may, by a two-thirds vote, remove the Commissioners; that is the only thing in the nature of a check suggested here. On the other hand, we have the fact that when these rates are fixed by the Commissioners, the legal presumption is in favor of their correctness, and the plaintiff does not have to present any evidence, the burden of showing that the rates so fixed are not just and reasonable is thrown on the other side, and the plaintiff then has the privilege of rebutting, and, in addition to actual damages, the jury may award exemplary damages. Now, what rational man, what man not absolutely blinded by passion and prejudice, can wish for any stronger guarantees than these? I do submit to this Convention, that, while it is our duty here to take every proper method, and to go as far as we can, within the bounds of reason, to restrain the overshadowing power of these corporations, and the influence which they have exercised, at the same time, in so doing we must not lose sight of all principles of right and justice. While we are strict we must be just in our legislation; and whatever the feeling may be to-day towards corporations, I undertake to say that the State will not sanction any measure the result of which is to establish a tribunal in our midst with absolute, arbitrary, and unchecked powers. It has been likened to the case of the Board of Supervisors establishing rates of toll. There is a difference; in the first place, there is a body regularly organized by law, and constantly changing from time to time, and the power which it wields is a mere trifle compared with those it is proposed to confer upon these Railroad Commissioners. Fixing the rate of toll on ferries and toll roads is a matter of some importance to the individual, it is true; but it is a mere trifling matter as compared with the power of these three men, who have power over every railroad, every transportation company in the State; who can declare what the income of every railroad or transportation company shall be which are organized or doing business under the laws of this State.

I trust, Mr. President, that these instructions will not be given to the committee. I know and feel that they are vital in their effects, and that they will accomplish no good results. It would tend, in my opinion, to defeat the very object which we have in view, to control these corporations; and I do hope this Convention will give no such instructions to the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: I was not in favor of a Constitutional Commission, for the reason that I believed it was placing too much power in the hands of three men; but inasmuch as this Convention has decided that this Commission shall be formed for the purpose of regulating freights and fares, I submit to the will of the majority, and I now desire that the means to secure the end shall be made effectual; and I do think that with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, the Commission will amount to nothing at all, and that we might just as well blot out the whole section as to retain the words "prima facie."

The gentleman says that the onus will be upon the railroad companies to establish the fact that the charges are unreasonable. That is true; but what does that mean? It only means that in the first instance the plaintiff need not introduce any testimony to show that the rates are reasonable and just. The plaintiff needs only to prove in the first instance that the charges fixed by the Railroad Commissioners were ten dollars, and those exacted by the company were fifteen dollars. But when evidence is introduced upon the part of the railroad companies to show the unreasonableness and injustice of the charges, then the plaintiff will be called upon to introduce evidence in rebuttal. The case will then depend, as usual, upon the weight of the testimony upon the one side or the other. "Prima facie" does not then weigh against the sworn testimony, but the Court will be guided by the sworn testimony upon the one side or the other as to whether the rates established by the Commissioners are just and reasonable. The case will, after all, be determined by the evidence. So that the effect of this section, as it now stands, is not to make the rates of freights and fares fixed by these Commissioners the legal and lawful rates, but the effect will be to make the Court or the jury in every case the arbiters—make them fix the rates of freights and fares in every instance. I say that the words are of no use in this section. You might as well say that the railroad and transportation companies shall charge reasonable rates for freights and fares, and shall be subject to penalties for charging unreasonable rates; and then a man who had been charged fifteen dollars for what he supposed could be done for ten dollars, could bring an action and allege that the charge was an unreasonable one, and then the jury would determine it. It would do just as much good.

The whole benefit sought to be derived from this Commission would be destroyed or rendered nugatory by the retention of these words. The fact of the business is it would amount to just this: The Commissioners would recommend a scale of charges, and the railroad companies would adopt just what suits them. The question would not be determined by one tribunal, for there is no one tribunal who could determine these questions. In every single case the Court or the jury summoned to try the case would determine whether that particular charge, for a particular distance, was reasonable or not. We would have no precedent established, no system established, for if the Commissioners established a rate it may be overcome by the verdict of a jury, or the judgment of a Court.

Now, it is proposed, as far as this Commission is concerned, to delegate to them a portion of the powers of the Legislature. It is proposed to say that, as far as fixing the charges for the transportation of passengers and freight is concerned, the legislative power is vested in these Commissioners. The question here is whether it should be left to the Commissioners to determine whether they are reasonable or not. Shall the edicts of this Commission have the same force and effect as a statute enacted by the Legislature?

Now, the gentleman says the duties performed by the Boards of Supervisors in fixing rates of toll on ferries and bridges are not so great as the duties of these Commissioners; that the amount of property is not so great. That is true, but the principle is the same; exactly the same. Here is a Board, constituted by law, and the members elected by the people, who are required periodically to say how much toll shall be collected upon a certain road, or upon a certain bridge or ferry. Who ever heard of an action being brought against them on the ground that these rates are unjust or unreasonable? Just as well might a criminal, when called up for sentence, after having been convicted, say the punishment was unreasonable, and ask to have the question left to the jury. If you desire—and it does seem to be the desire of the majority—to limit the power of these Commissioners in fixing rates to be charged, then the same force and effect must be given to their action as are given to the Acts of the Legislature of the State, passed in accordance with the Constitution. Unless that is done, you might as well have no Commissioners.

Now, gentlemen, I hope that these words, "prima facie," will be stricken out, and that the rates of freights and fares fixed by these Commissioners shall be conclusively just and reasonable; that the rates fixed by them shall be the rates which the companies shall charge, and no more. If there is any unreasonableness in the charge, then the objections must be made to the Commissioners themselves, who are presumed to be honest men, and just to the corporations as well as to the people; and they are the ones to be convinced that these charges are not reasonable. If they are so convinced they can alter them, just as the Legislature can repeal the statute. But it will never do to leave these words in there unless you wish this whole scheme to amount to nothing. It will be just so much money thrown away, from which the people will reap no good. It will not do to put the power in the hands of a Justice of the Peace to say whether it shall have any force and effect. I hope, therefore, that the motion to instruct the committee to strike out these words will prevail.

SPEECH OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: I would not trouble the Convention again were it not that I see that there is a misunderstanding regarding the matters presented by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell. It may not be out of place to review the action of this Convention in relation to this most important subject. The men who in this Convention favored the regulation of freights and fares early in the session came forward with the proposition that the State has the right to regulate the rates of freights and fares to be charged by the common carriers. That proposition was opposed, and eminent lawyers on the floor of this Convention said the State had nothing to do with the matter, and the eminent gentlemen who opposed us used the same terms which the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, used towards us in his last speech; that when the State undertakes to exercise that right, it undertakes to control, and undertakes to exercise the right to confiscate one hundred and fifty millions of property. But I notice, sir, that these same lawyers have uniformly opposed the remedies which we are trying to establish; or, if they have not opposed them, tried to destroy their efficiency by backbiting.

Digitized by Google

Now, the proposition was that the State had the right to regulate the freights and fares. The next proposition that was presented for our consideration was, in what manner can this best be accomplished, and the answer of some was, by establishing maximum rates to be charged by common carriers. We came to an understanding on that. The next question was, what arm of the government shall we authorize to grapple with this subject of freights and fares; and the gentlemen who talk about the danger of confiscating one hundred and fifty millions of property, said the Legislature must exercise this power. Other gentlemen, among them the Committee on Corporations, said that power should be exercised by a Commission, to be elected for that special purpose. That this Commission should exercise that power. What power? Why, the power of establishing maximum rates of freights and fares to be charged by common carriers. We have fought over this for the past six weeks, and finally we have arrived at this conclusion, by a large majority of this Convention. The conclusion is that this matter could not be safely trusted to the Legislature, and why? Because the Legislature, during the short period allotted for its sessions, cannot gather the information necessary to enable them to act intelligently upon the question as to what should be the maximum rate of freights and fares. And when we had decided that it was not possible for the Legislature to gather that information, it became necessary to establish some branch of government, some authority, some body of men, who could gather that information and act upon it. We then agreed, by a strong majority of this Convention, that the matter must be submitted to the Commissioners, and that the Commissioners should establish the rates of freights and fares. Now, having an understanding on that proposition, we have got the matter down to this point, that the Commission, having in its hands the power to gain the information necessary, and having in its hands the power necessary to enable it to fix the rates of freights and fares, the next question was how the Commission should be constituted; and then came forward the gentlemen who were so afraid of confiscating this one hundred and fifty millions of property, and said: "Let the Governor appoint them; it would not do to have them elected by the people." And we voted upon that proposition; and again we won a victory for the people.

Let me say to these men who are so afraid of the Railroad Commissioners, that railroad and other transportation companies need not fear the people; but they must come and rest their heads where you and I rest our heads—upon the bosom of public justice. And we cannot rest there; when we cannot feel safe there, then, sir, we have no business in a republic. I have no fears about these Railroad Commissioners acting unjustly. Past experience has shown that all such officers are inclined to be too liberal to the railroad companies. And whatever is said about the Courts, let me say that the Courts have protected the rights of the people; they have rendered verdicts in favor of the people against these strong corporations; they have stood up manfully, but they cannot stand alone; they must have the law to help them.

Now, having reached a point where we agreed to confer upon these Commissioners legislative powers to fix the rates of freights and fares, then what more do we ask? We ask that when those rates have been established by this tribunal, that they shall have the same force and effect as a legislative enactment. If the Legislature passes a law that the rate of freight between certain points shall be three cents per ton per mile, would the railroad company be allowed to come into Court and set up that the law was unreasonable? That the rates established were too low? Not a bit of it. There is the law which a republican government, acting as a republican government always will act, in the interest of public justice, has passed, establishing these rates, and having been so established, if they are not binding they are nothing. They would amount to absolutely nothing. Now, you leave in these words "prima facie," and the men who have been talking about the danger of confiscating one hundred and fifty millions of property will vote for it. Strike out these words, and you give to the decisions of this Commission the same force and effect as any other legislative enactment; and these same gentlemen will fall down on the proposition. Let us act in this matter intelligently. Let no man in this Convention say that he will vote in favor of retaining these words without understanding what he is doing. I shall come out plainly as to what the effect of these words will be, and if I misinterpret, let any lawyer on the floor correct me.

To-day, if the railroad company charges unreasonable rates, you are without a remedy in the Courts, and for this reason, that all the information necessary to prove that these rates are unreasonable is in the hands of one party—in the hands of the railroad company; and although we know to a moral certainty that the rates are grossly unjust and unreasonable, yet we have no way of proving it in the Courts, because we cannot get at the information. When a case comes into Court, two thousand, or three thousand, or six thousand, or twelve thousand employés of the railroad company can be called in to testify as to whether they believe these rates to be reasonable or not. Now, the case under this section comes into Court; here are three men, who have received the confidence of the people of the State, and they have spoken and said that these rates established by them are just and reasonable. They have spoken, and it is the voice of the people; they have been elected by the people, and they have spoken and said what the rates shall be. The case comes into Court, and the question of law is submitted—and that question of law is so nearly a question of fact that it must go to a jury to determine as to whether the rates so established are reasonable or not. In every given case we must take the judgment of twelve men who ordinarily know nothing about these matters, instead of the judgment of the Commissioners, who have investigated the whole subject, and whose decisions are based upon actual information.

Now, the other day the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, in speaking upon this question, made an argument which has influenced to some extent the minds of many men, with regard to a decision in the State of Illinois. Let me refer to that, and let the matter be understood, because members may be influenced by that decision. I know something about it, being indirectly connected with the case at one time. Mr. Edgerton gave us the impression that the rates of freights and fares must be merely prima facie——

MR. EDGERTON. I gave no impression about it—I read the case. I placed no construction upon it; I read the case itself.

MR. CROSS. The case left a false impression upon the minds of many in this Convention. Now, let us see what that case really is. The Constitution of the State of Illinois has in it a provision regarding freights and fares. It is this:

"The General Assembly shall pass laws to correct abuses, and prevent discrimination and extortion in the rates of freight and passenger tariffs on the different railroads in this State, and enforce laws by adequate penalties, to the extent, if necessary for that purpose, of forfeiture of their property and franchises."

Now, the Illinois Legislature passed a law something like this: that all discrimination was unjust discrimination. Then, under that, the plaintiff brought his suit in Court, simply pleading that the railroad company had discriminated, stating merely the fact that there had been discrimination. Now, when the instructions of the Court came to be given, the Court instructed the jury in the words of the statute instead of instructing in the controlling language of the Constitution; and, of course, in so far as the instructions under the statute varied from the instructions as would have been in accordance with the language of the Constitution, in so far was the decision wrong. So, when the case went to the Supreme Court, that tribunal decided that the Court below, in giving these instructions in the words of the statute, violated the principle as laid down in the Constitution.

Now, sir, we may talk about these three men being just or unjust, but somewhere must the authority be vested; somewhere must this power be lodged. Now, to say that these rates shall be prima facie just and reasonable only, is to say that the question henceforth shall rest just where it is to-day, and that is to say that the railroad company, with all its flunkeys, may come into Court and swear that the rates as established are unjust and unreasonable, and the man who makes a complaint must be prepared to wield a power and influence equal to theirs in order to establish the fact that they are not unjust. Taking the ground that the rates established by the Commissioners are unjust and unreasonable, the evidence of Leland Stanford will weigh more in law than the declaration of these Commissioners that the rates are not unreasonable. And if any different rule of law should be laid down by the Court trying the case, when it comes to the Supreme Court, they will reverse it and send it back; it will be no remedy at all. Our work will all have been thrown away, if we declare that the rates established by these Commissioners shall only be prima facie proof that they are just and reasonable.

The gentleman yesterday introduced a resolution which involved a large number of questions. The reason we did not notice these words at the time is a good one. Before any of us happened to get the floor, seven speeches on various portions of the proposition were made by gentlemen all on one side of the question; and, at that point, the previous question was moved, and sustained, and no man had a chance to say "prima facie" if he wanted to. Now, if those words remain, the provision amounts to absolutely nothing, and the friends of the original proposition might just as well join in and help to kill the whole thing. If these words are stricken out and the word "conclusively" inserted, then, when rates of freights and fares are once fixed by the Commissioners, they will have the same force and effect as an Act passed by the Legislature upon the same subject. I do not know why, if the people elect these three men, they should not be able to choose proper men, honest men, and able men. If they can elect one hundred and twenty men capable enough, and honest enough, as some of these gentlemen claim they can, to regulate this subject, in one hundred days, why should they not be able to choose three men with the same qualifications. I believe they can.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. I move the previous question.

THE PRESIDENT. Is the motion seconded?

MR. MCCALLUM. I would like to have an opportunity to offer an amendment.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. President: I withdraw the motion for the previous question, temporarily.

SPEECH OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. President: It does seem necessary that some one should have read the section as it now stands, in order that the Convention may proceed understandingly. Section twenty, as amended by the various amendments, reads as follows:

SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the general election, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be six years; provided, that the three Commissioners elected at the first election shall so classify themselves by lot that one of them shall go out of office at the end of two years, one at the end of four years, and one at the end of six years, so that after the first election, one Commissioner shall be elected at the general election every two years, and shall hold office for the term of six years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé; and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies; and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts, to hear complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies; provided, the Legislature shall have power to remove any one or more of said Commissioners from office for dereliction of duty, corruption, or incompetency therein; and whenever, from any cause, vacancy of office shall occur in said Commission, the Governor shall fill the same by appointing a qualified person thereto, who shall hold office for the residue of the unexpired term, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified. Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts to be kept by all such corporations and companies, and they shall keep their accounts according to that system. Any railroad corporation or transportation company which shall fail or refuse to conform to such rates as shall be established by said Commissioners, or shall charge rates in excess thereof, or shall fail to make their accounts correspond with the system prescribed by the Commission, shall be fined not exceeding twenty thousand dollars for each offense; and any officer, agent, or employé of any such corporation or company, who shall demand or receive rates in excess thereof, or who shall in any manner violate the provisions of this section, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the County Jail not exceeding one year. In all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of fares and freights established by said Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie just and reasonable. In any action against any such corporation or company, for damages sustained by charging excessive rates, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damage, may, in the discretion of the Judge or jury, recover exemplary damages. The Legislature may, in addition to any penalties herein prescribed, enforce this article by forfeiture or otherwise, and may confer such further powers on the Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined upon them in this and the foregoing sections.

Mr. President, I now ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I offer, and then the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer.

"By Mr. McCallum:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations be further instructed to so amend section twenty as to strike out so much thereof as provides that the charges fixed by the Commissioners shall be only prima facie evidence of the correctness of such charges."

"By Mr. Filcher:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal be instructed to further amend section twenty, adopted by the Committee of the Whole, by striking out the words "prima facie," as they occur near the last of the section, and insert instead thereof the word "conclusively."

MR. MCCALLUM. I suppose we are aiming at the same object in this matter. My idea is to strike out all the words between the words "not" in line blank, and "in" in the following line; also strike out the word "excessive," and insert the word "illegal." The section will then read as it is proposed to formulate it, and as some of us desire to have it read:

"In all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of freights and fares established by such Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie just and reasonable."

Strike those words out entirely. You have said in one place that the Commissioners shall have power to establish rates of freights and fares. Having said that, this other is simply unnecessary, except upon the idea that you propose to say that the rates so established shall be only prima facie just and reasonable. This will leave the rates fixed by the Commissioners the legal rates, as in any other case where they are fixed by authority of law. They are either to fix the rates or not to fix them. As it reads at present it simply means that they shall suggest rates, and it is left to the Court to say whether they shall stand or not. Suppose the Commissioners fix the rate for this year, and somebody wishes to complain that the rates so fixed are excessive, there is no provision on the part of the people to test that question in any Court in the land. The right of trial and contest is given to one side and not to the other. Now, that is the shape in which it stands at present, and I would ask the gentleman from Placer to allow the committee to formulate it so as to carry out this idea. We have adopted the general idea, and the committee can formulate it. Now, if the Secretary will find where the words occur, and note the amendment, I will read the words to be stricken out. They are: "Upon all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of freights and fares established by such Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie just and reasonable." These lines occur close to the bottom of the section. Then in place of the word "excessive," use the word "illegal," so that the rates fixed by the Commissioners shall be the legal rates.

THE PRESIDENT. It is too late to do that, except by the consent of the house.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: As far as the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal are concerned, they do not care about having this matter referred to them, but since the Convention desires to re-refer it, and desires to undo some of the things which it has done, I would suggest that we reconsider some of the amendments that have been added to the section. Now, for instance, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, and which was adopted, fixes certain penalties for certain acts in violation of portions of the section. One of these penalties is fixed at twenty thousand dollars, not to exceed twenty thousand dollars, it may be two dollars and fifty cents, or twenty thousand dollars. Another penalty is not to exceed five thousand dollars, and that, too, may be two dollars and fifty cents. It seems to me you are attempting to put a Penal Code at the bottom of the section. It says one penalty shall not exceed five thousand dollars. That may be five thousand dollars, or it may be twenty-five cents. It means nothing, and the entire latter part of that section, in my judgment, brings the whole section into contempt. I hope I do not speak too strongly, for I have the highest respect for the gentleman from Alameda, but if this Convention allows this thing to remain in there it will be utterly meaningless, it will accomplish no good purpose. And the words "prima facie" are undoubtedly worse—worse than all. It makes the entire preceding portions of the section meaningless. In other words, the first part of the section says they shall have power to regulate freights and fares. The Commissioners may establish rates of freights and fares. Criticisms have been made here upon the amendment, that these rates shall be prima facie just and reasonable. The criticisms made by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, and by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, they shall be prima facie just and reasonable. In other words, the fixing of rates by the Commissioners would amount to nothing in any Court of justice in the land. Why? You go in there and set out in your complaint that the Commissioners have declared that the railroad company shall have but three cents per mile for freight per ton. The defendant comes in and admits that, but they say, that is only prima facie, and they propose to show the Court that the rate so fixed is not reasonable, and they produce a host of witnesses to sustain them, and the result will be that each individual case will have to be decided upon the testimony.

The next proposition is that of the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher, which provides for striking out the words "prima facie," and inserting the word "conclusively." That would not be right at all; and why? You leave the section as it stood, and it provides that the Commissioners shall fix the rate of freights and fares. That, it is true, is conclusive. That is conclusive beyond any question. But down at the bottom you have added: "In all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of freights and fares established by such Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie just and reasonable." Now you propose to insert the word "conclusively;" and that will make it read: "In all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of freights and fares established by such Commissioners shall be deemed conclusively just and reasonable." In other words, you are going to convict a party upon a declaration in the Constitution.

Now, let us take a medium course, and settle this if we can. If you want to refer the matter back to the committee, trust a little to their intelligence and their intentions to do what is right. If you cannot do this, then do not refer it at all. Leave the committee some discretion in the matter, or else refer it to the clerk, and have him strike out what you propose to have stricken out.

Again, this amendment prescribes that in all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of freights and fares established by such Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie just and reasonable; in any question about damages sustained by charging excessive rates, the plaintiff, in addition to actual damages, may, in the discretion of the Court, recover exemplary damages, etc. He can do that now. In any action for damage for injury to person, of course he can. It doesn't add anything to it. Those are mere catchwords. They are attractive words, but they mean nothing.

MR. CAMPBELL. He can recover actual damage sustained.

MR. ESTEE. If he is put off the car he can. The Commissioners may make a rule whereby he cannot be put off the cars because he does not pay ten cents a mile. I can see no good result to flow from the last part of that section. They are mere idle words, and amount to nothing. Let us trust something to the Legislature, and something to the Commissioners. I hope the Convention will strike out the words "prima facie."

SPEECH OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. President: What have you done in this section? Not being satisfied with the established Courts of the country, not being satisfied with the Legislature of the State, you create and establish another tribunal. Now, you first establish this special tribunal. They are to be selected by the people. The corporations have no hand in it at all. Why, sir, you would not try a Chinaman before such a one-sided tribunal as that. You provide expressly that no man having any interest in such corporations shall be a member of the Board. You exclude everybody, even down to the lowest servants of the corporations. Then, having got such a tribunal as that, they say it is to decide justly between the people and the corporations. Why, sir, they are chosen entirely by the people. But having created this special tribunal, what else do we do? Go to work and overturn all the established rules of law. You say that in all actions, civil actions, the plaintiff may recover exemplary damages. The Courts, for the last twenty-five years, have held that you can do it, but only in cases where great wrong has been committed; where there are evidences of maliciousness. There are very few cases where the Courts will hold that a plaintiff may recover exemplary damages. But in this case you say that in any ordinary action the plaintiff may recover exemplary damages. That is not law. It is a violation of the very first principles of law. Having done all that; having created and equipped this special tribunal for one side, for the purpose of getting decisions favorable to the one side, what do you do then? You provide for criminal proceedings against either the corporation itself, or against some conductor, or ticket agent, or train agent, working for seventy-five dollars per month, and they are brought before the criminal Courts for a violation of some rule which these immaculate Commissioners have made, and you do not even allow them to have a chance to show that the rule is unjust or unreasonable. Why, was ever such a criminal Code as that made in the world? Where, on the face of God's earth, can you find anything like it? Suppose they come and show that these rules are unjust—grossly unjust—still they must be convicted, because these immaculate Commissioners have made the rule. Now, isn't it enough, in God's name, to say that the bill of freights and fares established by this Commission shall be prima facie right, so as to allow men to come in and show that it is not right? Why, sir, I never heard of any such criminal law as that. What do you want? Say what you want? How far do you propose to go? I think, sir, when a man comes to be tried for a criminal offense, he should have the right to prove, if he can, that the thing was unjust and unreasonable. I think he ought to be allowed to show that it was impossible for him to obey the rule laid down. He may have committed the crime without attempting to do it. Now, a conductor on one of these railroads takes a fare; perhaps unwittingly miscalculates the amount. He comes into Court, and, according to the rule sought to be laid down here, he is guilty as soon as he is accused, and there is no trial about it. He has no defense to make. There is no defense, under this proposed provision, that he can make. He is guilty, whether he is or not. You don't propose even to say that he must have done it willfully.

If he does it, even though it may have been purely a mistake, purely unintentional on his part, he has no defense in the world. He is guilty. Sir, I say I never heard of such an outrageous criminal provision in the world. I never heard of any such unjust provision in the world. I hold that there will be no such thing as justice, if these words "prima facie" are stricken out, for a man must be condemned without even the form of a trial. He may be fined, and he may be imprisoned. His liberty and his character are at stake. I don't suppose a freight agent would be able to pay the fine, and yet, under that provision, he cannot make any defense, and of course he must go to jail. Why, sir, are your Commissioners going to be immaculate? I do not see how they can be, unless they are to be taken from among the members of this Convention who voted, the other day, against the resolution that no member of this body should be eligible to the office of Railroad Commissioner. If you take them out of this body, of course, no one doubts that it would be the most eminently wise and just Board in the world; but if you are going to get them anywhere else, they are liable to be fallible. You talk about the people. Who represents the people? You say the Legislature does not represent the people. You are not willing to trust a jury, taken from the very heart of the people. Who are the people? Who are they who represent the people? Who is it that speaks for them? these Commissioners. They are to come from the people. The people are to elect them, and undoubtedly will elect them. Having elected them, with a view to their hostility to these corporations, you are afraid to allow a man to be tried under the ordinary rules of law, when he is charged by them with crime. Sir, I do hope that this Convention will not do such an unjust thing.

REMARKS OF MR. LINDOW.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. President: I am really very glad that it turned out this way. I have watched this thing from the very beginning, expecting that it would turn out just this way. The only thing that makes me glad that this thing has turned out this way, is because these gentlemen think they know everything. They have robbed the people of the State of a great deal of time; they have robbed the State of California out of all this money, and, now they have got it completed, it amounts to nothing. They got up here and offered amendments, and more amendments, which were made to hurt the people, and at the same time the Workingmen stood and laughed at them. Now, about this section for Commissioners, I never vote in favor of that, because I have got no faith in Commissioners. I think it is better to leave it to the Legislature. If they don't want to leave it to two thirds of the Legislature, then leave it to these three Commissioners. It is a nice fat job for any man. Mr. Campbell's amendment I vote for, and other amendments thrown in. But I see it would not fit. It won't make nothing at all. I am glad it turned out for the people that way. It shows that it was the Workingmen's party that has all the best men on this floor. But I am glad it has turned out this way. Now, let them fix it up again.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. President: I think my friend from Sacramento has not taken the trouble to analyze this provision. Suppose he should occupy the position of Judge of the Supreme Court, and we should pass a law here saying that his decrees should be prima facie evidence of the correctness of the decision. I think he would cry out against it as he has against this provision here. Now, sir, I am in favor of striking out the words "prima facie." They are not necessary, and ought not to be there. Because, if the Commissioners can decide, for instance, that five cents per ton per mile is the rate to be charged, then that decision is conclusive, unless we take the breath all out of it by saying that it shall be only prima facie. It is just as conclusive as a decision of the Supreme Court of the State, or any other Court; and the gentleman is mistaken when he says that no such Commission, armed with such powers, can be found in the world. The Act of the British Parliament, to which I have before referred, contains precisely this provision, omitting the words prima facie. It gives the whole power to the Commissioners, and whatever they decide is conclusive—just as conclusive as the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. What would be the sense in saying that the decisions of our Courts should be prima facie just and right? There would be no sense in it at all. What would be the character of such a Court? What use would it be? What good would it do? The argument of the gentleman amounts to nothing at all. The idea is simply ridiculous. If you are going to give jurisdiction to the Commissioners, give them some authority; let their decisions be conclusive. But if you make their decisions only prima facie, then they will amount to nothing, and every time there is a violation of their orders, the question will have to be tried in the Courts, in order to determine whether the rates established are really just and reasonable. You might just as well strike out the entire section. You might just as well abandon the idea as to leave these words in there, for no good will be accomplished by it.

MR. WATERS. Mr. President: Is an amendment in order at this time?

THE PRESIDENT. No, sir, there is an amendment to an amendment pending.

SPEECH OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. President: Before this matter is voted upon, I wish to bring it down to what I consider the true merit of the proposition. The object seems to be here to give these Commissioners absolute power. Now, I wish to impress upon the minds of the members here that we are giving them absolute power over the people, as well as absolute power over the corporations. I wish you to consider that point. What are you doing? You are turning over the people of this State to this Board of three men. Don't flatter yourselves that you are merely turning the corporations over to the Commissioners—you are turning the entire State over to these three men—to their unlimited control. Now, if I could get an opportunity I would present the question fairly and squarely, by an amendment to the effect that the action of these Commissioners shall be only prima facie as against the people, and upon that I want to call the ayes and noes. I want to find out how many men will vote to make the action of this Board conclusive as against the people. I want to find out how many delegates will vote to do it. I don't think there will be many. You are carried away with this idea that this Commission is going to control the corporations alone. How will it be if the Commission establishes high and exorbitant rates of freights and fares? Will it not be conclusive as against the people? It will be binding upon the people as well as upon the corporations. Now, will you do this? Are you prepared to vote them unlimited power? I don't believe you will do it, if you are called upon to vote squarely upon that amendment. After the first amendment is disposed of, I shall offer the following:

Resolved, Instruct Committee on Corporations to provide that the rates fixed shall not be conclusive against the people, but prima facie only as against the people.

