REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I trust the amendment will prevail, and the reason I do so is that I believe it will meet the sentiments of the people. The way criminals are sentenced now is a mere farce. Every man who is convicted of a crime expects to get out. After he has packed wood for a year, a petition is got up by somebody and sent round, and signatures obtained, and the Governor is imposed upon, and pardons the man out. I think if they knew they would have to suffer, they would be more careful about committing crimes. But they feel pretty sure that they will get out in a year or two at most, and so the punishment has no terrors for them. I believe that the pardoning power has been greatly abused in the past, and many times executive clemency is granted when it is unmerited. The Governor is imposed upon over and over again, and I believe that this power should have guards and restrictions thrown around it in some way. I trust for these reasons that the amendment will prevail.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I cannot support the amendment because it is practically destroying the pardoning power. Neither do I agree with the proposition so generally expressed here, that the pardoning power has been abused. I have been in the State a long time, and except in a few instances of unintentional abuse, there has been none. The whole object of the pardoning power is to act upon precisely the same evidence upon which the defendant was convicted, and to exercise the quality of mercy upon that evidence. This argument is that the Executive is the safest depository for the pardoning power, because there the responsibility is direct. You hold the Governor responsible, and the political party by which he was elected is also made responsible, for unfortunately in this country we never will be able to get rid of party government, and the responsibility is best placed when it reflects upon not only the officer, but upon the party that elects him. Therefore, dividing the power will cure no evil, but will augment it, and if the error has been on the side of mercy, if you divide the power, it will be still more loosely exercised than before. I shall read a couple of paragraphs on this subject from Story. He handles the subject with his usual ability and learning. I read paragraph fourteen hundred and ninety-four, page three hundred and seventeen. He says:

"The next power is 'to grant reprieves and pardons.' It has been said by the Marquis Beccaria that the power of pardon does not exist under a perfect administration of laws, and that the admission of the power is a tacit acknowledgment of the infirmity of the course of justice. But if this be a defect at all, it arises from the infirmity of human nature generally, and in this view is no more objectionable than any other power of government, for every such power in some sort arises from human infirmity. But if it be meant that it is an imperfection in human legislation to admit the power of pardon in any case, the proposition may well be denied, and some proof at least required of its sober reality. The common argument is, that where punishments are mild they ought to be certain, and that the clemency of the chief magistrate is a tacit disapprobation of the laws. But surely no man in his senses will contend that any system of laws can provide for every possible shade of guilt a proportionate degree of punishment. The most that ever has been and ever can be done is to provide for the punishment of crimes by some general rules, and within some general limitations. The total exclusion of all power of pardon would necessarily introduce a very dangerous power in Judges and juries of following the spirit rather than the letter of the laws, or out of humanity, of suffering real offenders wholly to escape punishment; or else it must be holden (what no man will seriously avow) that the situation and circumstances of the offender, though they alter not the essence of the offense, ought to make no distinction in the punishment. There are not only various gradations of guilt in the commission of the same crime which are not susceptible of any previous enumeration and definition, but the proofs must in many cases be imperfect in their own nature, not only as to the actual commission of the offense, but also as to the aggravating or mitigating circumstances. In many cases convictions must be founded upon presumptions and probabilities. Would it not be at once unjust and unreasonable to exclude all means of mitigating punishment when subsequent inquiries should demonstrate that the accusation was wholly unfounded, or the crime greatly diminished in point of atrocity and aggravation from what the evidence at the trial seemed to establish? A power to pardon seems indeed indispensable under the most correct administration of the law by human tribunals, since otherwise men would sometimes fall a prey to the vindictiveness of accusers, the inaccuracy of testimony, and the fallibility of jurors and Courts. Besides, the law may be broken, and yet the offender placed in such circumstances that he will stand in a great measure, and perhaps wholly, excused in moral and general justice, though not in the strictness of the law. What, then, is to be done? Is he to be acquitted against the law; or convicted, and to suffer punishment infinitely beyond his deserts? If an arbitrary power is to be given to meet such cases, where can it be so properly lodged as in the executive department?

"The power to pardon, then, being a fit one to be intrusted to all governments, humanity and sound policy dictate that this benign prerogative should be as little as possible fettered or embarrassed. The criminal code of every country partakes so much of necessary severity that, without an easy access to exceptions in favor of unfortunate guilt, justice would assume an aspect too sanguinary and cruel. The only question is, in what department of the government it can be most safely lodged? and that must principally refer to the executive or legislative departments. The reasoning in favor of vesting it in the executive department may be thus stated: a sense of responsibility is always strongest in proportion as it is undivided. A single person would, therefore, be most ready to attend to the force of those motives which might plead for a mitigation of the rigor of the law, and least apt to yield to considerations which were calculated to shelter a fit object of its vengeance. The consciousness that the life or happiness of an offender was exclusively within his discretion would inspire scrupulousness and caution; and the dread of being accused of weakness or connivance would beget circumspection of a different sort. On the other hand, as men generally derive confidence from numbers, a large assembly might naturally encourage each other in acts of obduracy, as no one would feel much apprehension of public censure. A public body, too, ordinarily engaged in other duties, would be little apt to sift cases of this sort thoroughly to the bottom, and would be disposed to yield to the solicitations, or be guided by the prejudices of the few, and thus shelter their own acts, of yielding too much or too little, under the common apology of ignorance or confidence. A single magistrate would be compelled to search and act upon his own responsibility, and, therefore, would be at once a more enlightened dispenser of mercy, and a more firm administrator of public justice."

I think, sir, that we had better leave this matter where it is. The Executive is compelled to act with more consideration and caution alone than he would be if other parties were associated with him, and we know who is to be held responsible, and to be censured in case he abuses the pardoning power.

SPEECH OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Diego will prevail. As for myself, I would be in favor of the total abolition of the pardoning power. It was a power exercised by the kings and monarchs of Europe as a matter of divine justice placed in them, placing them over and above the law and the Courts.

MR. REDDY. Is it not also exercised by God Almighty according to all religious notions?

MR. BEERSTECHER. I am not here to discuss the limitations of the power of God Almighty, so I am not prepared to answer the question. Now, whenever a pardon is granted, under this system which allows pardons to be granted without stating the reasons or cause, it is a direct acknowledgment of the fallibility of judicial proceedings. Pardons, as a rule, are granted, not for the reason that anything new intervenes in favor of the prisoner, but they are granted almost solely and exclusively through the favor of political influence. There may be exceptions to the rule, but generally pardons are granted through pressure brought to bear upon the Chief Executive by reason of great political influence or the influence of friends.

Now, Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, says that a pardon shall not be granted unless upon newly discovered evidence. What objection is there to that? Who can say that it is not right and just? What possible objection can be urged to it? Or, if the injustice of the sentence is made apparent, the pardon can be granted. These are the only two grounds upon which pardons should ever be granted: first, newly discovered evidence; or, second, where the injustice of the sentence is apparent. Then if the Executive grants a pardon, he must specifically state the newly discovered evidence upon which he predicates the pardon, or point out the injustice of the sentence. And it seems to me that in no case other than these two which I have mentioned should a pardon be granted. With due deference to the opinions of the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry, I don't see that he has made any argument at all, or given any good reason why this amendment should not prevail. He states a case where men are brought up and tried by a jury of their countrymen. After a thorough investigation into the facts of the case, these jurymen find him guilty of murder. They are men who come from among the people, representing the sympathies of the people. If a man is not prepared to influence the sympathies of twelve jurors who are unanimous in their verdict, or if he cannot influence the sympathy of one out of the twelve, I say he is guilty, and upon that verdict he is sentenced to the State Prison. Then I must say, Mr. President, that I don't see any reason why the Governor should step in, and of his own volition, and without cause or reason, grant a pardon and turn that man out of jail.

The gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Johnson, raised the objection that by the terms of this amendment the burden of proving innocence rests upon the convicted person, and that thus the rule of law, which says the burden is on the State to prove his guilt, is reversed. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in this case the situation has been reversed. The State has already proved the guilt of the prisoner, and the prisoner is no longer in the position of an innocent man, and it is then for him to remove the shadow that rests upon him, and prove his own innocence. It is not for the State to keep on proving the guilt of persons who have been convicted on legal judicial proceedings. After conviction the man occupies a different position, and it is incumbent upon him then to show that he is innocent. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from San Diego will prevail. If it does prevail, it will wipe out all the rottenness existing in the system of granting pardons, and place pardons, first, upon the basis of newly discovered evidence showing that the man was not guilty, and second, that the sentence is an unjust sentence. It will work a beneficial change in the system, in my humble opinion.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I did not intend to say anything about this matter. It is a matter that I was willing to cast my vote upon. But from the speeches I have heard I think there is great misapprehension as to the number of persons pardoned in this State. I had occasion to inquire into this matter a short time ago, and I found that out of the thousands and thousands convicted in this State during the last twenty-eight years, not over seven hundred and thirty have been pardoned. Out of that immense number only seven hundred and thirty have been pardoned. Can any one say that the pardoning power has been abused? We have often seen cases where the Governor refused to pardon a man when we thought he should. I believe the power is not so much abused in this State. There are cases where strong pressure is brought to bear for the conviction of a man, and in cooler moments the jury who brought the verdict, and the Judge who sentenced him, join in signing a petition for his pardon.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Can the gentleman cite an instance where a poor man has been pardoned?

MR. LARKIN. Yes, sir, many a one. I can cite cases in the County of El Dorado, because we are all poor men up there. I do not know, in the whole long list of Governors of this State, where wealth or power has ever controlled any one of them, and I do not believe that any gentleman will charge that any one of them has ever been so controlled. From the first to the last I have known them all, and no man to-day that knew these men will get up and state that one of them ever bowed to wealth in the exercise of the pardoning power. I defy the gentleman to point out one instance where any Governor of this State has fallen down to money or power in the exercise of the pardoning power. I have never heard of political influence influencing any Governor in these matters. I cannot believe that any man whom the people of the State of California would intrust with this high position would stoop so low as to allow political prejudice or political friendship to swerve him from his line of duty. Insinuations such as these should not have been heard on this floor.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman misunderstood me if he gathered any such ideas from what I had to say on this subject. In speaking of the abuse of that power, I had no thought that any Governor had ever been unduly influenced, or ever corrupted, in granting pardons. I certainly could not have intimated any such a thing. I only intended to say that I believed every man here would agree with me that the sympathies of a man have been so worked upon that in cases where a pardon should never be granted he has found it impossible to resist that influence. I believe that such demands should not be allowed to be made, because it is enlisting the sympathies unjustly to overturn a just verdict. Not that the Governor was ever bought up with so much gold. I do not believe that any gentleman who has advocated this amendment intended to insinuate that Governors had been bought to do these things, and I do not think any of them entertain any such an idea for a moment. I do not wish to detain the committee, as it is time for the usual recess. I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

The Convention took a recess until two o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M. President Hoge in the chair.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

MR. SCHOMP. Mr. Chairman: I wish to send up a resolution, with the leave of the Convention.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Right of Suffrage be allowed to employ a clerk for two (2) days only, at a compensation of five (5) dollars per day.

THE PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses.

MR. BLACKMER. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power.

REPORT.

MR. SHAFTER. If the gentleman will allow me I would like to make a report from the Committee on Pardoning Power.

THE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection the gentleman will send it up.

THE SECRETARY read:

MR. PRESIDENT: The Committee upon the Pardoning Power, having considered the proposition number four hundred and eighty-four, introduced by Mr. Grace, report the same, with a recommendation that the same be not adopted.

SHAFTER, for Committee.

THE PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table.

STATIONERY ACCOUNTS OF MEMBERS.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: There was a report made the other day in regard to the amount of stationery drawn by the members. I desire that the gross amount drawn by each member be printed; not the itemized account, but the gross amount.

[Cries of "division," "ayes and noes," "ayes and noes."]

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I would like to have a supplemental report, as I understand that some of the members who were deficient on that report have, since that report was made, drawn the full amount. [Laughter.]

MR. LARKIN. I know that gentlemen desire to know what their stationery account is. I desire to know what they are. I understand by a gentleman that the Secretary of State's office never received the resolution restricting the amount to ten dollars. I desire that the gross amounts shall be printed and laid on the desks of members. No one should draw any stationery except such as is needed for use in the Convention.

[Cries of "question," "question."]

MR. SMITH of Fourth District. Mr. President: I do not object to its being printed if it is printed correctly. There is a mistake in my account which makes it appear very large, when in fact it is not large. I took it to one of the clerks and found out that it was not correct. I want it printed correctly when it is printed.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: I am charged with fourteen dollars. I am ready to pay that amount back to the State if the rest of the gentlemen will do the same. [Laughter.] There was a parcel of stuff put in my desk which I did not want. The State may have it all back if it wants it. I think, however, that this is a very small business for one hundred and fifty men, drawing fifteen hundred dollars a day from the State, to be engaged in.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: In the account which the Secretary of State has presented, he has charged the spittoons and penracks, and other things which we cannot take home with us. I understand from the Secretary of State that he does not propose to pay any attention at all to the resolution of the Convention limiting the individual members to ten dollars worth of stationery. The statute upon the subject is plain and explicit. It says the members of the Convention shall have the same right to draw stationery as the members of the Legislature. The members of the Legislature are not limited. Some of them draw eighty or ninety dollars worth of stationery. Now I have drawn, according to the bill, eighteen dollars worth of stationery. I don't care who knows it. The privilege was granted and I embraced it, and I am willing to have it posted in flaming letters all over San Francisco, that I drew eighteen dollars worth of stationery, and if any of my constituents desire to vote against me on account of it they are welcome to do it. At the same time, I think the resolution is useless. It is putting the State to a heavy expense and brings nothing in. I cannot see the use of putting the State to the additional expense of printing the report, and the amount of stationery which each individual member has drawn; therefore, I think on the grounds of economy, the resolution offered by Mr. Larkin should be voted down. If he desires this published so that he can use it on the stump as a campaign document, common decency would dictate that he print it at his own expense, and not saddle the State with the cost of printing.

MR. LARKIN. In reply to the gentleman, if he will look over the Journals, he will find that a large majority of Legislatures have limited the amounts. A better reason why this Convention should do so is that the sum total now amounts to over seven hundred dollars. We have only one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and that should be devoted to the work for which it was set apart.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I object to the printing of these amounts, not from the fact that I have drawn fifteen dollars' worth of stationery, but for this reason: the Secretary of State says I have drawn fifteen dollars, but I understood that each committee was allowed to draw ten dollars. I have acted as Secretary of two committees, and I have drawn stationery for both committees in my own name, which is all included in this fifteen dollars. Therefore I do not think these amounts should be printed, because they will convey an erroneous impression. At the same time there is another reason given by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, and that is the ground of economy. I do not see what benefit is going to be derived from printing these amounts. If ten dollars' worth is all that a member is allowed to draw, I am ready and willing to pay the other five dollars back to the State. But I understand the Secretary of State has refused one gentleman who offered to pay the amount over the ten dollars back, refused to receive it. Actually I do not see any use in their being printed. If the Convention should vote that all over ten dollars should be refunded, I do not think there is a gentleman on this floor who is not ready to comply.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: I do not desire to take up the valuable time of the Convention debating these frivolous resolutions, but I wish to state, in regard to the Secretary of State not being disposed to comply with the resolution of this Convention, in regard to limiting the amount of stationery, that I was in need of a little stationery the first of this week, and sent down by one of the Pages a requisition for an extra bunch of envelopes, and some other article, and he sent back the requisition unfilled, stating that I had already drawn nine dollars and ninety-eight cents' worth.

[Cries of "question, question!" "ayes and noes!" "ayes and noes!"]

MR. BEERSTECHER. I call for the names of the gentlemen who demand the ayes and noes.

THE PRESIDENT. The ayes and noes are called for by Messrs. Larkin, Murphy, Shoemaker, Larue, and Gorman. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

MR. TURNER. Mr. President: I shall vote against this resolution. I am afraid that the usefulness of the members will be gauged by the amount of stationery they have drawn, and as I stand lowest on the list I am afraid the comparison will not be favorable to my ability as a statesman. [Laughter.] Therefore I am opposed to the resolution.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the resolution adopted by the following vote:

MR. WICKES (pending roll-call.) I would like to explain my vote. [Cries of "object!" "object!" amidst loud laughter.]

ANOTHER RESOLUTION.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I desire to offer a resolution on this subject.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That those members who have drawn stationery of the Secretary of State to any amount more than ten dollars, be and they are hereby instructed to pay the excess of such amount over ten dollars into the State treasury, for the benefit of the appropriation for the expenses of this Convention.

MR. CROSS. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. The author of the resolution has the floor.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: This Convention passed a resolution the other day that members of this Convention should draw but ten dollars' worth of stationery. It appears from the report of the Secretary of State that some have drawn two dollars and fifty cents, and some twenty-four dollars; and unless there is some action taken, there the matter stands. The resolution allowing but ten dollars was a waste of time and paper. I send up the resolution for the purpose of supplementing that and correcting the inequality, so that the first resolution will be of some use, and so that this matter shall be finally settled, and no more time wasted in discussing it. We passed a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire whether the printing for this Convention should come out of the appropriation for the Convention, or out of the appropriation for the State Printing Office. That very able and wise committee reported that the expense of printing should come out of the appropriation for the State Printing Office. But the Board of Examiners proceeded to pay the printing out of the appropriation for this Convention, without regard to the opinions of the Judiciary Committee and without regard to the resolution of this Convention adopting that report. So with this stationery account, which is on the same footing. I do not know whether this Convention can help itself or not; but this I do know, that unless there is some such action as I propose, there will be nothing to prevent members drawing twenty-four dollars' worth, or two hundred and forty dollars' worth, if they want to, and carrying it home to set up a junk shop with. That is the reason I offer this resolution, to supplement the other and make it of some use and force. I hope the Convention will pass the resolution.

MR. VAN DYKE. I certainly have a misapprehension here, or else a great many others have. I never understood that members were at liberty to take home with them any stationery. It is a new idea to me that members can pack their trunks full of stationery, and when they leave the Capitol take it home with them. I had supposed that it was furnished for the use of the members because they were performing services for the State, and that it was only for their use while here. I myself have drawn a few cents over ten dollars' worth. I am allowed ten dollars for the committee. I do not intend to draw any to take home with me. I need things for my use here which I have not drawn. I want envelopes, I have not drawn any. I want inkstands and several other articles for use here in the Convention. I think this is a very small business, and it is spending time for no purpose.

MR. TINNIN. We have been acting under the law passed by the last Legislature, which gives the members of this body a right to draw stationery. There was no limit to the amount. This body has passed a resolution limiting the amount to ten dollars, it is true, but most of this material was drawn before that resolution was passed. I believe we have wasted enough time, therefore I move to lay the resolution on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. It is moved and seconded that the resolution be laid on the table.

Division being called, the motion to lay on the table prevailed by a vote of forty-four ayes to forty-one noes.

THE PARDONING POWER.

MR. MCCALLUM. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the article on pardoning power.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. Tinnin in the chair.

MR. MCCALLUM. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment of the gentleman from San Diego.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'impeachment' to and inclusive of the word 'pardon,' and insert in lieu thereof, 'and such power shall be exercised only in cases where evidence is newly discovered after judgment establishing the innocence of the convicted party, or the injustice of the sentence.' Also strike out the last clause of the section."

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: Now I am opposed to the principle of this amendment as interpreted by the author. But the proposition goes far beyond what the gentleman intended, because the language is that the innocence of the party must be established by proof, leaving not even the question as to the benefit of any testimony which might subsequently be discovered, raising a reasonable doubt as to whether he had been justly convicted or not. I suppose the language of the amendment is stronger even than the gentlemen intended himself. But this is not a new question. I have some authority ——

MR. BEERSTECHER. If the gentleman will permit me I desire to correct him. The amendment reads that such power shall be exercised only in case of newly discovered evidence after judgment, which establishes the innocence of the convicted party, or where it can be shown that he was unjustly sentenced.

MR. MCCALLUM. Establishing the innocence of the party or establishing the injustice of the sentence. That is the way it reads, and that is what I say now. I say the idea presented by the gentleman from San Francisco, and by others, is an idea that has never been received with favor, and in addition to the authority quoted by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, I propose to read from Kent, first volume, page two hundred and eighty-four. He says:

"The President has also the power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment. The Marquis Beccaria has contended that the power of pardon does not exist under a perfect administration of law, and that the admission of the power is a tacit acknowledgment of the infirmity of the Courts of justice. And where is the administration of justice, it may be asked, that is free from infirmity? Were it possible, in every instance, to maintain a just proportion between the crime and the penalty, and were the rules of testimony and the mode of trial so perfect as to preclude every possibility of mistake or injustice, there would be some color for the admission of this plausible theory. But, even in that case, policy would sometimes require a remission of a punishment strictly due, for a crime certainly ascertained. The very notion of mercy implies the accuracy of the claims of justice. An inexorable government, says Mr. Yorke, in his Considerations on the Law of Forfeiture, will not only carry justice in some instances to the height of injury, but with respect to itself it will be dangerously just. The clemency of Massachusetts, in seventeen hundred and eighty-six, after an unprovoked and wanton rebellion, in not inflicting a single capital punishment, contributed, by the judicious manner in which its clemency was applied, to the more firm establishment of their government. And this power of pardon will appear to be more essential, when we consider that, under the most correct administration of the law, men will sometimes fall a prey to the vindictiveness of accusers, the inaccuracy of testimony, and the fallibility of jurors. Notwithstanding this power is clearly supported on principles of policy, if not of justice, English lawyers of the first class and highest reputation have strangely concluded that it cannot exist in a republic, because nothing higher is acknowledged than a magistrate. Instead of falling into such an erroneous conclusion, it might fairly be insisted that the power may exist with greater safety in free States than in any other forms of government; because abuses of the discretion unavoidably confided to the magistrate in granting pardons are much better guarded against by the sense of responsibility under which he acts.

"The power of pardon vested in the President is without limitation except in the single case of impeachments. He is checked in that case from screening public officers, with whom he might possibly have formed a dangerous or corrupt coalition, or who might be his particular favorites and dependents."

I say it is not too much to say that no precedent for this amendment can be found, neither in the Constitution of the United States, nor in the Constitution of any one of all the States in this Union. It is safe to say that no precedent for such a proposition can be found in any nation under the sun, in any country on earth, and it certainly does not exist in heaven, as we are taught by theologists. I have not heard from that other place called hell, and there is a dispute between leading theologists as to whether there is such a place as hell, though old Californians remember there used to be a place called Hell Itself. I say that it is without precedent in any country, and it seems to me it is a most remarkable proposition. I have but this to add, that when men shall devise a perfect government, when there shall be no mistakes made in the administration of government, then there will be no need of pardon in any case, because there would be no supposition that there could be any injustice done in any case. But we are all liable to err. Jurors are liable to commit errors; Judges are liable to commit errors; witnesses are liable to make mistakes and misstatements. All human testimony is fallible.

Now, without saying anything further on that part of the amendment, I wish to say that I am in favor of, and shall vote for, a Commission. I am not particular as to how that Commission shall be constituted. I believe that there should be a change in the pardoning power in this respect. I believe that it should be the Governor, Chief Justice, and Attorney-General. As I understand it, the Judiciary Committee have agreed to a report, in which they recommend that the Supreme Court shall consist of seven, the Court to be held in two sections, and in that case the Chief Justice could spare the time to act. The Governor, Attorney-General, and the Chief Justice, in my opinion, would constitute the best Commission. I am not in favor of the idea that there should be a Commission elected by the people. There should not be any increase in the number of State officers, for it is not necessary. But the idea of the Chief Justice, Governor, and Attorney-General I had written out the other day with the intention of presenting it. I borrowed it from another Constitution. I could not very well hear what the gentleman from Marin had to say about the Nevada Constitution. In Indiana they have a provision equally as good, that the Legislature shall provide for a Commission to act with the Governor.

A POINT OF ORDER.

MR. WATERS. I raise the point of order that there is not a quorum present. I am so informed.

MR. MCCALLUM. I call attention to the provisions of the Indiana Constitution.

MR. MURPHY. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. I do this for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is a quorum present.

therein, and ask leave to sit again. What is the pleasure of the Convention?

MINORITY REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CORPORATIONS.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I ask leave to send up a minority report of the Committee or Corporations other than Municipal.

THE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection the report will be received.

To the Honorable President of the Convention:

A minority of the above committee, while agreeing in the main with the report of the majority herein, beg leave to submit their report recommending certain additional provisions and certain changes in the propositions recommended by the majority:

First—At the end of section three insert the following:

"The President, Manager, and Directors or Trustees of savings banks or trust companies, or any corporation for the deposit and loan of money, shall be individually and severally liable for any and all misappropriation of the funds intrusted to them, or any neglect or abuse in the administration of their trust."

Second—At the end of section five insert the following:

"All laws passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time, or repealed. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to pass laws for the regulation and control of corporations formed under this section; to protect depositors of savings banks; to prohibit loans by the officers to themselves or their partners, or the receipt by officers of commissions; to prohibit discriminations between borrowers on account of difference in the amounts borrowed; to prohibit exactions by attorneys of savings banks from intending borrowers; and to regulate by law the salaries paid the officers of savings banks.

Third—In section eight, after the word "companies," in line three, insert the words "at their own valuation, as made for the purpose of taxation."

Fourth—At the end of section twelve insert the following:

"Provided, that co-operative societies may be formed under general laws, which may provide by-laws of their own for limiting the representation of shareholders of their stock, and the number of shares that may be held; and the Legislature shall enact such laws as may be necessary for their faithful management and protection, and may limit the liabilities of their members."

Fifth—At the end of section fourteen insert the following:

"It shall be the duty of the Legislature to regulate by law the dealing in shares of stock of corporations; to prohibit margin and time sales; to prevent wash or pretended sales; to prohibit and punish the circulation of false reports to affect the price of shares of stocks; and to punish and prohibit combining or pooling means for the purpose of inflating or depressing the price of shares of stocks."

Sixth—In section fifteen, after the word "control," in line two, insert the following:

"Railroads heretofore constructed, or that may hereafter be constructed in this State, are hereby declared public highways, and shall be free to all persons for the transportation of their persons and property."

Seventh—In section twenty, after the word "commission," in line seven, insert the following:

"Said Commissioners shall have supervision of all railroads, other than street railroads, in this State; they shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight thereon, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; they shall have power to correct abuses and violations of law by such railroad corporations or other transportation companies; to hear and determine complaints against such railroad corporation or other transportation companies, and affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts; examine the books and papers of all such railroad corporations; administer oaths, and summon and examine witnesses; they shall report to the Governor annually their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; and shall perform such other duties, and shall have such further powers as shall be imposed and conferred by law. Nothing contained in this section shall be held to deny the right of action against any such companies of any person or any other company."

Each of said Commissioners shall receive an annual salary of three thousand dollars. They shall be allowed one Secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars.

CLITUS BARBOUR.
WM. F. WHITE.

ARTICLE IV.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The legislative power of this State shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly, which shall be designated the Legislature of the State of California, and the enacting clause of every law shall be as follows: "The people of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows."

SEC. 2. The sessions of the Legislature shall be biennial, and shall commence on the first Monday after the first Tuesday in January next ensuing the election of its members, at twelve o'clock M., unless the Governor shall, in the interim, convene the Legislature by proclamation. No session shall continue longer than sixty days, except the first session called after the adoption of this Constitution, which may continue eighty days. And no bill shall be introduced, in either house, during the last ten days of the session without the consent of two thirds of the members of said house.

SEC. 3. The members of the Assembly shall be chosen biennially, by the qualified electors of their respective districts, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, and their term of office shall be two years.

SEC. 4. Senators shall be chosen for the term of four years, at the same time and places as members of the Assembly; and no person shall be a member of the Senate or Assembly who has not been a citizen and inhabitant of the State, and of the district for which he shall be chosen, one year next before his election.

SEC. 5. The Senate shall consist of thirty members, and the Assembly of sixty members, to be elected by districts, as hereinafter provided. The seats of the fifteen Senators from the odd-numbered districts chosen at the first election under this Constitution shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, so that one half of the Senate, after the first election, shall be chosen every two years.

SEC. 6. For the purpose of choosing members of the Legislature the State shall be divided into thirty districts, as nearly equal in population as may be, and composed of contiguous territory, to be called Legislative Districts. Each district shall choose one Senator and two members of the Assembly. The districts shall be numbered from one to thirty, inclusive, in numerical order, commencing at the northern boundary of of the State and ending at the southern boundary thereof. In the formation of said districts no county, or city and county, shall be divided, unless it contain sufficient population within itself to form two or more districts; nor shall a part of any county, or city and county, be united with any other county, or city and county, in forming any district. The census taken under the direction of the Congress of the United States in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty, and every ten years thereafter, shall be the basis of fixing and adjusting the legislative districts; and the Legislature shall, at its first session after each census, adjust said districts and reapportion the representation, so as to preserve them as near equal in population as may be; but, in making such adjustment, no persons who are not eligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws shall be counted as forming the population of any district. Until such adjustment shall be made the First District shall consist of the Counties of Del Norte, Siskiyou, Modoc, Lassen, Shasta, and Trinity; the Second, of the Counties of Humboldt and Mendocino; the Third, of the Counties of Tehama and Butte; the Fourth, of the Counties of Colusa, Lake, and Sutter; the Fifth, of the County of Sonoma; the Sixth, of the Counties of Marin, Napa, and Contra Costa; the Seventh, of the Counties of Solano and Yolo; the eighth, of the Counties of Sierra, Yuba, and Plumas; the Ninth, of the County of Nevada; the Tenth, of the Counties of Placer and El Dorado; the Eleventh, of the County of Sacramento; the Twelfth, of the Counties of Calaveras, Alpine, and Amador; the Thirteenth, of the County of San Joaquin; the Fourteenth, of that portion of the City and County of San Francisco bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point where Larkin Street intersects the waters of the Bay of San Francisco; thence meandering along the shore of said bay, in an easterly and southeasterly direction, to the point where Market Street intersects said bay; thence along Market Street to California Street; thence along California Street to Kearny Street; thence along Kearny street to Vallejo Street; thence along Vallejo Street to Larkin Street; and thence along Larkin Street to the waters of the Bay of San Francisco, the place of beginning; the Fifteenth, of that portion of the City and County of San Francisco bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point where Larkin Street intersects Vallejo Street; thence along Vallejo Street to Kearny street; thence along Kearny Street to California Street; thence along California Street to Market Street; thence along Market Street to Kearny Street; thence along Kearny Street to Pine Street; thence along Pine Street to Larkin Street; and thence along Larkin Street to Vallejo Street, the place of beginning. The Sixteenth, of that portion of the City and County of San Francisco bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point where Franklin Street intersects Pine Street; thence along Pine Street to Kearny Street; thence along Kearny Street to Market Street; thence along Market Street to Van Ness Avenue; thence along Van Ness Avenue to Tyler Street; thence along Tyler Street to Gough Street; thence along Gough Street to Geary Street; thence along Geary Street to Franklin Street; and thence along Franklin Street to Pine Street, the place of beginning. The Seventeenth, of that portion of the City and County of San Francisco bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point where Larkin Street intersects the waters of the Bay of San Francisco; thence along Larkin Street to Pine Street; thence along Pine Street to Franklin Street; thence along Franklin Street to Geary Street; thence along Geary Street to Gough Street; thence along Gough Street to Tyler Street; thence along Tyler Street to Van Ness Avenue; thence along Van Ness Avenue to Market Street; thence along Market Street to Ridley Street; thence along Ridley Street, and said Ridley Street produced in a direct line westerly to the Pacific Ocean; and thence meandering northerly and easterly along the waters of the Pacific Ocean and the Bay of San Francisco to Larkin Street, the place of beginning. The Eighteenth, of that portion of the City and County of San Francisco bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point where Market Street intersects the waters of the Bay of San Francisco; thence meandering along the waters of said bay to the point where Channel Street intersects the waters of said bay; thence along Channel Street to Seventh Street; thence along Seventh Street to Harrison Street; thence along Harrison Street to Second Street; thence along Second Street to Market Street; and thence along Market Street to the waters of the Bay of San Francisco, the place of beginning. ley Street; thence along Ridley Street and the line of Ridley Street, projected westerly, to the Pacific Ocean; thence southerly along the Pacific Ocean to the southern boundary line of the City and County of San Francisco; thence along said southern boundary line to the Bay of San Francisco; and thence meandering along the waters of the Bay of San Francisco to Channel Street, the place of beginning. The Twenty-second, of Oakland Township, County of Alameda. The Twenty-third, of all that portion of the County of Alameda exclusive of Oakland Township. The Twenty-fourth, of the County of Santa Clara. The Twenty-fifth, of the Counties of Merced, Mariposa, Stanislaus, and Tuolumne. The Twenty-sixth, of the Counties of Tulare, Inyo, Fresno, and Mono. The Twenty-Seventh, of the Counties of Santa Cruz, San Mateo, and San Benito. The Twenty-eighth, of the Counties of Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, and Monterey. The Twenty-ninth, of the County of Los Angeles. The Thirtieth, of the Counties of San Bernardino, San Diego, Kern, and Ventura.

SEC. 7. Each house shall choose its own officers, and judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its own members.

SEC. 8. A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each house may provide.

SEC. 9. Each house shall determine the rule of its own proceeding, and may, with the concurrence of two thirds of all the members elected, expel a member.

SEC. 10. Each house shall keep a Journal of its own proceedings, and publish the same, and the yeas and nays of the members of either house, on any question, shall, at the desire of any three members present, be entered on the Journal.

SEC. 11. Members of the Legislature shall, in all cases except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest, and shall not be subject to any civil process during the session of the Legislature, nor for fifteen days next before the commencement and after the termination of each session.

SEC. 12. When a vacancy occurs in either house, from any cause, during the session of the Legislature, the house in which said vacancy occurs shall proceed immediately to elect, from the constituency deprived of representation, a member to fill said vacancy for said session. If the Legislature is not in session at the time the vacancy occurs, the Governor, or the person exercising the functions of Governor, shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancy.

SEC. 13. The doors of each house shall be open, except on such occasions as in the opinion of the house may require secrecy.

SEC. 14. Neither house shall, without consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which they may be sitting.

SEC. 15. No law shall be passed except by bill. Any bill may originate in either house, but may be amended or rejected by the other, and on the final passage of all bills they shall be read at length, and the vote shall be by yeas and nays upon each bill separately, and shall be entered on the Journal; and no bill shall become a law without the concurrence of a majority of the members elected to each house.

SEC. 16. Every bill which may have passed the Legislature shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor. If he approve it, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the same upon the Journal and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, it again pass both houses, by yeas and nays, by a majority of two thirds of the members of each house, it shall become a law notwithstanding the Governor's objection. If any bill shall not be returned within ten days after it shall have been presented to him (Sundays excepted), the same shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Legislature, by adjournment, prevents such return, in which case it shall not become a law, unless the Governor, within ten days after such adjournment (Sundays excepted), shall sign and deposit the same in the office of the Secretary of State, in which case it shall become a law in like manner as if it had been signed by him before adjournment. If any bill presented to the Governor contains several items of appropriation of money, he may object to one or more items, while approving other portions of the bill. In such case he shall append to the bill, at the time of signing it, a statement of the items to which he objects, and the reasons therefor, and the appropriations so objected to shall not take effect unless passed over the Governor's veto, as hereinbefore provided. If the Legislature be in session, the Governor shall transmit to the house in which the bill originated a copy of such statement, and the items so objected to shall be separately reconsidered in the same manner as bills which have been disapproved by the Governor.

SEC. 17. The Assembly shall have the sole power of impeachment, and all impeachments shall be tried by the Senate. When sitting for that purpose, the Senators shall be upon oath or affirmation, and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two thirds of the members elected.

SEC. 18. The Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, Controller, Treasurer, Attorney-General, Surveyor-General, Justices of the Supreme Court, and Judges of the Superior Courts, shall be liable to impeachment for any misdemeanor in office; but judgment in such cases shall extend only to removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the State; but the party convicted or acquitted shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, and punishment according to law. All other civil officers shall be tried for misdemeanor in office in such manner as the Legislature may provide.

SEC. 19. No Senator or member of Assembly shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, be appointed to any civil office of profit under this State, which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which have been increased, during such term, except such offices as may be filled by election by the people.

SEC. 20. No person holding any lucrative office under the United States, or any other power, shall be eligible to any civil office of profit under this State; provided, that officers in the militia, to which there is attached no annual salary, or local officers, or Postmasters whose compensation does not exceed five hundred dollars per annum, shall not be deemed lucrative.

SEC. 21. No person who shall be convicted of the embezzlement or defalcation of the public funds of this State, or of any county or municipality therein, shall ever be eligible to any office of honor, trust, or profit under this State; and the Legislature shall provide by law for the punishment of such embezzlement or defalcation as a felony.

SEC. 22. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and upon warrants duly drawn thereon by the Controller; and no money shall ever be appropriated or drawn from the State treasury for the use or benefit of any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or any other institution, not under the exclusive management and control of the State as a State institution; nor shall any grant or donation of property ever be made thereto by the State. An accurate statement of the receipts and expenditures of public moneys shall be attached to and published with the laws at every regular session of the Legislature.

SEC. 23. The members of the Legislature shall receive for their services a compensation, per diem, and mileage, to be fixed by law, and paid out of the public treasury; but no increase of the compensation shall take effect during the term for which the members of either house shall have been elected.

SEC. 24. Every law enacted by the Legislature shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in the title, and no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title; but in such case the Act revised, or section amended, shall be reënacted and published at length as revised or amended.

SEC. 25. The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say:

First—Regulating the jurisdiction and duties of Justices of the Peace, Police Judges, and of Constables.

Second—For the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors.

Third—Regulating the practice of Courts of justice.

Fourth—Providing for changing the venue in civil or criminal cases.

Fifth—Granting divorces.

Sixth—Changing the names of persons or places.

Seventh—Vacating roads, town plats, streets, alleys, or public grounds not owned by the State.

Eighth—Summoning and impaneling grand and petit juries, and providing for their compensation.

Ninth—Regulating county and township business, or the election of county and township officers.

Tenth—For the assessment or collection of taxes.

Eleventh—Providing for conducting elections, or designating the places of voting, except on the organization of new counties.

Twelfth—Affecting estates belonging to minors or other persons under legal disabilities.

Thirteenth—Extending the time for the collection of taxes.

Fourteenth—Giving effect to invalid deeds, wills, or other instruments.

Fifteenth—Refunding money paid into the State treasury.

Sixteenth—Releasing or extinguishing, in whole or in part, the indebtedness, liability, or obligation of any corporation or person to this State, or to any municipal corporation therein.

Seventeenth—Declaring any person of age, or authorizing any minor to sell, lease, or incumber his or her property.

Eighteenth—Legalizing, except as against the State, the unauthorized or invalid act of any officer.

Nineteenth—Granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive right, privilege, or immunity.

Twentieth—Exempting property from taxation.

Twenty-first—Changing county seats.

Twenty-second—Restoring to citizenship persons convicted of infamous crimes.

Twenty-third—Regulating the rate of interest on money.

Twenty-fourth—Authorizing the creation, extension, or impairing of liens.

Twenty-fifth—Chartering or licensing ferries, bridges, or roads.

Twenty-sixth—Remitting fines, penalties, or forfeitures.

Twenty-seventh—Providing for the management of common schools.

Twenty-eighth—Creating offices, or prescribing the powers and duties of officers in counties, cities, cities and counties, townships, election or school districts.

Twenty-ninth—Affecting the fees or salary of any officer.

Thirtieth—Changing the law of descent, or succession.

Thirty-first—Authorizing the adoption or legitimation of children.

Thirty-second—Authorizing the laying out, opening, altering, or maintaining roads, highways, streets, alleys, or public grounds.

Thirty-third—For limitation of civil or criminal actions.

Thirty-fourth—In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, no local or special law shall be enacted.

SEC. 26. The Legislature shall have no power to authorize lotteries or gift enterprises for any purpose, and shall pass laws to prohibit the sale of lottery or gift enterprise tickets, or tickets in any scheme in the nature of a lottery, in this State. The Legislature shall pass laws to regulate or prohibit the buying and selling of the shares of the capital stock of corporations in any stock board, stock exchange, or stock market under the control of any association. All contracts for the sale of shares of the capital stock of any corporation or association, on margin or to be delivered at a future day, shall be void, and any money paid on such contracts may be recovered by the party paying it by suit in any Court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 27. When a congressional district shall be composed of two or more counties, it shall not be separated by any county belonging to another district. No county or city and county shall be divided in forming a congressional district so as to attach one portion of a county or city and county to another county or city and county; but the Legislature may divide any county or city and county into as many congressional districts as it may be entitled to by law.

SEC. 28. The Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by corporations, and where laws shall provide for the selection of any person or officer to regulate and limit such rates, no such person or officer shall be selected by any corporation, and no person shall be selected who is an officer or stockholder in any corporation.

SEC. 29. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liabilities of the corporators and other means as may be prescribed by law. The property of corporations now existing, or hereafter created, shall forever be subject to taxation, the same as the property of individuals, and the franchises of such corporations shall be assessed at their actual cash value, and taxed accordingly.

SEC. 30. The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships. And all corporations shall have the right to sue and shall be subject to be sued in all Courts, in like cases as natural persons.

SEC. 31. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes, but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver and other lawful money of the United States; but no such associations shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank to circulate as money.

SEC. 32. The Legislature of this State shall prohibit by law any person or persons, association, company, or corporation, from exercising the privileges of banking or creating paper to circulate as money.

SEC. 33. Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred while he was a stockholder, and the Trustees or Directors of such corporation or association, and each of them, shall be responsible, individually, for the misappropriation by the officers thereof of the funds or deposits of such corporation or association.

SEC. 34. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to provide, by general laws, for the organization of city, town, and county governments, and for assessing and collecting taxes for the support of the same; provided, that no city, city and county, town, or county shall ever incur a debt which, together with existing indebtedness, shall exceed two per cent. of the assessed value of the property therein. Such value shall be ascertained from the assessment roll for State and county purposes made immediately previous to incurring such indebtedness; provided, however, that a city, city and county, town, or county may borrow money under and in accordance with the following conditions and limitations in addition to any other conditions and limitations contained in the Constitution, namely: the debt must be for some single work or object only, and must be authorized by a resolution passed by a vote of three fourths of all the members elected to the Board of Supervisors, Common Council, or local Legislature. Such resolution shall also distinctly specify the single work or object for which the debt is to be created, and the amount of the debt authorized, and shall contain provisions for a sinking fund to meet the same at maturity, and requiring at least ten per cent. of the principal to be annually raised by taxation and paid into the sinking fund. Such resolution shall not take effect until it shall be ratified at an election held in said city, city and county, county, or town, at which no other matter is voted upon, and which shall be held within —— days after the passage of said order or resolution. The Legislature shall make such laws as may be necessary to provide for holding such election and ascertaining the result thereof.

SEC. 35. In all elections by the Legislature the members thereof shall vote viva voce, and the votes shall be entered on the Journal.

SEC. 36. The general appropriation bill shall contain no item or items of appropriation other than such as are required to pay the salaries of the State officers, the expenses of the government, and of the institutions under the exclusive control and management of the State.

SEC. 37. Neither the Legislature, nor any county, city and county, township, school district, or other municipal corporation, shall ever make an appropriation, or pay from any public fund whatever, or grant anything to or in aid of any religious sect, church, creed, or sectarian purpose, or help to support or sustain any school, college, university, hospital, or other institution controlled by any religious creed, church, or sectarian denomination whatever; nor shall any grant or donation of personal property or real estate ever be made by the State, or any city, city and county, town, or other municipal corporation, for any religious creed, church, or sectarian purpose whatever.

SEC. 38. The Legislature shall have no power to give or to lend, or to authorize the giving or lending, of the credit of the State, or of any county, city and county, city, township, or other political corporation or subdivision of the State now existing, or that may be hereafter established, in aid of or to any person, association, or corporation, whether municipal or otherwise, or to pledge the credit thereof, in any manner whatever, for the payment of the liabilities of any individual, association, municipal, or other corporation whatever; nor shall it have power to make any grant, or authorize the making of any grant, of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal, or other corporation whatever; and it shall not have power to authorize the State, or any political subdivision thereof, to subscribe for stock, or to become a stockholder in any corporation whatever.

SEC. 39. The Legislature shall have no power to grant, or authorize any county or municipal authority to grant, any extra compensation or allowance to any public officer, agent, servant, or contractor, after service has been rendered or a contract has been entered into and performed in whole or in part, nor to pay or to authorize the payment of any claim hereafter created against the State, or any county or municipality of the State, under any agreement or contract made without express authority of law, and all such unauthorized agreements or contracts shall be null and void.

SEC. 40. The Legislature shall not ratify any amendment to the Constitution of the United States which may be proposed by Congress, except such as shall have been proposed and published at least thirty days next preceding the general election for members of the Legislature ratifying such amendment.

SEC. 41. In case of a contested election in either branch of the Legislature, only the claimant decided entitled to the seat shall receive from the State per diem compensation or mileage.

SEC. 42. In order that no inconvenience may result to the public service from the taking effect of this Constitution, no officer shall be suspended or superseded thereby until the election and qualification of the several officers provided for in this Constitution.

READING OF REPORTS.

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: The report is rather a long one, and it would probably be well to dispense with the reading and have it printed. I will state that the report is signed by all of the committee who were present. There are three propositions upon which the committee were not unanimous. Of course, any member of the committee can, in the house or in the Committee of the Whole, propose any such amendments as they deem proper.

MR. ROLFE. I move that the rule requiring reports of committees to be read be suspended, and that the reading of this report be dispensed with.

THE PRESIDENT. It requires one day's notice.

MR. GARVEY. A rule in order may be temporarily suspended.

MR. COWDEN. Part of the Legislative Committee have agreed upon a part of the report. I presume it would be the proper time now to put in the minority report. Mr. Garvey has it.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule that we cannot suspend the reading of the report.

MR. LARKIN. Is a motion in order now?

THE PRESIDENT. Yes.

MR. LARKIN. I move to take up and consider the resolution offered by Mr. Tinnin, to amend Rule Fifty-six by striking out "that the previous question shall not be moved."

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman. There is a report of a committee before the house.

MR. MURPHY. By unanimous consent the rule can be suspended.

THE PRESIDENT. Hearing no objection, the rule is suspended and the reading of the report dispensed with.

MINORITY REPORT.

MR. HEISKELL presented the following report from a minority of the Committee on Legislative Department:

MR. PRESIDENT: The undersigned members of the Committee on Legislative Department dissent from the conclusions arrived at by a majority of the committee as to State aid to the various charitable and benevolent institutions that have hitherto cared for the orphaned wards of this State. The State is the guardian; it stands in the place of parents towards the orphans within its limits. The trust is a high one and should be administered with a fidelity commensurate with its obligations. It is the purpose of the majority of your committee to destroy existing institutions which, as agents of the State, perform a portion of the functions of government—institutions which educate and rear these wards; institutions from whose doors the orphan is discharged properly trained to take upon himself the obligations and discharge the duties of American citizenship. Yet the majority have not pointed out any way in which the places of these institutions are to be filled in the economy of government. None will be so reckless as to assert that the State must not, in some form or other, care for them; and the only alternative, if the opinion of the majority of the committee should prevail with the Convention, would be the creation of costly asylums and the multiplication of public offices and commissions to manage them. That such a course would be unwise and would result in a lower grade of service at an increased cost, is a proposition which the undersigned believe cannot be successfully controverted.

The Legislature of this State has appropriated for several years past annually, the sum of one hundred dollars for the support of each whole orphan, the sum of seventy-five dollars for the support of each half orphan or abandoned child. An examination of the Controller's books will show that this is an average appropriation of about eighty-four dollars per annum, the half orphan and abandoned children being in excess of the whole orphans. That makes the cost twenty-three cents per day for each child. Out of this twenty-three cents should be taken, also, to start with, the cost of supporting some two hundred orphans of this State for which the asylums receive no compensation, but which would have to be supported in the State institutions. The asylums receive no compensation for orphans over fourteen years of age, while they receive within their doors many children twelve or thirteen years of age who have been brought up without any special training, whose habits are bad, and whom they dare not turn loose upon the world at that age. We will assume that we have twenty-three cents as the cost of maintaining the orphans. Now, let us compare that with the cost of maintaining any other class of persons in State institutions. From the report of the Directors of the Insane Asylum at Napa, we find it costs one dollar and thirty-one cents per day to maintain each person. At Stockton it costs under forty-three cents, about, we think, forty-two cents. Now, it is conceded, we believe, on all hands, that the Stockton Asylum is one of the best managed institutions in the United States, if not the best in the world. It has been so for years, so that it will not do to take the Stockton Asylum as a standard. The cost at our State Prison is forty-two and seven-tenths; at the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind Asylum, ninety-five cents. Now, to start with, we support the orphans at a less expense than any other class of people supported by the State. But that is not all. Besides supporting them we clothe them, and it costs more to clothe a boy or girl in an asylum than it does a convict in the State Prison, or an inmate in the Insane Asylum. Besides that, we educate them. The average cost of educating each child in the public schools of the State is twenty-nine dollars and six cents. They furnish them with books, which the State would have to do if it had a State institution. The cost of books cannot be less than three dollars per annum; so before you compare the cost of supporting these orphans in the asylums with these other public institutions, you must at the very outset, deduct from this eighty-four dollars per annum that the State now pays to these different associations, the cost of education, twenty-nine dollars and six cents, and the cost of books, three dollars per annum, which, deducted from eighty-four dollars, leaves fifty-one dollars per annum to pay for the support and maintenance, leaving a charge to the State, under the present system, of but fourteen cents per day. In other words, it costs this State but fourteen cents per day more to support its orphans than it costs to maintain the other children of the State. Each other child is an expense of twenty-nine dollars to the State, which the State has to pay every year in some form or other, and their books are an expense to you individually.

What will it cost to maintain these orphans if you build a State asylum? In the first place you must build asylums; and what will they cost this State? The money must be taken from the people, and the money is worth to the people of the State to-day not less than ten per cent. per annum—in fact that is below the average rate of interest in this State. Nearly half the taxpayers of the State borrow money and pay that rate of interest. What must you disburse at the very start for the orphans? We turn to the report of the Board of Directors and officers of the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind in order to state the cost of buildings in an authoritative manner: "The expense of housing the deaf, dumb, and blind sick, and insane in combustible buildings, ranges from one thousand dollars to three thousand dollars per capita. In our building it was about one thousand two hundred dollars. I am satisfied that in the cottage system, which can be constructed practically fire-proof, they can be constructed for one thousand dollars." Let us start with the lowest estimate. The Napa Asylum cost three thousand dollars per capita, and is not yet completed. But let us start with the lowest estimate, conceding that they will be as cheaply built and as economically managed as the Stockton institution, and we must expend for every child we maintain one thousand dollars to begin with. We must expend one thousand at the very outset. That is worth at ten per cent. per annum one hundred dollars per annum, or sixteen dollars more per annum for interest on the cost of constructing the buildings alone than you now pay for the entire support of these orphans. At eight per cent., which is an exceedingly low rate of interest, it would be eighty dollars a year; and at seven per cent.—and it is very hard to borrow money at that rate—it would be seventy dollars. Here you have spent the entire amount which you now pay; and your expenditures are yet to come for maintenance. Let us inquire what has been the success of reformatory schools controlled by the State. We tried this experiment at Marysville. We spent thousands of dollars there, and we found it cost four hundred dollars per annum to take care of each boy, and at the end the whole system was abolished, and the buildings were given to the City of Marysville. In the State of Nevada they have a public orphan asylum. There it has cost about four hundred dollars per annum for each child We may with propriety look at similar institutions in other States. We see from the report of the Board of State Charities of Massachusetts for eighteen hundred and seventy-five that the average weekly expenses there in one set of hospitals was three dollars and eighty-one cents; in another set, the almshouses, schools, etc., the weekly expense ranged all the way from one dollar and eighty cents to four dollars and eighty-nine cents; but the general average of the State was two dollars and eighty-nine cents per week. In the San Francisco Industrial School the average number of inmates was one thousand eight hundred and fifteen; total annual cost, thirty-eight thousand and seventy dollars and three cents; per capita, two hundred and sixty-two dollars and twelve cents per annum. In the Wisconsin Industrial School the cost is one hundred and forty-nine dollars and twenty-nine cents per annum per capita.

In Minnesota the average cost per capita is two dollars and seventy-two and a half cents. In Maine the State Reform School average per capita cost per week is: boys, three dollars and forty-nine cents; girls, two dollars and thirteen cents. In Pennsylvania the average cost of the Philadelphia House of Refuge was two hundred and five dollars and thirty-three cents per annum for each pupil, and in the Reform School, one hundred and eighty-five dollars and thirty-three cents.

No political party in this State has ever been charged with extravagance in making the usual appropriations for the orphans. No demand comes up from the people for a change. No complaint has been made as to the manner in which these great charities have been maintained.

But above the question of costs there stands another as to the efficiency of the service, and the undersigned have no hesitation in asserting that the destinies of the orphans are better placed in the hands of the good men and women of this State, who perform the duty as a labor of love, than they would be in the hands of officers chosen at random and paid with gold for their services.

We believe that under the present system the good of the orphans and of the State is best subserved. That under this system the ends of government have been fully met in the "best service at the least expense."

Respectfully submitted.

MARION BIGGS,
J. B. GARVEY,
T. D. HEISKELL,
D. H. COWDEN.

MR. HEISKELL. Mr. President: I move that report take the same course.

THE PRESIDENT. If there are no objections.

MR. MCCALLUM. I call for the reading of the report.

THE SECRETARY commenced the reading of the report.

MR. MCCALLUM. I now move that the reading of the report be dispensed with. I only wanted to see what was in it.

Carried.

MR. TERRY. I move that both reports be printed.

Carried.

PREVIOUS QUESTION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. LARKIN. I move to take up the amendment to Rule Fifty-six offered by Mr. Tinnin, of Trinity. The amendment can be read by the Secretary.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend Rule Fifty-six by striking out the words, 'and the previous question shall not be moved.'"

The rule as it stood was as follows:

RULE 56. The rules of the Convention shall be observed in Committee of the Whole, so far as they may be applicable, except for limiting the times of speaking, and except that the ayes and noes shall not be taken, and that the previous question shall not be moved.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: In the interest of this Convention for the purposes we have assembled, I think it is necessary that that provision of the rule be struck out. I think there is much debate in the Committee of the Whole that is not necessary. I do not see why men should talk an hour on one proposition. Each gentleman can get up and give his views on the general reason why he votes for or against a proposition. I think it is time that we had power on the Committee of the Whole to move the previous question. I think it will expedite business. I therefore move that that amendment be adopted.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: That is very probably the case, and probably this Convention will adopt it, but it will have no effect unless another rule is changed. Another rule provides that Cushing's Manual shall be taken in all cases not provided for in the rules, and Cushing's Manual will prescribe that in Committee of the Whole the previous question cannot be moved. The gentleman might move to amend so as to read, "the previous question may be called in Committee of the Whole."

MR. LARKIN. I accept the amendment.

MR. TERRY. It would be better, and I move, to strike out the words "shall not" and insert the word "may." It will then read: "The rules of the Convention shall be observed in Committee of the Whole, so far as they may be applicable, except for limiting the times of speaking, and except that the ayes and noes shall not be taken, and that the previous question may be moved."

MR. HOWARD. I think it is too soon to adopt that rule. We ought to dispose of the question of corporations and taxation first. I move to amend so that it will read: "On and after the twentieth of November the previous question may be moved."

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I hope that the rule will not be adopted. Jefferson's Manual, Cushing's Manual, and the rule as adopted by the deliberative bodies of the United States generally, do not allow the previous question to be moved in the Committee of the Whole. That has been the rule in this country for over fifty years. I do not see why we have become so wise—so much wiser than all deliberative bodies, and therefore desire to break a rule that has been found to work justly, and which has been found to be necessary in all deliberative bodies. If the gentlemen do not desire to have this rule take effect, the easiest way is not to resolve yourselves into Committee of the Whole. That is the very purpose and the very object of going into Committee of the Whole, that the previous question cannot be moved. It is to give more liberty of action, more freedom of speech, and if you do not desire to have that freedom of speech, then do not resolve into Committee of the Whole, but remain in Convention. It seems to me that when we go into Committee of the Whole, we should have the liberty of action which the Committee of the Whole gives to a deliberative body. This has been found necessary by the parliamentarians for over fifty years in this country.

I do not see, Mr. President, why the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin, should be imbued with so much more wisdom than the parliamentarians whose names are recorded in history in this country, or why this gentleman should desire every day to break rules that have been approved by the wisdom of this country. I hope that this Convention will vote down anything of this character.

Mr. President, for those gentlemen who have a sufficient amount of brass it is easy to jump upon the floor at any time, and they will talk after they get upon the floor. As far as I am concerned, I am not afraid of this motion at all; but I desire to allow every individual member of this Convention an opportunity to get upon the floor and saying a few words. He may not be as interesting as some individuals are, but at the same time if he cannot so fluently utter his thoughts he may be able to stutter out words of wisdom. I believe in the stutterer of words of wisdom. I do hope that this amendment will not be adopted so as to give a few men in this Convention an opportunity of absolutely choking off a man who desires to speak. And therefore I hope that the Convention will not depart from the general rule adopted by the brightest parliamentarians of this country.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: We have been now forty-five days, I think, in session here since we have met. The appropriation for this Convention will not last more than thirty days more—I do not think it will last that. We have not yet adopted one section of the Constitution. We have not yet agreed upon one single article of the Constitution. Over half the time which a majority of the Convention expected it would take them has passed. Nothing yet has been done. The motion is not made to cut off the remarks of the gentleman from San Francisco, because we appreciate his remarks. It is not made for the purpose of hindering any member upon this floor from stating his position, for members are always courteous enough to yield to any man that privilege. But this Convention should now come to its work. We have considered that bill of rights for over two weeks. The Convention should have the right to move the previous question, and come to a vote on it. I am in favor of proceeding with this work. I am not here as a missionary to enlighten men, nor do I expect any other man to enlighten me by the arguments which are used here. If you expect to make a Constitution, you have got to adopt some rule by which you will proceed to it, and not by continuing the course we have. I ask it in the name of the people that desire a new Constitution, that we start now and consider these propositions, and that we have no more delays by speeches or special orders. The motion is made in good faith, and not to reflect upon any gentleman for occupying the floor. It is made in the interest of making the Constitution that the people demand that we should make. This Convention will not choke off debate. No member desires to choke off debate until we have exhausted the subject. But I believe that this Convention can best determine when they are satisfied with the discussion of a question and when it should close. I ask that we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Trinity.

MR. TOWNSEND. Mr. President: I hope this amendment will prevail. I do not think that Cushing's Manual or Jefferson's Manual ever contemplated such a body as this meeting together in the world. [Laughter.] Some members seem to think that they must give us their enlightened views upon every question. Although I admit that it is very liberal of them, I do think that we can struggle through without their opinions in some cases. I think by the adoption of the amendment we would save time and get along with the business better.

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: There is an additional reason for the rule. A great many speeches have been made here which were no doubt very edifying to the members who sit in the immediate vicinity of the speakers, but the acoustics of this hall are so bad that the other members cannot hear. There are not more than seven or eight men in this hall whose voices can be heard by one third of the members of this Convention, and therefore I do not see that any great amount of instruction is to be received by any long debates under circumstances of that kind. The members in the immediate vicinity of a speaker can hear what he says, but the others can hear the racket but not the words. It strikes me that we have been long enough here together, and these propositions have been printed long enough, and the reports have been printed and considered long enough, for every member to have read and digested them, and made up his mind. I do not think that we want any more long speeches by members of the Convention.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE PRESIDENT. There are already two amendments.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I move that this whole matter be laid upon the table. I do it because nearly one half of this Convention are absent.

MR. LARKIN. I call for the ayes and noes.

MR. MURPHY. Ayes and noes.

MR. McCALLUM. Ayes and noes.

MR. DUNLAP. Ayes and noes.

MR. HUNTER. Ayes and noes.

MR. McCALLUM. It takes two thirds to change a rule, and it will take only a majority to lay on the table. It takes two thirds to change a rule.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I withdraw the motion, with the consent of the Convention.

THE PRESIDENT The question is on the adoption of the motion made by the gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by striking out the words 'that the previous question shall not be moved,' and insert in lieu thereof the words, 'that the previous question shall not be moved until after the twentieth of November.'"

THE PRESIDENT. That is the amendment to the amendment, on which the question comes first.

Lost.

MR. BLACKMER. I desire to offer an amendment, which I have sent up.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'taken,' in the last line, and insert the following: 'but the previous question may be moved by a two-third vote of the members present.'"

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: I offer this amendment for two reasons. First, because I think there should be more liberty in a discussion in Committee of the Whole than in the Convention. This will secure it, because it will take a two-third vote to move the previous question. For another reason, that the phraseology will be such as ought to be in a rule of this house. As it reads now with the amendment offered, we couple the time for speaking and the ayes and noes shall not be taken with a provision that the previous question may be moved. That is not what the Convention wishes to do. For these reasons I offer this amendment. It will give further liberty in the Committee of the Whole for discussion than we have in Convention, where the previous question may be called by a majority.

MR. NOEL. Mr. President: I hope that the amendment will not prevail, and that the rules of the Convention in this particular will not be changed. If the previous question may be moved in Committee of the Whole, the Convention may then very well dispense with the Committee of the Whole altogether. The only object that there can be in resolving the Convention into Committee of the Whole is to allow the utmost freedom of debate. If the debate in Committee of the Whole is to be cut off, we need have no Committee of the Whole. If the very purpose of it is taken from it we certainly will not need it.

MR. MURPHY. As the previous question is under discussion, I now move the previous question.

MR. WATERS. I second the motion.

MR. DOWLING. I call for the ayes and noes.

The question was put, and the Chair declared it carried, on a division, by an affirmative vote of eighty.

THE PRESIDENT. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer.

The amendment was lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the next amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Substitute the word 'may' for the words 'shall not.'"

MR. VAN DYKE. It ought to be stricken out and insert.

MR. TERRY. I accept the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words 'shall not,' and insert the word 'may.'"

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of seventy-three ayes to twenty-four noes.

THE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the adoption of the rule as amended.

MR. EDGERTON. Will the Chair state the positon of the question.

THE PRESIDENT. Notice was given of a motion to amend Rule Fifty-six, by striking out the words, "that the previous question shall not be moved." The gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry, moved to amend the amendment, by striking out the words "shall not" and inserting the word "may." That amendment was adopted. The question now recurs on the adoption of the rule as amended.

MR. STEDMAN. I call for the ayes and noes.

THE PRESIDENT. We are acting under the previous question. The ayes and noes have been demanded by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Dowling, the gentleman from Monterey, Mr. Wyatt, the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington, and the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Bell. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called.

MR. BARBOUR (when his name was called.) Mr. President: I ask leave to explain my vote.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the gentleman will have leave to explain his vote.

MR. TERRY. I object.

[Cries of "object," "object."]

MR. BARBOUR. Very good. That illustrates the object of the amendment, and I shall vote "no."

THE PRESIDENT announced the rule as amended adopted, by the following vote:

MR. CONDON. I voted in the affirmative for the purpose of giving notice of a motion to reconsider, and I now give that notice.

PARDONING POWER.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Tinnin in the chair, for the purpose of further consideration of the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'impeachment,' in the fourth line, down to and including the word 'pardon,' in the seventh line, and insert the following: 'And such power shall be exercised only in case where new evidence is discovered after judgment establishing the innocence of the convicted party or the injustice of the sentence.'"