Now, that brings the question fairly before the Convention. I want to see how many members are prepared to vote to turn the people of this State over to the absolute control of these Commissioners. I want to see who will dare to do it. I do not believe this Convention will do it. I do not believe, with all our passion and prejudice against the corporations, that we are prepared to take this step.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: Like my friend from San Francisco, I expected this debate would at last reach about the position it now occupies. We have at last come down to the practical working of this provision, and we are beginning to understand exactly the position we occupy. The gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, has stated the position of affairs very clearly. I will say to the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, that he fails to comprehend what we have all along been contending for, and that is, that this Commission, being elected by the people, the people should be absolutely bound by its action, as well as the corporations. Has he yet to learn that when the Legislature passes an Act that Act is binding upon the people? We propose to give these Railroad Commissioners precisely the same power, so far as this subject goes, as has heretofore been vested in the Legislature. We vest the power of fixing freights and fares in this Commission. Their action must be binding upon the corporations and the people alike. The people have the right and the power to control these matters. The power of the people now rests in the Legislature, and now what we want is to delegate this power to this Commission, to act as our agents. That is what we want to do. Now, who has any objection? But some of these gentlemen say, that when our agents have gone on and fixed these rates, that somebody else must have a second say about it; that the decisions of this Commission shall not be final; that the parties may appeal from their decisions to the Courts. The rules established by the Commissioners are just as much law as though enacted by the Legislature. They act for both sides. They do not act especially for the people or against them. They are acting for the people and for the corporations alike. Now, what is the use of talking about it? Haven't you heard enough reasons? Wasn't the argument of the gentleman from San Joaquin clear enough? What more do you want? Do you want to say that this law shall bind the one side but not the other? It seems to me the most nonsensical proposition ever presented.

Why cannot we go on and do our work; do what we have the right to do; and what the corporations themselves agreed might be done; allow our agents to fix the rates of freights and fares? In God's name, can you not trust to their judgment, as well as to the judgment of a Court, when they are sworn officers as well as the Judges of your Courts? If they violate their obligations, or fail to perform their duties, let them be punished. When the Legislature enacts a law, you say it is the law of the land. When these Commissioners enact a law, as between the railroad companies and the people, that is the law of the land. Now, we have reached a point where this question is practical. We have come down to the point where we begin to understand ourselves, and when we have understood ourselves, let us act at once. What is the use of talking about this thing of absolutism. Is there not absolutism in an Act of the Legislature? Who dares to raise a voice against a law passed by the Legislature, upon the ground that it is unreasonable and unjust? No one. It is true that hardly any law passed, fails to work injustice in individual cases, but whoever heard of one being overturned on that account? If these Commissioners do wrong, punish them like any other tribunal; but do not stand up here and talk about nonsensical propositions, when the companies themselves understood, when they made the contract, that these were the conditions upon which the donations were made. Because we simply say that these Commissioners shall not be interested in these corporations, some gentlemen object. They say it will bar out anybody who happens to run upon a railroad. We simply do it as a precaution; as a protection to the railroad companies as well as to the people. We remove them from improper influences, the same as any other Judges.

Now, I hope that this question has been sufficiently discussed and sufficiently understood, even by the gentleman from Sacramento, and the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, who seems not to comprehend the obligations of the citizen to laws made by the people. There is no difference in the interest between the citizen and the railroad company. Their interests are identical. When the Commissioners act, they are acting and legislating for the companies, and their acts bind both sides. The gentleman asks, tragically, if any of us will dare to vote against the proposition that the people shall not be bound by the acts of their chosen representatives and agents. I dare. I dare. [Applause.] They are the Legislature for the time being. Their acts are the same, so far as the subject-matter over which they have jurisdiction is concerned, as the acts of the Legislature. They are both legislative bodies. The one is placed in a position where it cannot act intelligently, because of the want of time and opportunity to examine into the circumstances—to inform themselves—the sessions being too short. On the other hand, the Commissioners' sessions are eternal, and they can acquaint themselves with all the details, which is absolutely necessary as a basis of intelligent action. Then it will become a valuable thing dealing out justice to both the people and the corporations alike, and meting it out promptly. That is the kind of a tribunal we want to make it. That is what we are here for. We have been discussing and explaining it here for the past six weeks. We want them to have power enough to do something. We want them to have the same power which you admit exists in the Legislature. We are taking it from the Legislature, and we do not propose that that power shall lose anything by the transfer. This power and this right is in the people, and the railroad companies acknowledged it and agreed to it, and bound themselves to abide by it. They agreed to it, and we want them to stand by that agreement, and we propose to compel them to do it. We propose to elect Commissioners that will see that they do obey the commands of the people. Is that clear enough? Does the gentleman from San Bernardino understand us now? [Applause.] Let him send up his proposition, and he will see how many of us will dare to vote against it. It would be simply an outrage to say that the railroads should be bound while the people should not. I do not propose that you shall make it prima facie either for or against the people. I want it to stand together, binding alike upon the railroad companies and upon the people. We mean to give them actual power, and we propose that it shall be binding upon the corporations and the people. We do not expect to bind one side without binding the other. We expect the ligament to be equally strong upon us all.

SPEECH OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. President: I have but a few words to add. I must say that I am somewhat surprised to see the course that the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal has taken here. It seems to me he can blow hot and blow cold; blow from the north and blow from the south, with greater ease and facility than any gentleman I have ever seen. In fact, he can turn more somersaults than a clown in a circus, and in a shorter time. [Laughter.] Yesterday this amendment was all right. He was perfectly willing to support it. He invoked the attention ——

MR. ESTEE. If the gentleman will allow me—does not the gentleman from Alameda know that I voted against it yesterday?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No, sir.

MR. ESTEE. Well, I know I did.

MR. CAMPBELL. The gentleman spoke substantially for this amendment, because he appealed to the Convention to carry this thing through as it was—with the amendment—and to shut out all further amendments, and pass it just in the shape in which it then stood. I certainly so understood the gentleman in his closing speech. I certainly did understand him, in the course of the day, to be perfectly willing that this amendment of mine should be adopted. He examined it fully, as did other gentlemen here.

Now, the gentleman objects to the penalties. Why, the objection to the report of the committee was this: that the report contained no sanctions, no penalties, and was, in consequence, productive of no good. For instance, the Commissioners might fix rates, and the railroad company might disregard them, and all the penalties that exist would be those which exist now at common law. There was no provision that those rates fixed by the Commissioners should be regarded as prima facie, or conclusive, or anything, but merely that they might establish certain rates. There was nothing at all to compel the companies to conform to them in any way, no penalty, no sanction.

In regard to the objection that a man, under this amendment, may be fined five cents, I will say this: the amendment leaves that all to the discretion of the Courts, to be graded by the magnitude of the offense. Where, for instance, the railroad company willfully and repeatedly disregard any of these provisions, and where they show a contumacious spirit and disposition to violate the law, the Court, acting fairly, would impose the highest penalty. In any case of a bona fide contest of the rates established by the Commissioners, and where there should appear to be good reasons, the penalty would be a mere nominal one, as it should be in such cases.

Now, with regard to this amendment, it does not give absolute power to these Commissioners to fix these rates finally, so that no tribunal can ever interfere. The reason of that simply was, that it is an enormous power to vest in the Commissioners. It is an absolute power, the power of two men, not three, because a majority of the Board can bind the whole. The judgment of two men, I say, is absolute, without any appeal to any tribunal in the world; and the profit or loss, as the case may be, must be sustained by the company and by the people. In the first place, there might be a great deal of favoritism shown by the Commissioners between the different railroad companies. Such a thing would be possible. In such a case are the people to be left without a remedy, without appeal. In case these Commissioners establish rates themselves, which are generally oppressive, are the people to be left without appeal, and without any remedy?

The objection is made by the gentleman from San Joaquin, and it is the strongest and most forcible objection yet made to this provision, and that is that the power is not absolute; that they can go before a Court or a Justice of the Peace in any case where they consider that the rates are wrong. It is impossible to fix any human institution in such a way that it will be free from all objections. Now, look at the probabilities in relation to that. In the first place, to guard against any factious opposition on the part of the railroad companies to the rates fixed by the Commissioners, there is a provision here subjecting them to a criminal penalty in the event of the law being violated by themselves or their employés. Then there is the action of the individual, in which he can recover exemplary damages. Now, look at it as a matter of common sense. Do you suppose that where the rates established by the Commissioners are anywhere within the bounds of reason at all that the corporations would dare to dispute them, in view of the penalties imposed by this provision? Now, to illustrate: suppose the Commissioners fix the rate for passengers from here to San Francisco at two dollars; would the railroad companies say, that is too low, we will charge three dollars? What would be the result of such action on their part? Why, every man that comes from San Francisco to Sacramento would have an action against the railroad company, not merely for the dollar, but for any amount that the jury might be disposed to give him. And if the railroad company made any factious opposition they would be liable for heavy damages. Why, it must be apparent to everybody that they would make no such factious opposition. They would be liable to be ruined by damages if they did so. It would be in the power of the jury to say that where a single individual had been overcharged one dollar, the railroad company should pay him one thousand dollars, or five thousand dollars, or any amount they thought fit. I say that is a perfect safeguard, as this provision now stands.

The same thing is true with regard to freights. Why is it that the people do not do this now? It is simply because the people have not the power that the corporations have. It is because, in the great mass of instances, the amount is small in each individual case, and because, under the law at present, the right to recover is limited to actual damages sustained, and because, if you are overcharged, you cannot recover exemplary damages; hence it costs the citizen many times more than the overcharge amounts to to maintain his suit. Here you have the additional advantage, that when the Commissioners fix the rates, they are prima facie evidence that the rates so fixed are correct. This is certainly a safeguard, and why? Because, in the first place, there is the legal presumption which has to be overcome by evidence. They have to have evidence, not only to overcome the evidence of the plaintiff, but to overcome the legal presumption. The plaintiff does not need to introduce any evidence to make out a case, except to prove the rates to have been fixed by the Commissioners, and that he has been charged in excess of those rates. Then he has the close of the case. He can rebut the testimony of the defendant. If the corporation introduces twenty witnesses, the plaintiff can introduce thirty, or forty, or as many as he pleases.

MR. McCALLUM. What kind of evidence would be introduced in his complaint first?

MR. CAMPBELL. In the first place, evidence that these rates are the rates fixed by the Commissioners, who have access to the books and papers of the companies, so that they can ascertain what are reasonable rates; from their knowledge of the disbursements and receipts of the company; from their knowledge of what passes over the road, which knowledge, under this section, is open to them. But what I wish to impress upon the minds of gentlemen is this: that there would be substantially no controversies, because, under this section, as it now stands, with its sanctions and penalties, the railroad companies would not dare to set themselves up in opposition to the rates established by the Commissioners, unless in very extraordinary cases. There is the safeguard, there is the protection to the people.

Now, the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, made use of an expression in his remarks—I suppose it escaped him in the heat of debate—intimating that I and other gentlemen were advocating the part of the railroad corporations. I do not suppose he meant to say that I was in league with others for the purpose of defeating legislation adverse to the railroads.

MR. CROSS. Does the gentleman want an answer?

MR. CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

MR. CROSS. I was a little afraid you were.

MR. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman meant to cast any such insinuation as that, I say it is utterly unfounded and false. There is not a single thing upon which he can rest it. My course upon this floor, and my course elsewhere, uniformly for years, upon this subject ——

MR. CROSS. I accept your apology.

MR. CAMPBELL. I do not require the acceptance of any apology. I have none to make. The gentleman himself is the one who ought to make the apology. I mean to say that for years I have occupied but one position upon this subject, from the time when the people first raised their voices against these railroad abuses—from that hour down to the present, I have stood in opposition to their encroachments and abuses. I was the first person to introduce in this Convention a proposition for the establishment of a Railroad Commission. I went before the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, and urged it as a necessary and proper measure to correct the abuses which have grown up on the part of these corporations. In that amendment I have placed penalties which are as plain as day, and which will make this section of some practical utility. I say that such insinuations as that thrown out by the gentleman from Nevada, are not only unjust, but unmanly, discourteous, and improper.

Digitized by Google

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I hope the resolutions of instructions to the committee offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher, will prevail, with the understanding that the committee be allowed some little scope to arrange the section. The manner in which the amendments were made demands, at the hands of those gentlemen who voted for them last evening, some explanation. I have no desire to indulge in criticisms, but gentlemen have been indulging somewhat in personalities, and I think I am entitled to complain somewhat of the gentleman from Alameda. I think he has not kept the letter nor the spirit of the promise he made in regard to having amendments made to the provision wherever it was objectionable. Now, the Committee on Corporations had two discussions over the words "reasonable" and "just" rates, in regard to conferring the power upon these Commissioners to establish that kind of rates. I, with others, opposed it, and it was rejected. Then the gentleman from Alameda came forward with a proposition which contained a provision for a system of keeping accounts, and other things, which I thought good, but contained these words: "just and reasonable." I told him if he would strike out those words I would support his proposition. I supposed they were stricken out all the way through, and on the strength of that supposition I voted for the proposition. Merely hearing it read at the desk, I did not know these words were still in there.

MR. CAMPBELL. The gentleman stood here and read that amendment over and over. I struck out the word in one place at the request of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. West. Nothing else was stricken out, nor did I propose to do so.

MR. BARBOUR. Did you not promise to strike out the words?

MR. CAMPBELL. No, sir. I struck out the word "unreasonable" in one place at the request of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. West. In regard to that part where it says it shall be prima facie evidence that they are just and reasonable, I never did say I would strike them out, neither in the presence of the gentleman or anybody else.

MR. BARBOUR. Then I will show that while the gentleman is complying in the letter he is not in the spirit.

MR. HOWARD. If the gentleman will allow me. There was no one, as far as I know, impeaching the good faith of the gentleman from Alameda. I was looking at the penalties and sanctions, and did not consider the words prima facie which were there. It was my fault, not his. I know he has acted throughout in the utmost good faith. The reason I objected to it was that it would leave it to the Court to determine what is reasonable, precisely as was done in England. I object to it because it throws it back upon the Courts.

MR. BARBOUR (continuing). I do not say that the gentleman intentionally violated his promise at all. I say this, that to leave it in the latter part, and strike it out in the first part does no good, for the section must be construed together—it must be construed as a whole. It amounts to just this: that if the rates established by these Commissioners are to be taken as prima facie just and reasonable, you might just as well say in the first part of the section that the Commissioners shall have power to establish just and reasonable rates. It would be a fallacy to say that the section taken as a whole would be construed otherwise. If these rates are to be deemed prima facie just and reasonable, it is the plain construction that just and reasonable rates are all the kinds of rates that the Commissioners can establish.

Now, sir, I have noticed a very remarkable and amusing circumstance in the debate which has just taken place in this Convention. In the earlier days of this discussion we were told that this Commission was an extraordinary body; that nothing like it was ever seen or heard tell of; that it was a triple-headed, autocratic despotism, binding all interests. For more than a week that kind of argument was hurled at us. It was the same old song about this most remarkable despotism on earth. But the cry failed. The plain, common sense men in this Convention could not be convinced that a set of their fellow citizens, taken up from among themselves, elected by themselves, made responsible to themselves, responsible by that great final appeal, the tribunal of public opinion; responsible on their very lives, almost, could ever obtain a character such as that; and that cry was abandoned, and another spectacle presented. Then we were told that the Commission could do nothing; that it was a nonentity. In the meantime, what was the style of argument? Gentlemen had before told us that we were undermining and destroying the foundations of the American system of government; that we were going too far, and all that sort of thing; and again, some have told us that we were not doing enough; that we are not conferring power enough to make the thing effective at all, and that more must be done. And as they were afraid the friends of the proposed measure would not be equal to the task, they were disposed to help us out by offering amendments. Now, the committee had been laboring over this thing, and we finally thought we had reached something that would be effectual in the interests of the people of this State, if they would only look to their own interests in the selection of these Commissioners. We thought we had something that would be good. But amendments which sounded well to our ears in the hurry of debate were slipped through, and when we came to look at them, by the light of day, we found they had run their knives into the bowels of the concern, and were trying to reach the vitals. One gentleman had the monstrous audacity to propose here in this Convention to put the whole thing right back in the Legislature, and confer upon the Legislature power and authority, by simple resolution, to do as they think proper. The next thing in point was this amendment now under consideration, to declare that the Commissioners shall have power to do what? Why, to bring railroad directors and employés up to some bar of judgment and compel them to show wherein these rates are not just and reasonable, which means simply this: that they are to fix upon a tariff of freights and fares, which will be mere suggestions to the railroad companies. These rates are nothing but suggestions to the railroad companies by the Commissioners, and that is all you can make out of it. That is a prima facie case. Why, these gentlemen, sworn to find a certain state of facts; obligated as officers to do so; selected by the people on account of their presumed capacity to do so; to make investigations into various matters; to make and publish to the world their findings of fact, and all this, they tell us, is to be prima facie. What is prima facie? Why, it is merely good until something else is shown; that is all it amounts to. Prima facie, we are entitled to sit here for one hundred days. Somebody may show that we are not. Prima facie, the appropriation is for one purpose; somebody may show to the contrary. So with regard to all classes of presumptions which are known to the law—prima facie good only until a breath blows the presumption away. An affidavit or evidence will rebut a presumption. How will it work, sir? On the road that runs from here to San Francisco, a certain rate is established. Suppose that is not a reasonable rate, not a just rate. No man who is interested in a railroad company would pretend for a moment that it was reasonable. It is attacked as unreasonable. Who makes the case? Why, suppose the railroad company makes the very first passenger, or the very first pound of freight over the road, pay in excess of the established rate. The case is taken into Court, and the company obtains a judgment against this prima facie case, showing that the rates are not reasonable. What becomes then of all the work of your Commission? What becomes then of the schedule of freights and fares which they have established? Knocked to smithereens by the judgment of one Court and one trial. Suppose it is taken to the Supreme Court, and the judgment of the Court below that the rates established by the Commissioners are not reasonable, is affirmed, then that becomes the law of the case, as far as freight and passengers are concerned, over that road. I say this thing should be sent back to the committee to be straightened out, so that we may have something tangible, something useful, and something powerful. Better have no Commission at all, than to have one without any power.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. I move the previous question. We have had talk enough.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: When there are personal allusions made to members on the floor it is customary to allow the member alluded to to address the Convention in reply.

MR. SMITH. I withdraw the motion for the previous question.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: The gentleman from Alameda has alluded to the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. He says that he understood that I consented to the amendment which he proposed to the Committee of the Whole. I wish to appeal to the gentlemen of this Convention to bear me out if I did not say to him, yesterday, that the substance of his amendment was good, that is, his original amendment; that is, the power to send for and examine persons and papers, and to examine the books, but that the same thing was embodied in the report of the committee. Now, so far as my actions are concerned, I am willing to allow the Convention and the people to be the judge. I am not prepared to say that everything the Committee on Corporations does is right; I do not say that everything I do is right; but gentlemen should stand up and vote, not upon the character of the committee recommending it, but upon the merit or demerit of the measure itself. The provision itself is not rendered worthless because I am not worthy of his consideration.

MR. CAMPBELL. I haven't said anything of the kind. I always entertained a high respect for the gentleman. I said I understood you to say you were not opposed to my amendment; I understood you to say that it embodied what you thought good; that is, the previous amendment which I had prepared, and which has not been introduced. As far as the other amendment is concerned, I understood the gentleman not to dissent from it, but rather as being favorable to it. I may have misunderstood him, but that was my understanding.

MR. ESTEE. As far as I am concerned, while I have a great desire to maintain the confidence and respect of every gentleman on this floor, and of every good citizen in this State, and of the people generally, yet I propose to act as my judgment dictates upon all matters brought before me, and if it does not meet the views of other gentlemen, I am sorry for it. If other gentlemen present amendments and propositions which have merit, they should be adopted.

As far as talking upon the one side and then upon the other, blowing hot and blowing cold, I challenge the history of the debates upon this floor, and the records of the Committee on Corporations, if the committee have not uniformly stood by its report, until it was shown by overwhelming argument that something better had been presented. Now, Mr. Chairman, let these motions be passed or rejected, according to their merits. I confess, sir, that the report of the committee has necessarily taken up much time. Of course, our committee has been subjected to criticism, both here and elsewhere over the State. I confess that some of these criticisms are probably merited. We are only human. But so far as the action of the committee and its members are concerned, I challenge the truth of history that we tried to do right; but we may have been wrong. But that does not destroy the merits of our report as an entirety. If there is anything of good in the report, vote for it. If there is anything wrong in it, cut it out. I have heard a great deal about the report of the Committee on Corporations. I do not challenge the right of gentlemen on this floor to oppose it if they deem it wrong. I have not impugned the motives of the gentleman from Alameda. I have no doubt he has acted honestly and conscientiously in the matter. I have no reason to impugn the motives of any of the gentlemen who have argued upon the other side. But the committee, and its Chairman, have, day after day, and hour after hour, been the subject of criticism. The report has been attacked on all sides. Now, I say, if there are good principles embodied in that report, they deserve candid consideration. If there is anything wrong, it ought to be eliminated, and the committee has stood willing and ready at all times to modify the report when it was shown that the provisions were not right. Now, sir, I would not have said this much; I would not have spoken thus earnestly upon this subject, had it not been thrown up to us day after day, and week after week, that the Committee on Corporations was doing this thing and that thing; that we had taken up the time of this Convention uselessly; that we were proposing to take up still more time, and all that sort of thing. Gentlemen of the Convention, if this subject is not worthy of the time given to it, then it ought to be followed to its grave. This is a grave and important question. It is of such grave importance as to demand all the time that is necessary for its careful consideration, and I consider the time well spent.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. Chairman: I now move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded by Messrs. White, Stedman, Wyatt, and Evey.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

The motion prevailed.

THE PRESIDENT. The first question is on the resolution of the gentlemen from Placer, Mr. Filcher, as an amendment to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal be instructed to further amend section twenty, adopted by the Committee of the Whole, by striking out the words "prima facie," as they occur near the last of the section, and inserting instead thereof the word "conclusively."

MR. MCCALLUM. I ask that the other resolution be read.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations be further instructed to so amend section twenty as to strike out so much thereof as provides that the charges fixed by the Commissioners shall be only prima facie evidence of the correctness of such charges.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher.

It was adopted.

MR. WATERS. Mr. President: I wish to offer a resolution.

THE PRESIDENT. It is not in order under the previous question. The question is on the resolution of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum, as amended.

Adopted.

MR. WATERS. I now offer my resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, Instruct Committee on Corporations to provide that the rates fixed shall not be conclusive against the people, but prima facie only as against the people.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

MR. WATERS. Mr. President: I want to know whether this Convention intends to turn over the people of this State, with their hands bound, to this Board of three Railroad Commissioners. On that resolution I demand the ayes and noes, if I can get a second.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: This thing is in that condition now where the Committee on Corporations should have unlimited power. We cannot undertake to instruct them by piecemeal. Why not give them power to further revise it, and make an additional report? We are all satisfied that in the heat and hurry of debate, mistakes have been made. I voted for the Campbell amendment, but I am satisfied now that the committee erred. The section, as it now stands, says, in other words, that in every controversy that arises, every dispute, they may find thus and so. But in any action, civil or criminal, the rate of freights and fares established by the Commissioners shall be considered prima facie reasonable and just. That is, the presumption is that they are reasonable and just. But that presumption may be controverted at any time before a jury, and the question as to whether the corporations are to obey the mandates of the Commissioners must be adjudicated.

I believe, sir, that it is the sentiment of this Convention that there shall be a Railroad Commission. That has been decided. That a Railroad Commission should be elected by the people; that is decided. Now, what powers shall they have, and how shall they be enforced? are the questions that remain. I had a proposition which I thought would cover the case, but I did not offer it to the Convention because there were so many that had propositions. I accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, upon the recommendation of General Howard, without criticising them as I ought to have done. But, as I stated before, it is impossible to frame a Constitution in a Committee of the Whole. We cannot always know what we are voting for. It is impossible. Things which we voted for one day we may regret the next. I am satisfied that this provision is wrong, and that it would destroy the usefulness of the Commission. It would defeat the very purpose we have had in view in creating this Commission. If that is to be the purpose, let it be understood; if not, let it be proclaimed by the vote here. I hope we shall arrive at some point where the precise will of the majority can be ascertained. And when we have once ascertained it, let us stick to it. I offer the following amendment, to be added to the instructions already given: "For general revision and further report."

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. President: I think the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco entirely uncalled for. The first instruction given to the committee says that it shall generally harmonize section twenty, in accordance with the views of the Committee of the Whole, and that it is substantially what is contained in the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I am opposed to the amendment offered by my friend from San Francisco, because I do not want the whole subject brought back for another three weeks debate. I would like to see this thing closed at some time during the present century.

MR. HAGER. My proposition is to stop these special instructions by giving the committee general powers.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I do not want the committee to have general powers. As to the fact that the gentleman voted for Judge Campbell's amendment on my recommendation, I shall certainly demur to that. I think he informed us here that he had been seven years on the bench, and he ought to be able to judge for himself.

MR. HAGER. I do not wish to misrepresent the gentleman. I understood him to say that he thought the addition of a portion of Judge Campbell's amendment would be satisfactory.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. So I did think. What I object to, is for a judicial officer in this Convention to throw the responsibility of his mistakes on me. I do not cast any censure upon the gentleman from Alameda. If I did not notice the objectionable clause, that was my fault and not his. Now, while I am in favor of holding to the penalties of the gentleman from Alameda, I am in favor of striking out the words prima facie. As to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, I am utterly opposed to it, because it would be a burning disgrace if we would not extend the same justice to the railroad companies that we extend to anybody else. In my opinion, it would be simply monstrous. Let us do justice to both sides. That is what I am trying to do. I do not want to say to the railroad companies, when they come into Court, you shall not have equal justice with the people. Let both parties stand equal before the law, and let them be dealt with impartially.

SPEECH OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. President: My position to-day seems to be in conflict with my position yesterday, and I think I have a right to explain my position. I was in favor of the Campbell amendment, with a mental reservation in one particular, and that particular is in regard to the words prima facie, which has already been discussed here to-day. It appeared to me though, when I first saw that provision, that it would be a good thing to place that matter in the Courts; but after more mature consideration it seems to me better to leave it as the committee has left it. Now, there was one objection to that, it seems to me. The Commissioners had power to fix and establish rates of freights and fares. The schedule they should prepare and establish would be the law of the land—the highest law of the land. No one could dispute it—no one ought to dispute it. Now, there has been a great deal said about what would be reasonable. Their power, great as it is, would be restricted to what would be reasonable. I do not believe there is a lawyer on this floor, however distinguished in his profession, who will say that the railroad company, or any other company, have any right to charge anything more than reasonable rates.

Then again, the people would not have the right to exact anything more than reasonable rates; and if this constitutional provision be to allow these Commissioners to establish rates that will be unreasonable rates—I mean by that, taking away any reasonable and just profits, it would be in conflict with the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken without just compensation. Now, suppose the Railroad Commissioners establish rates that would be an extortion upon the railroad companies—take their private property without just compensation—that is, take their reasonable earnings, personal earnings, then the law will step in—the higher law of compensation—and say that the schedule has no effect whatever. In that respect the railroad company would have a protection. They could go into the Courts and say, it is taking our private property, and the schedule would be declared null and void, and there would be no schedule. But where are the people to be protected? Suppose the Commissioners should fix the rates too high. Then the principle provided for in the amendment of Mr. Waters, or something like it, would be necessary; and that is all the objections I have to the report of the committee—that there is no protection on the side of the people in case these Commissioners, belonging to the railroad company, should establish the rate of freights and fares too high. Now, there may be objections to both these matters—that there is supposed to be too much latitude. I think this prima facie will give still more latitude. But I want it brought down strictly to the point, that while these Commissioners should have full power, yet, having that full power, let the people be protected as well as the railroad companies. Therefore, I shall favor the report of the committee, with some such reservation as that introduced by Mr. Waters.

Now, I have no sympathy with these alarmists. The tendency of all these things is to divide the friends of anti-railroad measures. I am inclined to point to the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, as an alarmist here. This is the second time he has done it.

MR. CROSS. I won't do it any more. [Laughter.]

MR. SMITH. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, I think has shown by his endeavors here that he is a friend to anti-railroad measures.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I rise to a point of order.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Digitized by Google

MR. TINNIN. The gentleman has no right to discuss the characters of the members of this body.

THE PRESIDENT. The point is well taken.

MR. SMITH. I was merely calling attention to these matters, to show that it has a tendency to delay business. I think it is a matter that has been noticed in this Convention, and if we were to call attention to it oftener we would get along with our business much better. Now, I voted yesterday for the Campbell amendment, because I thought there was a great deal of good in it. I voted in favor of taking out these words, because I think they ought not to be in there.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. I am certainly opposed to the very remarkable proposition offered by Senator Hager, to give this committee full power to revise the work submitted to them by these resolutions. I would be willing to give them power to so revise sections twenty and twenty-one as to correspond with the ideas of this Convention. No general power should be conferred upon the committee in any manner to alter or change the substance of the section. I hope this Convention will vote down the proposition to give them any further power.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Howard, West, Evey, and White.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE PRESIDENT. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, to the resolution offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters.

Lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The next question is upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters.

Lost.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. NOEL. I move we now adjourn.

Carried.

And at four o'clock and forty-five minutes P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M.

REPORT FROM THE COMMITTEE ON CORPORATIONS OTHER THAN MUNICIPAL.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I wish to make a report from the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

THE SECRETARY read:

SACRAMENTO, December 7th, 1878.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, respectfully report back to the Convention section twenty of their report, amended in accordance with the instructions of the Convention.

And also recommend that section twenty-one be stricken out.

M. M. ESTEE,
V. E. HOWARD,
CLITUS BARBOUR,
WM. F. WHITE,
JOHN P. WEST,
J. V. WEBSTER,
GEO. STEELE,
JNO. M. RHODES,

SECTION 20. The State shall be divided into three districts, as nearly equal in population as practicable, in each of which one Railroad Commissioner shall be elected, by the qualified electors of their respective districts, at the regular gubernatorial elections, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. Said Commissioners shall be qualified electors of this State, and of the district from which they are elected, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same, from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts; to hear and determine complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, take testimony, and punish for contempt of their orders and processes in the same manner, and to the same extent, as Courts of record, and enforce their decisions, and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts. Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts to be kept by all such corporations and companies, and they shall keep their accounts according to such system. Any railroad corporation or transportation company which shall fail or refuse to conform to such rates as shall be established by such Commissioners, or shall charge rates in excess thereof, or shall fail to keep their accounts in accordance with the system prescribed by the Commission, shall be fined not exceeding twenty thousand dollars for each offense, and every officer, agent, or employé of any such corporation or company who shall demand or receive rates in excess thereof, or who shall in any manner violate the provisions of this section, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the County Jail not exceeding one year. In all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of fares and freights established by said Commission shall be deemed conclusively just and reasonable; and in any action against such corporation or company, for damage sustained by charging excessive rates, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damage, may, in the discretion of the Judge or jury, recover exemplary damages. Said Commissioners shall report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. The Legislature may, in addition to the penalties herein prescribed, enforce this article by forfeiture of charters, or otherwise, and may confer such further powers on the Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in this and the following sections. The Legislature shall have power, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each house, to remove any one or more of said Commissioners from office for dereliction of duty, or corruption, or incompetency; and whenever, from any cause, a vacancy in office shall occur in said Commission, the Governor shall fill the same by the appointment of a qualified person thereto, who shall hold office for the residue of the unexpired term, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the report be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

THE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection it will be so referred. The Chair hears no objection.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. If I understood the amendment yesterday the Commissioners were to be nominated by districts but voted for by the whole electors of the State at large. I certainly shall not vote to have them elected by districts, and I did not intend to do so.

MR. ESTEE. I ask to have the instructions on that part read over.

"By Mr. Tinnin:

"Resolved, That further instructions to Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, as follows: That section twenty be amended so as to provide for the election of three railroad Commissioners by districts, at the same time, and making their term of office four years."

MR. ESTEE. Those are the instructions under which we acted.

MR. SHAFTER. I would inquire whether there is any part of the report that goes beyond the instructions given the committee by the Convention. I understand there is something done in the report that was not included in the instructions. I would inquire of the Chairman of the committee whether that is the fact.

THE PRESIDENT. The report has been referred to the Committee of the Whole.

MR. ESTEE. When we go into Committee of the Whole I will answer the gentleman.

MR. SHAFTER. My inquiry is as to whether they have exceeded their instructions.

THE PRESIDENT. The report is not now before the Convention.

MR. SHAFTER. I understood it had been read.

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir, and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

MR. SHAFTER. I move to recall it.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: There are words in that section which are not contained in the instructions to the committee, but the committee have endeavored to carry out the idea of the Convention according to the best of our ability.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. I wish to call attention of the Chairman of the committee to two matters that they have introduced which are not germane—which have no relation whatever to the instructions given to the committee. The instruction was to strike out a certain phrase and insert a certain word. Now, the committee have modified the report very materially in these two particulars. They have added the word "determine," and have added a clause which gives the Legislature power to provide for a forfeiture of charter.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I will state to the gentleman that we did not add that clause, it was in the original. As far as hearing and determining complaints is concerned, the resolution introduced by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, prescribed that these Commissioners should have the power to punish for contempt. Now, a majority of the committee held that if they punished for contempt, they had to punish for contempt of something, and unless the Commissioners could determine something of course there would be no contempt of its orders, So the committee reported back the words, "hear and determine." That was not in the original section. It was merely to hear complaints. I have not the section here now, but I will ask the Secretary to read it as it stood before being referred.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the general election, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be six years; provided, that the three Commissioners elected at the first election of all so classify themselves, by lot, that one of them shall go out of office at the end of two years, one at the end of four years, and one at the end of six years; so that after the first election one Commissioner shall be elected at the general election every two years, and shall hold office for the term of six years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies; and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts; to hear complaints against railroads and other transportation companies; to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, and report cases of contempt to the Courts for their action, and enforce their decisions, and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law; to report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies; provided, the Legislature shall have power to remove any one or more of said Commissioners from office for dereliction of duty, corruption, or incompetency therein; and whenever, from any cause, a vacancy of office shall occur in said Commission, the Governor shall fill the same by appointing a qualified person thereto, who shall hold office for the residue of the unexpired term, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified. Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts to be kept by all of such corporations and companies, and they shall keep their accounts according to that system. Any railroad corporation or transportation company which shall fail or refuse to conform to such rates as shall be established by said Commissioners, or shall charge rates in excess thereof, or shall fail to make their accounts correspond with the system prescribed by the Commission, shall be fined not exceeding twenty thousand dollars for each offense, and any officer, agent, or employé of any such corporation or company who shall demand or receive rates in excess thereof, or who shall in any manner violate the provisions of this section, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the County Jail not exceeding one year. In all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of fares and freights established by said Commissioners shall be deemed prima facie just and reasonable. In any action against any such corporation or company, for damages sustained by charging excessive rates, the plaintiff, in addition to actual damage, may, in the discretion of the Judge or jury, recover exemplary damages. The Legislature may, in addition to any penalties herein prescribed, enforce this article by forfeiture or otherwise, and may confer such further powers on the Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined upon them in this and the foregoing sections.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I rise to a point of order.

THE PRESIDENT. State your point of order.

MR. BARBOUR. My point of order is that the subject-matter is not before the Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already so decided, but I supposed the gentleman contemplated making a motion.

MR. SHAFTER. I thought I had made a motion. I move that the vote by which the report was referred to the Committee of the Whole be reconsidered, so as to enable us to find out whether the Committee on Corporations, when it is instructed to do a specific thing by the Convention, has a right to disregard the mandate.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move the Convention do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering this question.

THE PRESIDENT. There is a motion pending to reconsider the vote by which this report was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

MR. TINNIN. I move to lay that motion on the table, Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Trinity to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Carried.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: I call for the ayes and noes on the motion to table.

MR. STEDMAN. I rise to a point of order.

THE PRESIDENT. State your point of order.

MR. STEDMAN. It is that a motion to reconsider requires one day's notice to be given, and therefore this motion of the gentleman from Marin is out of order.

THE PRESIDENT. That is so; the point of order is sustained.

MR. SHAFTER. I move to take the report from the Committee of the Whole.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. President: Is that motion debatable? If it is, I have a word to say.

MR. TINNIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. It is not in order. The gentleman from Los Angeles has the floor.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. President: The statement that the Committee on Corporations has exceeded its powers is a false clamor, without any foundation in fact. The amendment of the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, provides that if the railroad companies disobey the orders of the Commissioners, they shall be punished for contempt, the same as they would be punished by a Court of record. Now, sir, I submit to this Convention, and to the common sense of anybody, that you cannot punish for contempt in any Court unless that Court has made some decision, or some order. To say that you can is absurd. I supposed that this thing was settled long ago. It has power to hear and determine, and unless it can hear and determine it has no jurisdiction. It has already been decided by the Supreme Court. How are you to punish for contempt, unless there is some order, some decision of the Commission is made and violated. Therefore, I say that putting in the word "determine" is in strict compliance with the instructions of this Convention, and not to have done so would have been to disobey the orders of this Convention. Again, it is true that the decisions of this Commission, unless some power is reserved, are final. That can not be disputed. Their decision is not subject to review by any Court. It is as conclusive and final as the decision of any Court in the country.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I rise to a point of order. I understood the motion of the gentleman from Marin to be to rescind the vote by which it was sent to the Committee of the Whole.

MR. HOWARD. So it was, and I am giving reasons why the motion should not prevail.

The PRESIDENT. The motion was to recall the report from the Committee of the Whole, and bring it before the Convention for consideration.

MR. REYNOLDS. I rise to a point of order.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman will state his point of order.

MR. REYNOLDS. This Convention has already sent that report to the Committee of the Whole. It cannot be recalled without rescinding the vote, and that cannot be done without reconsidering the vote by which it was sent there. Now, it has been ruled by the Chair, that it requires one day's notice, under the rule; therefore, it is impossible to reach the subject at all until the vote is reconsidered in due form.

THE PRESIDENT. The point of order is not well taken. The Convention can, at any time, recall a report from the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Los Angeles will proceed.

MR. HOWARD. I simply wish to say that there are three or four gentlemen in this Convention who I hope will never die, because parliamentary law will die with them. [Laughter.] I hope, therefore, they will do us the personal kindness at least to postpone their taking off until the final adjournment of this Convention. [Laughter.] Now, according to the decision of the Supreme Court of California, the decisions arrived at by these Commissioners are final and conclusive, unless some method of review is provided for. This Convention believed that this power of review should not be given; hence it was wisely decided that these words, "prima facie," should go out. I think some power should be left to the Commissioners. Now, sir, this is no nonentity; it is a real thing; it is to be a tribunal of some power. The Parliament of England understood it when they created their Commission on Highways and Canals, in eighteen hundred and seventy-three. The fifteenth section of that Act says: "The Commission shall have power to hear and determine." They know law enough to see that the power to hear without the power to determine, is a mere delusion. It amounts to nothing.

Now, I say we have simply obeyed the instructions of this Convention when we added the word "determine," and if we had not added the words, no sensible man can doubt that when the section came to be construed, it would be construed that the Commission has no jurisdiction. It is the friends of the railroads, the enemies of reform, who are raising these objections.

As to the grammar of the section, we have taken the suggestions of the gentleman from Sacramento, who, I understand, was once a teacher of boys back in Vermont. We have taken a lesson by his criticism, and corrected the grammar. As to the want of power and legal sanctions, the committee have adopted the suggestion of the gentleman from Marin. He said the Commissioners had no power, and if they made a request of the companies they would refuse to comply. We concluded that his criticism was good, and we corrected it to meet his ideas. We put in penalties, in connection with the power to punish for contempt, which will enable the Commission to fine and imprison if they are set at defiance by the officers of the railroad companies. Whenever it has been found faulty, and we thought the suggestions and criticisms of these gentlemen were well founded, we adopted them and corrected the section; and it does not become these gentlemen, after their suggestions have been adopted, to go back and say it is all wrong. It does not lay in their mouths. The gentleman from Marin ought not to go back on himself so soon.

Again, sir, we have adopted all the amendments (and they were able) of the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, except that we have stricken out the words "prima facie," because we thought that the retention of these words would destroy the force of the section, and render the Commission useless. Now, if they are to be in, let them go a little farther, and determine, so as to make this thing effective. The gentleman from Marin said we had been discussing this matter for three or four weeks; that we do one thing one day and undo it the next, and so on. That we do not stand up to what we have done. Well, haven't we been listening to him for the last three weeks, pointing out objectionable things, and suggesting how they should be corrected? And having corrected what he considered mistakes, I do not think he is in a condition to refuse us his support.

I submit to the Convention that the Committee on Corporations have not gone one iota beyond the instructions. If they had failed to insert the word "determine," they would have failed to comply with the spirit of the instructions of this body.

I believe, if I understood him correctly, the gentleman from Sacramento raised another objection: that the report contains a provision for the forfeiture of charters. But the amended section contained that. The word "charter" was not mentioned, but it is immaterial whether you call it a charter or franchise, so far as the purpose of this section is concerned, it is the same thing. Now, I do not care how long this thing is discussed. I like to hear the distinguished gentleman from Marin, though he talks to us about every other day; I do not begrudge the time, as time is not an element in the contract here. The thing is to get right, and having taken counsel from both the friends and the enemies of this report, having made this report, I hope the Convention will stand by it unanimously, at least so far as the friends of reform are concerned.

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: I do not suppose I was the one alluded to as the Vermont grammarian, but I have taught school in Vermont, and I must say that I never had as dull a class as this Committee on Corporations. [Laughter.] I used to take a long ferule and make an application, and that might have a salutary effect upon this committee. I think they would have come out nearer right at the end of sixty days. I think the gentleman from Los Angeles has no room to complain of long and numerous speeches, for he has been once or twice a day, for the past forty days, trying to beat some sense into this committee.

MR. LARUE. Is the gentleman in favor of corporeal punishment being put into the Constitution?

MR. SHAFTER. Yes, sir, I am. [Laughter.]

MR. CROSS. We object to having ideas beaten in at that end. [Laughter.]

MR. SHAFTER. God forbid that I should be guilty of such inhumanity, for in the case of the Committee on Corporations it might cause a concussion of the brain. [Laughter and applause.] Now, the Chairman of the committee has admitted that he has inserted matter into this report that was not called for in the resolution of instructions. My point is, that the committee has no right to put anything in that report which was not called for by the Convention, right or wrong. The committee had no right to thrust that word "determine" in there, and I shall not vote for it. The gentleman from Los Angeles has entirely perverted the doctrine of the case. I want the Convention to pass upon it here, and say whether the committee have a right to thrust it upon us contrary to the expressed wishes of the Convention. I wish to teach this committee to obey the orders of their superiors.

MR. LINDOW. I rise to move the previous question.

MR. LARKIN. I second the motion.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to bring the report back from the committee.

Lost.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the supplemental report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. LARKIN. I move the previous question on section twenty and section twenty-one.

Seconded by Messrs. Stedman, Evey, and Caples.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

The committee divided, and the motion for the previous question prevailed, by a vote of 65 ayes to 35 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the adoption of the substitute for sections twenty and twenty-one, reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 20. The State shall be divided into three districts, as nearly equal in population as practicable, in each of which one Railroad Commissioner shall be elected, by the qualified electors of their respective districts, at the regular gubernatorial elections, whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. Said Commissioners shall be qualified electors of this State, and of the district from which they are elected, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies, and for this purpose they shall have process of the Courts; to hear and determine complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, take testimony, and punish for contempt of their orders and processes in the same manner, and to the same extent, as Courts of record, and enforce their decisions, and correct abuses through the medium of the Courts. Said Commissioners shall prescribe a uniform system of accounts to be kept by all such corporations and companies, and they shall keep their accounts according to such system. Any railroad corporation or transportation company which shall fail or refuse to conform to such rates as shall be established by such Commissioners, or shall charge rates in excess thereof, or shall fail to keep their accounts in accordance with the system prescribed by the Commission, shall be fined not exceeding twenty thousand dollars for each offense, and every officer, agent, or employé of any such corporation or company who shall demand or receive rates in excess thereof, or who shall in any manner violate the provisions of this section, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or imprisonment in the County Jail not exceeding one year. In all controversies, civil or criminal, the rates of fares and freights established by said Commission shall be deemed conclusively just and reasonable; and in any action against such corporation or company, for damage sustained by charging excessive rates, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damage, may, in the discretion of the Judge or jury, recover exemplary damages. Said Commissioners shall report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. The Legislature may, in addition to the penalties herein prescribed, enforce this article by forfeiture of charters or otherwise, and may confer such further powers on the Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in this and the following sections. The Legislature shall have power, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each house, to remove any one or more of said Commissioners from office for dereliction of duty, or corruption, or incompetency; and whenever, from any cause, a vacancy in office shall occur in said Commission, the Governor shall fill the same by the appointment of a qualified person thereto, who shall hold office for the residue of the unexpired term, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified.

The section was adopted.

NOTICE OF RECONSIDERATION.

MR. REYNOLDS. I give notice that I will, on Monday, move a reconsideration of the vote by which the substitute was adopted.

DISTRICTING THE STATE.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 22. Until the Legislature shall district the State, the following shall be the railroad districts: The First District shall be composed of the Counties of Alpine, Amador, Butte, Calaveras, Colusa, Del Norte, El Dorado, Humboldt, Lake, Lassen, Mendocino, Modoc, Napa, Nevada, Placer, Plumas, Sacramento, Shasta, Sierra, Siskiyou, Solano, Sonoma, Sutter, Tehama, Trinity, Yolo, and Yuba, from which one Railroad Commissioner shall be elected. The Second District shall be composed of the Counties of Marin, San Francisco, and San Mateo, from which one Railroad Commissioner shall be elected. The Third District shall be composed of the Counties of Alameda, Contra Costa, Fresno, Inyo, Kern, Los Angeles, Mariposa, Merced, Mono, Monterey, San Benito, San Bernardino, San Diego, San Joaquin, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, Stanislaus, Tulare, Tuolumne, and Ventura, from which one Railroad Commissioner shall be elected.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no amendments, the Secretary will read section twenty-four.

Digitized by Google

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 24. The Legislature shall pass all laws necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this article.

If there are no amendments, the Secretary will read section twelve, temporarily passed.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I gave notice some time ago that, after we had completed this article, I would propose a new section.

THE CHAIRMAN. Sections twelve and thirteen are before the Committee. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 12. The Legislature shall provide by law that in all elections for Directors or managers of incorporated companies, every stockholder shall have the right to vote, in person or by proxy, for the number of shares of stock owned by him, for as many persons as there are Directors or managers to be elected, or to cumulate said shares and give one candidate as many votes as the number of Directors multiplied by the number of his shares of stock shall equal, or to distribute them, on the same principle, among as many candidates as he shall think fit; and such Directors or managers shall not be elected in any other manner.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: The committee, on November nineteenth, reported the following amendment to section twelve: Add to the section, "Except that members of coöperative societies, formed for agricultural, mercantile, and manufacturing purposes, may vote on all questions affecting such societies in the manner prescribed by law."

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: As far as the section now before the Committee of the Whole and the amendment are concerned, I will merely express the opinion which suggests itself to me, that the whole thing is unnecessary, because it is improper, to say the least. It says the Legislature shall provide by law so and so, and then goes on to state what kind of a law the Legislature shall pass. Why make it their duty to pass that law, when the law itself is inserted here in the Constitution. I do not consider it necessary to have it in the Constitution. Let the Legislature do it. The Legislature, in my opinion, will have the power if we strike out this section. If we are going to put the law in the Constitution, why say anything to the Legislature. If we are going to have the Legislature do it, let us leave it to legislative discretion. If we are going to direct right here what shall be done, why say that the Legislature shall do it. Now, I am opposed to this section because it is code legislation. I started in at the beginning, and I am going to carry it through to the end, to oppose everything in the shape of code legislation in the Constitution. And I may as well say right here, that I am opposed to all such things as imposing pains and penalties in the Constitution, or fines in the Constitution. We may find that a uniform rule will not work, and consequently these constitutional pains and penalties will not work.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. SCHELL.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I believe I have the honor of belonging to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, but I did not have the pleasure of being present when the committee passed upon that amendment and agreed to it. For one, I do not understand the meaning of the word "coöperative societies," and I would like to have the Chairman of the committee explain it, or I shall be compelled to vote against it. If the word "coöperative" has any special meaning, I would like to know what it is. I do not wish to vote in the dark.

REMARKS OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: The object of that amendment added to the report was to exclude from its provisions all coöperative societies which have been formed in the State, and which, under the Constitution as it now stands, supported by the decisions of the Supreme Court, that they are compelled to follow, as it is the law as laid down, that each share of stock shall be entitled to one vote. The object of this is to follow the plan, as adopted in England, governing coöperative societies, where each member of a society, without regard to the number of shares he shall hold, is simply entitled to one vote. The idea is here, that although there may be different amounts placed in the society of that kind by different stockholders, that each shall be equal in the matter of voting and in the regulation of these coöperative societies. We have a number of these societies in this State and they have operated well. The design is that individuals who have limited means may associate themselves together for the purpose of conducting business on the coöperative plan, by which each member receives a portion of the profits, according to the amount of capital he has invested, but in its government and control each is entitled to one vote, without regard to the number of shares he may hold. I don't suppose it is necessary to enter into the details of this matter. But it is necessary that we should give some encouragement to these societies, which have been of so much benefit to the laboring classes of this State. They have been a wonderful thing in England, and I think we ought to encourage them here. I don't think there can be any one serious objection to it on the part of any one, as it can work no harm, and we think will do a good deal of good.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I think this amendment offered by the committee certainly should pass. It has been found by experience throughout the State, heretofore, that these coöperative societies have worked a great deal of good. But under the Constitution as it now exists, without legislative enactment, it will be impracticable, because it will be possible for certain parties to gather up large amounts of the stock and secure control of the institutions. The Legislature, last Winter, provided for this very thing, because the Constitution did not do it. They provided that the by-laws might be made so that only one vote should be cast by one stockholder. I read from the statutes of eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, page eight hundred and eighty-three, an Act defining the business of coöperative societies:

"A coöperative business corporation is a corporation formed for the purpose of conducting any lawful business, and of dividing a portion of its profits among persons other than its stockholders. Coöperative business corporations shall be formed under and governed by division one, part four, title one, of the Civil Code of this State, and when so formed may, in their by-laws, in addition to the matters enumerated in section three hundred and three of said Code, provide:

"First—For the number of votes to which each stockholder shall be entitled; and,

"Second—The amount of profits which shall be divided among persons other than the stockholders, and the manner in which, and the persons among whom, such division shall be made."

MR. SCHELL. It says, for the purpose of conducting any lawful business; is not a banking corporation a coöperative society?

MR. BLACKMER. The amendment here says, "formed for agricultural, manufacturing, and mercantile purposes." It reads:

"SEC. 12. The Legislature shall provide by law that in all elections for directors or managers of incorporated companies, every stockholder shall have the right to vote, in person or by proxy, for the number of shares of stock owned by him, for as many persons as there are Directors or managers to be elected, or to cumulate said shares and give one candidate as many votes as the number of Directors multiplied by the number of his shares of stock shall equal, or to distribute them, on the same principle, among as many candidates as he shall think fit; and such directors or managers shall not be elected in any other manner."

Then the amendment of the Committee on Corporations comes in. It reads thus—and the gentleman will see that there is no foundation for his criticism:

Add to section twelve: "Except that members of coöperative societies formed for agricultural, mercantile, and manufacturing purposes, may vote on all questions affecting such societies, in manner prescribed by law."

Now, this is merely an effort to incorporate this same principle into the Constitution, to give these associations an opportunity of organizing for agricultural, manufacturing, and mercantile purposes. It is to provide against the possibility of any man or set of men securing control of the majority of the stock, and by that means the control of the corporation. There is no harm in it, while there is a great deal of good.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will be passed. It seems to me a very important matter that we should have coöperative capital. Now, then, the combinations of capital, under the influence of a few persons—and such is the case where each stockholder is limited and can have but one vote—are a very good thing. This has worked well in England; and there, too, each member is limited to one vote. Each member is permitted to vote under all circumstances, and is only limited as to the number of shares. Now, under the last clause this will be impossible, unless we put in this amendment. There would be no power to organize these societies unless we adopt this amendment. I hope, therefore, that the committee will pass it.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. In the Committee on Corporations, there was a proposition presented by myself, which will be found in the minority report, providing for these societies. That proposition was made so that corporations could adopt this coöperative principle. I do not remember whether the gentleman from Stanislaus was present or not, but it was understood that it should only apply to agricultural, manufacturing, and mercantile societies. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. ROLFE. I offer an amendment to section twelve.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out in the first line these words: 'The Legislature shall prescribe by law that.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: My object in offering this amendment is to prevent unnecessary legislation. Now, as I stated in the first place, I am opposed to putting such provisions as this in the Constitution. But I hope the fact of my being opposed to incorporating it in the Constitution will not prejudice gentlemen against any motion or amendment which I may offer, or reason that the amendment is not offered from the best of motives. I have no desire to thwart the will of the Convention, or to attempt to clog the provision in any way. I am disposed now to treat this section as a part of the Constitution, and my object is to put it in a better form than it now is. It is self-executing, and the superfluity of these words consists in this: that it requires the Legislature to do what we have done in the Constitution. It goes on and states that the Legislature shall provide by law just what is already provided in the section itself. If any gentleman can explain and convince me that all this is not fully provided for in this section, I will willingly withdraw the amendment. But until I am convinced that it is not a self-executing section; so long as I am not convinced that it is not full and complete, then I say I shall insist upon my amendment, because the requirement of this section merely is that the Legislature shall enact a law repeating the very words of this section. Would not that be a complete compliance with this section by the Legislature? But gentlemen may say there are further details necessary for the purpose of carrying out this section. I am not prepared to say whether any further legislation is or is not necessary. But if it should be ascertained that it will be necessary to have further legislation in order to enforce this section and put it into full execution, then the Legislature can pass such necessary enactment aside from this section. It would look inconsistent to me for this Convention to say what the rights of a stockholder in a corporation shall be by simply saying that the Legislature shall pass the following provision, and then go on and give the provision they are to pass. It is already provided for here, and what is the use of saying that the Legislature shall do it. It looks very plain to me, and I hope these words will be stricken out, unless some gentleman can show me wherein I am wrong.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe.

The committee divided, and the vote stood: ayes, 37; noes, 31.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is not a quorum voting, try it again.

The vote stood: ayes, 45; noes, 33, and the amendment was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 13. The State shall not subscribe to or be interested in the stock of, or in any manner loan its credit to, any person, company, association, or corporation.

No amendments.

MR. ESTEE. As there is no amendment to section thirteen, I move that this article, as amended, be printed and referred to the Convention.

THE CHAIRMAN. That motion will have to be made in the Convention.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer a new section, to be numbered section twenty-one; because it is germane to the subject-matter of section twenty.

THE CHAIRMAN. Send it up.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 21. No railroad company or corporation shall establish or construct any line of railroad in this State, for the transportation of passengers or freights, except street railroads in incorporated cities and villages, nor establish any terminal point thereof, nor establish nor maintain any depot, station, or other business place for receiving or discharging passengers or freights, except with the approval, to be duly certified, of said Railroad Commissioners, or a majority of them; and said Commissioners shall have power, and it shall be their duty in said matters, to exercise general supervisory control over all railroads to be operated as public highways in this State, other than said street railroads, and the Legislature shall enact laws to render such control effective.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to occupy about five minutes of the time of the committee to explain the objects of this amendment, or new section. This principle is new to our laws—I mean the laws of the State of California. It is not new in principle, however, as a law by which railroads are regulated. It is made for a purpose. It may be necessary, sir, to refer to matters of history. This proposition will be found in the printed bill of propositions, No. 451, and most of the members, I believe, have printed files on their desks. If you go back to the history of the construction of railroads in Great Britain, you will find this principle, and also in the United States, with the exception of the State of Iowa and the State of California. I believe there is no other exception. The principle upon which locations have been made for lines of railroad, has been by legislative discretion. In England there was an Act of Parliament passed, and in other European countries, by governmental edict or decree, the construction of lines of railroad was authorized and provided for. These prescribed the terminal points and the various places of business to be established and maintained by the railroad companies. In the United States it is also true that probably nineteen twentieths of all the railroads that have been constructed within the United States—now amounting to eighty thousand miles—have been constructed under special Acts of the Legislature, and charters and grants conferring upon the companies designated in the law, the right to construct and maintain a road at points designated. And this is all in pursuance of that general theory and policy of treating railroads practically as highways, as public institutions, and therefore subject to public control—the precise principle upon which section twenty has been established here. The Legislature by these means prescribes the route, the county to be gone through, fixes their terminal points, and establish generally, or hold the right to establish the places of business of these companies. This was in entire accord and harmony with the general system, the general policy pursued for the government of highways. As highways are for the public, to be established and maintained by public authority, and in their behalf, private property, for the public interest, may be taken for public use upon the payment of an adequate sum, it follows as a logical conclusion that the government has control of the whole proceeding in accordance with the system which prevails in reference to ordinary highways throughout the country. What is done then? The circumstances perhaps of others require that there shall be a highway between certain points. The needs of the community require it. They may present to the proper Board—under our laws the Board of Supervisors of the county—whose duty it is to pass upon the question whether a highway is needed between the points designated as terminal points, and also whether the petition rightly describes the alignment of the road. That being passed upon affirmatively—and, of course, it rests with the discretion of the Board as to whether a highway is there needed—then comes the question of proceeding to condemn and take private property for the public use. It all proceeds upon the basis, upon the principle, that the public need it, and that it is for a public use. And as I have remarked, the general policy of European governments, and of a majority of the States, is the equivalent of this course in respect to the railroads and their construction. The governments of Europe have treated them as highways. The States of this Union have treated them as highways. The State of California has treated them as highways. Our Courts have held them to be public highways; and because they are public highways, for the public use, private property may be taken for the purpose of constructing. The right of eminent domain is invoked for this purpose.

Now, the purpose of this new section is to bring our laws into general harmony with this theory of right. Under our law, it is provided that a given number of persons, originally nine, now five, may associate themselves together, subscribe to certain articles, make their acknowledgment to their terms before the proper officer, and declare their purpose to be to construct and maintain a railroad, which are privileges without restraint from any authority of the State. These five persons are privileged in their articles of incorporation, to fix the alignment of the road, designate the terminal points between which it is to be constructed, to survey and fix the line, and having done it, to file a map in the office of the Secretary of State, and in the county in which it is formed, and that becomes the established line of the road. Now, they are privileged to establish all places of business upon the line of the road. We all know practically that a railroad, to be operated for the transaction of the business of the country, must have a large number of places of business—usually called stations—where freights are received and discharged, and where passengers are received and discharged; where, in fact, the main business of the corporation is to be done. Now, in accordance with the policy of the law elsewhere—both in Europe and America—unless, perhaps, you may except the State of Iowa, and I am not at all certain about that—but in the other States it is true—that this question of determining the alignments of the road, fixing its terminal points, its places of business, etc., have been regularly prescribed by governmental authority. That is, sir, it is left alone to the discretion of the company, unrestrained by any officer or any authority of government.

Now, the object of this section which I propose is to set railroad corporations in this State in harmony with this general rule, and inasmuch as they are highways, and as they invoke the power of State to take private property, it is a public use, and the public should have a voice in determining where these roads should be constructed, and where their places of business shall be maintained. Hence, sir, the terms of this article should be: "No railroad company or corporation shall establish or construct any line of railroad in this State for the transportation of passengers or freights, except street railroads in incorporated cities and villages, nor establish any terminal point thereof, nor establish nor maintain any depot, station, or other business place for receiving or discharging passengers or freights, except with the approval, to be duly certified, of said Railroad Commissioners, or a majority of them; and said Commissioners shall have power, and it shall be their duty in said matters, to exercise general supervisory control over all railroads to be operated as public highways in this State, other than said street railroads, and the Legislature shall enact laws to render such control effective."

MR. LARKIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Placer a question, if he will allow me.

MR. HALE. Certainly.

MR. LARKIN. Suppose the railroad interest of this State should secure control of this Commission; what then?