SPEECH OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: This discussion has already occupied considerable time. I do not wish to detain the committee for any length of time to further discuss the proposition, but I desire to say a few words upon the question, and perhaps this will be as good a time as I can take. I believe, sir, that all will agree, that we must have some government, and that that government must embrace among its other powers that of restraining and punishing those who transgress the laws made for the protection of its citizens. It will be admitted that a government without such authority could not exist. Now, sir, this being conceded, it follows that the laws, or the enforcement of such authority, should be uniform in their operation; and the restraint and punishment should be effective and certain in its application. The uncertainty of arrest and conviction could not be entirely eliminated from the problem, because it was beyond the reach of the authority that provides for the punishment; but the uncertainty of punishment after conviction should be reduced to the lowest minimum, both for the protection of society at large and for its influence on the criminal classes. A very large proportion of our criminals are educated to the profession. They are not the victims of some sudden impulse that carries them away, but they start wrong in the beginning, and their whole lives have been a school of iniquity, from which they have graduated as outcasts and criminals.

The object of the law is two fold: first, to restrain and punish for the crime committed; and second, to deter others from committing like offenses; and no system can be effective unless these things are kept in view. The first ought to be done by the conviction, and the punishment determined upon by law. So long as the convict be retained he is punished for his crime. The second can only be effected when the punishment determined upon is sure to follow, without hope of pardon or abridgment. No one who has committed a crime against the peace of society should have reason to hope that he may escape the consequence of that crime after being convicted of it.

Now, Mr. President, I see no way to accomplish this very desirable object without making the punishment sure to follow the conviction, except where evidence is discovered that establishes the innocence of the convicted party or the injustice of the sentence passed upon him. This does not, as has been contended, abolish the pardoning power. It simply restricts the exercise to that class of cases where alone it should be exercised. The criminal who has been justly convicted of a crime has no claim upon executive clemency, and he ought not to be encouraged to expect it. Society has a right to protection from the injuries inflicted upon it by this dangerous class, and especially so if it has taken the necessary steps to protect itself by procuring a conviction and a sentence. It is not supposed that by any system we can adopt every case will be met exactly, but under the present system many are released while it is yet unsafe to allow them to go at large, and this is a case where there must be a judgment upon the basis of what is right as near as may be. We cannot consistently with our duty overlook the wrongs likely to be done society by an indiscriminate use of the pardoning power.

I do not believe, nor would I be understood to say, that the Executives of this State have ever been influenced by money or by the hope of political preferment to exercise this power in favor of any criminal or class of criminals. The cases in which they are urged to exercise it are made up with a view to enlisting sympathy in favor of the convict, and to make it appear that an injustice has been done him in the sentence, and they are so successfully managed that it is often impossible to determine the true inwardness of the application. Many of the honorable gentlemen in this Convention know by experience or observation how easy it is, after a criminal has been convicted and served a portion of his time in the State Prison, to get a petition signed for his pardon. It is not an uncommon thing for the Judge before whom he was tried and the entire jury that convicted him to petition for the pardon through sympathy for his family, who are the innocent sufferers for his crime. This has become so common that it is endangering society.

I heartily agree with the sentiment that justice should be tempered with mercy, but we have no right to carry that sentiment so far in its application as to forget that mercy should also be tempered with justice. Sympathy for the guilty should not blind us to the right of society to be protected.

Now, let us examine this proposition, and see what its effects would be if adopted. The first condition on which a pardon could be granted would be where evidence may be found after judgment establishing the innocence of the convicted party. This does not establish a new rule in regard to such cases. Pardons ought to be granted under such circumstances. It is thought by some that the word "establishing" there is too restricted; that it compels applicants for pardons to prove too much; and if this was the only class to which this provision might apply there would be some point in the objection, but this goes farther and includes every criminal who can produce evidence discovered after judgment, going to prove that the sentence was unjust. Now, if we take the whole proposition, it seems to me that it includes all who are entitled to pardons. If the convicted party be guilty, he has still an opportunity to prove the injustice of the sentence.

I think it is safe to say that there are many in whose favor this power has been exercised who would have been as well off to remain where they were, and that society would have been more secure, while much needless expense would have been saved if they had not been pardoned.

I have for many years believed that one of the needed reforms in our criminal jurisprudence was the making the prescribed punishment sure to follow upon conviction. I see no way of bringing about such a result except by restricting the pardoning power. I have no particular pride in this amendment, and do not object to its amendment if it can be improved, but I believe in the principle of it. I believe there is a demand for it, and I do not think we should hesitate to take this step in advance, and I believe, because we do not find a precedent behind which to shield ourselves, we should accept it or reject it upon its merits.

REMARKS OF MR. STEELE.

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman: "To err is human; to forgive, divine." I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment, because it is too cast-iron, too inflexible, too relentless in its scope to be incorporated in the Constitution. It has been well said, I think, that the laws which a people or a nation enacts for its self-government furnish the best criterion by which to judge of its intellectual and moral status. I do not believe that the people of the State of California are willing to incorporate into their Constitution a provision virtually abolishing the pardoning power, or, at least, so curtailing and crippling it as to render it almost ineffectual. I believe there should be some room left for the exercise of mercy. Mercy blesses both the giver and receiver. I have no doubt that the object of the gentleman in pressing the amendment is a good one. He wishes to relieve the Executive from this great pressure that is brought to bear upon him; and, in the second place, to protect society more effectually against criminals. Those objects are good, but we ought not to do it in such a manner as to render the pardoning power ineffectual, or abolish it almost entirely.

SPEECH OF MR. DOWLING.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. Chairman: I am not a sentimental man, and I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, because, sir, the question of the pardoning power is one of essential importance to the people of California. We have to-day in this country—in this State—thousands of men running rampant through the land that ought to be ornamenting a rope, or in San Quentin. We have them in San Francisco by the hundred. Why? On account of the laxity of our laws; because we are not inflexible enough. We want the best welded iron in order to keep down criminals nowadays.

Mr. President, the reason that men should be more honest and more noble in this country than anywhere else, is because we have liberty here. We have liberty everywhere; liberty to rob, liberty to plunder, liberty to steal, liberty to do as we like, liberty to violate our laws. That is not liberty; for, Mr. President, liberty lies in obedience to just laws equitably administered and sternly executed. There is an invisible ligament binding liberty to justice, and if that is once severed, liberty is very vague—very capricious, I should say—and it may depart forever. But if we do not allow justice to have its course and hold the scales, and deal out justice to every offender of the law, why, we will never have what we call peace and tranquillity in the State.

Why, sir, if a man commits a crime and is tried by an impartial jury, before a just Judge, the jury has time to deliberate. They are called from all the walks of life; they are called from the plow, from the workshop, and from the counting house. When they pronounce a verdict of guilty on a criminal, I say that the eternal words should be written over the gates of San Quentin: "He who enters here leaves all hope behind;" and out of those doors he should not go until the last hour, until the last minute has expired. When once we do that, why, we will not have the gates of San Quentin opened every now and then by the good and philanthropic Governor. I saw an account of a man, in the Sacramento Union, that assaulted and murdered a woman in San Francisco, and he has confessed that he has been half a dozen times in the State Prison. This thing of the pardoning power is getting to be used too freely. We have got to punish crime or we will never have an end of crime, and I hope that that amendment will pass, for it is the very thing we want in California.

SPEECH OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment will not pass. I do not believe that there has been any serious abuse of the pardoning power in this State. We have at this time one thousand five hundred men in the State Prison. We have had a large number at all times. Instead of the pardoning power having been abused, I think it might have been exercised more freely than it has with advantage. It is true, probably, that now and then a man has been pardoned who ought not to have been. But it is human to err, and it must be possible, with any system, that sometimes the Governor may be mistaken in the exercise of clemency. But there are, in my judgment, a hundred men in San Quentin now that would be better out than there, and no danger would be incurred by the State if they were pardoned. Now, it is said by the gentleman last on his feet that the State is running over with criminals, and that may be. There are a great many traversing the country who are criminals. It is said that one has been found lately in San Francisco who is charged with murdering a woman, and who has confessed to having been twice in the State Prison. That I saw, but it does not appear that the man had ever been pardoned. There are criminals sent to the State Prison that never ought to be turned loose upon society, but there are men sometimes in the State Prison who ought to be pardoned. There are boys, such as were spoken of by the gentleman from San Joaquin. There is a large number of boys there. If the object of sending them there is reform, you will never reform them if you keep them there. And it may be that many of those boys might be reformed if let out and taken by their friends.

I read yesterday of a boy some eighteen years of age, who came from Missouri less than a year ago, and has just been sentenced in Colusa County to four years in the State Prison. This boy was the son of an eminent physician in Missouri. He came to this State and tried to get work, but finding difficulties in his way at every step, and being unable to obtain work, he finally committed a crime, which was proven upon him, and he is sentenced to the State Prison. Now, that boy might not be really lost. It may be that the boy can be saved, not by keeping him four years in the State Prison, but by turning him over to better influences outside. Now, while it is true that one object of punishment is to deter others from committing like offenses, still you must strive, as far as may be, to save those who have already committed crimes. Now, I say that instead of the Governors having abused this power, they have not exercised it enough, in my judgment. It ought ought to be exercised freely. Out of the one thousand five hundred men and boys in the State Prison, there are many of them that might be pardoned and the State be all the better off for their being pardoned.

Now, I hold that the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, would practically abolish the pardoning power. You say that pardon may be granted when the party is proved to be innocent. Of course such a one ought to be pardoned. Or, when it appears that the judgment is unjust. What is meant by a judgment being unjust? Here is a man who is called up and tried for a homicide, and the jury find him guilty of manslaughter, or murder in the second degree. There was evidence tending to show him guilty of an offense under the law. What is meant by saying that the judgment is unjust? One Judge might sentence him for life, and another Judge might sentence him to five or ten years. Which one of these judgments is unjust? They may say it is just in any case, because the man has been found guilty of the homicide. It is a just judgment, unless the party was convicted wrongfully. There ought to be a place where this question can be considered. There ought to be a man or a Board that can consider it. There are many cases where the judgment of the Governor can be exercised properly when those who do not understand his reasons may wonder why parties should be released from prison. A man is sometimes convicted under such circumstances that there is almost a general feeling of sympathy for him. Take some of these cases that have been spoken of, where there are some family disturbances. Somebody has entered into the family circle; the man is generally acquitted by the jury; but suppose the jury convicts? Now, the Judge cannot help himself. If the jury says "guilty," the Judge must pronounce the sentence, because it is the law. The man has committed a homicide and is guilty before the law; he must go to the State Prison for life, or for ten years, or for such time as the law prescribes, unless the Governor interposes his power and releases him from his imprisonment. I say that the Governor ought to do it, and if I were Governor I would do it if I had the power. I would be willing to put more power in the hands of our Governors in this respect. They have not betrayed this trust; they have not abused this privilege; they have exercised it fairly and well. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

SPEECH OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I do not agree with the gentleman from Yuba, that the Governors have not abused this power. I believe that it has been abused, not in one case, but in a great many cases. I will not charge any particular Governor with exercising the executive clemency improperly, but cases have been too frequent where it has been exercised to the detriment of justice. Nor will I hold that they have been governed by political influence, or by money. I would not lay any such charge at the door of any Governor. But it has been done by sympathetic appeals which they could not withstand. No wonder, is it, that the Governor will hie himself away to the mountains and remain away for weeks, when a wife or sister will be knocking at his door and pleading to him with the powers of speech and all the love that they have for a brother, son, husband, or father, as the case may be, until he is finally overpowered by the importunities on the part of friends or relatives of the prisoner, until he is finally compelled to grant a pardon.

Now, sir, as gentlemen have intimated, pardons are frequently recommended by the jury and sometimes by the Judge, which I am sorry to say is against the interests of justice. When a man is convicted of a felony, sometimes the whole community feels that he ought to be punished severely; but I care not how great that feeling is at the time, in a very short time it is removed, and gradually sympathy takes the place of it. Yet, at the same time, that will be abused. It is often carried too far, and it is so that men forget the perpetrator of the crime in the desire to have him pardoned, through sympathy.

There is another objection to this amendment. I think that it places too great a restriction upon the power of pardon in this: that if a prisoner was taken sick, or when they are liable to die within a short time, there will be no power to pardon them. That is the case in a number of instances. Men who have been confined for five, ten, fifteen, or twenty years will fall into consumption, and it is evident that they can not live but a short time unless removed from there. There are times, in cases like that, when the executive clemency should be interposed; when mercy and humanity calls for it; that a person in that condition should be removed, especially when he has relatives that are willing to take charge of him; where in a short time he will answer before the Judge of all. I hold that in a case of that kind, where a man has relatives and where his time on earth is short, and there is no fear that the case will be abused, it is right that those who are relatives of his should take charge of him. It is right that his eyes should be closed in death by the mother who looks upon him as fondly as when she rocked him as a baby; she who never thinks that her boy was guilty, or son, or father, or husband, no matter what the crime may be. No matter how others look upon him; though he may be an object upon whom all look with disdain; though he may be ostracised from society, yet there is still one and sometimes others whose hearts beat as warmly towards him as they ever did, and who cannot think him guilty.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: Is it not true to-day that the prison discipline allows this class of convicts to be out as trusties in different parts of the place or near by? It would be unlikely that a man would be denied that privilege of being put out in that way.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I believe that under this amendment the Governor would be denied the exercise of the pardoning power even in a case of that kind. While that class of prisoners could go out in the yard, they could not go to their relatives. I do not think if the Pardoning Board had this power they would abuse it. If a man was simply sick temporarily, for a short time, I do not believe that the Board would say that he should be pardoned, but only in those cases where the interests of humanity required it. When men become sick so that it is certain that they will die, then is the time for executive clemency.

MR. BLACKMER. If the gentleman will propose an amendment to cover that point, I will accept it.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: My idea is that this pardoning power should be placed in a Board of two, or three or more. Probably the best would be the Governor, Attorney-General, and the Supreme Court constituting a Board of Pardons. I have heard that with them the power has not been abused; that it has been used wisely; and I think that if we had it in this State it would be much better. The argument is used that the Supreme Court is overworked now. Well, I think that with the provisions that we shall put into the Constitution, their labor will not be so great as in the past, and that they could attend to this duty. But we might allow the Governor to use the power in cases of misdemeanor, and in cases of felony leave it be decided by the Governor, Attorney-General, and Chief Justice, or a majority of them. I do not think anything less will satisfy the people of this State, than to have a Board of Pardons. So amend the Constitution that they shall be selected—either the Governor and Attorney-General, or the Governor, Attorney-General, and the Chief Justice—if gentlemen object to the Supreme Court being associated with it. I believe that with the Chief Justice, with his ability, with his calm judicial mind, exercising the power with the Governor and Attorney-General, it would be a wise provision. I think that with such a Board of Pardons where the interests of justice required that a man should not be pardoned the pardon will be refused. I think, therefore, that I shall vote against this proposition.

SPEECH OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the amendment under consideration removes the word "pardon," in its proper signification, from the Constitution and laws of this State. If it is to be adopted California will be the first State in the Union to place a constitutional prohibition upon the promptings of mercy and the voice of humanity. Why talk about pardoning a man who is shown to be innocent? Such a man has done nothing to be forgiven. His release from punishment is a matter of right and not a matter of grace. Neither is it a pardon to relieve a man, though guilty of crime, who has served out so much of his penalty as is just. Such a man, having paid the equitable penalty of his crime, is released as a matter of justice and not as a matter of favor. Pardon, as I understand the word, is forgiveness for a crime committed, and in that sense of the term I defend the existence of the pardoning power. It is not wise to place even a criminal where there is no incentive to good rather than to bad conduct. Is there to be no difference between that convict who obeys all the rules of the prison, who labors industriously and faithfully, and who, so far as he can, respects and preserves the interests of the State, and that other convict who lives in constant defiance of the prison discipline, who is universally an incorrigible dissolute, and who embraces every opportunity to injure the State and to take the lives of his keepers? Is it not common, even for convicts, in time of revolt, to place their services on the side of the State, and have they not even rescued from death the keepers who are placed over them? Is it not true that the sentences of several convicts in the State Prison were commuted a few years ago for their heroic conduct at the time of the fire there? Would you say to such men, "Sir, the State accepts your services and your devotion, but a provision in our Constitution prevents us from expressing our gratitude to you. We cannot make any distinction in your favor. Your good deeds must await their reward in heaven?"

And, sir, besides the instances I have just alluded to, there must be many cases where even after a just conviction, even considering the guilt of a man, his subsequent demeanor and his subsequent conduct shows that he ought to be restored to society, and given an opportunity to make a man of himself. The proposition under consideration would make the pardoning power simply a Court of appeal, or a place for the correction of errors. If that is the purpose, we ought to strike out the words, "Chief Justice of the Supreme Court," and the word, "Governor," and place it in the hands of the legal authorities. Pardon is intended to exist as a matter of grace, and there must be some one intrusted with this power in a civilized country.

But it is said that the pardoning power has been abused. I suppose that no power can exist without mistakes. I suppose that there is no department of our government but what commits errors, and if we are resolved not to do anything that will not always operate correctly, we will stay the operations of every department of government. But I believe that more errors have been committed against than in favor of mercy. Why, sir, in the twenty-eight or twenty-nine years during which California has been a State, it is said that only seven hundred and thirty persons have been pardoned. That is not a large percentage. Do we not know that many of these persons were only set free after their sentences had almost expired, and when they had paid nearly the full penalty due to the State? Do we not know that many were only set free because the sands of life were ebbing low, and it was desired that they might end their days in the presence and care of friends?

I deny that this power has been abused to any considerable extent, and I believe that a limitation, such as is proposed here, would take from every young man their incentive to good behavior and to good conduct. But there is another consideration. It must be remembered that the pardoning power has been a part of our system of government. It must be remembered that the consideration of the existence of the pardoning power has entered into every sentence of every one of those one thousand five hundred men who are said to be serving there. I know a number of Judges who have told me that they have sentenced men to long periods of confinement because they believed that a desire to escape would be an incentive to behave righteously and properly, to so ingratiate themselves with the prison authorities that at the end of a suitable time, when the Wardens believed they had been sufficiently punished, and when they believed it was safe to restore them to society, that they would be restored; and the adoption of this will add to the sentence of these men who have been sentenced with a view to the existence and continuance of this power.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH, OF SAN FRANCISCO.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the whole section, because in my estimation there are too many pardons entirely. I think that the Governor should be the last man to have any thing to do with the pardoning power. I am in favor of abolishing the pardoning power altogether. It appears to me that when a man has once been convicted of a crime, he should suffer the consequences. It is offering a premium on crime. It is opening the door to corruption. I hope, if we must have the pardoning power at all, it will be vested in a Pardoning Board. I think the Governor should be the last man to hold this power, because he is generally too tender. He would not like to offend any political friends, as it would hinder his chances of elevating himself in political position. I do not wish to leave it in the power of any Governor of this State to turn loose the bank smashers and political thieves to again rob the people. Therefore, I think it should be in a Board of Pardon Commissioners.

MR. RINGGOLD. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to all the propositions, so far. I see no improvement upon the original section. For one reason, I should prefer that the Governor should be responsible, and that is that the Governor is anxious to be relieved of it. For that reason I prefer to keep it there. I would be willing to have the power left right where it is.

REMARKS OF MR. OVERTON.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: It is a little surprising to me to see gentlemen get up here, some of them, and seem to want to abrogate entirely this pardoning power. One of the reasons that some of the gentlemen assign is that some particular man has got away with the funds of some savings bank, or he has done something which it is true he ought to be punished for, and they seem to think that because of that we ought to close the doors forever against the pardoning of prisoners. There are instances where I think this pardoning power should be exercised, and many of them. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to leave it where it has been, and where it is left in most of the States. I remember a case which illustrates it. I remember when I was prosecuting attorney, that I tried some eight boys, at one time, for a robbery that they had perpetrated upon a lot of Chinamen—all of them young excepting one. They were led to it by this older head. They were convicted—necessarily convicted—under the law, and had to be sent to San Quentin. Nearly all of those boys, who were young, and many of them I had known from little children, were pardoned by the Governor. Nearly every one of them to-day, and all of them, so far as I know, are doing well. They reformed and became good citizens. There are many cases of this kind, and like that mentioned by Judge Belcher, where the penalty must be inflicted, because it is the law. I say that there should be some way in which executive clemency can be exercised. I am in favor, so far as I am concerned, of leaving the pardoning power just as it is. I do not believe that it has ever been abused, except in very few instances, and then I think it has been by the Executive being imposed upon. If the Executive has been imposed upon, they are just as likely to impose upon other men. I think it is better where there is only one man, because he will be more careful than where you divide the responsibility.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was lost.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I desire to renew a motion made on Saturday in regard to this section. It is to "strike out all of line two and the words 'power to grant,' in the third line." It does not alter the sense in anywise. The motion is simply to make a verbal correction. It will then read: "The Governor shall have the power to grant reprieves, pardons, and commutations of sentence," etc.

Adopted.

MR. HUESTIS. I move to strike out the word "previously," in the seventeenth line. As it now stands, the language is equivocal, and conveys the idea that where a man shall have been thrice convicted he can be pardoned.

MR. SCHELL. I understand that that word has already been stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is not stricken out.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: It is obvious to any gentleman who will read this that this leaves it equivocal. If I understand the intention of the committee it was to fix it so that where a person had been convicted of a felony three times, he could not be pardoned. Now, I think this would bear the construction that he would have to get up to his fourth conviction before this inhibition would apply. To prohibit the pardon it would have to appear that he had been convicted three times previously to that conviction for which the pardon was asked. Now, it simply means that if with that conviction he has been three times convicted, a pardon cannot be granted. Therefore, it will read right if this word "previously" is stricken out. I know that is what was intended by the committee. I am on that committee myself, and Judge Shafter called my attention to it before he left.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. GRACE. I wish to submit a substitute for the whole section.

MR. ESTEE. I rise to a point of order. A substitute cannot be offered, as the committee has already adopted a part of the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will so rule. The motion is out of order as a substitute for the whole.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to this thing of granting the power of pardon to the Governor. I do not think that the Governor knows any more about the sentence of a criminal than a jury of twelve men. When a man has been arrested and tried before a jury of twelve men, who have sat in Court for days, with the best counsel that can be procured in the State; they hear the evidence and they investigate it; they sit there with a disposition only to do justice; when the case goes to the jury they are instructed by a just and impartial Judge that if there remains any reasonable doubt in relation to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, that the prisoner is entitled to the benefit of the doubt; when he is convicted after the jury has given him the benefit of the doubt, then I am of the opinion that that man is guilty, and when he is sentenced to the Penitentiary, he should stay there until he serves out the last day of that sentence. In relation to one other thing that was said——

MR. TERRY. I rise to a point of order. There is nothing before the house.

MR. GRACE. Isn't the pardoning power——

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the whole section is now before the committee. The gentleman has a right to speak to it.

MR. TERRY. I understand that there is no motion to amend.

MR. GRACE. If the gentleman will sit down——

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule that the whole section is before the house.

MR. GRACE. The gentleman from Sacramento says that there has been seven hundred and fifty men pardoned out. Well, let us multiply that by twelve. There has been nine thousand impartial jurors that have said men ought to go to the penitentiary, and seven or eight Governors have pardoned them out. We have their opinions against nine thousand honest jurymen. These jurymen have investigated the cases and rendered impartial verdicts. It was their opinion that they were guilty, and these Governors, for reasons brought to bear by friends, have seen fit, in their wisdom, to say that they should be pardoned. I believe that the Governor should have the right to grant reprieves. I put in a proposition to that effect, and they recommended that it be not adopted. I would like to have had the sense of the Committee of the Whole on that. I believe that there are instances where new facts are developed that would bring into question the justice of the sentence, and that the criminal should have a reprieve. I believe it should be the duty of the Governor to remand him to the District Court from whence he was sentenced, and if he could show anything to bring into question the justice of the sentence, let him prove it before a jury of his countrymen. I claim that there should be no other tribunal, and nothing above a jury of his countrymen. That no Governor should have the power to say that a man should be pardoned after he had been sentenced by twelve jurymen of his country. And then, if you want to come down to exact justice, if you want to meet the ends of justice, say that no man should go unpunished after that opportunity. There is nothing inhuman about that. It would never affect any poor man. The poor man may go to the penitentiary and the circumstances do not develop. It takes something metallic to show the innocence of a criminal. I say that the bank smashing thieves and stock gambling thieves in this State, and every other State in the Union, can do things with impunity, and can ride roughshod over the law—steal, rob, and murder—and when they are sentenced then the Governor will pardon them out. There are cases in this State, and there have been in others. There is the case of Stokes, who murdered Fisk. He was only up in the penitentiary of New York for a few years and then he was turned loose, though it was in my opinion a cold blooded murder. There is not only a dozen cases in the United States, but hundreds of cases, where men of influence and wealth have been convicted and there is no prison strong enough to hold them. If you give the pardoning power to the Governor there is no punishing the moneyed aristocracy of the land. Put it into the hands of jurymen, who are good men.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section thirteen, of article five, as proposed by the Committee on Pardoning Power, by inserting in line sixteen, after the word 'case' and before the word 'where' the words 'of embezzlement or.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer that amendment because of the peculiarity of the offense of embezzlement. It is an offense which but few persons, where an opportunity is given to commit it, are able to avoid. The trust that is reposed in these banking corporations, saving and loan societies; the trust that is reposed in public officers who have committed to their charge public funds; the trusts that are reposed in persons who have in their hands the estates of deceased persons and those of minors, orphans, and persons committed to the insane asylum, are peculiar cases in my estimation of the law. I think they ought to be exempt from the general rule applicable to pardons, and that is the reason for offering this amendment. It will make that clause of the section read: "Neither the Governor and Chief Justice nor the Legislature shall have power to grant pardons, or commutations of sentence, in any case of embezzlement, or where the convict has been thrice convicted of felony." These are the reasons that I offer that amendment. I think that that amendment presents a case which ought to be exempted from the general rule.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: If I understand the amendment correctly, it seems to me that it would make an absurdity on its face. "Neither the Governor and Chief Justice, nor the Legislature"—whereas the section does not propose to allow anybody but the Governor to grant any kind of a pardon.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I ask leave to include in that amendment such an amendment as will make this last sentence conform to the first part of the section. Of course that is the way the section now reads, and it did not occur to me at the time that an amendment had been made to the former part of the section. Of course this last part ought to conform. I overlooked the fact that the amendment to the first part of the section had confined pardons to the Governor. It will not vitiate the section if it remains even in the form that it is now presented. If the gentleman will offer that amendment I will accept it; otherwise I ask leave to amend it so as to make it conform in that way.

The amendment was lost.

MR. SHOEMAKER (at twelve noon). I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I offer the following amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Governor of the State shall have power to remit fines and forfeitures, to grant reprieves, commutations of sentence, and pardons, except in cases of impeachment; but no pardon shall be granted, nor sentence commuted, except upon the recommendation, in writing, of the Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of the Commonwealth, Attorney-General, and Secretary of Internal Affairs, or any three of them, after full hearing, upon due public notice and in open session, and such recommendation, with reasons therefor at length, shall be recorded and filed in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth."

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: That is the mode adopted in Pennsylvania. I copied it from the late Constitution of that State. Pennsylvania formerly left it to the Governor altogether. When she had her last Convention they adopted this mode. I think it is excellent. Next, to do away with it altogether, which I am in favor of.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule that the amendment is out of order, as it seems to be a substitute for the whole matter.

MR. GRACE. I wish to offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'reprieves' the following: 'But nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the granting of pardons or commutations of sentence after conviction; but if it shall appear to the Governor that in the case of any person undergoing sentence, additional testimony mitigating the other circumstances have been developed which bring into question the justice of such sentence, the Governor shall have the power to remand such person to the custody of the Court in which the sentence was passed, for a new trial.'"

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: Now, all I have to say to this Convention is this: that if they want to meet the ends of justice and come down to just exactly what is right, they will adopt this amendment. If any man has been convicted of a crime of which he is not guilty, and facts have been developed since his sentence, why, that leaves a chance that he may still be acquitted of it; and, if he is really guilty, and there has nothing occurred only sympathy and friends and moneyed influence on the outside, he will have to stay in the penitentiary. I tell you that a jury of twelve men ain't going to let them out. It takes evidence. It must be the truth that is sworn to and proved. The same rule should apply to pardons as to trials. It should be the same kind of evidence. If you establish a commission it will be something like the machine that got Mr. Hayes into the Presidential chair. I contend that three Democrats and two Republicans could have decided that just as well as eight Republicans and seven Democrats. [Laughter.] If you want to get justice let it be an even tribunal. And, sir, if it is right for twelve men to send men to the penitentiary, then it will be nothing more than right and fair to submit the question of the justice of a sentence to twelve men. Justice should be blind, and they should look at the evidence instead of the sympathy and the filthy lucre that has been brought to bear upon the Executive. I do not believe that there has been seven hundred and fifty men put in the penitentiary who ought not to have been. If so, you say nine thousand jurymen were not honest, and the Governors were infallible. I do not believe in the infallibility of the Governor. I think he is more liable to err than twelve jurymen. If you are in favor of coming down to a fair, square proposition, whereby no man can be left in the penitentiary unless he deserves to be there, and no man can get out unless he ought to, then vote for this proposition. I am in hopes that this amendment will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. STEDMAN.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire to detain this Convention with a long speech. I desire simply to say that in my opinion the section is now in its proper form. I hope that all amendments will be voted down, and that the section will be adopted as it now stands. As I understand our prisons, they are, or ought to be, reformatory in character. When men are placed in the State Prison, and understand it, they are placed there in order that they might be reformed and become better men. Can we not extend to them mercy and charity? Mr. Chairman, let us put ourselves in their places.

[Laughter and cries of "Oh, no!"]

MR. ROLFE. I move that the gentleman have leave to put himself in that position.

[Cries of "Leave!" "leave!"]

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I cannot better express my sentiments than by reading—for I do not remember it—the words of the old Scotch poem, and then I will sit down, and after which I hope the section will be adopted. Here it is:

"Oh, gently scan your brother man,
Still gentler, sister woman;
Though they may gang ——

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I merely rise to suggest that the gentleman sing it.

[Cries of "sing!" "sing!"]

MR. STEDMAN. As I am not in the habit of soaring aloft as my friend from Sacramento is, I am sure that I could not as aptly be called a bird; therefore, if he desires to sing it, I will turn it over to him. Perhaps I am not competent to read it correctly:

"Oh, gently scan your brother man,
Still gentler, sister woman;
Though they may gang a kennin' wrang—
To step aside is human.
One point must still be greatly dark,
The moving why they do it;
And just as lamely can ye mark
How far, perhaps, they rue it."

MR. HOWARD. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The hour having arrived, the Convention took the usual recess until two P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., Mr. Tinnin in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

NOTICES TO AMEND RULES.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I wish to give notice that to-morrow I will move the adoption of the following rule, to be known as Rule Seventy-six:

THE SECRETARY read the notice:

"Every section adopted by the Committee of the Whole shall be referred to the Committee on Revision and Adjusting without debate, whose duty it shall be to formulate the same and report it back to the Convention before final action thereon."

MR. CONDON. Mr. President: I give notice that I will, on to-morrow, move to amend Rule Fifty-two, by striking therefrom the words, "by title."

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I desire to give notice that I shall, to-morrow, move to strike out of Rule Fifty-six the words, "except for a limited time," and substitute other words.

THE PRESIDENT. Send up the notice in writing.

AMENDMENTS.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: I ask leave to introduce, at this time, a proposed amendment to the article introduced by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, by adding thereto the following:

THE SECRETARY read:

"Every railroad company or association existing under the laws of this State at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall accept the provisions of this article in good faith before being entitled to claim or have any of the benefits of any future legislation thereunder."

MR. HERRINGTON. My intention is to make that section twenty-four of the report.

THE PRESIDENT. It will be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole, to be considered with the article on corporations.

MR. FREEMAN. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to further consider the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I would like to have leave, before we go into Committee of the Whole, to introduce an amendment in relation to the creation of a State Department of Labor. The amendment was received:

STATE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND LABOR STATISTICS.

SECTION 1. There shall be a State Department of Labor and Labor Statistics.

SEC. 2. The duty of the department shall be to collect and publish statistical details concerning every class of labor in this State; also to have general supervision of the commercial, industrial, educational, social, and sanitary condition of the laboring classes.

SEC. 3. Weekly and annual reports shall be made by the department and printed by the State Printer, and gratuitously distributed throughout the State. The chief of the department shall also report to each Legislature, and advise such legislation as may be necessary to encourage and protect labor.

SEC. 4. The officers shall be a General Superintendent, with an office in the State Capitol building; and a Superintendent, with an office in the City of San Francisco. They shall be elected at the general State election, and hold office for four years. Their salary shall be two hundred ($200) dollars per month.

SEC. 5. The Legislature may provide for traveling and other incidental expenses, and for employment of clerks, and their compensation.

MR. BEERSTECHER. This amendment was referred to the Committee on Legislative Department. I think it was improperly referred. I understand that there will be a meeting of the Committee on Labor and Capital this evening, and I would like to have this amendment considered at that time, therefore I move its reference to that committee.

So ordered.

NOTICE TO AMEND A RULE.

MR. STEELE. Mr. President: I hereby give notice that, to-morrow, immediately after the meeting of the Convention, I will move to amend Rule Fifty-six as follows:

After the word "applicable" in the second line, strike out all the words down to the word "except" in the third line; in the fourth line, after the word "question," strike out "may" and insert "shall not," and then add to the end of the rule: "Each speaker shall be limited to one speech of ten minutes, except the Chairman of a standing committee, who shall have the closing speech and double time when any section of the report of his committee is under consideration and discussion." Then the rule will read as follows:

"The rules of the Convention shall be observed in Committee of the Whole, so far as they may be applicable, except that the ayes and noes shall not be taken, and the previous question shall not be moved. Each speaker shall be limited to one speech of ten minutes, except the Chairman of a standing committee, who shall have the closing speech and double time when any section of the report of his committee shall be under consideration and discussion."

PARDONING POWER.

MR. FREEMAN. I now renew my motion that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to further consider the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. VACQUEREL. I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the end of the section the following: 'But when a criminal has been sentenced to death, and the execution shall not take place on the day set, such sentence shall be commuted and another penalty inflicted.'"

MR. VACQUEREL. The object of that amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to prevent the repetition of a scene that occurred four or five months ago. A man was tried and condemned, and should have been hung on a certain day, but it appears that through some mismanagement he was subject to the torture of a postponement for eight days, and after that postponement he got ready to be executed, and then there was another postponement. I do not believe that the law intends that a man shall suffer torture. Therefore this amendment provides that when a day is set for the execution, and it does not take place, the sentence must be commuted to imprisonment for life.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. BARTON. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by substituting the word 'twice' for 'thrice,' in line seventeen."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to briefly explain why I desire this amendment. Gentlemen of this Convention will remember, a few years ago, in eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, that France, being overrun with her criminals, her prisons being full to overflowing, took it upon herself to appropriate a sufficient amount of money to place these criminals on board of ships, and did so, and forwarded them to the coast of America. They were landed on the shores of North America, and they were scattered broadcast throughout the land. Many if not all of them were hardened criminals, unfit to remain in the enlightened and civilized country of France, and they were poured upon the American nation, and upon American society. I think, in this view, it would be very proper to restrict these sentences to twice instead of thrice. I think that when a hardened criminal has been convicted twice, that there should be no pardon granted.

Again, many of you who have lived in this country very well understand that the penal colonies of Great Britain, from the Island of Australia, day after day, and week after week, have poured these hardened criminals upon us, and the sooner we do something to protect ourselves and stop this influx of criminals the better. Therefore I hope this amendment will prevail. Why should a man who has been convicted twice, and is then convicted and sentenced a third time, be pardoned. If you leave it as it is, there will hardly be a case that it will reach. It says no one who has been previously thrice convicted of felony shall be pardoned. Hence a criminal must be serving out his fourth term before this provision will debar him from a pardon. A man would hardly have time to serve four terms for felony during an ordinary lifetime, so that as it stands, it will avail but little.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

MR. CROSS. Some gentlemen near me could not hear the amendment. Will the Secretary please read it again.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment.

Division being called, the committee divided, and the amendment was adopted by a vote of sixty-seven ayes to twenty-seven noes.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert between the word 'Court,' in line two, and the word 'shall,' in same line, in the article proposed by the committee, the following: 'and the Attorney-General, or a majority of them, the Governor being one,' so that it will read:

SEC. 13. The Governor shall have the power to grant reprieves, and the Governor and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and the Attorney General, or a majority of them, the Governor being one, shall have power to grant pardons and commutations of sentence, after conviction, for all offenses, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions, and with such restrictions and limitations, as they may think proper, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons. Upon conviction for treason, the Governor shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the Legislature, at its next meeting, when the Legislature shall either pardon, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. The Governor shall communicate to the Legislature, at the beginning of every session, every case of reprieve or pardon granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence, and its date, the date of the pardon and reprieve, and the reasons for granting the same. Neither the Governor and Chief Justice nor the Legislature shall have power to grant pardons, or commutations of sentence, in any case where the convict has been previously thrice convicted of felony."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. McCALLUM. I have waited for the various amendments to be disposed of before offering this. I now offer it and ask that a vote be taken on it.

MR. TERRY. There is no such wording as the above. It has been stricken out by the Committee of the Whole. There is no such word as "Court" in there. I raise that as a point of order.

MR. McCALLUM. I am taking the report.

THE CHAIRMAN. The whole of the second line has been stricken out. The Secretary will read it as amended.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 13. The Governor shall have power to grant reprieves, pardons, and commutations of sentence, etc."

THE CHAIRMAN. All the rest in relation to the Court has been stricken out.

MR. McCALLUM. Then I move to insert the words, "And the Governor, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and the Attorney-General."

MR. ESTEE. I raise the point of order that it has already been voted upon.

MR. McCALLUM. It has never been voted upon by the Committee of the Whole, or by the Convention.

MR. HOWARD. It is not in order, because it has already been voted upon.

MR. TERRY. That has been voted upon, and it is left in that way.

SPEECH OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: If you will allow me. The committee reported that the Chief Justice should be added to the Governor. My colleague, Judge Campbell, moved to strike out "Chief Justice" and insert "Attorney-General." That amendment was voted down. Then an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, to strike out certain portions of the section. That was the way that stood on that proposition. That there should be a council, consisting of the Governor, Attorney-General, and Chief Justice, has not been voted upon yet by the Committee of the Whole. I ask a vote of the committee upon it. I have waited for other gentlemen to present their various propositions, and in fact the other day, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, I gave way and let him present his proposition first, and I now desire a vote of the committee on the proposition. I have but a word to say on it. We have voted upon so many propositions, that it comes to this at last, that unless we adopt something to this effect the Constitution will stand substantially as it is, which, if it is the wish of a majority of this Convention, of course we must submit to. But I desire to have an expression on this one proposition.

As far as I am concerned, in the County of Alameda, while this proposition was being discussed, every voter in the county is committed to the proposition which has been expressed in this brief language, that the Constitution should be so amended as to vest the pardoning power, now exercised by the Executive, in a Commission. I hold that where gentlemen stand on a plain proposition of that sort, if they can't vote for it, it is their business to resign, and let others who choose to vote stand in their places. I recognize the right of the people, and my object has been to have a Commission constituted. So many have been suggested and voted down that it seems to me this is about all there is left. On this question I wish to call attention to the Constitution of the State of Nevada. There the language is this:

"The Governor, Justices of the Supreme Court, and Attorney-General, or a majority of them, of whom the Governor shall be one, may, upon such conditions and with such limitations and restrictions as they may think proper, remit fines and forfeitures, commute punishments, and grant pardons after convictions in all cases except treason," etc.

Instead of having all the Justices, I use the name of the Chief Justice alone. As I understand the report of the Judiciary Committee, the Supreme Court is to consist of seven, and the Court will probably be held in two sections, in which case there would be less labor for the Chief Justice than either of the others. That is a good argument for it. I submit that while objections may be made to any form of Commission suggested, that the Chief Justice should be one and the Attorney-General another; and in this connection I will state that I have had a consultation with some gentlemen from Nevada, and I understand from them that that constitutional provision there, on this subject, works exceedingly well, and without complaint from anybody. I have left out this large number of Judges, for one Judge is enough. Now, the Attorney-General and the Chief Justice can't grant pardons, but the Chief Justice and the Governor can grant pardons. I believe, without discussing this question, that I express the sentiments of the people that I represent, and the sentiments of a very large majority of the people of this State, that this immense power should be in a Commission, to say nothing about the question whether it has been abused or not. It is too great a power. I would not take it from the Executive, but I would have a Commission, so as to have some additional authority with him. I believe there should be a Commission. I have no doubt that the judgment of this Convention will be that there shall not be any more officers. I ask for a vote on the proposition, and then I shall have discharged my duty. Will the Secretary read the amendment?

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Governor, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and the Attorney-General, or a majority of them, the Governor being one, shall have power to grant reprieves, pardons, commutations of sentences," etc.

MR. McCALLUM. It should read in this way:

"The Governor shall have power to grant reprieves, and the Governor, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and the Attorney-General, or a majority of them, the Governor being one, shall have power to grant," etc.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I don't see why we should not be allowed to vote on this amendment. The majority of this Convention have not settled down upon the proposition that the Governor alone should act in this matter. The plan suggested by Mr. McCallum is the one that came very near being settled upon. Now, as for me, as far as I am concerned, it makes no difference, but it seems to me that this great power should not be left in the hands of one man, because if it is left to one man it is liable to abuse, not by any intention on the part of the individual, not by any political influence upon the Governor alone, but on account of the difficulty connected with the exercise of a wise discretion, it should be exercised by more than one man. This pardoning power is one of considerable importance. It has a great bearing upon the amount of crime, and should be exercised with a great deal of caution. Therefore, it seems to me that a commission of some kind, that would deal with this matter, probably two or three persons passing judgment upon it, they would be more apt to treat the matter of a pardon, when it came before them, with justice and impartiality than one man alone could possibly do. I say I think the proposed amendment is a good one, and I shall favor it.

MR. STRONG. Mr. Chairman: I do not see, sir, why the members of this Convention should be so fearful of the Grand Jury, and yet be so particular about the pardoning power. I hope that amendment will not pass, because I think that the gentlemen of this Convention may at some future time stand in need of executive clemency.

SPEECH OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I was not aware, until a few minutes ago, that the committee had decided to strike out the Chief Justice. I am informed that that was the action of the committee, on Saturday last. It would seem, therefore, that we are left the alternative of leaving the pardoning power to the Governor alone, as in the present Constitution; or to confer that power upon him in conjunction with the Chief Justice and Attorney-General; or, which is a very improbable thing, that the committee will elect to constitute a Pardoning Board, of other and new officers, created for that purpose. Mr. Chairman, I take it for granted that there is a general disposition, or, rather, a general indisposition, on the part of the committee, to create new offices beyond the reasonable necessities of the government. I take it, therefore, that the committee will decide either to lodge the pardoning power in the hands of the Governor alone, or confer it upon him together with the Chief Justice and Attorney-General. Now, we have had a very considerable experience under the present Constitution, and I doubt not there are many members on this floor who, in one way or another, have come to have some personal knowledge of the difficulties surrounding the exercise of this power by the Governor solely. Sometimes there have been public complaints of the absolutely improper exercise of this power. I am not here to say that these complaints are well or ill-founded. I speak only of the fact that these complaints have been made. That would lead one to the conclusion that the complaints have been well founded.

Now, sir, this power of pardon is one of the highest prerogatives ever conferred upon the officers of government. One is convicted of crime—and presumably he has been properly convicted—he has been arrested, charged with a crime, has had his day in Court, has had the opportunity of defending in person and by counsel, and has not, by his own exertions, and the aid of friends, been able to secure an acquittal. Then he asks the Executive to interfere in his behalf. Therefore a great responsibility devolves upon the officers who are clothed with the power of pardon. Who will question the truth of the assertion that this power should be lodged in responsible hands in the interest of justice and good government. Now, how shall we lodge this power? Where shall we lodge this power? The amendment says with the Governor, Chief Justice, and Attorney-General. It is to be noted in this connection that it creates no new officers, nor any additional expense. That it neither requires any additional salaries, nor any increase in the salaries of those officers who are named as composing the Board. We are simply charging three high officers of the government with this highest responsibility that can devolve upon any person. It does seem to me that it would be well disposed of, and well administered, if we leave this power in such hands as these. We might give our consent that the Governor should be one.

As to myself, therefore, there can be no doubt. Can any rational objection be urged to allowing the Chief Justice to act in this matter—a man who is selected for that high position on account of his high personal qualifications, for his unimpeachable character, and for his judicial learning? Can you well place it in safer or more responsible hands? I know it can be said on the other hand—as a proposition it may have been said—that the duties of the Chief Justice would perhaps be so onerous, as Chief Justice, that this additional responsibility should not be cast upon him. There is some force in the objection, but the responsibility will be divided. If the system proposed here—if I understand correctly the proposition of the Judiciary Committee, the duties of the Chief Justice at least will be somewhat different—perhaps somewhat less in the amount of labor than hitherto have devolved, and now devolve, upon the Chief Justice. If the general plan should be adopted of two sections of the Supreme Court, the two sections might transact business without his presence. His presence would be required only when the Court would be sitting together. I am, of course, discussing it from the standpoint of the committee's report.

Now, it seems to me, in view of the grave responsibility which will devolve upon whoever exercises this power of pardon, that it cannot be more safely and more judiciously invested than in the hands of the Chief Justice, and as some have remarked, with the Attorney-General, who is the law officer of the government, and peculiarly qualified by his knowledge of cases coming before this Board to give valuable advice and aid. Now I would suggest also to the gentlemen of the Convention that this is one of those grave responsibilities where it is thought proper to the ends of justice, and partly as a matter of justice to the officers who discharge their duty, to divide it in some manner. Why, sir, I have had occasion to talk with more than one of the Governors of this State in times past, who assured me that they have often found themselves driven clear to the verge of insanity by importunities and entreaties of persons and their friends asking for pardons. I can well conceive how this may be true. Any one of us placed in such a position, charged with this sole duty, would not only find himself greatly burdened, but greatly affected by the importunities of these parties. I would suggest, in view of these considerations, that we take the Governor, the Executive of the State, selected by all the electors of the State; the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, selected for his probity of character, for his learning, for his soundness of judgment, for his wisdom; and the Attorney-General, selected as the representative of the people to see that justice is done. When these three concur, or a majority of them, there will be no reasonable ground for doubting that a pardon will ever be granted improperly, or that it will ever be refused when it is just. In view of the circumstances I am strongly inclined to vote for this amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech. [Laughter.] But I do rise to protest earnestly and explicitly against this interminable speech-making, because we are all worn out. I, sir, with every other gentleman on this floor, am prepared to vote, and we were prepared to vote before this discussion commenced, and I hope I may be permitted to suggest to the gentlemen who are so anxious to air their eloquence, that they will have a better opportunity to air their eloquence on the live subjects of the day, and I therefore demand a vote on this question. [Applause.]

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I am somewhat terrified. I propose to state that I shall support the amendment, and I shall do so for these reasons. In the first place, because I believe the pardoning power is too great a power to be safely vested in one man. In the second place, because I believe a large majority of the electors of this State demand that the power shall be taken out of the hands of the Governor. In the third place, because I myself was elected upon a platform which distinctly calls for it. Read the tenth resolution of the platform of the Workingmen's party. The pardoning power now vested in the Governor shall be abolished." Nearly one half of the people voted upon that proposition in voting for the candidates of the Workingmen's party, and there is no reason to presume that the other half were opposed to it. Therefore I maintain that the majority of the people of this State demand the abolition of it. How it is to be abolished was not specified. I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda is as good a one as can be devised.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Division being called, the committee divided, and the amendment was rejected by a vote of fifty ayes to fifty-five noes.

MR. LARUE. Mr. Chairman: I move the committee now rise.

MR. TERRY. I move that the section be adopted as amended.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is——

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Chairman: I propose, sir, to submit a proposition from the Indiana Constitution, and ask a vote of the Committee of the Whole upon it. It reads as follows:

"The General Assembly may, by law,"——

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order. Is it in order to offer an amendment when a vote is being taken?

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair hadn't put the vote yet.

MR. MCCALLUM. I have a right to call a division.

MR. TERRY. Has the gentlemen a right to propose an amendment while a vote is being taken?

THE CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen have a right to discuss a proposition until the result is announced by the Chair.

MR. MCCALLUM. I offer an amendment, and ask leave to read it here, and then I will send it up:

"Insert between the words 'reprieve,' in line two, and the word 'shall' these words: 'The Legislature shall have power by law to constitute a Council, to be composed of the Governor and other State officers, a majority of whom, the Governor being one, shall,'" etc.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order, because the word "shall" has been stricken out by previous action of the committee.

MR. MCCALLUM. The last two words, "shall have," are there. The Chair is in error.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the whole line was stricken out. The question is on the adoption of the section as amended.

Adopted.

MR. LARUE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report back that we have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power, amended the same, and recommend its adoption as amended.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report to the Convention that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power, have amended the same, and recommend its adoption as amended. Those in favor of the adoption of the amendment say aye——

MR. VAN DYKE. That is upon the amendment, I suppose.

MR. WHITE. I move a substitute for the whole section.

MR. EVEY. I move that the report lie on the table and be printed, as adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

Carried.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the Article on Executive Department.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN Section nineteen and amendments were under consideration. The Secretary will read the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

troller, Treasurer, Attorney-General, and Surveyor-General, shall each, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected, which compensation is hereby fixed for the following officers for the two terms next ensuing the adoption of this Constitution, as follows: Governor, six thousand dollars per annum; Lieutenant-Governor, the same per diem as may be provided by law for the Speaker of the Assembly; the Secretary of State, Controller, and Treasurer, three thousand dollars each per annum, said compensation to be in full for all services by them respectively rendered in any official capacity or employment whatsoever during their respective terms of office; provided, however, that the Legislature, after the expiration of the terms hereinbefore mentioned, may by law diminish the compensation of any or all of said officers, but in no case shall have the power to increase the same above the sums hereby fixed by this Constitution. The Legislature shall by law fix the compensation of the Attorney-General and the Surveyor-General, and may in its discretion, abolish the office of Surveyor-General; and none of the officers hereinbefore named shall receive for their own use any fees or perquisites for the performance of any official duty.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment, or substitute, offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland.

THE SECRETARY read the substitute:

SEC. 19. The Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, Controller, Treasurer, Attorney-General, and Surveyor-General, shall each, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected; but neither of these officers shall receive, for his own use, any fees for the performance of his official duties, and said compensation shall be in full for all services rendered in all official capacities during their respective terms of office.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I do not think the committee understand the purport of that amendment. It is simply to leave the compensation of State officers to the Legislature. That is the whole object of it. In the report of the committee the compensation of State officers is fixed at a stated amount. The amendment now before the committee strikes out that part, and leaves the Legislature to determine the salaries of those officers. It may vary from time to time, and I think this is a matter that can be safely left to the Legislature. It ought not to be fixed arbitrarily in the Constitution.

MR. WHITE. I think it should be fixed permanently in the Constitution, and I am very anxious to get in an amendment of that kind. I don't know exactly how to do it. I have an amendment, but I expect it is out of order now.

MR. LARKIN. I am in favor of fixing the maximum of all salaries, and leave it to the Legislature to reduce them still lower. I think that is the general intention of the Convention.

MR. HALE. I would inquire of the gentleman from Sacramento, if his amendment prevails, how does he propose to fix the compensation of those officers under the first term after the adoption of this Constitution?

MR. MCFARLAND. I will answer the gentleman. I do not want to include everything in one proposition, but I want the Convention to vote on the question whether this matter shall be left to the Legislature. If it is adopted I have another amendment providing for that matter. There will be a difference of opinion, of course. I thought that it was better for the committee to vote upon one proposition at a time. If they desire to fix salaries in the Constitution they will vote this down.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. I submit to the gentleman that this is not correct as a legal proposition. The present salaries would remain without any provision on the subject. This same question was up before the legislative committee with respect to the per diem of members of the Legislature, and I believe there was no difference of opinion whatever; I think every gentleman will say I am correct. Being not inconsistent with the general law it would continue. The proposition was this, substantially, to reduce the salary of Governor two thousand two hundred dollars, that is, his present salary is seven thousand dollars, not eight thousand, as stated the other day. But he gets a salary as member of the Board of State Prison Directors and as a member of the Board of Examiners, which makes his whole salary aggregate nine thousand two hundred dollars. But in the provisions of the proposition, as now presented, his services in any other official position is struck out. In that view I believe we had better not go into the business of the Legislature too extensively, perhaps, but vote on the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento.

The amendment was rejected by a standing vote of eleven ayes.

MR. WHITE. I now offer my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'follows' in the seventh line and insert as follows: 'Governor, five thousand dollars per annum; Lieutenant Governor, the same per diem as provided by law for the Speaker of the Assembly; Secretary of State, Controller, Attorney-General, and Surveyor-General, shall each receive three thousand dollars a year; and the Treasurer, four thousand dollars; provided, however, that the Legislature, after the expiration of the terms of the present incumbents, may by law diminish the salaries of any or all of such officers; but in no case shall have power to increase the same above the sums hereby fixed. The Legislature may, at any time, in its discretion, abolish the office of Controller and Surveyor-General; and none of the officers hereinbefore named shall receive for their own use any fees or perquisites for the performance of any official duty. No deputy or clerk employed by a State officer shall receive a higher compensation than one thousand eight hundred dollars per annum.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say that in most of the new Constitutions I find the compensation of State officers fixed, and it has become evident that it is necessary to guard against the constant increase of salaries. It is not so much what we save by this provision directly, but we want to set an example, and begin by paying just exactly what is right. You will see that this does not allow extravagant salaries to these clerks and deputies. This Convention should step in and say that no clerk should receive a higher compensation than one thousand eight hundred dollars per annum. Let us do what is right in the matter. I trust, sir, that the amendment will pass.

SPEECH OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that there should be some degree of economy exercised. Economy is right when we consider it properly. I am under the impression that there is no member of this body who is not in favor of economy in a certain sense. But it does appear to me that when we come to an office so high as that of Executive of the State of California, to begin and cut down the salary of his office, it seems to me that we should go very carefully, and take into consideration some other matters. I have not heard very much said about high salaries; in fact there has been very little said on that subject among the people. I am under the impression that the people of this great State wish their Governor, and all their officers, to be properly and fully paid. The principal thing that the people of this State are anxious about, is that they may know where every dollar goes that is paid out. That there shall be no purloining—in common parlance, no stealing. That is the grand point that the people are aiming at. And I do not think it is the wish of the people that the salaries of these officers shall be reduced down in any such way. Now, the Governor of a great State like California is in a position socially to be compelled to spend an amount of money that men in other positions do not have to spend. In every sense of the word, it seems to be proper that we shall pay sufficient to keep up the position as it should be kept up. Few honest Governors—perhaps none—have ever made anything out of the office. Then why attack them in this manner? I am under the impression that the figure is entirely too low. I shall consequently object to the amendment. I think it is contrary to the sentiments of a large majority of the people of this State. I am in for reform in everything that deserves it, but I do not think this does, therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Division being called, the committee divided, and the amendment was rejected; ayes, 41; noes, 51.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Smith, to strike out "six thousand dollars" and insert "five thousand dollars," as the Governor's salary.

The amendment was lost on a division vote; ayes, 39; noes, 60.

THE CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments?

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I move that the word "Treasurer" be stricken from the list of three thousand dollar salaries.

THE CHAIRMAN. Send it up in writing.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the words "and Treasurer," be stricken out, and the word "and" be inserted before the word "Controller," in the same line.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on that amendment.

MR. SMITH. Mr. Chairman: I undertake to say that the Treasurer should receive more than three thousand dollars per year. It is certainly not right to cut the salary of that office down to three thousand dollars a year. It is absurd. The laborious duties connected with that office, as well as the great responsibilities, certainly require at least five thousand dollars a year. If the clerk will return me my amendment I will change it so that the Legislature may by law fix the compensation of the Surveyor-General and Treasurer.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment as modified:

"Strike out the words 'and Treasurer,' and insert 'and' in the same line, and insert 'and Treasurer' in the seventeenth line."

MR. WEST. I ask for a division of the question. There are two questions involved—to strike out and to insert. If the question prevails, it will leave the compensation of the Treasurer to be fixed by the Legislature. I think it is the opinion of this Convention that the compensation of that officer should be fixed in the Constitution. If it is the opinion that he should receive a small salary, why, say so, and not make an exception by leaving it to the Legislature.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I am not certain what this proposition is, but if it is to strike out so as to increase the salary of the Controller and Treasurer of this State, I am opposed to it, because three thousand dollars a year would be eight dollars and twenty-one cents for every day in the year, and I think that is enough. We can get the best mechanics for four dollars a day, and they can't always get that. Now, if a man doing nothing but counting out money, can get eight dollars and twenty-one cents a day, I think it is enough, so I am opposed to the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. A division of the question is called for. The first question is on the motion to strike out.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: It seems that the amendment is not understood. The amendment intends that the Treasurer shall not be included among the officers who receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum; that it shall be left among the officers whose salaries are to be fixed by the Legislature.

MR. GRACE. Is the object to increase, or reduce the salary?

MR. SMITH. To increase it.

MR. GRACE. I think he gets too much now,

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

Lost.

MR. BARBOUR. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In line nine, after the word 'Assembly,' the words, 'to be allowed only during the session of the Legislature.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I offer that amendment to make the section conform to the probable intention of the committee. As it reads now, the construction might be put upon it that the Lieutenant-Governor was to draw a salary during the whole of his term; in other words, that his salary will amount to three thousand six hundred and fifty dollars a year. I suppose the intention of the committee was that he should be paid only during the session of the Legislature, for it is well known that during the balance of the year his office would be a mere sinecure.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out 'three' in line nine and insert 'four,' so as to read four thousand dollars instead of three thousand dollars."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on that amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: That will make the salaries of all the State officers four thousand dollars a year. I have no idea that it will carry, but I want a chance myself to vote for it. There is a great deal of talk on this floor about what the people demand. They have sent their representatives to these halls of legislation year after year, for thirty years, and never made any demand or expressed any opinion through their representatives to reduce the salaries of these State officers. I say no man has any right to say here that the people demand this reduction; and if they did demand it I would not vote for it knowing it to be unreasonable and wrong. We are sent here to do what is right. Now I see gentlemen around me here who belong to one or the other of the great political parties of the country, and who expect to find some gentleman who will be their standard bearer—and that is the only way that men are elected to office. They are elevated to office through the machinery of political parties, and each of these parties, representing half of the people, expect to select men of high character in the State, men of ability, and when they select them, they expect them to perform the ordinary duties of candidates in the first place. How could you ask any reputable citizen of this State to take an office at such a salary. If he is rich, and cares not for the expense, he may do it, but take any gentleman engaged in business, are you going to ask him to take a nomination from one of your political parties, and leave his business, and come to Sacramento for four years, for three thousand dollars a year? What will he do it for? The honor of the thing? A man cannot sacrifice his business for honor. Men occupying responsible positions as these in private life get more than that without going away from their homes. I would like to know what farmer—not a rich farmer—who perhaps has got his farm all paid for—his plans all laid out, so that by strict attention to business he will be able to get out of debt; a nice little home, who, when called on by the people, would be willing to leave his home and his business and come to the Capitol for four years, for a salary of three thousand dollars a year. Can you expect a merchant, who is making an ordinary, decent living, to leave his business in Marysville or Shasta, or Los Angeles, and come here and serve for four years for three thousand dollars a year? Do you expect a lawyer with a lucrative practice to do it; or a doctor with a good practice that will suffer by his absence? I do not believe we should ask it; I do not believe it is right. I say that according to the cost of living, four thousand dollars is little enough for a man to leave his business and come here. If you cut down these salaries you will simply have this state of things, that you cannot get the ability, you cannot get the kind of material that you want for these positions. Then you will be compelled to select your State officers from one of two extreme classes—either from the very wealthy class—who can afford to leave their business and come here, or else take a man without any business, a mere carpet-bagger through the country. I ask you if you think that is a fair price for a man who is qualified to fill these positions, and who is responsible? I do not believe it is. I think four thousand dollars is little enough.

REMARKS OF MR. LINDOW.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to make any back remark, because he states that the people don't demand it. The cry has been for the last eight years that salaries was too much, because taxes was so high. I think we must lower the salaries. They always leave up the big salaries for the big officials. [Laughter.] When a man is getting five or six dollars a day he don't mind high taxes. But when a man is getting only one dollar a day, I think we better look at these big salaries and cut them down according to this business. I think when one man gets six dollars a day and one man gets one dollar a day, we better lower these big salaries. The people, I am satisfied, want it.

SPEECH OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I have not occupied the time of this Convention to any great extent, nor do I intend to do so. But I cannot permit the present occasion to pass without bearing testimony to the fact that the people have demanded a reduction of salaries of their public officers; that one of the burdens of which the people have complained, has been the exorbitant salaries paid to public officials. It is true that about the time that nominating conventions meet, and political platforms are to be made, the ears of these statesmen are open to the cries of the people, and they incorporate into their platforms a plank in favor of a reduction of salaries paid to public officers. Now, when the time has come that these promises are to be kept, and these pledges carried out, the testimony should be given to the people that the men who pledged themselves didn't mean it; that it was simply an electioneering dodge in order to get into office. The times demand the change. In the history of California we have come down to a level with the other States of this Union. Our trade, our commerce, our business, our industries, and all our material wealth rests upon the same basis with those of the other States east of the Rocky Mountains; and why should there be such a distinction between the money paid for like services here and there? I cannot see any reason for it. I cannot see any justice in it, nor any demand for it at the present time, when we all know that the people have called this Convention together as much for that as for any other one object—to reduce the salaries of public officers. I deny the truth of the proposition that you cannot get good men to fill these offices. Our country is full of men capable of performing the duties of these offices, who will gladly accept the reduction. The time will not come in the history of this commonwealth, even if you reduce these salaries below the amount fixed by the report of the committee, when good and efficient men cannot be obtained to perform these duties and fill these offices with as much ability as has ever been shown in the past.

SPEECH OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not know, neither do I care, what the sentiment of this Convention may be with regard to the reduction of salaries of State officers. But for me, I come here under a pledge of reform, reform in everything within the power of this Convention, that is in my power where my voice can be heard. It has been stated, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Convention, that this is not demanded, but I want you to understand that the voice of the people has gone up from the north to the south, from the east to the west, in this State, demanding from your hands retrenchment and reform. And I demand that the voice of the people shall be heard through their representatives here when they cry aloud for relief. Go with me to the poor struggling men and women in this State, who are trying to drive the wolf from the door, and ask them if they do not demand at your hands retrenchment and reform? That voice is coming up from every part of the State, and from all conditions of men, and they demand retrenchment and reform at your hands, not only in regard to State officers, in county and municipal offices; they demand reform in every shape possible, in every department of the public service. Now, when the Governor of the great State of Iowa can perform the duties of his office for one third less per annum, I would like to ask you if it is not high time that the people of California should come down from that high and exalted position of false pride, and false ideas, and false principles? Thirty years ago I came to this place, and then I could get my five and ten, and even fifteen, dollars a day for the labor of my hands. But all that is changed now, and why should we keep up these exalted ideas and customs that were the outgrowth of that condition of business? I repeat again, that the people demand retrenchment and reform at our hands. And when you go back and tell your people that I am not acting in their interest, that I am a demagogue, I say they will thrust it back into your teeth, and tell you it is false. [Applause.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, to strike out "three thousand dollars," and insert "four thousand dollars."

Lost.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'assembly' as far as the word 'State' in the ninth line, and insert: 'The State Treasurer shall receive four thousand dollars per annum, and the Secretary of State and Controller of State shall each receive three thousand dollars per annum."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on this amendment.

Rejected.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add in line sixteen, the following: 'No salary shall be authorized by law for clerical services in any office provided for in this article exceeding one thousand eight hundred dollars per annum.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: As has been well observed by the speakers here, one of the great curses of the administration of public affairs in this country is the high salaries of public officers and the sinecures that exist. Men in the State of California, devoting from six hours a day down to nothing at all to the public service, cooling their heels in public office, are receiving from one third to one half more pay than is paid for like service in private employment. I know of no better criterion or test by which to fix the salaries of public officers than the same pay allowed to men of equal capacity, equal education, and equal ability, as found in the private stations of life. And I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that in the State of California, educated men, competent men to conduct the affairs of office, are not paid on an average one thousand dollars a year. I know, Mr. Chairman, that there are men in this State, of superior ability, who may make fifty thousand dollars a year, or a hundred thousand dollars a year, by speculation, but not by legitimate pursuits. I know of men within my own personal knowledge, who are incapable of making an honest decent living at legitimate business, and yet they come to San Francisco and become millionaires. But these are not to be taken as a criterion by which to fix the salaries of public officers. Not at all, sir. There is no reason that can be given by any gentleman on this floor why more should be paid public officers than is paid in the private affairs of life. And in the matter of clerical service to which my amendment is directed, I maintain that I have proposed the highest figure that is paid for clerical services in the State of California. That, too, in instances where the services rendered are as laborious, and where it requires as much capacity as is required for a clerk in the office of the Governor, or any of the other State offices. Stock-broker's clerks, and all other clerks, do not average, as I am informed, more than one hundred dollars per month compensation. Gentlemen need not be afraid that there will be no one to fill these offices if the pay is reduced. Thomas Jefferson well said that few die and none resign, and I have never seen in all my experience, the salary reduced so low that capable men could not be found to fill them. The people are crying out against these abuses, and the cry comes up in such a form that it is no longer the policy of true statesmanship to leave it to the regulation of the Legislature, especially where they themselves are directly interested. I suppose gentlemen all know how this country was convulsed by the huge scale of salaries fixed by the Congress of the United States, and those men by a simple vote, dug their political graves forever, and buried themselves beyond the reach of the resurrecting hand forever and forever. And so it is that now, in the Constitution, is the time and place to fix these salaries, and if it becomes apparent to the mind of the people that the salaries are so low that good men cannot be obtained to fill these various positions, there will be no difficulty in procuring an amendment to the Constitution. I say that we should remove it beyond the power of the Legislature. I am in favor of making a limit in the Constitution beyond which the Legislature cannot go, while they may reduce salaries still lower if they find it necessary.

MR. LARKIN. I would like to have the amendment read again.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section nineteen, in line sixteen, by adding, after the word 'Constitution,' the words: 'No salary shall be authorized by law for clerical services in any office provided for in this article exceeding one thousand eight hundred dollars per annum.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendmeut.

MR. McCONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I move an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out 'one thousand eight hundred dollars,' and insert, 'one thousand six hundred dollars.'"

MR. BARBOUR. I accept the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Division being called, the committee divided, and the amendment was adopted—ayes, 61; noes, 44.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I move an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add, after the word 'Controller,' in line nine, the words: 'Attorney-General and Surveyor-General;' and strike out, in line seventeen, 'Attorney-General and Surveyor-General.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. LARKIN. The object is to fix the salaries the same as the other officers, and not leave it to the Legislature.

MR. HUESTIS. I would suggest to the mover of the amendment that, in order to make it read right, he will have to strike out all of the latter part, commencing with the word "Legislature."

MR. LARKIN. I accept the amendment. No, hold on; let me correct my amendment. After the word "Legislature," strike out the words: "shall by law fix the compensation of the Attorney-General and the Surveyor-General;" and strike out between "Legislature" and "may."

MR. BEERSTECHER. I would like to inquire what is done with the Attorney-General.

MR. LARKIN. He is added to the list of three thousand dollar a year officers, in line nine.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Adopted.

MR. WICKES. I think there is a clause here which reads a little curious:

"The Legislature shall by law fix," etc.

I think it should read: "The Legislature shall fix, by law."

MR. HERRINGTON. I would like to offer an amendment, to correct the phraseology of the section. The condition in which it now is, places it in a very awkward attitude. It now reads:

"The Secretary of State, Controller, Attorney-General, each three thousand dollars per annum; such compensation to be in full for all services by them respectively rendered," etc.

A very plausible construction would limit those last words to the offices last above mentioned. I propose the following amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'Assembly,' in the ninth line, down to and including the word 'office,' in line twelve, and insert: 'Secretary of State and Controller, shall each receive three thousand dollars; and the Treasurer, four thousand dollars, per annum. Said compensation shall be in full for all services by the aforesaid officers, respectively rendered by them in any official capacity or employment.'"

MR. VAN DYKE. I understood the motion to insert Attorney-General and Surveyor-General prevailed.

MR. HERRINGTON. I accept the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. That has all been passed.

MR. WHITE. The only motion, then, is to raise the Treasurer to four thousand dollars.

MR. FREUD. In looking over this section it has occurred to me that the committee has made an omission. It seems to me that the Superintendent of Public Instruction should be added to the list of offices in the Department of State. I move an amendment, that after the words "Secretary of State," shall be inserted the words "Superintendent of Public Instruction."

MR. MARTIN, of Alameda. That is already provided for.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud.

MR. VAN DYKE. It seems to me that belongs to the article on education. That is the proper place to provide for that, and I suppose that is the reason for the omission.

MR. BLACKMER. The Committee on Education have formulated an article that will cover that.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to have his amendment put if he sees fit to do it. The question is on the amendment.

Rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

Rejected.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee now rise, report back the article on Executive Department, and recommend its adoption as amended.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, the Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report to the Convention that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Executive Department, have amended the same, and recommend its adoption as amended. What is the pleasure of the Convention?

MR. HALE. I move that it lie on the table and be printed.

So ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz. I move we now adjourn.

The motion prevailed by a standing vote of ninety-three ayes, and at four o'clock P. M. the Convention stood adjourned.

PETITIONS.

MR. SHOEMAKER presented the following protest, signed by several hundred citizens of Nevada County, against taxing the capital stock of corporations:

To the honorable the President and members of the Constitutional Convention of the State of California:

WHEREAS, Propositions have been offered in your honorable body, to be ingrafted in the new organic law, making it mandatory upon the Legislature to tax the stock of incorporations organized under the laws of the State; and whereas, incorporations so organized are mainly for the purpose of opening and developing mines, which, as a rule, have no certain or fixed value until made so by an expenditure of moneys derived by assessments upon the stockholders of such incorporations; and whereas, the development of mining property, and the encouragement of mining industry is largely dependent upon the coöperation of individuals associated together under the law governing incorporations; and whereas, the taxing of the stock of incorporations of this character would have a tendency to discourage mining, and retard the growth of one of the important interests of the State; and whereas, the property created by the expenditure of money upon the development of mines is the only legitimate subject of taxation of such incorporations, the certificates of stock being but the evidence of ownership therein; therefore your petitioners, citizens of Nevada County, do hereby enter their earnest protest against the adoption of any clause in the Constitution whereby the stock of incorporations shall be taxed, as wrong in principle, and calculated to discourage mining and other legitimate pursuits, and to cripple the efforts of those who, by their association in companies, would otherwise add to the material wealth of the State.

Referred to Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

MR. SHAFTER presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of California, asking a provision in the Constitution for female suffrage:

To the Constitutional Convention in Sacramento, California, assembled:

The undersigned citizens of California, respectfully petition your honorable body to so amend the Constitution that no citizen of the State shall be disfranchised on account of sex.

Referred to the Committee on Right of Suffrage.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara, presented the following petition, signed by a number of citizens of California, asking the insertion of a section in the Constitution providing for a local option law:

To the honorable, the Constitutional Convention of the State of California:

We, the undersigned, respectfully petition your honorable body to insert in the new Constitution of this State, a clause similar to that now in force in the State of Texas, to wit:

SECTION —. The Legislature shall, at its first session, enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, voting precinct, town, or city, by a majority vote, from time to time, may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits.

Referred to the Committee on Legislative Department.

MR. BEERSTECHER presented the following protest against the establishment of a State religion:

To the Constitutional Convention at Sacramento:

Whereas, Propositions have been laid before your honorable body for adoption, demanding: The recognition of the Christian God and His so-called revelation as the source of all moral law, as well as of all civil power; the exemption of church property from taxation; and the compulsory observance of the Christian Sabbath; and whereas, these, and all similar propositions, are simply efforts to create and establish a State religion, and as such are hostile to the great principle of absolute religious liberty, as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and solemnly affirmed by the declaration of our Government, in the eleventh article of the Treaty with Tripoli, of November fourth, seventeen hundred and ninety-six, George Washington, President, that "the Government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion."

Therefore, the San Francisco Turn Verein earnestly protests against all and every measure having a tendency to establish a State religion, and prays your honorable body to uphold in its integrity the principles of religious liberty, the separation of Church and State, by rejecting all propositions looking to an abridgment of the right of conscience.

The San Francisco Turn Verein.

CORPORATIONS OTHER THAN MUNICIPAL.

MR. FREEMAN. I see that on Friday we made the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, the special order for this morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal. I call for the special order.

THE PRESIDENT. The special order is the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

THE COMMITTEE'S DRAFT.

Following is the draft of the article on Corporations other than Municipal as presented by the committee:

ARTICLE —.

CORPORATIONS.

SECTION 1. Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act. All laws passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time, or repealed.

SEC. 2. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporators and other means as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 3. Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities.

SEC. 4. The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships; and all corporations shall have the right to sue, and shall be subject to be sued in all Courts, in like cases as natural persons.

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes; but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws; but no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation, any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 6. All existing charters, grants, franchises, special or exclusive privileges, under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity.

SEC. 7. The Legislature shall not extend any franchise or charter, or remit the forfeiture of any franchise or charter of any corporation now existing, or which shall hereafter exist under the laws of this State.

SEC. 8. The exercise of the right of eminent domain shall never be so abridged or construed as to prevent the Legislature from taking the property and franchises of incorporated companies, and subject them to public use the same as the property of individuals, and the exercise of the police power of the State shall never be so abridged or construed as to permit corporations to conduct their business in such manner as to infringe the equal rights of individuals or the general well being of the State.

SEC. 9. No corporation shall engage in business other than that expressly authorized in its charter, or the law under which it may have been or may hereafter be organized; nor shall it hold any real estate for a longer period than five years, except such as may be necessary for carrying on its business, or which is incident thereto.

SEC. 10. The Legislature shall not pass any laws permitting the leasing or alienation of any franchise, so as to relieve the franchise or property held thereunder from liabilities of the lessor or grantor, lessee or grantee, contracted or incurred in the operation, use, or enjoyment of such franchise, or any of its privileges.

SEC. 11. No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void. The stock and bonded indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased, except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock first obtained at a meeting called for that purpose, first giving sixty days public notice, as may be provided by law.

SEC. 12. The Legislature shall provide by law that in all elections for directors or managers of incorporated companies, every stockholder shall have the right to vote, in person or by proxy, for the number of shares of stock owned by him, for as many persons as there are directors or managers to be elected, or to cumulate said shares and give one candidate as many votes as the number of the directors multiplied by the number of his shares of stock shall equal, or to distribute them, on the same principle, among as many candidates as he shall think fit; and such directors or managers shall not be elected in any other manner.

SEC. 13. The State shall not subscribe to or be interested in the stock of, or in any manner loan its credit to, any person, company, association, or corporation.

SEC. 14. Every corporation organized or doing business in this State, under the laws or authority thereof, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock; the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the names and place of residence of its officers.

RAILROADS.

SEC. 15. All railroads, canal, and transportation companies shall be common carriers and subject to legislative control. Any association or corporation, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination.

SEC. 16. No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company.

SEC. 17. No railroad or other transportation company shall grant free passes, or passes or tickets at a discount, to any person holding any office of honor, trust, or profit in this State; and the acceptance of any such pass or ticket, by a member of the Legislature or any public officer, shall work a forfeiture of his office.

SEC. 18. No railroad company or other common carrier shall combine or make any contract with the owners of any vessel that leaves port or makes port in this State, or with any common carrier, by which combination or contract the earnings of one doing the carrying are to be shared by the other not doing the carrying.

SEC. 19. No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State. Persons and property transported over any railroad, or by any transportation company or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates.

SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; report to the Governor annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; hear and determine complaints against railroad or other transportation companies; affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in the foregoing sections.

SEC. 21. The State shall be divided into three railroad districts, as nearly equal in population as practicable, from each of which one of the three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected.

SEC. 22. Until the Legislature shall district the State, the following shall be the railroad districts: The First District shall be composed of the Counties of Alpine, Amador, Butte, Calaveras, Colusa, Del Norte, El Dorado, Humboldt, Lake, Lassen, Mendocino, Modoc, Napa, Nevada, Placer, Plumas, Sacramento, Shasta, Sierra, Siskiyou, Solano, Sonoma, Sutter, Tehama, Trinity, Yolo, and Yuba, from which one Railroad Commissioner shall be elected. The Second District shall be composed of the Counties of Marin, San Francisco, and San Mateo, from which one Railroad Commissioner shall be elected. The Third District shall be composed of the Counties of Alameda, Contra Costa, Fresno, Inyo, Kern, Los Angeles, Mariposa, Merced, Mono, Monterey, San Benito, San Bernardino, San Diego, San Joaquin, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, Stanislaus, Tulare, Tuolumne, and Ventura, from which one Railroad Commissioner shall be elected.

SEC. 23. The Legislature shall pass all laws necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this article.

MR. STEELE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE SECRETARY read section one, as follows:

SECTION 1. Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act. All laws passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time, or repealed.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I ask that the Secretary read the whole article, because so far as the committee are concerned, at least some of us, are going to treat the report all as one great proposition, traversing the whole subject. I ask that the Secretary read the whole report. Under the rule I understand that it has to be read.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the Secretary will read the whole report.

MR. PORTER. I object.

MR. GRACE. I object.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an amendment to section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend second clause of section one of the article on corporations, as reported by the committee, so as to read as follows: 'All laws now in force in this State concerning corporations, and all that may hereafter be passed pursuant to this section, may be altered from time to time or repealed.'"

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I understand that the Chairman of the committee desires to give his views and the reasons for that report this morning, and I presume that there is no member of this Convention but what will be perfectly willing to hear him discuss the principle involved in that report, and the reasons for making that report. The Chairman, I think, should have leave to make his speech this morning upon the whole report as submitted. I therefore move that he be permitted by the Convention to proceed with his remarks.

[Cries of "Second the motion."]

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal will be permitted to address himself to the entire article.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the same courtesy will be extended to all who wish to speak on either side of the question. I think it would facilitate business if we go through and give the reasons that actuated the committee in presenting the report that they have, as a grand whole, traversing the different sections in our own way. I hope that it will be understood that we may all be at liberty to address ourselves to the whole report.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that members are at liberty to travel over the entire article in discussing this amendment.

MR. ESTEE. I understand that the question really before the committee is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine.

THE CHAIRMAN. That is the question.

MR. ESTEE. I do not care to address the committee upon that.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that any gentleman has entire liberty to travel over the whole subject.

MR. GRACE. I have no objection—debate.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I ask leave of the committee to withdraw my amendment so that the whole article may be discussed first.

[Cries of "Leave."]

The amendment was withdrawn.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: In opening the debate on the subject of the reports of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, I am reminded that the questions presented for our consideration are among the gravest that can come before this Convention.

For years the people of this State, and indeed all the Pacific States, nay, of most of the other States of the Union, have been brought face to face with these great questions. In some instances they have been settled by constitutional or statutory provisions; in others they are yet unsettled; in all instances they have inspired the most serious consideration of the leading statesmen of the country.

The result of the action of this Convention, if favorable to the report of your committee, will mark a new era in the history of this State; it will stamp upon the organic law of California that right of visitation and regulation of railroads necessary for the protection of the people.

It will establish a tribunal whose officers are selected by the people, and before which the individual and the corporation may appear and demand justice.

It will take from the halls of legislation the corrupting influence of corporate power; and it will establish mutual confidence between the producer and common carrier, which nothing else thus far devised has.

It may be admitted that nearly all the great business enterprises of the country are in the hands of corporations.

The insurance business is conducted by corporations, the banking business is conducted by corporations, the mining business is in the hands of corporations, the entire carrying trade of the country, not only of the Pacific Coast but of the whole nation, is in the hands of corporations. Natural persons no longer control these great interests. The reasons, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Convention, I attribute to three causes: First, the difficulty of one man controlling money sufficient to handle such great enterprises; second, the personal, financial, and moral irresponsibility of corporations; and lastly, "corporations never die."

Mr. Chairman, in rising to defend the report made by your committee, sir, I am prepared to say for one, and I think in this respect I echo the voice of your committee, that your committee had no desire to imperil any of the great interests of the country. They had no personal or other motives to attack any of these interests. They know, and we all know, that the dollar owned by a corporation has as much right to be protected, to be defended by the organic law of this State, as the dollar owned by the humblest individual in the country. They know, and we all know, that the whole republic, and especially this coast, has been largely indebted for its prosperity to the railroad corporations of the country. We are aware, sir, and every member on this floor must be aware, that it would be impossible now to carry on the great commercial interests of the country but for railroads. We are aware, sir, every thoughtful man everywhere must be aware, that at this time the wagon, the old stage coach, the old time-honored means of transportation of freight and passengers, have passed away forever. That a new era has dawned upon the country, almost without our knowledge and in less than a generation. The capital invested in railroads has become enormous. We are aware, and every person, every thoughtful man must be aware, that no man can attempt to transport his freight to market, wherever his home may be, unless he lives upon some of the great streams of the country, except by railroads. No person visits his old home in the East, or thinks of visiting it, except by railroads. We acknowledge, then, sir, that railroads are great controlling carrying institutions, not only of this country, but of the world. Why, sir, on looking at the statistics we find that while there is but two hundred million dollars engaged in the transportation of all of the freight and passengers to foreign countries from the United States—in railroads alone there is more than five thousand million dollars; that while the entire foreign traffic of the country last year was less than one thousand eight hundred million dollars, yet the entire traffic of the United States by railroads far exceeds eighteen thousand million dollars. The whole thing is immense—it is grand in all its proportions. Nothing like it ever existed before in any country; nothing like it ever existed in any age; nothing like it, that we can anticipate, will ever exist again.

The great services to the country of railroads in peace or war are beyond computation; they are widespread, reaching every interest, touching every individual. It being of such vast importance, the American people have come to think upon this question. The political and financial power of railroads in the United States are immense, and have become a grand imperium in imperio—a government within a government, a power within a power, greater than the mightiest, grander and more colossal than any other financial institution hitherto known in the history of civilization. Sir, it was originally the belief of most of us—it was the belief of the fathers of the republic—that monopolies in a free country could not and ought not to exist. On that proposition there was a warfare made many years ago against the National Bank, and after a long and most earnest contest, that institution was destroyed. That was not the sole reason, but it was one of the grand moving powers that controlled the public sentiment of the American people at that time, that monopolies must not be established in a free country. But, sir, monopolies do exist; monopolies will exist; in the very nature of things, they must exist. We cannot help it. You may talk to the winds and tell them not to blow, and they will still blow. So it is with monopolies. We have got to take facts as they are. The people will not put fifty, or a hundred, or two hundred millions of dollars, or any other vast sum, in a great enterprise like a railroad institution or the building or establishing of railroads, unless it is virtually a monopoly. It is true that when it was found out that monopolies did exist to a certain extent, it was believed the evil could be remedied, if it be an evil—which I will reach hereafter—by competition, and thereby avoid the effect of the monopoly. But, sir, now I lay down the doctrine adopted by George Stephenson, and by many of the most eminent men of the country, that where combination is possible, competition is impossible; that in truth and in fact there is no such thing as competition to-day in the great carrying trade of the country on land; that there cannot be. I am not prepared to say that it is best that it should be so. It is a great problem whether it is best to have two institutions to make you contribute to, or to have one. It is yet a very grave question whether two institutions, representing a large amount of capital—a larger amount, certainly, than one—can oppress the people a good deal more than one. For, let me say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Convention, that it is the highest intelligence of the country, the most careful minds, the most thoughtful intellects, that control the dollars of the country; that dollars are not going to be frittered away by useless competition when combination is possible—and combination is always possible in most of the transportation of freight and passengers by land.

Now, sir, I wish very briefly to call your attention to some few established authorities upon these propositions: First—That competition with the railroad corporations is impossible, for I claim that we must educate ourselves up to the questions of the day so far as it is possible; that we have got to measure the facts as they come before us, and we have got to consider them as they are, not as some gentlemen may think or as I may think, they ought to be. I read, sir, from page two hundred and four of Adams' book on "Railroads, their Origin and Problems," in eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, written by Charles Francis Adams, Jr. He says, after following out a long argument made on that subject: "Carrying now the argument directly into the case of railroads, and having recourse again to experience, we find that railroad competition has been tried all over the world, and that everywhere, consciously or unconsciously, but with one consent, it is slowly but surely being abandoned. In its place the principle of responsible, regulated monopoly is asserting itself." And I maintain that to-day that is the live doctrine, that "responsible and regulated monopoly must assert itself." That it is impossible for such vast amounts of money so invested not to be a monopoly, and that it is impossible to make them compete with each other, even if there are two roads running to a given point; and hence, that we must recognize the fact that responsible and regulated monopolies must assert themselves. Now, sir, I will call your attention, right on that point; to a well known authority. I read from a recent address made by Simon Stearn, before a meeting of the business men of New York, at Steinway Hall, April nineteenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, printed by order of the Chamber of Commerce of New York. He says on page eighteen:

"Effectual competition by sea does not exist; that competition by river and canal exists only to a limited and partial extent, and that committees and Commissions carefully chosen have, for the last thirty years, clung to one form of competition after another; that it has, nevertheless, become more and more evident that competition must fail to do for the railway what it does for ordinary trade, and that means have yet to be devised by which competition can be permanently maintained."

Mr. Stearn is a publicist of well known ability, invited by the merchants and the ablest men of the State of New York to address them in Steinway Hall, on these great questions, and he undertook to teach the people as to the marked advancement made in these great institutions in order to show to them that the old idea that monopolies did not exist and that they could not exist, or that competition was a remedy, was untrue. And I think he succeeded in the most signal degree. Now, sir, I find, in Poor's Manual of Railroads for eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, page one—I read from page one to four, Roman paging: "The statistics up to the beginning of eighteen hundred and seventy-eight showed that there were invested in the United States in railroads four thousand four hundred and sixty-eight million five hundred and ninety-one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five dollars; that the gross earnings up to that time was four hundred and ninety-seven millions two hundred and fifty-seven thousand nine hundred and fifty-nine dollars. Since then it has increased very largely; that there was seventy-three thousand miles of railroad in the United States, while now there is seventy-seven thousand miles of railroad. In ten years the amount of money invested in railroads, as appears by the official report, had increased four hundred and thirty-three per cent., while the miles of railroad had only increased a little over one hundred and twenty per cent., thus showing that the amount invested in these great enterprises is simply enormous; that over two hundred thousand people, adults, are employed in the United States to-day by the railroad corporations; that to-day in New York there are twenty-seven thousand miles of railroad, represented by one grand combination, representing over two thousand million dollars; that one man (Colonel Finck) makes the rate of freights and fares for over forty lines of railroad in the United States, and over twenty-seven thousand miles of road."

I say this much, sir, to show only one point: that competition is impossible; the power of such vast sums of money used in combined railroad operations is too great to allow of competition: the Government itself cannot compete with them; that we might as well face the music first as last—that monopolies do exist. Whenever a railroad company comes to you and says we want to compete with another line, by building another road to San Francisco, it costs the people just so much more, and that is the experience everywhere. Now, upon this same subject, I wish to call your attention, to show that it is not confined to the United States alone; that in England, in eighteen hundred and seventy-two, one of the most able reports was made ever made in any country, signed by the Chairman, Mr. Fortescue, then in Parliament. He says as follows, in the report of the Transportation Commission of England:

"Next, as regards competition between railroad companies, there has, on different occasions, been effected competition between railway companies in matters of charges, and it is probable that the charges now made bear traces of that competition. But it may be taken as a general rule that there is now no active competition between different railways in the matter of rates and fares. Wherever different companies run between the same places, they arrange their prices. For instance, not only do the London and North Western, Midland and Great Western make the same rates between Manchester and Southampton, but bind themselves by agreement not to make lower rates, so that we cannot lower its rates without the consent of the other two. And if a new railway should ever be started with a promise of lower rates, it is sure, after a short time, to arrange with its original rivals a system of equal charges."

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that is only following out the ordinary course of business, and it is fallacy for peopte to expect of gentlemen engaged in a great business of that character to do for them what no man in the ordinary affairs of business will do for his neighbor. Two men engaged in teaming, living side by side, would not be very apt to compete with each other so that they could not make money.

Again, I find, in the eighth volume of the debates of Pennsylvania, before the Constitutional Convention, that it was laid down as a general rule, and adopted by that Convention, that no competition could be longer maintained. In that debate one of the most distinguished members said:

"The only excuse or palliation made by any one has been by the gentleman from Philadelphia, who alleged that competition would cure these abuses. It is the weakest remark that he ever made in his life, because to talk about competition curing these evils is as idle as the wind itself. Competition to cure evils alleged, indeed conceded, against great corporations like these, is mere idle assertion. It cannot be done. Where can the competition come from to effect such great reformation? The great aggregation of wealth now centered in one or two great corporations of the State very effectually preclude any remedy by competition."

Sir Robert Peel, in that very able report to Parliament as far back as eighteen hundred and forty, told the English people that competition was impracticable; that it was contrary to the ordinary rules of business sense, and that we need not think they would be protected from future action of these great corporations by competition. Nay, sir, I might add still another authority. Sir Henry Tyler, than whom no more distinguished man on the question of finance has ever been in the English Parliament, said the other day, in a great speech made before that body, that competition was impossible; that regulation was the only means of correcting any evils that may exist. He said more, sir. He said: "Gentlemen, the State must control the railroads, or the railroads will control the State." So, also, I call your attention to modern authorities, to James Parton's "Topics of the Times." I will not read it, but refer to page two hundred and eighty and pages two hundred and seventy-eight and two hundred and seventy-nine, where gentlemen of the Convention can find additional authority on this subject; and I might add here, also, "Adams' Chapters on Erie," written in eighteen hundred and seventy-one. He says it is fallacy to suppose that competition is possible. He also says: "Single men have controlled hundreds of miles of railway, thousands of men, tens of millions of revenue, and hundreds of millions of capital. The strength implied in all this they wielded in practical independence of the control both of governments and individuals, much as petty German despots might have governed their little principalities a century or two ago. Thus by degrees almost the whole of the system of internal communication through the northern half of the United States has practically been partitioned out among a few individuals, and, as proximity, or competition on certain debatable grounds—the Belgiums of the system—brought the interests represented by these men into conflict, a series of struggles have ensued, replete with dramatic episodes."

I might call your attention also to the combination of all the railroads East. See the book by Adams, recently written on railroads, on page one hundred and seventy-four. I merely wish to read one word and then I am through on this question. He is a recognized authority, and as I understand a Government Director of the Union Pacific—or was so a few years ago—a man of great ability and of large experience, and for many years he has been a Railroad Commissioner in the State of Massachusetts. Speaking of the recent meeting of railroad people in New York, he says: "The business was divided among the four trunk lines, on the basis of an apportionment of tonnage, and not an apportionment of earnings. Daily returns of all shipments from New York to the West were made to the Commissioner, and thirty-three per cent of this business was allotted each to the New York Central and the Erie, twenty-five per cent to the Pennsylvania and nine per cent to the Baltimore and Ohio. Any road doing more than its allotted share of business had, under the Commissioner's instructions, to turn the excess over to the road doing less than its allotted share, and to pay full rates for it." In other words, these four great trunk lines, the only ones that lead to New York and Boston, except the Grand Trunk of Canada, the only ones between Baltimore and Philadelphia and Washington, and all that extent of sea line, stretching over a distance of twelve hundred miles, combined to neutralize competition, and they are doing it to-day. "In February and March, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, a succession of meetings were held in New York which were attended by the representatives of no less than forty different corporations, operating some twenty-five thousand miles of road, or about one third of the whole system of the United States." Since then they had a meeting there which represented twenty-seven thousand miles. "After some preliminary difficulties had been disposed of, a plan was adopted. Seven points of general railroad divergence at the West were selected." Again, I find the English Railroad Commission, hitherto and now existing, of whom Mr. Fortescue, in his report in eighteen hundred and seventy-two, says: "There is little real competition between railway companies, and that little is rapidly disappearing. The monopoly is inevitable. The self-interest of the companies cannot be trusted. That it is a mistake to suppose that their interest and that of the public are one. The only practicable way out is by some form of regulation."

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Convention, I maintain that we have shown you, thus far, two propositions: First, that monopolies, with this class of corporations, do exist, that they must exist; that from the amount involved they always will exist. And I am not prepared to say that it is not just as well for the people to have them exist, because that much money invested in any enterprise always makes a monopoly. Next, I think we have shown you that competition cannot exist. The very name of monopoly of any business grows out of the idea, or the thought rather, that competition is impossible. Then if it be true that the carrying trade of the country is a monopoly—that there is no remedy by competition—the next question which I propose to submit to your consideration, is as to what is the remedy, if one is required. Now, in all the recent Constitutional Conventions the ablest men have recognized the necessity of the regulation of railroads. Not with the view, sir, of destroying them; far from it. Not with the view of injuring a dollar of their money; very far from that. In the Pennsylvania Convention it was admitted that some form of regulation was necessary; that without it, the people would not be protected; that without it the rights of the corporations even were uncertain; that it would be a benefit to both; that without the people the railroad corporations could not exist an hour, and that the interests of the people and the corporations ought to be mutual; that one was a public institution, carrying on a public trust, and the other was represented by the mass of the people in their individual sovereign capacity, incapable of maintaining their own interests individually, if infringed upon. In the United States Senate, at the last meeting of Congress, there was a most marked instance of the regulation of railroads by legislation; the well known Thurman Act was passed. It is true that Act was for the specific purpose of making the companies pay up; but, on recurring to those debates, we find the master spirits of the nation taking hold of this great subject, and they treated it as one of national importanee. And looking at it in that view alone, they claimed it was the interest of the people, their right, their duty, to regulate the railroad companies of the country. But, sir, regulation is of many forms.

That regulation of some character is necessary is now admitted by all the thoughtful men in the country not engaged in that peculiar business. Why, let me put an instance. I apprehend that there is not a gentleman on this floor but would say that if any transportation company charged a hundred dollars for a passage from here to San Francisco the Courts would remedy the evil by declaring that it was an outrageous price. Then if the Courts, or the Legislature, or the people, can keep the corporations from charging an outrageous price for transportation of person and property, they can make them carry at a reasonable price. But, sir, there is nothing in the report of your committee, let me say, fixing even a maximum of what that reasonable price is. The railroad companies are not even referred to as to any maximum rates. I do not believe this Convention—and I express only my own opinion—nor do I believe any legislative body, in the time allotted to it to consider such important questions, can fix maximum rates of freights and fares. I do not believe this can be rationally done by any legislative body, because it is a business of itself; because it requires large study and great experience in order to fix such maximums as may be just to the people and fair to the companies. Now, before I approach the other branch of this question, namely, as to the form of regulation, let me say that I recognize that railroad companies, in their relations with the people, are a power. As was well stated by a distinguished gentleman in the Pennsylvania Convention, "the power of railroads is like that of steam—you cannot measure it, you cannot compute its value; but you must control it." Massey said of steam:

> "You must harness me down with your iron bands,
> Be sure of your curb and rein,
> For I scorn the strength of your puny hands
> As the tempest scorns the chain."

Before we approach the question as to the form of control that ought to be adopted over this class of corporations, we must first inquire whether we have the power. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided we have. I will read from the 4th of Otto the decision in the case of Munn vs. the State of Illinois—the well known warehouse cases—page 125. Chief Justice Waite says:

"From this source come the police powers, which, as was said by Mr. Chief Justice Taney, in the License Cases, 5 How., 583, 'are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty, * * * that is to say, * * * the power to govern men and things.' Under these powers the government regulates the conduct of its citizens one towards another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulation becomes necessary for the public good. In their exercise it has been customary in England from time immemorial, and in this country from its first colonization, to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, etc., and in so doing to fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, or articles sold."

Now, why should they regulate ferries? Because of the public relation of the ferry keeper with the people; because in most States he got the franchise from the people to run the ferry. In other words, the people in its sovereign capacity said: "This stream of water runs up through our valleys and belongs to the sovereign, but we will allow you to run a ferry here and collect toll from the people, but always and everywhere reserve the right to control that ferry." Chief Justice Waite continues:

"To this day statutes are to be found in many of the States upon some or all of these subjects, and we think it has never been successfully contended that such legislation came within any constitutional prohibition against interference with private property."

In the same decision, page one hundred and twenty-nine, the same authority says:

"In later times the same principle came under consideration in the Supreme Court of Alabama. That Court was called upon in eighteen hundred and forty-one to decide whether the power granted to the City of Mobile to regulate the weight and price of bread was constitutional, and it was contended that 'it would interfere with the right of the citizen to pursue his lawful trade or calling in the mode his judgment might dictate;' but the Court said: 'There is no motive * * * for this interference on the part of the Legislature, with the lawful actions of individuals, or the mode in which private property shall be enjoyed, unless such calling affects the public interest or private property in a manner which directly affects the body of the people. Upon this principle in this State tavern keepers are licensed, * * * and the County Court is required at least once a year to settle the rates of innkeepers. Upon the same principle is founded the control which the Legislature has always exercised in the establishment and regulation of mills, ferries, bridges, turnpike roads, and other kindred subjects.'"

It has been stated that corporations are in danger of being destroyed by the people. There never was an instance—and I challenge the presentation of one—where the people, either in their sovereign capacity, by their Constitutional Convention, or by their Legislature, have imposed terms upon any corporation whereby their interests have been imperiled. There is not an instance, so far as I have been able to find, where a corporation has been obliged to go into liquidation by the acts of the people; while thousands upon thousands of them have fallen to pieces by their own improvident acts. The same Judge says further:

"Under such circumstances it is difficult to see why, if the common carrier, or the miller, or the ferryman, or the inn-keeper, or the wharfinger, or the barber, or the cartman, or the hackney coachman, pursues a public employment, and exercises 'a sort of public office,' these plaintiffs in error do not. They stand, to use the language of their counsel, in the very 'gateway of commerce,' and take toll from all who pass. Their business most certainly 'tends to a common charge, and is become a thing of public interest and use.' Every bushel of grain for its passage 'pays a toll, which is a common charge,' and, therefore, according to Lord Hale, every such warehouseman 'ought to be under public regulation, viz.: that he * * * take but reasonable tolls.' Certainly, if any business can be clothed 'with a public interest, and cease to be juris privati only,' this has been. It may not be made so by the operation of the Constitution of Illinois, or this statute, but it is by the facts." Hence I argue that we have the right by precedent and experience to regulate corporations. The next question is as to its policy, and in the adoption of that rule, whether it is politic to do it is a question appealing to every individual mind. It is a question of judgment—from his experience, from the history of the past—and let me say to my distinguished friend from Marin, that there is nothing ancient about the railroads of the country; none of them came down here with knee-breeches and old flintlocks. The great railroad questions of the nation, are of recent origin—nothing old, nothing historical. There are no precedents that are not of the living present; we can see it all around and about us. We don't go to any old musty tomes to find out what the opinions of our fathers were as to railroads, for they had none. The gentleman's reference to the past goes back too far. Many different remedies are presented in this article on corporations, each reaching, in some degree, a wrong complained of, and all touching the question of regulation. And about the first of them is the one relative to the establishment of a Commission.

I am aware, sir, that the question of adopting a section of that character, providing for a Railroad Commission, struck many minds in this Convention as something unusual and extraordinary; that to provide for a Commission in a Constitution was too grave a matter, because it would take a long time to remedy the evil, if evil arises from it; that it would be better to leave this matter in the hands of the people, or, in other words, in the hands of the Legislature. On this point your committee—or a majority of them—agreed. And among the reasons—all of which I shall not attempt to give—they claimed, first, that a Commission was the fairest body that could be selected; the fairest to the companies and the fairest to the people. They claimed it was the fairest, sir, because no man can act justly and fairly upon any important question of that kind unless he comprehends the subject; and that a Commission elected for the term of four years can certainly so inform itself upon the questions as to be able to pass upon those questions that necessarily require the consideration of strong reasoning capacity; that a legislative body coming together once in two years, in session but a comparatively short time, could not give to this question such consideration as the magnitude of the subject demanded. Another of the chief reasons which was urged or discussed in that committee, sir, was that it got rid, to a large degree, of the great disgraces of the time—I will not say in California only—namely, the corrupting influences in legislative bodies. I am not saying, sir, that it always happens in legislative bodies, or that legislative bodies are always corrupt when handling these questions, but what I do say is that it is recognized everywhere throughout the Union among thoughtful men that when questions materially affecting the railroads come up for consideration before legislative bodies the bad men of the country swarm around the Legislature. They seem to know something that nobody else does. That money is freely used on such occasions is not and cannot be denied. Why, sir, the other day I looked at the report of the committee appointed by the New York Legislature, in eighteen hundred and seventy-four, to investigate the operation of the Erie road. They brought before that committee that great magnate Jay Gould, and they asked him many questions which he answered with a frankness that none can help but admire, even if it was an outrageous admission. When asked what a charge meant for over one million twelve hundred thousand dollars to the India rubber account, he said, "Why, that is our legislative expenses." In other words, "India rubber account" in the Erie books means legislative expenses.

Your committee seriously think that it would be a happy day for the country, and a happy day for the people, when there shall be no "India rubber accounts" in the books of corporations. I do not claim that there has been any here. I hope not. I certainly do not charge it. And again, on the same memorable occasion—and I refer to it here because the question of legislative bodies attempting to control this subject is before us—he was asked what his politics was. He was the President of the Erie road, and he said: "In Democratic districts I am a Democrat; in Republican districts I am a Republican; in doubtful districts I am doubtful, but I am always for Erie." He is admitted to be one of the greatest railroad financiers of the country. Your committee thought that the remedy rested in a Commission, and whether that section which has been framed by them will represent your ideas I am not here to argue. We believe that the principle is right; that a Commission elected by the people ought to control this matter; that while it is possible, sir, to buy three men—more possible to buy three men than to buy one hundred and twenty—yet personal responsibility makes men honest; personal responsibility makes men conservative; personal responsibility always make men capable. When you throw the whole weight of this great question into a legislative body no one is responsible. All are, it is true, but there is no individual responsibility. But when you elect a constitutional officer whose duty it shall be settle these questions; when he takes the oath of office it carries with it a solemnity and a realization of the duties which devolve upon him that in no case can rest upon the member of the Legislature. Again, I say there is nothing new in it. In the State of Maine they have Railroad Commissioners, and in New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, New York, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, New Jersey, Missouri, and California. It is true, sir, that most of these Commissions have very little power. But they are of recent origin—most of them provided for within the last five years, all of them within the last twelve. They control these questions. In England, France, Germany, Italy, and Austria, the railways are under the strictest State surveillance by officers occupying a similar relative position to these Commissioners. A remedy by Commission seems to us to be the correct one. And there is nothing new about that relative to other corporations. I was struck the other day very curiously by seeing in some of the papers that "we might as well think of controlling a bank and having a Bank Commission and an Insurance Commission." Why, sir, there are but a few of the States in the Union that have not had a Bank Commission. California has only had one a year, and you already observe its beneficial results. And that Bank Commission has twice the power that is given in this section of the Constitution. It can go and close the doors of any bank in this State. It can demand the combination of their safes, and count their money, and examine their books and accounts, and can say: "Your securities are not good, sir; you are insolvent, sir, and we close your doors and shut down your business." And still it is a bank owned by private capital entirely. There is not one of the public has any money there except as individuals. In New York they have an Insurance Commissioner, and that Insurance Commissioner not only controls the insurance companies of that State, but when the insurance companies fail he handles all the money and distributes it to those to whom it is due and makes the collection. In other words, the State steps in and says to the individuals composing the companies: "You have been dealing with the public in some public relation and have proved untrue to your trust, and now the State in its sovereign capacity will take the power from you and settle with your creditors." So there is nothing new; there is nothing extraordinary about this.

Let me say further—and I hope I do not offend any person who believes there is agrarianism in this—that there is no such thing as the existence of a railroad anywhere, in any country, except by and through the sovereign will of the State. The right of eminent domain has to be invoked everywhere before they can build the road. To make a personal illustration—not with a view of bringing the gentleman's name into my argument—Mr. Stanford, for instance, has a farm five miles long. He builds a railroad across it; he carries as many passengers or as few as he pleases on his own land; he can charge any price he pleases; he can discriminate between you and I; run his cars on any time he pleases. It is his; everything about it is his—the roadbed, the iron, the engine, everything is his, and he controls it; because the law says that the man who owns the land owns everything, from the heavens above to the center of the earth. But, sir, he comes to the line of my friend here sitting in front of me, and he says, "I want to go through your land; I want to go to Sacramento." My friend says: "I don't want you to go through my farm; this is my land, which I inherited from my father; every tree here is dear to me; this land is mine; it is my castle; as an American citizen, standing on my own soil, I say to you, 'halt!'" The laws of the country say to him, as he marches on to the line, "halt!" and he stops. He cannot built his road any further. No private power can get him through. But he turns over to a certain section in the Constitution which reads: "Private property may be taken for public use." He goes on, and in the ordinary course of law he appeals to the State of California. He says: "You are the sovereign. I am about to establish a road for the public use, for carrying on a public enterprise—the transportation of passengers and freights. I demand that you come and aid me to force my way through this man's land, because the good of the many, instead of the good of the few, is always recognized by States, and this is for a public use." The State comes, and it raps at his door, and says: "It is true you are the sovereign here, but the State is higher than you, and we say to you when this man pays you a reasonable price for the land, he can pass on with his railroad." And so he goes on through farm after farm, and by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, he finally completes his road. In other words, in the building of his road, he has to appeal to the sovereign power of the State; but when we undertake to say that we will regulate the use of that road, which he acquired by the sovereign power of the State, he says it is his private property; that you have no more right to say what he shall charge than you have to take a man's shoes, who manufactures them in his shop, without paying. I contend that the analogy is not good. Mr. Stanford, in his recent letter, which was written with marked ability, and I must say with extreme moderation—with a fairness that we cannot help but commend in the main—says: "Almost from the commencement of railroad operations in this State, we have found individuals anxious to commend themselves to the many; ready, under the plea of regulation, to confiscate. There has been no measure of regulation yet proposed in this State that did not contain and which was not based upon the idea of confiscating the railroads—so far as applied to the regulation of the rates of freights and fares."

In every civilized country where railroads have been built, some form of regulation has been adopted. And why should it not be? They are established for a public use. They are common carriers. The people are all interested. Their money may be in it. But I am assuming that these roads were built by their own money. But when they built that road, when they incorporated themselves to build it, they knew exactly in what direction they were going to build it, and over what line. They knew that they were going to perform a certain duty to the public, namely, transporting passengers and freight for a certain price, and the people had a right to regulate it just as much as they have a right to regulate a toll road. And it is really marvelous, when we come to think of it, that every gentleman will admit that everywhere in this nation the Boards of Supervisors in the various counties have always regulated the toll roads where the franchise has been given to them, but that it is wrong to regulate these matters of paramount interest on these great highways of the nation. It is because the railroads perform these great functions, and because they affect every interest and every want of the people, that they should be regulated by the people. I do not say that this company here has to be regulated. I am not saying that it has not. I have my own private opinion as to that. But what I do say is that this Constitutional Convention should provide a means whereby all railroad companies may be controlled.

Why, sir, in the State of Ohio less than ten per cent. of the entire railroad values of the State is owned in the State. You do not know, nor do I know, how soon every railroad in this State may be owned by foreign capitalists—men who have no interest in common with us; possibly not citizens, the most of them; unacquainted with our institutions, uninterested in our people except to bleed them. I should feel that we had neglected a duty if we did not provide for these possibilities. It may be, that while these great railroad enterprises are in the hands of people almost born upon this soil, with every affection and every interest here, they may not interfere with the people's rights as much as foreign capitalists; but when the capital is thrown into foreign hands, as Erie is to-day, and as many other Eastern roads are, I want to know what power of regulation you have unless you provide for it in this Constitution?

The next remedy, sir, which your committee has thought specially important, is found in section nineteen as reported, and that is as to discrimination. Section nineteen reads:

SEC. 19. No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State. Persons and property transported over any railroad, or by any transportation company, or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates.

There is an objection interposed to that section—interposed by the corporate interests—and that objection I think I have already answered. The objection is that it would interfere with competition; that if they were obliged to charge only two dollars and fifty cents from San Francisco to Sacramento to transport a passengor, and if that did not pay because of there being competition between Sacramento and San Francisco, they could not charge more, they ought to be privileged to charge from some intermediate point a much larger sum. I contend, first, that that argument is not founded in reason. I confess I don't understand the railroad business as these railroad men do, but I confess I cannot understand the reason of this objection. It is admitted even by Colonel Finck, the great railroad man of the nation, and by all of the distinguished and thoughtful men of the country, that competition is impossible, but they say that along certain waters it is possible. But I want to know of you what competition there is between here and San Francisco. There may be two or three stern-wheel boats, but I want you to go and find somebody to travel on them. I want some gentleman to rise in his place and state if he knows of any real competition between here and San Francisco. But the section reads: "Not exceeding the charges for transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station." You can commence at San Francisco, and they can only charge three dollars from San Francisco to Sacramento; from Vallejo to Sacramento, three dollars; from Napa Junction to Sacramento, three dollars; from Davisville to Sacramento, three dollars; or from Dixon to Sacramento, three dollars. They cannot charge more, it is true, to Vallejo or Dixon, or the other intermediate places; they can charge only the same price for a less distance than they do for a greater distance; and even this provision in our report is not new; the committee does not claim the honor of inventing this. We find that section—or one of the same purport—in several of the most recent Constitutions adopted by various States in the Union. I find section three of the Pennsylvania Constitution, article seventeen, reads as follows:

"All individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal right to have persons and property transported over railroads and canals, and no undue or unreasonable discrimination shall be made in charges for, or in facilities for, transportation of freight or passengers within the State, or coming from or going to any other State. Persons or property transported over any railroad shall be delivered at any station at charges not exceeding the charges for transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station; but excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates."

In that Convention were two ex-Governors—ex-Governor Bigler and ex-Governor Curtin. There were a large number of the most distinguished men of Pennsylvania, and that section was carried almost unanimously, not unanimously, but by a large vote. Now, then, in Pennsylvania they have a very great opportunity for studying this question, because the carrying trade of Pennsylvania—I do not now remember the exact amount—but it is, I think, twenty-five times larger than that of California; it is a great many times larger. And hence, the opportunity to ventilate the question before that Convention was better than it possibly can be here.

Again, I find in Missouri, the Constitution which was adopted as late as eighteen hundred and seventy-five, I read section twenty-three, of article twelve, on corporations: "No discrimination in charges or facilities in transportation shall be made between transportation companies and individuals, or in favor of either, by abatement, drawback, or otherwise; and no railroad company, or any lessee, manager, or employé thereof shall make any preference in furnishing cars or motive power."

Again, in Illinois I find almost the same provision. I do not recur to it now, but my recollection is that it is also in the Illinois Constitution; also in Colorado; and in the Ohio Convention the same rule was adopted, but when it was submitted to the people, the Constitution as a whole was defeated. Hence, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Convention, we think that section nineteen is right. Nothing that it is possible for us to imagine causes such a feeling of uncertainty on the part of the producer, as the fact that one man has to pay a larger sum proportionately for the transportation of his freight or his person than another. There is not any doubt in my mind that most of the troubles that have arisen relative to the railroad question between the people and the corporations have arisen from this reason alone. A railroad company, being in possession of a great trust, it is its duty to so conduct its business that it will not oppress the people; that before the law every citizen is equal; that the rights of the many shall not be subverted for the benefit of the few.

On the question of discrimination by railroad companies, I will read from page one hundred and twenty-three of Adams on Railroads, where he says:

"Where goods starting from the same point were to be delivered at different stations on the line of the same road, those forwarding them discovered to their cost that the tariff resembled nothing so much as an undulating line; for a distance of twenty miles more would have to be paid than for a distance of forty miles. Those living between competing points were rigidly excluded from the benefits of competition. To such an outrageous extent was this carried that it became the common practice where an entire car-load of merchandise, destined to some way station on the line of a railroad, was paid through to a competing point far beyond on that line, to make a large extra charge for not hauling it to that point, but dropping it at its ultimate destination in the first place. It was exactly as if a traveler was to buy a through ticket from Albany to Buffalo, and the railroad company were to insist not only on taking up his ticket, but charging him a dollar extra if he left the train at Syracuse." And that is a fair illustration made by the author.

"Remonstrances against this absurd anomaly were treated by the officials of the railroad companies as if they were too unreasonable for a patient hearing. This was much more the case in the West than at the East, but even in Massachusetts, when the State Railroad Commissioners on one occasieon urged upon a corporation the injustice of charging some twenty dollars extra on each car-load of wheat, which had been paid for on a through bill of lading to the further end of its line, if they left it at its point of destination, one hundred miles short of that end, thus making a charge of twenty dollars for not hauling the loaded car one hundred miles; in this case their representations were met with the counter proposal that, if the consignees preferred, the company would haul his goods by his door to the point to which they were billed and then back, charging both ways." Comforting, indeed. "He might pay the through rate forward and the local rate back, or submit to the extra charge, just as he chose. Besides all this, however, competition led to favoritism of the grossest character. Men or business firms, whose shipments by rail were large, could command their own terms, as compared with those whose shipments were small. The most irritating as well as wrongful inequalities were thus made common all over the road. Every local settlement and every secluded farmer saw other settlements and other farmers more fortunately placed, whose consequent prosperity seemed to make their own ruin a question of time. Place to place, or man to man, they might compete; but when the weight of the railroad was flung into one scale, it was strange indeed if the other did not kick the beam." It is because of this kicking the beam that this committee has reported this section. And it is indorsed by the strongest minds everywhere over the country. I took occasion the other day, in this State, to ask an eminent railroad engineer where there was anything wrong about it. Without wishing to be quoted, he said: "While in some instances it might hurt the companies, in the main it is right and ought to be done."

The very word "discrimination," the very fact that one man—one man's dollar is not as good as another's—that because he lives off from some line of travel, or in some country place where the railroad passes him: and because he cannot walk, or send his grain, to market, except in one way—I want to know why they should charge him for living at that place? This is not mileage rates. I recognize what the English Board of Transportation Commissioners said in their report of eighteen hundred and seventy-two: that mileage rates in all instances would not be just. This is not mileage rates, because they can charge just as much for ten miles as they do for one hundred miles. Mileage rates would mean that they could not charge but one tenth as much, or that they could not charge any more. And if there is any injustice, even in this section, the injustice is against the shipper—against the man who travels—and not against the railroad company. In eighteen hundred and seventy-six—to show you how little freight is transported by any means except by rail—right through Central New York, with a great canal following the same course, eighty-three per cent. of the entire freight went by rail—eighty-three per cent! You will see that in this fast age people cannot wait; they must thrust their grain into market. They rush it with lightning speed. They do not object to paying a reasonable price—a fair price.

I would not impose any terms that would make any railroad company, or anybody, the loser; but I would say that one man's dollar should be as good as another's, so that when we ship our grain we feel that if we had to pay five dollars a ton, that our neighbor Jones, or Smith, or whoever he may be, pays the same price for the same class of freight, in the same direction, to the same point.

And, again, these corporations are recognized by many of the authorities of the country as public highways. I do not say they are. We follow the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and they say they are common carriers and subject to legislative control. Still, I believe the Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, and other of the Constitutions, all declared that they were public highways in the broadest terms. I will refer to Angel on Highways, page twelve, section eighteen: "A railroad, established and existing under an Act or charter or incorporation, like a turnpike or a plank road, is a public highway, but only to be used in a different mode."

It is true everybody cannot go on it. Everybody cannot take possession of it, but what the authority means is that the railroad, in its relations with the people, is a public highway. Here is a large number of authorities referred to sustaining that view. On page four hundred and sixty-four of the same book, section three hundred and seventy, the author says: "Public railroads, like turnpike roads and canals, are the creatures of statutes, and, as with turnpike roads and canals, the rights and duties of their proprietors, and of the public, flow directly from these statutes, and from the mutual relations thereby created between them. They are open to the travel of the entire public, upon the payment of the prescribed rate of toll. And, as in the case of turnpike roads and canals, if there be any ambiguity in the language of the Acts, by which the right or the rate of toll is granted, that construction is to be adopted which is most favorable to the public, as against the grantee." There is the authority, a recognized authority upon that question. Now, then, upon this point, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I maintain that some sort of regulation should be made, and that the Commission is the best power to do it. That discrimination is wrong, and that we ought to provide against it. That what ought to be done can be done, and I am sure that members of the Convention will recognize the fact that this ought to be done. The whole people gave these companies the right to build their roads; the whole people are entitled to equal protection. The existence of the railroads depends upon the people, and the prosperity of people depends upon the fairness with which the railroads control their property. But for the people themselves these roads would not have existed. But for the roads we could not transport our grain, our freight, and our persons. We are entitled to that mutual relation occupied by persons holding great trusts, whereby they put money into an enterprise in which the public are interested. We say that the creature shall not by any act of ours become greater than its creator. We say the creature made by the statute, created by the law, shall not under any state of circumstances be more potent, more powerful to control its affairs, than the State itself. Why, the railroads of the East, says Simon Stern, are the real government. They have, says that author, all the substantial elements of power without any of the responsibilities. Aye, it is perpetual with them, while public officers are fluctuating and pass away. If railroads cannot be regulated the railroads will control the internal commerce of the country; they do control it.

It is true the Constitution of the United States prescribes that Congress shall have the right to regulate commerce between the States; and our organic law has always assumed that the State should regulate its own internal commerce; but, unless we take this thing in hand, we cannot regulate any longer, for the commerce as between the citizens of the State is now controlled entirely by the railroads of the country. This Constitution can only protect the people from evils which, at the time of its enactment, are experienced or in sight; we cannot anticipate what is in the remote future. The regulation of freights and fares is not new. For many years, in New York, it has been a law that no railroad company shall pay more than ten per cent. dividends; but the Legislature made this mistake: it did not make any provision against companies watering their stock, which we have provided against in this article. The result was that the New York Central accumulated a large amount of money, and one morning the people woke up and found that that company had increased its capital stock by the sum of thirty million dollars—a quick way of making money—it was done in an hour, and then they could pay dividends on this additional stock. And let me say here, also, that ever since the organization of the New York Central there has been a mileage rate for passengers—two cents per mile—so there is nothing unique in giving these powers to the Commissioners. Similar provisions to that in this article will be found in the Constitutions of Pennsylvania, Missouri, and Illinois. We are not experimenting, except so far as it is an experiment to provide for a Commission in a Constitution. That far it may be an experiment, but we think it is an experiment we are entitled to make. The personal responsibility imposed on these men will cause the people to select such persons as are eminently qualified for the place.

The interest of the railroads of right ought to be protected; the rights of the people must be maintained. The railroads expect too much, the people receive too little. The future of the railroad problem, like the future of our country, is yet a mystery; but judging the future by the past, if we would perpetuate the one we must control the other. If railroads, with all their benefits, bring in their train corruption; if the eternal rock of purity and justice shall be rent asunder; if public station depends on the will of the few rather than the wish of the many; then indeed may we echo the sentiment of the Irish poet:

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

I recognize the magnitude of the question before us. I appreciate the difficulty of our position, but there is no man who is not deaf but has heard the demand of the people for justice. They hope to obtain it through this Convention. I hope their wishes may be heeded.

An old Roman author once said: "Justice is the unchanging, everlasting will to give each man his right." If this was deemed true then, here and now may we not secure that right? For the glory of American legislation is its justice, and the splendor of our history is the records of the liberty of the people regulated by law. [Applause.]

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The hour having arrived, the Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The article on Corporations other than Municipal is under consideration. The Secretary will read section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act. All laws passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time, or repealed.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I offered an amendment this morning, and I will send it up. I desire to read it first. It will be noticed that the second clause of the first section provides that all laws passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time, or repealed. If we should adopt a new Constitution, with this provision as it stands, of course the old Constitution would be wiped out, and the laws that have already been passed, and are on the statute books, would be null and void. To avoid any such construction I propose this amendment:

"All laws now in force in this State, concerning corporations, and all that may hereafter be passed, pursuant to this section, may be altered from time to time, or repealed."

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the second clause of section one of the article on corporations, as reported by the committee, so as to read as follows: 'All laws now in force in this State concerning corporations, and all that may hereafter be passed, pursuant to this section, may be altered from time to time, or repealed.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentlemen from Santa Clara.

The amendment was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments to section one the Secretary will read section two.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporators and other means as may be prescribed by law.

THE CHAIRMAN. Any amendments to this section?

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I would like to ask the Chairman of the committee why the words "except for municipal purposes" were omitted from section one, as it stood in the old Constitution; whether it will be provided for by the Committee on Municipal Corporations. The old Constitution reads: "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be treated by special Act, except for municipal purposes." I do not suppose it is the intention to prevent municipal corporations from being formed by special Act, as such Consolidation Acts as that of the City and County of San Francisco.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I will state that it was understood by the committee that the Committee on Town and City Government had that under consideration, and that they propose to make it a system of itself, and the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal did not feel that they had the power to deal with that question. I understood that the other committee would consider that in due time.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I will state that the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization had that matter under consideration, have passed upon it, in fact, and will report a proposition that will cover that question.

MR. VAN DYKE. I would suggest an amendment: to insert after the word "corporations" the words "other than municipal."

MR. ESTEE. There is a whole article to be formulated on that subject. I can see no objection to it, however.

MR. VAN DYKE. I offer that as an amendment; insert the words "other than municipal," between the words "corporations" and "may," in line one of section one, so as to read: "Corporations, other than municipal, may be formed under general laws," etc.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I do not think it would be proper to place that amendment in the section, for the simple reason that I believe it is the universal sentiment of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, and perhaps it will be of the Convention, that the provision of the old Constitution allowing municipal corporations shall be done away with, and only allow them to be created by general Act. Therefore I think it would be improper to make that exception here. That would be a contradiction of terms. Here we say that "corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act, except for municipal purposes;" and then afterwards another provision will provide that not even municipal corporations can be created by special Act. I do not think it would be harmonious, and I think it would be better to leave it as it is.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any difficulty, such as has been suggested. It seems to me that if there is a proper caption to that article on corporations in the Constitution, that it would do away with all difficulty. If the caption is "relative to corporations other than municipal," as it is here, it would not suggest any difficulty of the kind, because it would be confined to corporations other than municipal, and very often State Constitutions have headings of that kind. I can see no difficulty in the matter.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: As I understand the amendment, it is to make the section read: "Corporations, other than municipal, may be formed under general laws." That would undo the work that is being done by the Committee on Municipal Corporations, because we have decided to recommend to the Convention that municipal corporations shall only be formed under general laws, and this amendment, if adopted, would be equivalent to a prohibition of any provision such as I have mentioned. I think the amendment ought not to prevail. If this amendment is adopted, our committee will have to go over the work again when we come into Convention. If it should be adopted at this time it will undo the work already done before the committee has a chance to make a report.

MR. VAN DYKE. With that explanation I withdraw the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section two?

MR. ESTEE. That is from the old Constitution; it is section thirty-two of the old Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no amendment, the Secretary will read section three.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities.

MR. WEBSTER. I wish to offer a substitute for the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association shall be individually personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares of the corporation or association, and also for a further sum at least equal in amount to the par value of his stock, any contract or agreement to the contrary notwithstanding."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: The objects I have in offering this substitute are several: First, the section as reported by the committee being the same as in the present Constitution, is defective, for the reason that it has never been fully understood, consequently it is inoperative. So defective in fact that it has had to be superseded by legislative enactment. This position is fully carried out, it seems to me, in the decision of the Supreme Court, reported in the 24 Cal., 451, French vs. Teschemaker et al. It says:

"At common law no individual liability is imposed upon the members of a corporation, and there is therefore no department of the common law to which we can look for such a rule, except that which relates to partnership or associations formed for trading purposes. Upon examination it will be found that that fountain fails to supply the needed element. By the law of partnership each member, as to third persons, is jointly and severally liable for the full amount of the liabilities of the firm. As between themselves, each one's proportion of liability may or may not be regulated by private agreement. In the absence of any such agreement they are bound to share the burden equally, and the right to contribution exists. It will not do, therefore, to say that the section in question has adopted the common law rule of partnership liability and extended it to stockholders of a corporation, because that proves too much, and carries us beyond the express terms of the section. Whatever be the extent of the liability, and by whatever rule it is to be ascertained, it is clear, from the terms used, that it was not the intention of the framers of the Constitution to impose upon the stockholders of a corporation a liability coextensive with that of copartners of common law. The liability is not joint and several, but is individual and personal without any right to contribution, and is not for the whole amount of the debt, but is for some indeterminate proportion. So much is clear from the language itself without foreign aid. From what has been said, it would seem that the thirty-sixth section does not contain a complete and obviously perfect rule of liabiltty, and cannot therefore be held to be self executing; and it would further seem that the missing quantities, necessary to make it such, cannot be drawn from the common law.

"From what has been said, it results that the thirty-sixth section of the Constitution, even when aided by the rules of law and mathematics, does not make a complete rule broad enough in its terms to embrace and definitely settle all the conditions upon which the liability of the stockholder must rest; and, as a corollary, it further results that legislation is necessary to give it a reasonable and practicable operation. And such seems to have been the conclusion to which the Legislature has arrived.

"The thirty-second section of the Act concerning corporations, passed in eighteen hundred and fifty (Woods' Digest, 115), provides that "each stockholder of any corporation shall be individually and personally liable for a portion of all its debts and liabilities proportioned to the amount of stock owned by him." Here the word "proportion," as used in the Constitution, is to a certain extent defined, and delared to be a mathematical proportion. But this enactment was insufficient to give a reasonable and practicable operation to the thirty-sixth section, as we have already seen. This truth seems to have been discovered by the Legislature, for in eighteen hundred and fifty-three they passed another Act concerning incorporations, in which we find the following section:

"SEC. 16. Each stockholder shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all the debts and liabilities of the company, contracted or incurred during the time that he was a stockholder. For the recovery of which joint or several actions may be instituted and prosecuted.

"It is true that the Legislature, in supplying what was needed and omitted from the Act of eighteen hundred and fifty, left out the provision of that Act which defines the word "proportion;" yet, although neither by itself affords a perfect rule, the two combined contain what is omitted in the thirty-sixth section of the Constitution, and is needed to give it a practical operation.

"If we read the thirty-sixth section in the manner suggested it is made to harmonize with the thirty-second, and each is made to serve a useful purpose, and neither is allowed to sacrifice the other."

Now, sir, with that view in mind, the Legislature has, from year to year, amended and revised the statute on the subject, until, in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-five and six, in the amendments to the Civil Code, approved March fifteenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, we find this, which now governs and controls the liability of stockholders of corporations in this State. Section three hundred and twenty-two of the Civil Code was amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 322. Each stockholder of a corporation is individually and personally liable for such proportion of its debts and liabilities as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation, and for a like proportion only of each debt or claim against the corporation. Any creditor of the corporation may institute joint or several actions against any of its stockholders for the proportion of his claim, payable by each, and in such action the Court must ascertain the proportion of the claim or debt for which each defendant is liable, and a several judgment must be rendered against each, in conformity therewith. If any stockholder pays his proportion of any debt due from the corporation, incurred while he was such stockholder, he is relieved from any further personal liability for such debt; and if an action has been brought against him upon such debt, it shall be dismissed as to him, upon his paying the costs, or such proportion thereof as may be properly chargeable against him. The liability of each stockholder is determined by the amount of stock or shares owned by him at the time the debt or liability was incurred; and such liability is not released by any subsequent transfer of stock. The term stockholder, as used in this section, shall apply not only to such persons as appear by the books of the corporation to be such, but also to every equitable owner of stock, although the same appear on the books in the name of another, and also to every person who has advanced the installments or purchase money of stock in the name of a minor, so long as the latter remains a minor; and also, to every guardian, or other trustee, who voluntarily invests any trust funds in the stock. Trust funds in the hands of a guardian or trustee shall not be liable, under the provisions of this section, by reason of any such investment, nor shall the person for whose benefit the investment is made be responsible in respect to the stock until he becomes competent and able to control the same; but the responsibility of the guardian or trustee making the investment shall continue until that period. Stock held as collateral security, or by trustee, or in any other representative capacity, does not make the holder thereof a stockholder within the meaning of this section, except in the cases above mentioned, so as to charge him with any proportion of the debts or liabilities of the corporation; but the pledger, or person, or estate represented, is to be deemed the stockholder as respects such liability. In corporations having no capital stock, each member is individually and personally liable for his proportion of its debts and liabilities, and similar actions may be brought against him, either alone or jointly with other members, to enforce such liability as by this section may be brought against one or more stockholders, and similar judgments may be rendered. The liability of each stockholder of a corporation formed under the laws of any other State or Territory of the United States, or of any foreign country, and doing business within this State, shall be the same as the liability of a stockholder of a corporation created under the Constitution and laws of this State."