MR. HALE. They would only do exactly what they are doing now, and what they always have done—as they please. But I would say to the gentleman that the theory upon which we have approved and passed section twenty is, that the State exercises this control through this Commission. The Commissioners are elected by the people of this State, in the interest of the people of the State, as agents acting both for the people and for the railroad companies, to deal justly and to act fairly, and to adjudicate in all respects impartially between them. I apprehend that upon no other theory, or for no other purpose, could this committee have adopted section twenty; and it is upon that theory, and upon the doctrine enunciated in section twenty, that I engraft this proposition as section twenty-one, for the purpose of expressly adding to the powers already conferred upon these Commissioners.

For the want of such control as is here proposed, complaints have come up from all parts of the State. I have heard them from the North, and I have heard them from the South, and I have heard them from the center of the State. I cannot certify to the truth and to the justice of many of these complaints. I only know they are believed to be well founded. These railroads, which are highways—have been so declared by the Courts—have laid out their lines of road, fixed their terminal points, established their places of business, in numerous instances not only in disregard to the public interest, and to the interest of communities who support the road, but for the purpose often of establishing special and adverse interests. For instance, referring to a matter of history, the railroads here in this State—or the one great railroad corporation which has control of nearly all the railroads in the State—owns immense tracts of land, lying along and close to the roads. For instance, supposing a case, a railroad is being run down the San Joaquin Valley. It is a prosperous valley, because it is a great valley, inhabited by thousands of contented and happy people. They run down the valley until they come to the City of Stockton, one of the most prosperous and enterprising cities in the State. They say to these people, we will do one of two things. We have plenty of land, and we can locate our road where we please. We can have all the terminal points and all our places of business established just where we please. They come to a city and say to the citizens, come out and give us so much money, or give us such amounts of money, or such certain privileges, or we will make no station at your city; or else we will run our line of road just far enough away so that your city will go down, as has been done in more than one instance in this State. Now, sir, it needs no argument, no stretch of the imagination, to see that these things can be done at any time if this check is not put upon these railroad corporations. There is power in the State to prevent these abuses, and it would be a very wise policy on the part of this Convention to provide that this power should be exercised, to see that these lines of road are constructed only where the public convenience requires it; that their terminal points shall be selected with a view to the public interest and the public convenience, and their places of business established upon the same principles; that these Commissioners, as the agents of the people, should have the power of supervision over all the acts of these companies, and that the companies can only establish their lines of road, their terminal points, and their places of business under the direction and by the permission of these Commissioners.

MR. CAPLES. If the gentleman will allow me?

MR. HALE. Certainly.

MR. CAPLES. The gentleman, in his proposition, uses the term "public highways." I desire of the gentleman to know whether he places the same construction upon that term as the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, did in his amendment, which was offered in this Convention some time since; whether the gentleman from Placer places the same meaning upon that term that Mr. Barbour did?

MR. HALE. I do not know as I know what the gentleman is driving at. I will state, however, what meaning I attach to it. The Courts of Great Britain and Europe, and all over the world, wherever railroads have been established, in every State in this Union, including the State of California, have treated railroads as public highways of the land. They have declared them to be such in the plainest terms known to the law. Our Supreme Court has passed upon it, and it is no longer an open question. It is upon that ground, and upon that alone, that the power of the State can be invoked for the taking of private property.

MR. CAPLES. The gentleman appears not to have heard distinctly. The construction that Mr. Barbour put upon that term, when he offered his amendment, was that anybody had a right to put their cars and engines on the track and run them.

MR. HALE. Now I understand the gentleman's question; to which I simply reply that if my friend from San Francisco put that construction upon the term, I think it is entirely unwarranted by any authority that I ever heard of. In other words, the Courts have held this ——

MR. BARBOUR. If the gentleman will allow me? That is to be taken with a great deal of qualification, as the gentleman will find by reading the amendment. I never claimed any such extraordinary thing as the gentleman suggests.

MR. HALE. I desire no controversy on that point. I wish to say to the gentleman from Sacramento that the sense in which the Courts have held this term is this: not that they are highways in the same sense precisely that an ordinary highway is considered, upon which every citizen may go without restraint or condition, but that it is a highway, a roadbed, on which, though for public use, is under a reasonable control of the companies or corporations by which it is constructed, owned, and operated. The meaning of the term is, that these highways shall be open upon the same and equal conditions to all, for the conveyance of passengers and freight. Not that anybody can put cars on that road, except those who control and operate the road, but that all citizens shall have a right to its use, both for the transportation of persons and freight, under proper regulations prescribed by law. In that sense they are regarded as highways, and therefore a public use.

Now, we all know that when once those roads are established they supersede all other modes of conveyance, as far as the general mass of commerce, both freight and passengers, is concerned. We know that when once a road is established between points, or between different sections, the stage coach disappears, and all modes for the transportation of passengers or freight, other than railroads, disappear. Experience has demonstrated this, and therefore we know that when once a line of railroad is established, it becomes the exclusive highway. It is a monopoly, because it is better than anything else that can come in competition with it. The duty is all the more imperative upon the State to exercise a wise and sound and just control, because they transact all the business of the community. I think, for the reasons I have given, that this is a provision that ought to be adopted by this Convention.

SPEECH OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I shall oppose the adoption of this amendment, for the reason that I do not believe it would be proper to place the power in any set of men, or in the hands of any man, to deny the people of this State the privilege of competing with the railroad corporations. Under this provision it would be necessary to secure the consent of the Commissioners to build a local line. It may be the policy of these Commissioners to say that more lines of railroad are not necessary, and they have it in their power, at any time, to prevent the building of competing lines of road. It may become necessary for the necessities and convenience of the public to build new lines of road, and I do not want to place it in the power of the Commissioners to refuse them the privilege. So far as the supervision of railroads is concerned, the Commissioners already have full power, and I do not propose to place in their hands the power to put a veto upon the power of the citizens of this State to establish new roads in any part of the State. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I have said it here before, but there is so much force in the idea that I wish to say it now, that I look forward to the time when local railroads and canals will ultimately form a complete railroad system for the entire State.

MR. WICKES. I move the previous question.

SPEECH OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I do not propose to make any lengthy speech upon this question. Now, it is evident that we should not wish ourselves to be placed in a position where we will be compelled to take advantage of the people who sent us here to perform a certain duty. I am convinced that the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, if it should be carried, might have this effect upon our Commissioners. There is a very great responsibility, as far as actions of this kind are concerned, resting upon these Commissioners. The purpose has been that of establishing rates of freights and fares. Now, I am convinced that even in this there will be sufficient for them to do. But suppose the railroad is to be constructed, and there are different competing points which wish to secure stations. Certainly in such an event there will be a heavy pressure brought to bear upon the Railroad Commissioners. Do we not see that they would be placed in a position where they would be greatly tempted. This we wish to avoid. I am convinced that this matter has not been discussed before the people. The great and all-absorbing topic with them has been the regulation of freights and fares. If that is accomplished, it strikes me that we will have accomplished the grand purpose, and one which will meet the fullest expectations of the people in this State. And I believe if we proceed further there is danger of harm. I might continue upon this subject, and point out the rocks upon which we are liable to run, but I do not believe it is necessary. We have already accomplished a great deal—all I believe that it is wise to undertake—all I believe that the people expect or demand at our hands. Let us not try to do too much, lest we weaken that which has already been done.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: This provision is a most remarkable one. Had it not been for the eminent author, whom I know and believe to be sincere, I should be greatly inclined to look upon the provision with suspicion, and as an attempt to load down and weigh down the Constitution. This power, if placed in the hands of the Commission, can be used by them, if they choose to do so, to hinder and prevent the building of local lines of road. Not one single road could be built in this State unless by the consent of the Commissioners, which might be in the interest of the present railroads. This power should never be conferred, as the gentleman from Los Angeles, Colonel Ayers, has well said, should never be conferred upon any Commission. I do look forward to the time when every roadbed in this State, and in this nation, will be a toll road, open to every company and every individual who desires to go upon it, and when Commissioners will regulate the tolls and make the time tables. Now, this proposition will preclude the building of competing lines in this State; preclude any individual or company, unless they can clearly satisfy the Commission that the new road is for the benefit of the people. It is too much power to place in the hands of the Commission. I hope, therefore, that the Convention will vote it promptly down.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. Send up your amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

Insert after the word "freights," in the sixth line, these words: "Nor abandon or discontinue the use of any depot, station, or other business place for the receipt or discharge of passengers or freight."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I confess I am greatly surprised at the opposition manifested to this section. However, I may possibly be laboring under a delusion myself. If, however, I am not mistaken, sir, this long-standing and justly complained of evil will be remedied by this provision. Now, sir, as already stated by my colleague, Judge Hale—though I do not know precisely the details of all the facts in the matter—I have heard indirectly repeated complaints, and I have heard them so often that it has come to be almost a universal cry, that the railroad corporations, in the construction of their lines, have located them, as well as their depots, stations, and terminal points, in many instances to the detriment of the community, and of wants, as they proceeded along through the country. The case of Stockton is a case in point. That city was almost left out in the cold. Visalia and other towns along the line are cases in point also. They have located their lines, and then, under an excuse that the road was going to cost more, and, under a threat of removal, they have levied blackmail upon the citizens. Unless a certain amount of bonds were given them, they changed the line of the road, to the injury of the people. But there is still another oft recurring abuse which this amendment I have offered proposes to correct, and that is, that they shall not abandon any station once established without the consent of these Commissioners. I know of instances in my own county that a man, because he had had the temerity to oppose the encroachments of the railroad corporations upon the people, was made the victim of their malice and revenge. He owned a piece of timber land. He had hired a lot of wood cut, which was piled up along the line of the road, near a switch which had been used for that purpose for some time. He had gone to San Francisco, and made good sale of it. He returned, and ordered a car to be left at the switch to take on a load of his wood. He was then informed that the switch had been abandoned. He appealed to the company, but it was useless. He went to the President of the road, but his reply was that he could not help it.

MR. ESTEE. Will not sections nineteen and twenty remedy all such abuses?

MR. FILCHER. I do not know that they will. Finally, the man's creditors came down upon him; the men who had been working for him wanted their pay, and finally, a man known to be in the interest of these corporations—known to be making money by the favors of this corporation—came to him and offered him a certain price for the wood, stating that, as he had teams to haul it, he could not pay but so much—a losing price to the owner—who had put in his whole Summer's work. He was compelled to take it. He could not afford to haul it to another station. In less than a week cars were left at that abandoned switch, while the purchaser was the gainer by several thousand dollars. Now,

I say there is an abuse to be aimed at. This is only a single instance, but I have no doubt there are many others. We know how easy it is for the corporations, with the power that they wield, to crush out its enemies. We have seen them fall by the wayside. We have seen some exalted and others crushed in every community. We all know it by experience. There is the main evil which we wish to strike at. We are perfectly willing that these corporations should have justice—we do not wish to annihilate them; but we wish to curb this power which they have been wielding for evil, and bring them upon the same level as all other citizens before the law. We demand that they shall no longer have the power, by their enormous wealth, to crush all who may oppose them.

MR. HALE. I accept the amendment offered by my colleague from Placer.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman accepts the amendment, and the question is upon the original amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I fail to see any necessity for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale. Section nineteen, as adopted, prescribes that no discrimination in charges, or facilities for transportation, shall be made by any railroad or other transportation company between persons and places. There shall be no difference in the facilities afforded to persons for the transportation of freight or passengers. That applies, also, to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher, and accepted by Judge Hale. Section twenty gives the Commissioners power ——

MR. HALE. Allow me a question.

MR. ESTEE. Certainly, sir.

MR. HALE. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks section nineteen confers any power upon the Commissioners to require the railroad companies to fix the time of their road, or designate the stations and places of business?

MR. ESTEE. Read just what it says: "No discrimination in charges, or facilities for transportation, shall be made by any railroad or other transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State. Persons and property transported over any railroad, or by any other transportation company or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class, in the same direction, to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates."

Now, I do not think you can get any language more specific and clear than that. It says that all citizens shall be treated alike in regard to the transportation of persons or freight. Now, section twenty says they shall have power to correct abuses—all classes of abuses, included in which are the abuses cited by the gentleman from Placer. They shall have power, and it shall be their duty, says the section, to exercise a general supervision and control over railroad and other transportation companies. Now, I think they have the fullest power, under that section, to correct all that class of abuses, and my opinion is that this proposed provision will only weight the article down. I think it will injure rather than benefit us. It will tend to defeat the whole article, and I hope the friends of this measure will vote it down. I know my friend from Placer is sincere, but I have not heard a single argument to show that every abuse designed to be corrected by this new section cannot be corrected under the provisions of sections nineteen and twenty. This very section which he now proposes was before the Committee on Corporations, was repeatedly discussed, and it was concluded by the committee that the other sections were ample to meet the evils complained of. I think the great danger now is in loading down the article. It is not that it does not mean enough, but that we will have so much in it as to load it down and destroy it. I do not pretend to say that there are not possibly evils which this article will not reach. I understand that; but when we are reaching out trying to correct all the evils that exist, we are in danger of reaching too far. I hope the amendment will be voted down. I do not think there is any necessity for such a provision, in the light of what we have already done, and there may be great danger in it.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. I move the previous question.

MR. MURPHY. I second the motion.

MR. HOWARD. I second the motion.

MR. REDDY. I second the motion.

MR. HALE. I hope the gentleman will give way for a moment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The previous question has been called for. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Placer.

Lost—ayes, 21 (noes not taken).

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the article, to be known as section twenty-three.

THE CHAIRMAN. Send up your amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Every railroad corporation, or other incorporated company or association, existing under the laws of this State, or doing business thereunder at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall accept the provisions of this article in good faith before being entitled to claim or have the benefit of any future legislation thereunder."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the proposed new section. The gentleman from Santa Clara has the floor.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I think the members of this Convention all understand the provision which I have offered, and the objects for which it is offered. This provision will be found in all the recently adopted Constitutions in this country. Nearly all of them have, in substance, provisions of such a nature. It is a provision against the possible contingency which may arise in the conflict between the instrument as adopted and any supposed agreements existing between the corporations and the State. I have endeavored to make this as plain as possible, and to cover home corporations. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that members are striving in good faith to complete this article, for they seem to be more interested in their papers than they are in the consideration of this article, now before the Convention. I do submit that if this article is worthy of the serious consideration of this Convention, the section now proposed is equally as worthy of their consideration and their candid deliberation. I do not propose to weary you, but this is an important provision, and I do not want it to go by default. I ask your earnest attention to it, believing it to be absolutely necessary, in order to avoid future difficulties which may arise and conflicts which may occur before the Courts, particularly with reference to the present Constitution which we propose to submit to the people. Now, it is necessary, particularly with foreign corporations, before they receive any benefit from future legislation, that they should, in good faith, accept the provisions of this instrument. Where there are acquired rights, there may be serious difficulties which will arise, and complications which it will be exceedingly hard to adjust. The same conflicts are liable to arise between home corporations and the government. I think it does not require any extended argument to convince intelligent men of the necessity of a provision of this kind.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. REDDY. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Murphy, Swing, Dunlap, and Cross.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: Would it be in order for me to say, after the previous question has been moved, that this is a very good provision, and ought to be adopted?

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

MR. HOWARD. Then I won't say it. [Laughter.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the proposed new section proposed by the gentleman from Santa Clara.

It was adopted on a standing vote—ayes, 70; noes, 34.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the committee rise, report this article back to the Convention, with the recommendation that it be printed and placed upon the calendar, to be heard before the Convention.

MR. FILCHER. Will the gentleman suspend his motion for a moment?

MR. ESTEE. No, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have completed the same, and report the same back to the Convention, with the recommendation that the article, as amended, be printed and placed on the calendar.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that nine hundred and sixty copies be printed.

So ordered.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CITY, COUNTY, AND TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATIONS.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: I ask leave to make a report.

THE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection the gentleman will have leave to send up his report.

THE SECRETARY read:

The Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations have had under consideration the subject-matter and the various propositions referred to them, and herewith report a number of propositions, with the recommendation that they be adopted by the Convention and incorporated in the proposed Constitution, under a separate article and heading, as follows: "Article No. —. Counties, Townships, Cities, and Towns."

The propositions relating to cities having more than one hundred thousand inhabitants, being only applicable to the City and County of San Francisco, are reported by the committee for the consideration of the Convention, with the understanding that each member of the committee is free to vote for or against the same.

The committee report back the propositions referred to them, numbered as follows: Numbers seven, eight, one hundred and sixty, two hundred and sixteen, three hundred and thirteen, three hundred and fifteen, three hundred and forty-nine, three hundred and seventy-six, four hundred and eleven, four hundred and twenty-two, four hundred and twenty-nine, four hundred and thirty-four, four hundred and thirty-eight, four hundred and fifty-three, four hundred and sixty-seven, four hundred and seventy-two, four hundred and seventy-nine, four hundred and eighty-six, four hundred and eighty-seven, four hundred and ninety-five, four hundred and ninety-seven, and five hundred and five, with the recommendation that they be laid on the table.

Respectfully submitted.

JNO. S. HAGER, Chairman.

December 7, 1878.

ARTICLE —.

CITIES, COUNTIES, AND TOWNS.

SECTION 1. The several counties, as they now exist, are hereby recognized as legal subdivisions of this State.

SEC. 2. County seats shall not be removed by special law, but such removals shall be provided for by general law. No county seat shall be removed unless two thirds of the qualified electors of the county, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such removal. A proposition of removal shall not be submitted in the same county more than once in four years.

SEC. 3. No new county shall be established which shall reduce any county to a population of less than eight thousand; nor shall a new county be formed containing a less population than five thousand; nor shall any line thereof pass within five miles of the county seat of any county proposed to be divided; nor shall a county be divided, or have any portion taken therefrom, unless a majority of all the qualified electors of the county or counties affected, voting at a general election, shall vote therefor. New counties, when created, or portions of a county, when added to another county, shall be liable for their just proportion of all debts and liabilities, then existing, of the county or counties out of which they are respectfully formed or taken.

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall establish a system of county governments which shall be uniform throughout the State; and, by general laws, shall provide for township organization, under which any county may organize whenever a majority of the qualified electors of such county, voting at a general election, shall so determine; and, whenever a county shall adopt township organization, the assessment and collection of the revenue shall be made, and the business of such county and the local affairs of the several townships therein shall be managed and transacted in the manner prescribed by such general laws.

SEC. 5. The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment, in the several counties, of Boards of Supervisors, Sheriffs, County Clerks, District Attorneys, and such other county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties and fix their compensation. It shall regulate the salaries and fees of all county officers, in proportion to duties, and for this purpose may classify the counties by population; and it shall provide for the strict accountability of county and township officers for all fees which may be collected by them, and for all public and municipal moneys which may be paid to them or officially come into their possession.

SEC. 6. Corporations, for municipal purposes, shall not be created by special laws, but the Legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, and cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under and subject to such general laws. Cities and towns may become incorporated under general laws, whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith.

SEC. 7. City and county governments may be merged and consolidated into one municipal government, with one set of officers, and may be incorporated under general laws providing for the incorporation and organization of corporations for municipal purposes. The provisions of this Constitution applicable to cities, and also those applicable to counties, so far as not inconsistent or not prohibited to cities, shall be applicable to such consolidated government. In consolidated city and county governments, of more than one hundred thousand population, there shall be two Boards of Supervisors or houses of legislation—one of which, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected by general ticket from the city and county at large, and shall hold office for the term of four years, but shall be so classified that, after the first election, only six shall be elected every two years; the other, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected every two years, and shall hold office for two years. Any casual vacancy in the office of Supervisor in either Board shall be filled by the Mayor.

SEC. 8. No person shall be eligible to a county or city office unless he has been a citizen and resident within such county or city for two years next preceding his election or appointment to an office therein.

SEC. 9. Any city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with and subject to the Constitution and laws of this State, by causing a Board of fifteen freeholders, who shall have been for at least five years qualified electors thereof, to be elected by the qualified voters of such city, at any general or special election, whose duty it shall be, within ninety days after such election, to prepare and propose a charter for such city, which shall be signed in duplicate by the members of such Board, or a majority of them, and returned, one copy thereof to the Mayor, or other chief executive officer of such city, and the other to the Recorder of deeds of the county. Such proposed charter shall then be published in two daily papers of largest general circulation in such city for at least twenty days, and within not less than thirty days after such publication it shall be submitted to the qualified electors of such city at a general or special election, and if a majority of such qualified electors voting thereat shall ratify the same, it shall, at the end of sixty days thereafter, become the charter of such city, or if such city be consolidated with a county in government, then of such city and county, and shall become the organic law thereof, and supersede any existing charter and all amendments thereof, and all special laws inconsistent with such charter. A copy of such charter, certified by the Mayor, or chief executive officer, and authenticated by the seal of such city, setting forth the submission of such charter to the electors, and its ratification by them, shall be made in duplicate, and deposited, one in the office of the Secretary of State, the other, after being recorded in the office of the Recorder of deeds of the county, among the archives of the city, and thereafter all Courts shall take judicial notice thereof. The charter so ratified may be amended at intervals of not less than two years, by proposals therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified voters thereof, at a general or special election held at least sixty days after the publication of such proposals, and ratified by at least three fifths of the qualified electors voting thereat. In submitting any such charter, or amendment thereto, any alternative article or proposition may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to others.

SEC. 10. The compensation or fees of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office; nor shall the term of any such officer be extended beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed.

SEC. 11. No county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, nor the inhabitants thereof, nor the property therein, shall be released or discharged from their or its proportionate share of taxes to be levied for State purposes, nor shall commutation for such taxes be authorized in any form whatsoever.

SEC. 12. Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within their respective limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws.

SEC. 13. Taxes for county, city, town, school, and other local purposes must be levied on all subjects and objects of taxation. In addition to that which may be levied for the payment of the principal and interest of existing indebtedness, the annual rate on property shall not exceed the following: For county purposes, in counties having two million dollars or less, shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; in counties having six million dollars, and under ten million dollars, such rate shall not exceed——cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; and in counties having ten million dollars or more, such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation. For city and town purposes such annual rate on property in incorporated cities and towns shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; and in any city and county with consolidated government, such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation.

SEC. 14. The Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns, or other public or municipal corporations, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes.

SEC. 15. The Legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, company, association, or individual, any power to make, control, appropriate, supervise, or in any way interfere with any county, city, town, or municipal improvement, money, property, or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, or to levy taxes or assessments, or perform any municipal functions whatever.

SEC. 16. No State office shall be continued or created in any county, city, town, or other municipality, for the inspection, measurement, or graduation of any merchandise, manufacture, or commodity; but such county, city, town, or municipality may, when authorized by general law, and the public interest demands it, appoint such officers.

SEC. 17. Private property shall not be taken or sold for the payment of the corporate debt of any political or municipal corporation.

SEC. 18. All moneys, assessments, and taxes belonging to or collected for the use of any county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, coming into the hands of any officer thereof, shall, immediately on the receipt thereof, be deposited with the Treasurer, or other legal depositary, to the credit of such city, town, or other corporation, respectively, for the benefit of the funds to which they respectively belong.

SEC. 19. The making of profit out of county, city, town, or public school money, or using the same for any purpose not authorized by law, by any officer having the possession or control thereof, shall be a felony, and shall be prosecuted and punished as prescribed by law.

SEC. 20. No county, city, town, township, Board of Education, or school district, shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner, or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for them respectively for such year, without the assent of two thirds of the voters thereof at an election to be held for that purpose; and in cases requiring such assent no indebtedness shall be incurred (except by a county to erect a Court House or Jail) to an amount, excluding existing indebtedness, in the aggregate exceeding five per centum on the value of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained by the assessment next before the last assessment for State and county purposes previous to the incurring such indebtedness, and unless, before or at the time of incurring such indebtedness, provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof within forty years from the time of contracting the same.

SEC. 21. No county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, by a vote of its citizens or otherwise, shall become a subscriber to the capital stock, or a stockholder in any corporation, association, or company, or make any appropriation, or donation, or loan its credit to, or in aid of, any person, corporation, association, company, or institution.

SEC. 22. No law shall be passed by the Legislature granting the right to construct and operate a railroad within any city, town, village, or on any public street or highway thereof, without the consent of the municipal or other proper local authorities having the control of such street or highway proposed to be occupied by such railroad.

SEC. 23. In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with artificial light and water, any company duly incorporated by the laws of this State shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets of said city, have the privilege of disturbing and using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and of making connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gaslight or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, for which the same or either may be used, upon the conditions following: Such company shall make good all damages to such streets and thoroughfares, except necessarily occasioned by the reasonable use thereof, and be liable to such city and its inhabitants therefor. Such company introducing and supplying gas-light or other light, and fresh water, or either, shall furnish the same, so far as necessary and required, free and without charge, to all public buildings, institutions, and school houses belonging to such city, and used for municipal purposes; and such company introducing and supplying water shall also furnish the same, free and without charge, to the Fire Department, and for the extinguishment of fires. Each company, its property and franchise, shall be liable to such city and its inhabitants for the performance of these conditions.

SEC. 24. In counties or cities having more than one hundred thousand inhabitants no person shall, at the same time, be a State officer and a city or county officer, nor hold two city or county offices.

SEC. 25. No public work or improvement of any description whatsoever shall be made or done, in any city, in, upon, or about the streets thereof, or otherwise, the cost and expense of which is made chargeable or may be assessed upon private property by special assessment, unless an estimate of such cost and expense shall be made, and an assessment in proportion to benefits, on the property to be affected or benefited, and shall be collected and paid into the city treasury before such work or improvement shall be commenced, or any contract for letting or doing the same authorized or performed.

SEC. 26. The Legislature shall not pass any local or special law in the cases following:

Regulating the affairs of counties, cities, towns, townships, wards, City or County Boards of Education, school districts, or other political or municipal corporation or subdivision of the State;

Authorizing the laying out, opening, altering, maintaining, or vacating roads, highways, streets, alleys, town plats, or parks;

Relating to cemeteries, graveyards, or public grounds not of the State;

Locating or changing county seats;

Incorporating cities, towns, or villages, or changing their charters;

Creating offices, or prescribing the powers and duties of officers in counties, cities, towns, townships, or school districts;

Regulating the fees or extending the powers and duties of county or municipal officers;

Regulating the management and maintenance of public schools, the building or repairing of School or Court Houses, and raising of money for such purposes;

Extending the time for the assessment or collection of county, city, or other municipal taxes, or otherwise relieving any Assessor or Collector of county or city taxes from the due performance of the official duties, or their securities from liability;

Legalizing the unauthorized or invalid acts of any officer or agent of any county or municipality thereof;

Directing the payment of money out of the treasury, or by any officer, of any county, city, or town, without the consent of such county, city, and town;

Directing the payment of money from out of the treasury, or by any officer of, or creating any liability against, a county, city, town, or any public or municipal corporation, without its consent.

MR. HAGER. I ask that the usual number be printed.

THE PRESIDENT. It requires a motion to print.

MR. HAGER. I move that the usual number, four hundred and eighty copies, be printed.

So ordered.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT.

MR. HAGER. I have another report from the committee, which is very short.

THE SECRETARY read:

The Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations have had under consideration a number of petitions and memorials, asking that the following proposition be inserted in the new Constitution, to wit:

"SECTION —. The Legislature shall, at its first session, enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, voting precinct, town, or city, by a majority vote, from time to time, may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibitied within the prescribed limits."

And the committee being equally divided in opinion at the time it was considered in the presence of eight members thereof, instruct me to report the petitions and memorials back, with the recommendation that the above proposition be committed to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration and action.

Respectfully submitted.

December 7, 1878. JNO. S. HAGER, Chairman.

MR. HAGER. I move that the report be received and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

RESOLUTION.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: I wish to offer a resolution.

THE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the gentleman will send up his resolution. No objection.

THE SECRETARY read:

WHEREAS, The appropriation for the expenses of this Convention is now nearly exhausted, and the session is likely to be prolonged to the limit expressed in the Act of the Legislature convening this body, and perhaps beyond it;

Resolved, That when payments from said appropriation shall reduce the balance in the State treasury to the sum of seven thousand dollars, the President be and he is hereby directed not to certify any payroll for the per diem of members, and that said unexpended balance be reserved exclusively to the expenses of the Convention, other than per diem of members, and to the payment of salaries and wages of employés.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: That resolution sufficiently explains itself. Now, as far as we are concerned, we are bound to stay here, pay or no pay, until the work shall have been accomplished. As far as the employés are concerned, there is no such contract, or obligation on their part, expressed or implied, and I think we ought to reserve a certain amount of the appropriation for their benefit. I think "the laborer is worthy of his hire."

MR. WHITE. I trust the resolution will not pass. If the employés are not willing to continue their work, I think we can get along very well without them, and by so doing we will set an example to the State, and show them that this host of attachés are entirely unnecessary. We can get along without them. If they do not want to stay on the same terms that we do, let them go. I intend to stay, and it is as hard for me to do it as it is for them. If the employés don't want to stay and run their chances of getting their money, the same as the balance of us do, let them go, and the sooner the quicker.

MR. BROWN. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

MR. BARNES. Ayes and noes.

MR. BARNES. I desire to say now——

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. Barnes, Casserly, Freud, Edgerton, and Walker, of Tuolumne.

The roll was called, and the resolution was laid on the table by the following vote:

RESOLUTION REGARDING A CHINESE MEMORIAL.

MR. DOWLING. I wish to offer a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the Chair to draft petitions to be forwarded by this Convention to the Governors of Oregon, Nevada, and Washington Territory, requesting their Excellencies to memorialize the President of the United States and the Senate, on behalf of their States and Territory, for a modification of the Burlingame treaty, now existing between the Chinese Empire and the Republic of the United States of America.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

It was adopted.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The Convention took up the special order for the day—the report of the Committee on Chinese, which was as follows:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall have and shall exercise the power to enact all needful laws, and prescribe necessary regulations for the protection of the State, and the counties, cities, and towns thereof, from the burdens and evils arising from the presence of aliens, who are or who may become vagrants, paupers, mendicants, criminals, or invalids afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases, and aliens otherwise dangerous or detrimental to the well being or peace of the State, and to impose conditions upon which such persons may reside in the State, and to provide the means and mode of their removal from the State upon failure or refusal to comply with such conditions; provided, that nothing contained in the foregoing shall be construed to impair or limit the power of the Legislature to pass such other police laws or regulations as it may deem necessary.