This substitute I have offered, sir, embodies all the points that is contained in the decision of the Supreme Court, and it embodies the identical points contained in the statutory provisions which control the liability of stockholders at the present time. Therefore, so far, there can be no question of the validity and utility of this amendment, for it makes the liability of the stockholders perfectly clear, and will leave no adjudication.

This additional clause I have used here, "and also for a further sum at least equal in amount to the par value of his stock, any contract or agreement to the contrary notwithstanding," the object of my offering that is this: The operation of the law as it is, on the liabilities of stockholders, in the event of the failure of any corporation or association, the first thing which is done is to realize on the assets of the corporation, whatever they may be. That is divided pro rata among the stockholders of the corporation. Then this provision of the Constitution comes in and says in addition to that, each stockholder shall be liable for his proportion of all the debts and liabilities of the corporations. Now, sir, if every stockholder, at the time of such failure, was fully solvent, there would be no loss to the creditor, because each would pay his proportion, and consequently there would be no loss. In experience, in practice, it almost universally occurs that more or less of the stockholders, at the time of such failure, prove to be insolvent—not unusually half of them. Consequently, if there is one single stockholder owns one single share of stock at the time of the failure, his insolvency would prove necessarily a loss to the creditors. And I think, sir, that it is necessary that this should be included in order to cover that discrepancy which always exists. I hold in this particular that our Constitution, and the liability of stockholders under it, is less than that of any other State in the Union, because it is impossible for the association to fail under such a condition of affairs.

Now, sir, I find, in several of the Constitutions, that the liability of stockholders is in excess of their assets, and any assessments not paid on the shares of stock, and in the further sum at least equal to the par value of such stock. This is the case in Ohio, Arkansas, Kansas, and some others. In addition to the assets—in addition to any assessments which may have been levied on the stock—in the further sum equal to the value of such stock. It is true, sir, that there may be cases in which the liability of stockholders under the present Constitution would be greater than the par value of the stock. In cases where the corporation has failed for an amount three or four times the value of its stock, then even if half of the stockholders were not solvent, the pay of the remainder would be greater than the amount due from the stockholders, under the Constitutions of Ohio, Arkansas, and other States. But, sir, I hold that this discrepancy of the law ought to be covered. That, as a rule, sir, in the failure of joint stock associations there is a loss which usually falls upon those least able to bear it. I have no antipathy against corporations. I have considerable stock in two that are solvent, however. I hold, sir, that it will not affect solvent corporations, but would strengthen those who are entitled to strength, by doing away with the competition of those which have no credit and no standing.

It has been said that if this is adopted it will increase the liability of stockholders to such an extent that it will discourage corporations and joint stock companies. I think, sir, from the report of the Secretary of State made here the other day, that we are not likely to have any such result. Now, sir, it has been said that if this amendment is adopted it will have a tendency to contract corporations; that they will incorporate for a smaller amount, and that they will have a reserve fund instead—a sort of general fund in the shape of a reserve fund. I presume that is just about what the people of this State would like to see; then if there is a failure there will be the pleasant surprise of a reserve fund to pay the debts with.

Now, as to the last sentence, "any agreement to the contrary," etc., the object of that is this: it is a notorious fact in this State, and especially among insurance companies, that there is a provision or clause in every policy—there are some few exceptions—I believe, but it is in most all of them—providing that the policy holder waives his right under the law and Constitution to recover anything in excess of the assets of the corporation in case of the failure. It is generally printed in very fine type, and I presume there is not one in twenty that see it, yet it is claimed that it will hold, and in support of that proposition I wish to read a short section from the same decision of the Supreme Court upon the same subject, page five hundred and thirty-seven:

"Corporations have a clear and undoubted right, under the Constitution, to thus limit the liability of their stockholders by express stipulations to that effect in their contracts. A creditor of the corporation, by entering into such a contract, especially waives the benefit of the constitutional provision relating to the liability of the stockholders of a corporation. Section thirty-six of the Constitution, above cited, was intended for the benefit of the creditors of the corporation. Its most enlarged construction is to confer upon the creditor a right which did not exist at common law—that is, a right to resort to the individual and personal responsibility of the stockholders. But the Constitution does not compel the creditor to accept this benefit, or prohibit him from waiving it. It is clearly to be classed among those rights which he may waive by agreement, and he will be bound by an agreement to that effect, for a person may waive a constitutional as well as a statutory provision made for his benefit."

Then one other is contained in the twenty-fourth Wendel:

"A party may waive a constitutional as well as a statute provision made for his own benefit. The contrary argument would deprive a criminal of the power to plead guilty, on the ground that the Constitution has secured him a trial by jury."

Digitized by Google

Now, sir, it is expressly held in that decision that he may waive it—that the policy holder may waive his right as it stands now. Now, sir, I hold that this additional provision is necessary in order to prevent the stockholder—or, rather, the policy holder, from waiving his right; the trouble of that is this: that it is an advantage taken of the policy holder, an advantage which he has no knowledge of until the failure of the company, and then it is too late. I hold, sir, that we should do something for the protection of the policy holder, in order that he may not be defrauded.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say a few words in opposition to this amendment and in favor of the section which has been reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. In the greater part I may say I indorse the views presented this morning by the Chairman of that committee, and I admire very much the candid and masterly manner in which the whole subject was presented. The gentleman must certainly have convinced everybody that a large portion of the business of this State is being done, and will hereafter continue to be done, by corporations. That corporations are absolutely necessary I think may be accepted as a fixed principle. We have in the State of California two kinds of corporations, domestic and foreign; that is, we have corporations organized under our own State laws, and we have a large body of corporations that are doing business here which are organized under the laws of other States and countries. We have English, French, and German corporations; we have corporations organized under the laws of New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, and many of the other States, all transacting business in this State, in various branches of business and trade. The business of these foreign corporations is done by virtue of the comity existing between States and nations. We have the inherent right, if we so elect, to drive out foreign corporations and deny them the privilege of transacting business in this State. To do so, however, would be to place us behind the spirit and civilization of the age. No State has undertaken or had the courage so to do; no country, I believe, has yet undertaken so bold a step; therefore we may assume as an established fact, that the transaction of business in this State by foreign corporations not only now exists, but will continue to exist hereafter, and legally and justly exist under the comity existing between the several States and nations. So far as I can learn, and so far as my experience goes, this proposed individual liability is an unjust discrimination against the citizens of California. My own opinion is that it should have no place in the Constitution at all, and I am in favor of striking out the entire clause in reference to individual liability. I am apprehensive that enough members could not be obtained to strike out in toto this individual liability clause, but I will state, nevertheless, that in my opinion, an individual liability clause is an unjust discrimination against Californians, and is largely in favor of foreign corporations. Take, by way of illustration, the London and San Francisco Bank, the Anglo-Californian Bank, or any of these permanent foreign banks (and I believe they are all solvent, respectable institutions) doing business here. They come here from Europe, or perhaps from any of our sister States, and do business in the State of California, without any individual responsibility attached to their stockholders. But our home banks, which we should foster, organized under the laws of this State, are placed under an individual liability law, and the foreign banks are accorded an immense advantage. Take the foreign insurance companies of other States and other countries, all are doing business here with perfect freedom, without any individual liability, while all of our domestic corporations are crippled with the individual liability clause, and thus placed at an unfair advantage for the benefit of foreign capital.

If a great fire occurs, in a large city like San Francisco, or a city like Sacramento, where it sometimes destroys property sufficient to bankrupt a foreign insurance company, the policy holders here might pursue it to the extent of its assets, but they would be obliged to stop when the assets were exhausted. The Chicago fire caused the ruin of a great number of companies. The great Pacific Insurance Company was rendered absolutely insolvent, all its property was taken, and the stockholders were obliged to pay an additional sum in solid cash out of their pockets, to make up the deficit. Here is the discrimination against California. With this individual liability clause in the Constitution, we will be discriminating against ourselves. We, therefore, as law-makers, accepting the condition of things which exists, and knowing that we would be behind the spirit of the age in refusing foreign capital the privilege of transacting business in this State, knowingly and deliberately thus discriminate against our own citizens in favor of foreign corporations and foreign capitalists. Now I ask, is this wise, is it common sense? We are asked not only to continue the liability clause already existing, but proceed several steps further and all the while discriminating against our own citizens. That is the question presented now. If I believed that a proposition abolishing all individual liability could be adopted, I would favor it, and in any event I am firmly opposed to extending individual liability beyond the limit already contained in the Constitution. Now let us see what is the condition of stockholders. A stockholder invests his money, in the first instance in the corporation, and pays up his capital stock in full, as originally subscribed, and the entire capital stock thus paid up by all the stockholders is in the treasury of the corporation. Under our laws, and especially under our insurance laws, it is compulsory that the capital stock should be paid up in full; it always has been done so, but where it has not been paid in full, the capital stock is held in trust in favor of the creditors of the corporation, and the stockholders can always be compelled to pay up the original capital stock as described by them in order to liquidate the debts of the corporation. A citizen of California, who becomes a stockholder in an institution or association of this kind, pays in cash his proportion due on his stock as subscribed by him. In a majority of cases, when disaster comes, the stockholder is innocent and has not participated in the management of the affairs of the institution, and is not to blame for the disaster; the stockholder has not participated in, or had any knowledge of the transactions which lead to the disaster. Take, for example, the case of the French Savings Bank, and undoubtedly the stockholders are all innocent men. They invested their money in that corporation and by misfortune in the management of its officers, subsequently lost it. As a consequence, the stockholder is liable on his stock, for the law compels him to pay up in full, and now comes this proposed amendment and adds a third liability, which compels him to advance still more money. This is an illustration how the innocent stockholder who has his money invested in a corporation may suffer by the mistake or mismanagement of the officers of the institution. Why does not the gentleman make each individual stockholder liable for the entire indebtedness of the corporation, as in the case of a partnership? Why not make each stockholder absolutely liable to the whole extent? The principles that apply to a partnership do not apply to a corporation. It is not policy or common sense to place them on the same footing, for a partnership is essentially different from a corporation. These laws are the outgrowths of the business experience of long years. Law is not absolutely created or carved out of the head of any man. It grew from the customs and usages of merchants long preceding adjudications by the Courts.

Take by way of illustration the rules and regulations of mines. These mining rules and customs grew from necessity, from the progress and industry of the State. The miners made their own rules and regulations, and afterwards the Legislature adopted them and crystallized them into law, and the Courts administered them and proclaimed them law. Take the customs of merchants in all the different branches of trade, and the same thing appears, for all these customs and usages contribute to make the law; and these are but a few illustrations of a thousand that could be made. I say, therefore, the laws and the institutions of the country are growing up and spring from the habits, usages, customs, wants, and necessities of the people. One by one they have been adopted until we have reached our present position. When men enter into a partnership, they recognize individual liability to the fullest extent. Yet even in partnership it has been found useful to create a limited liability. Take the great State of New York, and there we have an illustration of the perfection which usages and custom may attain. There they have a statute limiting the individual liability in cases of partnership, and it was induced by wise statesmanship. For instance, an old retired capitalist weighted down with money is anxious to make a reasonably safe investment, and is favorably disposed towards some young, active, vigorous business man. The rich man of years is willing to advance his money as an equivalent for the ability and enterprise of the young man, but he cannot do it, because the young man might be imprudent or too venturesome or make some unfortunate investment, and the old capitalist would be ruined, and I ask therefore is it wise to permit the old man to hoard his money and retire it from circulation and at the same time deprive the young man full of ability and enterprise of the use of the capital to honorably start himself and his family in life? Unquestionably, no. Create then the principle of limited liability by which the capitalist may contribute his twenty thousand dollars or thirty thousand dollars or even his one hundred thousand dollars against the energy and vigor of the young man, and permit them to embark in any lawful enterprise. Such are the wise laws of the great State of New York, for there they have established the principles of limited liability in partnership, and there the capitalist can contribute whatever amount he desires, publishing to the world that he is a limited partner to the extent of twenty thousand dollars or thirty thousand dollars, or whatever the true amount may be.

There are certain wise precautions thrown around the system in order to guard against fraud, and it is just and right that there should be. That system yet commends itself to the people of New York, and to-day remains in the statutes of that great State. It also prevails in Massachusetts and in many other States, I believe. No one has yet complained of it, and it has so prevailed in other States, and has never produced any injury or aught but good. There a young, active, vigorous man, may address a capitalist and say: "I have vigor and energy and capacity to engage in business, but am without funds; will you join me and contribute your money, ten thousand or twenty thousand dollars, and engage in this enterprise?" The capitalist says: "Yes, if I can be limited to twenty thousand dollars I will contribute that amount against your skill and business capacity." Under the law of New York and other States he is at liberty to do so. He publishes it to the world, and gives notice of the amount of money he contributes, and beyond that sum he will not be responsible. I have yet to learn of any objection that can be urged against this wise system.

Why then is not this system wise in regard to a corporation? Why should not a man be allowed to unite in some great enterprise by notifying the world, by publication or otherwise, that he has contributed five thousand or ten thousand dollars, or any other amount, and that he will not be responsible for any amount beyond the sum of money originally contributed by him? The world is fairly notified of it, and every person who deals with the corporation has notice of the fact. Is it not a wise policy to permit him so to do? For instance, in discussing some business matter which I desire to transact, the manager of a corporation says, very well, transact business with us, but in this case there is a certain limit to the liability of the stockholders, and you must take your risk; you know it and are fully informed, and you know that if the corporation should fail, your recourse is first to the assets of the corporation, and second, to a certain proportion which each stockholder has to bear, and no more.

If this individual liability clause is kept out of the Constitution, creditors must look to the funds and assets of the corporation, and nothing else. The assets may not be sufficient, but creditors must assume that risk. All the world has had ample notice and dealt with the corporation knowing its status.

In olden times there was no such thing as individual liability of stockholders; it is entirely a matter of modern growth. Now, if we increase this individual liability what is the result? We will drive the capitalists of California out of business and abandon almost all business to these foreign corporations and capitalists, because the California capitalist will say, I cannot invest my money in an institution where I may not only lose my entire original capital contributed, but also all my original stock, and I will therefore have nothing to do with the enterprise. And there is no man in this Convention who would. The result will be that the home corporations cannot exist, and foreign corporations having no individual liability will do all the business. There are thousands of dollars paid in premiums every year to foreign corporations, which go direct to foreign countries and States, and thus immense sums of money are exported from our own State annually. Fires occur but seldom, and thus thousands and thousands of dollars every year are sent out of the State, to pay foreign insurance companies, including English, French, and German insurance companies, and companies in the other States. We have many such foreign companies in the City and County of San Francisco to-day, and we have domestic insurance institutions that have their money circulating here, premiums paid and divided here at home, but we will drive all this business from the domestic corporations into the hands of these foreign corporations, if we thus continue discriminating against our home companies in favor of foreign companies in the manner contemplated by the amendment. What other object is there or can there be in this amendment? A man twenty-one years of age, in the full possession of his faculties, makes a contract, but it is provided here that notwithstanding the fact that a man enters into a contract he shall not be bound by his contract. I never have been in favor, and I never will be in favor, of restricting a man in the exercise of his own faculties, or in entering into such agreements as he may desire, and in my judgment that is the entire proposition involved in the last part of the amendment which the gentleman from Alameda has offered. A man goes into the office of an insurance company, or into a bank, and the manager says: "I now notify you that we will not be responsible, individually, in any transaction you may enter into with this corporation, and you must look to the corporate funds and assets alone of the institution for indemnity in case of loss;" and notwithstanding that the whole matter is perfectly understood by the man, and he then makes an agreement knowing and understanding all the facts, the proposition of the gentleman from Alameda is, that he shall not be bound by his contract. Six, eight, or ten men enter into an agreement to invest twenty thousand dollars apiece in an insurance corporation in any of the towns of this State, and publicly announce that they will agree to insure people in their institution, provided those insured will agree to look to the company's assets alone, and shall not look to them individually in any event for indemnity in case of loss, and a man deals with the corporation on that basis, why should he not be bound by it. What is the objection and where is the wrong? Such a system is in entire harmony with the principle of modern insurance. The proposition contained in the amendment contemplates not only that the stockholder shall be individually liable for his proportion of all the debts and liabilities of the corporation, in proportion to the amount of stock he holds, but also in a further sum equal in amount to the par value of his stock, any contract engagement to the contrary notwithstanding. In other words, this Convention would undertake to say to the merchants and business men of this country, that it prohibits them from entering into a contract which their judgment may approve, and their necessities and inclinations induce them to make. In my judgment the entire proposition is a discrimination against the citizens of California. At present the creditor has recourse to the capital stock of the corporation in the first instance, for the law requires the stockholder to pay up in full, and each stockholder is liable for his proportion of all the debts and liabilities of the corporation, according to the provisions laid down in section seven of the article as reported by the committee. I say, therefore, that even now we have proceeded far enough, for already there is sufficient discrimination against Californian in favor of foreign corporations. But to pass the limit and add the further liability, by which the stockholder must pay the entire capital stock again, in my opinion is going to the utmost extreme, and certainly is not based upon prudent statesmanship, business judgment, or common sense.

I submit that the section as reported by the committee is stringent enough. It is, in my judgment, all that is demanded in the interests of the people, and I shall, therefore, oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I was not aware that this proposition was coming up to-day, and I am not prepared to make any extended remarks. But I concur, substantially, in what has been said by my colleague, who has just taken his seat. While he was speaking, I have been consulting other State Constitutions to ascertain their provisions on this subject. I have been unable to find any provisions in other State Constitutions similar to the one contained in our old, and proposed to be placed in our new, Constitution—that is, "that each stockholder of a corporation shall be individually and personally liable for all its debts and liabilities," etc. There may be similar provisions in other State Constitutions, but I have not, in my limited investigation, been able to find any. To continue this provision in the new Constitution is neither good policy nor in the interests of the people. It will not bring capital to our State; it may drive it from us. I know there is a prevailing prejudice against capital and capitalists, and to some extent it has manifested itself in this Convention. Many suppose all stockholders in corporations are capitalists, but such is not the case. The provision applies to all corporations, and yet many of them are created for the purpose of developing industries, and the work and labor of the stockholders may constitute the principal capital. As I have stated, California, as far as my researches extend, stands alone with this provision. The Constitutions of Alabama and Minnesota have provisions "that each stockholder in any corporation shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him." That is, if he holds ten thousand dollars worth of stock, and the corporation fails, he may lose ten thousand dollars, but can lose no more. In that of Nebraska, stockholders in banking corporations are made liable to creditors for the amount of their stock, and also to an amount equal to the stock or shares so held. In the Arkansas and some other Constitutions, the provision is substantially the same, and applies to all corporations. In such case, the stockholder having stock to the amount of ten thousand dollars might be liable to a loss of ten thousand dollars additional, if the debts were sufficient to require the entire liability to be paid. The new Constitution of Missouri provides:

"Dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in no case shall any stockholder be individually liable in any amount over or above the amounts of stock owned by him or her."

The Nevada Constitution has this:

"Dues from corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law; provided, that corporators, in corporations formed under the laws of this State, shall not be individually liable for the debts or liabilities of such corporation."

So in Ohio:

"Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liabilities of the stockholders, and other means as may be prescribed by law, but in all cases each stockholder shall be liable, over and above the stock by him or her owned and any amount unpaid thereon, to a further sum at least equal in amount to such stock."

The Oregon Constitution provides:

"The stockholders of all corporations and joint stock companies shall be liable for the indebtedness of said corporation to the amount of their stock subscribed and unpaid and no more."

These are all the specific provisions I have been able to find; but in many of the State Constitutions there are general provisions authorizing liabilities of corporations to be secured as may be prescribed by law; but I have been unable to find another one like that contained in the Constitution of this State, which makes stockholders liable for the debts of corporations to an unlimited amount. The effect of this, as has been remarked, is to discriminate against our own citizens and in favor of foreign corporations doing business in this State. A corporation—an insurance company for instance—of another State where there may be no personal liability beyond the amount of stock paid or subscribed, may do business in this State, or our people may go to their office elsewhere and effect insurance. Will our capitalists invest their money to establish insurance companies here, with unlimited personal liability, when they can take stock in a New York or English company without this liability? The personal liability clause gives no advantage to the home over the foreign company. The rates of insurance for the home company is no higher in consequence of this unlimited personal liability, and yet in the event of a great conflagration it might ruin every stockholder connected with it. Prudent men may be willing to lose the amount of their stock, or double that amount, but not to risk the loss of their entire fortunes. The general result will be only irresponsible persons will be willing to hold stock in insurance companies of this State. For these reasons it is well understood that many persons have declined to have any connection with our home insurance companies, and in many instances irresponsible men establish and hold the stock in such companies in this State. If such be the result, how is California or her citizens benefited? Does it make our State any richer by drawing capital to us, or poorer by driving it from us? Does it give any advantage to the home over the foreign companies of Germany, England, or the Eastern States? Does it increase or lower the rates of insurance? These are questions that address themselves to us for our consideration in the performance of the great work in which we are engaged. I have examined the new Constitution of the great State of Pennsylvania and the Constitution of the great State of New York, containing the two great commercial and manufacturing cities of the Union, but in them we find nothing similar to this proposed unlimited personal liability provision. To adopt such a provision will be unwise, against public policy and the interests of our people. I hope the proposition will be rejected.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, because, in my opinion, it is neither one thing nor the other. I voted for this provision of the Committee on Corporations, because it was the provision of the old Constitution and had received a great deal of judicial interpretation. I contend that it, tends to make corporations dishonest, because men subscribe—perhaps men of capital—but if they see that the business of the corporation is not going to be prosperous, they sell out their stock, and the creditor of the corporation has no permanency to look to. Now, if the gentleman would move that no corporation should do business until all its stock was paid up, and that he should not be liable beyond the paid-up stock, I think I should be inclined to vote for it, because that would be returning to the ancient English principles of corporations.

I am also opposed to the amendment offered by my friend from Alameda, because it is neither one thing nor the other. I disagree with the proposition that corporations are necessary. I hold, on the contrary, that limited partnerships are altogether sufficient. Now, if the gentleman had moved an amendment to that effect, I certainly should have supported the motion. As it is, everybody knows that there is no responsibility, and can be none, in corporations. There is no fund to look to as it is, and no responsibility of the corporator. It was well said by Mr. Burnett, in a letter published by him some time ago, that individual enterprise was destroyed by the godless corporations, and it was time it should be corrected. Now, what do we see here? That there is scarcely any business in the community that is not engrossed by corporations—and by irresponsible corporations in the main part. Why, what is the report of the Secretary of State the other day? That we have in this State over twenty thousand corporations; and they embrace and cover every substantial business of the community, from the manufacture of soap to the operating of railroads and the holding and cultivation of the land. There is a corporation that, I think, originally held one hundred leagues of land. Now that is an abuse; that is an evil; and I am for going back to the old rule, that a man who subscribes to the capital stock of a corporation shall put his money in and be responsible to that extent; and when that is lost, he shall not be pursued further. But I am in favor of abolishing corporations altogether, and substituting limited partnerships. It must be apparent that the present rule has no ancestry to stand upon, and is at variance with the ancient common law procedure. As well stated by the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, it is a discrimination against the corporations which are located here. The amendment ought not to prevail.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I was not impressed with the proposition of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, when it was first offered. I thought the section, as it was presented, was in better shape than the one he proposed to substitute for it. But, sir, the arguments have convinced me—the arguments in the negative, the arguments of the gentlemen who are opposed to this amendment—have convinced me that this amendment is better than I had supposed upon casual inspection, and I now think it ought to be adopted. Not for the reason that the gentlemen who are defending that side of the question have opposed it, but because it seems to me that the argument against it is based upon a fallacious proposition. The idea advanced is that this is a discrimination in favor of foreign capital, and against home capital. Now, let us see if that is so. Is it a fact that the greater security you give to people who deal with corporations, the more you discriminate in favor of foreign capital? Is that so? Will the people deal where they have the least security, or will they deal where they have the best security? That is the proposition. Now, I have always observed that where you give the people ample security, there is the place where they are liable to trade. There is the place where they are most apt to place confidence. Now, if the foreign capitalists do not furnish some kind of security—that kind of safe security which will affect business all around—they are not the persons with whom business will be transacted by the people.

But there is another thing that should, in my opinion, be considered in connection with this question. It is the fact, Mr. Chairman, that this legislation is rather in favor of the people than of the corporations. It will be observed that this provision is somewhat more stringent than provisions that are usually embodied in the Codes and Constitution with reference to their liabilities. I say the foundation upon which the arguments on the other side have been based is fallacious, and I shall proceed to show why. I say that the bare fact that we give to the people greater security is no argument that it is a discrimination in favor of foreign corporations against home corporations. Let us admit for the moment that the home corporations will not be in condition to swindle the people to as great an extent as the foreign corporations. When corporations lose, it is not the corporations upon whom the loss generally falls. The parties whom their representations have convinced are the ones who lose the money, and not the corporators, and it is the people who lose money for whom we come here to legislate, and not the home corporations or the foreign corporations. Not against foreign corporations or in their favor; not against home corporations or in their favor; but for the protection of the people. I say the principle upon which legislation should stand is the interest of the whole people, and not simply the moneyed corporations. Now, let it rest upon that basis, and not upon the proposition of discrimination between home and foreign corporations, and in that view of the case the stringency of the provision cannot be too great. We cannot be too secure; we cannot make these gentlemen furnish us with too much security. I appeal to the report which has been furnished us by the Secretary of State if the nineteen thousand corporations in this State do not bear testimony that the provisions are none too stringent. There need be no fear of driving out corporations. The proposed provision is not so severe as to render them any less secure; not so severe as to drive them out of business. But we have a right and it is our duty to give the people who deal with them a little security, and this is not at the expense of corporations who do a legitimate business. I am going to vote for the amendment.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Each stockholder or member of any corporation shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities as the amount of stock or shares owned by him in such corporation bears to the whole subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I would not undertake to enlighten the able and distinguished gentlemen who have preceded my argument on this question. They are certainly men of long experience and great ability, and have brought able arguments to bear on this subject; but, sir, there are matters connected with this subject that force me to dissent from many of the opinions expressed here; and it seems to me that the public opinion expressed on this matter has something to do with this matter. Now, I believe it was generally understood that this clause in the Constitution was intended to fix a proportional liability against the persons holding an interest in corporations. As a proof that this was the intent, I cite you to the Supreme Court, which has expressed that opinion in the case of French vs. Teschemacher et al., in the 24th of Cal., 518, to the effect that the constitutional provision does not mean what it purports to mean. In other words, that that certain proportion is not fixed in the Constitution. I will read that decision:

"Section thirty-six, of article four, of the Constitution, relating to the liability of stockholders of corporations for corporate debts, is not self-executing, nor does it contain within its own terms a rule of conduct broad enough to embrace and definitely settle every question that may arise touching the individual and personal liability which it imposes upon the stockholders."

Now, the Constitution does not say what that proportion shall be—that is left entirely to the Legislature. And what has the Legislature done? Attempted to fix it, and have fixed the rate, and I have put the rate in my amendment. I have simply incorporated this because I believe that the people of this State, free to act in this matter, have expressed themselves, and have had experience in this matter of personal liability.

As to the discrimination against Californians, I don't know how that may be. I believe it is provided otherwise in other places—whether in the Constitution or not, I do not know now—requiring foreign corporations to invest certain sums of money in the State as security; and if this is not sufficient, it seems to me that it should be made sufficient, so as to place the foreign corporations on the same footing with home corporations. I shall be glad to see a proposition that will cure this matter. I am open to conviction in this matter. If the law is as it is now, let us have some remedy, but I do not understand that the aim of this section is to remedy that matter. I have simply incorporated the statute upon this subject, and fixed the liability as it was understood to be fixed, but it seems was not fixed, in the Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Smith.

REMARKS OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: There is one omission—and so far as I have observed, the amendments are very similar—but there is one omission in the amendment of the gentleman, and that is the provision, "contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder." That is part of the Code as it stands to-day. His, I believe, does not contain that. That is evidently a very important clause, and I followed the Code exactly in its construction, or rather, the decision of the Supreme Court—this section was based on that, and I have followed it very closely. As the law stands now, it is exactly the same. I will read it again:

"Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities, contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares of the corporation or association; and also for a further sum, at least equal in amount to the par value of his stock, any contract or agreement to the contrary notwithstanding."

A part of this is the law as it stands to-day, and if we propose to change it, it seems to me we cannot do better than to adopt this amendment. I cannot conceive how there can be any reasonable objection to the first part of the section.

MR. SMITH. I withdraw my amendment with that explanation.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his amendment.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I would like to have the amendment read as it now stands.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I rise for the purpose of asking for a division of the question. The first part of the proposition:

"Each stockholder of a corporation or joint-stock association shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities, contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares of the corporation or association." That is one proposition. Then the second part as follows: "And also for a further sum, at least equal in amount to the par value of his stock, any contract or agreement to the contrary notwithstanding." I wish to state here that the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, signed the report of the committee with the express understanding that he should present this proposition to the Convention for its consideration. I state that, because his name appears upon the report. He presented this amendment in the committee, but the majority of the committee didn't agree with him. I now ask for a division of the question.

SPEECH OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: This question of corporations is one of special interest to the portion of the State which I have the honor to represent, and while it is of special interest to that particular portion of the State, it is also of interest to all portions of the State. I am speaking now especially with reference to corporations, as connected with mining enterprises. Now, sir, I realize the marked ability and influence of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson; but still, sir, I shall not hesitate to attempt to answer one or two propositions which he has brought forward. In the first place, one of the propositions he states is this: that is, that corporations, or the stockholders in corporations, should be relieved from all individual responsibility. With this I cannot agree. Twenty men, or one hundred men, associate themselves together for the transaction of business in the shape of a corporation. They associate themselves for one purpose. Not for the public good, as might be supposed, but for the individual benefit and for the profit which they can make by it. If the corporation makes money, is successful, the profits are divided. But if it does not succeed—if there is a loss—then the corporators want to sit down in their offices and be relieved of all responsibility.

Now, as I understand the amendment of the gentleman, it does not propose that there shall be an unlimited responsibility, but a responsibility to this extent: that if I own one share, and the par value is one hundred dollars, in any corporation, in case that corporation fails, or does not fail, I am responsible to the amount of one hundred dollars. Responsible to this extent, that if the stock is not paid up in full, I am still to be required to make it good, and also to pay one hundred dollars. Now, the arguments which he finds from the State of New York, and which Judge Hager also finds, are something like this: that we ought to enact similar provisions. Allow me to say that the State of New York has a provision letter for letter like the provision here reported by the committee, and in that State they then go further, and when a corporation is organized the stock is paid up in full, and then the corporation has some actual stock upon which to work, and represents some responsibility; while here corporations are formed without any paid up capital whatever, in a large number of cases; and if, now, there is no individual responsibility, then there is nothing tangible to look to.

Now, the next proposition is, that if we make corporations liable, it will drive business into the hands of foreign corporations, and discriminate against our home companies. I believe, on the contrary, that if we make individual stockholders liable to some reasonable extent—I am not in favor of any unreasonable requirement—we will by that means, instead of driving business away, draw business to us. I will instance a case: Suppose all the corporations in the State had responsible names as stockholders and incorporators. Suppose it was generally understood that these individuals were responsible for the debts of the corporation; then, sir, a man wants an insurance, he will not go to the foreign corporation, but he will go to a home insurance company, because he is not merely benefiting the home corporation, but he knows that somebody is responsible, and that his money is securely invested. I think the direct result of this will be that the home corporations will have an increased business. Men would much rather patronize them, if the security is good. And all this talk about foreign corporations taking money out of the State. Why, these corporations are organized under laws that require the strictest responsibility—the strictest responsibility on the part of the corporations. Why is it that these foreign insurance men take so much money out of the State? Exactly on account of the individual responsibility of the corporations in that country. The responsibility of the Anglo-Californian Bank is recognized over the whole State, and because of the responsibility attached to it.

Now, there is another argument in favor of this amendment, and a very strong one, and that is this: that as long as there is no individual responsibility on the part of the stockholders, there is no individual interest on the part of the stockholders. As long as there is no individual interest on the part of the stockholders it is not strange that such mistakes have been made in the management of corporations as was the case with Duncan's bank, and kindred associations. It is easy to account for. For instance, some wealthy gentlemen on this floor have an interest in a corporation which is not paying a profit, and there is no such thing as individual responsibility; they would feel very much like letting it go to the dogs, and never looking into it again. But let it be understood by each stockholder that he is individually and personally liable to some reasonable extent, and then, sir, every stockholder will keep an eye on the business and management of the corporation, and will be interested in it to that extent; and then they will take pains to have an honest President, and honest agents, and honest business managers, because upon these things will depend, not merely the profits they will make, but the losses they may be compelled to stand. If this be discrimination against domestic corporations, and in favor of foreign corporations, it seems to me it is a wise discrimination. If any other State in this Union allows corporations to be formed without rating the capital stock as money, and then relieves the stockholders of all individual responsibility, I have no wish to copy from their laws. The State of California deserves a better basis for the operations of corporations.

Another objection urged by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, is this: that a man should be allowed to make whatever kind of an agreement or contract he chooses. Now the law does guard a man against making improper contracts in certain cases. For instance, if Mr. Wilson should agree to pay ten thousand dollars to a man to murder another, you cannot compel him to pay the money. The law does exercise a guardianship over the contracts a man shall make. And it is specially necessary to have this guardianship in the case of corporations, and the reason for it is seen in a case like this: A man takes a policy of insurance—insurance seems to cut a prominent figure here in this discussion—he takes a policy, and in that policy are many conditions, and it is subject to all these conditions, and one of the conditions which many of these policies contain is this: that there is no individual responsibility on the part of the stockholders in that insurance company. Now, sir, I believe that we should have in this State a provision making the corporations responsible in some limited degree, to some reasonable extent, and there should also be some protection to a man who deals with these corporations, and he should not be compelled to read a lot of fine print in order to find out what the conditions are; the contract should be simple and plain. It is reasonable that these corporations should be responsible, and that the corporation stockholders should be individually responsible to a reasonable extent. And it is equally reasonable that they shall not be permitted to shirk that responsibility.

Now, as to this matter of there being different provisions in different State Constitutions. In some Constitutions the provision is that the corporate stock must be paid in full, either at the time the stock is issued, or at some brief period afterwards. Now, in such cases, this stock, or capital actually paid in, is some guarantee, for this reason: that when a man has paid in one hundred dollars, or one thousand dollars, or ten thousand dollars, into the business, and paid up his capital stock, then he is interested in the welfare of that corporation to the extent of the money he has invested. In this State, where corporations are formed with no rule requiring them to pay up their capital stock, a man has no interest in it unless he is in some way liable for the debts of the corporation. Now men in this State bind themselves together into a corporation by which they inaugurate enterprises which employ laborers; they buy supplies and go into the towns to make something without investing a dollar, with no chance of losing anything individually, and it seems to me that this state of things demands some change, and some change for the better too. And if we are to make a change in this respect let us not make it worse. In our mining counties, corporations that are organized in San Francisco send their agents to the mining regions and undertake to develop a mine, employ fifty or a hundred men to work, and if the mine pays the men get their wages; and if the mine does not pay, why they will have to go down to San Francisco and hunt up the stockholders, and when they find them they will be told that they are not responsible individually. I think the amendment will effectually put a stop to these abuses. It will not hinder corporations that are organized on an honest basis, nor will it in any way retard the development of our great industries.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: The proposition of the gentleman from Nevada is entirely different from the proposition before the committee. The proposition now before the committee does not contemplate making the capital stock alone responsible for the debts of the corporation. It does not contemplate making the corporation itself alone responsible; it does not contemplate making any corporation assets alone responsible, as implied by Mr. Cross; and, therefore, the argument of the gentleman is inapplicable and falls to the ground.

MR. CROSS. That is the very reason why there should be individual responsibility; that is the way I figure it.

MR. WILSON. Mr. Cross takes as an example of the irresponsibility of stockholders, the case of a mining corporation that employs labor and develops a mine. If the enterprise is successful the laborers receive pay for their labor; if not, they receive nothing, because they cannot find a responsible stockholder. Then the gentleman proposes to follow up these stockholders, that are not worth a dollar, and legally proclaim them more responsible than they are in fact. Is that safe reasoning or sound logic?

MR. CROSS. They are irresponsible because the law makes them so.

MR. WILSON. The gentleman proposes to follow up these stockholders and increase the individual liability of the stockholders that are not worth a cent. We do not make them any more responsible by this kind of legislation, nor do we make them any easier to find. Yet that is the gentleman's argument. The proposition is this: Where a corporation has no capital stock (proceeding on the basis that all of its stockholders were thoroughly responsible men, because it is absurd to make men responsible who are not, in fact, responsible), the question then is, how far should the individual stockholder be made liable. There has been considerable discussion about corporations where the stock is not paid up in full. In the first place, our laws are more stringent than the laws of any other State in the Union on that subject. There is no State in the Union where the law is any more strict in relation to paying up the capital stock of a corporation than ours. Many of them cannot commence business until a certain percentage is paid up. That is a mere question of legislation, with which we have nothing to do in the Constitution. The theory upon which a corporation is built, is that all the stockholders are compelled to pay up in full. If they do not, it is the fault of the Legislature in not requiring them to do so. Now, when the corporation has its capital stock paid up in full, how far should the stockholders be individually liable beyond the full paid capital stock? If the capital stock is not paid up in full, then, as I said before, it is the common law of the land that the subscribed amount is in itself a fund in favor of all the creditors, and every stockholder can be compelled to forthwith pay up his original subscription. That is the law, and under the law of corporations it never has been departed from, and never will be. If the stockholders refuse, they can be compelled forthwith to pay up, independent of the Constitution, and independent of any question of individual liability, because that is the original contract of the stockholder, and that is the fund belonging, beyond question, to the creditors. We are now discussing a case of that character where the stockholders have paid up in full. How far shall they be individually liable over and above the amount of their subscription, where the original subscription, paid up, is lost? The stockholder has lost all the money which he paid in originally, and the question arises how far shall the creditor pursue him in order to recover the amount which the corporation is indebted to him? I say when he has lost all the money he put in originally, that is going far enough. The amendment, however, proposes to make him liable to pay two, three, or four times. The amendment of the gentleman, of course, must proceed upon the assumption that the corporation has a full paid up capital stock. The stockholder is liable in proportion to his capital stock paid up in full. But the amendment does not stop there. He is made liable, also, in a further sum proportioned to the amount of his stock. Then he is taxed three times. I do not intend to go over the whole ground again, but simply present this view to the Convention, that the whole question here is, how far shall the stockholder be liable, upon the assumption that the original subscription to the capital stock has been paid up, which he is compelled to pay, as I have shown—how far shall he be liable, I say, beyond the amount paid up by him? I say the old Constitution goes far enough in that respect.

Digitized by Google

SPEECH OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment of Mr. Webster. I think it is an amendment that ought to be adopted. It reads like this:

That is the amendment. I am in favor of that amendment. It makes corporations strong. It gives capital more encouragement to invest in corporations. As my friend said, the California Bank would never have resumed business if it was not for this individual responsibility. Now a corporation is defined by Webster to be a body politic, formed and authorized by law to act as a single person; but the true definition of corporations in this State is something like this: "A corrupt combination of individuals formed together for the purpose of escaping individual responsibility for their acts." [Applause.]

Corporations have committed with impunity crimes for which an individual would be sent to the State Prison for life. You all know that to be a fact. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment, and I believe every honest man in this hall is in favor of it. [Applause and laughter.]

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: There are two considerations that should affect the solution of this question. I do not suppose that the gentlemen will pretend that this Constitution will make any difference with contracts existing at the time the Constitution goes into force. No Constitution can impair the obligation of a contract existing at the time the Constitution goes into force. These will remain as they are. Now much of the experience of this world has fallen to me, and my experience convinces me of the correctness of the views expressed by the gentleman from San Francisco, that a sound policy requires the entire obliteration of that section of the report of the Committee on Corporations. I think the liability of stockholders should be entirely wiped out. I do not believe it can do any practical good to deal with the subject in this manner. I do not believe it will be of any practical benefit to the people who deal with corporations. It is simply a delusion.

It is said that the law exercises a guardianship over men in certain cases, and my friend from Nevada gives an illustration, that if Mr. Wilson hires a man to murder somebody, and promises to give him ten thousand dollars, that the murderer cannot collect the money. I never knew before that the law was to protect Mr. Wilson, I thought it was to punish the murderer. The law does not protect either party, but it punishes both. It is not such a rule as is contemplated in this section at all.

Now, as regards this amendment, in the first place it is entirely useless. It will amount to nothing at all. In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred you will find the stock standing on the books in the name of John Doe. The stock is responsible for the assessments. The real owner is not responsible. Nobody knows who he is. The trustee, in whose name the stock is issued, is responsible for the assessments, but the stock does not belong to him. Now the creditor should look out and see who is the true stockholder. If it is so and so, he can trust him or let him alone. What reason is there, when a man wants to make a contract, with his eyes open, for not allowing him to do it. Why should he be put under the surveillance of the law, and why should the law step in and examine the agreements to see whether they are proper or not. We all know that no business can be carried on in that way.

Now, in the first place, a man subscribes to the stock of a corporation without paying up. He is to pay so much to the corporation in favor of the creditors of the corporation. If he has not paid up in full, he can be compelled to pay at any time. Now the first proposition is that the stockholder shall pay in the ratio that his stock bears to the whole capital stock, which is the law now. Now I say if the shares are all taken and the stock paid up, or liable to be paid up when called for, that it covers the whole debt, because it is all divided pro rata. Now to go farther than that would be to destroy corporations in this State. Not one in ten of all the great corporate enterprises would have been organized in this State had the prospective profits been the only consideration. I would rather follow my friend Howard, and have no corporations, than to cripple them and kill them off in this manner. If it is the sense of the Convention that corporations of all kinds should be abolished, then it will be far better to vote direct for such a proposition.

Statements have been made as regards the effect of our present laws. Well, I have an insurance policy taken in England or New York, taken by the agent who calls upon me. I do not stop to look at it, but say to him, call upon me when my insurance is out. Well, he sends on to New York, the policy is made out there, the whole thing is closed, and brought to my office, and I give him a check for the amount. Now, the fourteenth section does not cover that case. The transaction is made in New York, and the money was paid in New York. It is a New York transaction, outside of California, and cannot be touched by a thousand Constitutions. The State of California cannot prevent these transactions. If you undertake to say that this man shall not do this business, the Constitution of the United States will step in. He has a right to make the proposition. He has a right to come to you and ask you if he shall write on to New York for a policy for you. And when you can prevent him from writing a letter to New York on business, then you can prevent these transactions, and not before. Now, in regard to these agreements, I don't see for my life why, if any two men in the community want to make a trade, we should stick our noses in between them and say they shall not make it, when it does not lead to a breach of the peace. I do not see why a corporation, with five hundred thousand dollars paid up capital, should not be allowed to make a contract with a man to the effect that he must look to the corporate fund for his money, and not to the individual stockholders, who have already paid this money in. I do not see why the State should constitute herself the dry nurse of every individual citizen in the country, and say to them, you live under a paternal government that will take care of you, and see that you do not make any improper agreement.

MR. WEBSTER. A division of the question was called for.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the first clause: "Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities, contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares of the corporation or association."

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the first clause was adopted—ayes, 81; noes, 40.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the second clause, which the Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"And also for a further sum, at least equal in amount to the par value of his stock, any contract or agreement to the contrary notwithstanding."

MR. WEBSTER. I ask for a division on this clause also. Take the first part of it down to the word stock: "And also for a further sum at least equal in amount to the par value of his stock." I would like to have the sense of the Convention on that part first.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is not capable of further division. The question is on the last clause of the amendment as read:

Division was called, and the amendment was rejected—ayes, 44.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to section three.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not capable of farther amendment. This is a substitute. The Secretary will read section four.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I am at a loss to understand why this amendment is not in order. I understand that the committee has just adopted an amendment to section three, and voted down another, that is to say, the amendment which was before the committee was divided, so as to become two amendments. One was adopted and the other rejected. Now, I understand that the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, offers a further amendment to section three, and why it is not in order is a point I am unable to comprehend.

THE CHAIRMAN. For the simple reason that the committee has adopted a substitute for the whole section.

MR. REYNOLDS. Now the gentleman moves to add to the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can take an appeal, if he desires it, but he cannot discuss it without appealing.

AN APPEAL.

MR. REYNOLDS. To test the sense of the committee, I most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair, that the amendment to the substitute is not in order.

THE CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to discuss it.

MR. REYNOLDS. I desire to have it distinctly understood that the gentleman has offered a substitute to section three, which was adopted, and that the gentleman from San Francisco offers a further amendment to the substitute, which is ruled out of order, and from that ruling I appeal.

MR. BARBOUR. I second the appeal.

MR. MCCALLUM. I second the appeal.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco out of order. The gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, offered a substitute to section three, which was adopted by the committee, and it is no longer subject to amendment. From that decision three gentlemen take an appeal. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

MR. HALE. Does the ruling go to the extent that a substitute is not susceptible of amendment?

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. HALE. That the committee, having adopted a substitute to the section, the substitute adopted is not open to amendment?

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. HALE. With all deference to the Chair, I think the appeal should be sustained. I do not mean that the Chair should be sustained, but that the appeal should be sustained. I understand this to be the rule. A motion is put and prevails to substitute for section three something else. This substitute, therefore, stands in its place, and becomes section three. Now, this ought to be open to amendment the same as section three would have been, had not the substitute been adopted. I know of no rule of law that prevents the Committee of the Whole from curing its own work. It seems to me that we should have the right to go on and perfect the substitute. I, therefore, most respectfully favor the appeal.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I understand by our rules that a substitute is a simple amendment, and treated in all respects as such. Now, if that is the case, of course the Chair is right. With all respect to the gentleman from Placer, I think he is wrong. Rule Thirty-two provides as follows:

"A substitute shall be deemed an amendment, and be treated in all respects as such."

Digitized by Google

That disposes of the matter. It was subject to amendment while it was before the committee, but when it was adopted as an amendment, that was the end of it.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I shall sustain the decision of the Chair for the reason suggested, that a substitute is nothing more nor less than an amendment to the proposition before the Convention. Now, sir, when this house passes judgment upon an amendment and adopts it, if we can then go on and add amendment after amendment, where are we going to stop? It seems very plain to me that the ruling is correct. I would suggest to the gentleman from San Francisco, in order to give him an opportunity, if the house should go against him, that he can move a reconsideration of the vote by which the substitute was adopted.

MR. TERRY. The vote was taken on the first part and then on the latter clause.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I submit that for the very reason that we have no substitutes, that the decision of the Chair cannot be sustained. "A substitute shall be deemed an amendment, and be treated in all respects as such." When an amendment has been adopted, what is the reason another amendment cannot be offered?

MR. EDGERTON. The reason why it is inadmissible is this: that the amendment has already been adopted. If he had offered his amendment before it was adopted, it would have been in order.

MR. McCALLUM. Not necessarily, because it does not yet appear what the amendment is. It may be an amendment to the original report of the committee, and yet not necessarily connected with the proposition of my colleague which has been voted upon. It may be a matter treating upon the matter in the amendment of my colleague. We can't tell till we know what it is.

MR. BARBOUR. The gentleman from Sacramento is extremely kind in offering to show me a way out of this difficulty. I shall not take that course. I propose, if I know myself, to be treated as the other members on this floor are treated, or have it decided at once that I have no such rights on the floor of this Convention. I have sat here, sir, day after day, and heard the President call for more amendments—ask if there were any more amendments—before passing to another section. I have followed the usual course in offering this amendment. This is the first time I have ever seen a section passed without giving members a chance to amend it. The circumstance that there was only one amendment does not affect my right. There was no opportunity to offer my amendment, because the gentleman offered an amendment, and the amendment was divided, and the Chair was not entitled to pass to the next section until he had called for more amendments, in order to permit the Committee of the Whole to perfect the section.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I desire to state another reason why the decision of the Chair should not be sustained, and that is this: When the substitute to section three was pending, and before any action was taken upon it by the committee, it was never possible for the gentleman from San Francisco, or any other member, to know whether he desired to amend the section or substitute or not. And it is rendered all the more plain from the fact that just upon the vote being taken the author of the substitute called for a division of the question, and so it happened that a portion of it was adopted and a portion rejected. Now, under these circumstances, how was it possible for any gentleman to know before there was any action taken by the committee whether he desired to offer an amendment or not. That is an overwhelming reason why the amendment should be in order.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: Technically I think the Chair is right. After an amendment is once adopted you cannot then amend that. Now the confusion here over this matter has risen out of our peculiar rule. We have a rule requiring that a substitute shall be deemed an amendment and treated in all respects as such. I regret, sir, that this rule was ever passed. Ordinarily and generally in legislative bodies, if a substitute should be adopted it takes the place of the original proposition, and that the substitute is open to amendment the same as the original section would have been. But here a substitute is an amendment, and you cannot amend an amendment after it has been adopted. Now I forget just in what manner this amendment came up. If I recollect right, the mover introduced the proposition that each stockholder should be individually and personally liable, etc., and the question was divided. Now let me look at the authority on this. His amendment should have been a motion to strike out and insert, or a motion to add, or a motion to strike out, before the substitute was put to a vote. The Chair is right. The rule is this:

"Whatever is agreed to by the house, either adopting or rejecting a proposed amendment, cannot afterwards be altered or amended. Thus, if a proposition consists of A B, and it is moved to insert C, if the amendment prevails C cannot be afterwards amended, because it has been agreed to in that form, and so if it is moved to leave out B and the amendment is rejected, B cannot afterwards be amended, because a vote against leaving it out is equivalent to a vote agreeing to it as it stands."

Now, in this case, the amendment was called a substitute, to strike out the section and insert what has been adopted. Therefore, it is a vote of the house. You have passed upon it. Now, to go back and revise that leaves us moving in a circle, and we would never come to a conclusion. But, hereafter, when we come into open Convention the amendment can be considered.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: This is not a matter where the justice or injustice to the gentleman offering the amendment is to be passed upon. It seems to me that the gentleman should be allowed to present his amendment as a matter of justice. But at the same time, as a matter of law, as a matter of parliamentary law, adopted and established, I shall be obliged to sustain the decision of the Chair, because I think the Chair is correct in his ruling. I call attention to section one hundred and twenty-six, Cushing's Manual, and also to Rule Thirty-two, which says that a substitute shall be deemed an amendment, and be treated in all respects as such. It declares a substitute to be an amendment, and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, was an amendment to strike out and insert. The amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, should have been a motion to insert, a motion to strike out, or a motion to strike out and insert, before the vote was taken on the substitute. I am obliged in this matter to vote to sustain the decision of the Chair.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I believe it is universally conceded, according to all parliamentary rules, that a substitute takes the place of the one under consideration. That the substitute may be considered separately, may be added to, may be amended by striking out and inserting, or in other words the friends of the substitute may proceed to perfect it before there is a vote taken upon it. Now, the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, presented an amendment under our rule. Section three was amended by the propositions of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster. Part of his amendment was rejected, which left section three before the Convention to add other amendments, and there was no limit to the power of the Convention to amend that section until they passed from the consideration of the section. I think the Chair is in error, and that the amendment ought to be entertained.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that many of the delegates here have formed a wrong conception of this matter. Now, it is evident that the presiding officer in a place of this kind is placed in a very peculiar position. Now, as far as this matter is concerned the house has adopted an amendment, or substitute, offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, completing the Act as far as the house is concerned. It had done all the act it was possible for it to do—completed it—and the Chair was compelled, under the rules we have adopted, to sustain that idea, and rule as he did rule. And consequently the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco was out of order, and could not be entertained by the Chair. I take it that the Chair is right, and I shall sustain him in his position.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: To a certain extent I agree with the gentleman from Trinity. The act of the committee is complete as far as we have gone. That amendment cannot be diminished, cannot be changed, but it can be added to and perfected. Any other rule would seem to me to be contrary to reason. We could not, under such a rule, perfect our work. We cannot change or alter that which has been adopted, but we can add to it, and that is the rule of all parliamentary law.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. TERRY. I give notice that to-morrow I will move to reconsider the vote by which this substitute was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion is, that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I wish to ask a question. The amendment offered by Mr. Webster was offered to the Convention, and, before the vote, a demand was made for a division of the question. Upon that demand the question was divided, and the first part was adopted——

[Cries of "Question;" "question."]

If I am wearying the members of this Convention, it will be the first time in a great many days. I am asking for information, and that is a right conceded to every member on the floor. I ask this question: When the question was divided, and the first part adopted, is not the vote upon the second part next in order; or, is it not? Then an amendment can be offered, and is next in order. Then, upon the rejection or adoption of the second branch, all amendments are cut off. I don't undertake to say whether it is or not. I ask for information.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I rise for the purpose of explaining what the proposition was which I wished to offer. The amendment was, to insert, at the end of the section, a provision making bank directors responsible. I could not offer it before, because, until the other matter was disposed of, I was not able to tell whether I wanted it in the middle or at the end, or whether I wanted it at all. That is exactly the position in which it was put. Now, if that ruling is right, all a man has got to do is to move a thing which he calls a substitute, and have some man call for a division of the question, and the Convention will be tied up. I don't so understand parliamentary law at all. But, to ease the conscience of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, I have stated what the purpose of the amendment was, and I hope he will help get the thieving directors of savings banks out of it. [Applause.]

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman will have no trouble in getting his amendment in in good time. This whole question was discussed when the rules were adopted, and the reason for the rule is this: that when an amendment is adopted, another amendment cannot be considered which will change the judgment of the house, because in that case there would never be an end. I think from what I heard of it that it would be a good provision.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I would like to inquire, after we have gone through with the section, if it would not be in order for the gentleman to offer it as an idependent section?

MR. CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. LARKIN. I move the committee rise.

["No;" "no;" "no."]

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the ground on which he makes the decision. It is a matter of no importance to the Chair. He desires to decide always in accordance with what he understands the law to be. He desires to do justice to every gentleman upon the floor. By the general parliamentary law, when a substitute is offered, the friends of the original measure are at liberty to perfect it by amendment, and get it precisely in the shape they desire, before any vote can be taken upon it. Then the question comes on the substitute. Its friends may then amend it and get it into proper shape, and then the question comes on it. If it passes, it takes the place of the original measure and cannot be further amended. Now, this Convention has adopted a rule treating a substitute as an amendment. But it is still a substitute, and when offered, as it was in this case, by way of a substitute, it is an amendment to the entire section, and was open to amendment to any extent, and on any branch of it. It was discussed, but no amendment was offered. The gentleman called for a division of the question. It was divided, and the two propositions disposed of, one after the other. One was adopted and the other rejected. Then the amendment being adopted took the place of the original section, and was no longer capable of amendment. That is the universal proceeding in parliamentary bodies. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Division being called for, the Chair was sustained—ayes, 82; noes, 53.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. REYNOLDS. I desire to give notice that I am compelled to give before the committee rises——

MR. TERRY. I have already given notice.

MR. REYNOLDS. I give notice that I will, on to-morrow, move a reconsideration of the vote by which the substitute to section three was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, the Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again. What is the pleasure of the Convention?

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at five o'clock P. M., the Convention stood adjourned.

FORTY-SEVENTH DAY.

MEMORIAL.

MR. ESTEE presented the following memorial relative to equal and proportionate representation:

To the Constitutional Convention of the State of California:

The undersigned respectfully presents this petition, requesting the establishment of a more just, equal, proportional, and ample system of representation, and respectfully represents:

1. That the present system does not represent the whole people.
2. That in its practical operations it results in great injustice and inequality.

The Constitution, recognizing equality as the principle of apportionment, requires that representation shall be apportioned according to population (Sec. 14, Art. I), and that an enumeration of the inhabitants shall be taken, under the direction of the Legislature, every ten years, and this enumeration, with the national census, shall serve as the basis of representation in both houses of the Legislature. The number of Assemblymen cannot be less than thirty nor more than eighty (Sec. 29, Art. IV.) The number of Senators not less than one third nor more than one half of the members of the Assembly. (Sec. 6, Art. IV.) The members of Assembly, and one half the Senators, are chosen biennially, at the same time and places, and by the qualified electors of their respective districts (Secs. 3, 5, and 6, Art. IV.) A plurality of votes constitutes a choice (Sec. 20, Art. II.) The Legislature prescribes eighty as the number of Assemblymen, and forty as the number of Senators, and divides the State into forty-eight Assembly Districts and twenty-nine Senatorial Districts. (Statutes 1874-5, page 366, Act of March 16, 1874.)

Thirty-two Assembly Districts elect one Assemblyman each.
Five Assembly Districts elect two Assemblymen each.
Six Assembly Districts elect three Assemblymen each.
Five Assembly Districts elect four Assemblymen each.
Eighteen Senatorial Districts choose one Senator each.
Eleven Senatorial Districts choose two Senators each.

Assembly Districts are composed of one or two counties. Senatorial Districts are composed of one, two, three, four, or five counties. Senatorial Districts consist of one, two, or three Assembly Districts. One Senatorial District is formed of one Assembly District and five Senatorial Districts, or of six Assembly Districts.

San Francisco County is divided into five Senatorial Districts, which are also Assembly Districts. Each Senatorial District having two Senators, biennially chooses one, except three districts, which quadrennially choose two each.

Three Senatorial Districts return one Senator and one Assemblyman each.
Nine Senatorial Districts return one Senator and two Assemblymen each.
Six Senatorial Districts return one Senator and three Assemblymen each.
Four Senatorial Districts return two Senators and three Assemblymen each.
Six Senatorial Districts return two Senators and four Assemblymen each.
One Senatorial District returns two Senators and five Assemblymen each.
Four Assembly Districts return one Assemblyman and one Senator each.
Two Assembly Districts return two Assemblymen and one Senator each.
Three Assembly Districts return three Assemblymen and one Senator each.
Three Assembly Districts return three Assemblymen and two Senators each.
Five Assembly Districts return four Assemblymen and two Senators each.

The Legislature is a representative body. The purposes it is intended to accomplish is to represent the whole people; to lodge the sovereign power of the State in the representatives of the entire constituency, so that the majority of the people may govern. Let us see to what extent our present system accomplishes these purposes. For convenience of illustration, let us assume that there are one hundred and one thousand voters in the State; that the Legislature is composed of one hundred and one members, elected by the State at large; and that there are two political parties. Each party nominates one hundred and one representatives. The A party casts fifty-one thousand votes, and secures all the representatives. The B party casts fifty thousand votes, and is excluded from representation. Fifty-one thousand voters have one hundred and one representatives. Fifty thousand voters are disfranchised, and have not a single representative. Is this just or equal? Is it proportional or reasonable? Voters should have equal rights, equal advantages, and equal representation in a representative government. The majority should receive all the representatives to which it is entitled. The minority should have its just share. Here the majority are exclusively represented. The minority are denied the right of representation. The whole people are not represented. Suffrage is not representation. It is the means of representation. It is sometimes urged that the successful candidate, in theory, represents those who agree with and those who differ from him in political opinions. If there is some truth there is a great deal of falsehood in this theory. In all matters involving differences of sentiments or desires, a sincere political antagonist does not and cannot represent his political adversaries. He endeavors to mold the legislation, control the policy, and direct the destinies of the State, in direct opposition to the views of his adversaries. In practical politics he does more. He seeks to exclude his opponents from ever again possessing a representative voice, or having a share or taking a part in the government of their common country, except the useless privilege, or rather burden, of casting ballots which count for nothing. Political antagonism, partisan animosity, and party intolerance are a sorry substitute for true representation.

The object of free government is not to exclude electors from representation, but to represent all. In this instance fifty-one thousand voters are entitled to fifty-one representatives, and the fifty thousand voters to fifty representatives. If that result could be accomplished, the Legislature would justly and equally represent the entire constituency.

In the legislative houses, the majority of the people, by their representatives, ought to have the right of decision, the right to rule and govern, but ought not to have the exclusive and sole right of representation. The right of decision and the right of representation are distinct, and should not be confounded. The exclusive representation of the majority, afforded by the illustration, is a violation of the primary truths of republican government. As one hundred and one is the number of legislators, fifty-one possess the right of decision; that is, a majority of the majority of the people may exercise the sovereign power of the State. A majority of the majority is commonly a minority of the people. Fifty-one representatives enact a law; fifty vote against it. The fifty-one represent twenty-six thousand voters. The fifty represent twenty-five thousand voters, and fifty thousand voters are unrepresented. Thus, by their representatives, twenty-six thousand voters, a minority of the people, will wield the powers of government and subvert the first principles of democracy, which require that the majority of the State shall rule. To the validity of some legislative acts, a two-thirds vote is required by the Constitution; that is, that the representatives of two thirds of the people must assent. All these representatives only represent a trifle over one half of the people.

The division of the State into local subdivisions or districts to elect representatives is a better system than to elect by the State at large. It is better, because the minority of the State may be in the majority in some local subdivisions, and thereby obtain some share of representation. This is one of the great advantages of representative districts They generally represent more of the people. Yet the district system sometimes yields similar results, disfranchising voters and enabling the minority to exercise the sovereign power of the community.

The following are some of the instructive examples presented by published returns of elections:

MARYLAND. Governor's vote for 1867—Democratic, 63,602; percentage of total vote, 74.38. Republican, 21,890; percentage of total vote, 25 62. Legislature—Democrats, Senate, 24; House, 86; total, 110. Republicans, Senate, 0; House, 0; total, 0.

Ordinarily in an extended and fair election of representatives, not less than forty per cent. of the voters are unrepresented, and it may amount to nearly one half. Two of every five, forty of every one hundred voters, are disfranchised. These unrepresented voters are the aggregate of the minorities, irrespective of politics, in the different districts. In State elections, the numbers rise into thousands, and in congressional elections throughout the Union, into millions. The following percentage of the total vote cast, received by candidates for President, fairly shows how near equally the voters commonly divide:

The total popular vote at the Presidential election of eighteen hundred and seventy-six was eight million four hundred and twelve thousand seven hundred and thirty-three. In Congress and in the Legislatures the unrepresented voters, or forty per cent. of this vote, is three million three hundred and sixty-five thousand and ninety-three. The population of our country at the commencement of the Revolutionary War in seventeen hundred and seventy-six is frequently estimated in round numbers at three millions. The census of seventeen hundred and ninety shows three million nine hundred and twenty-nine thousand two hundred and fourteen; of this population, the women, children, and non-voters, at the lowest reasonable estimate, must have composed two thirds of it. Our Declaration of Independence asserts that the people's right of representation in the Legislature is "a right inestimable to them, and formidable to tyrants only"

The vice of our present method of election denies more people the right of representation than could have been deprived of that right by the tyranny of the British King.

In the election of legislators in representative districts the results are unjust, unequal, and a denial of representation to a large part of the electors of the district. It excessively over-represents majorities, and thereby an unsafe and undue proportion of power is accumulated in their hands. Let us assume that representation is apportioned equally according to voters.

The district returning one legislator has one thousand voters.
The district returning two legislators has two thousand voters.
The district returning three legislators has three thousand voters.
The district returning four legislators has four thousand voters.
The district returning five legislators has five thousand voters.
The district returning six legislators has six thousand voters.
The following may be the result of an election:

Five hundred and fifty voters secure one representative. Four hundred and fifty voters have no representation.

One thousand and fifty voters secure two representatives. Nine hundred and fifty voters have no representation.

One thousand five hundred and fifty voters secure three representatives. One thousand four hundred and fifty voters have no representation.

Two thousand and fifty voters secure four representatives. One thousand nine hundred and fifty voters have no representation.

Two thousand five hundred and fifty voters secure five representatives. Two thousand four hundred and fifty voters have no representation.

Three thousand and fifty voters secure six representatives. Two thousand nine hundred and fifty voters have no representation.

The ratio of representation in this instance is one thousand voters; and when the minority consists of one thousand or more voters, it is reasonable and equitable that the minority should receive some representation. Three thousand and fifty voters have six representatives; two thousand nine hundred and fifty not one. The two thousand nine hundred and fifty voters are interested, as well as the three thousand and fifty voters, in the happiness of free government, and can any good reason be assigned, consistent with justice and equality, why they should not have some representation, for the general welfare and their own security. The majority of a district should not be exclusively represented, unless it is substantially the entire people of the district.

When the minority is so large as to constitute a substantial part of the district constituency, it is entitled to some representation.

From these considerations, it seems obvious, that to substantially represent the whole people, they must be represented in parts, and that every substantial part must be represented. To accomplish these results, some additional provision seems necessary to represent large minorities, irrespective of politics in legislative districts. It requires but little application of thought to satisfy the mind of the difficulties inherent in the very nature of the subject, and which in practice obstruct the application of the principles of justice and equality. If a perfect system cannot be devised, let us have representation as substantial and as equal as practical politics will permit.

In this State, when the Election Board of a precinct, consisting of an Inspector and two Judges, was chosen by the people, a voter was not permitted to vote for the three. He could vote for the Inspector and only one Judge, and the three highest in votes were elected. By this method the majority and the minority of a precinct secured representation in the Board. It was more just to have both parties represented, and more useful to secure fairness and purity, than to have the majority elect all because it was the majority. This mode of electing such Boards exists in other States. The Act of March, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, of New York, regulating the election of delegates to a Constitutional Convention, provides for district delegates, and also thirty-two delegates to be chosen by the State at large, and that no elector shall vote for more than sixteen of the delegates at large.

An amendment of eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, to the Constitution of New York, provided for the election of seven Judges of the Court of Appeals, and that every elector may vote for the chief and only four of the associate Judges.

The Act of April, eighteen hundred and seventy-two, of Pennsylvania, for the election of delegates to a Constitutional Convention, provides for the election of twenty-eight delegates by the State at large, and that an elector shall vote for not more than fourteen; that twenty-eight districts shall elect three delegates each, and no elector shall vote for more than two; that one district shall elect nine, and no elector shall vote for more than six; that one district shall elect six, and no elector shall vote for more than four; and that the City of Philadelphia shall elect at large six additional delegates, and no elector shall vote for more than three.

In England, in the election of members of the House of Commons, in a constituency which returns three members, an elector can only vote for two, and in a district which returns four members, an elector can only vote for three. Other means have been suggested and other modes adopted to lessen the imperfections of the present system. Of these may be mentioned the "cumulative vote" in the election of legislators in Illinois, and in town elections in Pennsylvania. In February, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, in this State, our Civil Code, section three hundred and seven, was amended, authorizing the "cumulative vote" in the selection of directors of private corporations.

Your petitioner respectfully submits the following as embodying a plan which seems to your petitioner will secure better results than the existing method:

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall apportion the State every ten years, beginning with the year ——, by dividing the qualified electors of the State by the number of Assemblymen, and the quotient shall be the ratio of representation in the Assembly. The State shall be divided into a number of Assembly Districts, each of which shall contain, as nearly as practicable, three times the ratio of electors, and shall consist of contiguous and compact territory. Three members of the Assembly shall be elected in each Assembly District at each general legislative election.

SEC. 2. In the election of three members of the Assembly in an Assembly District, each qualified elector of the Assembly District may vote for three persons, as follows: two persons shall be designated and voted for as "Assemblymen," and one person shall be designated and voted for as "Third Assemblyman." The three candidates highest in votes who have been designated and voted for as "Assemblymen" (excluding in this case those candidates designated and voted for as "Third Assemblymen"), shall be declared elected in the event that each of said highest candidates receives a number of votes equal to or more than one third of the ballots cast. In all other cases, in determining the result of the election all the candidates shall be included, and the three candidates highest in votes shall be declared elected. In the case of an equality of votes preventing an election, the Assembly of which the successful candidates will be members shall, in open public session, select from those candidates whose equal votes prevent an election the candidate or candidates who shall be declared elected.

SEC. 3. Each Senatorial District shall be formed of contiguous and compact territory, and shall consist of two Assembly Districts, and shall elect three Senators. The Senatorial Districts shall be numbered in regular order, commencing with one at one end of the State and ending at the other. The Senators shall be divided into two classes, so that one class shall be elected at each general legislative election Those elected in districts bearing odd numbers shall constitute a class, and those elected in districts bearing even numbers shall constitute a class. In the election of three members of the Senate in a Senatorial District, each qualified elector of the Senatorial District may vote for three persons, as follows. two persons shall be designated and voted for as "Senators," and one person shall be designated and voted for as "Third Senator" The same principles shall be applied in the election of three Senators in a Senatorial District, as prevails in the election of three members of the Assembly in an Assembly District, and the result of the election shall be determined in the same manner. In case of an equality of votes preventing an election, the Senate shall select the candidate or candidates to be declared elected in the same manner as the Assembly.

Ordinarily the minor part of a district forms from one third to nearly one half of the voters. Three representatives are selected for a district so that this one third may equal the ratio of representation, and therefore be clearly, in justice, entitled to a representative. Assuming there are three thousand voters in a district, the minority will elect one representative when it consists of one thousand voters or more; that is, from one thousand to one thousand four hundred and ninety-nine voters. When there is one or two vacancies to be filled in a district, the present system prevails.

There are only two novelties in this plan, and they are simple, easily understood, and practicable. The first is the provision that the minority shall not be represented unless it constitutes a substantial part—one third—of the electors. If a minority of one or an insignificant or inconsiderable number of men had a representative, it would be unequal and unjust to the majority. There is another consideration which may be deemed entitled to some weight. In case no limitation is imposed requiring the minority to consist of a certain proportion of the electors to obtain a representative, the majority, when great, confident of its strength, and willing to risk the result on a division of its strength, may divide and secure all the representatives. For example, in the event of a minority of six hundred voters, two thousand four hundred voters may form in two divisions of one thousand two hundred voters, and each division vote for two different sets of candidates, and thereby the three candidates highest in votes would be the candidates of the majority, and the majority would elect all the representatives. This provision avoids any necessity of thus dividing.

The second is the provision that in the event that the minority is not entitled to a representative, the majority elects all.

Of the treasures of human experience, those political truths are of the greatest intrinsic value which teach mankind that the division of power and checks are the wisest expedients for the attainment of good government. This is illustrated in the division of the sovereign power into executive, legislative, and judiciary departments; the division of the legislative power into two houses, each constituting a check and balance to the other; the requirement of executive approval of the acts of legislation, and a two-thirds vote to overrule the veto, and the numerous divisions of power in the State The plan herein submitted applies these principles. It divides power and distributes it among the people throughout the State, upon the principles of justice and equality, and supplies additional checks in the structure of the Legislature itself against its abuse of power. It is a common practice in both houses to refer proposed local legislation to the local delegation, which sometimes consists of one member. One-man power is necessary and useful in a great many public trusts, but one-man power in legislation is dangerous. If the delegation is composed of three we gain the advantages of the investigation of the subject by three independent minds, and secure the benefits and wisdom of deliberation and counsel. If one of the delegation represents the minority we have an additional check against abuse.

To represent fully the people, both houses of the Legislature should consist of ample numbers. They should not be so large as to suffer from the confusion, passions, and disadvantages of a multitude, nor so small as to be the mere skeleton of representation. The proper numbers to be designated for any particular State is a subject admitting of great diversities of opinion. The House of Representatives of Massachusetts consists of two hundred and forty members; our national House of Representatives, of two hundred and ninety-two; and the English House of Commons of six hundred and fifty-eight. Under our present Constitution the Assembly may consist of not less than thirty nor more than eighty members, and the Senate, of not less than ten nor more than forty members.

The abuses of legislative power, in regard to the general welfare, are principally for two purposes, that is: to secure the passage of injurious legislation, and to prevent the enactment of beneficial legislation. To accomplish the first, both houses must be controlled. To accomplish the second, one house only need be controlled. If our Senate consisted of ten members, six could control it. As it now consists of forty members, twenty-one can rule it. Now it is easier to corrupt the integrity of six or twenty-one men than of two hundred men. This observation evinces the resistance which numbers present to corruption. The larger the numbers, the greater the opportunities of disclosure, and the more powerful the fear of detection. Small bodies offer great temptations, solicit intrigue, and invite the bribes of unscrupulous greed and shameless ambition. When the inconveniences of a multitude are avoided, as we diminish the numbers we destroy the substance, and approach the shadow of representation—we desert safety and approach insecurity.

There is no desire to cast reproach upon any representative body for the unfaithful administration of its high trust, but candor obliges us to admit that the lessons of experience afforded by the history of our State, instructs us that both branches of the Legislature are too deficient in numbers for purity or sound government. As these vile and infamous practices are evils to which small bodies are heirs, it would seem to be the part of wise patriotism in the organization of our legislative department to apply the principle that numbers constitute a salutary check and barrier to these vices, and construct both houses of ample numbers. It is true that increased numbers will augment the expenses of this department. A well constructed Legislature is a matter of the first magnitude to society; its importance is so transcendant to the guardianship of the interests, the maintenance of the rights, the redress of the grievances, and the promotion of the welfare of the community, that the increased expense of additional representatives is a consideration entitled to little weight.

It would be preferable to lessen the compensation of legislators, or to permit the honor and services to one's country to be the reward, than to have the houses too small.

It would be worse than folly to disregard the admonitions of experience and permit the impulses of political parsimony to form legislative houses with such limited numbers as to be unsafe depositaries of the interests of the people—houses so deficient as to be the prey of ringsters and corruptionists—the scourge and disgrace of the commonwealth. Large numbers more fully represent the different interests, general or local, of the entire constituency, and have more sympathy for the public welfare.

Your petitioner believes that the subject has just claims to your attention, and respectfully requests its consideration by the Convention, so that some plan may be devised to remedy or lessen the injustice, inequalities, and vices of the present system.

DAVIS LOUDERBACK.

REPORTS.

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco, presented the following report from the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Departmemt:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, to whom were referred resolutions, amendments, proposals, etc., numbers three, nine, ten (twice), twelve, fifteen, twenty-one, twenty-seven, thirty, thirty-one, forty-two, fifty-seven, sixty-five, seventy-six, eighty-five, eighty-nine, one hundred and fifty-six, one hundred and seventy-four, one hundred and eighty, one hundred and eighty-three, one hundred and eighty-nine, one hundred and ninety, one hundred and ninety-four, two hundred and eight, two hundred and twenty-two, two hundred and forty-five, two hundred and forty-six, two hundred and forty-nine, two hundred and sixty-two, two hundred and sixty-three, two hundred and seventy-two, two hundred and seventy-four, two hundred and seventy five, two hundred and ninety-one, three hundred and ten, three hundred and forty-eight, three hundred and sixty-five, three hundred and sixty-seven, three hundred and eighty-six, three hundred and ninety-nine, four hundred and four, four hundred and twenty-six, four hundred and forty-two, four hundred and fifty-five, and four hundred and fifty-seven, beg leave to report that they have considered the same, and recommend that they be not adopted.

So much of such proposed amendments as your committee have approved are, in a modified form, contained in the judiciary system which accompanies this report.

We have the honor to submit and recommend its adoption as article six of the Constitution and the judicial department.

S. M. WILSON, Chairman.

November 12th, 1878.

ARTICLE VI.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The judicial power of the State shall be vested in the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment, in a Supreme Court, Superior Courts, Justices of the Peace, and such inferior Courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, or city and county.

SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and six Associate Justices. The Court may sit in departments and in bank, and shall always be open for the transaction of business. There shall be two departments, denominated, respectively, Department One and Department Two. The Chief Justice shall assign three of the Associate Justices to each department, and such assignment may be changed by him from time to time. The Associate Justices shall be competent to sit in either department, and may interchange with each other by agreement among themselves or as ordered by the Chief Justice. Each of the departments shall have the power to hear and determine causes and all questions arising therein, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained in relation to the Court in bank. The presence of three Justices shall be necessary to transact any business in either of the departments, except such as may be done at chambers, and the concurrence of three Justices shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment. The Chief Justice shall apportion the business to the departments, and may, in his discretion, order any cause pending before the Court to be heard and decided by the Court in bank. The order may be made before or after judgment pronounced by a department; but where a cause has been allotted to one of the departments, and a judgment pronounced thereon, the order must be made within thirty days after such judgment, and concurred in by two Associate Justices, and if so made it shall have the effect to vacate and set aside the judgment. If the order be not made within the time above limited, the judgment shall be final. No judgment by a department shall become final until the expiration of the period of thirty days aforesaid, unless approved by the Chief Justice, in writing, with the concurrence of two Associate Justices. The Chief Justice may convene the Court in bank at any time, and shall be the presiding Justice of the Court when so convened. The concurrence of four Justices present at the argument shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment in bank; but if four Justices, so present, do not concur in a judgment, then all the Justices qualified to sit in the cause shall hear the argument; but to render a judgment a concurrence of four Judges shall be necessary. In the determination of causes, all decisions of the Court in bank or in departments shall be given in writing, and the grounds of the decision shall be stated. The Chief Justice may sit in either department, and shall preside when so sitting, but the Justices assigned to each department shall select one of their number as presiding Justice. All sessions of the Court, whether in bank or in departments, shall be held at the Capital of the State. In case of the absence of the Chief Justice from the place at which the Court is held, or his inability to act, the Associate Justices shall select one of their own number to perform the duties and exercise the powers of the Chief Justice during such absence or inability to act.

SEC. 3. The Chief Justice and the Associate Justices shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at large, at the general State elections, at the times and places that State officers are elected; and the term of office shall be twelve years, from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election; provided, that the six Associate Justices elected at the first election shall, at their first meeting, so classify themselves by lot, that two of them shall go out of office at the end of four years, two of them at the end of eight years, and two of them at the end of twelve years, and an entry of such classification shall be made in the minutes of the Court in bank, signed by them, and a duplicate thereof shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State. If a vacancy occur in the office of a Justice, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Justice to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Justice so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term. The first election of the Justices shall be at the first general election after the adoption and ratification of this Constitution.

SEC. 4. The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars; also in cases of forcible entry and detainer, and in all such probate matters as may be provided by law; also in all criminal cases amounting to felony, on questions of law alone. The Court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, and habeas corpus, and also all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Each of the Justices shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus to any part of the State, upon petition by or on behalf of any person held in actual custody, and may make such writs returnable before himself, or the Supreme Court, or before any Superior Court in the State, or before any Judge thereof.

SEC. 5. The Superior Courts shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity, and in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and in all other cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars, and in all criminal cases amounting to felony, and cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for; also, in actions of forcible entry and detainer, of proceedings in insolvency, of actions to prevent or abate a nuisance; also, of all matters of probate, and, also, of divorce and for annulment of marriage, and all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for. And said Courts shall have the power of naturalization, and to issue papers therefor. They shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in Justices' and other inferior Courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law. Said Courts shall be always open (legal holidays and non-judicial days excepted), and their original jurisdiction shall extend to all parts of the State. Said Courts, and their Judges, shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, on petition by or on behalf of any person in actual custody, in their respective counties.

SEC. 6. There shall be in each of the organized counties, or cities and counties, of the State, a Superior Court, for each of which at least one Judge shall be elected by the qualified electors of the county, or city and county, at the general State election; provided, that in the City and County of San Francisco there shall be elected twelve Judges of the Superior Court, any one or more of whom may hold Court. There may be as many sessions of said Court, at the same time, as there are Judges thereof. The said Judges shall choose from their own number a presiding Judge, who may be removed at their pleasure. He shall distribute the business of the Court among the Judges thereof, and prescribe the order of business. The judgments, orders, and proceedings of any session of the Superior Court, held by any one or more of the Judges of said Courts, respectively, shall be equally effectual as if all the Judges of said respective Courts presided at such session. In each of the Counties of Sacramento, Los Angeles, and Alameda, there shall be elected two such Judges. The term of office of Judges of the Superior Courts shall be six years, from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election; provided, that the twelve Judges of the Superior Court, elected in the City and County of San Francisco at the first election held under this Constitution, shall, at their first meeting, so classify themselves, by lot, that four of them shall go out of office at the end of two years, and four of them shall go out of office at the end of four years, and four of them shall go out of office at the end of six years, and an entry of such classification shall be made in the minutes of the Court, signed by them, and a duplicate thereof filed in the office of the Secretary of State. The first election of Judges of the Superior Courts shall take place at the first general election held after the adoption and ratification of this Constitution. If a vacancy occur in the office of Judge of a Superior Court, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Judge to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Judge so elected shall hold office for the remainder of the unexpired term.

SEC. 7. In any county, or city and county, other than the City and County of San Francisco, in which there shall be more than one Judge of the Superior Court, the Judges of such Court may hold as many sessions of said Court at the same time as there are Judges thereof, and shall apportion the business among themselves as equally as may be.

SEC. 8. A Judge of any Superior Court may hold a Superior Court in any county, at the request of a Judge of the Superior Court thereof, and upon the request of the Governor it shall be his duty so to do.

SEC. 9. The Legislature shall have no power to grant leave of absence to any judicial officer; and any such officer who shall absent himself from the State for more than sixty consecutive days shall be deemed to have forfeited his office. The Legislature of the State may at any time, two thirds of the members of the Senate and two thirds of the members of the Assembly voting therefor, increase or diminish the number of Judges of the Superior Court in any county, or city and county, in the State; provided, that no such reduction shall affect any Judge who has been elected.

SEC. 10. Justices of the Supreme Court, and Judges of the Superior Courts, may be removed by concurrent resolution of both houses of the Legislature, adopted by a two-third vote of each house. All other judicial officers, except Justices of the Peace, may be removed by the Senate on the recommendation of the Governor, but no removal shall be made by virtue of this section, unless the cause thereof be entered on the Journal, or unless the party complained of has been served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have had an opportunity of being heard in his defense. On the question of removal, the ayes and noes shall be entered on the Journal.

SEC. 11. There shall be one Justice of the Peace elected in each township in the State, and the Legislature shall determine the number of Justices of the Peace to be elected in each incorporated city and town, or city and county, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of Justices of the Peace; provided, such powers shall not in any case trench upon the jurisdiction of the several Courts of record, except that said Justices shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Superior Courts in cases of forcible entry and detainer, where the rental value does not exceed twenty-five dollars per month, and where the whole amount of damages claimed does not exceed two hundred dollars.

SEC. 12. The Supreme Court, the Superior Courts, and such other Courts as the Legislature shall prescribe, shall be Courts of record.

SEC. 13. The Legislature shall fix by law the jurisdiction of any inferior Courts which may be established in pursuance of section one of this article, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the Judges thereof.

SEC. 14. The Legislature shall provide for the election of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, and other necessary officers, and shall fix by law their duties and compensation. County Clerks shall be ex officio Clerks of the Courts of record in and for their respective counties, or cities and counties. The Legislature may also provide for the appointment by the several Superior Courts of one or more Commissioners in their respective counties, or cities and counties, with authority to perform chamber business of the Judges of the Superior Courts, to take depositions, and perform such other business connected with the administration of justice as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 15. No judicial officer, except Justices of the Peace and Court Commissioners, shall receive to his own use any fees or perquisites of office.

SEC. 16. The Legislature shall provide for the speedy publication of such opinions of the Supreme Court as it may deem expedient, and all opinions shall be free for publication by any person.

SEC. 17. The Justices of the Supreme Court and Judges of the Superior Courts shall severally, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive from the State treasury, for their services, a compensation which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected. During the term of the first Judges elected under this Constitution, the annual salaries of the Justices of the Supreme Court shall be six thousand dollars each. The Superior Judges shall be divided into four classes: those of the City and County of San Francisco, and of the Counties of Alameda, San Joaquin, Los Angeles, Santa Clara, Sacramento, and Sonoma, shall constitute the first class, and shall each receive an annual salary of five thousand dollars, payable quarterly; those of the Counties of Butte, El Dorado, Amador, Colusa, Contra Costa, Humboldt, Mendocino, Monterey, Napa, Nevada, Placer, Santa Cruz, Solano, Tulare, Yolo, Kern, Yuba, and San Bernardino, shall constitute the second class, and shall receive an annual salary of four thousand dollars each, payable quarterly; those of the Counties of Calaveras, Fresno, Lake, Marin, Merced, Plumas, San Benito, San Diego, San Luis Obispo, San Mateo, Santa Barbara, Sierra, Shasta, Siskiyou, Stanislaus, Sutter, Tehama, Tuolumne, and Ventura, shall constitute the third class, and receive an annual salary of three thousand dollars each, payable quarterly; and those of all other counties of the State, not above enumerated, shall constitute the fourth class, and receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars each, payable quarterly.

SEC. 18. The Justices of the Supreme Court, and the Judges of the Superior Courts, shall be ineligible to any other office than a judicial office during the term for which they shall have been elected.

SEC. 19. Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law.

SEC. 20. The style of all process shall be, "The People of the State of California," and all prosecutions shall be conducted in their name and by their authority.

SEC. 21. The Justices shall appoint a Reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court, who shall hold his office and be removable at their pleasure. He shall receive an annual salary of twenty-five hundred dollars, payable quarterly.

SEC. 22. The Judges and Justices of the Peace shall not practice law in any Court of the State during their continuance in office.

SEC. 23. A Grand Jury shall be composed of twelve jurors, and a concurrence of nine shall be necessary to the making of a presentment or the finding of an indictment.

SEC. 24. No one shall be eligible to the office of Justice of the Supreme Court unless he be at least thirty-five years of age, and shall have been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the State; and no one shall be eligible to the office of Judge of a Superior Court unless he be at least thirty years of age, and shall have been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the State.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. President: That article is a long one, and I move that the reading of it be dispensed with.

THE PRESIDENT. Under Rule Fifty-three the report must be read.

MR. BELCHER. I move that the rule be suspended.

THE PRESIDENT. The rule cannot be suspended. It must be read.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: I think it could be dispensed with by the unanimous consent of the Convention. Any rule, I think, can be suspended by unanimous consent.

[Cries of "Read," "read."]

THE SECRETARY read the entire report, as above.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: On account of the importance of this report, and the interest which a large number of men throughout the State take in it, I move that double the usual number of copies be printed, and five copies be placed upon the desk of each member.

Carried, by an affirmative vote of eighty-seven, on a division.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

MR. EAGON, from the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, made the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on the Right of Suffrage, to whom were referred proposed amendments numbers twenty, twenty-six, thirty nine, forty-two, forty-six, sixty-two, eighty, ninety seven, ninety-eight, one hundred and eight, one hundred and forty-five, one hundred and sixty-one, one hundred and sixty-three, one hundred and eighty-six, one hundred and ninety-six, one hundred and ninety-nine, two hundred, two hundred and seventy-seven, two hundred and ninety-five, three hundred and six, three hundred and thirty-one, three hundred and forty-three, three hundred and fifty-eight, and four hundred and seventy-three, and resolutions numbers thirteen and twenty, have had the same under consideration, and report them back, and recommend that the Convention take no further action on the same.

The committee herewith submit a draft for article two of the Constitution, on the right of suffrage, and recommend its adoption. All the changes proposed will be found in section one. The word "white," in the present Constitution, is omitted, as are also the words, "and every white male citizen of Mexico who shall have elected to become a citizen of the United States under the treaty of peace exchanged and ratified at Queretaro, on the thirteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and forty-eight."

The following words are also omitted: "Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the Legislature, by a two-thirds concurrent vote, from admitting to the right of suffrage Indians, or the descendants of Indians, in such special cases as such a proportion of the legislative body may deem just and proper."

A clause has been inserted requiring naturalized citizens to procure their naturalization papers ninety days prior to an election before they can vote. All citizens are required to be residents of the State one year, instead of six months, as at present in the Constitution, and must reside in an election district ninety days, instead of thirty days, preceding an election before they can vote.

Section five of the present Constitution has been incorporated in section one of the draft herewith submitted. A provision has also been inserted to give the Legislature the power to remove all disabilities to exercise the elective franchise on account of sex.

The remaining sections proposed are the same as in the present Constitution.

ARTICLE II.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

SECTION 1. Every native male citizen of the United States, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the election district in which he claims his vote ninety days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law; provided, that no idiot, insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector; provided, that the Legislature may by law remove in whole, or in part, the disabilities to exercise the elective franchise on account of sex.

SEC. 2. Electors shall in all cases, except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest on the days of election, during their attendance at such election, going to and returning therefrom.

SEC. 3. No elector shall be obliged to perform militia duty on the day of election, except in time of war or public danger.

SEC. 4. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State or of the United States, or of the high seas; nor while a student at any seminary of learning; nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum, at public expense; nor while confined in any public prison.

SEC. 5. All elections by the people shall be by ballot.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. President: As a member of the Committee on Right of Suffrage I desire to present a minority report, and ask that the report of the majority lie upon the table until the minority report is presented, that both may be printed together.

Carried.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

MR. BELCHER, from the Committee on Labor and Capital, made the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT: The Committee on Labor and Capital respectfully report that they have had under consideration resolution number seven, introduced by Mr. Condon, and propositions number one hundred and twenty-eight, introduced by Mr. Joyce; number two hundred and thirty two, introduced by Mr. Wellin; number three hundred and ninety-six, introduced by Mr. Condon, and number four hundred and seventy-one, introduced by Mr. Howard, and they herewith report the same back, and recommend that they be not adopted.

They have also had under consideration proposition number ninety-nine, introduced by Mr. Farrell, and herewith report the same back, and recommend that it be referred to the Committee on Legislative Department.

I. S. BELCHER, Chairman.

November 13th, 1878.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations.

MR. REYNOLDS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the motion for one moment. I have a proposition that I desire to have referred and printed.

MR. ESTEE. I withdraw the motion temporarily.

MR. REYNOLDS. As the Convention will probably go into Committee of the Whole for some time, I ask general consent to introduce an amendment and have it referred and printed.

There being no objection, Mr. Reynolds introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, concerning GAS AND WATER COMPANIES.

SECTION 1. In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with artificial light and water, any company duly incorporated by the laws of this State shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets of said city, have the privilege of disturbing and using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and of making connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gaslight or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, for which the same or either may be used, upon the conditions following: Such company shall make good all damages to such streets and thoroughfares, except necessarily occasioned by the reasonable use thereof, and be liable to such city and its inhabitants therefor. Such company introducing and supplying gaslight or other light, and fresh water, or either, shall furnish the same, so far as necessary and required, free and without charge, to all public buildings, institutions, and school houses belonging to such city and used for municipal purposes; and such company introducing and supplying water shall also furnish the same, free and without charge, to the Fire Department, and for the extinguishment of fires. Each company, its property and franchise, shall be liable to such city and its inhabitants for the performance of these conditions.

Referred to the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

CLASSIFYING LAND FOR ASSESSMENT.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara, introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to the classification of land for assessments:

SECTION 1. For the purpose of defraying the charges and expenses incident to the administration of government, the inhabitants and property within the State shall be assessed and taxed according to its uniform and equal rates. Property shall be taxed according to its value, to be ascertained in the manner herein prescribed. The objects of taxation shall be lands, tenements, and hereditaments, capital invested in corporations or associations, franchises, stocks in trade, moneys deposited or loaned at interest, valid debts of all kinds, personal property of every kind, auctioneers, brokers, peddlers, retailers of spirituous or other liquors, commission merchants, and male inhabitants over twenty-one and not exceeding sixty years.

SEC. 2. The lands subject to taxation shall be divided into not less than five classes, upon each of which a valuation shall be fixed by law, the minimum whereof shall not be less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. The lands in the several counties shall be assessed and apportioned according to its productive quality and situation, by persons appointed for that purpose, once in every four years, and the value thereof shall be set down and classed separately, and said lands shall be taxed for the succeeding four years according to the said valuation. But no tax shall ever be levied upon growing crops of any kind.

SEC. 3. City, town, and village lots with improvements thereon shall form a separate class of taxable property, and shall be valued annually. Capital invested in corporations, franchises, stock in trade, money, or money loaned at interest, or valid debts, and personal property, shall each form a separate class, and shall be valued annually. Auctioneers, peddlers, brokers, commission merchants, retailers of spirituous or other liquors, shall be taxed as the Legislature may direct.

SEC. 4. Every male inhabitant over twenty-one and not exceeding sixty years shall pay an annual tax not exceeding ——.

Referred to the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

REPORTS OF THE PROCEEDINGS.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. President: Before we go into Committee of the Whole, I desire to make a motion, and I make it at the request of a number of gentlemen who voted to lay a certain report upon the table. They desired me to make the motion to take it from the table. I move that the report of the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses, relative to inquiring into the expediency of procuring an official report of the proceedings of this Convention, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Reporting and Printing, to report thereon. That involves no discussion, and I ask to make this motion at the request of a number of gentlemen who voted to lay the report upon the table.

MR. CROSS. I second the motion.

MR. HILBORN. Is that report on the table? Was not the report of the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses adopted?

MR. McCALLUM. It was laid on the table.

MR. HILBORN. My recollection is otherwise; but if I am wrong, I am wrong.

THE PRESIDENT. The resolution in relation to phonographic reporting was laid on the table. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. President: I wish to say a word upon this subject. Some time since a resolution was offered here, which it will be found is substantially to this effect: that if the reporting could be obtained on terms satisfactory to the Convention, that there should be an official report of the proceedings of this Convention; and further, that that be referred to the Committee on Reporting and Printing, to ascertain upon what terms such reporting could be had. That was referred to the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses. They reported to the Convention, and the Convention laid the report from that committee on the table. This is not a resolution to employ an official reporter, but a resolution that the Committee on Reporting and Printing will report upon certain points which they had neglected, or failed to report upon before. Also, what it would cost to transcribe and print, and to lay the printed copies upon the desks of members every morning. I have become impressed very seriously with a fact that has no doubt impressed a good many other members of this Convention, and that is, that in order that our work may appear fairly before the public, it is necessary that there should be an official report of what is said here in the debates. It is no secret to this Convention how this thing is being done now. The only report of the proceedings which goes forth is that published in one paper, and I do not know that it is improper to state the fact that those speeches are reported and printed in full, which are paid for at so much per column. The others are not so reported. Rich men in this Convention can have their speeches reported and go forth to the public; but those who cannot afford to pay for it, cannot have their speeches reported. That is the position the question occupies to-day. It may be, as some say, that the paper so reporting is not so generally taken as some others, but it is true that it is the only paper which does purport to give anything like correct reports of the proceedings. That sends forth to the people of this State the reasons for what is done here, and the reasons will go forth upon one side, and none of the reasons upon the other, except so far as the other side may be able to pay for transcribing them and printing them. I say that it affects the whole work of this Convention. People are looking to what is done here, and to the reasons for it, and from what they read they judge of it. The newspapers throughout the State take ideas of what is done here from the same reports I have alluded to. They are not a mirror of what transpires here, but a representation of what transpires on one side. I am satisfied—and I make no reflection upon the gentlemen who can afford to pay for their speeches—for I believe that they have voted for official reporters from the beginning; but I say to the others, who cannot afford it, as this is to go to the people of the State in some shape, I propose, at any rate, that the Committee on Reporting and Printing shall have an opportunity to say upon what terms we can have these reports. The Committee on Judiciary have said that this expense does not even come out of the appropriation of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the expenses of the Convention. If our Committee on Judiciary are right it does not affect this appropriation at all, and even if they are wrong, it does not affect the percentage but a little more on the script which will be paid to members after perhaps a few weeks more, than otherwise would be the case. My point is well illustrated in a very recent publication. In this morning's paper one speech is printed in full and none of the others. We may expect the newspapers to print just such portions of the debates as they see fit. They will do it, and they have got the right to do it. In any other case gentlemen can pay for it, as I suppose this has been done this morning. At least I understand that is the rule. Now, I want to know whether this is the manner in which our proceedings are to go forth to the public. I ask for a full vote upon the question. I hope that gentlemen will vote one way or the other.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. President: I voted against the proposition of the gentleman, and I expect to continue to vote against it. My reasons are these: This Convention has spent three or four days in discussing the proposition of reporting the proceedings of this Convention, when it was up before the house. They arrived at nothing. The matter is now dead, and so far as I am concerned, I propose letting it remain dead by leaving it on the table. If the gentlemen here in this Convention want their speeches reported, they have my permission to pay for them. One reason why I should vote against an official report of the proceedings now, if the matter was again before me, is that I have ascertained that there are gentlemen who speak so long and so often that I am opposed to paying for their speeches. It would not be fair at all to have it come out of the fund that is appropriated to pay the expenses of this Convention. There are some of us that do not speak any, who would have to pay the expense of the other gentlemen's speeches.

MR. TERRY. I suggest that the members have twenty dollars apiece for speeches.

The motion was lost on a division, by a vote of 44 ayes to 91 noes.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

MR. FREUD introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution relative to civil service reform:

"No assessment for political purposes on officers or subordinates in any department of the State should be allowed, and no subordinate should ever be removed from office for political reasons."

Referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

TAXATION OF LAND.

MR. VACQUEREL introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, entitled a resolution to facilitate the taxation of lands, and to prevent any fraud by the collector of such taxes:

"All lands in the State of California shall hereafter be divided into four sections, as follows: First, agricultural lands, either improved or unimproved; second, pastural lands; third, timber lands; fourth, unproductive lands.

"It shall be the duty of each County Surveyor to survey, inspect, and classify in said sections, all the lands in his county, and report to the Surveyor-General, specifying the number of acres of each class of land in said county.

"Whenever any land, classified under any of the preceding sections, shall, either by improvements, or by the will of its owner, be used for other purposes than the one specified in the surveyor's report, it will then be subject to be classified in any other section to which it will then properly belong. The Surveyor-General will then make a report of all counties, and forward it to the Legislature; and it shall be the duty of the Legislature, after the reception of said report, to enact a law, taxing uniformly through the State, all lands of the same classification, and no land to be exempted from taxation unless it belongs to the State, or to the United States Government. The collector of taxes in each county shall furnish sufficient bonds or securities, before he can perform any of his duties, for the amount of money that taxes upon land should bring according to the pro rata established by the Legislature.

"Said collector will furnish semi-annually a statement of all lands taxed in the county, their rate of taxation, and the total sum paid until date, and if the receipt does not balance with the amount due by the taxpayers, he shall be held personally accountable and responsible for all sums less than said amount, according to the number of acres, in their relative sections, subject to taxation in the county.

"Whenever any State or Government land shall become the possession of any individual or corporation, said land shall be surveyed, classified, and subject to the rates of taxation asserted by the Legislature, and the Tax Collector shall have power to collect such taxes without any special legislation.

"Non-payment of taxes on land for a certain length of time, to be specified by the Legislature, shall be a forfeiture of said land in favor of the State."

Referred to Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

AMENDMENT TO RULE.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I desire to give notice that as soon as occasion offers, after to-day, I shall move to amend Rules Twenty-one and Thirty-two. I send up the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend Rule Twenty-one: Strike out all after the word 'deemed,' in the third line, and add the following: 'divisible; and a motion to strike out on a division being negatived, or a motion to insert being decided in the affirmative, shall be equivalent to agreeing to the matter in that form, but shall not preclude further amendment; provided, that substitutes for pending propositions shall, for the purposes of amendment, be treated as original propositions.'

"Amend Rule Thirty-two to read as follows: 'Substitutes for pending propositions shall be in order, and for the purposes of amendment, be treated as original propositions.'"

MOTION TO RECONSIDER.

MR. CONDON. On Monday, sir, I gave notice that I would move to reconsider the motion whereby Rule Fifty-six was amended by striking out the words, "and that the previous question can be moved." My reasons were, Mr. Chairman——

MR. TINNIN. I rise to a point of order. The point is that Rule Thirty-seven says, that "on the day succeeding that on which a final vote on any proposition, or resolution, concerning the Constitution, or other resolution, has been taken, said vote may be reconsidered on motion of any member, provided notice of intention," etc. Now, that was done day before yesterday. The point of order is that the gentleman cannot make this motion to-day.

MR. CONDON. Mr. President: You will remember, sir, that yesterday there was a resolution passed that the report of the Committee on Corporations should be considered immediately after the reading of the Journal, consequently there was no room for me to get my motion in at that time. I think it is nothing more than right that the motion should be entertained now. There is a division of sentiment in reference to that matter, and on that day a number of the members were absent. Not more than two thirds of the Convention were present. I think it is only just and fair that these gentlemen should have an opportunity of expressing their opinion on this matter. I move that the motion be reconsidered.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I second the motion, and in doing so I will say that I understand the purposes of the Committee of the Whole are to give freedom in debate. As I understand it, Mr. President, the main question is never put in Committee of the Whole. We have no main question. The amendment to that rule places the Chairman in the position of asking the committee, "Shall the main question be put?" when we have no main question. It is ludicrous. The previous question in Committee of the Whole! I second the motion, and I hope the committee will adopt it. And, Mr. President, I gave notice the other day to amend Rule Fifty-six, and at the proper time I desire to make that motion, and if the amendment is adopted it will obviate all necessity for the present provision. My amendment will make the last clause read: "but the Convention at any time may decide, by a majority vote, when debates or any report or pending amendment shall close." As I understand it, this amendment was offered on the ground of economy of time. I do not believe that any gentleman desires to cut another off with the previous question, and if the amendment to the rule is adopted, which I shall offer then, we could close the debate at any time without resorting to the previous question. For instance, we could say that the debate on the report of the Committee on Corporations should close on Friday. Then at that time the discussion would have to cease. That would obviate the necessity of the previous question. I hope the motion will prevail.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I have no desire to debate this question, but as the position of the case seems to call for something, I desire to read the latter part of Rule Thirty-seven: "Such motion of reconsideration shall have precedence over every other motion, except a motion to adjourn." The gentleman could at any time have rose and made the motion, and the Chair would have entertained it.

MR. STEDMAN. I will state, and Mr. Filcher will bear me out, that he attempted at one time to bring up his motion to amend a rule, and the Chair decided that it could not be brought up at that time.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: The last argument of the gentleman is not a good one. If the Chair made a mistake in one instance, it is no reason why we should follow up the mistake.

THE PRESIDENT. There was no such ruling.

MR. ROLFE. Even if there was it proves nothing more than a mistake.

THE PRESIDENT. Rule Thirty-seven seems to be very positive that the motion to reconsider must be made on the day succeeding that on which the final vote has been taken, and the rule also gives preference to that motion over every other motion. The Chair is compelled, under that rule, to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Trinity.

NOTICE.

MR. NOEL. I desire to give notice that I will move to amend Rule One, by striking out the words "ten o'clock," and inserting the words "nine o'clock." Also to amend Rule Two, by striking out the words "two o'clock," and inserting the words "half-past one o'clock."

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

REPORT.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: The Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses report back the following resolution, and recommend its adoption:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Right of Suffrage be allowed to employ a clerk for two (2) days only, at a compensation of five (5) dollars per day.

The report was concurred in.

THE CHINESE QUESTION.

MR. WICKES. Mr. President: I desire to offer a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That this Convention authorize the electors of the State, in their vote upon the ratification of the Constitution, first Wednesday of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, to vote for or against Chinese immigration, that the National Government may know the true temper of the people of this State toward such immigration, to the silence of misrepresentation.

MR. McCOMAS. Mr. President: That is certainly out of order, because the law providing for the election says that nothing else shall be submitted to the people at that time.

THE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken, upon two grounds. We have not reached that order of business, and the gentleman from San Francisco has moved that the Convention go into Committee of the Whole.

MR. WICKES. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

No objection was made.

NOTICE.

MR. STEDMAN. I desire to give notice of a motion to amend Rule Fifty-six.

THE SECRETARY read:

"To amend Rule Fifty-six, by striking out the word 'but' after the word 'taken,' in the fourth line; also the word 'may,' in the fourth line, after the word 'question,' in the fourth line, and inserting in place of 'may' the words 'shall not;' and in place of the word 'but,' the words 'shall not,' and adding to the end of the rule, after the word 'moved,' 'but the Convention, at any time, may decide by a majority vote when debate on any report or pending amendment shall close,' so that the rule will be as follows:

"RULE FIFTY-SIX.

"The rules of the Convention shall be observed in Committee of the Whole, so far as they may be applicable, except for limiting the time of speaking, and except that the ayes and noes shall not be taken, and that the previous question shall not be moved; but the Convention at any time may decide, by a majority vote, when debates on any report or pending amendment shall close."

CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I move that the vote by which the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, to section three was adopted, be reconsidered. I make this motion for the purpose of permitting parties to propose amendments, who voted for the substitute under the impression that they would be allowed to offer amendments to it.

The motion prevailed.

MR. NOEL. I would like to hear the amendment read as adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the amendment as it stands.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities, contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation or association."

MR. TERRY. I propose the following amendment, to be added to the section as it stands.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The directors or trustees of corporations and joint stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint stock association during the term of office of such director or trustee."

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I am entirely satisfied with that amendment. It covers the ground on which I was going to offer an amendment. I trust the Convention will accept it. The object is to protect the deposits in savings banks from a misappropriation of the money by the directors, who really have no stock in the institution. If something is not done to protect the depositors in this way, they are left almost at the mercy of the directors. Although they may be very honest men, and sometimes may not be criminal, yet they may loan the money to their friends, and otherwise misappropriate it.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the word "misappropriated," because that seems to me to be too general a term. A misappropriation might be on account of an error of judgment, but embezzlement carries with it a moral delinquency.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is aware that that cannot be done. There is an amendment to an amendment already.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I understand that this amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry, makes every stockholder that happens to be a director or trustee personally responsible for the embezzlement or misapplication of money by any officer of the corporation. That is to say, if I should happen to be a director of a banking corporation and the cashier should embezzle money I would be personally liable. It is not that I may be liable for money embezzled by myself, but if I am a director I am liable to the full extent for any money embezzled or misappropriated by any officer of the corporation. It seems to me that that is not a correct rule.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say a few words in explanation of that amendment and the reasons why it was offered. The whole business of these corporations or banks are under the control and management of the directors. The subordinate officers are elected or appointed by the directors, and there is no unfairness in making them sureties for the persons they have in their employment. They have the power to exact bonds to indemnify themselves. The only object is, so far as the stockholders of a corporation are concerned, to make these men who appoint the cashiers, tellers, and clerks, responsible for the faithful discharge of their duties. They can take a bond if they desire it. Under the laws it is the duty of these directors to exercise a supervision over the officers of these institutions. I know instances, and they are very common, in banks, where thousands of dollars of money are being used daily that these directors have failed for months and years to exercise the supervision which the law requires them to do, and why should not they be held responsible? I know one case where the by-laws of a bank required that the directors should once every month examine the books, count the money in the vaults and examine into the business generally, and it came out in evidence that they had not performed that duty one time in three years. This is for the mere purpose of preventing such neglect of duty. If these men understand that they are sureties for the officers appointed by them they will examine the books and the affairs of the bank. We know, too, that these robberies are not accomplished in a day or at one time. It is a systematic peculation running through years, which, when discovered, amounts to a very large steal. If these officers will attend to their duty these peculations cannot occur, because they will discover them before they have fairly started.

The case of the French Bank, in San Francisco, is one where the directors never did perform their duty. The whole matter was left in the hands of the President, and the consequence was, that after a series of disastrous speculations in stocks he left the world by means of suicide. I say these men have the appointment of these officers, and if need be, they can take a bond for their own indemnity.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: In a small private business, where the proprietor has absolute supervision almost of every transaction that occurs, this rule might work; but it is impossible in the case of a director of a corporation. Many of these directors are men who receive no pay for it. They are gentlemen employed in other business, and it seems to me that it would be a very hard measure to say that if a man consents to be a director of a bank, he must be personally responsible to the utmost farthing, for an embezzlement made by an employé. Under that rule, it would be impossible to get any of our business men to take the position of a director. I suppose the object is to drive the corporations out of existence as much as possible, but if that is to be done, if the gentlemen desire to abolish corporations, they ought to put that matter directly before us, and vote on it. I understand that the people throughout the State in many kinds of business, take part in corporations, and, sir, it would be pushing things to an extreme to make a man who consented to be a director personally responsible for any delinquency on the part of any employé.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I shall support that amendment because I believe it will meet a necessity called for for years. The Dime Savings Bank robbed the orphans, children, and women of this State of thousands of dollars because the directors published in connection with that bank were not the real directors. That money was deposited on acconnt of some gentlemen (supposed to be) connected with the bank. They were not connected with it. The money deposits of these savings banks rest upon the honor of the directors. Because there are directors named who have high standing in the community, people put their money in the bank and deem it safe. Every person who deposits money, every child, woman, and laborer of the country, has a right to expect that these men will examine into the affairs of the bank. The directors are the men who should be responsible for every dollar that is put there if they do not see that it is properly taken care of by the officers of the bank. It would protect the people of this State from the robbery that has been done.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I think the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry, meets a want which has developed in the history of every day affairs. Now, whoever undertakes these trusts of a public nature, ought to undertake them under such circumstances as would make him responsible to the people who trust him. Now, what is the ordinary history, for instance, of a savings bank? Why, persons desiring to start out, go to men of good financial repute in the community, and obtain their names as directors. After that, every person in the community who has a little saving, deposits it in the bank because he believes that it is in the hands of certain men, and because he confides in these men to attend to the business which they have voluntarily assumed to manage. Now, usually about three quarters of them neglect that business. At the end of a few years, it is found that a large proportion of these earnings are absolutely stolen, and these men say, "I knew nothing about it; I had nothing to do with it." I say that if they place themselves into that position and decoy people, they should be responsible. We have a little bank here which failed a short time ago, and when its matters came to be investigated, it was found that the President, of his own account, had drawn out, in violation of the laws, I think, one hundred and twenty-four thousand dollars, and yet every director said he knew nothing about it. They all said they knew nothing about it and were not responsible for it. I would rather strike out the word "embezzlement" than to strike out the words "or misappropriation."

SPEECH OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment, in all its length and its breadth, will be adopted; and if it could be made broader I am in favor of adopting it with the broader platform, the broader sweep, the broader range. If it was possible I would like this clause to strike these rich gentlemen who act as decoy ducks in order to rob the widows and orphan children of this State—and that now seems to be one of the favorite styles of raising money, when they cannot do it through the Stock Board gambling in San Francisco. If women and children are to be robbed in this State, if that is to be one of the many arts of government to be practiced here, I am in favor of its being set up on the personal responsibility of the parties who practice it, without having the indorsement of the State for that purpose. I can conceive of a State doing a great many things that are wrong, that are not statesmanlike; that do not come within the practical purview of the administration of the laws for the benefit of the community at large; but I could not conceive, until it has become common in practice in the State of California, to incorporate institutions under the general laws of this State for the purposes for which they have been applied and prostituted, to wit: robbing widows, orphan children, and the unsuspecting community, of their hard earned dollars. And I propose, now, to draw a line of distinction very clearly between what shall be incorporated and what shall not be incorporated, and I propose to offer, when we reach section four, an amendment that corporations shall be authorized only when, by the laws of the State, they are authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain. At the present time the law is so broad in regard to corporations that you can incorporate for the purpose of gathering swill in the streets to feed pigs, or building henneries and hatching chickens; you can incorporate for the purpose of buying land and speculating in land; you can incorporate for every conceivable private object that the wish of man can conceive of. This is done, not for the purpose of legitimately carrying on large concerns, but it is done for the purpose of making a flaming show upon paper. After that show has been properly made upon paper by probably some parties who are not able to buy a square meal at a hotel, then it is that they go round and seek the indorsement of men whom they have probably served in a servile capacity of ward politician, they get his name to indorse it as director, or as the man who stands godfather and responsible for the iniquitous machine. Then it is they start their drummers round and strive to induce every washerwoman—if there are any washerwoman left since the Chinese pestilence—and they recommend it to her as the place to deposit money. Then it is that the drummers go about and get the money of the orphan children and the widows in the community, and of the unsuspecting in the community, that can be imposed upon. Then it is that the State of California is invoked as the proper party upon which to rest this swindle and keep it before the people. It is incorporated under the laws of the State; it has a President and Secretary and all the paraphernalia which belongs to such institutions, to parade it in the grandest style imaginable or possible. When it has succeeded by these means in getting the very last dimes there are in the community in this steal, then it is that, when you come to investigate it, you find that it has gone where the woodbine twineth; you find that it has vanished into thin air, and that it was but a myth; that it has faded away before the light of examination, just like mists of the morning fade away before the rising sun. There is nothing of it. When you ask for any responsibility, why, the President was never responsible for a square meal at a hotel in his life. The director is not responsible, because he has simply loaned his name; he knew nothing of the institution; all he has done is to assist this irresponsible man in swindling the community; that is all he has to do with it. If you can find anybody else that has any connection with it, he is either wholly irresponsible, or else he had no such legal connection with it that you can't fasten any responsibility upon him. He is like the Irishman's flea—when you put your finger upon him he is not there.

Mr. President, we were sent here for the purpose, if possible, of correcting this great wrong. That was what the voters who sent me here expected us to do. The men who own the banks, the men who run the banks, are not the men who voted for me; they had three other candidates in the field against me [applause]; the men who voted for me are the men who have been swindled, are the men who have felt and do feel the great wrongs of this evil of irresponsibility in these corporation managers, and they with their votes asked me to come here and do what I could to remedy this evil of irresponsible corporation management, and for one I am here to do it, and right now. I shall vote for the amendment, and will vote for any proposition which will tend directly or indirectly to increase the responsibility of corporation officers, managers, or decoy ducks, and I am in favor of drawing the line of demarkation upon the subject of corporations. Let us not lend the dignity of the State of California to an incorporation organized for the purpose of gathering swill in the street and feeding pigs; let us not lend the dignity of the State to an incorporation for the purpose of establishing henneries to hatch chickens; but if we do make corporations, if we must have corporations for some purposes, and combined capital, then let it be for a purpose for which we can lend the dignity and the authority of the State to exercise the right of eminent domain, and let the right of eminent domain go hand in hand with corporations who are authorized to exercise these great powers of the State. Some things need that backing up, some things must have that, in order that the civilization of the present day may be carried forward as it should be carried forward. But feeding pigs or hatching chickens does not need that indorsement. Men who say they are conducting savings banks don't need that indorsement.

The whole discussion is: what can we do to make these people more responsible—these shams, these paper affairs? What can we do? Why, what you can do is this: Just say to them, "You can go upon your own responsibility, as every man in the community ought to do. If you have wealth enough, if you have intelligence enough, if you have integrity enough, if you have lived long enough in this community to have the confidence of the people, just put up your sign and say, 'I propose to establish a dime savings bank in this community.' If people will come and deposit with you, well and good; better for both you and the community that you stand upon that platform. You understand that you are responsible for all that your clerks do; you are responsible for all embezzlement that is done; you are responsible for all misappropriation that is permitted; you are responsible for the money that you receive to the persons from whom you receive it. In other words, like all other businesses you become responsible in everything you have for the conduct of the business." Then it is that honesty and faithfulness is imparted to the business.

All business can be conducted by partnerships except those which require the right of eminent domain, that is, for the purpose of taking other men's property for certain purposes which you could not take unless the State authorized you to take it. That is the rule in regard to incorporations which we should establish under this Constitution. We see, already, from the personal experience that we have all over this State—when twenty-one thousand corporations are piled up before you by the Secretary of State as was done in this Convention the other day—there is enough, it seems to me, to give every reasonable man warning that we have already traveled too far on the road of corporations. Nothing can be done by individuals, every conceivable enterprise that is to be entered into must be incorporated. A man goes to establish a lumber yard, it must be incorporated. If he goes to establish a mill, it must be incorporated. If he wants to hunt for quartz, he must incorporate. Men almost marry their wives and conduct their family affairs by corporation at this day [laughter], and will soon do so unless the incorporation idea is stopped. Corporations! You cannot move, you cannot travel, you cannot go backwards or forwards but what you run against one or step on to one.

I propose now that we enter into the business of disincorporating, and we should disincorporate largely. We will start out as God Almighty started out man in the first place, with the idea of each fellow taking care of himself for awhile. [Applause.] It was stated in the debate here yesterday that this Government was getting too paternal; that the Government ought not to become so paternal that they would not be permitted to make contracts of their own. In other words, we ought not to become so paternal, that incorporations should have a right to relieve themselves of all the obligations that were supposed to be placed upon them by this Constitution and the law; that, if we said that they were to be responsible, as insurance companies, so and so, yet they might relieve themselves from that liability, and that they ought not to be prevented from doing so, and that the State ought not to take the part of ignorant and unsuspecting people who dealt with them. I say that we are already too paternal as regards corporations and not enough as regards the people. We have already corporation after corporation in this State under the paternal laws of the State. Everything is owned by some impersonal somebody with no responsibility attaching to it, and hence it is that everybody is seeking to incorporate, in order to make money fast, escaping any responsibility, and holding it perfectly proper to swindle anybody that may come within their clutches. Because, the main proposition seems to be now, to get money.

It is like the advice of the old Dutchman to his son. He said to him, "You must get money; get it honestly if you can, John, but get money;" and the whole money and banking corporations of the State of California have got imbued with the old Dutchman's advice in some shape or other, especially the latter clause of the advice. Now, the reason that we ought to disincorporate up to the line I speak of, is this: Take the history of the Bank of California. That is an institution that was and is known and seen of all men in the State of California, and nearly of all men upon the earth in a financial point of view, and I think clearly illustrates the necessity of personal responsibility, and the greater the better. That bank, by the extravagance of its officers three or four years ago, wasted the vast sums at its disposal, found itself three or four or five millions of dollars in debt to its creditors. The result of it was this, that four or five or six men owned that bank or owned ninety per cent of its capital. These owners were very rich men and they were in great danger—absolute danger as it appeared—if they undertook to shirk the reponsibility, that they could and would be held responsible under the laws making them responsible for the amount of stock that they owned, and they were responsible for it all because they owned it all. It resulted then that they thought it was cheaper for them to keep the framework of that institution good, to hold its credit throughout the world, to pay the indebtedness, rather than let the bank go down. But that is an exception and about the only exception that can be mentioned. Most of these corporations have no rich stockholders, they have straw stockholders; most of these incorporations have no rich directors, they have straw directors; most of those corporations have no wealth connected with them in any shape, but they are erected for the purpose of dragging in wealth. Corporations are not creators of wealth; corporations do not go out and work. A corporation is a seine that runs around the State and seines in the hard earned money of those who do work. We could live without corporations in the State of California, and, with nine tenths of them wiped from existence we would be much better off than we are now. I hope that the amendment will be adopted in all of its length and breadth. [Applause.]

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say one word on behalf of the committee relative to this amendment. So far as I am concerned, I believe in this amendment except the word "misappropriated." I do not believe that it is a proper word to put in there. I believe that every business man makes mistakes in his ordinary affairs of business and makes mistakes honestly. I do not believe that a man who makes an honest mistake in the ordinary transaction of business should be held to a criminal responsibility, and that is what this means. But any term, however strong, for any moral delinquency, like embezzlement or larceny, or any act of that kind, I think this body should adopt. I am opposed for one to loading down this article so that by and by there will not be anything of it.

I want the committee to understand also that this amendment was not voted down by the Committee on Corporations. It appears in the minority report, and that would convey the idea that we voted on it and voted it down. That amendment never came before that committee at all. Never in the world. For one, I wish to say that I do not believe that word "misappropriated" ought to be there. Any other term, showing moral delinquency, can be put there, but to say that a person, acting in the capacity of a director of a company, so long as you permit them to exist, shall be held criminally responsible for any mistake, is wrong, in my judgment.

I hope that the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, will strike out the word "misappropriated." I presume it may pass as it is, but I wish to take this occasion to warn this Convention against so loading down this article by amendments that will meet individual wrongs—instances that may come to the mind of every member who may want to reach all of these individual instances of wrong upon the people—that you will make it so heavy that it will fall of its own weight. You cannot meet all the wrongs that are committed. This Convention cannot so frame this Constitution that it will be impossible for some men to do wrong. What we want to do is to have the whole measure so framed as to meet the ordinary wants of the people, so as to protect them in the ordinary affairs of business; but if we attempt to put in individual instances here and there, and by the wording in this direction in this institution, and the wording in that direction in the other, to meet all the little wrongs that have come to our notice, we will so load down this article that it will fall by its own weight. I hope that an amendment, embodying the idea that the directors or officers of corporations shall be responsible for any embezzlement or moral delinquency, will be adopted. For one, I would most certainly indorse such an amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I merely rise to make a single suggestion: that such a provision as is proposed here by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, is not entitled to a patent on this provision as for some original proposition that is going all of a sudden to change the color of things on the face of this earth and to accomplish the result sought for by the gentleman. It is certainly surprising to one who will take the Codes and read them, and the laws of other States from which they have been compiled, to see how, as has been stated half a dozen times, the difficulty is not with the Constitution of the State at all. It is with the administration of the law. Now there is not a single case that has been cited here but bears out this statement. The gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman, alluded to the case of a savings bank in this city. Other gentlemen have alluded to the case of the Dime Savings Bank and other kindred swindles. The difficulty is not with the law; it is with the administration of it.

The Civil Code as it stands provides for a means of reaching the directors and officers of savings banks and banking institutions of all sorts. The Penal Code of this State has a system of laws which are equally fit to be engrafted upon the Constitution of the State, and more than the suggestion made by the gentleman from San Joaquin. You take the Penal Code from section five hundred and fifty-seven to section five hundred and seventy-two, without going over it in detail, and every delegate will see that all this species and character of frauds that have been alluded to here are provided for. They have been made the foundation, as I believe, for much unnecessary declamation. Men get up here and say that all the men who were opposed to them or who voted for other men were in favor of bank-smashing. I do not think that kind of argument is fit to be entertained by this body. Nor do I think it is the object of this body to regulate all the affairs of this State.

Sir, the Legislatures of this State have been alive to these evils long before this Convention was thought of, and will be long after it shall be forgotten, and the wisdom and majesty that sits here has gone—the mortal part to the grave and the immortal part to the judgment seat, upon which some of them expect to sit as Associate Justices. [Laughter.] I tell you I am sick and tired of it. We should not take up the time of this Convention in undertaking to put into the organic law of this State provisions that properly belong in the Civil Code and the Penal Code of the State. Without reading the provisions in the Penal Code, I will——

MR. LINDOW. Read it; read it.

MR. BARNES. Well, for your benefit, I will read some of them.

"SEC. 557. Every person who signs the name of a fictitious person to any subscription for or agreement to take stock in any corporation existing or proposed, and every person who signs to any subscription or agreement the name of any person, knowing that such person has not means or does not intend in good faith to comply with all the terms thereof, or under any understanding or agreement that the terms of such subscription or agreement are not to be complied with or enforced, is guilty of a misdemeanor.

"SEC. 558. Every officer, agent, or clerk of any corporation, or of any persons proposing to organize a corporation, or to increase the capital stock of any corporation, who knowingly exhibits any false, forged, or altered book, paper, voucher, security, or other instrument of evidence to any public officer or Board authorized by law to examine the organization of such corporation, or to investigate its affairs, or to be allowed an increase of its capital, with intent to deceive such officer or Board in respect thereto, is punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison not less than three nor more than ten years.

"SEC. 559. Every person who, without being authorized so to do, subscribes the name of another to or inserts the name of another in any prospectus, circular, or other advertisement, or announcement of any corporation or joint stock association, existing or intended to be formed, with intent to permit the same to be published, and thereby to lead persons to believe that the person whose name is so subscribed is an officer, agent, member, or promoter of such corporation or association, is guilty of misdemeanor.

"SEC. 560. Every director of any stock corporation who concurs in any vote or act of the director of such corporation, or any of them, by which it is intended, either:

"1. To make any dividend, except from the surplus profits arising from business of the corporation, and in the cases and manner allowed by law; or,

"2. To divide, withdraw, or in any manner, except as provided by law, pay to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock of the corporation; or,

"3. To discount or receive any note or other evidence of debt in payment of any installment actually called in and required to be paid, or with the intent to provide the means of making such payment; or,

"4. To receive or discount any note or other evidence of debt with the intent to enable any stockholder to withdraw any part of the money paid in by him, or his stock; or,

"5. To receive from any other stock corporation, in exchange for the shares, notes, bonds, or other evidences of debt of their own corporation, shares of the capital stock of such other corporation, or notes, bonds, or other evidences of debt issued by such other corporation;—

Is guilty of a misdemeanor.

"SEC. 561. Every officer, agent, teller, or clerk of any savings bank, who knowingly overdraws his account with such bank, and thereby wrongfully obtains the money, note, or funds of such bank, is guilty of misdemeanor.

"SEC. 562. Every officer, agent, teller, or clerk of any bank, and every individual banker or agent, teller, or clerk of any individual, who receives any deposits, knowing that such bank, or association, or banker is insolvent, is guilty of a misdemeanor.

"SEC. 563. Every director, officer, or agent of any corporation or joint stock association, who knowingly receives or possesses himself of any property of such corporation or association otherwise than in payment of a just demand, and who, with intent to defraud, omits to make, or to cause or direct to be made, a full and true entry thereof in the books or accounts of such corporation or association, and every director, officer, agent, or member of any corporation or joint stock association, who, with intent to defraud, destroys, alters, mutilates, or falsifies any of the books, papers, writings, or securities, belonging to such corporation or association, or makes, or concurs in making, any false entries, or omits, or concurs in omitting to make any material entry in any book of accounts, or other record or document kept by such corporation or association, is punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison not less than three, nor more than ten years, or by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year, and a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 564. Every director, officer, or agent of any corporation or joint stock association, who knowingly concurs in making, publishing, or posting any written report, exhibit, or statement of its affairs or pecuniary condition, or book, or notice containing any material statement which is false, or refuses to make any book or post any notice required by law, in the manner required by law, other than such as are mentioned in this chapter, is guilty of a felony.

"SEC. 568. Every director of a corporation or joint stock association is deemed to possess such a knowledge of the affairs of his corporation as to enable him to determine whether any act, proceeding, or omission of its directors, is a violation of this chapter."

MR. REYNOLDS. I move that the further reading of the gentleman's speech be dispensed with, and that it be printed.

MR. BARNES. It was only for the information of the gentleman's colleague from San Francisco that I was reading.

MR. LINDOW. Will the gentleman from San Francisco give way just one second? So far as he read the statute of law I have not seen yet that he came to the point where we can catch the directors and President and make them pay the money back to the people that they stole already. [Applause and laughter.] There is the gentlemen can go and steal. They are responsible for what they have been taking.

MR. BARNES. What I was undertaking to do was to show that this provision in the Constitution is no more protection to the stockholders and creditors of these swindles to which I have alluded than the provisions of the Penal Code. I did not propose to read them, but the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Lindow, requested me to do so, as he desired to find out something about the law. I was trying to accommodate him until his colleague from San Francisco was kind enough to move to have it printed.

MR. LINDOW. I know the French Savings Bank. I have been robbed out of my money because the director cut his throat; nothing else. The Constitution don't give me my money back.