SEC. 2. Any corporation incorporated by or under the laws of this State, or doing business in this State, shall forfeit its franchises, and all legal rights thereunder, if it ever employs, in any capacity whatever, foreigners who are not eligible to become citizens of the United States under the laws of Congress. This section shall be enforced by appropriate legislation.

SEC. 3. No alien ineligible to become a citizen of the United States shall ever be employed on any State, county, municipal, or other public work in this State after the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 4. All further immigration to this State of Chinese, and all other persons ineligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws thereof, is hereby prohibited. The Legislature shall provide for the enforcement of this section by appropriate legislation.

SEC. 5. No person who is not eligible to become a citizen of the United States shall be permitted to settle in this State after the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 6. Foreigners ineligible to become citizens of the United States shall not have the right to sue or be sued in any of the Courts of this State, and any lawyer appearing for or against them, or any of them, in a civil proceeding, shall forfeit his license to practice law. No such foreigner shall be granted license to carry on any business, trade, or occupation in this State, nor shall such license be granted to any person or corporation employing them. No such foreigner shall have the right to catch fish in any of the waters under the jurisdiction of the State; nor to purchase, own, or lease real property in this State; and all contracts of conveyance or lease of real estate to any such foreigner shall be void.

SEC. 7. The presence of foreigners ineligible to become citizens of the United States is declared hereby to be dangerous to the well being of the State, and the Legislature shall discourage their immigration by all the means within its power. It shall provide for their exclusion from residence or settlement in any portion of the State it may see fit, or from the State, and provide suitable methods, by their taxation, or otherwise, for the expense of such exclusion. It shall prescribe suitable penalties for the punishment of persons convicted of introducing them within forbidden limits. It shall delegate all necessary power to the incorporated cities and towns of this State for their removal without the limits of such cities and towns.

SEC. 8. Public officers within this State are forbidden to employ Chinese in any capacity whatever. Violation of this provision shall be ground for removal from office; and no person shall be eligible to any office in this State who, at the time of election and for three months before, employed Chinese.

SEC. 9. The exercise of the right of suffrage shall be denied to any person employing Chinese in this State, and it shall be a sufficient challenge that the person offering to vote is employing Chinese, or has employed them within three months next preceding the election.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Chinese.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The report of the Committee on Chinese is now before the committee. The Secretary will read the first section.

THE SECRETARY read section one, as follows:

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall have and shall exercise the power to enact all needful laws, and prescribe necessary regulations for the protection of the State and the counties, cities, and towns thereof, from the burdens and evils arising from the presence of aliens who are or who may become vagrants, paupers, mendicants, criminals, or invalids afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases, and aliens otherwise dangerous or detrimental to the well-being or peace of the State, and to impose conditions upon which such persons may reside in the State, and to provide the means and mode of their removal from the State upon failure or refusal to comply with such conditions; provided, that nothing contained in the foregoing shall be construed to impair or limit the power of the Legislature to pass such other police laws or regulations as it may deem necessary.

MR. LARKIN. I would like to have a decision as to how this discussion is to be carried on. Will the debate be confined to the section under consideration, or will it range over the whole thing? I would like a decision on that point before we proceed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The debate will extend over the entire report.

MR. LARKIN. Would a resolution be in order?

THE CHAIRMAN. The first section is now under consideration. Under the rule each section has to be read.

MR. AYERS. The Chairman of the committee is not in the hall, I have understood.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first section is under consideration. The Secretary will read it again.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall have and shall exercise the power to enact all needful laws, and prescribe necessary regulations for the protection of the State, and the counties, cities, and towns thereof, from the burdens and evils arising from the presence of aliens, who are or who may become vagrants, paupers, mendicants, criminals, or invalids afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases, and aliens otherwise dangerous or detrimental to the well-being or peace of the State, and to impose conditions upon which such persons may reside in the State, and to provide the means and mode of their removal from the State upon failure or refusal to comply with such conditions; provided, that nothing contained in the foregoing shall be construed to impair or limit the power of the Legislature to pass such other police laws or regulations as it may deem necessary.

SPEECH OF MR. MILLER.

MR. MILLER. Mr. Chairman: It is expected by a great majority of the people of California, that this Convention will take some decisive action in respect to what is regarded by the people of this State as a great increasing and expanding evil in this country—the introduction and presence of large numbers of Chinese. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, to be compelled to state that the committee to whom was referred this question, was not able to agree upon any definite plan to be adopted by the State for the extirpation of this evil. The committee found, directly after the discussion began, that its members were divided in opinion in respect to the measures that should be adopted. There was no division of opinion in respect to the character of this immigration, or upon its effects upon the country. All agreed that Chinese immigration was an evil, and that if possible the further influx of Chinese to this country should be stopped. But we differed in the measures which were to be adopted for remedying this evil. A report was made by a majority of the committee, but instead of devising or presenting a concise plan for adoption by the State, we presented three distinct plans. Now, while a majority of the committee were in favor of one or the other of these plans, it cannot be said that all the members of that majority were in favor of any of the plans, except the one embraced in the first section of the article. That section was agreed upon unanimously. But it was reserved to every member of the committee in Convention to support or oppose any part of this report. It was upon this consideration we all agreed and consented to make the report from the majority of the committee. My action in this respect has been misunderstood. I consented because I thought it was better that all these plans, all these provisions touching the Chinese question, should come in together and be considered at once in this Convention. And as it is a question not susceptible of division, I shall, in the brief remarks I have to make, consider the whole of this report together.

The first plan proceeds upon the theory that the State has not within itself the power to prohibit Chinese immigration. It proposes to deal with these people as a part of the population of the State, after they have once mingled with our people and become a part of the people. The Government of the United States, under the Constitution, has the power to regulate commerce, both foreign and inter-State, and the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the power is vested exclusively in the General Government. The States, while they have the power to regulate internal affairs of the State, to prescribe rules and laws for the government of the people of the State—in short, while the State exercises home rule, still there is above and beyond the State a national sovereignty which deals with all these subjects, treaties between nations, intercourse with foreign nations, foreign commerce, and navigation. Whatever may be done under the first section, must be done under the police power of the State—that power of local regulation, or government of the people of a State which has not been delegated to the Government of the United States, and which has been reserved to the State, or the people of the State.

It is believed by the committee that the State has the power to protect itself against foreign and well known dangerous classes—classes that are admitted by all people to be dangerous and detrimental to the well being of the State, such as paupers, vagrants, criminals, persons suffering from contagious or infectious diseases, and we hold that the State has power to exclude these under the law of self-preservation, which is the first law of the State. That it does not interfere with foreign commerce to exercise this power. We propose, under this section, that the Legislature shall have power to enforce the details for executing this plan. We propose that tribunals shall be established, such as the established Courts, before whom persons alleged to be paupers or criminals may be brought for trial. If it shall be found upon examination that they belong to any one of these classes, we propose that a place shall be established in San Francisco for the safe keeping of those persons until they can be removed from the State. We propose, as to the criminal classes of Chinese, that, instead of being incarcerated in prison at the expense of the State, upon conviction, the Legislature shall empower the Courts to remand them to this place, to be afterwards removed from the State. In some sense it is a system of banishment of these people, as a punishment for crime. It was proposed that the State might impose conditions upon their residence; that is, a bond might be required that a party, under examination, will not become a charge upon the State, that he will not be a pauper, criminal, vagrant, or an inmate of any charitable institution maintained by the State. This is a condition of his residence in the State. Now, the State has attempted, on several occasions, to legislate upon this subject of Chinese immigration. It has exercised the power of taxation to discourage Chinese residence, and our Supreme Court has decided that those acts imposing a capitation tax were unconstitutional. It has also passed laws authorizing the Commissioners of Immigration to go on board of vessels and make examinations of the Chinese passengers for the purpose of excluding the dangerous classes, and more particularly as applied to lewd women. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that these acts are unconstitutional. In every effort which the State has made to prevent and restrict this immigration it has been met by a constitutional objection, and these acts have been declared unconstitutional.

The first section proceeds upon a different plan. We do not in that section attempt to interfere with commerce. We do not go on board of vessels. We take these people after they have once become a part of our population, and subject to the laws of the State.

Now, as to the power of the State to protect itself against the dangerous classes of persons, I shall submit some authorities. I shall first read a decision in what is known as the Passenger Cases, page 125, 7th Howard, U. S. Sup. Court Reports:

"The States have also reserved the police right to turn off from their territories paupers, vagabonds, and fugitives from justice. But they have not reserved the use of taxation universally to accomplish that object, as they had it before they became the United States. Having surrendered to the United States the sovereign police power over commerce, to be exercised by Congress, or the treaty-making power, it is necessarily a part of the power of the United States to determine who shall come to and reside in the United States for the purpose of trade, independently of every other condition of admittance which the State may attempt to impose upon such persons. When it is done in either way, the United States, of course, subject the foreigners to the laws of the United States, and cannot exempt him from the internal power of police of the States in any particular in which it is not constitutionally in conflict with the laws of the United States. And in this sense it is that, in treaties providing for such mutual admission of foreigners between nations, it is universally said, 'But subject always to the laws and statutes of the two countries respectively; but certainly not to such of the laws of a State as would exclude the foreigner, or would add another consideration to his admission into the United States.'

"And, further, I may here remark that this right of taxation claimed for the States upon foreign passengers is inconsistent with the naturalization clause in the Constitution, and the laws of Congress regulating it. If a State can, by taxation, or otherwise, direct upon what terms foreigners may come into it, it may defeat the whole and long cherished policy of this country, and of the Constitution, in respect to immigrants coming to the United States.

Digitized by Google

"But I have said the States have the right to turn off paupers, vagabonds, and fugitives from justice, and the States where slaves are, have a constitutional right to exclude all such as are, from a common ancestry or country, of the same class of men. And when Congress shall legislate—if it be not disrespectful for one who is a member of the judiciary to suppose so absurd a thing of another department of government—to make paupers, vagabonds, suspected persons, and fugitives from justice subjects of admission into the United States, I do not doubt it will be found and declared that such persons are not within the regulating power which the United States has over commerce. Paupers, vagabonds, and fugitives never have been subjects of rightful national intercourse, or of commercial regulations, except in the transportation of them to distant colonies to get rid of them, or for punishment as convicts. They have no rights of national intercourse; no one has the right to transport them without the authority of the law, from where they are to any other place, and their only rights where they may be, are such as the law gives to all men who have not altogether forfeited its protection.

"The States may meet such persons upon their arrival in port, and may put them under all proper restraints. They may prevent them from entering their territories, may carry them out or drive them off. But can such a police power be rightfully exercised over those who are not paupers, vagabonds, or fugitives from justice? The international right of visitation forbids it. The freedom of liberty of commerce allowed by all European nations to the inhabitants of other nations does not permit it; and the constitutional obligations of the States of this Union to the United States, in regard to commerce and navigation and naturalization, have qualified the original discretion of the States as to who shall come and live in the United States."

I will now read a brief extract to the same effect, from the opinion of Mr. Justice Grier, in the same case, 7th Howard, 450: "It must be borne in mind (what has sometimes been forgotten) that the controversy in this case, is not with regard to the right claimed by the State of Massachusetts, in the second section of this Act, to repel from her shores lunatics, idiots, criminals, or paupers, which any foreign country, or even one of her sister States might endeavor to thrust upon her; nor the right of any State, whose domestic security might be endangered by the admission of free negroes, to exclude them from her borders. The right of the State has its foundation in the sacred law of self-defense, which no power granted to Congress can restrict or annul. It is admitted by all, that those powers which relate merely to municipal legislation, or what may be more, properly called internal police, are not surrendered or restrained; and that it is as competent and necessary for a State to provide precautionary measures against the physical pestilence which may arise from unusual and infectious articles imported."

Now, these were cases in which the State of New York and the State of Massachusetts attempted to impose a tax upon passengers arriving from foreign countries; that is, they first attempted to require a bond from the master of the vessel that such parties should not become a charge upon the State. The Act provides that they might go on board the ship, take a list of passengers, see who they were and where they came from, exact a bond from the master of the vessel in the sum of five hundred dollars that these people should not become a government charge. In lieu of a bond it provided that they might accept a tax of one dollar and fifty cents from each passenger. The Court decided that this was a restriction of commerce, and therefore contrary to the Constitution of the United States and void. The opinions I have just read go to the extent of giving the State power to protect itself against paupers, vagrants, and criminals. The second plan presented here in this report goes to the extent of compelling prohibition of Chinese immigration.

The section which embraces it is as follows:

"All further immigration to this State of Chinese, and all other persons ineligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws thereof, is hereby prohibited. The Legislature shall provide for the enforcement of this section by appropriate legislation."

That is a separate and distinct plan from the other. And if we could—if the State had the power to enforce such a prohibition, it would certainly end the Chinese question at once. But I take the ground that the State has no such power. I think it is impolitic and unwise for us, at this time, to take any such position. The United States is a nation, and California is not a nation. It is not in the power of California to seal up the Golden Gate, and declare, virtually, there shall be no intercourse with foreign nations. Commercial intercourse, of every species and character, is a matter in which all the people of all the States are interested, and it is not in the power of any State to pass laws nullifying the Acts of Congress, or the treaties made in pursuance of the Constitution, regulating commerce or intercourse with foreign nations; and I may say here, that I consider this too plain for argument, and I would not argue it were it not that some distinguished gentlemen on this floor have taken the position that the State has this power, and they appeared before the committee and made arguments which convinced a majority of the committee that the State of California had the power to seal up the Golden Gate, and stop the Chinese. If this State has the power to interfere with commerce to the extent of prohibiting the subjects of China from entering the ports of the United States, within the State of California, then the State of New York has the power to close the ports of the United States, within that State, against the citizens of France or England. Neither the Constitution of the United States nor the treaties with foreign powers make distinction between the citizens or subjects of nations, with whom the United States are at peace, and with whom there are treaty obligations in respect to commerce, navigation, and the right of residence in the respective countries. I will now read brief extracts from the opinion of the Court in the case of Henderson vs. Mayor of New York et al., 2d Otto, 269, delivered by Mr. Justice Miller, United States Supreme Court. The Court says:

"As already indicated, the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, on which the principal reliance is placed to make void the statute of New York, is that which gives to Congress the power 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations.' As we said in United States vs. Halliday, 3 Wall. 417: 'Commerce with foreign nations means commerce between citizens of the United States and citizens and subjects of foreign governments.' It means trade, and it means intercourse. It means commercial intercourse between nations, and parts of nations, in all its branches. It includes navigation as the principal means by which foreign intercourse is effected. To regulate this trade and intercourse is to prescribe the rules by which it shall be conducted. 'The mind,' says the great Chief Justice, 'can scarcely conceive a system for regulating commerce between nations which shall be silent on the admission of the vessels of one nation into the ports of another;' and he might have added, with equal force, which prescribed no terms for the admission of their cargo or their passengers." (Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 190.)

Further on Mr. Justice Miller says: "A law or rule emanating from any lawful authority, which prescribes terms or conditions on which alone the vessel can discharge its passengers, is a regulation of commerce; and, in case of vessels and passengers coming from foreign ports, is a regulation of commerce with foreign nations." He further says:

"The accuracy of these definitions is scarcely denied by the advocates of the State statutes. But assuming that in the formation of our government certain power necessary to the administration of their internal affairs are reserved to the States, and that among these powers are those for the preservation of good order, of the health and comfort of the citizens, and their protection against pauperism and contagious and infectious diseases, and other matters of legislation of like character, they insist that the power here exercised falls within this class, and belongs rightfully to the State.

"This power, frequently referred to in the decisions of this Court, has been, in general terms, somewhat loosely called the police power. It is not necessary for the course of this discussion to attempt to define it more accurately than it has been defined already. It is not necessary, because whatever may be the nature and extent of that power, where not otherwise restricted, no definition of it and no urgency for its use can authorize a State to exercise it in regard to a subject-matter which has been confided exclusively to the discretion of Congress by the Constitution."

Chief Justice Marshall, in a case reported, 9 Wheat. 210, says "that it has been contended that if a law passed by a State, in the exercise of its acknowledged sovereignty, comes into conflict with a law passed by Congress in pursuance of the Constitution, they affect the subject and each other like equal opposing powers. But the framers of the Constitution foresaw this state of things, and provided for it by declaring the supremacy not only of itself but of the laws made in pursuance thereof. The nullity of any act inconsistent with the Constitution is produced by the declaration that the Constitution is supreme. When the Federal Government has acted, he says: 'In every such case the Act of Congress or the treaty is supreme, and the laws of the State, though enacted in the exercise of power not controverted, must yield to it.'"

Again, in the case of Chi Lung vs. Freeman et al., 2 Otto, 279, the Court held the same doctrine. This was a case sent up from San Francisco, where the person had been arrested on board the vessel, under the statute against the landing of lewd women. Says the Court:

"We are not called upon to decide for or against the right of a State, in the absence of legislation by Congress, to protect herself by necessary and proper laws against paupers and convicted criminals from abroad, nor to lay down the definite limit of such right if it exists. Such a right can only arise from a vital necessity for its exercise, and cannot be carried beyond the scope of that necessity. When a State statute, limited to provisions necessary and appropriate to that object alone, shall, in a proper controversy, come before us, it will be time enough to decide that question. The statute of California goes so far beyond what is necessary, or even appropriate for this purpose, as to be wholly without any sound definition of the right under which it is supposed to be justified."

There is one more decision I desire to read, which illustrates the views of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this subject of the State protecting herself against paupers, vagrants, and others. In the case of "Railroad Company vs. Husen," the Court said:

"We are thus brought to the question whether the Missouri statute is a lawful exercise of the police power of the State. We admit that the deposit in Congress of the power to regulate foreign commerce and commerce among the States was not a surrender of that which may be properly denominated police power. What that power is, it is difficult to define with sharp precision. It is generally said to extend to making regulations promotive of domestic order, morals, health, and safety. As was said in Thorpe vs. The Rutland and Burlington Railroad Company, 27 Vermont, 149, 'it extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the State.' It was further said, that, by the general police power of the State, 'persons and property are subjected to all kinds of restraints and burdens, in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the State—of the perfect right of the Legislature to do which, no question ever was, or, upon acknowledged general principles, ever can be made, so far as natural persons are concerned.' It may also be admitted that the police powers of a State justifies the adoption of precautionary measures against social evils. Under it a State may legislate to prevent the spread of crime, or pauperism, or disturbance of the peace. It may exclude from its limits convicts, paupers, idiots, and lunatics, and persons likely to become a public charge, as well as persons afflicted by contagious or infectious diseases—a right founded, as intimated, in the passenger case, by Mr. Justice Greer, in the sacred law of self-defense. (Vide 3 Sawyer, 283.) The same principle, it may also be conceded, would justify the exclusion of property dangerous to the property of citizens of the State; for example, animals having contagious or infectious diseases. All these exertions of power are in the immediate connection with the protection of persons and property against noxious acts of other persons, or such a use of property as is injurious to the property of others. They are self-defensive. * * * Neither the unlimited powers of a State to tax, nor any of its large political powers, can be exercised to such an extent as to work a practical assumption of the powers properly conferred upon Congress by the Constitution. Many acts of a State may, indeed, affect commerce, without amounting to a regulation of it in the constitutional sense of the term; and it is sometimes difficult to define the distinction between that which merely affects or influences, and that which regulates or furnishes a rule of conduct. There is no such difficulty in the present case. While we unhesitatingly admit that a State may pass sanitary laws, and laws for the protection of life, liberty, health, or property within its borders; while it may prevent persons and animals suffering under contagious or infectious diseases, or convicts, etc., from entering the State; while, for the purpose of self-protection, it may establish quarantine and reasonable inspection laws: it may not interfere with transportation into or through the State beyond what is absolutely necessary for its self-protection. It may not, under the cover of exerting its police power, substantially prohibit or burden either foreign or inter-State commerce."

I think these cases sufficiently illustrate the law upon this subject: so that while the State may have the power to protect itself against these admitted dangerous classes, and to protect the life and health of its people, it has not the power to make any regulation which will interfere with commerce with foreign nations. Now, I do not pretend that this first section of the report is a complete system by which we can rid ourselves of Chinese immigration. I know it is not. But I am quite satisfied that it is not within the power of the State to establish any regulations which will prohibit Chinese immigration. I hold that to be a power which belongs to the General Government and not to the State. The people of this State cannot lawfully interfere with foreign commerce, which includes navigation and the carrying of passengers, except as indicated in the decisions I have read. But the people may memorialize the Congress or the Executive of the nation, including the treaty-making power, for relief from the Chinese evil. I propose, as soon as this discussion is over, that the Committee on Chinese shall prepare and present for the adoption of this Convention a memorial to Congress, in respectful terms, and giving briefly our reasons for asking Congress to legislate upon this subject, or the treaty-making power, to modify what is known as the Burlingame treaty, so that those persons known as Chinese coolies or laborers may be prohibited from coming into the United States. I desire in this matter that the State of California shall occupy a high and dignified position. We want no hysterical, unstatesmanlike effort towards legislation upon this subject. If we should declare here that the State of California intended to prohibit Chinese immigration, that no vessel should bring any Chinese to this State, we should simply incite indignation all over the Eastern States, and we would be said to be in rebellion against the United States, and that is a dangerous step for any State to take, to place itself in antagonism to the Government of the United States.

We have seen the evil of this in former times, and when a proud State like the State of California takes such a step, it is difficult to retrace it. Should we once declare that we intended to check immigration ourselves, without regard to the Federal Government, and against its power, we would be asserting the supremacy of the State over the National Government. It would be attempting to nullify the Acts of Congress and the treaties of the General Government. I say it is dangerous to take such a step. The State of South Carolina began in this way—began by attempting to nullify the Acts of Congress. It began by asserting the doctrine of State supremacy, and went on, step by step, until it found itself in actual open rebellion and war against the government. I cannot give my assent to any measure which would place California in rebellion against the authority of the United States. It has been said we must do something in order to convince the people that we are in earnest; that we must assert some principle, must pass some laws, to show that California is determined to extirpate this evil. It is thought by some that by such a course we would awaken interest in the subject in the Eastern States. But this style of argument is delusive. The people of the Eastern States will awaken to this subject in due time. We must convince them by argument. Assertion will not effect anything; declamation will not effect anything. A wild, spasmodic assertion of State supremacy will make California ridiculous. We must give the Eastern people facts and arguments to show that Chinese immigration is a great and threatening evil, not alone to the State of California, but to the whole Union.

Now, there is a third plan contained in the report, which is embraced in sections six, seven, eight, and nine, as follows:

"SEC. 6. Foreigners ineligible to become citizens of the United States shall not have the right to sue or be sued in any of the Courts of this State, and any lawyer appearing for or against them, or any of them, in a civil proceeding, shall forfeit his license to practice law. No such foreigner shall be granted license to carry on any business, trade, or occupation in this State, nor shall such license be granted to any person or corporation employing them. No such foreigner shall have the right to catch fish in any of the waters under the jurisdiction of the State; nor to purchase, own, or lease real property in this State, and all contracts of conveyance or lease of real estate to any such foreigner shall be void.

"SEC. 7. The presence of foreigners ineligible to become citizens of the United States is declared herein to be dangerous to the well-being of the State, and the Legislature shall discourage their immigration by all the means within its power. It shall provide for their exclusion from residence or settlement in any portion of the State it may see fit, or from the State, and provide suitable methods, by their taxation or otherwise, for the expense of such exclusion. It shall prescribe suitable penalties for the punishment of persons convicted of introducing them within forbidden limits. Shall delegate all necessary power to the incorporated cities and towns of this State for their removal without the limits of such cities and towns.

"SEC. 8. Public officers within this State are forbidden to employ Chinese in any capacity whatever. Violation of this provision shall be ground for removal from office; and no person shall be eligible to any office in this State who, at the time of election and for three months before, employed Chinese.

"SEC. 9. The exercise of the right of suffrage shall be denied to any person employing Chinese in this State, and it shall be a sufficient challenge that the person offering to vote is employing Chinese, or has employed them within three months next preceding the election."

These sections proceed upon the same theory, and form together a plan for dealing with the Chinese evil. This plan is directed to the employment of Chinese, to the denial of their right to the protection of the law. I do not propose to discuss it, but I characterize it as a plan of starvation by constitutional provision. If the Chinese are not to be employed by anybody, are not permitted to labor, they cannot live. Because by labor all must live, and if you deprive them of the right to labor, they must starve. That is the logical sequence of the position assumed by the advocates of this prohibition against the labor of these people. It is indefensible, for it deprives the prohibited people of the right of life. I hold that the right to labor is as high and sacred a right as the right to live. That you cannot deprive these people of this right under the treaty with China. That it is against the spirit of the age, against all laws of civilized communities. But this third plan goes still further, it strikes at the liberty of the citizens of the United States, who, as citizens, have the right to employ whoever they choose. I hold that you cannot abridge that right. It is one of the inalienable rights of American citizens. I do not care to discuss these four sections, but shall content myself by saying that I opposed them in the committee, and shall vote against them here. Now, as to the effect of this first section, it was said that the proposed measure does not go far enough. My answer is, it goes just as far as the State can go. It goes to the very verge of constitutional power, and the State cannot go any further. It is said that it will have no effect. I think that it will have a very marked effect. As I said in the beginning, the power to prohibit Chinese immigration rests entirely with the General Government, and this section is only in aid of such restrictive laws as the General Government may see fit to pass. Its effect will be to rid ourselves of the Chinese already here, to some extent, if not to the full extent, because it only relieves us of a certain class of the Chinese. Let us look for a moment at the benefits which will flow from laws passed in pursuance of this section. It is said, and we all know it to be a fact, that the great body of the Chinese immigrants to this State come from the southern and eastern provinces of China, along the seashore. That they are recruited largely from the criminal classes. Men who hang about the sea and rivers, living in boats. A sort of pirates, many of them, and all of them, or nearly all of them, thieves and bad men generally. Now, a very large proportion of the Chinese who came to California under labor contracts are of the criminal classes—a fact which we find illustrated in the criminal Courts of the State. I have here a letter from the County Clerk of San Francisco, dated November seventh, in reply to a letter of inquiry which I addressed to him. He says:

"For the twelve months ending October thirty-first, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, two thousand four hundred and eighty-eight Chinese have been arrested, tried, and convicted in the various Courts of this city and county, of different crimes. Number of Chinese confined in the City Prison yesterday, November sixth, one hundred and fourteen; number of Chinese confined in County Jail yesterday, November sixth, one hundred and fifty-four."

My proposition is to regard those who are convicted of crimes in our Courts as belonging to the criminal class; that conviction of crime in our Courts shall be conclusive evidence that they did belong to the criminal classes in China, and we propose, under this section, to remove them from the State. I hold that it will be cheaper to remove them from the State than to confine them in our prisons. They can be sent back to China for fifteen or twenty dollars each, by the State.

I do not propose in all cases that they must necessarily be sent back to China. My proposition goes only to this, that they shall be removed from the State. If the people over on the Eastern side will not hear our complaints; if they say this is not an evil, and that the Chinese are as good as any other class of immigrants—that we are making a great noise and confusion about nothing—let us send over four, or five, or ten thousand of these people—those who are dangerous to the well-being of the State—belonging to the criminal and diseased classes; let us send them a brigade or two of these Chinamen, and see how they like them. There would be no surer way of changing their views upon the Chinese question. There are two hundred and thirty-four Chinese now in the State Penitentiary—thirteen are for life. Thirty-eight of these are for the second, third, fourth, and fifth times. I have here a statement from Governor Johnson, in reply to a letter of inquiry addressed to him. He gives: "Arson, first degree, one; assault, with deadly weapon, two; attempt at burglary, thirteen; burglary, forty; burglary, first degree, forty-two; burglary, second degree, thirty-nine; felony, nine; grand larceny, forty-one; kidnaping, one; murder, three; murder, first degree, eight; murder, second degree, eleven; manslaughter, five; rape, one; robbery, four; petit larceny, second offense, three."

I have made an estimate from the best sources of information I could get, and I find that we could at least send out of the State, of these dangerous and burdensome classes, not less than five thousand Chinese every year. And I hold that we can do it at less expense than we could keep them here in prison and hospitals. I hold also, that the State has the power to do it. Certainly it would be right and just, and it would not be a violation of the right of anybody, to send these dangerous classes back to China whence they came. There are also a number of these people, at present, in the asylums of the State. There are now, in the Stockton Insane Asylum, according to a report made by Dr. Shurtleff, forty-four insane Chinamen; and in the Napa Insane Asylum, which has only been in existence a short time, twelve Chinamen. There are in the various county hospitals quite a number of them also. There are more or less of these persons who come within what we denominate the dangerous classes, in every county and town in the State, and with whom the State has a right to deal. I say this section does not prohibit Chinese immigration; it does not settle the Chinese question, but it is the best thing we can do, and I believe the only thing which the State can do. Whether it is wise and politic to do this thing is a question for this Convention and for the Legislature hereafter to settle. The Legislature of California has never done anything upon this question, except to pass laws which, as I have shown you, were an interference with foreign commerce. One of those laws provided that the Commissioners could go on board a vessel, while the passengers were still upon the ship, and there arrest them and hold them for the payment of a tax. And it is astonishing to me that the Legislature has not seen fit to take some other action, so as to avoid interference with foreign commerce. The next section which I shall consider, is section three. It reads as follows:

"No alien, ineligible to become a citizen of the United States, shall ever be employed on any State, county, municipal, or other public work in this State, after the adoption of this Constitution."