MR. BARNES. Well, then, we ought to have a provision in the Constitution that directors shall not cut their throats. I suppose that would be desirable too. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Civil Code provides for these cases also. I merely mention this by way of illustration, for I believe that they should be held responsible for everything to which they are a party. That is the law now, that every director of a corporation is personally responsible for the acts of the corporation in any unlawful administration of the funds, and he is deemed to know what he might have known. The one object I had in rising to address the committee was simply to call attention to the fact that we can accomplish all these things by general declarations, and leave the balance to the Legislature. We are doing too much, or trying to do too much, with the Constitution. You may as well enact the Civil Code on this subject. I refer to sections three hundred and nine and three hundred and ten of the Civil Code, without reading them. Section three hundred and sixteen says:

"Any officer of a corporation who willfully gives a certificate, or willfully makes an official report, public notice, or entry in any of the records or books of the corporation, concerning the corporation or its business, which is false in any material representation, shall be liable for all the damages resulting therefrom to any person injured thereby; and if two or more officers unite or participate in the commission of any of the acts herein designated, they shall be jointly and severally liable."

These provisions go farther than the provisions suggested by the gentleman from San Joaquin. They furnish the people a complete remedy for all these mischiefs. The difficulty is not in the law, and it is not going to be remedied by any Constitution we can make, because we have got the law already. Let the law be administered and it is enough. There is an ample remedy provided for all those cases. Though I am perfectly willing to vote for it, though it ought to be the law and it is the law to-day; if it is the opinion that the people are going to be protected any better against swindling corporations, or the swindling officers of swindling corporations, I think it is a mistake. I do not think it is needed in the Constitution at all, and I do not think that any gentleman on this floor is entitled to a patent for the discovery.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The hour having arrived, the Convention took the usual recess until two P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair. Roll called, and a quorum present.

RESOLUTION.

MR. DUNLAP. Mr. President: I wish to send up a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be and he is hereby directed to deposit with the State Librarian two copies of the daily proceedings of the Convention, and of each committee report which has been or may hereafter be printed by order of this Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Adopted.

AMENDING THE RULES.

MR. CONDON. I gave notice that I should move to amend Rule Fifty-two, by striking therefrom the words, "by title," so as to read that propositions in reference to amending the Constitution shall be read by the Secretary. You will remember that a resolution has been adopted which prohibits the further printing of these resolutions. Now, it becomes necessary that the Convention should have some knowledge of the matter, and I think it is just that the same should be read when presented. I move now to strike out the word, "title," or "by title."

MR. MCCALLUM. I have no objection, if we avoid one thing. That is one of the rules that cannot be suspended, under Rule Sixty. The gentleman will remember that they will have to be read in full. I suggest that he add the words, "unless by a two-thirds vote the reading is dispensed with." It is one of those rules that cannot be dispensed with, not even by a unanimous vote. There is no suspending that rule.

MR. CONDON. I accept that amendment, unless the reading is dispensed with.

MR. ESTEE. I hope this will not pass. There are now six propositions before this Convention to amend these different rules, and the result will be that they will be so changed that none of us will know anything about them. If we cannot know what the rules are, we cannot abide by them. I hope the Convention will permit the rules to remain as they are.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: I hope this rule will not be changed. If the rule is changed, every amendment and proposition that comes before the Convention will have to be read in full, and it will occupy half the time of the Convention in listening to them, and then we will know nothing about the contents. Let them go to the proper committee, and that is sufficient. Two thirds of the propositions which I desired to get into the Constitution I have taken direct to the committees, and have not brought them here at all, and every other gentleman can do the same. I do not think it is necessary to print any more propositions. In fact, if there is any proposition to amend the Constitution that members desire to have read, they can ask for the reading, and the Convention can, by a vote, order them read. I hope that the rule will stand as it is.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the proposed amendment to Rule Fifty-two.

Lost.

CORPORATIONS—LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment to section three.

SPEECH OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I approve of this last amendment in the main. I approve of its object. I do not know as that is any particular reason why anybody else should approve of it; but I merely state the fact. I wish to say that the section of the old Constitution met my approval, though I voted for the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, as far as adopted, which simply made it more explicit as to the liability of stockholders. I do think that the stockholders themselves should have some protection; and it seems to me that this very amendment affords protection to the stockholders, and makes the officers of these corporations more responsible. There is where I think a great deal of the responsibility should lay—with the officers. Now, it certainly would be a hardship for a person who innocently becomes an owner of a few shares of stock, in the management of which he has had nothing to do except to vote at the annual election for President and directors, that he—in case the corporation should fail through the bad management of the Board of Directors—should lose, not only the value of his stock, but an additional amount. And we certainly know that this would fall upon innocent creditors, where it would be a greater hardship. This affords relief. This amendment provides that the directors or trustees shall be liable to the creditors and stockholders; therefore, when an innocent stockholder loses the value of his stock, and an additional amount through the bad management of the officers, he has somebody to look to to make his loss good. But there is one mistake in this amendment which the gentleman probably overlooked. It is this: it is too general in one respect. I do not agree with my friend from Monterey when he says he would like to have it more broad than it is. I think it is too broad, or else I am laboring under a mistake myself. "The directors or trustees"—it don't say that the directors or trustees of corporations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated, etc. Now, my objection is that this is for all time. A corporation may be in existence for many years. The officers of a corporation may embezzle a hundred thousand dollars, and the fact may not be ascertained for two or three years afterwards, when a new Board came in. The new Board would be entirely innocent, and yet they would be liable, because there is no limitation upon this language. Under this clause the directors that come in long after these embezzlements occur, are to be held responsible. Why, the corporations may go on for years misappropriating money, and years afterwards, when an honest Board comes into office and unearths these frauds and embezzlements, the very Board that does it, and who are honest and innocent themselves, will be held responsible for it under this very provision as it is now worded. I know that no gentleman here will insist on such a thing being put into the Constitution; and I am afraid this language will bear just that construction. I think the same language should be used here in reference to directors that is used in the other amendment in reference to the stockholders—that is, confine it to the directors of a corporation during the administration where these misappropriations and embezzlements occur.

MR. TERRY. I do not understand that the language can bear any such interpretation as the gentleman puts upon it. But if there is any doubt upon it, I am perfectly willing to put in an amendment to cover the point.

MR. ROLFE. The Courts may hold so, if you leave it to implication. I have prepared an amendment which I will read, which the gentleman says he will accept, using the same language as in the other part of the section: "During the term of office of such directors or trustees," to be added to the amendment.

MR. BARNES. I think the point sought by the gentleman will be covered by adding to the clause the words, "through collusion, neglect, or omission of duty of such directors or trustees."

MR. TERRY. I do not want to throw the burden upon the stockholders and upon the creditors of proving neglect. The proposition is to make them direct sureties, the same as other sureties.

MR. ESTEE. Allow me to ask a question: Suppose there are seven directors of a corporation regularly elected, three of them honest and four of them dishonest; three of them doing their very best to protect the stockholders and creditors and attempting to bring the other four to justice; I ask the gentleman if, under his amendment, the three innocent men will not suffer?

MR. TERRY. There is no such case where one director or three directors cannot interfere and prevent fraud.

MR. ROLFE. Where a thief comes in and breaks open the safe and carries off the funds of the corporation, I do not understand that this amendment holds anybody responsible in a case of that kind, except the thief himself.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add the words, 'during the term of office of such directors or trustees.'"

SPEECH OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I hope that Judge Terry will stick to this amendment and not allow the word, as Mr. Barnes recommends, "misappropriation," stricken out from the amendment. As it reads now, "Directors and trustees of corporations and joint stock associations shall be jointly and severely liable." [Laughter and applause.] I'll give you something to laugh at directly. [Renewed laughter and continued applause.] Now, Mr. President, to remove that word "misappropriation" I think kills the entire effect of the section. They might just as well remove the word "embezzlement." These lawyers [laughter] they think they are addressing a jury of Hoosiers. [Laughter and confusion.] They made the majority of this Convention believe that we are not officers of the State. And now they are trying to make us believe that black is white. They did make the majority believe that this was no office, that we are not officers of the State, but I hope that my fellow delegates will not allow themselves to believe, by removing this word "misappropriation," it will not affect this amendment to section three. It is really necessary that this amendment should be attached to the section in order to make it any ways binding on these directors and trustees. I hope that this amendment will prevail just as it is, without any alteration whatever. I think my friend from Stockton introduced this amendment in good faith. And it is a good amendment. It covers everything. But my friend Estee says he wants the word "misappropriation" removed from the section. Why, sir, that's the best word in the section. [Laughter.] It makes up the whole effect of the section, and I hope that my friend Judge Terry will not allow it to be removed from the section. If it should not prevail, my intention is to try and get an independent section to that effect. I hope this will prevail without any alteration. It covers everything. I thank you kindly for your attention. [Laughter.]

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: The propositions involved in the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin involve a question of principle and of business which should not be disposed of by an indignation meeting nor by way of sentiment. It is a question of cold reason and good common sense; and I desire, in the few remarks that I shall make, to address the Convention in that aspect, and not endeavor to obtain a little cheap reputation for myself by fierce denunciation and talk about possible abuses which everybody freely admits may exist. The question presented is one of remedy, and its consideration demands the exercise of hard common sense and business judgment. The proposition is this: Should the directors or trustees of a corporation be severally and individually liable to the creditors and stockholders for moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of the corporation? The question involves no principle of constitutional law—as my friend on the right has well said—and therefore ought not to be in the Constitution. It is a question that should properly be regulated by the Codes and general statute law. But independent of that, it is wrong in principle; it is wrong as a business proposition, and ought not to be in the Code, much less in the Constitution. That is my judgment. In the first place, a corporation cannot exist without a Board of Directors, for its business is managed by a Board of Directors. That is one of the essential characteristics of a corporation; and, second, let us inquire who is an officer. We may say, technically speaking, that a trustee is an officer; but whether he is or not in fact makes no difference, for the amendment undoubtedly seeks to hold them responsible for the acts of all officers, including the directors themselves, although it is vague in respect to whether the term officers includes the directors or not. I assume that it is the intention of the author that the word "officers" should include the directors themselves; otherwise this is an important omission in the proposition, because it would make the directors responsible for the acts of a cashier in a bank, and not responsible for the acts of the Board of Trustees themselves. I apprehend that the term "officers" is supposed to embrace trustees as well as the other working executive officers of the corporation. It is an essential element in the existence of a corporation that it should have a Board of Trustees, and executive officers besides, who are usually elected by the Board of Directors; and therefore, being absolutely essential, ought the Board of Directors whose members are honest, capable, efficient, free from neglect, free from omission of duty, free from every fault in the world—I ask, ought they to be liable for the acts of the officers? That is precisely the proposition before us. In other words, the very moment a man becomes a director of a corporation he becomes the insurer of the creditors and stockholders for the faithful conduct of all of the officers of the corporation, independently of any misconduct on his own part. I say the principle is wrong, and ought never to exist either in the Constitution or even in the Codes. If the amendment had gone to this extent, that the directors should be responsible for any neglect or omission of duty by means of which the officers embezzled any money, or any loss accrued to the institution, there would be no objection to it. But they are already responsible to the full extent to which they should be responsible. The stockholders elect the directors. They are thus clothed with the corporate powers, and they then meet and elect the necessary executive and other officers required by the by-laws and otherwise. This amendment would make one of these directors responsible for the acts of all the other directors, in whose election he took no part. A, one of the directors, must assume a legal responsibility for the conduct of B, another director, whom he did not select, but who is selected by the stockholders, over whom he has had no control, and whose personal or official conduct he cannot in any manner control. There is no principle, or reason, or sense, in such a proposition. The stockholders meet and select a Board of Trustees, entire, and then the amendment would hold one of that number, who is entirely innocent, responsible for the misconduct of the other directors, over whom he has no control. A director may watch his co-directors, and even degenerate into and act the spy, in his zeal to protect the stockholders, and yet, notwithstanding all this care; notwithstanding all his zeal and caution; notwithstanding his own good faith, and his own earnest efforts to guard the interests of the corporation and its stockholders, he is held responsible for the misdeeds of every other man who may happen to be a director, and over whom he has had no control, and in whose election he had no voice. If that is a principle which should be embodied in the law of the land or in the Constitution; if that commends itself to the good sense and judgment of business men—then I am indeed incapable of judging right from wrong. In the next place, aside from being responsible for the acts of a director over whom he has no control, the director is also to be made responsible for the acts of all of the officers.

Suppose the directors select as an officer a man of known fidelity, who has passed through years of temptation and always proved honest, a man of exalted reputation, and in whose integrity the entire community has confidence, and yet, notwithstanding all the care and all the guards that the directors may have thrown around him, notwithstanding his previous high character, he yields to temptation and willfully embezzles the funds of the corporation—ought these innocent directors to suffer? What have they done that they should be compelled to forfeit their property, when they themselves are utterly innocent and free from all blame in the matter? If the amendment had said they should be responsible in case of omission of duty, in any case of collusion, in any case of misfeasance of the directors, there would have been some justice, some right in holding them responsible—but the amendment goes beyond this limit. It is conceded that, in such cases as I have just referred to, according to the established principles of common law, the directors or trustees are responsible to the stockholders and to the creditors. But we are now asked to proceed further and make the directors the guarantors and insurers of the good conduct of each other, and of the honesty and good conduct of every officer connected with the institution without exception. I say it is not practicable. The directors of corporations will be compelled to establish the practice of requiring bonds of every officer connected with the institution. We therefore exclude the poor man from employment by corporations, because they will be unable to furnish the enormous bonds that may be required of them under a provision of this character. There will be a monopoly of this kind of employment in favor of rich men's sons in such an event, and the result will exclude from banks and other corporations a large class of deserving men. The bonds will not be of much consequence after all, for in nine cases out of ten recovery is doubtful. I say it is not a sound business principle to make directors of an institution responsible for the acts of the officers under all circumstances, independent of the collusion of such directors, or of their omissions of duty, or of their own misfeasance in office, and as a business man I desire to be placed upon the record as opposing it; as a man of common sense I wish to appear upon the record as resisting it, and, finally, as a man claiming to have some knowledge of the practical business working of corporations, I wish to be placed squarely upon the record as opposing this amendment.

Arguing from the standpoint of the Convention itself, an innocent man, who has committed no fault and against whose integrity and character no man can speak a word or find wherein he has failed in the performance of his duty, is sought to be held responsible for the misdeeds of another. For instance, the cashier of a bank is ingenious and skillful enough to rob the bank in the night, through collusion with the porter and others. He obtains the combination of the safe, and at night, with the porter and others, proceeds to rob the bank. Should the trustees and directors be responsible for that embezzlement? Upon what principles of law or justice should they be responsible? In the first place, the corporation must have a cashier. In the second place, it must have porters. In the third place, it must have combinations on the safes, and some employé or officer must be in possession of the secret combination, for the business of corporations can only be transacted and carried on through agents, and it cannot be done in any other way, and these agents must be trusted by the directors. Take a banking institution in which, notwithstanding all the care and attention that the directors have bestowed upon it, and notwithstanding they have counted the money of the bank and locked it up in the safe and the combination preserved in the hands of the cashier or secretary, in whom they and the community have implicit confidence, and the cashier, through collusion, if you please, with the porter, effects an entrance into the safe and robs it in the night and absconds with the money of the bank. Should the directors be held personally responsible for that act?

MR. TERRY. Suppose you deposit money with a private merchant and somebody breaks in and steals it, isn't he responsible to you for the money? Why should a corporation be more favored than a private individual? [Applause.]

MR. WILSON. I will explain that in a moment, for there is a different principle involved in the proposition. The gentleman says if a man deposits money with a merchant, and his clerk steals it, the principal is responsible. That depends entirely upon circumstances, and it depends also upon the character of the deposit. Let my learned friend consult the law, and he will learn that if the man with whom he deposited the money has exercised due care and caution, he is not responsible. The gentleman is utterly mistaken in his law on that subject.

MR. TERRY. He is responsible.

MR. BEERSTECHER. If the gentleman from San Francisco will allow me——

MR. WILSON. I suppose I am a law catechism—What is the chief end of man? Proceed. [Laughter.]

MR. BEERSTECHER. I ask the gentleman if there is not a difference in the cases he mentioned, whether embezzlement would not mean money abstracted from depositors in the course of business and not money taken from the safe outside of the regular course of business?

MR. WILSON. I am now answering the illustration of the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry, and I say his illustration is utterly wrong for another reason. Let us take a case where money is deposited with a merchant who has two clerks—one innocent and the other guilty—and the principle he invokes would make the innocent clerk pay for the default of the guilty clerk, and he cannot escape that conclusion, and that is his proposition. The merchant who has lost his money by the defalcation of a dishonest clerk, compels the honest clerk to pay that loss. That is the principle of this amendment, and the innocent man must suffer for the dishonesty of another.

Let us regard this in another light, and not permit this matter to go by default. When a bank loses its money by embezzlement of an employé, or otherwise, the creditor, of course, has a just claim against the bank for his money, according to the contract; but, because the money has been stolen from the bank, that fact does not release the bank from liability to the creditors. The money is there on deposit in the bank, according to law, and the stealing of the money does not release the bank from responsibility. This is not a question involving the liability of the bank to the creditors; it is not a question involving the liability of the bank to the stockholders; it is not a question as between the bank and the stockholders and the creditors. There is no such question before us, and I am not going to permit this amendment to pass by default, because I know I am right, and I desire to impress upon the good common sense and sound business judgment of the members the correctness of my views on this subject. The directors are not the principals of the institution, but are merely agents, and the question is, how far shall the directors be held responsible for the acts of persons other than themselves in a case in which they are altogether free from fault, and it is upon that proposition alone that this Convention must solemnly record its vote.

If you establish the proposition that it is impossible for money to be embezzled, and that it is impossible for money to be misappropriated, except by the default of the directors, then the amendment is right, because it is only upon such a theory that the directors have committed a wrong. I concede the proposition, that whenever directors are caught doing wrong they should be held responsible to the fullest extent.

Assuming that it is impossible that there can be any embezzlement or misappropriation of money except through the default of the directors and trustees, of course they should be held responsible; but the proposition proceeds upon a false assumption. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to accept this amendment by adding at the end the words, "through collusion, through neglect, or omission of duty of the trustees or directors." But the gentleman would go to the extent of making the directors absolutely guarantors and insurers against all accidents, against all treachery of employés, and loss of every kind to the corporation. In other words, the directors of a bank, as I have said, may count the money in the evening, lock it up in the safe and go home, and yet if any one of the large number of men connected with that bank, and having opportunities to commit fraud, steals the bank's money and commits robbery that night, the directors are made personally responsible for the loss by this amendment. There is no Constitution or code of laws in the world that can actually prevent a man from committing fraud, and we cannot prevent it. We cannot make a man honest. Fraud will be perpetrated from now until the end of time, as it has been from the beginning of time down to the present. We can hold a man responsible who commits wrong. We can hold a man responsible who, through his own neglect of duty, affords an opportunity for others to commit wrong.

When we have so ordered we should proceed no further, for that is the place to stop. That is the point where judgment and wisdom tell us to stop. When we pass this prudent limit and hold a man responsible for the acts of another, where there is no fault attached to him, I say it is thoroughly wrong in principle and unjust in the extreme. Consider this matter a little and take for example Wells, Fargo & Co. That corporation transacts business all over the Union. It has an office and an agent in every village in this State. These agents receive money throughout the interior of California. Where are the directors? Where do they reside? The Board of Directors are in San Francisco, the principal place of business of Wells, Fargo & Co. Bullion is placed in charge of Wells, Fargo & Co., in the interior, beyond the control of the Board of Directors, and the agent steals it, of course the corporation is responsible, but the Board of Directors, personally and individually should not be responsible in such an event. What have they done to render themselves responsible? What great constitutional principles require that they shall be personally responsible for the embezzlement of a clerk or agent at one of these branch offices a thousand miles in the interior? The convenience of the public demands the maintenance of these various agencies, and its business is largely carried on in that way. It has an office in every village in the State for the benefit of the public, and large sums of money coming in and going out daily, and these agents must of necessity be trusted. The Board of Directors cannot personally and individually supervise all these officers; and yet the principle announced by the gentleman makes these directors and trustees personally responsible for the embezzlement of every agent and employé who handles the money of Wells, Fargo & Co. in the State of California, and in fact throughout the Union. If there is any sound principle in such a proposition, I have yet to learn it. There are numerous other institutions that have agencies which were established and are now maintained by and with the consent of the stockholders. The Bank of California has agencies in different places, in Virginia City, and other portions of the country.

The Board of Directors uses its best judgment in the management of the institution and its acts are approved by the stockholders. The Board of Directors must remain in San Francisco and cannot be present at these various agencies, and know personally what is transpiring, and no matter how much caution it may exercise, embezzlement may be committed by some of the officers in these various places. Now, what sense is there in holding them responsible for what they, together with all the stockholders, could not possibly prevent? In all corporations men must be trusted to transact the lawful business of the institution. A man occupies a position of trust in one of these banks, and checks come in from other banks, or through the Clearing House, and he collects the money on the checks and never returns to the bank, but absconds on the steamer and departs from the State; should the directors be personally responsible for his act? Men must be trusted. Somebody must have confidence reposed in them. Somebody must transact the business and perform these duties for corporations. And as I have said, an officer is sent out to collect forty thousand dollars from a bank in a large city where business is transacted and largely facilitated by an interchange of checks. The officer collects thirty thousand dollars, never returns to the bank, but starts off on the steamer, or by some other mode of transit escapes from the State. And yet the institution of which he was an employé observed the greatest caution at all times, and the employé enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all the directors and stockholders; should the directors be held personally responsible under such circumstances? Frauds have been committed, although encircled with caution, and will be to the end of time. The Courts of law and equity have never yet been willing to specify any exact definition of what fraud is. The only definition we have is clothed in general terms. These are but a few of the many instances where such a provision would work injustice and wrong. I claim that it is wrong in a business point of view; wrong in any and every aspect; it is wrong upon principles of law and equity, and wrong in point of constitutional principles. Take, as a further example, the case of a director who is absent. He is called from the city on important business, and an embezzlement takes place in his absence by one of the officers connected with the bank; should he be held responsible? Take a case of sickness, in which a bank director is lying at the point of death in his bed at home. He left the bank under circumstances that assured him all was safe, and during his illness a robbery has been committed by an employé. When he is convalescent and recovers his consciousness, he finds that the law has made him responsible for a wrong which he did not commit, and of which he had no knowledge, and which did not occur by reason of any neglect or omission of duty on his part. That is just the principle involved in this amendment of the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry; and innumerable instances might be presented and multiplied, of the extreme harshness and absolute injustice of this amendment, for its counterpart cannot be found in the heavens above or in the earth beneath. If the amendment had a provision at the end to the effect that "directors or trustees of corporations and joint stock associations shall be liable for moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers through neglect or collusion or omission of duty on the part of the directors or trustees," I would interpose no objection to voting for it as a law to take its place in the Civil Code; but it should not be in the Constitution under any circumstances. In my judgment, the place for such an amendment is in the Code, and not in the Constitution, which must stand as the organic law of the land.

SPEECH OF MR. DOWLING.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. Chairman: I don't expect to speak in the interest of capital. I am not in the interest of capital, but, sir, the intention of this amendment it seems to me is very explicit. In fact, it is almost what I want, and I hope it will pass. The intention of the amendment is simply to preclude the possibility of any irresponsible corporation or company robbing persons out of their money. It puts a halter on money corporations, and gives to the laborer that which he has earned. I know an institution over in Idaho, that shut down their works, and they never paid a cent to their laborers, and the miners remained up there for over a year, and the stockholders are now in San Francisco feasting on that which they have stolen. But, Mr. Chairman, it takes radical remedies for contagious diseases. It is very well understood that the pain is only felt where the shoe pinches. If the corporations and monopolies suffered as much from the oppressions of the poor, as the poor unfortunate people of this country have suffered from the oppressions of corporations, why, sir, this house would have been torn down long ago. The corporations of California appear to me to be like an immense boa constrictor, having the whole State gripped within its coils, squeezing faster and faster all the time, until the whole State trembles with agitation and bleeds from every pore.

Now, sir, the gentleman from San Francisco wants to know who is accountable for money paid into a bank. Why, who is accountable for the directors? Who is accountable for the trustees? Who is accountable for the corporation? How will you make them accountable? Are you going to make them accountable in the same way, in the same amount that Duncan was made accountable? Are you going to leave the depositors in the same fix that the depositors in the Dime Savings Bank were left? Are you going to continue to leave the depositors at the mercy of the wolves? Why, gentlemen, it is absurd. Why, sir, go over into the State of Nevada, and you will find hundreds and hundreds of corporations, in every part of the State, incorporated with two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, capital stock, and from that up to ten millions. Go to work for them, and how will you work? I have been the victim of one of them, and when I came down to San Francisco to collect my wages, why, sir, the only money I could get was a certificate of stock. No matter how rich the directors—no matter how much property they had—all you could get was a certificate of stock.

Why, sir, the amendment covers the whole ground. This amendment recommends itself to every honest man. Just look, for instance, at the history of corporations in California for the last five years. It has been truly said here by one of the eloquent gentlemen from San Francisco, that in the early history of corporations in this State the people received them in ecstasy of delight and manifestations of joy. Admit it. That no matter who came and proposed a railroad, to incorporate a company, they stretched forth the hand of fellowship to them. Why? Because they were away from civilization and remote from the great centers of trade. Millions and millions of acres of land lay waiting cultivation, untrod by any human. There it lay. They offered any kind of inducements. It is no wonder they mortgaged their farms—no wonder they mortgaged their horses and cattle and land. No wonder, sir, that they went out to meet the iron horse with bands of music. It is no wonder they clasped hands and sang songs of hallelujah to Stanford and others who came to take them out of bondage.

But, sir, I am in favor of that resolution—though I see a little void in it that should be filled up—my intention is not to leave any opening at all, because, as I said here a long time ago, a railroad corporation can steer a steamboat through a knot-hole. Now, sir, there is one thing very peculiar, very remarkable, and that is this: that the advocates of corporations and monopolies are to be found principally among the lawyers. You hear one of them speak on the floor—why, he floats in the air, clothed in garments of immaculate white as the driven snow, pleading in tones so piteous and beauteous for the innocence of corporations. [Applause.] But, sir, in tricks that are vain, and ways that are mysterious, they are pretty well educated. But these corporations must be controlled. Mr. Wilson is an eloquent gentleman, and you have heard his argument on that side of the question. But he cannot speak, as I speak, who have been a victim of these monstrous monopolies, and seen their increased growth and power in this State. I tell you it will not do to listen to anything that most of them say. What we have to do is to be guided by common sense and reason, and put in a section here in this Constitution that will defend the interests of the people for awhile. We don't want anything ambiguous about it, we want something that can't be got around, something that will stand the test of the Courts. As a matter of course, the English language is always more or less fallible. It can be construed in a great many senses. We want no doubtful words in this matter. We must be very careful about the words we put into the Constitution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, money is a good thing when properly used. It can be used for good or for evil. When money is employed to rob the liberties of the people; when money is employed to defeat justice; then it becomes an instrument of hell. There is no intrinsic value in it. Look what these thieving corporations have done in San Francisco. Look at the misery and death and suicides that they are responsible for. If we had such a clause as this in the old Constitution, I am of the opinion that to-day there would not be many thieving stock sharps, bank sharps, and malefactors generally. We want to attack these corporations, and these monster monopolies, that are to-day the great burden of the people. If it was not for these monopolies California to-day would boast of a population of ten millions of people. Instead of California keeping up with the times; instead of California keeping march with the progress of the East; she is going behind, and sinking deeper and deeper every day, until we have soup houses in the City of San Francisco to-day to feed the hungry poor. Why? It can be traced to nothing but the monopolies. It is monopoly here and monopoly there, and monopoly all over the State, until finally there will be a monopoly of the very air we breathe. Everything is taken by the monopolies, except the air, and here we hear them pleading, O, so beautiful, that they don't ask anything from the people. Why, the freemen of the land are being crushed down into the lowest depths of despair to-day by the iron heel of these monster monopolies. We can hear their piteous wails even here in Sacramento. All the eyes of the State are turned toward us, and unless we do something for their relief we might just as well say that popular government is a failure. We might as well shut up shop at once, and declare that we can no longer govern ourselves. Because, we don't put a check on these monster monopolies, and bring them down within the control of the people, and give them to understand that we are the sovereign and they the servants. We must take a step in the right direction. Let us give them to understand that we are here solid as a rock, not as Workingmen, not as Non-partisans, not as Democrats, not as Republicans, but we are here, solid as a rock, to do justice to the people, as well as to the corporations. Justice between man and man demands that this should go into the Constitution.

Now, Mr. President, one word more. The French Government is a most prosperous country. That is admitted. It is the most prosperous of all the nations upon the face of the globe to-day; and why? Because, sir, every corporation is now controlled by the Government, and there is no railroad line allowed to run in that country unless there is a Government engineer there to show where the line is drawn. There is no banking institution there that is not responsible to the fullest extent. If Duncan had been in France, he would never have had a chance to commit the frauds which he has here. Again, sir, in the British Government it is the same way. There is no bank in Great Britain but comes directly under the supervision of the Government, and if a cent of the capital is stolen the managers are not only responsible, but they are sent to State's Prison for life.

Now there is one other thing I want to call particular attention to, and that is about the stockholders. Now, what is a stockholder? A stockholder is any man who holds stock in a company or corporation. He is a stockholder. Well, that man is responsible for his pro rata of the just debts of the institution. Well, now, suppose John Smith is a trustee and he owns ten thousand dollars shares of stock, and the corporation is in debt. Well, suppose John Smith gives his stock away to several gentlemen. Well, they don't know that the company is in debt at all, and they don't know anything about who are trustees or who are stockholders. Now, then, I will change that so that no stockholder shall be responsible for the debts of the corporation unless his name appears on the books of the company, with the amount of stock he owns opposite his name, and then, sir, a man will know who to go for. Therefore I offer this amendment. Insert after the word "stockholder" the following: "And credited to him on the book of the corporation or association."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at present. There is an amendment to an amendment pending.

MR. DOWLING. Now, sir, before I forget it, I want to have my name put on record in favor of this amendment, which, I believe, will in a great measure help to rid the State of these monopolies that are like barnacles clinging to the body of the people. These men never work for a living, and never will work. They are as big a nuisance as Chinatown, and render the poor man a slave. [Applause.]

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: This is a representative government, and I do not object to members from San Francisco representing their constituency. It is said by a member here that the State is in decadence, and that we are going down hill. I think we are illustrating the truth of that proposition in this Convention. It is said, also, that the eyes of the world are upon us, and I hope their noses will not be turned from us when we get through. I was at first in favor of this amendment, but looking over the whole thing, and hearing the arguments, I have abandoned the idea, and shall go against it. The proposition, as has been stated by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, is to make innocent parties responsible for the acts of others, and I consider that to be a correct statement of the effect of the proposition, and wonder that anybody can doubt it. But while reason and common sense are against the amendment, I have no doubt certain gentlemen will vote in favor of it, notwithstanding. But as for myself, I am going to make my vote follow my reason and my judgment. So great has been the desire on the part of the Legislature to make directors responsible for the wrong acts of the Board, that the statute now declares that when the trustees or directors of a corporation issue bonds beyond their capital stock, or contract debts beyond the amount of capital stock actually subscribed and paid in, they shall be personally responsible for the amount. That is the statute on corporations, that if they issue bonds or contract debts beyond their authority, they are held personally responsible. The proposition is here, it is said, to protect the stockholders from all loss by making the directors personally responsible. The proposition has been stated here, by Mr. Estee, that supposing a Board of Directors consisting of seven, and four of the seven vote to issue bonds, or contract debts beyond their authority, under the statute, or to misappropriate, or vote for the misappropriation of the funds, and the three other directors stand up and oppose it, and vote against it, yet under this constitutional provision, or this provision which is sought to be engrafted into this Constitution, it makes the three directors, in express terms, responsible as much as the four who voted to misappropriate the funds, or issue bonds, or incur debts beyond their authority under the law. There is no getting out of it. There is no possibility of avoiding it. They cannot evade it. "The directors or trustees of a corporation or joint stock association shall be jointly and severally liable," etc. There is no exception made in favor of the innocent man. There is no exception made in favor of the directors who stood there and protested against the act of the majority; but they, notwithstanding the fact that they stood against the perpetration of the wrong act and sought to protect the stockholders, are held equally liable to the stockholders who elected the seven directors with those who voted for the misappropriations. Here, then, are seven directors, and four of them vote to commit a wrong, and the three innocent ones have to pay over to the very stockholders part of the money lost or misappropriated by the majority against the votes and protest of the minority. It is impossible to avoid it.

Further, I would like to know what would be the definition of offices in this amendment. Here is an illustration that covers the whole ground. The Bank of California, for instance, you go in there and you will see a couple of Chinamen with twenty thousand, or thirty thousand, or fifty thousand trade dollars in their possession, handling them, weighing them, testing them by feeling with their fingers, throwing them one way and another, and choosing the good from the counterfeit with such wonderful facility and skill, as is certainly extraordinary and astonishing to the beholder. Are they officers of the bank? Are they included in the list for whose acts the directors are to be made responsible? There is a man who drives a dray and hauls the money to and from the bank. He drives through an alley, and drops off a box or two, or a bar of bullion, in collusion with some confederate; is he an officer of the bank? Is it the cashier, the note teller, the bookkeeper, or regular officers alone that this provision is intended to apply to? Are these servants, clerks, porters, etc., officers of the bank in the meaning of that term? I do not understand that they are officers. Men are hired and kept in there to do this work, but it does not follow that they are officers of the bank. Not at all. And further, the statute now allows the trustees or directors of a corporation to elect a Secretary or a Treasurer. The Constitution does not fix it, it is fixed by statute. Now suppose the statute is changed, after this section is fixed in the Constitution, and instead of allowing these officials to be elected as they are now, by the directors, allows them to be elected by the stockholders direct. It is in the power of the Legislature at any time to change the relations between directors and the lower officials or employés of a corporation. Now, suppose the law is changed, and they are shoved in there by the stockholders themselves? They go in against the will of the directors perhaps, are put in there for the purpose of administering the affairs of the stockholders, as their servants, agents, or employés. And yet we want to make the directors responsible for any misdeeds or crimes committed by the men that have been appointed by the stockholders themselves, and with whose election or appointment the directors had nothing to do. Well, that may be a very good rule of business. You come and say to me you shall have this man for your clerk; he shall take care of your funds; shall have the right to collect moneys and draw checks, and preside over your business. And then, if you should trust any of your money in the hands of that clerk, and he runs away with your money as well as mine, you hold me responsible for the acts of the very man you forced upon me against my wishes. That is the logical conclusion. You force him into that position as an agent, authorizing his appointment contrary to all law of propriety and judgment, and then make an innocent party suffer for your crime.

I am for making these men responsible if they do that which they should not do, or if they fail to do that which they should do. I am in favor of making them exercise due vigilance in business. That the Codes have done. They have done all that there is any necessity for. They have provided that the money in bank shall be counted at stated periods, and that the accounts must be examined; and have taken all the precaution that can be taken to prevent defalcation. The general principle of this amendment is undoubtedly a correct one, but it should be confined to neglect of duty, and should not apply to anything else. Now, take the case of a special deposit cited by one of the gentlemen here: A friend comes to me and says, you keep a safe (which I do in my office); put this money of mine in there to-night. I tell him I don't always do it, but sometimes, if I happen to have a little change left that I cannot carry around in my pocket, I put it in the safe. The safe is not very strong, and I don't keep much money in it, but I will put your money in there if you wish me to. I do so. In the night along comes a cracksman, and the whole thing is carried away. Now, the question is, was that business conducted with ordinary prudence? Was the deposit of that man cared for with the common, ordinary prudence with which a man takes care of his own property of like character? That very case has come up over and over again where a man even goes so far as to mix his own money with that of another; and the Courts have said, you shall not be careless with your neighbor's property, but you shall exercise proper and due precaution and due vigilance, such as men of ordinary prudence would. Whether it would be due diligence in a man to deposit money in a safe that could be split open in five minutes is a question for a jury. Take a bank in the ordinary course of business. They take the money on special deposit, put it in the safe where they keep two, or three, or four millions of dollars in gold, perhaps, and a cracksman comes along in the night and carries it away. Or, perhaps some one of the officers, a man who has proved his integrity by long years of faithful service, who may have become embarrassed by an expensive family, or investing a little in stocks, losing, and losing, going down, and down, and finally in an evil moment, breaks open the safe and goes off with the funds. The directors had taken all the precaution they could have taken. The combination was carefully guarded, the doors were locked, and every precaution taken. In fact, the directors are perfectly innocent of crime. Now, this matter is properly regulated in the Code. This amendment is but one single detail of the many provisions in the Code. If we are going to put in this provision, why not put in the whole of them? There is a provision that if these officers contract a debt over and above their capital stock, they shall be personally responsible for it. If they issue bonds beyond the amount of capital stock actually paid in, they shall be personally responsible for it. Some of these companies may have made over-issues of stock, why not put that clause in the Constitution? Simply because they have no business in the Constitution. Simply because, as one gentleman has well stated, they are not proper provisions for a Constitution. They are not proper parts of a constitutional law. They should be left to the Legislature alone. The Constitution should be confined to those general declarations of principles which it has been the custom, hitherto at least, to insert in such instruments. If there are any exceptional cases which cannot be covered by general enactment, then let them go into the Constitution.

SPEECH OF MR. FAWCETT.

MR. FAWCETT. Mr. Chairman: There are reasons why I am obliged to vote against this amendment which I have not heard assigned by any of the learned gentlemen on this floor. I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech on this question, but for the purpose of a brief explanation of the reasons which induce me to vote against this amendment. In the first place, this proposition undertakes to make each and every director of a corporation the bondsmen of all the officers employed by the institution to which he belongs. The director is responsible for the defalcation of each and every officer, and for the embezzlement or misappropriation of funds by all the directors as well as the bank officials, and the President. Now, it is said by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, that the principle is eminently just, because the tendency will be to make directors careful in the selection of their agents and employés. Now, if they fail to exercise care in such selection, and a defalcation or misappropriation results therefrom, they ought to be responsible to those who lose thereby. That proposition is all right when it is applied to those who are guilty of neglect or wrong; but, as pointed out by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, what becomes of the innocent directors? Suppose, as a proposition, that a banking corporation appoints Jones as Cashier. The majority of the directors, for some reason, perhaps for the very purpose of aiding them in a scheme to misappropriate the funds of the bank, propose that Jones shall be Cashier. The minority, however, knowing that the proposed officer is incompetent, or that he is dishonest, oppose the selection of that officer, and to the best of their ability contest his appointment—do all they can to prevent it; discharge their duty faithfully and fearlessly toward the stockholders and toward the public. But they are in a minority. The majority of the Board select this person, and he is installed as the Cashier. From the very time that such appointment is made, and the official inducted into office, the minority of this Board of Directors, who protested against this appointment, did all they could to prevent it, become responsible to the whole extent of their fortunes for the acts of that officer. Is that a correct principle? Is that the result you are striving for? Does that commend itself to the reason and judgment of men? How can this responsibility be escaped? I would ask the gentleman from San Joaquin how he is going to escape from it? Perhaps he will say—and it is the only answer that can be given—that the minority may resign their trust. But is it a wise provision which compels an honest director to give up his trust in order to save his own fortune? He is there for the purpose of protecting the interests of the stockholders, of whom he is one, and the interest of the public. And because he is overruled, is he to be made responsible, or be compelled to resign his trust, and get out of his office? That certainly is not wise. He may be a man that the public are interested in keeping there, that the stockholders are desirous of keeping there. Why, sir, that very step might be taken by a majority of a Board of Directors who have sinister purposes in view against the property of the corporation, to force out a troublesome minority from the Board of Directors. One or two honest men, so long as they stand firmly in the discharge of their duty, can prevent the majority from carrying out their schemes of plunder, and the majority may undertake some such measure for the very purpose of forcing out the minority, and leaving the field clear. That would be the result of it inevitably. The minority would be powerless to help themselves in any other way than by getting out of the Board as soon as they could.

"SEC. 12. The Legislature shall provide by law that in all elections for directors or managers of incorporated companies, every stockholder shall have the right to vote, in person or by proxy, for the number of shares of stock owned by him, for as many persons as there are directors or managers to be elected, or to cumulate said shares and give one candidate as many votes as the number of directors multiplied by the number of his shares of stock shall equal, or to distribute them, on the same principle, among as many candidates as he shall think fit, and such directors or managers shall not be elected in any other manner."

Who is there, sir, that would be willing to serve in the minority of a Board of Directors under these circumstances? If that amendment prevails—and my voice admonishes me that I cannot speak longer—section twelve might as well be stricken out of this report when we come to it. No person would be willing to represent the minority under those circumstances. I am to cumulate my votes upon a minority director, who at any moment, by the will of the majority, may be forced to resign his office by the selection of some agent that he could not approve, and for whom he would not be willing to stand as bondsman. The minority director, under this amendment, would be as much responsible for the faithful performance of his duties by that officer as any other director on the Board. Then what is the use of your minority representation? This measure may be taken advantage of for the very purpose of forcing him out of the Board, and it no doubt would be. Now, I am willing to support any reasonable measure which will tend to correct the evil which this amendment strikes at. But this amendment cannot receive my vote.

MR. VAN DYKE. I would like to read an amendment, and see if the gentleman from San Joaquin will not accept it. Insert after the word officers, "appointed or selected by such directors or trustees." I offer that as an amendment, and ask the gentleman to accept it.

MR. TERRY. No, sir, I will not accept it.

SPEECH OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I did not expect, when I introduced this amendment, that such a clamor would be raised. It looked to me very proper, and very innocent, and very harmless, as an amendment only intended to make the trustees and directors of corporations more careful in the management of their business; make them become sureties for the good conduct of those in whose custody they place the funds of the institution. I had not thought the Constitution an improper place to put such a clause. The Convention of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, which framed the present Constitution of California, thought proper to put into the Constitution a clause defining the liability of stockholders in a corporation. For twenty-nine years it has been there, and to-day I propose to renew the clause, and add to it what is made necessary by the new order of things. Why should it be left to legislative enactment?

When this Convention assembled it was deemed proper by a committee composed of experienced legislators, who are members of this Convention, to have a Committee on Corporations; a committee that should put into the Constitution which we are here to frame, certain clauses and articles respecting corporations, defining their powers, and fixing the liability of stockholders. They made a report in which these things were embodied. I thought if it was proper and right that the Constitution should fix the responsibility of the stockholders of a corporation, that it would not be improper or wrong, in the same connection, to fix the liability of those who control the property of the stockholders. And therefore I offered this amendment to fix, by a constitutional provision, the responsibility of the directors and managers, making them responsible for the conduct of those whose duty it is, under the law, to transact the business of the corporations, and to compel them to see that no money is embezzled or misappropriated. They are required, under the law, to oversee and investigate all the business of the corporations; to examine the accounts, and count the money. And it is their business to see that those officers who are under their control, subject to be dismissed by them at a moment's notice, perform their duty properly, and neither embezzle the money nor misapply the funds intrusted to their custody. I do not see anything wrong, anything unjust, in such a proposition, saying to these three men: I place my money in your keeping and you shall be responsible to me for it; for the honesty of the persons in your employ. There is no wrong in that, nothing unjust, nothing that is not equitable. That is the effect of this amendment—simply to make these directors or trustees—by whatever name they are known—the sureties upon the bonds of the Cashier and Teller; that they will perform their duty properly; placing them on the same plane as other sureties. Suppose a case of a State Treasurer, or a County Treasurer. It is no excuse if I go on the bond of the State Treasurer or of a County Treasurer, and he misappropriates the money. It is no excuse, I say, that I am innocent, and didn't know he was going to do it; that I thought he was honest; that I ought not to pay the bond, as the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, said. No, I went on his bond with my eyes open, and I am required to pay. I do not pay because of any misconduct of my own, or any wrong of my own. It is my option to go on the bond or to withdraw, but while I remain on his bond I am responsible for his official acts.

Now, where is the wrong or hardship of requiring these men who appoint the Cashier, or who control the actions of the Cashier—those men who have the power of appointing and discharging—to be responsible for any misappropriation of money, or any misconduct which will diminish the funds of the corporation and entail a loss upon the stockholders.

And then again, another effect of it: if this amendment is adopted as a part of the Constitution which is to be submitted to the people of this State, the gentleman from Marin need be in no fears that the provision will weigh down the Constitution. You will have no more respectable men allowing themselves to be made decoy ducks of. You will have no more figure-heads, in the shape of Boards of Directors who never go near the institution from one end of the year to another. You put the responsibility upon them, and you will force them to do their duty. That is the only way you can force them. You say to these men, you must be responsible for the acts of those men you put in there to manage and conduct the business. You can take security from them if you like, but we hold you responsible. But gentlemen got up and talked about this being a great outrage, and got very indignant over it. There is nothing that would give grounds for any such talk. It struck me as a provision which should go into the Constitution in connection with the other provision making stockholders liable. It struck me as a provision, the need of which I have seen in this State many times, and it would prove a safeguard to the people and to the stockholders. It would prevent a repetition of the too common abuses of the past, without doing injustice to any honest men. I do not know who was alluded to when it was said by a gentleman on this floor, that perhaps some of the members at the great judgment day would expect to sit alongside of the Supreme Judges, or Associate Justices. When that day comes, if come it does, when we are wafted across to the other shore, I shall not be surprised at that very moment to see the immaculate Chairman of the Military Committee of this Convention, the Eminent Commander of the ceremonies there. [Laughter.]

Now I think the sense of this Convention is that something should be done to prevent the robberies of the public by corporations, and it occurs to me that this is about the most effectual means of preventing it. It occurs to me that the Constitution is the place to put it, where it cannot be amended or repealed at any time by a hasty Legislature. I do not approve of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, and would not accept it, because if I did I fear that some time in the future the law which now makes these officers appointed by the Directors would be changed, and thus the provision of the Constitution would be evaded and defeated. They might thus defeat the action of this Convention. That is the reason I do not approve of it. I propose to put it hese as a safeguard to the people. I propose to put it here where it cannot be amended or repealed, and let it stand for all time as a protection to the people of this State against the robberies which are committed by the officers of these corporations. [Applause.] Gentlemen need not be afraid that this will weight down the Constitution. Put that provision in there and it will, like charity, cover a multitude of bad provisions when it comes to go before the people for ratification. [Applause.]

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I do not intend to make any extended remarks on the question, but I believe if the amendment of the gentleman from San Joaquin should be adopted, as it now reads, and made part of the Constitution, that before we get through we will find it too heavy a load to carry. The great mass of men have an instinctive idea of what is right and what is wrong. Honest men everywhere are repelled with the idea of punishing an innocent man for the faults and crimes of the guilty. And if this Convention should, in its wisdom, or in its folly—I think in its folly—adopt this amendment, it would change the rule which has hitherto been recognized by all civilized people, that an innocent man should not be punished for the crimes of the guilty. I cannot see, sir, why a man who faithfully performs his duty as an agent of a corporation should be held responsible for the offenses of one who is not true to his trust. Now what are the facts? Under our statutes a certain number of men can be elected directors of the corporation, a certain number, from five to twelve. Say five are elected directors. There are fifty thousand shares say of the corporation stock, and the five directors get the whole vote of all the stockholders. Two of them are well known business men in the community, and three of them are strangers to the other two. But the stockholders put them there, and they say to the two that are well known, we know these three gentlemen, and we make them our agents, and we have given them the controlling vote in the affairs of the corporation. At the first meeting a resolution is presented contrary to the law, declaring a dividend, when there are no funds in the treasury, when the money will have to be borrowed to pay the dividend. Two of them enter a solemn protest against it, as a violation of section three hundred and nine of the Civil Code, and enter a protest dissenting from the action of the majority, because, they say, you are robbing the stockholders, and because you are going contrary to the statutes. But three of them, notwithstanding the statutes that prescribes that they shall not make any such dividend, vote for it. Now if this amendment means anything, it means that the minority are responsible for the acts of every officer of the corporation.

Now, let me pursue it one moment further. My friend, Mr. Dowling, is a director in a corporation, is one of the minority. He is a sworn officer, and he comes in at the meeting of the directors and enters a solemn protest against this illegal act. He protests against the robbery of the stockholders, and against this violation of the law in any such manner. He is there defending the interests of the stockholders and the public. But what is the result? Why, Mr. Dowling, who has done everything that it was possible for an honest man to do in order to prevent the consummation of this unlawful act, is made to pay for the crimes of the men who voted for that resolution. The innocent and the guilty are alike punished. I want to know if this Convention will indorse that proposition. I cannot believe they will. The law by which this Convention was organized allows members to enter their protest on the record against the adoption of any measure they may object to; and for one, when the occasion comes, and this takes the proper shape, I am willing that my protest shall stand the test before the people of this State. It is not honest; you must know it is not. We all know it. We all know the country is full to overflowing with these corporations which are robbing the people. You are seeking to remedy the evils, but you are going the wrong way, using the wrong remedy. You are trying to load down this article on corporations that meets our approval. I ask you not to weigh down this article with that class of legislation that will destroy its usefulness.

Sir, some questions rise which are too serious to be treated thoughtlessly. Applause falls faintly upon the ear when that applause follows the advocacy of principles which will lead to the destruction of some of the great institutions of the country. We are here for the purpose of building up an organic law that shall survive after we are gone, and if that law, and every section of it, is not founded on the eternal principles of justice, it will not be accepted by the people, and should not be. How will we make the innocent directors of corporations liable for every embezzlement done by the other officers of the corporation. I suppose the gentleman means civilly liable. If they are liable at all, why not make them criminally liable and send them to the penitentiary, because it is one and the same proposition—a dereliction of duty—and whenever an embezzlement occurs there is a crime committed. And the directors are responsible for that crime. Why not go the whole length and say they shall be civilly and criminally liable. That is the logical deduction of the argument as I understand it. I know the gentleman is trying to reach and remedy an evil. And I would be willing to vote for almost any measure that would rid the State of these institutions that have so long robbed the people. But let us do it in a way that will be just and right and creditable to us as representatives of the people.

Follow the illustration one step farther. Suppose at the first meeting of these directors three of them decide to elect a well-known scoundrel—a man of notoriously bad reputation in the county—as Treasurer. Two of them vote against him and say, we will not stand this outrage; it is not right, and we will utter our protest in the records, as the statute says they can do, and vindicate our character before the community. They can do no more. Then this notoriously bad man takes hold of the funds and that night absconds with them. According to this amendment, these men who have done everything they could do to save the capital of the stockholders and creditors of that corporation, will the next morning have to pay the amount of money that this Treasurer has robbed the company of. The thing should not be thought of for a moment. It should not receive serious consideration. Again, sir, I enter my protest against loading down this article with amendments that can do no good, and may accomplish great harm; and I say to you, gentlemen of the Convention, leave something to your committee that has been selected to take charge of this question; that has given it thoughtful inquiry and careful consideration. The committee took the old Constitution and saw how the old section read, and they examined the discussions of our Courts and saw that it had passed through and survived twenty-nine years of the history of the old Constitution; they saw that whatever wrong had been committed, sir, had been committed, not by reason of the weakness of this section of the old Constitution, but, as my friend from San Francisco says, by reason of the corruption of the officers who have been connected with these institutions. They saw, too, that only last Winter, and two Winters before, the people of this State, through the Legislature, attempted to remedy these evils. Last Winter, sir, your Legislature created the minority representation referred to by the gentleman from Santa Barbara, whereby the majority of the stockholders of a corporation should be represented upon the Board. So this great reform, following in the wake of the old section, your committee concluded to let that section stand. It has been amended already by the gentleman from Alameda. And now, after all this experience, we are called upon to attach to this section an untried, questionable provision—a more than doubtful provision. And where there is doubt as to the wisdom of a constitutional provision, it ought to be rejected. I think we owe it to ourselves and to the people to vote against this amendment. I have said this much because I felt it was due to the committee; I felt that it was due to the people; and I felt that if this amendment, as drawn by the gentleman, should be adopted, it would have a very marked effect in loading down this article on corporations, which I look upon as one of the most important to the people of any in the proposed Constitution.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I am exceedingly gratified at the position of affairs, at the determination which is manifested here to maintain the integrity of the provisions attempted to be placed in the Constitution on behalf of the people. The question has been fairly presented by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson. He has placed it on a fair basis for our consideration. Taking the arguments that have been presented by the learned gentleman, I think it presents the strongest reasons why this provision should be adopted. I say that we are in possession now of the fort, and it devolves upon us to hold the fort. I say the position is well taken, and the arguments are all on the side of this amendment. How easy it is for these distinguished gentlemen, when this provision is engrafted into the Constitution, to say that no appropriation shall be made except by a majority vote of the directors. The difficulty is at once avoided. How easy it is to say that no man shall be installed in office except he give a good and sufficient bond for the faithful discharge of his duty and the faithful discharge of the trust imposed upon him. Is he in any worse condition than an officer of the State, when he is put in charge of an office and a bond required from him? Why, it is nothing but a little government—imperium in imperio. Why, these officers do not hesitate because they have to give bonds. If these directors are so blind as not to see their own interests let them suffer according to the provisions of the Constitution. In God's name let the people be protected for once.

Now, where is the difficulty? Show me a plainer proposition. I see no difficulty about it. It is as plain as a sunbeam. It is a contest for once where the people are in possession of the fort, and it should be held forever. [Applause.] It is not a question between the innocent and the guilty in the light the gentleman has stated it. It is a question in one sense as to whether the innocent shall suffer for the acts of the guilty; but who are the innocent? The people are the innocent parties, and it is a question as to whether they shall suffer. It will not affect honest corporations, except to strengthen them. If they cannot be honest, if these corporations are sinks of iniquity, then, I say, let them go down, and God speed them in perdition. [Applause.] The people have suffered long enough. I feel in earnest on this question. The whole land has been groaning for years under the burden; the people have stood it long enough. I say if the wealthy corporations cannot protect themselves and exist under such a provision let them go down too. Is not there a healthy condition without them? Cannot we get along without them? Why, if every corporation should leave the country, or disincorporate, the country would be just as well off. Just as well off. I believe, however, in the protection of corporations. If a corporation, like an individual, is honest and square, it need have no fear of the law. The law has no terrors for any but the wrongdoer. If they cannot trust their subordinates let them require bonds. If they who appoint them, and control, and direct them, cannot trust them, how can it be expected that the people and the stockholders can trust them? There is no difficulty about it in the world. No man should be permitted to hold a responsible position unless he can give bonds. Let the directors choose men who are responsible. The stockholders will not permit a director to retain his position very long unless he sees to it that the officers appointed are trustworthy.

Now I say that the business of a corporation should be conducted with just as much care as the government of the State of California is conducted. The great trouble is, that the great interest of the people is lost sight of, and the interests of the stockholders too often lost sight of and forgotten. The whole course of legislation has been in that channel. There has been too little attention paid to the management, too little responsibility attached to those who are in office and control and manage the affairs of these institutions, and I submit that for once there should be some regulation—some legislation for the protection of the stockholders as well as those who deal with corporations. Let it be put in the Constitution. This is a good provision, and the Constitution is a good place to put it. It is a strong provision, and a just one. It compels these corporations to conduct their business honestly. It will bring about a healthy condition of things. There is nothing in it but what is right. Let the corporations do business, and be responsible as individuals do. If they cannot do business because we compel them to deal justly; if they cannot do business without robbing the people and the stockholders; then the sooner they go down and are wiped out of existence the better it will be for the country. These are the reasons why I favor the amendment.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I would inquire if the proposition is still open to amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir. There is an amendment to an amendment pending.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: For the purpose of information, I wish to read an amendment which I shall offer when it is in order. In the fourth line, after the word "liable," I shall move to insert "in all cases of negligence." I approve of the proposition of the gentleman from San Joaquin, to a certain extent, but I think it goes too far—farther than he intends—farther than his explanation indicates was his intention. Now, it was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, in a very early case, that society had not all power; that society could not take property away from A and give it to B. And society can not declare an innocent man guilty. I hold that is the law. Now, you are going to hold A civilly liable for the criminal act of B, and they say that is good law. I deny it, because this Convention can do no such thing. My judgment is, that if this should be inserted in the Constitution, any enlightened tribunal would pronounce it void, for the reason that one man cannot be held liable, civilly or criminally, for the crime of another. This provision proposes to do so. Therefore, unless my friend accepts this amendment, I cannot vote for the proposition.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I am in hopes the gentleman from San Joaquin will not accept any amendments. I am in favor of this amendment as it stands now, and I do not see how honorable delegates can get up here and raise such a cry against a measure which is as just as this. I don't see how they can say that innocent men are to be held responsible for the acts of corrupt men. I want these corporations made responsible. I want them to make persons give bonds and security, so that when depositors take money and deposit with banking corporations, or transact any other kind of business with them, they will be secured. Now, if the directors are not to be responsible, I don't know who is. Somebody has got to pocket the losses when losses occur, and if the officials are not to be responsible, then the loss must fall upon the depositors. Here the hard-fisted yeoman, the working men, and the working women of the country have to stand the loss of their little savings in order that the innocent director may go free. They say we must not make a law that will punish an innocent director. The innocent must not suffer for the acts of the guilty, they say. Well, sir, if somebody is not made responsible, these robberies will continue. Which is better, that an innocent director should suffer, or that innocent men and women who have worked hard for their money should suffer? The director is in a position to help himself, the people are powerless. I say these robberies must stop. When a man puts his money in the bank in the morning, he don't know whether he is going to get it out at night or not. The Constitution is the place for this provision, notwithstanding the opinions of all the corporation lawyers in the State or here.

SPEECH OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: The arguments against the proposition of the gentleman from San Joaquin, so far as I have been able to understand them, seem to consist of three propositions. The first was that the existing laws were sufficient. The second is that the liability imposed is too great, and the third is that the power of the corporations of this State may be so great as to overwhelm us if we insert the provisions in our Constitution.

The first branch of the argument, namely, that the present remedy is sufficient, is not good argument, because the people are demanding a provision that will protect them and enable them to get their money. I say they have already suffered much, and you cannot put them away by simply telling them that you can employ counsel and bring the criminals to prosecution. Their reply will be that they have lost their all, or at least, that they have lost all that they can afford to lose, and that the indemnity they want is something that will reinstate them in their lost possessions. But, turning to the Penal Code—but first, attention has been called to the Civil Code by gentlemen of recognized ability as lawyers, and I assume that the provisions to which attention was called, are the only provisions upon this subject. Section three hundred and nine of the Civil Code is as follows:

"SEC. 309. The directors of corporations must not make dividends except from the surplus profits arising from the business thereof; nor must they divide, withdraw, or pay to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock; nor must create debts beyond their subscribed capital stock, or reduce or increase the capital, except as hereinafter specially provided. For a violation of the provisions of this section, the directors under whose administration the same may have happened (except those who may have caused their dissent therefrom to be entered at large on the minutes of the directors, at the time, or where not present when the same did happen), are, in their individual and private capacity, jointly and severally liable to the corporation, and to the creditors thereof, in the event of its dissolution, to the full amount of the capital stock so divided, withdrawn, paid out, or reduced, or debt contracted; and no statute of limitations is a bar to any suit against such directors for any sums for which they are made liable by this section. There may, however, be a division and distribution of the capital stock of any corporation, which remains after the payment of all debts, upon its dissolution or the expiration of its term of existence."

Now, that has reference to the single instance of the withdrawal of money from the funds of the corporation for the purpose of paying too great dividends; and in that case only provides for the liability of those officers where persons enter their protest. This provision does not affect the matter under consideration. That imposes no liability of the kind set out in this amendment. Now, the second section of the Civil Code referred to by gentlemen upon the other side is section three hundred and sixteen. It reads as follows:

"SEC. 316. Any officer of a corporation who willfully gives a certificate, or willfully makes an official report, public notice, or entry in any of the records or books of the corporation, concerning the corporation or its business, which is false in any material representation, shall be liable for all the damages resulting therefrom to any person injured thereby; and if two or more officers unite or participate in the commission of any of the acts herein designated, they shall be jointly and severally liable."

It is plain that that section is not a remedy, for it only refers to the making of false reports, etc. It is equally plain that if these provisions did cover the subject, they are not in the constitutional law—they are not a part of the unalterable law of the land, where the history of the country points as the proper place to put them.

Now, turn to the question of liability, and I say it seems strange that gentlemen will argue in favor of liability for the people who do business, and yet want no liability attached to them when they embark in corporate enterprises. Why, sir, if there is to be no liability in our case, there would scarcely be any liability at all. If I have a partner in my business, and he acts without my knowledge or consent, am I not liable? It is true I am innocent. But I have placed myself in a position where public policy and the law demands that I should be liable. Now, a common carrier is engaged in carrying money, and the money is lost or stolen, is not the common carrier liable? And yet the common carrier may be perfectly innocent. But public policy and law has required it. If I send a boy in my office out to collect a sum of money, and he misappropriates it, am I not liable, however innocent? Public policy and the law exacts the liability. The logical conclusion of the arguments on the other side is that the officers shall not be responsible for anything.

MR. WILSON. If the gentleman will allow me. Suppose you have two boys in your office, and you send them out to collect money, and one of them steals the money and leaves, are you going to make the other boy pay the loss—hold him responsible?

MR. FREEMAN. I have to pay it.

MR. WILSON. But who should pay you? It is your money—one of them steals it—and according to this amendment you might hold the other boy responsible.

MR. BARNES. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to what I endeavored to say. I know he would not desire to misinterpret me, but from the fact that he is so far removed from me he probably did not understand me clearly. I said that if it was even desirable to have such a provision as this, it did not appear to me that it should be put in the Constitution, but that it belonged in the Code, and I called attention to the Civil Code and Penal Code, and showed that the Legislature had been acting upon this and kindred subjects, and had got so far as to put these various provisions in the Code; and then I said if this provision was deserving of a place in the Constitution the others were just as good, and much more specific, and ought to go in too. That is the way in which I alluded to it. That we ought not to undertake to legislate upon it, but that we ought to make a general declaration of principles. In that respect I do not think the gentleman fairly stated the argument.

MR. FREEMAN. I may have misunderstood the object of the argument. I know the distinguished gentleman spoke of the impropriety of inserting the whole Penal Code in the Constitution. I understood him to refer to the Penal Code and the Civil Code.

MR. BARNES. I quoted the Code to show that they had been legislating upon this subject, and that if one of the provisions was entitled to go in, they all ought to go in. That is the only point I had in alluding to it.

MR. FREEMAN. I may be unfortunate in my understanding. I only repeated it according to my understanding; I do not want to enter into any question of memory. But to return to the question of liability. We have had a provision in our Constitution which looked to the liability of the stockholders for the debt and liabilities of the corporation. For many years, at least, we have had those statutory enactments necessary to give life and vitality to that provision. Now, each Legislature has maintained the proposition that the stockholders of a corporation ought to be liable for such proportion of its debts and liabilities as their stock bore to the whole capital stock of the corporation or association. Upon the sympathetic arguments presented here, that is all wrong. Now, are not the stockholders upon the question of innocence, at least, more likely to be innocent than a director. They have the election of directors, and the directors assume and have the sole right to manage the affairs of the corporation. It is the Board of Directors, acting as a body, that authorize the making of contracts, and the employment of men to manage the business. They have far greater opportunities to make themselves conversant with the workings of the corporation than the stockholders have, and I say every reason which has impelled us, every reason which impelled the Legislature, to vote for the liability of the stockholders, would impel us to vote for the liability of the directors.