That is a provision which it is perfectly competent for the State to adopt. That is a power which the State may reasonably exercise. It goes merely to the employment of Chinese on public works, and does not, in any regard, affect the rights of citizens. In dealing with this question I think it is important that, while we recognize the sovereign power of the General Government over the subject of intercourse with foreign nations, and while we petition the government to relieve us of this great evil, we should do all we can do ourselves. First, that we show by our acts that we have exhausted every power to find a remedy which the State has any right to apply; that we do everything which a State may lawfully and constitutionally do to rid ourselves of this great mischief, and then appeal to the justice and judgment of Congress, or of the treaty-making power of the United States. I do not understand that this treaty with China controls this question. I believe that the remedy will be found to be by an Act of Congress in modification of the treaty. A treaty could be negotiated by the consent of both countries which would settle the question, but it is not likely that such a treaty will be negotiated. The Chinese are cunning diplomatists. They now seek delay. There seems to be a settled purpose upon the part of the Government of China to find some outlet for their redundant population. There are evidences which indicate very strongly that they are fostering and encouraging emigration from China to the United States. Consequently they are adverse to changing or modifying the treaty, but Congress, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, has the power to modify a treaty. There is probably no question better settled than that the supreme legislative power of the nation has the authority to set aside a treaty. Of course it might be considered, in some instances, as an act of war, but the government has the power, and it may exercise it and take the responsibility, and I trust that Congress, in the present session, will pass an Act which will limit the further immigration of the Chinese to this country. I believe it will do it. I believe that the adjustment of political parties to-day in this country is favorable to such action. I doubt whether the treaty-making power will be able to make any impression whatever upon the Chinese Government. It is well settled that a treaty has no greater force and effect than an Act of Congress. It derives its authority and force from the same instrument—the Constitution of the United States. Upon this point I will submit the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, in 5 Howard, 613.

"Every power delegated to the Federal Government must be expounded in coincidence with a perfect right in the States to all they have not delegated; in coincidence, too, with the possession of every power and right necessary for their existence and preservation; for it is impossible to believe that these were ever, in intention or in fact, ceded to the General Government. Laws of the United States, in order to be binding, must be within the legitimate powers vested by the Constitution. Treaties, in order to be valid, must be made within the scope of the same powers; for there can be no authority of the United States, save what is derived mediately or immediately, and regularly and legitimately from the Constitution. A treaty, no more than an ordinary statute, can arbitrarily cede away any one right of a State, or of any citizen of a State."

It has been contended that no modification of the right of immigration to the United States should be attempted by Congress until diplomacy has exhausted its skill in negotiations with the Government of China. How long shall the people of California wait? This is a question which we cannot answer. The Orientals are slow in negotiations. In the end Congress must act upon the subject. Why not act now?

Having shown what it is proposed the State of California shall do toward the abatement of the Chinese evil, and what may be done by the National Government, it is proper to give some reasons for the limitation we ask upon Chinese immigration.

But it has not been my intention to occupy the time of the Convention now, upon this branch of the subject. ["Go on, go on," from many members.] I know that it is unnecessary to enlarge upon this subject in this presence, for the members of this Convention are well informed of the reasons for the prevalent discontent among the people of this State, arising from the presence of so large a number of these aliens. But in proposing measures for the restriction of the immigration to our shores of any class of foreigners hitherto and now admitted under treaty stipulations, it is proper that the reasons for action which may seem extraordinary to the people of other States, should be publicly and freely given, especially so when we are asking the coöperation of the whole people of the Union in the measures we propose.

We are met in the outset by the objection that the exclusion of the Chinese is a departure from the uniform and general policy of the National Government in respect to the immigration of foreigners, that from time immemorial—from the colonial times, before the adoption of the Constitution, down through the whole life of the Republic—immigration has been encouraged by the most liberal naturalization laws, and by the action of the several States, in granting to foreigners political domicile without restraint or condition, almost immediately after the arrival of the immigrant; that the United States has been the asylum of the oppressed of all lands, and our laws have welcomed and protected all who have came beneath the ægis of our Constitution. It is said that to adopt a policy of exclusion now, as against any people, under any circumstances, is not only violative of a time-honored policy, but contrary to the spirit of the age.

It must be confessed that there seems to be much force in these reflections. We know that the freedom of immigration was declared in the great charter of liberty, our Declaration of Independence, wherein the King of England is arraigned for having "endeavored to prevent the population of the States by obstructing the laws for the naturalization of foreigners, and by refusing to pass others to encourage their immigration thither." We know that immigration has been invited by the nation, and that the naturalization laws have admitted those who have come to America to citizenship upon terms the most liberal. The naturalization laws of a nation illustrate its policy upon the subject of immigration; when these are liberal, immigration is desired and encouraged; when they are stringent and full of hard conditions, immigration is discouraged and held undesirable. In the prosperous days of the Athenian Republic no foreigner could become a citizen of Athens, except by a vote of the people twice had, and then only in case the applicant received over six thousand affirmative votes at the second election. In the days of Rome's greatest power none but those foreigners who had rendered eminent service to the Roman State could become naturalized, and they only by a vote of the Senate. After wars had decimated the Athenian armies, immigration was encouraged by a relaxation of the rigor of the naturalization laws; and so in Rome. So, in all countries, the encouragement given to immigration is measured by the state of the naturalization laws.

Is Chinese exclusion really a departure from the policy of the nation? Immigration has been encouraged, but what kind of immigration? Has there been no distinction in the varieties of men who have been encouraged to come? The truth is that the invitation has been limited to white men, men of our own race and color, men of similar aspirations, hopes, desires, and aims in life. Men who assimilate with our people, and who are fit to assimilate, who build their homes among us, respect our laws, love liberty and representative government. Men who become part and parcel of our people, who follow our fortunes and brave our disasters, who stand shoulder to shoulder with us in battle, and fight for the republic, and are ready to die in her defense. These are the sort of immigrants who have been invited by our laws. The non-assimilative colored races have never been considered as desirable immigrants, nor have they ever been encouraged either by law or public sentiment. The introduction of blacks was prohibited after eighteen hundred and eight. None but white men from foreign lands have been admitted to citizenship.

The negro was not an immigrant. He came by compulsion and was enslaved. The Chinese are excluded from citizenship by the naturalization laws of the United States. Why? Why that extraordinary proviso in the treaty with China, which declares that nothing in the treaty shall be construed to confer naturalization of Chinese in the United States? There is no such provision in any treaty between the United States and any other nation. Why may not the Chinaman become a citizen? Is the prohibition without reason? Is it solely because he is not white? That may have been the reason, for our Democratic friends have always insisted that this is "a white man's government." A government of white men, by white men, for white men. But lately the white man's government naturalized, en masse, four millions of colored people—clothed them with the panoply of American citizenship, though not foreigners. Why? To enable them to preserve their liberty and enjoy the fruits of their own labor. Why is this great privilege denied the Chinese? Perhaps an answer to this question would be our justification for Chinese exclusion. If the Chinese are unfit for American citizenship, are they fit for domicile in the country? If they are unfit, for what reason? Are they so low in the scale of humanity, so degraded in character, so imbecile in mind, so corrupt in their lives, so scornful of republican institutions, so at enmity with law and justice, that it is dangerous to admit them to citizenship? then I answer, they are unfit for contact or intercourse with a free people. If they would be dangerous as citizens, are they not dangerous as denizens?

Is Chinese exclusion so unreasonable? Is the departure which we propose a great departure from the policy of the National Government? The reason that none but white men have been admitted to citizenship under our naturalization laws is founded on the great fact that the mixture of two distinct races is a calamity to both, and to the product of both. The wisdom of excluding the negro was applauded, and had the policy of exclusion been adopted earlier in the nation's history, what woe and anguish, what evils and horrors would have been avoided. The importation of the African, though not a bad man himself, was the great, supreme mistake of this nation. His enslavement was the nation's greatest crime, and through the expiation of this folly, and its consequent crime, we should learn wisdom. The sentimentalist and the theological humanitarians tell us that the Chinese coolie is here in pursuance of a great remedial plan of Almighty God, by which a nation of four hundred and fifty millions of people is to be Christianized and elevated to the grandeur of Anglo-Saxon civilization; that these dusky waifs who have floated over the Pacific are to be transformed into angels of light, who are to illumine the dark recesses of idolatry and superstition in China, and finally lead its millions into a knowledge of the true God. So spake the prophets of slavery, of the African slave, while he wearily carried his heavy load; but has Africa been illumined? Has not rather America been darkened? And is there not danger that instead of Christianizing China, we will, by this process, Mongolize America?

A certain class of political economists tell us that the Chinese, by their cheap energy, will promote the growth of industry and stimulate wealth, and that their exclusion is an economic mistake. Mr. Mill says that it is the office of the science of political economy to discover and elucidate the laws which govern the promotion of wealth, but there are higher and grander considerations than mere economic theories. The question of Chinese immigration, as we understand it, will not be settled by sentiment, nor by the application of economic principles. It is a subject which rises above, and includes all these and more; it comes within the domain of philosophy. To appreciate this it is necessary to contemplate the true situation on this coast, and take lessons from the experience of our people. Already two fifths of the adult male population of California is Chinese, and despite the assertions of optimists, the number is constantly, steadily increasing. It is an unassimilative population, and unfit for assimilation with people of our race. That it does not assimilate is to the advantage of our white people. Were the Chinese to amalgamate at all with our people it would be the lowest, most vile and degraded of our race, and the result of the amalgamation would be a hybrid of the most despicable, a mongrel of the most detestable that has ever afflicted the earth. It is fortunate that the Chinese are non-assimilative with our people We are confronted on the other side of the Pacific with four hundred and fifty millions of the same type and variety of men as those already here, and these have disorganized our labor system, brought thousands of our people to wretchedness and want, degraded labor to the standard of brute energy, poisoned the blood of our youth, and filled our streets with the rot of their decaying civilization. There are millions yet ready to come, and millions more determined to come. Will they come, that is the question?

If unrestricted, why will they not come? How and why have those come who are here? It is said that they have come merely on a visitation, to stay but a little while, and then return. By this description they come from the great Asian hive, swarming through the Golden Gate like empty bees, to gorge themselves upon the sweets of California flowers, and then return to the hive beyond the sea, laden with the treasures they have sipped from this hospitable land. If this were the true description, the application of economic principles would have only to be made to demonstrate the soft folly of a nation who would permit such a robbery of its resources. Many of the advocates of Chinese exclusion have insisted and endeavored to prove that the Chinese do not intend to remain. Let us not be deceived by the phenomena of this advancing and retreating tide of humanity. Many go back, but many more come, and most of those who go, return, bringing their "cousins" with them. This practice of visiting home is common to all classes of immigrants. It was so with our own Argonauts, who came hither in search of the golden fleece in forty-nine and the Spring of fifty. All expected to go home and stay at home, as soon as their fortunes were made, but here they are. When we insist upon it that the Chinese do not mean to stay, as an argument against him, we mistake the fact, and the economist makes argument against us by saying: "The Chinaman is industrious, labors for low wages, and his energy promotes the growth of your industries. He takes away nothing but the small pittance, the little wages you have paid him, and leaves with you the fruit of the labor—the development of your country—the accumulations you have made by the labor of his hands. How has he injured you? He has enriched you, and you complain. He has performed Herculean labors, and wrested from the earth great treasures. Where is the evil?" We can never convince the thrifty Yankee that Chinese immigration is an evil by the statement that he merely comes to sell his cheap labor. But leaving this to those who make the contention, I return to the question, Will the Chinese come, if not prevented by the power of the Government?

The history of the human race, so far back as that history extends, shows that the movements of men, like all human actions, are governed by certain laws. Mr. Buckle says that there is no generalization of the science of political economy so valuable as the law of population discovered by Voltaire, and afterwards appropriated by Malthus, and elaborated in his great work. It has stood the test of the severest criticism, and has emerged from the state of theory into that of an accepted canon. It is, as stated by Malthus himself, "that there is a constant tendency in all animated life to increase beyond the nourishment provided for it—and that, as applied to man particularly, the ratio of increase under ordinary conditions is greater than the increase of subsistence." If, then, a given number of the human race are placed within a certain environment, the tendency is to increase faster than the means of subsistence are capable of being increased—and unless the increase is limited by prudence, or by war or pestilence, it is only a question of time when the colony will come to that state called over-population. It is immaterial whether we accept the Mosaic account of the creation of man, or the evolution theory of Darwin with respect to the origin of the species. It is enough for our purpose to know that man exists in different types and varieties, divided into many nationalities and several races. Most writers on the subject agree that the beginning of the human race was in Central Asia, and that for all historic time the country now called China has been the most densely populated portion of the globe. The history of the race is descriptive of a westward march of mankind from the plains of Asia, through India and Continental Europe. It tells how one type of man has succeeded another, and one nation supplanted another until the first great ocean barrier was reached; how individual men of the most intelligent and enterprising cast crossed the great unknown deep and planted themselves upon this continent, to find a new or lost and forgotten race, which they have supplanted, and now, on the California shore of the Pacific, stand looking out over the broad ocean toward the land from which man started. "He has now made the circuit of the globe, and there are no more lands to conquer."

It has been well said, that through climatic causes, the developing influences of travel and scenery, the effect of varieties of food, and other causes, the man who stands upon the shores of the Pacific is no more like the man who has remained on the other side than two beings of different origin. What has caused the migrations of the human race? Why did man first move westward from the plains of Asia? Under the operation of the Malthusian law he went west for room. Westward, because to the west was land and subsistence. A learned scientist declares that it may be accepted as a law that all great migrations have one inducing cause—hunger. It is hunger, or the fear of hunger, that causes men to brave the danger and trial of migration. It is a fact of history that all great migrations have been in search of subsistence, or land from which to wrest the needs of animal life. Will the Chinese come? Yes, because they are hungry. The great fact is attested, its horrible details are described, its awful proportions are measured, that, as estimated and stated by the London Times, seventy millions of the people of the northern provinces of China are in a state of starvation. Seven or eight millions have already perished, and millions more must die. Can you conceive of so vast a number of human creatures starving? Imagine the greatest army ever marshaled by military chieftain; then double it, then quadruple it, then double its number again, then imagine it five times multiplied, and you begin to conceive the proportions of this myriad throng of suffering people. Will the survivors of this horror remain in China? No. Where will they go—westward? There is no room. Northward? The frozen steppes of Siberia offer nothing, and they are guarded by Russia. Where do they turn their eyes? To the far-off, mysterious land of plenty, where many of their race have gone, to the East, over the great sea, to America, to the land of plenty—California.

MR. BARBOUR. Africa is open to them.

MR. MILLER. But the Chinese do not go to Africa. It is an unknown, unexplored land, and they are not explorers. Since we have taught them to cross the ocean, America is nearer and easier of access, and in America they know there is subsistence.

Judged by all historic examples, the famine in China will result in a migration, and most likely through the Golden Gate. The Chinese have come to the condition of starvation in the northern provinces by overpopulation, by increasing beyond the power of procuring subsistence. In the destitute provinces they are passing through an experience which the survivors will dare anything to avoid the future. The Chinese ruler will no doubt aid in the peaceful migration to America of the redundant population. The nation has come to that condition that she must resort to war for the reduction of her population, or stimulate migration. Which course will be taken? Emigration is the cheapest, easiest, and the most rational. As stated by a late writer of the London Times: "It is probable that California is destined to witness the peaceful invasion of vast numbers of those strange aliens, unless preventive measures are at once adopted. If an armed invasion of Russia is meditated, as many suppose, and perhaps now in preparation by China, that would relieve this country of all apprehension of a very large migration, for the great wars which would then follow would relieve China of all her redundant population. If the military preparation in China, to which attention was called at the Berlin Conference by Count Shouvaloff, means war in any direction by China, it is not in this direction. It is not, however, to be taken for granted that China is destitute of military power. I think that there may be men now within this hall who will live to see China the most formidable military and naval power on the globe. In nothing do they so readily adopt modern invention and modern ideas as in military art and science. The Russians are just beginning to discover that China has vast armies well armed, drilled, and equipped. Let China once set about it and you will behold such armies and navies as the world has never seen.

It has often been said that the Chinese will continue to come because hunger is the inducing cause of migration, and the Chinese are hungry, and there is no escape for them in any direction but to the east. The situation has been shown by a recent essayist to bear a close analogy to the Irish famine of eighteen hundred and forty-six–seven.

Ireland, in eighteen hundred and forty-six, contained eight million people. In the next eight years there migrated to the United States over one million two hundred and fifty thousand. Why? why did the Irish come to America? They had a beautiful country, a rich, fertile land; the most beautiful country on the face of the globe. They were attached to it. Why did they come here? Because of the famine of eighteen hundred and forty-six and eighteen hundred and forty-seven. The migration had been from twenty thousand to fifty thousand a year, and increased in the next eight years as follows, according to Appleton's Encyclopedia: Eighteen hundred and forty-seven, one hundred and five thousand; eighteen hundred and forty-eight, one hundred and thirteen thousand; eighteen hundred and forty-nine, one hundred and sixty thousand; eighteen hundred and fifty, one hundred and sixty-four thousand; eighteen hundred and fifty-one, two hundred and twenty-one thousand; eighteen hundred and fifty-two, one hundred and sixty thousand; eighteen hundred and fifty-three, one hundred and sixty-two thousand; eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one hundred and five thousand.

These were the years when food was scarce in Ireland. The potato had been the chief resort of the people for food, but for some reason it ceased to grow. The potato rot destroyed or diminished the crop. In these years, when food was scarce, the migration quadrupled over previous years, so that the population of Ireland became reduced down to about four millions. The Chinese may not follow this notable example, but it is probable that they will go to the east from the same causes which drove the Irish to the west. If you ask me how they will come, I will answer by asking you how have those come who are here? They have been brought here as a speculation in labor. But a few days ago parties in this business of trading in the labor of Chinese proposed to furnish Cuba with ten thousand Chinamen per annum, if guaranteed twenty-four cents per day for labor, for five years. What is to hinder them? What barrier is in the way? The Pacific Ocean. That means forty or fifty days' time, and fifteen to twenty dollars in money. The time is no matter to the Chinaman. He would not care if the voyage lasted a year, so long as he had something to eat. The money he will get by giving a mortgage on his labor.

But suppose he comes. We are asked, where is the harm? He will labor, says the advocate of Chinese immigration; he will work well and cheap; he is quiet, peaceable, industrious. Will not his labor quicken your industries, promote the development of your country, produce wealth? These are the questions which the political economists ask us to answer. Is cheap labor desirable?

I answer, cheap labor may, under certain conditions, be, in an economic sense, an advantage, but not so to us. Immigration has been a blessing to the United States, not because it cheapened labor, but because it brought within our borders, in aid of the great work of development, men who established homes, whose accumulations swelled the aggregate of the wealth of the nation; men who have become a part of the nation and contributors to Anglo-Saxon civilization; but the United States is in no need of immigration now. The country is stocked by a vigorous, intelligent, enterprising, brave, and civilized people, who now number over forty millions. It is well ascertained that such a people, under such conditions of environment, will, by natural increase alone, double their number every twenty-five years. Making all proper allowance for loss by war or pestilence, the nation, without further conquest of territory, will number within a century more than two hundred millions of people. Accepting the Malthusian theory, it is only a question of two or three centuries when the population of the United States, unless limited by individual prudence, or by war, or by pestilence, will have increased by natural increase of the present stock alone beyond the capacity of the soil to furnish subsistence; that within two hundred years this nation will be, under this process, over populated and underfed. There is no truth better understood than this so often stated, that immigration now to the United States is not an addition to population, but a substitution of the foreign element for the native. And this is especially the case as regards Chinese immigration. Even here in California, which is a sparsely settled country, capable of sustaining a population five times as large as that already here, we know that the effect of Chinese immigration is to deter white immigration from coming. The Chinaman is the result of a training in the art of low life. For thousands of years China has been filled to the verge with a redundant population. The life of the average Chinaman has been a mere struggle for animal existence. He bears with him the heredity of poverty and unrelenting toil for food through thousands of years. His physical organs have become adapted to insufficient food. There has been a process of selection going on in China under which the heavy feeders have fallen out, and under the law of the "survival of the fittest" none but those who can practice the most rigid self-denial as to food remain. They have also been trained by centuries of incessant toil to procure the maximum of subsistence from the soil.

The result of this life is a sinewy, shriveled human creature, whose muscles are as iron, whose sinews are like thongs, whose nerves are like steel wires, with a stomach case lined with brass; a creature who can toil sixteen hours of the twenty-four; who can live and grow fat on the refuse of any American laborer's table. Capable, as a late writer says, "of driving the vulture from its prey, which he consumes, and then devours the unclean bird itself." He is a human creature without sympathy; supremely selfish, for his struggle with nature has kept him busy with himself. Without aspirations, for hope of better things fled from his race centuries ago. The white man cannot compete in the field of labor with such a being as that—he cannot until he becomes such as the Chinaman is. To compete with the Chinese our people must give up their homes, abandon the family altar, tear down their school houses, blot out their civilization, and adopt the Chinese mode of life. If the white man is to compete with the Chinaman he must adopt a cheaper style of dress, he must inure himself to the cold, he must labor in the night; sleep shall not come to his pillow until the midnight bell tolls the solemn hour. He must arise at the first gray streaks of dawn and at his work. Then what shall be his food? No longer the savory meats, the pure, white bread made by willing hands. No! He must live as the Chinaman lives; work as the beast works; there can be no recreation, no rest, nothing but toil. But the economist says: "What becomes of the philosophic theory of the survival of the fittest." History does not record that the types and varieties of men who have succeeded in supplanting others of different type were the fittest, morally or intellectually. The fittest is he who can survive, that is all there is of the doctrine; not he that is the highest type of man. Turn out your finest thoroughbred horses to roam the plain with mustangs, or your best or purest strain of Durhams to graze with the broad-horned beast of Mexico, and see the operation of the law of the survival of the fittest.

The question here is not merely as to the economies of labor, but what is the effect of this immigration upon the life, civilization, and government of this country and its people? Our civilization has bred our people to a certain style of life, which to give up is to surrender all that makes life worth living. The American could not if he would in centuries become such a man as the Chinaman, and heaven forbid that he should. If the Chinaman comes and occupies the fields of labor now open to the white man, it operates in restraint of marriage among the whites, and stops white immigration. Increase of white population is thereby stopped, for the prudent, intelligent, sympathetic white man will not bring innocent beings into the world to see them suffer and starve before his eyes. He would rather die without the hope of posterity than to do that. He will not marry unless he can see a reasonable chance of maintaining wife as well as children. I repeat, therefore, that to permit unrestricted Chinese immigration supplants white population, and this cannot be too often repeated. It must result so, as far as it goes. It has so resulted, so far as it has gone. Is this wise? Is there any good sense in such a course? We have driven one nation, a regal race, from this land. Naught remains of that race but a weak, hounded, and troubled remnant, standing on the shores of the Pacific, pensively, sadly looking upon the broad expanse toward the setting sun. We have left the Indian nothing, and nothing of him scarcely remains but his sad, doleful history—a history of outrage and wrong. No mark is written upon the grave of his race but that awful and cruel word "Fate." He has gone down under this same relentless law, the survival of the fittest, and now there are those who would supinely yield to the bland, cunning, selfish Chinaman all that we have wrested from the Indian, and write over the tomb of Anglo-Saxon civilization and the sepulchre of republican liberty, the same fearful word, "Fate!"

And all this for the sake of Christianizing the heathen; all this because of the brotherhood of man. They would Mongolize this land in a vain missionary effort to bring the Chinaman to a knowledge of the true God. He has his gods whom he will not destroy. He cares for neither the missionary, nor the missionary's God. They tell us that the earth is the inheritance of all men; for all men are brothers, and each man has a right to any part of the inheritance he may choose. They quote St. Paul as authority for the fact that of one blood all the nations of the earth were made. St. Paul says that "God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed and the bounds of their habitation." God made men into nations, and determined the bounds of their habitations. We take the world of men as we find it. They are divided into varieties and highly differentiated types, each with the bounds of his habitation fixed. It is in the economy of Providence that man shall exist in nationalities, and that they shall be divided by the antipathies of race. Why this should be so is not for us to inquire; that it is so, is enough for us to know; and the history of man shows that, in whatever age or clime an attempt has been made to amalgamate two or more distinct races or types of men, the result has been calamitous to both, but more particularly disastrous to the superior race. I need not dwell upon this theme—all know the great fact.

In this country there cannot exist with safety to the republic, within the jurisdiction of the government, any considerable population who are not citizens. They become, for one cause or another, a disturbing element, and sooner or later must be incorporated into the nation in order to prevent collisions, or a total deprivation to such people of all human rights. The Chinese must, if they remain, become citizens or slaves. It is a result inevitable. If we must have immigration, let us choose it from the Anglo-Saxon race, or kindred varieties of men—men who will build homes and love liberty; who appreciate republican institutions and the grandeur of western civilization, and whose intelligence and loyalty to the principles of our government render them worthy of the great privilege of American citizenship.

MR. FREUD took the floor, but the hour of recess having arrived, he gave way, with the understanding that he should have the floor immediately after recess.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Chinese, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

At twelve o'clock and thirty minutes P. M. the Convention took a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and a quorum present.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Chinese.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen: The report of the Committee on Chinese is before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee: I wish very briefly to speak of the general nature of the Chinese problem, and in order to confine myself more particularly to the subject at hand, I will read the notes I have prepared on this part of the question. How can we solve this Chinese problem? That is to-day the great and vital question of the American Republic. If it is not so to-day, it will be in less than twenty years. It is my firm conviction, in the first place, that the Congress of the United States could completely solve this dangerous question inside of twenty-four hours, if it so desired. It therefore remains for the State of California, and for this Convention, to attempt it.

I maintain that California, as a loyal state of the American Union, has the moral right, and possesses the legal power, not alone to restrict and prohibit Chinese immigration, but even, if necessary, to remove the Chinese already upon our soil. I propose to clearly demonstrate to you the reason, justice, and truth of this proposition.

As a premise of my argument, I accept the doctrine laid down by Chief Justice Marshall, and sanctioned by the ablest jurists of our country. "The powers of sovereignty are divided between the Federal Government and the governments of the States. They are each sovereign with respect to the objects committed to it, and neither sovereign with respect to the objects committed to the other." Each of the thirteen original States contributed a portion of its sovereignty to the Federal Government. It reserved all the rest for itself and for its citizens. Sovereign rights were reserved to the States. Inalienable rights were reserved to the people. The Constitution of the United States confirms this fact when it says: "The powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Chief among these reserved rights is the universal right of every State to regulate and control its own internal affairs, such as corporations and public works within its borders. Under this reserved right the new Constitution of California prohibits the employment of Chinese by such corporations, or upon such public works.

Again, every State has the avowed power to protect itself against foreign and well known dangerous classes, such as paupers, vagrants, criminals, and persons afflicted with contagious and infectious diseases. This power is a part of the police power of the State. Under this constitutional power of a State, New York and Massachusetts have been upheld by the Courts in turning back criminals from Europe. There is the same authority in California for preventing this State from being deluged with criminal elements from Canton and Hongkong. Upon this power of the State, section one of the article on Chinese is based.

Again, upon this same power of the State to protect itself, section four of the Chinese article is based. This general police power is an inherent part of every sovereignty. It has always existed in the State of California and its various municipalities. By virtue of that power, the infamous sinks of barbarism polluting the very heart of San Francisco ought long ago to have been condemned, exploded, and destroyed.

I come now to the culmination of the argument. All the reserved powers thus far enumerated are the clear and undoubted sovereign rights of every free State of the republic. They will in a degree check this Chinese immigration, but cannot stop the invasion. The question then arises, has the State no more reserved power? I think it has.

Among the reserved rights of the State I claim that there is none so prominent, essential, and constitutional as the right of the State to receive, remove, or repel any person or any people who may be dangerous to its health, to its peace, or its prosperity. No sovereign State on earth ever yielded that right. No sovereign State on earth can exist without that power. Did the American States then cede that power to the General Government? I challenge any man to show me where, or when, or in what words. The fundamental right of every State is to maintain its own existence. Self-preservation is not only the first law of nature, but also the first law of States. California has the right not only to protect but also to preserve herself. California has the right to declare the Chinese, upon her soil dangerous and detrimental to her peace, progress, and prosperity, and therefore to prohibit them hereafter from settling or residing within her borders. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the State has the right to exclude from its soil any and all obnoxious classes. That decision has never been reversed or revoked.

Moreover, in case of actual danger to the well-being and existence of a State, its power as against aliens is sovereign and supreme. There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States that restricts the power of a State to deal with aliens. It leaves with each State the privilege to say what aliens shall come or go. Nor is there anything in the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution to limit the supreme power of the State in this respect, for that amendment applies only to naturalized and native-born citizens. Nor can the Civil Rights Act be raised as a sound objection, for that bill refers to Africans and persons of African descent. Nor can the Burlingame treaty be raised as a sound objection to this power of California to deal with the Chinese. Far too much regard is paid to this one-sided treaty with China.

Nor can it be said that Chinese immigration is a regulation of commerce, and therefore a subject exclusively for Congress to deal with. The Supreme Court of the United States has often decided that the regulation of commerce was never intended to deprive the State of the power of legislating in behalf of the health, life, and safety of its citizens, even if such legislation indirectly affects the commerce of the country.

I claim now that I have established the following incontrovertible facts:

1. The Constitution of the United States is the only paramount and supreme law of the land.

2. It is a reserved right of the State to make its own Constitution and laws, subject only to the plain and explicit declarations of the United States Constitution.

3. The State has sovereign control over its people. It may grant privileges and impose restrictions. For self-preservation or self-protection, it may exclude any save citizens of other States.

4. A foreign treaty is void, so far as it is not in consonance with the Constitution of the United States, or the rights reserved to the States, or to the people.

5. The power to regulate foreign commerce does not imply the right to force upon a free State hordes of coolies of a degraded, servile, and alien race.

From these conclusions, I again declare that California has the right and the power, first: to stop Chinese immigration; and second, to remove the Chinese already on our soil. It remains now for this Convention to solve this problem, and I am in favor of going to the very verge of our utmost authority, and trust to the Supreme Court of the United States to decide if our action is in violation of the Federal Constitution. It is a problem which must be solved. We ought to do it now while we are in the ascendant, or the time may come when we will be in the minority. I care not to look upon the picture of the future of this State and country if this question is not settled soon. White labor must leave us and give place to the Chinese, or else anarchy will take the place of law and order. Let us hope that this Convention will give the subject calm and careful consideration, and arrive at a wise and just conclusion.

SPEECH OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: It is with some degree of diffidence that I rise in this Convention to discuss before gentlemen who are veterans in constitutional debate, a question of this character, and to which I shall be obliged to bring all the light that I can, for the purpose of showing the powers of the State to exclude the Chinese. It is manifestly the object of all the sections presented by the committee, in this article, to reach exclusion; but there is only one section—that is section four—which attempts to reach this question directly, and to say that the Chinese shall be excluded from the State by the power of the State. If this section can be sustained by fair interpretations of the Constitution, and in the light of the highest decisions, we shall find our way clear to provide an effectual cure for the great evil. The task to do so is rendered difficult, because there is considerable friction in the decisions. The Courts have sometimes leaned very perceptibly to the side of the States, and sometimes to the side of Congress, as the repositories of the great powers involved in this question. But had the question of exclusion or immigration come before them with the Chinese invasion as the problem to be solved, instead of the voluntary immigration of Europeans, I opine that the decisions would have run but in one current, and that the preservation of our people from substitution by an inferior race would long since have been a fixed interpretation of the Constitution. All the decisions touching upon this subject are based upon European immigration on the Atlantic coast. It is well known that that class of immigration is the one which this country, down to the present time, has required. It has been essential to our development, to our progress, and to our prosperity. It was a homogeneous element; one which could be solved into the body of the people; one which could take its place as citizens of the republic, and each succeeding wave would ultimately find itself as much American as the wave which preceded it. But, on the other hand, the inundation with which we are threatened is one which we can never digest; one which politically we can do nothing with. The Chairman of the Committee on Chinese has taken the ground that it is incompetent for the State to pass any laws which will exclude the immigration of these people, or of any other class of foreigners. As I was the author of section four, the one which goes directly to exclusion, I would be open to censure could I not bring reasons and authorities to back me up in the position I have taken. The Chairman of the Chinese Committee has commenced by taking the position that for us to pass that section would be an interference with the powers of Congress over commerce, and therefore unconstitutional and void. In section eight, article one, of the Constitution of the United States, we find that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, etc. Conceding, for the sake of argument, that section four would be a regulation of commerce, it does not follow that it is in conflict with the Federal Constitution. The power to regulate commerce is not an exclusive one in Congress. Exclusive powers are of three classes—when granted in terms expressly exclusive; when the States are prohibited from exercising them; and when exclusive in their nature. A power exclusive in its nature must be such that the States can pass no law on the subject without violating the Constitution.

The power granted to Congress to regulate commerce is not of the character designated in either of the above classes. Justice Story, in the case of Houston vs. Moore, 5 Wheaton, 48, has clearly illustrated the principle which underlies this grant of power as existing in the Federal Constitution. He says:

"The Constitution, containing a grant of powers in many instances similar to those already existing in the State governments, and some of these being of vital importance also to State authority and State legislation, it is not to be admitted that a mere grant of such powers in affirmative terms to Congress does, per se, transfer an exclusive sovereignty on such subjects to the latter. On the contrary, a reasonable interpretation of that instrument necessarily leads to the conclusion that the powers so granted are never exclusive of similar powers existing in the States, unless where the Constitution has expressly in terms given an exclusive power to Congress, or the exercise of a like power is prohibited to the States, or there is a direct repugnancy or incompatibility in the exercise of it by the States."

To make this position stronger and clearer, I shall quote from the decision of the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Gibbons against Ogden, 9 Wheaton, 204. The Court says:

"If a State, in passing laws on a subject acknowledged to be within its control, and, with a view to those subjects, shall adopt a measure of the same character with one which Congress may adopt, it does not derive its authority from the particular power which has been granted, but from some other which remains with the State, and may be executed by the same means. All experience shows that the same measures, or measures scarcely distinguishable from each other, may flow from distinct powers; but this does not prove that the powers are identical. Although the means used in their execution may sometimes approach each other so nearly as to be confounded, there are other situations in which they are sufficiently distinct to establish their individuality."

I cite the above authorities mainly for the purpose of refuting, at the start, the position of the Chairman of the committee, that because the power to regulate commerce is vested in Congress, section four of the article on Chinese must necessarily be unconstitutional.

But I place the constitutionality of the proposition on a much higher and wider ground. I place it on the broad and inalienable right which every sovereign State, which every organized community has, to protect itself from injury, and to promote the welfare of its people. The police powers of a State are only limited by the character and extent of the evils which may be inflicted upon it from within, or which may threaten it from without.

I believe that public opinion in this State has emphatically pronounced upon the Chinese infliction. There is no question agitating the people of California upon which there is so unanimous an expression. The evil is in the unrestricted immigration of a race peculiar in its civilization; one that can never be digested into the body of the people; one which no process of education or contact can cause it to assimilate with us politically, socially, or morally; one which, in the lapse of centuries, should it unfortunately remain with us, would be the same as to-day, and prove an insoluble and heterogeneous element in our population; one which, by its peculiar composition, has the undoubted faculty to supplant our own people and become the conquerors of our State by a process which is more potent and irresistible than the march of victorious armies through our territories, or the successful invasion of our shores by hostile fleets.

If a State has the undoubted power to protect its people from moral and physical infection from abroad; if, under its police and quasi-commercial powers, it can shut its ports to smallpox and contagious fevers, to leprosy and elephantiasis, to foreign convicts and foreign paupers, why, I ask you, has it not the power to deny the hospitality of its territory to a race who are slowly, but surely and insidiously, substituting themselves for our own people? Is it within the line of logical reasoning that a State can protect its people from disease, but yet has not the power to save them from annihilation? Are the institutions of the country founded on so flimsy a basis that States may invoke the highest and exercise the most sweeping powers to quarantine a few unfortunate passengers afflicted with disease, but that they cannot deny the entrance to their ports of swarms of Asiatics, whose presence in their midst is fraught with evils compared with which a plague is the acme of blissful visitation?

It is no answer to say that the Chinese have the same natural rights which our own people possess. The assumption is undoubtedly true in its proper sense. They have the same inherent rights in China which our own people have here. But they cannot carry those rights with them to this country to the injury of our own people, and when they do so to the extent of destroying the field of labor to those who possess it of right, they become aggressive and injurious, and instead of being wronged by a denial of asylum, our own people are rescued from an act of injustice of tremendous scope.

Life, Mr. Chairman, is a game at which we all have to play. If we play it fairly, the losers will have no right to complain. But if the winners, who have swept the board, use their gains for the purpose of crushing the losers out of existence, they traverse the rules and assume too much. We say to them, it is all very well for you to carry off your winnings and enjoy them. That was a condition of the game and we abide by it. We accept the poverty and toil which is our lot by chance; but we forbid you from so using the wealth you have won from us as to deny us even the natural right of making a living. We shall protect you in your gains. Your wealth shall receive all the safeguards arising from established law. You can build castles, clothe yourselves in gorgeous attire, roll in stately equipages, and live upon the costliest luxuries. In the right to all these we shall see that you are not molested. But you must observe the rules of the game. You must allow us to exist in our sphere while we guarantee you immunity in yours. It is yours to luxuriate in your winnings, it is ours to subsist by the exercise of natural faculties which God has given us, and which were not included in the stakes that could be put to the hazard. Beware how you interfere with our right! When you do so the compact is broken, and you shall be left to protect your gains as best you may. You will have forfeited your right to call upon us to save you, and we shall leave you to your fate.

Whenever a community is threatened with an evil so sweeping in its character that it not only involves great immediate distress to a large class of its people, but even the ultimate displacement of the great bulk of its natural population, the right of self-preservation may be properly invoked and exercised. That right exists as well in the sovereign State as it does in the supreme government. Vattel says, in book second, chapter seven, section seventy-four: "The sovereign may forbid the entrance of his territory either to foreigners in general, or in particular cases, or to certain persons, or for certain particular purposes, according as he may think it advantageous to the State." The right I invoke is a natural right, which no government can with safety deny to any organized portion of its people, and which no respectable jurist has ever pretended did not exist in all organized communities.

Justice Barbour, in giving the opinion of the Court in the celebrated case of New York vs. Miln, defines this right as not only an unquestioned power of the State, but declares that its exercise, under proper provocation, is the "bounden and solemn duty of a State." I quote from 11 Peters, 138, in which Justice Barbour says:

"But we do not place our opinion on this ground. We choose rather to plant ourselves on what we consider impregnable positions. They are these: That a State has the same undeniable and unlimited jurisdiction over all persons and things within its territorial limits, as any foreign nation, where that jurisdiction is not surrendered or restrained by the Constitution of the United States. That by virtue of this, it is not only the right, but the bounden and solemn duty of a State, to advance the safety, happiness, and prosperity of its people, and to provide for its general welfare by any and every act of legislation which it may deem to be conducive to these ends, where the power over the particular subject, or the manner of its exercise, is not surrendered or restrained in the manner just stated. That all those powers which relate to merely municipal legislation, or what may, perhaps, more properly be called internal police, are not thus surrendered or restrained; and that, consequently, in relation to these, the authority of a State is complete, unqualified, and exclusive."

It has been claimed, but not successfully, that the decision in the case of New York vs. Miln was overruled in the celebrated Passenger decision. I submit to the lawyers who have carefully analyzed the majority opinions in the Passenger cases, that there is a great deal of technical refining and hair-splitting as well as irreconcilable friction in those opinions. It is a fact, too, worthy of notice, that the Court was very evenly divided, as there were five affirmative to four negative opinions rendered.

The Miln decision, however, was concurred in by six out of the seven Justices of the Supreme Court. The interpretations of the Court in that case were the unquestioned interpretations of the Federal Constitution on the power of the States over immigration for eleven years, and a whole line of decisions were predicated upon the doctrines and principles enunciated in that case.

In eighteen hundred and forty-eight, however, came the celebrated Passenger decision, from which has dated another line of opinions encroaching upon the right of the States to protect themselves from injurious immigration. But the internal history of this decision would not warrant for it the respect and prestige which it seems to have obtained. The Supreme Bench at that time was composed of nine members, and they stood, as I have said, five to four. Justices McLean, Catron, McKinley, Grier, and Wayne concurred in their conclusions, though they diverged very materially in their reasoning. The dissenting Justices were Taney, Daniel, Nelson, and Woodbury, all of whom, excepting Nelson, delivered very elaborate opinions. These opinions, in the judgment of many able constitutional lawyers, had the argument, even if the others carried off the verdict by a scratch. It is possible that the bare majority was, in this case, as majorities have often been in other cases, wrong, and the minority right. It was only a triumph of one vote, and, in a matter involving principles of so vital importance as those at stake in this judicial lottery, this fact would go far with me to lessen the value of the decision.

It certainly would not dampen my hope in the successful maintenance of the principles which I now claim as sound if they should be submitted to the highest judicial test. Especially would I feel sanguine of their favorable consideration when applied to the influx of a class of people, who, unlike those involved in that decision, can never by any process of mutation, become American, and who will forever, if they remain in our midst, continue to be an incongruous, distinctive, injurious, and disturbing element.

While on the subject of the New York and Boston Passenger decision, permit me to quote the judicial opinion of Chief Justice Taney as to its value as standard authority touching this line of subjects. I read from 17 Curtis, 219:

"If the decision now made is to come in conflict with the principles maintained in that case—that is, the Miln case—those who follow us in these seats must hereafter decide between the two cases, and determine which of them best accords with the true construction of the Constitution, and ought therefore to stand."

But even Justice McLean, who delivered the leading opinion of the majority of the bench in the Passenger cases, admits that a State has the right to protect herself from such an infliction as California is now enduring from the Mongolian irruption. I quote the following from Justice McLean's opinion, 17 Peters, 130: "In giving the commercial power to Congress, the States did not part with the power of self-preservation, which must be inherent in every organized community. They may guard against the introduction of anything which may corrupt the morals or endanger the health or lives of their citizens." And in this enunciation he is supported by Justices Grier and Wayne. I ask for no broader interpretation of the power than is there given by an unfriendly Judge to justify the adoption of my proposition in this Constitution. Chief Justice Taney, in his dissenting opinion in these cases, amplifies and emphasizes the principle so concisely interpreted by Justice McLean and reiterated by the majority Justices. I now read from 17 Curtis, page 195, from Chief Justice Taney's opinion, in which he says:

"If the people of the several States of this Union reserved to themselves the power of expelling from their borders any person, or class of persons, whom it might deem dangerous to its peace, or likely to produce a physical or moral evil among its citizens, then any treaty or law of Congress invading this right and authorizing the introduction of any person, or description of persons, against the consent of the State, would be an usurpation of power which this Court could neither recognize nor enforce. I had supposed this question not now open to dispute. It was distinctly decided in Holmes vs. Jennison, 14 Pet. 530; in Groves vs. Slaughter, 15 Peters, 449, and in Prigg vs. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 539.

"If these cases are to stand, the right of the State is undoubted, and it is equally clear, that, if it may remove from among its citizens any person, or description of persons, whom it regards as injurious to their welfare, it follows that it may meet them at the threshold and prevent them from entering. For it will hardly be said that the United States may permit them to enter, and compel the State to receive them, and that the State may immediately afterwards expel them. There could be no reason of policy or humanity for compelling the States, by the power of Congress, to imbibe the poison, and then leaving them to find a remedy for it by their own exertions and at their own expense. Certainly, no such distinction can be found in the Constitution, and such a diversion of power would be an inconsistency, not to say an absurdity, for which, I presume, no one will contend. If the State has the power to determine whether the persons objected to shall remain in the State in association with its citizens, it must, as an incident inseparably connected with it, have the right also to determine who shall enter."

I now quote from Justice Woodbury's minority opinion in the Passenger cases, 17 Curtis, 253. He says:

"The best writers on national law, as well as our own decisions, show that this power of excluding emigrants exists in all States which are sovereign. (Vattel, B. 1, C. 19, Sec. 231; 5 Howard, 525, 629; New York vs. Miln, 11 Peters, 142; Prigg vs. Pennsylvania, 16 Peters, 625, and Holmes vs. Jennison, 14 Peters, 565.)

"Those coming may be voluntary emigrants from other nations, or traveling absentees, or refugees in revolutions, party exiles, compulsory victims of power, or they may consist of cargoes of shackled slaves, or large bands of convicts, or brigands, or persons with incendiary purposes, or imbecile paupers, or those suffering from infectious diseases, or fanatics, with principles and designs more dangerous than either, or under circumstances of great ignorance, as liberated serfs, likely at once, or soon, to make them a serious burden in their support as paupers, and a contamination of public morals. There can be no doubt, on principles of natural law, of the right to prevent the entry of these, either absolutely or on such conditions as the State may deem it prudent to impose."

Again he says:

"And it is not a little remarkable, in proof that this power of exclusion still remains in the States rightfully, that while, as before stated, it has been exercised by various States in the Union, some as to paupers, some as to convicts, some as to slaves, and some as to free blacks, it never has been exercised by the General Government as to mere aliens, not enemies, except so far as included in what are called the Alien and Sedition Laws of seventeen hundred and ninety-eight. By the former, being 'An Act concerning aliens,' passed June fifteenth, seventeen hundred and ninety-eight (1 Statutes at Large, 571), power was assumed by the General Government in the time of peace to remove or expel them from the country; and that Act, no less than the latter, passed about a month after (ibid. 596), was generally denounced as unconstitutional, and suffered to expire without renewal, on the ground, among others assigned for it, that if such a power existed at all, it was in the States and not in the General Government, unless under the war power, and then against alien enemies alone."

The same Justice says:

"Considering the power to forbid as existing absolutely in a State, it is for the State, where the power resides, to decide on what is sufficient cause for it—whether municipal or economical, sickness or crime, as for example, danger of pauperism, danger to health, danger to morals, danger to property, danger to public principles by revolutions and change of government, or danger to religion. This power over the person is much less than that exercised over ships and merchandise under State quarantine laws, though the General Government regulates for duties and commerce the ships and their cargoes. If the power be clear, however, others may differ as to the expediency of the exercise of it, as to particular classes, or in a particular form; this cannot impair the power."

Again he says:

"The power of the State in prohibiting rests on a sovereign right to regulate who shall be her inhabitants—a right more vital than that to regulate commerce by the General Government, and which, as independent or concurrent, the latter has not disturbed, and should not disturb."

I think that these authorities are clear enough. If they are sound constitutional interpretations, the proposition to exclude the Chinese, as I have undertaken to do it in my amendment, is based on an unmistakable power, not only existing in the State, but on a right which the Federal Government could not contravene without committing an act of usurpation, overriding the Constitution itself. The doctrine set forth is founded in reason. If the power of exclusion exist, it should exist in the State rather than the Federal Government. (17 Curtis, 196.) It is a discretionary power to be exercised according to the judgment of the party possessing it. The State could alone exercise this power with discretion, for it would feel and know whether any particular class or description of persons is likely to produce discontent or taint the morals of its citizens, or increase their burdens, or (as in the case of the Chinese evil) wipe out American labor and reduce the State to the condition of a Chinese province.

Before leaving this branch of the subject, I desire to refer you to another opinion of Justice McLean, in which he seems to have gone even further than Chief Justice Taney in asserting for the States the right to protect themselves from the introduction of objectionable persons from abroad. I refer to the case of Groves vs. Slaughter, 15 Peters, 508, in which Justice McLean says:

"Each State has a right to protect itself against the avarice and intrusion of the slave-dealer; to guard its citizens against the inconveniences and dangers of a slave population. The right to exercise this power by a State is higher and deeper than the Constitution. The evil involves the prosperity, and may endanger the existence of a State. Its power to guard against or to remedy the evil rests upon the law of self-preservation—a law vital to every community, and especially to a sovereign State."

It is conceded that the great bulk of the Chinese in this State come here under contracts for service for a term of years, and that they are virtually in a state of peonage, one of the most odious forms of slavery. This fact gives great appositeness to the above citation, and the doctrine which Justice McLean there judicially affirms is wide enough to give my proposition free and full admittance into the holy of holies of the sacred constitutional circle.

The United States Supreme Court, in the cases of Gibbons vs. Ogden, and Brown vs. The State of Maryland, had laid down the rule that a State might do whatever was necessary to protect itself internally, its quarantine, police, pilot laws, etc., all relating to and connected with navigation and commerce. But in the case of New York vs. Miln, this principle was more broadly and fully enunciated. After declaring that the authority of a State is "complete, unqualified, and exclusive," in relation to those powers which refer to municipal legislation, the Court says, 11 Peters, 138:

"Every law came within this description which concerned the welfare of the whole people of a State, or any individual within; whether it related to their rights or their duties; whether it respected them as men or as citizens of the State; whether in their public or private relations; whether it related to their rights of persons or of property; or of the whole people of a State, or of any individual within it."

Again, in the same case (New York vs. Miln, 11 Peters, 148), the Court says:

"Can anything fall more directly within the police power and internal regulation of a State than that which concerns the care and management of paupers or convicts, or any other class or description of persons that may be thrown into the country, and likely to endanger its safety, or become chargeable for their maintenance?"

The principle is maintained through all the decisions, that even the paramount authority of Congress over commerce must not be permitted to interfere with the rights of an organized community of a State to protect itself from evils arising out of a traffic which may be admittedly commercial in its nature. In New York vs. Miln, the Courts deny that persons are commerce. The contrary ground is taken in the Passenger cases as to pasengers; but it is arrived at by a curious and arbitrary mode of substitution. The term "commerce," say some of the Justices, means "intercourse." The Constitution uses the word "commerce," and it requires a considerable stretch of license to strike out that word and substitute for it, or enlarge it by the addition of one which is by no means an equivalent, and which possesses an ampler and more comprehensive scope. I quote on this point from the opinion of Chief Justice Taney in the Passenger cases, 17 Curtis, 222: "The introduction of the word intercourse comes to this: if it means nothing more than the word commerce, it is merely the addition of a word without changing the argument; but if it is a word of larger meaning, it is sufficient to say that then this Court cannot substitute it for the word of more limited meaning contained in the Constitution. In either view, therefore, of the meaning to be attached to this word intercourse, it can form no foundation for an argument to support the power now claimed for the General Government."

It is hardly necessary to say that if the position is maintained that a State has the right to exclude from her territory any class or description of persons who are injurious to the well-being of her people, the treaty power could not invade that right. The treaty power cannot take away any of the powers belonging to the States which have not been delegated to the Federal Government, and which have been reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. By the general power to make treaties, the Constitution manifestly intended only to comprehend those subjects which are usually regulated by treaty, and cannot otherwise be regulated. It must have meant to except out of these the rights reserved to States, for it would be absurd to suppose that the President and the Senate could do by treaty what the whole government is interdicted from doing in any way. The United States Supreme Court, in the case of Holmes vs. Jennison, 14 Peters, 369, says:

"The power to make treaties is given by the Constitution in general terms, without any description of the objects intended to be embraced by it; and, consequently, it was designed to include all those subjects, which, in the ordinary intercourse of nations, had usually been made subjects of negotiation and treaty, and which are consistent with the nature of our institutions, and the distribution of powers between the General and State Governments."

This is a sufficiently clear interpretation of the extent and limitation of the treaty power, and it emphasizes the proposition that a treaty is void and inoperative as soon as it invades the domain of the rights reserved by the States.

I claim that under the interpretations of the Supreme Court of the United States, both when it was disposed to exalt the powers of the Federal Government over questions of this character, and when it ran to the other extreme, it has never attempted to deny the power of a State to protect itself from an evil, whether it had its origin from within, or was forced upon it from without. It only remains for us to show that in this instance we are dealing with an evil. I shall consider it in its political phase. The grand object of the founders of our government was to institute in this country a political system which would derive its force, power, and perpetuity from the people. The very essence of our system is luminously and strikingly defined in the memorable words of Abraham Lincoln: "A government of the people, for the people, and by the people." In order to carry out this grand definition, it is necessary that our people should continue to be homogeneous—that the race which founded this empire should be the permanent occupants of its territory, protected by the higher law of self-preservation from any invasion, peaceful or warlike, which might threaten its integrity, or its power to maintain itself on American soil. To solemnly proclaim that we have established a "government of the people, for the people, and by the people," and then to permit a race which possesses no political faculty in common with ourselves to seize the avenues of industry and compete our own people out of existence, is to reduce that aphorism to a horrible absurdity. Carried to its logical limit, and one which it will surely reach if we fail to interpose an effectual obstruction to the Chinese invasion, the time will come, when at least in this State, there will be no people out of whom the government is to come, or for or by whom it is to be administered. The fundamental law and its interpretations place upon the Chinese the badge of political proscription, and when they shall have overrun our country and competed out of existence our own people, what shall have become of our own system? Where will be its root and prop—its essence and actuality? Where shall we look for its citizens in time of peace, and for its soldiers in time of war? It will be but a hollow shell of its former self—a ghastly mockery of its former greatness—a body without a soul—the gibbering skeleton of a lost republic!

What greater evil could threaten this State than the one which is now in process of realization from the uncontrolled invasion of our territory by the Chinese? An incessant wail of agony is coming up from the people. The political complexion of this Convention is a deep and significant protest against the Asiatic curse. The long suffering of our people has had form and direct expression in the election of one third of the delegates on this floor, and I assume it is a fact not susceptible of contradiction that not a single member of this Convention could have been elected on the openly avowed declaration that he favored the Mongolian influx.

Let us not close our eyes to the magnitude of this question. Let us not, like the optimist ostrich, imagine there is no sirocco sweeping the desert because we have drawn our mantles around our faces and shut our eyes to a self-evident fact. Ah, no! The storm is brooding, and its terrible mutterings have been heard. The bubbles on the surface of the lake do not denote more surely the agitation at the bottom. Already gaunt want has strutted out its skeleton form in our cities. The highways of the country are alive with wanderers, houseless and homeless. The fields and the workshops are crowded with an alien and servile race, while our own people—bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh—are idle and famishing. The Chinese iron is burning into the soul of the toiling masses, who find themselves outcasts at home to make room for the conquering strangers. The evil has already passed its first stage of encroachment. It has supplanted white labor in all the humblest fields of industry. It commenced at the menial employments and has already reached the mechanical. In its insidious progress it will invade every trade and every business, and even American commerce itself may fall into the all-reaching grasp of John Comprador. American civilization cannot flourish by its side, for it will absorb and monopolize the means by which American civilization subsists. It is as impossible for our own people and the Chinese to exist together, as it is for fire to burn in the midst of water. The law of economic forces, as applied to the social system, forbids it. If the Mongolians are to have the unlimited hospitality of our territory, then, in the conflict which must ensue for existence, they will survive and our own people perish. In this conflict they are the fittest, because the cheapest. Is not a result so sweepingly destructive an evil which calls loudly for a remedy? Why, sir, the unrestricted immigration of the Chinese is the sum of all evils, for to us they are annihilation. By their vices they corrupt the morals and taint the blood of our youth; and by their virtues they turn our men and women into wanderers, paupers, and criminals. If there ever were a time and an occasion when the great right of self-preservation should be invoked and exercised, it surely is when a people are threatened with inevitable destruction—and this is such a time and such an occasion.

Will you, gentlemen, who are deeply versed in constitutional law, tell me that this great power can be legally invoked to shut out a pauper, a convict, or a leper, but that it must lie dormant in the face of an evil to which the admission of these would be a blessing? Do you mean to tell me we can guard the State from disease but not from death? Do you tell me that we can deny one pauper the hospitalities of our soil, but that we cannot shut out an alien irruption which will create paupers by the thousand in our midst? Is it possible that we can close the Golden Gate to a single foreign convict, but that we must keep it open to a human stream which is demoralizing the very fountain of society?

You cannot, you dare not answer that in the affirmative. If you were to do so, you would belie your own sense of candor. You would falsify the plain letter of the Constitution of the United States, which solemnly avers that this government was established to promote the welfare of the people. You would challenge the veracity and the understanding of every Judge who has from the Supreme Bench solemnly declared that the power rests in every organized community, in every sovereign State, to protect itself from anything that is likely to produce a physical or a moral evil among its citizens.

It has been our boast, Mr. Chairman, that California is unsurpassed in the grandeur and beauty of her scenery, in the fruitfulness of her soil, in the salubrity of her climate, and in the natural resources which she possesses to sustain a vast and prosperous population. Here, if anywhere on this broad earth, has nature invited the hand of industry to achieve that best of all rewards, a home in which neither poverty nor riches shall come to mar the even happiness of its possessor. Here, if blind avarice for inordinate wealth do not give over our fair fields and rich valleys to a servile race, we shall build up a State whose prosperity will be founded upon the even distribution of its soil among a contented and a homogeneous people. If we preserve this fair land and its industries to our own race, the future of California, measured by the progress she has made in the past, will be splendid beyond the conception of the most sanguine. Young as I am, comparatively, I have seen this State as a wilderness, and almost without a solitary American home. I have seen the turbid waters of the Sacramento when they were as clear and pellucid as those of our mountain lakes. I have crossed the site of this fair city when its houses were tents and its streets an open plain. I have seen our great commercial metropolis when canvass frames marked the places where now rise stately piles of granite, brick, and marble. Having been with the State at its American birth, grown with it from its auspicious infancy to its majestic majority, I love it with an affection as ardent and profound as the love which springs from maternal joys, or that which is inspired by the sublime sentiment of filial devotion. During all these years I have seen the insidious approaches of a blight which has gradually spread, until now it threatens to envelop and crush the industries of the whole State. By voice and pen I gave the note of warning when the danger seemed remote. By voice and pen I labored to awaken our people to a sense of the peril as it grew in proportions. By voice and pen I have continued to appeal to the patriotism of our people to throw off this insidious monster, which is folding itself around the heart of our State, to shake it off, "as shakes the sturdy forest oak its poison vine apart." The time has at last come when the people are aroused to the magnitude of the danger; and the time and the opportunity are now here when we can deal with it effectively. It is for you, gentlemen, to say whether this fair State shall be reserved as the splendid heritage of your own race—as the home of the men who are flesh of your flesh and blood of your blood; or whether it shall be given over to the unarmed but irresistible conquest of a people who are as strange to our manners and our civilization—to our progressive possibilities and our lofty aspirations—as though they had suddenly dropped upon us from another planet. On the one hand, you can make it a splendid American commonwealth, with a destiny bright and glorious beyond parallel; on the other, you can make it the mercenary Mecca of the scum of Asia—a loathsome Chinese province. You can dot our plains and valleys and mountain sides with the happy homes of our own people; or you can desecrate them by turning them over to the occupation of a servile and a despised race.

May it not, Mr. Chairman, be the tristful task of some future Childe Harold, when wandering among the ruins of our young State, to point out the remnants of our fallen temples and crumbled hearths, and truthfully exclaim that > "Time hath not rebuilt them; but upreard

> Barbaric dwellings on their shattered site,
> Which only make more mourn'd and more endear'd
> The few last rays of their far-scattered light,
> And the crush'd relics of their vanished might."

THE CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section one?