Now, in regard to the question of public policy, this is the condition of affairs that has been developed in the history of this State: that a Board of Trustees are elected; that they assume the management of the affairs of the corporation, and thereupon they proceed to bleed the public and the stockholders in every way possible. And that condition of affairs has arrived when it is incumbent upon this Convention to do everything it can possibly do to discourage these evil acts on the part of the Board of Directors. Now, in regard to liability. In the first place, it is assumed no man need assume a position of that kind, unless he is willing to bear the responsibility. He has the opportunity to know what is going on. Now, in respect to embezzlements taking place, it has already been explained that the directors may relieve themselves of all responsibility or liability, by requiring bonds of the officers of the corporation. Now, in regard to misappropriation of money. It necessarily assumes an illegal act. It necessarily assumes some act which the body had no right to do. Now you say that the minority director is liable for this act, even though he protests against it—if he votes against it and protests against it. He does not perform his whole duty when he contents himself with voting against it and entering his protest. If it is an unlawful act, the law provides some means of preventing it, and it is his duty to take such legal proceedings as will prevent the consummation of the act. And it is because men have not done this that the people have suffered. It is because these men have not stood up and done their duty that abuses have existed, and this provision is to compel them to do their duty. And I say farther that it is not a sufficient answer to the proposition to show that such contingencies may occasionally occur, because the question on every law, and every proposition, is not, is it wholly right or is it wholly wrong; but upon the whole, is there more of right in it than there is of wrong. And I say the fact that some innocent director should, at some almost impossible contingency, suffer, does not stop us from inserting the clause that will protect those who are uniformly innocent, the people who have become victims to our present corporate system. The eloquent gentlemen on the other side have waxed eloquent in sympathetic appeals for the innocent director. Let them give their sympathies to the widows and orphans who have been robbed by the present system. If I see that I must do a wrong here I will do that wrong to the director, who is capable, who has the means of information to protect himself, rather than that the wrong shall be against the public who stand outside and have no opportunity of knowing what the secret working of the institution is. Nor is it true that directors are mere agents in the ordinary sense of the word. Ordinarily an agent obeys a superior. He does what the superior tells him to do. But the directors of corporations are not agents in that sense of the term; they meet as a Board; they vote; they dispose of the business and disburse the funds of the institution. They ask no superior what they shall do, therefore in that view they partake more of the character of principals than agents.

Now, sir, the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations rose early in the day, and undertook to explain that this matter was voted down in the Committee on Corporations. As I listened to his speech I came to the conclusion that he was for this proposition; as I listened further I came to the conclusion that he was against the proposition; and finally I came to the conclusion that he was on all sides of the proposition. [Laughter.]

MR. ESTEE. Did you ever hear me say a word on this floor in favor of this amendment.

MR. FREEMAN. If I had heard you say explicitly you were either one way or the other, I would have known where you were.

MR. ESTEE. I wish to ask the gentleman if my statement to this house was not this: that I was in favor of a proposition that would hold the parties who do the wrong to a strict accountability for that wrong.

MR. FREEMAN. My understanding was that the gentleman was on both sides of the question. My understanding was in the second place, that he was willing to vote for this amendment if the word "misappropriation" was stricken out, and that he took it to be a most infamous thing that the corporation officers should be responsible for the embezzlement of its agents.

Now one word more in reference to the threats that have been heard here about loading down the Constitution. I do say this: that if the Constitution we shall propose, cannot be adopted without the consent of the corporation power of this State, I hope it will be defeated. [Applause.]

SPEECH OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: It must be borne in mind that this provision, if adopted, will be prospective only in its operations. It is not retroactive. It does not impose any liability for the past. It is a rule for the future; and it says, in effect, that when this Constitution shall have been adopted and become operative, that such and such liabilities on the part of directors or trustees shall be hereafter incurred by them as part of the organic law of this State. They will take their offices under it, knowing the law, and realizing their responsibility under it. In this there is no hardship, no injustice.

It is true, there is no general law that may not in special and exceptional cases work apparent wrong. However uniform the law may be, there will be some instances where it appears to work injustice. But, sir, we have started out here by proclaiming in the Constitution that all our laws shall be uniform; and why insert such a proposition as that? Manifestly because it is right; because it commends itself to the judgment and common sense of every man in the State. It should be our boast that we are to live and prosper under the equal laws. They should be as uniform as the dew which descends upon the valleys. This proposition applies to all corporations. We are seeking to incorporate this provision in the Constitution, also, because it is founded upon the great principles of honesty and fair dealing.

In founding a fundamental law for the government of the people, to which these laws shall conform, this should be the permeating idea. Let us look, then, closely at this proposition and the construction legitimately to be placed upon it. "The directors or trustees of corporations and joint stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporations or joint stock associations."

It is the directors or trustees who are to be liable, and liable for what? For embezzlement or misappropriation. Gentlemen opposing this proposition are instancing cases of theft and robbery. That has nothing to do with this amendment. It is not incorporated in it. It says embezzlement, and what is embezzlement? An unlawful conversion of the property of another when the person converting is in the lawful possession of it. The gist of the crime in a bailee is the unlawful conversion of property in his possession which belongs to another. In the case of larceny, the guilty party has not possession of the property at the time of the commission of the offense. The liability sought to be enforced is limited to cases only of embezzlement or misappropriation.

Well, sir, if these bank directors stand, and wish to stand before the public, assuming an attitude of superior honesty, saying, in effect, that they will take charge of the money of the people if they will intrust it to them, then there should be a corresponding obligation on their part to select proper employés, and to make good any loss incurred by their appointment, from embezzlement or misappropriation. With this sword of Damocles hanging over them, they will select their best men. They will select those men who are above reproach and without fear of reproach. They will select them with a view to their own liability, and also to the responsibility of the persons so chosen. For their own protection they may require bonds from their appointees, if they so desire.

Besides, sir, the directors are not forced to occupy that position. It is voluntary on their part to sustain that relationship to the corporation. Their interests are the interests of the stockholders, and the interests of the stockholders are theirs. The effect of incorporating this proposition into the Constitution will be not only to throw additional safeguards around the public, but to inspire confidence in our banks and bank officers.

I believe it will commend itself to the people of this State; and, inasmuch as other gentlemen have said they desired themselves on record on this question, I, too, wish my name to appear on the record as voting in favor of this eminently just provision. While these are my views at present, I am frank to say that I am always ready to be convinced; and, if in the course of any debate on this proposition which may occur now or hereafter, it shall appear that its adoption will be injurious to the public interests, I shall be governed not by my present impressions, but by the public interests. With a slight change in the phraseology, I can adopt the sentiment of Horace, in his Epistle to Marcenus: "Bound to swear to the ipse dixit of no master, whither my judgment carries me thither I am borne a welcome guest."

REMARKS OF MR. OVERTON.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: I expect at the conclusion of the Convention to go home to my people. I expect to see them. I am not afraid to go on the record on this proposition. On this particular point I want them to know just how I stand. I regard it as a matter of very great importance—vital importance—to the interests of the people of this State. Now, sirs, if the gentlemen here who seem to have a hostility and prejudice against corporations—and there are some—if they wish to insert in the Constitution that we are about to frame for the people of this State a clause against them—opposed to them—I can't say what my position may be. If they wish to do away with all banking institutions, let them come direct to the point at once. But, sir, I don't desire to have an article inserted in this Constitution that in effect does that, or will cause a great many banks to disincorporate. Now, sir, I belong to the directorship of a bank, and it is with difficulty we can get good men to act as directors of this institution. We have a little county, and represent some five or six persons. I know that it is a position not sought after. I have the honor to occupy a position as director of one bank, and I have never sought it myself—would rather not have it—but somebody has got to assume these duties. Now, in our bank, speaking for myself as well as others, if this personal liability clause is adopted, such as seems to be designed by this amendment, I do not think there is many of our banks in our county that could get a Board of Directors. There is no pay in it. Gentlemen say they may take a bond. That might be—I can't say. What kind of a bond? What amount of bond would they take? That would be according to the amount of money that passes through the hands of the officers of the bank. That amount of money that men have in their custody would be so large that they would not be able to give bonds enough to cover it. It would come to this, that nobody could get to be Cashier in any bank in this State but those who are immensely rich. This would work an inconvenience, for the deserving poor men of the country who are capable of occupying such positions would be shut out entirely. The men we have in our banks are not generally rich men, and I must say here that there has been no defaults up in any of the banks in the county which I live in, and they are all safe and sound. And I fear that because one or two banks in this State have acted a little scaly and gentlemen have lost by it, that they imagine every bank to be on the same footing. Gentlemen might as well say that if one County Treasurer in the State is a defaulter, every other County Treasurer should be looked on with suspicion. There is no reason in it. They do good. It is true that occasionally, like everything else, there may be some bad men engaged in banking, but it is no reason why we should all be pursued. The banks of this State are useful in many ways. We cannot get along without them. I know that if this provision goes into the Constitution, it will have the effect of crippling the banks of this State, and I don't believe the gentlemen have been authorized by their constituency to do any such thing. I do not believe my constituent would sanction any measure that would endanger and cripple all the banks in this State. It is true, I am willing to see them guard against such institutions as they have had down in San Francisco and some other parts of the State, who have really acted wrongfully towards the people of the State, but I am not in favor of crippling honest institutions who are doing a legitimate business all over the State. I do not believe there is any law in the country that will justify us in holding the directors of a bank responsible for the acts of the officers of the bank. It has not been done anywhere in the United States, it has never been done in this State. There is no place you can find where it goes to the extent that this amendment does. The director is responsible for the good behavior of the officers of the bank. He gets the best man he can find. In case he should be deceived in his judgment, he is liable to lose all he is worth in the world. Under those circumstances no man is going to take a position as director, because it is a dangerous matter, and he is liable to wake up any morning and find his entire fortune demolished by the wrongful acts of one of the officers. If the gentlemen want to kill the banks, let them come direct to the point. I don't know as it would make any difference to me if they did disincorporate, but I don't believe we are authorized to come here and insert any such provision as that. I think we are going too far. I don't know that I have much more to say. I wish my constituents to know just exactly how I stand in this proposition. I may be wrong, but those are my views. I don't think they ever sent me here to incorporate something into the organic law of the State that would trammel the whole banks of the State.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried—ayes, 79; noes, 53.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, the Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again. What is the pleasure of the Convention?

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. O'DONNELL. I move we go into night sessions.

MR. HOWARD. I move we now adjourn.

MR. GRACE. I move to adjourn until seven o'clock.

THE PRESIDENT. Not in order. The motion is to adjourn.

Division being called, the motion prevailed—ayes, 82; and at five o'clock and five minutes P. M., the Convention adjourned.

FORTY-EIGHTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Thursday, November 14th, 1878.

The Convention met in regular session at ten o'clock A. M., President Hoge in the chair.

The roll was called, and members found in attendance as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: At the request of the Grand Lodge I. O. G. T., I have the honor to present the following petition and memorial in favor of a section in the Constitution relative to local option, and move its reference to the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects:

To the honorable the Constitutional Convention of the State of California:

We, the undersigned, respectfully petition your honorable body to insert in the new Constitution of this State, a clause similar to that now in force in the State of Texas, to wit:

SECTION —. The Legislature shall, at its first session, enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, voting precinct, town, or city, by a majority vote, from time to time, may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits.

Following is the memorial which accompanied the petition:

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention:

On behalf of the petition accompanying this memorial, transmitted herewith, your memorialists would respectfully represent that the proposition embodied in the prayer of your petitioners, to wit: "The Legislature shall, at its first session, enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, voting precinct, town, or city, by a majority vote, from time to time, may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits," is identical with a clause presented by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Texas, and ratified by the people of that great commonwealth.

The proposition presented raises but a single issue before your honorable body, to wit: the expediency of the local prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. In this statement we assume that the inherent right of the people to regulate or to prohibit by law the said traffic will not be denied. The principle which commends the proposition brought before you by this petition, is that it refers the question of expediency of prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors to the people. This principle is in consonance with the very genius of republican institutions. The people of separate localities should have the right to determine for themselves as to whether the sale of intoxicating drink is inimical to the best interests of their respective communities. This application of the principle of local sovereignty is not new, but extends already to other questions of local character. We assume that those citizens interested in the sale of intoxicating beverages cannot reasonably object to the adoption of this proposition. No good citizen will demand protection in the right to engage in a business which, in the judgment of a majority of his neighbors, is demoralizing to the neighborhood; and if the traffic in liquors is not destructive of the morals and good order of a community, these separate communities may safely be trusted with such determination of the question as the facts warrant. In the opinion of your memorialists any opposition to the proposition on the part of those engaged in the traffic in liquors must be based upon the ground that, should the proposition be incorporated into the Constitution, many communities would decide against the continuation of the traffic. This is, in effect, an admission that in all such communities the traffic is now carried on against the enlightened judgment and moral conscience of a majority of the people resident in such communities. The proposition herewith presented, if adopted, would relegate the whole question to the arbitration of the ballot box; and representing those who entertain the opinion that the traffic in intoxicating drinks is destructive of the best and highest interests of the commonwealth, we cheerfully submit the grave question involved to this high arbitrament. To deny the prayer of this petition will, in the opinion of your petitioners, be in effect a denial of a sacred right. The right to determine what is necessary and appropriate to accomplish the ends of government, establish order, and promote the general welfare of society, resides in the people, and all we ask is, that this right shall be recognized in the determination of the issues arising out of contending opinions concerning the character and moral tendencies of the unrestricted traffic in intoxicating liquors. The nature of the proposition herewith presented is such as to absolve us from the necessity of presenting any considerations or arguments tending to establish the expediency of prohibiting the liquor traffic. We have no data upon which to found the assumption that in practice the proposition presented would result in such prohibition; the result would be dependent upon the will of the majority of the voters in the local subdivisions named. But it is obvious that the perpetuity or prohibition of the traffic will depend upon the verdict of the people, in whom resides the right to determine the necessity or reasonableness of all prohibitory laws.

And, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. KELLEY, of Yolo, presented the following petition, signed by several thousand citizens of California, requesting the insertion of a clause in the Constitution providing for a local option law, or civil damage law, or both. Following is the memorial:

To the honorable gentlemen, the members of the Constitutional Convention now assembled:

We, the residents and taxpayers of the State of California, fully realizing the importance of this session, and the arduous duties and responsibilities that necessarily rest upon each individual member of said body, in the exercise of the powers vested in him; and realizing that many grave questions will present themselves to any body of men who shall assemble to consider such great facts as must necessarily arise in the framing of a Constitution to govern and direct the people of any country, State, or district, and especially our own loved and endeared State of California, where Nature has been so lavish and Providence so wise.

And yet, with all our boasted advantages of climate, productions, mineral wealth, scenery, etc., we have observed, with sorrow and pain, the rapid and constant increase of crime, and the alarming tendency toward idleness, with all its attendant elements of misery, wretchedness, and want; and in vain do we try to blind ourselves to the frequent necessity of enlarging our State Prisons and lunatic asylums, for even now they are crowded to their utmost capacity. And believing that no greater question can present itself to your honorable body than the education and protection of society, and while we cheerfully submit to and pay the taxes levied upon us for education and other purposes, we believe that it is unwise and inexpedient to spend millions of dollars for education, and then admit of the manufacture and traffic of that which destroys the mental faculties and poisons and destroys the mind. While we have explicit confidence in the judgment and integrity of those we have chosen to represent us, and believing that it will be their highest aim to carry out the will of the people they represent, when such will is made known, therefore we would petition your honorable body:

That you will insert in the Constitution a clause granting to the people the right to say whether they will allow the sale of intoxicating liquors in their midst or not (better known as local option), or a civil damage law, or both.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

MINORITY REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SUFFRAGE.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. President: At my request the report of the majority of the Committee on Right of Suffrage was ordered to lie on the table until the minority report was received. I now present the minority report, and ask that it be printed with the other.

Following is the minority report:

Honorable Joseph P. Hoge:

The undersigned, a minority of your Committee on Right of Suffrage, while concurring in most of the conclusions of the majority, most earnestly dissents from their recommendations providing that the Legislature shall have power to extend the elective franchise.

Under our form of government the original, supreme, paramount authority is in the people—that is to say, in those holding the ballot; and limitation or extension of the ballot is an act affecting original authority, and can be legitimately performed only by the sovereign people, exercising the right of a principal to ratify or reject the act of the agent; but, waiving the legal principle involved, and considering the question from the standpoint of reason and common sense, the first reflection is that the right to vote carries with it the co-relative obligation of citizenship. But a little reflection will convince all candid minds that the discharge of such obligations is utterly incompatible with the moral, social, and physical conditions of women in civilized society.

Another and serious objection to the proposition is that it would surround the Legislature by a lobby influence detrimental and injurious to all just and wise legislation.

This radical innovation upon our electoral system is not demanded by the sober, conservative people, but by a few professional agitators and schismatic propagandists, whose stock in trade would be indefinitely replenished by the adoption of the recommendation of the majority of your committee. And the future legislative hall would be but another name for a beleaguered fortress, behind whose paper ramparts your statesmen and law-makers would vainly seek shelter from the attacks of crinoline and silk sophistry, and blandishments, smiles, and tears.

Graceful styles, and winning wiles,
Charms replete, your hero greet;
In dulcet strains, the siren reigns.

But we present our objection to the whole scheme of female suffrage, an objection as broad as humanity, as deep as human affection, and as comprehensive as human aspirations, viz.: that it would slowly, but surely, necessarily, and inevitably, drag woman down from the lofty sphere which is her birthright, and her realm by the patent eternal of Nature and Nature's God. When we attempt to reverse Nature's laws, we only violate them, and speedily and surely reap the penalty of that violation; and when woman leaves the domain which is her's by divine right, and comes down—down into the political arena—and paddles her own canoe in the historic pool, runs for Constable, is elected Alderman, and finally goes to the Legislature to warm a contested seat, will anybody ask: are her garments as white as of yore, when she proudly sat upon her legitimate throne, commanding our reverence and loving devotion?

Let us not desecrate the temple wherein man's noblest, highest, holiest aspirations are crystallized in that sweetest word of human tongue—home.

JAMES CAPLES.

THE PRESIDENT. The report will be printed, together with the majority report, and the proposed article on suffrage.

THE HOUR OF MEETING.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I ask that the matter introduced by Mr. Noel, relative to the change in the rule, be taken from the table.

Carried.

THE SECRETARY read the proposed amendment to Rule One:

"RULE 1. The Convention shall meet each day of sitting at nine o'clock A. M., unless it shall adjourn to some other hour."

MR. NOEL. Mr. President: The amendment to the rule which I propose will save about one third to the working time of the Convention. I hope it will be adopted.

MR. GRACE. I move to lay it on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order. Mr. Noell had the floor.

MR. NOELL. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we should do something to expedite business. In the earlier days of the Convention it was a correct rule to meet at ten o'clock in the morning, because then most of the work was being done by the committees. Now, however, the committees have reported, and there is no reason why we should not perform an honest day's labor for our money.

MR. GRACE. Is my motion now in order?

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: It is pretty hard for the members to get here at ten o'clock, and I move that it be laid on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, to lay the motion on the table.

The Convention divided, and the motion was lost—ayes, 50; noes, 91.

MR. BLACKMER. I move to amend, by making it nine thirty, instead of nine o'clock.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I move to make it seven o'clock in the morning.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I hope the amendment to the rule will be voted down. There is such a thing as making haste slowly, and I, for one, do not wish to be driven through this Convention at a railroad or race-horse speed. This body has been as industrious as any body of men that ever convened in the State of California. We have been hustled from breakfast into the committee rooms, and then called into Convention at ten o'clock in the morning, and into the committees again at twelve o'clock, and back into Convention at two o'clock, with scarcely time for our lunch, and then into committees again at seven o'clock in the evening, and so on every day from the very commencement of this Convention. There has been nothing done but work, work, from the very beginning, without time for thought or digestion. Now, sir, the work of the committees is well advanced, and we have got into Committee of the Whole, where we are endeavoring to shape our business, and I hope we shall proceed with the business. We will accomplish our work as rapidly, and as well, if we take time to think as well as talk. We come into Convention, and it is nothing but talk, talk. And now, sir, if gentlemen, instead of coming here at nine o'clock to commence talking, will spend the time in boiling down what they have to say, they will improve themselves, and advance our interests, and the interests of the State. We shall succeed in doing the work better, and get through quicker, than we will to come here at an early hour in the morning and sit until a late hour in the evening and do nothing but talk. I am not opposed to talk, but it should be talk that is the result of thought, and to some purpose, and not mere idle chatter. Let it be done, but let it be preceded by some thought, some study; and give us time for that thought. I am not afraid that one hundred days will run out, or that one hundred and fifty days will run out. The Constitution that is made in less than six months is not worth the paper it is written on. I am not afraid because the time may run out, or that the appropriation will be exhausted. I came here to stay till the work is done. No matter if the hundred days run out, no matter if the appropriation runs out, no matter if it takes six months, I shall stay till the work is done; and I do not want to be hurried. That is the reason why I shall vote against all these amendments. Eight hours here in Convention is enough.

MR. GRACE. Is an amendment in order?

THE PRESIDENT. No, sir.

MR. GRACE. When it is, I shall offer an amendment.

MR. INMAN. I hope the amendment will pass. I am sorry the Workingman should be broken of his rest in the morning. I hope the Convention shall go to work at nine o'clock. I don't see any difficulty about it—between the hours of four in the evening and nine in the morning. The gentleman talks about talk, talk, talk. I think he does his proportion of it. Now, I hope this amendment will pass.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: I call for the previous question.

MR. WYATT. I second the motion.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE PRESIDENT. The main question has been ordered. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, to meet at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

Division being called, the amendment was lost—ayes, 49; noes, 89.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Lake, Mr. Noel, to meet at nine o'clock.

MR. GRACE. Is an amendment in order?

THE PRESIDENT. No, sir; the previous question cuts off all amendments.

MR. CONDON. I want to call for the ayes and noes on the question offered by the gentleman from Lake.

MR. McFARLAND. I call for the names of those demanding the ayes and noes.

MR. LARKIN. Ayes and noes.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Ayes and noes.

MR. NOEL. Ayes and noes.

MR. LARUE. Ayes and noes.

THE PRESIDENT. The ayes and noes have been demanded by the requisite number. The Secretary will call the roll.

THE SECRETARY called the roll.

MR. O'DONNELL, when his name was called, declined to vote.

MR. McFARLAND. I move that the gentleman be excused from voting.

MR. TULLY. It is very important that the gentleman should vote.

MR. WELLIN. I insist upon his answering to his name.

THE PRESIDENT announced the result as follows:

AYES.

THE PRESIDENT. It requires a two-thirds vote, and the amendment to the rule is rejected. [Applause.]

MR. ESTEE. I wish to embrace this opportunity, Mr. President—though the matter does not embrace any great question—to enter my protest against any demonstration following any vote of this Convention. As far as my experience goes, it is contrary to every principle adopted in legislative bodies, and while this question is one of no very great importance, I wish to say that from this on I shall insist on the enforcement of the rule, and protest against any demonstrations of any kind whatever, either applause or disapprobation.

THE PRESIDENT. I will take this occasion to make a statement in regard to this matter. It is the universal rule of legislative bodies that no tokens of approbation or disapprobation shall be allowed. Owing to certain circumstances, the Chair has heretofore declined to interfere when demonstrations of approval have been made. I think now we should. It should cease, and that the rule should be enforced, and no tokens of approbation or disapprobation allowed. If you permit one, very soon we will have to endure the other, and hereafter the Chair will enforce the rule that no applause or signs of disapprobation will be permitted upon the merits of any vote, and I shall expect the Convention to sustain the Chair.

TIME OF RECESS.

THE PRESIDENT. There is a second amendment offered by the gentleman, to amend Rule Two. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"RULE 2. The Convention shall take a recess each day, from twelve o'clock M. to half-past one o'clock P. M."

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of this amendment to the rule.

MR. CONDON. I move to strike out "half-past one," and insert "one."

MR. TINNIN. I move to lay the whole subject-matter on the table.

The motion prevailed, and the whole matter went to the table.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to further consider the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I think I was entitled to the floor, with due deference to the gentleman.

THE PRESIDENT. I intended to recognize the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman.

MR. ESTEE. I withdraw the motion.

AMENDING RULES TWENTY-ONE AND THIRTY-TWO.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I desire now to call up my notice to amend Rules Twenty-one and Thirty-two. I know that the Chairman of the Committee on Rules yesterday deprecated the practice of amending rules constantly; but, Mr. President, where a necessity exists, I think the rules should be amended. With due deference to the Committee on Rules, I think this Convention has found that Rule Twenty-one is not the rule we want. The amendment to Rule Twenty-one is this:

"Strike out all after the word 'deemed' in the third line, and add the following: 'divisible; and a motion to strike out on a division being negatived, or a motion to insert being decided in the affirmative, shall be equivalent to agreeing to the matter in that form, but shall not preclude further amendment; provided, that substitutes for pending propositions shall, for the purposes of amendment, be treated as original propositions.'"

MR. TINNIN. I move that the whole subject-matter be laid on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin.

Carried.

LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS AND TRUSTEES.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I now move that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The pending amendments to section three are before the committee. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, to the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster.

SPEECH OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I cannot support the proposition introduced by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry. While I do not wish to consume the valuable time of this body, still I do not desire to see such a proposition as this adopted without entering my protest against it. Now, sir, I am at a loss to know upon what principle the amendment can be sustained, unless it is upon this: that the subordinate officers of a corporation are the mere creatures of the President and trustees of the corporation, subject entirely to their control, removable at their pleasure. As I understood the distinguished author of the amendment yesterday, he bases the proposition entirely upon that ground. Now, sir, as I understand it, that is an entire misconception of the law governing corporations in this State. I call attention to sections three hundred and one and three hundred and three, of the Civil Code, governing the organization of corporations, the appointment and election of these officers, and the duties of those officers, as well as the tenure of their offices. Section three hundred and one provides as follows:

"SEC. 301. Every corporation formed under this title must, within one month after filing articles of incorporation, adopt a code of by-laws for its government not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of this State. The assent of stockholders representing a majority of all the subscribed capital stock, or of a majority of the members, if there be no capital, stock, is necessary to adopt by-laws, if they are adopted at a meeting called for that purpose; and in the event of such meeting being called, two weeks notice of the same by advertisement in some newspaper published in the county in which the principal place of business of the corporation is located, or if none is published therein, then in a paper published in an adjoining county, must be given by order of the acting President. The written assent of the holders of two thirds of the stock, or of two thirds of the members, if there be no capital, shall be effectual to adopt a code of by-laws without a meeting for that purpose."

"SEC. 303. A corporation may, by its by-laws, where no other provision is specially made, provide for:

"1. The time, place, and manner of calling and conducting its meetings;

"2. The number of stockholders or members constituting a quorum;

"3. The mode of voting by proxy;

"4. The time of the annual election for directors, and the mode and manner of giving notice thereof;

"5. The compensation and duties of officers;

"6. The manner of election and the tenure of office of all officers other than the directors; and,

"7. Suitable penalties for violation of by-laws, not exceeding, in any case, one hundred dollars for any one offense."

Now, the manner of the election is dictated by the stockholders, and the tenure of office is dictated by the stockholders, and it is the stockholders who delegate this power to the directors. They say to them: "You shall exercise this power," and when they do exercise it, they are in the exercise of a mere delegated power from the stockholders, merely executing the will of the stockholders; merely doing what they direct them to do. And I say, sir, when they have honestly and faithfully discharged the trust reposed in them, that they are no longer responsible to the stockholders for the mode in which they performed it, because the directors or trustees cannot, by their own act, independent of the action of the stockholders, remove these men from office, because the tenure of office is fixed by the stockholders themselves. It seems to me we might as well attempt to put the responsibility upon the President of the United States for the defalcation of the Secretary of the Treasury. You might as well charge the defalcation of the Treasurer of this State upon the Governor of the State. And beyond all this, it is not practical. Why, sir, in many cases, these officers are elected by a direct vote of the stockholders, and the tenure of office fixed in the by-laws. Certainly it would be an outrage to provide that these directors should be responsible to the stockholders, out of their own private fortunes, for moneys embezzled by the officers that the stockholders had chosen, by a direct vote, and installed in office. They are not subject to removal by the directors. The stockholders say: "You are chosen for such a length of time." Now, I say it would be a most unjust provision to compel the directors to answer for the crimes of these officers. I know of only one precedent for a thing of this kind, and that is found in the Chinese government, where the family of an embezzler is held responsible for his acts. But this is a civilized nation, or supposed to be, and this amendment should have no place in our Constitution.

MR. CASSERLY. The result of that is, whenever a crime is committed the officer runs away, so as not to be thrown into prison.

MR. EDGERTON. It seems to me it is a dangerous proposition, and the weight of the load which this Constitution will have to carry ought to be considered. It can have no other effect than to load down the Constitution, and I am opposed to it. The Constitution will have load enough to carry without adding this last straw that will surely break its back.

SPEECH OF MR. MORELAND.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: Two of the delegates from Sonoma have been heard from, wishing to be placed on the record, and a third one from that county is now about to be heard from, and he, too, wants to be placed upon the record. It seems to me, sir, that the proposition of the gentleman from San Joaquin meets an absolute, positive requirement in the history of bank management in this State. It is unnecessary for me to recapitulate that history before this committee; it has already been ably and fully done. But it is a matter of fact, sir, well known to all, that the bank management in this State during the past three or four years been has simply an outrage upon honesty, upon commercial honor, and upon civilization itself. Instead of the best, and safest, and most reliable men of the State, and of the community, having been intrusted with the care of these institutions, they seem to have passed into the hands and under the control of the most vicious men of the country. Instead of being, as they ought to be, corporate institutions where the funds and savings of the poor are deposited and saved, and allowed to accumulate, they have become in many instances instruments of robbery and plunder. The people have lost confidence in them. They have come to look upon them pretty much in the same light that they look upon the gambling hells, and the very air is rife with suspicion and distrust toward these institutions, and the good banks are becoming tabooed because of the evils and abuses practiced by the bad. It seems to me that we owe it to the people of this State; it seems to me that we owe it to these banks which stand on a safe and solid foundation; and more than all we owe it to that class whom my friends on the right would denominate "thieving bank-smashers," to incorporate in the organic law some such provision as that proposed by the gentleman from San Joaquin. If this Committee of the Whole shall vote down this amendment, I hope when we get into Convention, where the ayes and noes may be called, that some member will have the hardihood to reintroduce this proposition, so that every member may get on the record to his heart's content. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

SPEECH OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: I have listened with much pleasure and attention to the many able arguments that have been presented upon both sides of this question, and, sir, I think they may all be summed up and resolved into one simple question. Admit that a great calamity has occurred to a public incorporated institution, who shall suffer the consequences—he who innocently and in good faith placed reliance on the declarations of the managers of that institution, or he whose duty, whose business it was to guard that institution and prevent that calamity? Any man, I hold, who lends his name to another man, or to an irresponsible corporation, commits a crime in the face of the law. Any man, I hold, who, by lending his name, decoys the people, commits a crime in the face of justice. Any man, I hold, who, by reason of his widespread fame, and for a paltry gain, drives honest men to suicide, weak women to despair, and poor orphans into misery, is guilty of the blackest murder. Let this amendment pass as a protecting shield to the weak, and honest, and industrious. Let this amendment pass as a standing menace to the strong, and corrupt, and treacherous.

SPEECH OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. I have no objection now, or at any other time, when questions of importance are before the Convention, to putting myself on record, and letting the people of this State know what views I have in reference to it. While I do not desire to occupy the time of this Convention at any great length, I do desire, briefly, to say that I am opposed to the proposition here, and I shall vote against it in its present form, now, and at all times, whenever it comes up. Sir, what is the proposition here? It is that the directors or trustees of all corporations in this State shall be personally and severally liable for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by any of the officers of such corporation or association. Now, we have heard a great deal of talk about banks, but I would remind gentlemen that banks are not the only corporations in this State, nor are they the most important corporations in the State. We have heard a good deal about tellers and clerks, and the importance of protecting the depositors against the stealing and misappropriation of clerks, etc. But who are the officers of the corporation? Who is a trustee, and who are the directors and trustees responsible for? Each individual? These directors, in pursuance of the by-laws, make one of their number President. They may permit the selection of some other person as Treasurer or Secretary. They elect these officers, whoever they are, and whatever they do they do in pursuance of the law, and in pursuance of the by-laws made by the stockholders themselves. Now, if they select one of their number President, he is selected in pursuance of the by-laws which the stockholders themselves have made. Suppose, now, that the Board of Trustees select one of their number, having been selected by the stockholders for that purpose, to act as President of the Board. The doctrine here is that if he shall misappropriate or embezzle any of the funds of the corporation, then each member of the Board is individually responsible for all that the President has done. If the President is selected, not by themselves, but by the stockholders direct, still each member of the Board is personally responsible to the extent of his fortune for every misappropriation or embezzlement of the President. So with the Treasurer. He may be selected by the trustees or he may be selected by the stockholders themselves. But whether selected in one way or the other, this amendment will make these directors personally and individually responsible for all his shortcomings, without the possibility of controlling him in any way, without fixing the term of office, without having put him in the place he occupies. I say it is radically wrong. There is nothing right, nothing just, nothing proper in any such proposition.

But it goes farther than that. Each director is individually and personally liable for the shortcomings of the associate directors. He becomes the bondsman for the directors who are selected by the stockholders themselves. Now, as I said before, banking corporations are not the only corporations in the State, nor are they the only ones that need protection. There are many corporations, organized for many purposes. I happen myself to be a stockholder in a corporation for the manufacture of woolen goods. The corporation has been a successful one. The Superintendent and President have been elected direct by the stockholders. The whole success of the concern is due to the efforts of the management. The Superintendent conducts the works and manages the workings. Suppose now, he having the whole charge, he is guilty of any shortcomings, and suppose you adopt this rule, and he embezzles or misappropriates the funds of the institution. The stockholders themselves have selected him and installed him in office; and suppose he embezzles the funds without his associate directors knowing anything about it. They are to be held responsible to the stockholders to the extent of their private fortunes. Would it be right? Must the others, who are not entitled to control the affairs of the institution, who had nothing to do with his appointment, be held responsible for his acts? Now you say that some of these banks have come short, have done wrong, have swindled the people and the stockholders out of their money. True, and banks and all other institutions are liable to come short, and it always will happen so long as the world lasts. But I undertake to say there has been as little bad management here as in any other part. I happen to know that there are savings banks in this State that have managed their business well. I happen to have something to do with a bank that has been in existence for ten years, and has done very great service to the community. Suppose now a mutual concern, where the depositors elect all the directors. There is no capital stock. They meet and select the directors. One of the directors has been for years President of the Board and President of the bank, and has been chosen every year for that position for the very purpose of making him President of the bank. He is voted for to be President, expected to be President, and nobody could run against him, because the depositors and stockholders have wanted him to be President and manager. Suppose now that he should embezzle the money, should the other directors, who have no control over him, should they be held responsible for his embezzlement? Would it be just, or right, or reasonable? I say not. Now why should this amendment be adopted? They say they want to stop some of these thieving concerns in San Francisco. Do you accomplish that end in this way, by any such provision as this? Can you succeed in doing it in this way? No. You will cripple all the honest institutions and prevent them from doing what they have been doing, but you will not stop the thieves. They will ply their trade still. These honest institutions, the ones that the people need, the ones that should be encouraged, are the ones you will strike with this provision. If you say that these directors shall be responsible for the misdeeds of others, you say that there shall be no honest business, no honest corporations in the State. You will stop the corporations that are engaged in the business of manufacturing. Now they talk about the tellers and bookkeepers of banks stealing and embezzling money. The teller is not an officer of the bank, and does not come within the meaning of this provision at all. As well might you talk of the engineer of a railroad, or the conductor, being officers of the company. He is an employé, and not an officer at all. Who are officers of a corporation? They are the trustees, the Treasurer, Secretary, and Superintendent. These others are employés, and not officers. Yet for all those whom the stockholders select the directors are made responsible. I protest against it in the interest of business, in the interest of common honesty, in the interest of the State. It is wrong in principle and wrong in practice.

SPEECH OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. President: I have listened very attentively to the able arguments of the gentlemen against the amendment proposed by Judge Terry, and it seems to me that I have heard no argument, as yet, that has convinced me that they are right Now, this is a very important matter, and it is possible that mistakes may be made, and I, for one, have thought somewhat seriously of this matter. Not only as to whether it is just, as to whether it is politic. but as to whether it is policy for this Convention to undertake to carry through this matter in the face of the opposition of the power of capital. With all these considerations, I am forced to the belief that we should adopt this amendment.

Now, these are troublous times, and the cause of it is as much in the bad management of banks, and the abuses of corporations, and in the abuses of the principal corporations, as anything else. Now, there is a disposition in this country to organize for everything, and the organization faculty has been abused. Organization is a good thing. Incorporations, to a certain extent, are beneficial. But, sir, it has been carried in this State to abuse in organization. Why is it that in every business transaction, every business department, incorporation is resorted to? Because, with incorporations, there is a chance for abuse, a chance for public deception, and they have been bled over and over again throughout the State, perhaps here worse than in any other State in the world. Now, I say, if there should be a mistake made here, it would be a mistake in favor of the people. I do not think, at all events, that it is possible for the people of California to endanger the corporations in any way. I think we have got to a position in this State where something should be done, because if there is anything that controls in this State, it is centralized capital in the shape of corporations, and it will be a question to be tested in this Convention, whether the people, through the organized mediums, shall control the government of the State, or whether it is to be controlled by the organized money powers of the State. Now, Mr. Chairman, the question seems to me to center right here. It is absolutely essential that there should be an unfailing responsibility placed somewhere on these corporations. Is it possible to place that responsibility, and if so, where shall it be placed? I answer yes, it is possible, and here is the place for it. Make these directors individually and personally responsible, and what will the result be? Why, no man will take a place of that kind under these corporations unless the stockholders will stand by him and back him up, and be responsible for him. The result will be that this responsibility placed here, will reach throughout all the branches of the corporation down to the stockholders themselves, and make them responsible throughout. Therefore, I say this is a good place to put the responsibility.

Now, it is possible that the directors can be secured. It is a business proposition. The stockholders, as it is now, are individually responsible for all the losses that occur in the business of the corporation. This only adds the matter of embezzlement and misappropriation. We have tried the old Constitution, and it has not proved sufficiently strong. It has been stronger than in any other State, and yet it has not been found sufficient. It then shows that there is something lacking, and that something stronger is wanted, and I say, it seems to me that this is an amendment that will meet the want, and cure some, if not all of the flagrant abuses which for so many years have been a blot on the name of our fair State, and I shall give it my hearty support.

SPEECH OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I have no wish to prolong this debate, but it seems to me there are one or two points that have not been made, which I wish to touch upon, and I would like to give a few of the reasons why I shall vote for the amendment. This debate has been one of surprises. I was surprised when the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, openly opposed it, and stated that he was opposed to making trustees liable, opposed to making trustees responsible for the due execution of the trust they have undertaken. I was surprised that any gentleman should take such a position. I was not surprised when the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, early in the debate, got astraddle of the amendment, and, as with a corkscrew, tried to pull out the objectionable word "misappropriated," that he might gulp down the remaining contents. But I was surprised further on, when he flung away his corkscrew and declared he wouldn't take the medicine at all, but was opposed to the whole villainous compound. I was surprised to see the gentleman take a position at all on anything. He is no doubt surprised at himself, as he has astonished all his friends. I was likewise surprised at the gentleman from San Francisco, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. In fact, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is a perennial surprise to me. I never know which most to admire, his ingenuity and skill or his eloquence. He always excels in whatever he undertakes; and whether it is when he puts up a dumb bell the size of a beer barrel, or delights an elite and fashionable metropolitan audience, I stand in awe of his transcendent abilities. I only wish to notice in this connection his attempt at pleasantry towards the mover of this amendment, suggesting that the gentleman had no patent right for his amendment—no patent right for the proposition—and that it was found in all the Codes, found in the Penal Code and in the Civil Code, and he proceeded to read the various sections, but he did not read any provision in the Civil Code, or in any other Code, that covers this amendment, or which makes trustees of a corporation responsible for the misappropriation or embezzlement of the funds of an institution over which they have control. He forgot to find that place, and for a very good reason—it is not there. But I will tell you what we do find in the Civil Code. I find the tracks of the same corporation trustees in the same section the gentleman read:

"The trustees of a corporation must not make dividends, except from the surplus profits arising from the business thereof; nor must they divide, withdraw, or pay to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock; nor must they create debts beyond their subscribed capital stock, except as hereinafter specially provided," and so on.

They are provisions, all of them, coming right up to the very verge of responsibility for the misappropriation of funds by others than themselves, but the responsibility does not reach to those over whom they exercise control, and whom they choose to execute the trusts which they assume. I fancy, sir, while I am reading these lines, I hear the corporate coin jingle in the committee rooms of the Legislature which passed this Code. I fancy I can read between the lines where large amounts of capital stock of corporations have been issued and charged to account for "India rubber." And while on this Civil Code business, let me allude to what the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, says. He says it will be such an unkind thing to make these innocent directors responsible for the execution of a trust by persons over whom they have no control, or their co-agents, and he cites sections three hundred and one and three hundred and three of the Civil Code. Let us see. Even supposing the case he cites to be true, and it is not true in one case in a thousand, where these very Cashiers and bookkeepers, and those sub-agents are not chosen by the directors themselves. Now, there is a section of the Code the gentleman did not read—I am sorry he is not in his seat—which is as follows:

"The corporate powers, business, and property of all corporations formed under this title must be exercised, conducted, and controlled by a Board of not less than five nor more than eleven directors, to be elected from among the holders of stock."

That is mandatory. That is the trust they assume when they assume the responsibility of trustees or directors. To control the business and property of corporations is the trust they assume. The property and the business and the powers shall be under the control of these trustees, and it is that control which they assume.

Mr. Chairman, this question has become narrowed down to a single point. The arguments all center upon that wonderful individual, that imaginary personage, the innocent director. Why, one would imagine from hearing the arguments of these gentlemen that Mark Twain's Innocents from the Holy Land were all turned loose here and made trustees and directors of banks. Mr. Chairman, there is no such thing in fact as an innocent director. He is an impossibility and a myth. He cannot exist. The case was cited here that a minority of a Board might possibly stand out and protest against the misappropriation of the money, and yet be unable to prevent its consummation, and then how unjust and cruel it would be to punish these innocent men for the acts of the majority. Why should the gentlemen use such arguments as that, or make such statements? I cannot imagine. Why, an innocent minority should know everything that is going on, and they have their remedy—publicity, law, injunction, resignation if need be, all these they can use to put a stop to it at any time. There is no such thing as an innocent trustee. And suppose there were; admit that there could be. We have adopted, almost without opposition from the other side of the house, a provision that the innocent stockholder shall be held liable for the trust which he assumes, and he has but one chance to exercise any control whatever, and that is when he drops his vote in the ballot box for trustee once a year, and yet he is liable to the entire extent of his interest in the corporation. And if that stockholder shall be held liable, not knowing anything about what the trustees are doing, nor having any control of their actions, how much more should the trustees be held liable? Why in the name of common sense, law, and of justice, shall we not hold the directors responsible—those who have assumed the responsibility of personally taking care of the corporate powers, and business, and property of the corporation? There has been no attempt to answer that, but simply an evasive talk about the innocence of directors, and all that sort of thing. It was said by the gentleman from Marin that it is against the moral sense of mankind to hold the innocent responsible for the acts of the guilty. Let us see whether it is or not. The substitute which we have adopted contradicts this. Innocent men are held responsible—they are held responsible every day—and in a variety of ways. We hold the innocent stockholder responsible for the debts and liabilities of the corporation. Why, sir, there are instances where the stockholder holds himself responsible, though the law does not; and I am told that not many months ago, in one of the interior counties, a bank became insolvent, and a portion of the Board of Directors, a minority I believe, though not bound legally by the action of their co-agents, assumed the responsibility, and gave as a reason that they were morally, if not legally, bound to make good the trust which had been imposed upon them, and they did it out of their own private fortunes. Why, sir, it is not against the moral sense of mankind to hold the innocent responsible in the sense in which it is applied in this case. On the contrary, you must make everybody responsible who assumes a trust, whether he is innocent or becomes guilty. It is time, sir, to fix on these trustees some responsibility, and to require of them sureties for the due execution of their trusts. They have sold the people and robbed them of their substance, and when called to account pleaded innocence, already too long. I say, sold them, and in saying so I but repeat the current news of the day. And here, Mr. Chairman, to show you how history repeats itself, and how the affairs of men in different times and places, run in parallels, I beg to allude to Edmund Burke's arraignment of the English corporations, in the great debate on Mr. Fox's East India bill, in the House of Commons. With regard to the abuse of the trust on the part of the trustees of corporations, he says:

"First, I say, that from Mount Imaus, where it touches us in latitude 29°, to Cape Comorin, in the latitude of 8°, there is not a single prince, State, or potentate, great or small, in India, with whom they come in contact, whom they have not sold. I say sold—though sometimes they have not been able to deliver, according to their bargain. Secondly, I say, that there is not a single treaty they have ever made which they have not broken. Thirdly, I say, that there is not a single prince or State who ever put any trust in the company, who is not utterly ruined."

And I say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no agent of the people or any officer of this State, or any division thereof, great or small, high or low, from the utmost boundary on the north to the south, from the Sierras to the sea, with whom they have come in contact, whom they have not bought and sold. There is not a single promise they have made, or trust they have undertaken, but they have broken or betrayed. There is not a single depositor or stockholder whom they have not either swindled or utterly ruined.

Ralston and his Board of Trustees sold his stockholders and depositors for a gamble in Spring Valley. Duncan and his Board of Trustees sold the depositors of the Pioneer Bank to the Shylocks and mortgage wreckers of Montgomery and California streets—and I have in mind some very respectable gentlemen of business who helped him to make the delivery. Burr and his trustees sold his very respectable bank, as well as himself, to Pinney and his pals. So with the Odd Fellows' Bank. Gustave Mahe and his "innocent" directors sold their confiding depositors to squander the proceeds in gambling and riotous living. Time is too short for me to recount these unblushing swindles—too limited even to name a list of the wrecks of savings banks that strew the past; aye, that fill the present moment with distress, starvation, and despair. But the parallel goes further. Mr. Burke continues:

"The first potentate sold by the company for money was the Great Mogul, the descendant of Tamerlane. This high personage, as high as human veneration can look at, is by every account amiable in his manners, respectable for his piety according to his mode, and accomplished in all the Oriental literature. All this, and the title derived under his charter, to all that we hold in India, could not save him from the general sale. Money is coined in his name; in his name justice is administered; he is prayed for in every temple through the countries we possess. But he was sold."

Substitute our banks and other corporation trustees for the Indian Princes and the parallel is complete. These, too, are high personages as human veneration can look at; amiable in their manners and respectable for their piety, etc. And I have no doubt the whole respectable brood are the ones to whom the gentleman from Marin alluded when he told us yesterday that he feared some people would "turn up their noses" at this Constitution, or at us who make it—I could not exactly understand which.

Sir, there are some of these "respectable" persons wearing striped clothes at San Quentin, and some others of the Sunday school persuasion "turning up their noses" from behind prison bars at the county jails. And I have no doubt the "respectable voter," alluded to by the Chairman of the committee the other day, might be found among the number.

This is one branch of the argument that bank Presidents and corporation trustees, being "respectable gentlemen," must not be held responsible for stealing the orphan's patrimony and the widow's mite. They must be permitted by indiscretion to rob the vulgar herd, the common people who earn money, and are not "respectable," without let or hindrance, or they will not condescend to become bank trustees. They will vote down our Constitution, and then, adding insult to injury, will "turn up their noses at us."

There is one other argument, so called, and that is, that we should not load down this Constitution with provisions that would sink, as the gentleman from San Francisco says, the Constitution under a deluge of indignant votes. Well, it so happens that this is an argument that can be used on one side as well as the other—it fits every position in every case. I can assume, just as well, that if we put this provision in the Constitution that the people will buoy it up with a myriad of unanimous votes. And, when sifted down, that is the reason these gentlemen fear that if they put this provision to hold trustees responsible for their trusts, the people will adopt it. That is what they fear—hence these tears. It is a mistake, sir, that the people will reject this Constitution with this amendment in it. Why, sir, the paper that this amendment is written on would float in a political sea a ton of railroad iron. Put that into the Constitution and all the corporations in the State cannot sink it. It will carry a multitude of other objectionable provisions. You can safely put that into the Constitution, adopt the balance of the old one, and adjourn and go home, and the people will pronounce this Convention a magnificent success. I have but one further remark to make, which is this: I challenge the gentlemen on the other side, that if they can show me one good reason why a director or trustee of a corporation should not be held responsible, as well as a private individual when he assumes to act as a trustee, and then delegates away his power, I will face about and vote against this amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. EAGON.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me, sir, that the advocates of this measure place themselves in this position: that in order to correct an occasional evil, they would inflict a perpetual wrong. There can be no other position taken as to this matter. I would not, sir, detain this house one moment were it not that gentlemen have spoken in regard to the record. Now, I desire to be placed on record as well as the gentlemen on the other side. I wish to go on the record as opposed to this amendment. Records amount to nothing, except to scare men into voting in accordance with popular clamor. I am not one of that class who can be frightened into supporting a measure which my judgment and sense tells me is not right, simply by having the "record" flaunted in my face. I am not afraid to place myself on the record according to what my judgment tells me is right. Now, sir, it has been held out here that the people are being driven to the wall; that the widow and the orphan are to suffer in consequence of this amendment not being adopted. Appeals have been made to the passions. Such arguments as have been made here ought not to be listened to. There is no sound argument in them. This is a question, sir, whether you will do a wrong—a perpetual wrong—a wrong that shall last as long as the Constitution lasts—in order to prevent an occasional evil that is supposed to exist. Why, sir, the arguments advanced here do not reach the foundation of this question. I cannot take my seat without alluding to the illustrations made here by the able gentleman who introduced this amendment. He instanced a case that all the gentlemen upon that side seemed to think an unanswerable argument, but there is nothing in it. He supposed a case where a thousand dollars were placed in his hands, and he takes that thousand dollars and loans it to some responsible person. Is there a sane man in the world who would not say he was responsible for it? Everybody knows it. He does it of his own volition, and nobody compels him to do it, and consequently he is bound to return that money; and if he does not, he can be compelled to do it. The man looks to him, and not to the perhaps irresponsible party he loaned it to.

Take another proposition: Suppose you go to him and two other gentlemen and say, here is a thousand dollars that I give to you to keep for me. The majority of you can loan it, or do what you please with it, and two of them vote to do this, and he opposes it. He goes and tells the man that the other two gentlemen have voted to loan it, and have lost it—would it be right to hold him responsible, and make him pay for it, when these other two voted it away in spite of his protest and opposition? It would not be right, and that is the ground upon which we oppose this amendment. It is wrong, sir. It will drive many of the corporations out of the State, and many, too, that are beneficial to the interests of the State. Because one or two or three savings banks have turned out disastrously, and some have suffered by trusting their funds in the bank, is no reason why every honest man should be driven out of business in this State. There are banks outside of San Francisco, sir, banks that are sound and solvent. Banks in all the interior counties of the State, from which the farmers and others derive great benefits. And if there are certain persons employed in these banks who occasionally turn out dishonest, I think it would be an outrage to say that these men should be responsible for something over which they have no control. There is no pay attached to the position of director, and it is wrong to hold them responsible. I hope this amendment will be voted down, and that the common sense of this Convention will let it stand as it is.

SPEECH OF MR. LINDOW.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. President and fellow delegates of the Convention: I am not prepared for taking up the Convention three minutes. I have not come here to make any speeches at all whatever; and I see that the gentlemen are anxious to get on the record. I tell him that my record is this: I am only coming here to watch the Convention. If I watch good, I can't talk very much. But I have to make a few remarks to the gentleman what just spoke last. He said that he would give a thousand dollars to these men. I never have that idea. When I go into a savings bank, I tell the directors I want to deposit this money, and you have to take charge of it, save it, and keep it. I never give him the money to keep it; I put it there to save it, so I can have it whenever I call for it. But the banks at this present day do not do that way at all. You can't trust a man with nothing; he won't save nothing. You better not trust him. That's the great difficulty, you can't do it. You can't trust anybody with nothing at all. For that reason I want to leave my record, that I am going to vote for this proposition, because I know that three quarters are in sympathy with this amendment. I don't want to say nothing against the one quarter, but if this amendment is put not in the Constitution there will be a good deal of widows and orphans robbed. If the bank is well managed there can be no trouble, and we will never want a lawyer or a policeman. We only want an honest man to take charge. If things go smooth, I never want a lawyer. If we put this in, three fourths of the people will vote for the Constitution, and the corporations can't break it down. [Laughter.]

SPEECH OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: The ground has been so completely gone over in the wide range of discussion here it cannot be expected that any one commencing at this late day can produce any ideas for which he could obtain a patent. But it has been pretty well established before this body, that the amendment which is before us embraces certain good principles. Now, it appears to me that if public sentiment prevails in a certain way, and gives expression to certain views as the belief of the people of the State of California, and this sentiment is truly and fearlessly expressed by the people, for a series of years, that this is fear of public clamor that is influencing members. I am fully impressed with the opinion that we should not be unduly influenced by sudden impulses. But, Mr. Chairman, when we hear it said in this body that certain things will occur; that the Code has tried to reach these things; that legislative action has tried to reach and control these corporations, and that we need not expect to reach such matters more effectually than they have been reached. Now, Mr. Chairman, had it not been said by the citizens of this great State of California that certain things should be reached, and that certain principles should be engrafted into the Constitution which will protect, not the banks in particular, not the corporations in particular, but the great mass of the people of the State, we would not be here to cast a vote on this question. It was for just such things as this that this Convention was called. We are here at the bidding of the people, to correct abuses which they no longer wish to bear. The Legislature may, it is true, reach the evil, but we are here to lay down certain fundamental principles, and that object must not be lost sight of. I believe that this amendment will accomplish what it is designed to accomplish. I believe it will be a protection to the public, and yet be no detriment to those corporations who conduct business honestly. I am convinced that if we adopt this amendment it will be one of the best acts of the Convention.

MR. TERRY. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again. The hour for recess having arrived, the Convention will take a recess until two o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and a quorum present.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: Firmly impressed with the conviction that this discussion has already been protracted to too great a length, in some cases resulting in mere idle and useless repetition; that ample time has been afforded in the two days that have been consumed, and sufficient light has been shed upon the subject to enable each and every delegate to vote understandingly upon the question, I now give notice that at three o'clock this afternoon, or as soon thereafter as I can obtain the floor, I will avail myself of the privilege accorded under amended Rule Number Fifty-six, of moving the previous question.

MR. STEDMAN. I rise to a point of order, that the previous question cannot be moved in Committee of the Whole. There is no such thing as the main question in Committee of the whole.

THE PRESIDENT. There is no question before the Convention.

CORPORATIONS—LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, and will state my reasons very briefly. I think that the rule it would call into existence is without foundation, either at the present time, in the history of the common law, of the ecclesiastical law, or of the civil law. It was never intended by human reason to make persons liable for that in which they took no part. The proposition here proposes to make minorities who cannot control liable for the acts of officers brought into existence by a majority. Now then the rule is hardly satisfactory in other cases. If a man dies and appoints in his will three executors, either with or without bonds, a majority may control the estate, and whoever heard it said, or who can find a case where the third party, who took no part in the administration of the estate, was held responsible for the acts of these executors. He files his independent and separate bond, and where the majority act without the third one, there is no authority for saying that the third one should be responsible in the light of reason. Simply upon that proposition alone, in the light of the authorities, I am opposing the proposition to make minorities responsible for majorities. This is not the rule in close fiduciary relations, and it should not be here.

There is nothing in history to match this proposition; nothing since the action of Herod in destroying all the male children in order to reach the infant Savior, and of Pharaoh in destroying the Hebrew children in order to destroy Moses. Tyranny in the abstract is all that it is. Then again I have another objection to the amendment as here tacked on to the original proposition. The original proposition, as suggested by Mr. Webster, is as follows:

"Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities, contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation or association."

Then this:

Now, when does that liability commence? Is it before insolvency or afterwards? Is it when these corporations are controlling one or two hundred thousand dollars or fifty thousand dollars? Is it then that any one can step in and sue the stockholder and maintain an action simply because he urges misappropriation or embezzlement? Is it then that the stockholder can maintain his action against the trustee? Or when is it? Do you have to wait until the insolvency is determined? And then, when the insolvency is determined, an outsider may sue the stockholder and recover a portion, if he sees fit, either jointly or severally, then he can go for the surplus upon the trustees, or he can sue the directors jointly, and thus waive the liability of the stockholder. It is simply a muddle and a contradiction, the stockholder of a bank being in one instance entitled to recover against the director, and in the other an outsider against the stockholder.

Now, take it this way. We have banks in this State that the farmers have organized. One man lives in Sacramento County that may be a director of a San Francisco bank. He goes down there at stated times and carries out the by-laws and regulations as far as he can. He has helped to organize that bank for the good of the people of the State, or the farmers. Now, when he is at his home, some one of the officers embezzles the funds of the bank. The very man on the outside whom he is attempting to aid, by giving his two, three, or four thousand dollars and his services, comes in and holds him liable for the officers of that institution, when it was organized for the very good of the same class as himself. It is wrong in principle. I hope the committee will not adopt it.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLIN.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: When I come into this Convention some time ago, the cry was that the majority of the delegates were lawyers, but it appears that the majority have turned into bank directors, and they are becoming somewhat alarmed. We have seen banks rise in the City of San Francisco from almost nothing. We have seen men rise from the whisky counter to the position of trustees and directors of banks—and by what claim? Sir, it has been through the loose system of incorporation in this State. It is time that something be done to change the system at once, and give some protection to the honest people. We find that notwithstanding all the law that these gentlemen have been reading, there is no answer to the question as to where the stockholders and people are to get their money back from. They have read us law, page after page, and they tell us that we have no protection whatever, only just that which they choose to give us. It is time that the working, industrial classes of California, the man who toils upon the farm, the man who works down in the mine, the men who build the homes of the State, had some protection for their honest earnings. We are willing to meet them upon that proposition, and at least I insist upon keeping this proposition before the people.

They tell us of the awful condition that the honest trustee will find himself in. How will these honest trustees get into the trouble that they tell us about? They say he is appointed. Is he obliged to go with the majority in robbing the stockholders and depositors? They tell me that four out of seven may make a loan, or use the funds of the bank or incorporated company, and they say that these three who would not consent to the transaction are going to be held if the business proves a failure. Why, these men have laws enough to protect themselves. What is to prevent these men, if they examine the security and find it not good, from withdrawing? If it is insecure it is their duty to the people to protest against that loan being made, or the funds of the people being given to irresponsible people. Their rights are just such as if they were dealing for themselves. They would very soon find a means of stopping it if they were dealing for themselves, but because it is public money the case is different.

We have seen banks rise and fall, and we have seen the people robbed of their earnings; and when they searched to find who were the responsible parties, they were pointed to this, that, and the other one, and when the people wanted their money back there was no one responsible for it. It is time there was somebody hedged about and made responsible. I have known a corporation to start on the market with shares said to be worth twenty millions of dollars, and yet the five men who managed it owned twenty-five shares between them. Five shares each was sufficient for them to qualify; and these men managed that business for their own individual interests, and they met with disasters; but, sir, the profits came back to themselves. The gentlemen say, "How are you to do anything better?" Why, make these men responsible for their mismanagement, and, I might almost say, their dishonesty. We have known where men having large interests in mining speculations and stock of incorporated companies, have transferred that property to the hands of others. I know among my acquaintances of a certain gentleman who owns three hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of property of this kind, and yet his home is not worth five thousand dollars, and that is covered by homestead exemption. Now, I want to know, who are you to look to for the money that is placed in their hands? It is time something was done, and something shall be done, and whether this Convention will do it or not, somebody will do it. The people have been driven to despair.

As other gentlemen have supposed cases, now let me suppose one. Suppose a man working up here in the mountains chopping wood or working on a farm has a few hundred dollars, and seeks a place to deposit that money where it will draw some interest. He looks around at the various enterprises, and finally purchases a few shares of bank stock, thinking that is the best and safest of all. Supposing that this man should come here to the City of Sacramento or San Francisco, and he puts his few hundred dollars into the stock of one of these banks, and goes back to the farm. Through the management of the directors, he loses all of it. He, trusting to their honesty, they lose the whole of the money. He finds that the majority of these directors never attended a meeting. They never looked after the money they were intrusted with, and I hold that they were the robbers. These men who failed to perform their duty should be held responsible for those they engaged to do it for them, and nobody else. The gentleman from Marin makes one of the most singular remarks, which I was surprised at, from his well known ability. He says there is a man who drives a dray and hauls the money to and from the bank; and he asks us if this man should carry off some of this money, who would be responsible. Why, sir, those who employed him. If the directors put dishonest men in such a place, they should be responsible, and nobody else. He carries the question further. He asks, supposing a teamster bringing a lot of coin to the door, should in carrying it in through the alleyway lose a box of that coin, who is responsible? I say again, those who employed him. I am surprised that this position should be assumed for a moment by the gentleman from Marin. What protection would the stockholder or the depositor have?

Suppose we take the idea that the director is not responsible, because the teamster loses it or disposes of it. Supposing that he gets a wagon load of coin, and instead of losing it he should drive to the house of one of these honest directors and divide with him, who would be responsible then? Suppose he should take it anywhere else? I maintain that under that rule no one would be responsible. I say that it is time such fallacies were swept away. It is time that the people had some protection, and when you give the people that protection, then you will have honest energy and industry prosper in this country, and not the constant dishonesty that is now here. One gentleman says it is better to let ninety-nine guilty men escape than to punish one innocent man. Here are ninety-nine guilty men escaping, and there is no security whatever.

REMARKS OF MR. FINNEY.

MR. FINNEY. Mr. Chairman: I shall have to support this amendment, and, in a few words, I wish to explain why. Through corporations our law provides a way by which individuals may evade a just and reasonable responsibility. In other words, the power of the law—the power of the State—is exercised to protect a designing few at the expense and to the danger of the many. To this extent have the proper functions of the law been perverted. I say our corporation laws are made to evade a just responsibility. I will not argue the question, only give an illustration of it, and I will eliminate from my supposed case every one of the terrible dangers and evils that swarm in the track of corporations in California—a case as fair and as honest as such a thing in its nature can be. A and B have a certain amount of money, and with it go into banking. Nobody denies their full responsibility for each and for every employé, or any one doing business with them. This responsibility is heavy, and becomes irksome. It is so much nicer to do the same business and make the same money and not have the same anxiety and chances of loss. They incorporate, and the firm of A & B, bankers, in the scratch of a pen becomes the People's Savings Bank of Blankville. With what a sigh of relief do their heads sink into their downy pillows that night. The weight is removed. They are no longer individuals engaged in business. They are only stockholders and directors in the bank. They are really doing the same business, precisely and exactly in the same way, in the same place, and with the same persons, but they have shuffled off the major part of the responsibility attaching to it—and that all through the action of law, which ought not to render easy the evasion of liability on the part of those who assume to act in a trust capacity. If, then, the fairest case that can be supposed thus teems with danger or injustice patent to every eye, what must be the case when cunning, extortion, fraud, robbery, and all the legion of devils that the command of the law ought to cast out of the land, stream in at the door of corporations, thrown wide open by the law.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I would like to be informed of the effect the previous question would have upon sections proposed, for I have an amendment I desire to offer. Would the effect of the previous question be to cut off amendments?

THE CHAIRMAN. The previous question, if it be sustained, would bring the committee to a direct vote, and cut off all other amendments.

MR. BARBOUR. I suppose I cannot offer the amendment now.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to an amendment pending already.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: The proposition is substantially the one which I offered in the minority report of the Committee on Corporations. I was not present, but I was informed some complaint was made that the matter was never brought before the Committee on Corporations, or as if some advantage had been taken of the committee in bringing it in. That is not correct. I brought the matter to the attention of the committee, and read it to the Chairman of the committee, and instead of calling a meeting he went to San Francisco, and we were compelled to bring in our minority report on that and other propositions upon which we had given notice, and which were disputed points.

I am content that the proposition should be extended to all corporations, although, of course, its effect would be upon only those that have trust funds. I understand that the objections to the principle involved in this proposition proceed upon two grounds, and are really aimed at because they never have been known to exist. The corporate power, sir, is manfully contended for whenever it becomes a question of power, and a question of benefit, and a question of the exercise of the attributes of sovereignty which the State confers upon corporations. But the moment you talk of liability, the corporate principle is immediately abandoned. Then gentlemen fall back upon the statutes, and they tell us that the Code abundantly provides for all these abuses, and that the only difficulty has been in a failure in the administration of the law. I, sir, had a little experience in introducing the Codes in this chamber to illustrate the idea of the law-making powers on the subject of libel, and the Convention immediately proceeded to vote the other way. The Codes pointed out that the law concerning libel continued to confer upon the jury the right to determine the law and the fact. Having found that, the Convention immediately proceeded to go against the proposition. Now, I hope that the same effect will be produced by referring to the Codes in regard to the responsibility of directors and trustees of corporations.