SPEECH OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President and gentlemen of the Convention: We have come at last to the consideration of the question for which this Convention was mainly called into existence. Only a few days are left to us to prepare and complete a work which, I believe, is vitally connected with our existence as a nation. When we consider the wars of races which have been waged ever since the creation with more or less bitterness, we perceive that the idea of a universal brotherhood is but the dream of a fanatic. Nature and Nature's God divides mankind into distinctive races. They are made up of antagonistic elements which will no more commingle than fire and water. Nor can they be ever educated up to the point of fraternity. The Mongol will never kneel at your altars nor worship the living God. If he does it will be with a smile of contempt for that which he regards as a weakness. All our symbols of religion, all our hopes of immortality, are a delusion and a snare. To him our civilization is a fraud. In his estimation our virtues are vices, and our charities are false pretenses. All the triumphs of Saxon and Christian religion are to him mockeries. Indeed, sir, there is nothing in which Nature permits any affinity nor any sympathy between the Christian and the Pagan, the Mongol and the Caucasian. In vain, Mr. President, have your Christian churches expended millions of money to plant the cross in heathen soil. In vain have you sent missionaries to find martyrs' graves in the soil of Asia. In vain have your poets sung and your preachers appealed. Paganism, like a black pall, still shrouds the heathen in impenetrable night, where the sun of Christianity can never penetrate. Sir, I have a section that I want to go into this Constitution. I will read it:

"The right is hereby reserved to the State to protect its citizens from pestilence and plague, and, as a police regulation, to prohibit the entry of dangerous or criminal classes."

Sir, this proposed amendment involves the consideration of that provision of the Federal Constitution which declares that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." That, sir, is the language of the Federal Constitution; it is our great compact of union, and we are justly entitled to have it administered in its letter and in its spirit. The section I have offered declares that certain rights are reserved to the State—rights which are vitally essential to her existence as a member of the Federal Union. Is there anything in the Federal Constitution prohibiting this power to enact police regulations for the several States? I answer, no. There is nothing in the Federal Constitution by which, even by implication, this power is delegated to the General Government. I shall be met, sir, by the argument from the other side, that the subject of immigration and the importation of coolies is a regulation of commerce over which Congress has exclusive control. Perhaps I shall be cited to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the celebrated case of Massachusetts, in which that State attempted to prevent the landing of Irish immigrants. It is true that the Federal Courts in that case decided that the State law was unconstitutional, upon the ground that the matter was a commercial regulation, and that the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations is confided to Congress by the Constitution. Mr. President, there is no analogy between the case of Massachusetts and California—no more analogy than nature has created between the Caucasian and the Mongolian races. They are entirely foreign, totally dissimilar, and strangers by the great law of nature and of God himself. In the case of Massachusetts, the question of sanitary necessity did not arise. I have the case here, but there is no use of reading it, you have heard it so often; in it the question of sanitary necessity was not raised. That is a question that never arose in the world before. It has been raised right here in the State of California. Consider, for a moment, a fact which is beyond denial, that there have been five hundred lepers sent here for the purpose of sowing that disease broadcast all over this fair land. That is a fact. We have found it in San Francisco, and we have found it in every town in the State of California. Even here, in Sacramento, there are over fifty cases of leprosy. I can, within sight of this hall, produce over twenty cases of leprosy, that horrible, incurable disease. No human power can relieve the leper from the slow torture, a lingering, living death; there is no cure for the leper. You must understand that most of the press of the State of California is owned by the Six Chinese Companies. They tell me that it is not contagious. They tell you the disease is not contagious. But they do say it is not infectious. I say it is not contagious, but I say it is infectious. Remember, that wherever the coolie has gone, he has spread that disease. Look at the history of the Sandwich Islands. They were the purest blooded people on the face of God Almighty's world, those Kanakas, until these Mongolians came among them. What is the case now? Why, the island to-day is almost decimated from leprosy brought over there by the coolies. Go to other countries where they have gone; the same condition exists there, and I tell you that we have got to put our feet right down and put a clause in the Constitution declaring that they shall not land here, or that the people of the State of California will rise and stop their coming to this country. [Applause.] This section must be put in the Constitution declaring that the coolies must not land on these shores in no instance. We have got to bring this question before the General Government, and the Attorney-General of the State is going to test that matter, and I will show you before I get through, why. I say, Mr. President, that this sanitary question, or necessity, did not arise in this Massachusetts case. I will also show you, before I get through, the difference between a leper and an Irishman or a German.

MR. LINDOW. You had better put that in your pipe and smoke it.

MR. O'DONNELL. May be you don't understand it. I will explain it to you afterwards. [Laughter.] The people of Massachusetts were not subjected to the danger of infection by contact with European immigrants. They were of the same family, the same genealogy, and were children of a common descent. In respect to disease, neither was an exceptional race of people, nor was either afflicted with any horrid form of disease to which the other was a stranger. Not so, sir, with the nations of Asia. Not so with the subjects of the Chinese Empire, who have no more affinity with the European race than the alligators of the Nile. They are like dogs, subject to types of disease which will not yield to our treatment, and which in our materia medica are totally unknown.

Mr. President, it is true that the power to regulate commerce is confided to Congress, by the Constitution, but commerce and immigration are not synonymous terms. "Commerce," says Webster, "is in a general interchange or mutual change of goods, wares, productions, or property of any kind, between nations or individuals, either by barter or by purchase and sale." I am unable to see that the trade in Chinese coolies is in any sense a commercial regulation; and if it be not, then the State, and not Congress, has the right to control it, and to define the limits within which it shall be carried on. The notion that it is a commercial regulation is an error, which may not be retrieved without revolution. It may array this State in opposition to the General Government; and the attempt to plant Asiatic slavery upon the free soil of California may cost more treasure and blood than the destruction of African slavery cost the nation. I have said that the exercise by a State of the power to protect her citizens from plague and pestilence is vitally necessary to her existence as a member of the Federal Union, and this is especially the fact in the case of California. She is isolated—located at a distance of more than three thousand miles from the National Capital. Her ports of entry are the doors through which the dangerous and criminal classes of Asia are entering into our very midst. She is, in fact, by her geographical position, the receiving reservoir of the scum of Asia. Suppose, as in the early history of California, she was this day deprived of communication, except at long intervals of time, with the Central Government. In those days, no man questioned the right of the State and the people to expel the dangerous classes who immigrated here from Sydney, and made California an English penal colony. There were then no questions about commercial regulation in these States; there was no question about that; but the people were under the law of self-preservation; they acted under the law of self-preservation in early days; and I tell you they have got to act under the same laws to-day. It was then the higher law that Congress recognized; and if the people or the State should again put it into execution, we need have no fear that the United States will resist our action.

Mr. Chairman, the judicial power of the United States extends to all cases affecting treaties with foreign nations. In respect to the treaty with China, now universally conceded to be infamous, which authorized Chinese immigration to the United States, I regard it as invalid because it was negotiated upon the hypothesis that Chinese subjects are eligible to American citizenship. That is the essential feature of the treaty. But the error has been exposed by the judicial power of the United States, which has decided that Mongolians are not eligible to citizenship. I ask if this decision is not conclusive of the invalidity of all that portion of the treaty which concedes the eligibility of Chinese to American citizenship; and I submit it to the consideration of the Convention, because it may suggest a remedy for the destruction of the treaty through the agency of the Federal Courts and without the intervention of Congress. History informs us that the hideous Mongol has, at intervals, migrated from his native waters into Christendom. Whenever and wherever he has appeared, our civilization has shrunk before him as before a plague. An able author and statesman asserts that: "It is believed in Europe that one of these great historic movements of the Mongolian race, that in the remote past have dispersed their peoples into less densely populated countries than their own, is now preparing. For instance, the Russians, in pressing recently upon the Asiatic borders of their empire, developed by actual reconnoissance a Chinese army, of which they were totally ignorant, two hundred and fifty thousand strong, and armed, too, with all the effective enginery of modern war, including the Krupp guns. These guns had been made by their own skilled workmen, who had been sent to Europe and secretly taught the art, and Prussian officers had drilled their armies in the use of them."

MR. TULLY. It is evident that there is no quorum present. I would move that there be a call of the House.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from San Francisco is on the floor.

MR. O'DONNELL. Well, I am going to speak on this question if there is only one man here [laughter], and I am going to take my time to it, too. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

MR. KLEINE. I hope he will not be disturbed by the delegates in this Convention.

MR. O'DONNELL. No man knows to-day the strength of the Chinese military establishment. All we see or know of what is going on in China is on the shore edges. It is believed that the skeleton for an army of twenty million already exists. It is believed, further, that the idea of conquest has once again taken possession of the Chinese mind, and that the great Buddhistic family of Asiatic races can be leagued for not only a wholesale raid upon Europe, but also for a descent upon the Pacific Coast of the United States. Such a movement means a possible wiping out of Caucasian civilization. Modern war is now a matter of effective arms, and of a simple and reliable commissariat system. The Mongolian race is capable of great personal prowess. Being fatalists, they dare everything for the end they have in view. Their food is simple, easily supplied, and easily transported. Their endurance of fatigue is proverbial. Once organized and in motion they could swarm into Russia as irresistibly as the locusts of Egypt, and upon the Pacific Coast of this continent as numerous and destructive as grasshoppers. Once started, where would they stop? Civilization would retire before them as from a plague. Look at the plague spots in San Francisco to-day. Nobody lives in them but Chinese. Nobody else can live in them.

Mr. Chairman, for these and many other reasons, I am opposed to the adoption of the report of the majority of the Committee on Chinese. I shall resist any measure which permits the emigration of Asiatics to the soil of America. During our last war with Great Britain, our government found it expedient to pass a law called the Embargo Act, which put an embargo upon all commerce between the United States and England. I am in favor of the same policy of non-intercourse with China. Give us absolute non-intercourse, for in no other way can we hope for safety. Non-intercourse has for ages been the policy of China; and to enforce it literally she built a wall around her vast empire. Referring to Europeans and Americans, the Chinese stigmatized them as outside barbarians. The same measure which China meted out to us we should mete out to her. Give her back her policy of non-intercourse. Let her have no rank or recognition among the list of nations. Let us declare, sir, in the words of Holy Writ, "The heathen is joined to his idols; let him alone."

This is a question with which it is not safe for us to temporize. You cannot make treaties with savages or lepers. Charity begins at home. The first duty we owe is to our own separate humanity, as contradistinguished from the Tartar and coolie. Our own brethren have, by the higher law of nature, the first demand upon our protection. Let us legislate for them and for their widows and orphans. And if it should ever be the will of heaven to find a path for the heathen out of his gloomy jungles into the sunlight of civilization, that power will in its own good time find a Moses to lead them forth.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to occupy on this question but a very few moments in the first place. I know that there are very few members or delegates to this Convention but who are just as much opposed to these coolies as I am. That is my opinion; and my opinion is that they will put provisions in that Constitution that will check this immigration. We know that Christianity and Paganism cannot exist side by side. One or the other must go to the wall. I believe that every delegate in this Convention is convinced of that fact, that Christianity and Paganism cannot exist side by side. Experience has taught us that fact, and it is the duty of this Convention to put a clause in that Constitution to forbid their ever landing on these shores. I say, Mr. Chairman, it is their duty to do it. Humanity demands it. I say humanity demands it. They say if we put a clause in that Constitution saying that they cannot or shall not be allowed to land here it will be unconstitutional. How do they know it will? We must be cruel, in this case, to be kind. Look at the condition of this country to-day. Over ten thousand people in this land to-day are starving and begging their food. "Let them come," you say, "they can get work anywhere." I say it is a lie. You see them starting out every day trying to seek food for their children, and what is the result? Let them come to a farm-house and they will see a coolie there ahead of them, and the farmer will say, "We don't want you." You will find all the manufactories throughout the State carried on by the Chinese leper. They have monopolized every trade in the State. You know that to be a fact. You also know that there are over four hundred and fifty million of these human dogs nearer to us than New York. Consider that fact. Also consider this, that they are building to-day one of the most powerful navies that ever existed in the world. They have got guns of the very largest caliber. It is a fact, and you must consider that there are four hundred million of these human dogs nearer to us than New York. But what do they live on? A white man cannot live as those lepers live. If a white man works for two dollars a day they will work for one dollar a day, and make money at that. If a white man works for one dollar per day they will work for four bits per day, and make money. If a white man works at four bits a day they will work for two bits, and keep a dozen of their country cousins on that. So it is impossible for white labor to compete with those moon-eyed lepers.

Mr. Chairman, taking all these things into consideration, we have come to the conclusion, no matter what fanatics say, that a majority of the people of the State of California have demanded that section in the Constitution. We can never get any redress from Congress. It is impossible. Why? Such men as Colonel Bee, such men as this Gibson, Otis Gibson, went before the committee, the Senatorial committee that was sent out here to investigate that question, and they said that nine twentieths of all the people in the State of California were in favor of the coolie. I say that it is a libel upon humanity. I say it is a libel upon humanity; and for that very reason we cannot get any relief from Congress. What redress we can get is through our own vain arm. You may talk about this thing of police regulation, and if you can tax them you can take this method. I say we can do it. Let us put a clause into the Constitution so that it requires the Attorney-General of the State to defend it. Do not allow individuals to test this case, but let the State itself test it. Suppose we had put a clause in that Constitution which says that they shall not land on these shores; what of it? What of it? It is the express wish of the people of the State, and any man who says it is not, I say he lies, and I can prove it. Mr. Chairman, half the delegates of this Convention I know were elected upon that very issue. This Convention was called upon that express proposition. There was no issue before the people so essential as this Chinese question. Why, you all know as well as I do what the will of the people is. If this exists twelve months longer I tell you the streets of San Francisco will run knee deep in blood. I know it to be a fact, and you know it to be a fact. If they stave this question off, and deny to the people an opportunity, through their delegates, to put a clause in that Constitution to check this Mongolian curse, there will be trouble.

Go with me through the back alleys of San Francisco and I will give you an ocular demonstration of the misery that has been brought upon this country by these coolies. They do not come here as the white man comes to these shores. They don't come here to make a little home for themselves. They don't come here for that purpose. They don't bring their children and their families and their wives here to this country. No; they come here to get all they can get and take it home with them. How do they live there in the City of San Francisco? What has the experience of that city proven to the people of this State? It proves this: in the space—and I dare any gentleman in this house to deny the fact—between California and Pacific, and between Kearny and Stockton streets, there are seventy-nine thousand of these lepers living. I call them lepers because they are nothing else. And how do they live?

They live like hogs,
And die like dogs.

They live on the offal of the slaughter houses. That is the way they live, and no man can deny it. It is a fact that they can live on three and a quarter cents per day. Now, think of it. Three cents and a quarter per day they can live on! And in that small space there are seventy-nine thousand coolies living, in that space bounded by these four streets, and if they lived according to the law or ordinance that passed in San Francisco, called the "cubic air" law, there could only eleven thousand exist in that space. Now, think of that! In that very space, where seventy-nine thousand live, there could not but eleven thousand live under the law, if it was a solid block, four stories high. That, I think, I can prove by gentlemen in my presence. Then, it is not only that, but I tell you that these men were shipped for no other purpose than to spread that disease broadcast over the land. It is a fact. I took the reporters of the Call and the Chronicle, that nameless sheet (laughter), and the Avalanche, through Chinatown, and I showed them that there were over one hundred and fifty cases of leprosy, and I wanted this to be made public and have it written up. But the Six Chinese Companies got hold of the press, and it was quieted, and that was the last of it. But, to prove the fact, I got one in an express wagon and had his likeness taken, and carried him around in the street, and as soon as they saw that fellow, they came to the conclusion that he was a leper. They said, "That is a leper, there is no doubt of that." Well, what was the result? I went afterwards, and found eighteen in one house; I don't know as I should call it house; it was a hole two stories deep, one hundred and fifty feet from the sidewalk. There they were making cigars. Now, think of that. There were three lepers employed making cigars. I came to the conclusion that the only way to stop leprosy was to isolate all that portion of the city. One of the greatest medical men in this State, or in any other State, declared that inside of ten years, if we allow that Chinatown to exist as it is in San Francisco to-day, about three quarters of the population of San Francisco will have that leprosy. It is a fact, Mr. Chairman. I wish to God I could coax this delegation to go through Chinatown for two hours with me. I am satisfied they would put a clause in that Constitution that would prevent them from landing on these shores—I know they would. They tell me that the State has no right to prevent them. I say we have the right. We have the right to prevent any dangerous or criminal classes from landing. Why, we have the testimony of the captains of steamers that it is only the lowest class of Chinamen that come here. I have gone to the officers of these steamers and I know that to be a fact. These captains also say that they are imported here. That is the evidence of the captains and the mates of these steamers that have brought them here. Now, my fellow delegates, it is our duty to protect this coast from being overrun by these pirates. I can produce the best evidence in the world, I can produce it by the Six Chinese Companies themselves, that they are pirates and land sharks, the greater part of them. I can prove it by a gentleman right here. I can prove it by Colonel Bee, if he told the truth; but you can't get the truth out of that man. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I don't want to call any names. When these vessels landed here at one time, pretty near every vessel brought smallpox aboard it. I am a medical man, and, taking an interest in the people, I went down to look after it. I prefer my race to all other races. I went down aboard these ships as soon as they landed to inspect them. Before I got there, sometimes, they had commenced unloading their great cargo of human beings. What was the result? Before I got there, I discovered that there was smallpox on the ship, because I saw men passing on the street who were afflicted with it. They were the first that brought smallpox here. They can't deny it. And they brought it here the last time that it prevailed in San Francisco. Why, I tell you that this government has been run by the Six Chinese Companies for the last six years, and I defy any man to deny that fact. The Six Chinese Companies own this State to-day. Every government official in the State is in the control of the Six Chinese Companies. You can't go anywhere but what you find the Mongolian ahead of the white man. It is a fact. And, under the circumstances, I tell you, my fellow delegates of the Convention, it is your solemn duty that you owe to humanity, to Christianity, and to yourselves, to put a clause in that Constitution which will forever prevent another Mongolian from landing here. I tell you it is your duty—it is your solemn duty. You have seen the condition of your State last Winter, and you will see it in a worse condition this Winter, and all the misery that has been produced here in this golden land has been produced by the importation of these moon-eyed lepers. I tell you it is a fact, and it is a duty you owe to your God and to your families. Pay no attention to anything, but put a clause there, I tell you, my fellow delegates, to stop them. If you do not, now mark this prophecy, if you don't, the people of the State of California will rise en masse and they will march to the wharf and they will sink every vessel that lands here. I know this to be a fact. I know that there are twenty thousand to-day in this State, ready at a moment's warning, to rise and stop these Mongolians from landing here. [Applause.] My fellow workingmen—my fellow delegates—we have had something of this for the last fifteen years. I tell you patience ceases to be a virtue. We see, what? We have seen our boys driven to hoodlumism and our girls driven into the streets. We have seen diseases of the worst kind spread among us, and still we see these lepers flocking in by thousands and tens of thousands. I tell you it is in the interest of capital that they come here. It is the interest of capital who want to employ work to bring them here until they reduce you, my fellow men of the white race, to the same sphere with this leprous race, this black and tan race. I can't conceive the idea why these fanatics prefer this black and tan race to their own race. I don't understand it myself. You will find everywhere they go that they employ this black and tan race in preference to their own race.

Not long since, I had occasion to visit a family where I discovered a small child, which was covered all over with a perfect mass of corruption. I went in and looked at the child, and I told the mother, "The sooner that child dies the better." She looked at me. Says I:

"Madam, that child has got the leprosy; it cannot live; it must die."

"What!" says she.

Says I, "Yes."

Says she, "Is that leprosy?"

Says I, "Yes; and you have got to be very careful or you will get it."

She had never dreamed what was the matter with the child. The father was a seafaring man. He came up and visited me some days afterwards. He was running up the coast, and he had his foot bundled up; and parts of it, when I undid it, dropped off from leprosy. This was the father of the child. I took him in my office, and I immediately sent for a reporter of the Call, because I know that the Call is a just and good paper. I did condescend also to send for the reporter of that nameless sheet. They came in. I immediately placed the man in the chair, and I took off, in their presence, seven joints of the foot. Leprosy! There was a man who had a little child dying from leprosy among the white race right here in the State of California. They don't understand the disease. They say they don't see much of it around. Why? Because they don't know it when they do see it. Then you must understand that it takes six years from the time that it is innoculated into the system before it shows itself. I don't know but two thirds of this delegation here are infected with it. [Applause and laughter.]

MR. FILCHER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

MR. O'DONNELL. Certainly, certainly, sir.

MR. FILCHER. I would like to ask how old was that child you refer to?

MR. O'DONNELL. It was about eight or nine years; between eight and nine years old. [Laughter.] Any other questions you want to ask.

MR. ROLFE. Yes, I have a question.

MR. O'DONNELL. Ask any you please.

MR. ROLFE. Is it the two thirds out of the room or the one third in here that you refer to?

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

MR. O'DONNELL. When it got out in the papers I went to work. I went to the City Physician and got him to go round with me, and showed him this case. He says: "I acknowledge it is leprosy, but what am I going to do? My hands are tied." I said: "If I was in your place I would get rid of this; I would drag it out to the light of the day." "No," he says, "I have no authority to do anything with it under the statute." Then I laid it before the Board of Supervisors, and then I brought it before the Board of Health. I got the Board of Supervisors to go through Chinatown. "Great God," they said, "I never saw such a sight before in my life." They said they had read about such a place as hell, but said this was hell on earth. [Laughter.] They admitted all these facts right there to everybody, but they said they were powerless; they couldn't do anything about it. Then I went before the Board of Health. They went with me, and they admitted the same fact. It was a fact, but what were they going to do about it. They said: "We have got nothing in the statute to relieve us of this noxious pestilence." I then told them I expected I would come up to this Convention, and I would do my best to advocate a measure or clause in the Constitution that they could get assistance from.

Now, my fellow delegates, I appeal to you in the name of humanity, for the love you owe to your race and your God, not to leave this out—not to stop until you put a clause in that Constitution that will stop them from landing here. And I tell you, if you do it—if you put a clause there to prevent them landing here, you will do the greatest deed you have ever done in your life. You will be a monument to the human race. And another thing, my fellow Workingmen—you will elect your men. That clause itself will carry this Constitution next May, safe, by an overwhelming majority. Put that one clause in the Constitution, and I tell you I would pledge you my life that you will carry the Constitution by a tremendous majority—that Constitution would be ratified by a tremendous majority. It is what the people consider the most essential section to be placed in the Constitution. I tell you this Convention was called here for that express purpose—to rid us forever of this noxious pestilence. That was the main object of calling this Convention. There are other questions before the Convention, I know—the question of taxation, the libel question, and this other question we have just got through with. But there are none of those so important as this one, and the moment that section is put there and adopted I tell you you need not be alarmed. Put that section there and you need not be alarmed, for the United States cannot afford to fight the State of California on a question of this kind. Another thing—it will prove to the people of the United States that these men here—this man, Colonel Bee, and this man by the name of Gibson—are libelers upon humanity; it will prove to the world that they are libelers upon humanity. They went before the Senatorial Committee, as I told you, and they swore, point-blank, that nineteen twentieths of the inhabitants of the State of California were in favor of these lepers that were spread broadcast all over the world; and this Black Book, or Blue Book they called it—it had a black cover, the one I saw—these lies have been cast broad over the land; and if you want to redeem yourselves, you can do it by going out like men and inserting that clause.

Mr. Chairman and my fellow delegates, I thank you kindly for your attention. When I came upon the floor I did not intend to continue on this question over five minutes, because I was perfectly convinced that every one of you were in favor of putting that clause in the Constitution, to satisfy the people of the State of California. I knew it was your solemn duty to save the shedding of blood. It is your duty, and you know it. You, my fellow delegates, know as well as I do, if you don't put that clause in, what the result will be; and you, yourselves, will be responsible. You, my fellow delegates of this Convention, will be responsible for every ounce of blood that will be shed in the streets of San Francisco. You know it. You know the people of California have made up their minds, and the safety of this State depends upon that clause. You know it. Pay no attention to anything outside of that. I appeal to any delegate in this Convention. Don't you know that to be the fact; do not you know that the very existence of this State depends upon that? Why, my fellow delegates, I would not dare to go back to the place where I came from, after living there twenty-eight years, without seeing that clause in the Constitution. They will accept nothing else. Why do you talk to me about the idea of taxing them? That will only tantalize them, and allow such men as Colonel Bee and this other preacher to spread their lies in regard to the people of California. I thank you kindly, Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Chinese, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

RECESS.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now take a recess until seven o'clock.

MR. HILBORN. I move we adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was lost, on a division, by a vote of 47 ayes to 68 noes.

THE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion that the Convention take a recess until seven o'clock P. M.

The motion prevailed.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at seven o'clock P. M.

THE SECRETARY. The Convention will please come to order and elect a temporary Chairman.

MR. HUESTIS. I nominate Mr. Howard, of Los Angeles.

MR. HOWARD. I will have nothing to do with it. I nominate Mr. Larkin.

THE SECRETARY put the question, and Mr. Larkin was elected temporary Chairman, and called the Convention to order.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE—MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I rise to a question of privilege. I hold in my hand a publication entitled the Daily Evening Post, a newspaper published in San Francisco on Saturday, December seventh, wherein is an article purporting to be correspondence from Sacramento, touching the proceedings of this Convention. I send up the article, and I ask to have it read, that which I have marked.

THE CHAIR. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"But my alarm, as I now see, was wholly groundless. The proposition to regulate by a Commission, was not, as I then supposed, originated by the enemies of the railroad, but by the Central Pacific Railroad directory itself. And I now assert my confident belief that the railroad magnates originated the scheme. Stanford is the Tallyrand of this coast, and he knows how to circumvent even honest men and make them do his bidding, even without expenditure of a single dollar. He wants a Commission, and he is perfectly willing that it shall have absolute power, even to confiscate."

MR. BARBOUR. I would not have troubled this Convention with this question of privilege, but for the extraordinary nature of the attack on myself and some of my associates on the Committee on Corporations, which appears to require some notice from some member of the Committee on Corporations. I profess to believe in the unfettered freedom of the press, and I profess to be a friend of reform, but when I see a masked battery being uncovered to rake my friends and those associated with me, I will spike the guns, if I can. What I take exceptions to is, the statement that the scheme of a Commission originated with the directory of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. I take it that this Convention will hardly believe that Messrs. Estee and Howard, and others, are the unwitting tools of the railroad company. Besides, a large majority of the Convention voted for the scheme, and yet the article makes them but a lot of hypocritical pretenders.

It says again: "They have made no real fight." What an infamous lot we must be! Let me state the history of this Commission scheme in the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, as I remember it, so that this brazen lie may be seen and known of men. When our Committee on Corporations reached the subject-matter of railroad regulation, there were two propositions for a Commission before us—one by Mr. Campbell, of Alameda, and one by Mr. White, of Santa Cruz. We made no use of Mr. Campbell's proposition, so that is aside from this question. Mr. White is here and can speak for himself, but I vouch it to be a barefaced lie that he was used, directly or indirectly, by the railroad. Then an expression of opinion was taken, and there was not a dissenting voice from the proposition that fares and freights can be established and regulated by a general law. Then we had in Mr. Commissioner Tuttle, and his idea was to let the railroads alone. And then we discussed the subject of a Constitutional Commission, and our Chairman brought in the raw draft of a section, and I also brought in one. After discussing these a sub-committee, consisting of Messrs. White, Gregg, West, and myself, were appointed to bring in a draft of a section. We did so; and from that, and with Mr. White's plan and my plan, and from the Chairman's plan, and from suggestions by members of the committee, the section as reported was gotten up. Two of us dissented from two or three features of it, but all were in favor of a Commission. That is the plain history of the section in committee. If the Central Pacific Railroad directory ever had anything to do with getting it up I never heard of it, and I think I may safely say the same thing of every member of the committee. If the railroads were for or against it, my judgment approved it, and that was enough for me, and I think I may say the same for every other member of the committee. I do know this, that the Central Pacific Railroad Company fought the only Commission we have had in this State, and had them legislated out of office before they ever got sight of the books. One word as to the animus. I look beyond the writer of this article, to the power which controls and directs the newspapers of this coast. This is for the world outside, and the world is to be made to believe that the railroad company has played a huge practical joke on the Convention to make it take their medicine; just as my grandfather used to cheat his cattle to make them eat straw. His grain and his hay had given out and the Winter was still on, and he had nothing but a stack of straw. The cattle were too high-toned to eat straw. The old gentleman then drove the cattle away from the stack, and set his dogs on them whenever they came up to it for awhile, and then they were determined to eat the straw. So this Convention seems to have been managed. By such humbugging dodges as these, sir, it is sought to bring the Commission scheme into disrepute. The railroad company never have been and never will be in favor of a Commission. The strategy, my boy, is too transparent. And then an allusion is thrown in for the Workingmen's party, to which I belong. We are told that we will capture the next Legislature, and that the railroad company cannot control it. That is true, sir, but we will also elect the Commissioners, and our Legislature will be there to brace them and fortify them with power, if honest, and throw them out neck and heels, if dishonest; and our Governor will be there to appoint honest men in their places. Let no man be deceived by these subterfuges. It will be time enough to believe that the railroad company are in favor of the Commission when they shall use their influence to secure the ratification of the Constitution containing the provision, and not till then.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. President: I wish to say a word in regard to my connection with this Commission idea. As soon as I was elected to the Convention, I undertook to read everything that was written with regard to the railroads. I spent a great deal of my time at it. I corresponded with the Secretaries of every State in the Union. Some twenty-seven of them answered. From the ideas I got, I came to the conclusion that there was only two remedies. One was to buy all the railroads out, and the other was to appoint a Commission to direct and control them, and say what the fares and freights should be. There should be nothing but absolute power. I drew a draft of a Constitution, in which I adopted the idea, before coming here at all. I will say here that I never spoke to one of the Directors, and I do not know them now. This Constitution, which I drafted and published before I left my farm in Santa Cruz, contains this section pretty much as it now stands as finally adopted, with about the same powers. I will ask the Secretary to read three sections from my proposed Constitution.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 12. The Railroad Commissioners provided for in this Constitution shall have absolute power to fix the rates of fares and freights of all railroads in this State, and shall regulate and establish them as in their judgment shall seem just and fair to the railroad owners and to the public generally.

"SEC. 13. Once in each year the Railroad Commissioners shall readjust the rates of fares and freights of all railroads in the State, and