I maintain that the Codes do not furnish a remedy, and it is competent to show that they do not, for the reason that with the corporate liability extending to each and every individual composing the corporation, the corporate liability is abandoned. The moment you proceed to the private security, they immediately face about and deny that corporate and individual liability. The result all over the State demonstrates the correctness of my proposition.

You talk about the innocent minority. No man ever saw it. No man ever heard of such a thing. I never heard of an innocent minority. Here are one hundred and fifty-two men, and I warrant that they never saw, not one of them, the innocent minority or the guilty majority. Not they, sir. How does it work? How would it work? And how has it always worked? Do you mean to say that you can get the protection by means of the statutes concerning the liability of corporators? Will they not put up figure-heads just as they always have done? Why not? Five directors constitute a Board, under the law. Two of these directors are the responsible men. Two of these are the directors who induce the investment. The three are put there to carry out the plan. They take all the responsibility, while the two responsible men escape, under your Code, and that is how it is done. The three figure-heads made the trouble, and the two responsible men say they opposed it. Where is the responsibility? They are the ones whose private fortunes induced the deposit, but the three figure-heads are the ones who put up the sculduggery. This always happens in reference to these corporations, the figure-heads go to Europe or Mexico, and the innocent minority remain. That, sir, has always been the case, and it can happen in spite of the Code. Whilst death, ruin, and devastation stalk the streets, the scapegoat is abroad, luxuriating, and the dividend-receiving partners—the innocent minorities—remain at home. Then we say, Mr. Chairman, after the thing occurs, and it is the invariable result, that something is wrong, and we know that the remedy must be applied. Now, has anybody ever heard of the responsibility being brought home to any one of these directors whose responsibility, whose financial position, and whose private fortune has been the great inducing cause of the confidence of the community and the trust of the depositors? Has it ever been heard of, sir?

Take the case of the Clay Street Savings Bank in San Francisco. There a quarter of a million of the funds of the depositors were drawn out on worthless security. Known to be such! Known to every director of the institution to be such! Mere certificates, signed by a Navy Pay Inspector and his clerk, unaccompanied by a single voucher of any officer of the navy of the United States. Now, a school boy ought to have known that that was worthless security; but a quarter of a million of dollars was drawn from the bank by means of that good-for-nothing security. Now, upon investigation, it was shown that five per cent. commission was received by the President of the institution for allowing the funds to go upon that trifling security. That would be nearly twenty-five thousand dollars. Now, I maintain this proposition. In the first place, that security was no security at all. There was nothing back of it. The money was gone from the assets of the bank—eternally gone. I challenge the gentlemen to find a syllable in the Code by which these bank directors can be made responsible for that plain and bold misappropriation of the funds of that bank. Not one syllable. And thus they crawled out in their innocence, on their ignorance of the transaction.

Now, sir, what I ask to do, and what we are going to do, is to say that either you know these things, or you have got to know them; either that they shall be punished for their stupidity, or for their knavery, and I do not care which. But I understand that the officer has been retained. The chances are that they were like Abraham Lincoln's jury when he was defending a hog thief—they had all got some of the pork. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, it always works one way, unless it is once in a while when the directors themselves do what we want them all to do, as in the case of the Bank of California, where the directors came forward themselves and made good the deposits. That was right. That was a just and honorable action. But it was, after all, nothing but their plain duty. They had permitted, month after month, and year after year, the misappropriation of the funds of the institution in doubtful or illegitimate speculations. It had gone ——

MR. REYNOLDS. I wish to correct the gentleman's remarks. They called on the stockholders to make it good.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: Their capital was made good at any rate. The principle is the same. It ought to be done in all cases. The question is, where we see one continuous result, is there a remedy, and if so, are we willing to apply it? It never has been but that the depositor has suffered. It never has been known that the director has been made to suffer. Our British friends are far in advance of us. Here but a few days ago a great financial crash occurred in the City of Glasgow, and ruin and destruction was spread all around. Now the whole directory are grinning behind prison bars, and their stockholders are rustling to make good the deficiency. I suppose that they were all but one or two innocent, but I believe that the laws there do not recognize any innocent minority.

In our country, the laws in regard to corporations have operated like that famous knife of that wicked queen of antiquity. Her mind was continually dwelling upon devising means of compassing death, and she tried first one thing and then another. Finally she contrived a knife. One side of it was impregnated with deadly poison and the other side was not. All that was cut from one side of the knife produced death; all that was cut from the other side was healthful. Those that were invited to her banquets, and on whom she meditated her evil design, received food from the poisoned side of the knife, whilst hers was taken from the healthful side of the knife. She finally got the knife turned wrong, and took her own food from the poisoned side and killed herself. So it has been with these corporations. So it has been with these directors. The public, the people, the community have always been fed from the poisoned side of the knife, and they have taken enough of it. They have always suffered all the loss. Now, sir, I want to turn the knife a little and distribute the poison so that there shall be some on both sides of the knife. [Applause.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The Convention will come to order.

SPEECH OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: I have simply a few words to say. Every one appears to be desirous of getting upon the record in this matter. I think, sir, that it cannot be charged that I have been disposed, in my action in this Convention, to favor any mismanagement of corporations. My honest endeavor has ever been to protect the innocent. While I am in favor of anything that is reasonable, that is equitable, that is just, in the control and government of all corporations, I cannot indorse the amendment as offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry. I can indorse a portion of it. I believe that in the present status of corporations that it might be expedient to increase the liability or responsibility of directors and trustees. I believe, sir, that there would be nothing very unreasonable about holding directors and trustees for the disposition of the funds which were placed in their hands, so far as their employés were concerned. I believe that they should be held to a stricter account in this particular. I believe that the trustees should be responsible, in a measure at least, for their employés. I believe, so far, that the proposition of the gentleman from San Joaquin is measurably correct; that if I am a director of a corporation, and I, with my associates, select employés, that we should be measurably responsible for their action. If the law provides that we shall be, then, sir, we will protect ourselves, by requiring bonds of our employés. That is all right. So far, sir, I go. But when you say, sir, that I must stand responsible for every associate in that corporation; that it makes no difference what my own action has been, however perfect, however guarded in the interest of the stockholders or creditors of that institution, that I should be responsible to the entire extent, individually and personally, I think it is going beyond reason.

It has been said that there can be nothing like an innocent trustee or director. Let us see, sir; there is nothing that brings us so closely to our reason as a matter that directly concerns ourselves. Now, sir, each member of this Convention was elected to this Convention, independent of the action of any other member, only so far as his individual vote is concerned. Each is independent of the other, so far as his action is concerned here, and he cannot be held responsible for the action of his associates. Now, let us take an example which will bring this matter directly before us. We are here in the capacity of delegates to this Convention. A law of this State has placed at our disposal a fund of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. It is absolutely at the disposal of this Convention. Therefore, the members of this Convention are the trustees of this fund. Will that be denied? They have absolute control over it. Now, sir, any misappropriation of that kind, according to the argument of the gentleman on the opposite side, each individual member should be responsible for.

Now, let us see if there has not been some misappropriation. In my estimation there has. There were allowances made to employés that were not authorized by law, neither by a vote of this Convention. Employés that were not employed by the Convention, neither employed by the Chair. According to my conception there is a misappropriation of a part of the fund of this Convention. In my estimation, the printing of all these propositions that have been introduced here, was a misappropriation of funds. Further, sir, there was a rule established here by this Convention, that each member of this Convention should be allowed stationery to the amount of ten dollars and no more. Members have drawn in excess of that. We found that they were doing it and we brought up a resolution to the effect that any drawn in excess should be refunded. That resolution was defeated. Now, sir, under our very action I hold that every dollar in excess of ten dollars was misappropriated, and that the trustees are bound to make it good, according to the argument of the gentlemen on the other side. Suppose that the State Treasurer should come up here and say: "Webster, you are a member of this Convention. There has been a misappropriation of these funds. You are placed here as one of the trustees over that fund. It has been misappropriated and you have got to make it good." I say: "Mr. Treasurer, I am only one. I am one in one hundred and fifty-two. I have only one vote. Will you hold me responsible for the acts of the one hundred and fifty-one others?" He says: "Yes. You are a trustee over that fund, and you must make it good. It has been misappropriated and you must make it good." Now, is there any reason or justice in that? Take our friend from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher. He has drawn nine dollars and eighteen cents in excess of his appropriation. Take our friend Mr. Smith, from Kern, he has drawn fourteen dollars and two cents in excess of his. The Treasurer says: "Webster, there is a couple of your associates that have drawn in excess of their right under this rule. You have got to make it good, sir." I say: "No sir. Go to Mr. Beerstecher; go to Mr. Smith"——

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I would like to correct his statement. I would state, sir, that whatever stationery I drew was drawn out before the ten dollar rule went into effect, and if I had known of a ten dollar rule, I certainly would not have violated it.

MR. WEBSTER. I do not want to be personal. It was only an illustration. As I was saying, the Treasurer says to me: "You must make this good." I say: "No; go to Mr. Beerstecher and Mr. Smith." He says: "No; they are not responsible. You are the first responsible man I have met [laughter], and, sir, you have got to pay it." That is the result; that is absolutely the application of this rule. I say that it is wrong. I say that I stand responsible for my own acts. If I say that I will be responsible as a director for my employés—if you say I shall—I am satisfied with that, because I will require of my employés bonds to secure me. But when you say that I must be responsible for the one hundred and fifty-one members here, I think you are going too far. [Laughter.]

REMARKS OF MR. TULLY.

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: As it seems to be a desire of the gentlemen to put themselves on the record in this matter, I, too, wish to go upon the record as being emphatically in favor of the amendment as offered by Judge Terry, from San Joaquin. This is the beginning of a great contest in this Convention; a contest upon which gentlemen honestly differ. There is one class of gentlemen here, as I take it, who honestly believe that the passing of these restrictive measures, making these moneyed institutions, corporations, and great banks, amenable to the law, is to restrict and shackle the industries of the country. That I understand to be the position of my learned friend, Mr. Wilson, of San Francisco, a gentleman who combines qualities that are very rare. He possesses both genius and good sense, and makes all there is in his case.

Now I think that the best interests of California, the best interests of society, demand that these restrictive measures should be passed. Now, gentlemen make a great fuss and throw up their hands in holy horror over the imaginary sufferings of some innocent director. Why, sir, in the transactions of life everywhere, more than one man is associated. In every-day business, men sign for the acts of others. Take partnerships; don't the majority control? Don't the minority often have to pay for measures which they are opposed to? I think so. Now, take one of these banking institutions. You find a number of gentlemen incorporating and electing directors. They tell you that these directors are honorable men and responsible. You go to any one of the directors and he tells you that the other is a gentleman and you can rely on him. Then the banking commences. Why not make that responsible banking? I certainly am in favor of the proposition.

Now these gentlemen tell you that if you pass these measures that you will drive out of the country all of these corporations. Capital will box itself up and leave the country. Now, there is no danger of any such thing. There is no danger that these corporations will not multiply with sufficient rapidity, shackle them as you will. But I simply rose for the purpose of putting myself upon the record as in favor of the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say a very few words, and I shall be very brief about it. I have not long at any one time, and no considerable number of times, occupied the attention of this Convention. But, sir, as it has been remarked that every individual member upon the floor of this Convention desires to get upon the record, I, too, have the same desire. I want it distinctly understood that this is just exactly what the people of this State are demanding. A record made by every member of this Convention for weal or for woe, and when that record is made, I will guarantee to you, Mr. Chairman, that the people of this State over its breadth and its length will reopen that record, and hold it up to the light of day. When I came into this Convention, I fancied I was a very good judge of human nature; but I am sadly mistaken. I thought I would be able to read every man's face, but, sir, I am sadly mistaken. I did not read in the face of any of the gentlemen who are entitled to seats upon this floor, that they were defenders of bank directors, or Presidents, or anything of that character, but I am very sorry I have failed to reckon correctly. We find here, Mr. Chairman, a very formidable, but young and prosperous and growing Western Development Company. We find upon the floor of this house, men that are able to appear as the advocates of the corporations, and I am glad to say that there are men here who are appearing as the advocates of the people of this State.

I say to you, gentlemen of the Convention, cast your votes in favor of the people on this occasion; go upon the record once for all in favor of the people of this State, and I will guarantee that the people will shout one loud and long shout throughout the State—"Well done, thou good and faithful servant." Let the bankers take care of themselves. I will guarantee that they will neither go to China with their coin, nor to Egypt, but they will stay right here and employ their money in these banks. If they are not responsible for our deposits, let them fall to the ground. Down with these upstart aristocrats! Cast them aside and let the wealthy men of the nation become the bankers of the State and of the nation. Just hear my voice, gentlemen of the Convention. I shall vote for every jot and title that is contained in the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. REDDY

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: As all the gentlemen seem to be very anxious to make a record here, I presume it has come my turn now to get myself upon the record. Notwithstanding the implied threats contained in the speech of the gentleman who last had the floor, I intend to vote against any measure which does not discriminate between the guilty and the innocent. The people can shout as loud and as long as they please, but so long as I occupy a position upon this floor I will shout back to them that I shall never record my vote in favor of a measure that makes no distinction between the innocent and the guilty, but consign all to one common fate. Let those who are carried away by the shout of the people vote as they will, but I shall never vote in that manner. Let the record then be raised. Let it be exposed to the light of day. I am not afraid of such a record.

It has been said that the people of this State have suffered from these banking institutions until it has become unendurable. Admit it. Does the remedy lie in wrong and injustice? I think not.

It has been said here that there are no innocent minorities, as much as to say that there can be no innocent man engaged in this banking business. I deny that.

It has been said here that the lawyers here are to be suspected; that the bankers of the State are to be suspected; that all engaged in corporate business are to be suspected, and every one that is said to be respectable is to be suspected. I pity the man who entertains such opinions as these. No honest man ever yet suspected all of his fellows. If we take out the bankers, those engaged in corporate business, and lawyers, there are not many honest people left in the State—not enough to execute the laws. I do not believe in this wholesale abuse of any class. I believe that there are honest men among the bankers, among those engaged in corporate business, and even among the lawyers; and I believe there are rogues in the Workingmen's party. [Laughter.] I believe that there are rogues in all parties.

According to the view that has been expressed here there is only one way, and that is to adopt the method adopted by Herod, that in order to reach the guilty the innocent must suffer. All must go in order that one must be reached. That is not a just principle of government. It needs no argument to show it. It would be folly for me to attempt to argue this question after the able gentlemen who have spoken upon the question have dealt with it, and therefore I rose simply to place myself upon the record.

It is said that the people of this State are laboring under great excitement in consequence of the wrong that they are suffering. If a man were to come from the remotest part of Africa, and could read, and read this amendment, he would need no further evidence of the fact, because no man that has a keen sense of justice and of right can read that amendment and subscribe to it. It is simply the result of an excitement. Nothing else could have produced such a law. I desire to say nothing further, as there is a gentleman already on the floor.

MR. DOWLING. Are you not a director or a trustee of a mining corporation?

MR. REDDY. No, sir. But I say this, since the gentleman has asked the question, that there are many gentlemen of my acquaintance who are trustees of mining corporations, and I would not compare them in any way, shape, or form, either in point of integrity, or in physical or moral courage, with the gentleman who has asked the question—for fear that it might injure him.

MR. DOWLING. With the gentleman's permission I want it distinctly understood that I would not be placed on a par with some of his friends.

MR. REDDY. If I was a trustee of a mining corporation, that would not necessarily impair my integrity or my standing, as I understand this matter. I ask the gentleman himself, have you ever been a trustee of a mining corporation?

MR. DOWLING. Yes.

MR. REDDY. Well, if there are no other questions of that character to be put, I leave the field.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I do not rise for the purpose of making a record. When the opportunity shall offer, which will occur in a few moments, my vote will be my record. I desire, however, to state one or two facts which have not been stated, and which possibly may be deemed worthy of consideration upon the question which has excited, very naturally, a great deal of interest in this Convention. As to what we say here, Mr. President, it may perhaps be truly said, in the style if not in the very language, what was said upon a very memorable occasion by one now no more on earth, at Gettysburg, that the world will little heed but long remember what we say here. But our State, Mr. President, at any rate, will never forget what we do here.

It has been said very truly, and it is a just argument, that the Committee on Corporations, which had the matter in charge, did not recommend this amendment. Without availing myself of the liberty of the Committee of the Whole to express my views generally upon the report of that committee, I may at least say this: that while that committee has done a portion of its work well, in my humble judgment, it has left a portion of it wholly undone. This is a question upon which, in my judgment, that committee at least ought to have formally passed. If I correctly understand it, it did not pass upon this very important question at all, and this Convention is now without the action of the committee upon this very important question. It has been thought that among our numerous committees that two committees sometimes act upon the same matter, and if gentlemen will notice they will find that section thirty-one of article four of the Constitution, under the head of Legislative Department, is where our Constitution refers to the subject of corporations. There is where the Committee on Corporations very naturally commenced. Now, if gentlemen will turn to the report of the Legislative Committee, and look at section thirty-three, they will find that this identical question was passed upon by the Legislative Committee. And it is no more than proper to say that it was not hastily passed, but after considerable discussion. I do not remember what member of the committee first suggested it—it will be found substantially the same as the amendment—but I will say that so many of us took part in its formulation that the whole fifteen members may be candidates for that position. Section thirty-three, the latter clause, is the amendment now pending without a substantial difference. Here it is:

"The trustees or directors of such corporation or association, and each of them, shall be responsible, individually, for the misappropriation by the officers thereof of the funds or deposits of such corporation or association."

The word embezzlement is not there used, and it is because the word "misappropriation" was thought to include that. I do not think it does any harm in the amendment, but it does no particular good. It is not worth discussing. So, Mr. President, as to the action of the committee, I say that deliberate action has been had upon this very question, and more than that, I believe that there was not a dissenting voice upon the Legislative Committee, numbering fifteen.

Now, Mr. President, I pass on to one or two other considerations, for I know that this Committee of the Whole desire to take a vote. The main point, undoubtedly, made here, and that which is apt to produce the most effect, is with reference to what are called innocent minorities. Corporations are different from partnerships, but in this particular it is the proposition to some extent to make the liability of trustees the same as the liability of partners under similar circumstances. If the trustees were partners they would be liable on the case proposed in the amendment. Being trustees it is proposed to make them liable to the same extent as specified.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no war against corporations; I admit the great benefit that some of them have rendered to the country. My judgment is that they are a necessity to civilization, and that so far as the great railroad corporations of the world are concerned that they are the great civilizers of the world. And yet, when the further question comes up, as to the right of the public to control them, and the expediency of asserting that control, I will put this foot of mine as far as he who goes furthest. There are a great many corporations which are not of any beneficial character, and if it should happen that of our corporations, numbering over twenty thousand, some of them could not stand under an amendment like this, there will be no great loss to the public. There are some of them which were organized—many of them—for swindling purposes and for no other, and the sooner they go down the better for the public at large.

Mr. Edgerton, this morning—I beg to be excused for referring to the gentleman by name—referred to a case where the Treasurer was elected by the stockholders themselves. I have only one answer to that, and that is, that under section three hundred and eight of the Civil Code, the Treasurer can be elected only by the directors, and if a Treasurer ever was elected by the stockholders it was in disregard of law, and he was not legally the Treasurer of the company. The law provides that by-laws may be made, it is true. But by-laws cannot be made in contravention of the laws of the land. These officers referred to in the amendment are officers elected by the directors themselves. Suppose a case where there are five directors, or three. Who compels anybody to be a director and associate with the other two? There is an old saying that if you lay down with dogs you must expect to rise up with fleas. They are no more compelled to be directors than they are to go into partnerships where they would be individually responsible.

I do not believe, however, Mr. President, in the doctrine that these minorities are innocent. Suppose the case of a misappropriation where two directors against three—if there may be a Board of only five in some cases—vote against the misappropriation, there is nothing to prevent these two from preventing any mischief under that vote by injunction in the Courts. No man ought to accept the position unless he expects to perform the duties of it. The director, as the statute calls it now—it was formerly called a trustee—it means the same thing. What are they? They are persons who hold the property of others in trust. They are therefore trustees, and if three against two vote one way, the two others can proceed immediately to stop any further mischief.

But, Mr. President, coming to the conclusion of this matter, I understand the argument to be presented, that this is not proper matter for a Constitution. It ought to be left to the Legislature. Now I am opposed to putting any unnecessary legislation into the Constitution, but when I hear the gentleman from Los Angeles argue that it would not have force even put into the Constitution itself, it occurred to me that we certainly could not reach it by legislation. I prefer in that view taking the middle ground between these extreme views of legal gentlemen—between the gentleman from San Francisco, who says that it is unnecessary because the Legislature can reach it, and the gentleman from Los Angeles, who holds that it is such an immense power that even the Constitution could not reach it. I prefer to take the middle ground between them, that in the exercise of the highest legislative power in the way of government that it can be reached through the Constitution.

I have but one word further, Mr. President. I have voted for this matter in committee. I support it here because I believe it is right; because I believe it is of so much consequence that our people should be protected as well on this as on the other side of the corporation question; the evils of the twenty odd thousand corporations of the State. I would vote for it even if I thought it might impair the prospects of the adoption of the Constitution by the people next May. I shall go upon this principle in all matters of such magnitude as this, and vote right and do right according to my judgment, though the Constitution itself which we propose should fail.

SPEECH OF MR. INMAN.

MR. INMAN. Mr. Chairman: I do not propose to make any set speech. Enough has been said already. But as gentlemen seem to be desirous of getting upon the record I might as well do likewise. I want to say emphatically that I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin. I am opposed to it from the fact, Mr. Chairman, that I believe it will do more injury than it can possibly do good. I take it for granted that there are to-day fifty or one hundred small associations or corporations throughout the State that have been gotten up directly in the interest of the farmers. I know of a great many of them. They are gotten up in the interest of the poor man, not in the interest of the rich man. I cannot to-day, and the gentleman cannot, call to mind one instance where any individual has lost one dollar by these small associations.

Mr. President, if you pass this amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Joaquin, my honest opinion is that you will drive every responsible man out of the banking business, and out of these associations. You will leave only the irresponsible. Do you suppose that any man who has a private fortune of one hundred thousand dollars or two hundred thousand dollars is going to risk all when he has nothing whatever to do with selecting his associates? This man he may not like, but there is a majority against him. He can enter his protest and withdraw. That may be just what they want them to do. The result is that the responsible men draw out and leave only the irresponsible. It seems to be the death blow to bankers. I believe that I am about the only farmer that has spoken to-day. I have seen the benefit of these small banks I have referred to. Farmers may need a small amount to harvest their crops. If they cannot get it their business must suffer. The grain would stand in the field unreaped, or if they should succeed in reaping it, what is the result? Why they are forced to rush it into the market when the price is low. I know what the difficulty in procuring money has been in times gone by. I know in Mr. Friedlander's time how he would shut up the bank, and force men to sell their grain at his figures. But to-day we can go to these banks and get all the money we want by giving security. And I say where one dollar has been lost to the depositors in the banks of this State there has been hundreds benefited by them.

Now, Mr. President, one would suppose that there never had been any good derived from banks; that we were almost bankrupt from the failure of two or three banks; that men were suffering throughout the State from it. Why, sir, we are the happiest and most prosperous State in the Union. This is not all the evil there is. I find gentlemen favoring this who are opposing in committees measures that have a tendency to relieve the poor men, if they will only carry them out, and those are measures to shut up the whisky mills. There is your curse. It is not your banks. It is your whisky mills; it is extravagance; it is gambling. Now, I know something of this banking business. Men run to these banks that pay a high rate of interest. That was the way with the Dime Savings Bank. They went there for one per cent.

I have never found any great evil to come from banking. The farmers and the merchants have been benefited thousands of dollars where there has been one lost in banking. Because one bank has failed, the whole system should not be denounced. If a man commits a crime will you have every innocent man arrested? Now, the gentleman says I am voting for corporations. I am as free from the taint of them as he, or any gentleman on this floor. I have always been opposed to the corporations when they try to take from the people their just rights, but I am not here to kill any legitimate enterprise. I have no war to make upon any corporation that does its duty well. But if you wish to pass a law to hang me for the acts of another man, I will not fasten the noose around my own neck. I am not Bones. [Laughter.] My constituents can think of me as they please. I never cater to public opinion when I believe it is wrong. What is public opinion? It is simply the aggregate opinion of individuals. An individual can be wrong, and so can public opinion. Now, many gentlemen, like myself, want to get upon the record, and I give way.

ARGUMENT OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I am not anxious to go upon the record. I do not care particularly about that, one way or the other. I am only anxious for the results of the labors of this Convention. If they are satisfactory, I shall be satisfied; if not, no one has a right to be satisfied. Mr. Chairman, I would not say anything upon this question at this late hour, when this committee is tired, having spent two days upon this subject, but for one or two considerations. It does seem to me that a misapprehension—I doubt not in all candor—has been entertained or evinced by this discussion. That we may know exactly what the point is, I read the pending amendment:

"The directors or trustees of corporations and joint stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint stock association."

Now, in discussing this question with members of this Convention privately, I find that a doubt seems to have crept in as to the effect of the language of this amendment. Two or three gentlemen waxed eloquent against this sort of wrong, that if there be a Board of Directors, consisting of seven, of a corporation or association, and four, being a majority, took some step which resulted in an embezzlement or misappropriation of funds, and three protested against it with all their power to resist it, yet they would be held responsible. I was a little amused to hear gentlemen grow eloquent over the denunciation of such a wrong and outrage as this. Now, gentlemen of the committee, no such result is contemplated by the mover of this amendment, and I apprehend that no such result can follow. That conclusion is based upon an assumption, false in fact, that the officers shall consist, among others, of the directors. The language is, the directors shall be liable, etc., for the embezzlement or misapplication of moneys by the officers. Now, the officers are not the directors at all; neither the four, nor the three, nor the seven. So far as the directors are concerned, if they are guilty of embezzlement or misapplication of the funds, they are liable to the stockholders and creditors without any provision of this kind. It needs no amendment to the Constitution or the Code. They are liable under principles of law as old as the civil law. But what is intended to be reached—the evil to be remedied—is to hold them responsible for the acts of their subordinates.

Then, again, I will say this. I believe I have the authority of the mover of this amendment to say—and I allude to Judge Terry—that if there be a serious doubt entertained as to the proper construction of this language, he has no objection to a change of the phraseology, so as to place it beyond any doubt. But this question does not come up here, I think. Now, in the Committee on Legislative Department, of which Judge Terry is Chairman, and several others, myself included, are members, we have made this as a part of our report:

"And the trustees or directors of such corporation or association, and each of them, shall be responsible, individually, for the misappropriation by the officers thereof of the funds or deposits of such corporation or association."

The idea precisely that is embodied in this, and I am informed he simply used that language because he did not have this draft before him.

MR. TERRY. I could not get it at the clerk's desk.

MR. HALE. Precisely; I do not know that they all united in the report, but I thought so at the time. I think there was no objection. I am assured by two members that there was none. Now, sir, what are we aiming at? This: whenever a law is made, there is some object to be obtained—some end in view, which the legislator should always have in mind. What is it here? We have, as shown by the report of the Secretary of State, twenty thousand corporations in this State. Think of it, Mr. Chairman; twenty thousand corporations in a State with about one hundred and fifty thousand electors! Why, sir, if you divide this up among the electors of the State—and these corporations may be formed with the number of incorporators from seven to nine, I believe, according to the Codes—and if every elector of the State were a corporator in only one corporation, there would not be enough electors to go round and make up these corporations. Business is done more largely through corporations than anything else. We conduct all our mines, our manufactories, our commerce, our railroads, by corporations; and, gentlemen, we have dealt more largely in corporations than anything else.

Some gentlemen on this floor have sought to array a sentiment against this amendment, for fear it would work the extinction of some of these corporations. In the name of God above I hope it may! I shall rejoice with all my heart. I am tired of feeling that there is no influence in this State, no power in this State, except corporations. I am tired of it. But we do not propose this amendment for the purpose of extinguishing any corporation. It is to hold corporations to their just responsibility. God made man, and man made corporations. God alone could give us soul, and a spirit, and a conscience, but man has never given conscience, nor soul, nor moral honesty to a corporation yet, and never will. As the law creates it, so it has got no conscience. It has no rule of right, except that which is made by the letter of the Constitution and the statutes. The purpose then, sir, is this, that we should lay down a rule here with our twenty thousand corporations, by which the people shall be protected in the future against the thieving and knavery and highway robbery that has been practiced wholesale for twenty years upon the people of this State.

We are told that this thing is all wrong. One gentleman from San Francisco, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, waxed eloquent, and told us that it was without precedent in the laws of civil countries; nothing like it above, upon, or beneath the earth. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has forgotten, or seems oblivious to, the good, plain facts about him. What is the objection? What does he see? He says that here is a Board of Directors that may act honestly, and somebody in their employ may be guilty of an embezzlement, or misapplication of funds, and then he tells us that it would be a high outrage, and without precedent, to hold this director responsible. He points us to the case of Wells, Fargo & Company, and says that these directors cannot be expected to keep track of each and every one of these men in their employ, and guard the company, and the creditors, and the stockholders against their embezzlement. Now, Mr. Chairman, with all due deference to the gentleman, I differ with him.

Take Wells, Fargo & Company as a case for illustration. Who knows who compose the company known as Wells, Fargo & Company? Where, sir, is the security to their patrons? Nowhere to be seen. They take their boxes upon the stage lines, but they own not the stage lines. They convey their express on the railroad trains, but they own not the railroad trains. They have a few offices here and there in the State, but you know nothing of the assets of Wells, Fargo & Co. But when you come to talk about Leland Stanford, Mark Hopkins, E. F. Miller, and Charles Crocker, and these men are the directors, the men who manage this concern, you know something about the responsibility of the concern. Now, he says we object to holding them responsible. If they are not responsible nobody can be responsible. In other words, if the creditors and the stockholders cannot hold them responsible, then there is no remedy. Why should they not be responsible? Who appoints these agents? Why, these directors. It is their business to make wise and safe selections. The public trust Wells, Fargo & Co., because of the responsibility and supposed business discretion and wisdom of these men. That is the reason they are trusted, because they are expected to exercise that wise supervision which leads to the correction of abuses, the greatest safety and economy.

We are told that there are no precedents for this in history. Why, what do these gentlemen mean? These directors not only have the power of selecting their own agents, but they can put them in or they can put them out as they please. They can take bonds from them if they require them. They can take any kind of protection until they are finally discharged.

Now, let us take another case. Here is the State Treasurer. Under the law he is made the custodian of the public moneys belonging to the State of California. We are all interested in them. But, sir, before he can take that office, before he can handle one dollar of the State money, he must give immense bonds. What does he do? Why, he must go around to A, B, C, and D, responsible men of the State, men capable of responding and who are able to make oath of their responsibility, to go upon his bonds. The Treasurer don't go to these gentlemen and say, "Come and look and see whether I am acting correctly as Treasurer." They have no power to do it. Now, if he is guilty of embezzlement or misapplication of funds they are made liable. There is a case where the surety upon the bonds has no interest in the salary or the emoluments of the Treasurer; has no power of supervising his work; and yet the law exacts this penalty, that they shall make good the defalcation as sureties.

Again, sir, take all the other officers, with the exception of the judicial, in the State; your Sheriff, your Tax Collector, and all the subordinate officers of the State. Every Sheriff is required to give a bond, and they are in the same position. These sureties have no power to watch the Sheriff. The law gives them no power to examine the Sheriff's books, to advise him or to control him. But he is acting in a fiduciary capacity, and the law requires that they shall make good anything which results from his wrongful act. This system runs through every department of our government from the Treasurer of State and other State officers to every county officer, except a judicial officer. Every constable and every administrator has to give bonds. These principles are as old as the civil law, and we adopted it.

Now, is not the reason as cogent why some responsibility should be imposed upon these directors. I suggest, sir, that the people, with their experience of the wrong and the robbery which has resulted from the peculations, embezzlements, and misapplication of the funds of corporations under the direction of these directors, should have at least the responsibility of the private fortunes of these men who assume to exercise that trust. And if it results in weeding out some of these too numerous corporations, all the better. We shall have no more such experience as this State has witnessed in the last three years.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I now, in accordance with previous notice, move the previous question.

MR. AYERS. I second the motion.

MR. EVEY. So do I.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that it is not competent for a Committee of the Whole, the rule to the contrary notwithstanding, to vote for the previous question. There is no such thing known, the wide world over, in parliamentary law, as the previous question in Committee of the Whole. It will only be necessary for me to refer to one authority. It will be recognized at once. Section three hundred and three of Cushing's Manual says:

"The previous question cannot be moved in a Committee of the Whole. The only means of avoiding an improper discussion is to move that the committee rise; and, if it is apprehended that the same discussion will be attempted on returning again into committee, the assembly can discharge the committee, and proceed itself with the business, keeping down any improper discussion by means of the previous question."

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from San Francisco quotes the parliamentary law very correctly, but this Convention adopted a different rule. It is provided, in Rule Fifty-six, that the previous question may be moved in Committee of the Whole. The Chair, therefore, is compelled to overrule the point of order.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I rise to another point of order: that it is not in the power of the Convention to delegate its authority to the committee to pass upon the main question.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is also overruled. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

The main question was ordered, on a division, by an affirmative vote of 123.

THE AMENDMENTS.

THE CHAIRMAN. The committee orders the main question to be now put. The Secretary will first read the amendment offered by Mr. Webster.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities, contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation or association."

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry, moves to amend the amendment by adding what the Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The directors or trustees of corporations and joint stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint stock association."

MR. ROLFE. There is more to that—"during the term of office of such director or trustee."

MR. TERRY. I accepted that amendment when it was offered.

MR. PROUTY. I would like to offer an amendment that will change simply one word.

THE CHAIRMAN. No amendment can be received.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: I would like to ask a question upon the amendment, both of Mr. Terry and Mr. Webster.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the main question has been ordered.

MR. CASSERLY. Upon examination of these amendments, I imagine that they have gone far beyond anything which either of these gentlemen suppose. To my best judgment, each and both of them covers the case.

MR. TERRY. I object to his making a speech.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state what his question is.

MR. CASSERLY. May I be allowed to ask the mover of the amendment to which I particularly refer, Judge Terry, whether he understands it to include charitable, benevolent, and religious associations?"

MR. TERRY. I deem it includes all corporations. I do not think a charitable or religious corporation has any better right to steal money than a lay corporation.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin.

A division was called for.

THE CHAIRMAN. Ayes, 95. The amendment to the amendment is adopted. [Applause.]

THE CHAIRMAN. Order! order!

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I see gentlemen in the lobby who are applauding, and the next time it occurs, I shall move that the lobby be cleared.

MR. HEISKELL. I hope the gentleman will not be particular. This is the first victory for the people that has occurred in four years.

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: I give notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I have another proposition to offer in connection with this amendment that has just been adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. It will not be in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted, on a division, by an affirmative vote of 88.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I now offer another amendment as a section to follow this.

MR. BARBOUR. I rise to a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet heard what the proposition is.

MR. BARBOUR. My proposition is that no amendment ——

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet heard what the proposition is. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"At all elections of trustees, directors, or other officers, a list of all the votes shall be kept and recorded, and the owners of all stock voted for, the officers elected, and all persons voting the same, whether as owner, proxy, or trustee, shall be jointly or severally liable to all stockholders not so voting, and to all creditors of the corporation for all losses of such corporation from the misconduct or negligence of such officers."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at present. It cannot be offered until the whole report has been gone through.

MR. SHAFTER. Can I not move to strike out a section and insert this?

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

MR. SHAFTER. Then it is news to me. That is all I have got to say about that.

MR. STEDMAN. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

THE TERM CORPORATIONS.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section four.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 4. The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships; and all corporations shall have the right to sue and shall be subject to be sued, in all Courts, in like cases as natural persons.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an amendment to that section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section four, as reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, by striking out the section as reported and insert the following:

"SEC. 4. The term corporation, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies as shall be authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain under the laws of this State; and corporations shall have the right to sue and shall be subject to be sued in all Courts in all cases as natural persons."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I would most respectfully request that the rules of this body with regard to order and decorum be maintained by the President. Owing to the conversation taking place in the rear it is almost impossible to hear anything that is going on. It is more like a bear garden, I respectfully suggest, than it is like a deliberative body. I ask that the rules be enforced, that we may be able to understand, once in a while, something that is going forward.

SPEECH OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: As I stated on yesterday, I offer this amendment for the purpose of restricting the scope in which corporate powers can be authorized by the Legislature of the State under the present Constitution, and as is proposed to be engrafted in the new Constitution, the powers and objects and purposes of corporations really have no restrictions whatever. They can be applied and used for every conceivable object of trade or business. It does appear to me that it is not necessary that so wide a range should be authorized by the Constitution and laws of the State, and that it would be better for the people of the State if it was restricted. Corporations are only desirable in very few of the cases; when they enable individuals to do something by virtue of the corporate power which they could not as individuals do. I do not conceive that they are desirable in the administration of the government when they do simply what individuals are authorized to do. Corporations which are authorized to exercise the power of eminent domain in the State ought to be authorized for certain beneficial purposes. Probably chief among these in the minds of the people is that of railroads. Also for the digging of canals and the reclamation of swamp land districts; for the bringing of water from the mountains down over the plains for irrigating purposes, and of furnishing water to cities. The right of eminent domain must accompany corporations of this character, for otherwise they are unable to carry out the purposes of the corporations or the purposes of society in creating or building up interests of this character. But I do not conceive, as I said on yesterday, that it is necessary to incorporate under the laws of this State, or that it is wise for the laws to authorize an incorporation in this State for the purpose of gathering swill and feeding pigs; or that it is wise to authorize an incorporation for the purpose of establishing a hennery for hatching and raising chickens; or that it is wise in many other cases of like character.

I think I do not overstate the very ludicrous objects for which the power of incorporation is invoked in this State, when I have referred to the gathering of swill and the raising of pigs, or the establishment of henneries, and the hatching and raising of chickens, for it seems from the report of the Secretary of State, which was made to this Convention October twenty-sixth, in obedience to a resolution of this honorable body, that we incorporate "hotel companies, cloth companies, sugar companies, iron companies, quicksilver companies, soda water companies, oil companies, peat companies, lead companies, fertilizing companies, theater companies, liquor companies, boat clubs, river companies"—and wouldn't it now tax the wit and ingenuity of any member of this Convention, even our friend Col. Barnes, to tell what is meant by a river company? [Laughter.] Then also gas companies—and as regards gas companies, I would desire to make an exception in that case, because me and the Colonel together would want the use of a little gas. [Laughter.] "Jockey club companies, laundries"—in which the Chinamen are supposed to clean the dirty linen of the State—"poultry companies, hack and cab companies, dredging companies, brewing companies," and then you can go on here to the extent of twenty-one thousand companies, and the best part of them have like purposes as those read.

Now, I ask the members of this Convention, do you think it is necessary to loan the aid of the State for the purpose of conducting the business which is referred to under the heads of these companies? Do you not believe that this business would be conducted in the State, and conducted better without the corporate principle, than in a corporate capacity? Don't you believe it would be better not to loan the dignity of the State and the common seal of the State to them? A corporation is defined by the old writers to be "a body corporate, having a common seal." What do you want of it, for the purpose of raising chickens and fertilizing land? What common seal would they need in prosecuting business of that kind? The only effect that I can see in creating so large a number of corporations, is the impersonality that it makes in the State; the irresponsibility that it makes in the State. If men want to enter into any conceivable business in this State, the first question is, can they raise funds enough to incorporate? If they can get their articles of incorporation filed with the Secretary of State, then they are an incorporated body for the multifarious business of the State, or some one of them. That enables them then to go forth with the name of a corporation, high-sounding as they can possibly get it, and as attractive as possible. Then it is that the high-sounding title which they give the corporation is dressed up in all the attraction that the ingenuities of the projectors can dress it, in glowing types and inks; then it is that they start it out before the unwary, and if they can succeed in bringing in any money in that shape, that is so much gain. No capital has been paid in. No showing has been made. No supervising provision is instituted by the State to be held over these men. They are simply authorized to take out a patent under the laws of the State of California, for the purpose of using the name and dignity of the State to go forth in every conceivable private enterprise that the ingenuity of man can conceive of.

Is it wise to loan the State for the purposes of these delusions, and for the purpose of enabling these parties to take advantage of the unwary—those not so well posted—to take advantage of the ignorant of the State, and those who need protection?

Corporations of the present day seem to stand in the same relationship to the people that the religious institutions of five hundred years ago in Europe stood. Then it was there that the religious institutions pillaged the people; that all the property of the country was drank up and absorbed in the religious corporations of the day. There it was that property shirked its due responsibility of taxation. There it was that property shirked its responsibility of coming out into the commercial resources of the country. There it was that it was tied up and became stagnant. And civil corporations—you have only to change the word from religious to civil—and the civil corporations of this day, in my opinion, are taking the same place, and it should not be encouraged. Men should be encouraged to rely upon their individual resources; be thrown upon their own resources, and compelled to exercise them, and not become an impersonal somebody and sink the personnel of everybody in corporations. As Judge Hale has aptly remarked, twenty thousand corporations in this State, and, at the outside, one hundred and fifty thousand voters. That would make seven men and one half to each corporation in this State, or one corporation to every seven men and one half in the State. The very statement of the amount shows its abuse; the very statement of the amount shows that it should be limited.

If these twenty thousand corporations are a blessing, we are the most blessed people on the face of the earth. If these twenty thousand corporations will make a rich, and prosperous, and growing community, we are rich, and prosperous, and growing beyond any community upon the face of the earth. But do they do it? Has it done it? In other words, does not the property of this State now hide itself behind corporations? Do we find ourselves as individuals the most prosperous? Do we find ourselves as individuals the richest people? Not by any means. Do we find ourselves as individuals with a proper distribution of money among us; with the capability of maintaining ourselves? We find many corporations here that are immensely rich, and own money by the millions and millions of dollars. We find the community, upon the contrary, the individual man, a tramp, as it were, upon the public highway.

I then, gentlemen of the Convention, am in favor of restricting corporations to those purposes in which they have to invoke the power of the State to assist them in carrying on the operations or objects of the corporation.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was lost, on a division, by a vote of 57 ayes to 59 noes.

MR. HALE. I move that the committee now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 64 ayes to 52 noes.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. GRACE. I move that we adjourn.

A division was called for, and the motion prevailed by a vote of 74 ayes to 36 noes.

The Convention, at four o'clock and thirty minutes P. M., stood adjourned until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. CAPLES. I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Carried.

MR. HILBORN. I have a resolution I desire to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That five hundred copies of the Journal be printed and bound in book form, together with an appendix, both to be properly indexed; also, that two hundred and fifty copies of the daily Journal be printed and placed on the desks of the members.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I take this method of calling to the attention of the Convention a matter which was hastily adopted on the thirtieth of October, and which probably was not properly considered. I refer to the matter of printing the Journal. The Convention will remember that a resolution was presented here, which was referred to the Committee on Reporting and Printing, asking them to examine into the advisability or practicability of printing the Journal. They made a report, and made an estimate of the cost of printing the Journal. Among the items of cost was the binding of volumes, the appendix, and indexing. They urged the advisability of placing on the desks of the members a copy of the daily Journal. It was put to a vote of the house and the recommendation of the committee concurred in. I apprehend that the majority of the members of the Convention when voting supposed that they were merely voting to have printed these slips which daily appear on our desks. It has, however, been construed at the printing office that it carried also with it the intention and purpose to have printed five hundred copies of the Journal and the appendix, and that they should be bound and indexed.

Now it places the President in a peculiar situation, and we have now got to place some construction upon our action. I send up this resolution in order that the Convention may express an opinion upon that question. As it is now I apprehend that the Chair would hardly audit any bill that may be presented for printing anything that would go into these bound volumes.

I would state another thing, that it becomes necessary for us to know this now, because the Committee on Contingent Expenses have before them a request on the part of the Journal Clerk that he be furnished with an additional clerk, in order that the minutes may be written up to be sent to the printing office, so that the back numbers of the Journal may be printed. Now then, if the house has not authorized the back numbers of the Journal to be printed, then that clerk would not be necessary. If they have, then we want to know it, in order that we may report upon that question.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I think it was perfectly understood at the time that this Convention required that the Journal of each day's proceedings should be placed on the table of each member. There is a misapprehension perhaps among some of the members with reference to the cost of printing these Journals. In the items tabulated and presented by the Committee on Reporting and Printing the cost of printing and laying the daily Journal on each table is placed at two hundred dollars, but that two hundred dollars implies that the Journal is to be printed in book form so that it can be bound, otherwise you could not have these slips at the rate of two hundred dollars, because the great bulk of the expense is in the composition. The reason that you can have these slips at that price is that the same type is used and the only extra expense is a little paper, ink, and presswork. They are printed from the same forms that are used to print the five hundred copies that are to be bound. It would cost you nearly as much, except the binding, to have these slips placed upon your desks, as it would to have the entire work done as proposed by the committee. The items set forth that for the entire work of providing for this Convention five hundred copies of the bound Journal, the cost will be one thousand and thirty-nine dollars. It was supposed that an appendix would be inserted to this Journal which would make two hundred and fifty more pages, to contain the reports, etc. That appendix would cost five hundred and nineteen dollars and fifty cents, as reported by the committee, and the probable cost of indexing, as reported by the committee, would be one hundred and fifty dollars. Then the cost of the slips, which is the mere cost of striking them off, as you have the type set and the matter prepared for striking off the copies for the bound volume, would only be an extra amount of two hundred dollars. The Chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses says that there are certain members who so misapprehend that report as to conceive that for the sum of two hundred dollars you could have these slips laid on the table. That would be very wide of the mark. The entire cost of all this business will be one thousand nine hundred and eight dollars and fifty cents. That includes five hundred bound copies of the Journal, consisting of seven hundred and fifty pages, more pages, I believe, than are contained in the Senate Journal. Of course if the Convention does not wish the appendix—does not wish the reports added to the Journal—there will be a saving of five hundred and nineteen dollars and fifty cents. The committee considered when they sent in their report that this was clearly illustrated in their report, and under a motion which I made, that the Journal should be printed, I considered that the entire report—that the entire sum represented in the report—would be authorized by this Convention.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: The resolution I have offered does not express my sentiments or my wishes. I merely put it in as a construction of the Convention's former action. I believe that this will cost us from two thousand dollars to two thousand five hundred dollars. It is true that these Journals will be very nice things to have to take home and file away, but I reckon they are hardly worth two thousand five hundred dollars. I believe that we can have the Journals printed every day and laid on our desks for a much less sum of money, and that we ought to leave it for future Legislatures to have this Journal bound, and that we should not take this present appropriation for that purpose.

MR. REYNOLDS. I should like to ask the Chairman of the Committee what the appendix is to contain.

MR. HILBORN. Reports of State officers, etc., that do not emanate properly from the Convention. When we send out an inquiry in regard to the amount of stationery each member has drawn, for instance.

MR. REYNOLDS. Are not these reports spread upon the Journal itself? Why, then, is it necessary to have any appendix?

MR. CROSS. I see that this daily Journal was commenced on the thirtieth of October. Now, if we are going to have any use for this at all, we want the whole Journal from the twenty-eighth day of September. There is no use of having this half of a Journal. I want the whole thing.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. As I conceive, the printing of this Journal has been ordered already, the printing of it complete, bound copies and everything else. I do not see that Mr. Hilborn's resolution is wanted now. I think this Convention has ordered the printing done already, and it is a small matter of economy to stop the printing now. We certainly will want the Journal printed in full, and bound copies also. If we had gone into economy in voting down bills that should not have been paid here, we would have done better.

MR. AYERS. I will state that, according to the figures that we have from the State Printer, the only saving that would be made by refusing to have the Journals printed in book form, would be the cost of binding five hundred copies, which would be three hundred and twenty-five dollars, and the cost of paper and presswork, which would be one hundred and five dollars and sixty cents. There is the entire amount of saving that there would be in the matter.

MR. HILBORN. Let me suggest that there is another item, an extra clerk.

MR. AYERS. That is separate from the printing business. That is to assist the Journal Clerk.

MR. HILBORN. Yes. But it won't be necessary unless the back numbers are written up.

MR. AYERS. You will only require a clerk for a short time to bring up the work. The minutes of the Minute Clerk can be used by the compositors in the setting up of the matter. It is a mere trifle.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: In the back part of the house we are so unfortunately situated that it is impossible to hear what is going on at the desk, or anywhere within range of the gentlemen who compose this committee. [Cries of "louder."] Well, gentlemen are in the same fix there now as we are all the time. I have been unable yet to understand whether there has been any number of copies of the Journal ordered to be bound, or whether this resolution is for that purpose. Let the Chairman answer.

MR. HILBORN. Only by adopting the report of the Committee on Reporting and Printing, and it was doubtful whether that did or not. The President didn't know how to construe that action of the Convention. I offer the resolution to know whether they did order the binding or not.

MR. REYNOLDS. Then, this resolution of the gentleman is to do the work twice over.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the gentleman the position of the matter. We find on the second page of the Journal for the thirtieth of October, the report of the Committee on Reporting and Printing. That report you will see on page three was received, and on motion of Mr. Ayers, the Journal was ordered printed as recommended by the committee. The Chair was in doubt whether they intended to print and bind all these copies, or whether the Convention only intended to print slips to lay on the desks every morning. I declined for the time to order the binding, etc., and to settle that doubt, the Chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses presents this resolution—simply to give a construction to the former action of this Convention.

MR. REYNOLDS. That is right then. The resolution ought to pass.

MR. HILBORN. I suppose they all know that the result of the adoption of the resolution will be to incur this expense of two thousand or two thousand five hundred dollars, while a rejection of it would leave us just as we are now, with the slips on our desks and the other matter undisposed of.

MR. AYERS. I would like to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses how he swells one thousand nine hundred and eight dollars and fifty cents up to three thousand dollars?

MR. HILBORN. I said two thousand five hundred dollars.

MR. AYERS. Well, two thousand five hundred dollars? Is this extra clerk going to be paid five hundred dollars for a few days work?

MR. GORMAN. I would like to ask what this will cost to lay the slips on our tables without any copies being bound—from the beginning.

MR. AYERS. It would cost about the same amount, less the cost of binding, three hundred and twenty-five dollars; less the cost of paper, one hundred and five dollars and sixty cents; and less the presswork, thirty-eight dollars and forty cents.

MR. GORMAN. That would be four hundred and sixty-nine dollars.

THE PRESIDENT. Deducted from one thousand nine hundred and eight dollars and fifty cents.

MR. GORMAN. It would cost us one thousand five hundred dollars to print these slips alone.

MR. AYERS. Yes.

MR. REYNOLDS. This committee seems to be endowed with the faculty of making ambiguous reports. I move that it be laid on the table until we have an opportunity to find out what it is.

MR. AYERS. I call for the reading of the report. Let us see whether it is ambiguous or not.

MR. REYNOLDS. I am more than ever opposed to voting upon the resolution until I know better what it is. I insist upon the motion to lay on the table.

Digitized by Google

MR. AYERS. I will suggest that there is a mode of economy here. That would be to leave out the appendix. The cost then would be within the range of one thousand dollars.

MR. HILBORN. I wish to ask if the matter that will go into the appendix is not already printed and standing in type now?

MR. AYERS. I think that there are a great number of the reports that were in type at one time, but I think they have been distributed.

MR. HILBORN. I am convinced that these estimates will be overrun in almost every particular. Now, I will say that the Journal Clerk is endeavoring to do his duty. He is working hard and well, comparing the minutes and reading proof, etc. All that he will ask is that we furnish him a clerk during the period when they may be printing the back numbers of the Journal—for the twenty-four days prior to the commencement of the printing.

MR. BARRY. I second the motion to lay on the table. It is not debatable.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion prevailed.

NOTICE.

MR. INMAN. I have a notice I desire to give.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Mr. President: I give notice that I will move, to-morrow, to amend Rule Fifty-six, as follows: Strike out, in lines two and three, the words, 'for limiting the times of speaking,' and insert, 'that no member shall speak more than ten minutes on any one proposition, without leave of the Convention.'"

CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section four was under consideration when the committee rose. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 4. The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships; and all corporations shall have the right to sue, and shall be subject to be sued, in all Courts, in like cases as natural persons

BANKING CORPORATIONS.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments to section four the Secretary will read section five.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes; but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws; but no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation, any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States.

MR. DUDLEY, of San Joaquin. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend section five by striking out the word "special," in line two. I do not see the object of using that word, and I am informed by the Chairman of the committee that it is a mistake. The section in the present Constitution is section thirty-four of article four. It reads as follows:

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes, but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver; but no such association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money."

The word "special" is not used there, but it is in the section proposed by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: It does not strike me that it is necessary there. It was intended that that part of the section should be the same as found in the old Constitution. I see no objection to striking the word out, whereas I would see objections to leaving it in.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I would call attention to the fact that the whole of the fore part of that section, down to the word "no," in line three, is wholly unnecessary, because the Legislature cannot grant any corporation directly any charter for any purpose. That part of the section would not accomplish any good. I move to strike out all of that section down to and including the word "no," in the third line. The other part is entirely useless, as any member can see. Corporations cannot be created by special Act, and therefore is not necessary.

MR. ESTEE. I accept the amendment to strike out the word "special."

MR. VAN DYKE. What is the objection to striking out the other?

MR. ESTEE. We take it as it was in the old Constitution, and I see no special reason for striking it out. There being no special reason for striking it out, there may be special reasons for keeping it in.

MR. VAN DYKE. I would inquire if under any other sections the Legislature can grant any charter?

MR. ESTEE. No.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: The intention is that the Legislature shall not have power to grant any special charter for any purpose, either to a corporation or an individual. It is not intended to apply merely to corporations, but to apply to individuals, therefore the provision should stand as it is. In regard to the word "special," it is immaterial whether it is in or out; but the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda would destroy one of the purposes of the provision.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am under the impression that the first part of section five should not be stricken out. There is a principle contained in it which, if we will examine it, we will clearly see. And it is this: that the Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes. This forbids the Legislature having this power, and there is evidently a principle contained in it.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: As I understand it, the first amendment is to strike out the word "special," and the next is to strike out all of the section down to the word "no." What I wish to know is, which proposition is before the Convention. Some gentlemen are discussing one, and some the other.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is in order to discuss it in any way he thinks proper.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I do not propose to say anything very lengthy upon the subject. I am satisfied that the members care very little about the word "special," for it does not change the effect materially. But with regard to the Legislature not having certain powers, and it being specified in this clause, there is a principle involved that is worth the attention of this body, and we should study before it is stricken out, whether we wish it stricken out, and have nothing said as to whether the Legislature shall have this power or not.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: Section one, as reported by the Committee on Corporations, in the first and second lines, reads as follows: "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act." Section five says: "The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes." Now if the Legislature cannot grant any special charter for any purpose whatsoever, what is the benefit? I ask the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, what is the benefit in section five of designating banking corporations, when section one clearly says that no special charter of any nature can be granted?

Now the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Hager, says that this is put in to prevent the Legislature from conferring a charter upon private individuals, or a single person, allowing him to do a banking business; but I ask whether the word "charter" in an article on corporations does not signify a corporate charter. It cannot mean anything else. The word "charter" is defined by Bouvier, as an Act of the Legislature creating a corporation. When section one says that no special charter shall be granted, it embraces the whole subject, and it seems to me entirely useless to specify in section five, that they shall not be granted for banking purposes.

MR. WATERS. Will the gentleman from San Francisco, allow a question? Are not our statute books full of special franchises to ferries and toll roads? I understand that the object of this is to cut them off.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to send up my amendment in writing. It obviates the objection raised by the gentleman from San Francisco and the gentleman from San Bernardino.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section five by striking out all to and including the word 'but,' in line three, and insert between the words 'corporation' and 'or,' in line three, the word 'person,' so that it will read: 'No corporation, person, or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States.'"

MR. VAN DYKE. That accomplishes the whole purpose.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: In answer to the gentleman from San Bernardino, I would say that it was held in the 48th Cal., in the case of San Francisco vs. the Spring Valley Water Company, that an Act which purports to be and is in fact a special Act, cannot be converted into a general Act by the declaration of any other Act of the Legislature that it shall be considered a general Act. And furthermore, in the same case the Supreme Court held that corporations, except for municipal purposes, must be formed under general laws. Of course I am unable to say what the Legislature undertook to do, but they certainly had no power or authority to do any such act as the gentleman speaks of under the Constitution of the State. The only trouble about retaining this, it seems to me, is that the Courts would have but a stumbling block. In one place it says that no special charter of any kind shall be granted; and in another place it says that the Legislature shall not grant any special charter for banking purposes. I hope the amendment will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: When I asked the question of the gentleman from San Francisco, I supposed that perhaps his mistake was caused by his unfamiliarity with the statutes of this State; that he did not know that it had been the custom of the Legislature of this State to grant special franchises to maintain toll-roads and to maintain ferries. I supposed that that was the extent of the gentleman's mistake, and I am sorry to see that the malady is deeper. I am sorry to see that it is a constitutional malady which affects the gentleman. Do we not know that State Constitutions are mere limitations upon the Legislature? Do we not know that special franchises may be granted to individuals? The only limitation is that a special franchise shall not be granted to a corporation; which would in effect amount to creating a corporation by special Act. There is no prohibition in the existing Constitution prohibiting the Legislature from granting special franchises to individuals. The case cited by the gentleman is one where the Legislature attempted to grant a special franchise to a corporation. That has been uniformly held to be illegal and void. But there is no decision of the State of California deciding that the grant of a special franchise to an individual is unlawful.

Digitized by Google

MR. VAN DYKE. I will call the gentleman's attention to the decision of the Supreme Court on the Ensign case, where they held expressly that you could not grant these privileges.

MR. WATERS. I reply that he can find dozens of cases where franchises have been granted to individuals to maintain ferries and toll-roads, and they have been upheld by the Supreme Court, and they are to-day collecting their tolls. But we know that unless we do place something here in the nature of this first clause in section five, restricting this, that the Constitution, only being a limitation upon the Legislature, it would have the power. Where we do not limit the Legislature, it has the power. In other words, when a matter is introduced into the Legislature, there is nothing to prevent the Legislature from passing that law unless the power has been delegated to the United States Congress, or unless it is expressly prohibited by the Constitution. Now unless this first clause of section five is put in, it seems to me that the Legislature would have power to grant special franchises to individuals.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that this amendment ought to be adopted, for this reason, that the provision is in the wrong place, if needed at all. That is merely a prohibition against a special Act granting a special charter for banking purposes. This prohibits the granting of a special charter to either corporation or private individual. That clause must have been drawn up under the impression that banking would not be conducted except by corporations, whereas, I think, after two days discussion upon the question, that banking can be carried on by others than corporations. Therefore, that prohibition does not necessarily have any reference to corporations, as I can see, at all. If special banking charters are to be prohibited let it be in the Legislative Department. If that prohibition is necessary strike it out from here, where it does not belong, and put it into the Legislative Department, as a restriction upon legislation. There is where it belongs if it belongs in the Constitution at all.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: It is well enough to understand exactly what we are talking about, and what we are trying to do. I presume that we all understand that we are amending the old Constitution with reference to proposing a new. Now, the provision reported by the committee is substantially the same as the old Constitution, and the criticisms would equally apply to the Constitution as it now exists. That is, the Constitution as it now exists, provides that corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act. Such is the amendment of the committee. The Constitution, as it exists, provides that the Legislature shall not have power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes, but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver. Now, the only substantial variation is by leaving out that provision for the deposit of gold and silver. "The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes; but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws." Now, I merely refer to this to show that the criticisms indulged in here would equally apply to the old Constitution as it exists, except in the alteration of the word that I have made. I think that the committee have been wise to follow the language of the provision in the old Constitution, inasmuch as that language has been in use, and the Supreme Court has passed upon its different relations again and again, and it is a well settled rule that when constitutional law, as well as statutory law, has been repeatedly adjudicated, it should be left standing according to that adjudication.

Why should we change the phraseology and introduce something of a doubtful character? The only criticism that I assumed to make, was that it would amount to nothing, inasmuch as the Constitution we are amending has the same provision precisely. I can see a propriety in its reading as it does, because it applies to all corporations and partnerships, men either of native or foreign birth, that they shall have no special privileges in this country as individuals, partnerships, or corporations, to pursue banking.

The gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Waters, says that special privileges have been granted men in this State. That is true, and they were sustained by the Supreme Court of this State. The Legislature has again and again passed laws giving special franchises to toll-roads, ferries, and toll-bridges, and it has been almost impossible to get rid of them afterwards, in the earlier days of the State. I cannot see any good reason for changing the old Constitution in the manner that it is proposed to be changed by the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Alameda; and I commend the Committee on Corporations that they have adopted the old Constitution in a great many of the provisions that are well understood and well settled by adjudication.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the report of the Committee on Corporations, while apparently retaining almost the old section, they still put a construction upon it that entirely defeats the idea contained in the old Constitution. The old section prohibits the Legislature from granting a charter for banking purposes, while the section as reported confines it to a special charter.

MR. ESTEE. I have stated that the word "special" crept in there by mistake, and that we consented to have it stricken out.

MR. FILCHER. It is a broad declaration that associations and corporations, without any limit whatever, can be formed, and in this respect at any rate, the effect of the section as reported would be the same as is proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda. I am opposed to either the amendment or the section reported by the committee, and if it is the sense of the committee that the section as it stands in the old Constitution should be adopted substantially, I hope that they will vote down these amendments and will consider an amendment I will send up. It is exactly the same section as in the old Constitution, except that it adds after the words, "for the deposit of gold and silver," the words, "and other lawful money of the United States." There you have all the old provision with that addition that we have found necessary by experience. I think that is all the change necessary, and all that in wisdom we are justified in making.

As to the remark of the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe, that this matter ought possibly to go before the Committee on Legislative Department, I would say that it was considered and thoroughly discussed in that committee, and after discussing and considering it, the change I suggest was made in the committee, and that was the only change.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Dudley.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I now offer my amendment, which I have sent to the clerk.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes, but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver and other lawful money of the United States; but no such associations shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money."

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: Your committee, sir, in adopting the section as reported first, felt that the declaration should be made as found in the old Constitution, namely, that "the Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes." That was held necessary for several reasons. First, we wanted to hold all such institutions bound by all of the provisions in this Constitution and limited by all the provisions of this Constitution, so that the Legislature should not at any time in the future interfere with this great question, but that the banking institution, whether an association or corporation, should come in under general laws and be subject to all of its restrictions, and all of the restrictions in the other section of the draft reported by the committee. We adopted the old Constitution. It has stood for twenty-nine years, and unless the gentleman can show some more potent reason for striking that out, I appeal to the sense of the Convention to let it stand.

MR. HALE. I understand that the report follows out the original intent of the old Constitution.

MR. ESTEE. Except so far as it adds to it.

MR. HALE. The old Constitution authorizes not corporations but associations to be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver.

MR. ESTEE. If the gentleman will wait a minute, I will come to that. That was the reason that we left that first proposition in. The next proposition of the committee is: "But corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws." The old Constitution read, "but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver." The fact is patent to every member that corporations had been formed for the deposit of gold and silver, and for the loaning of money, ever since eighteen hundred and fifty—ever since the adoption of the present Constitution. Your committee saw this strange condition of things. They saw a provision in the Constitution that no bank should exist, but banks did exist, and the Supreme Court held that, notwithstanding that provision, these banks could get into the Courts of the country and enforce their rights, and they have existed from that time up to the present. With that in view, your committee concluded to add this: "But corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws." That is fair, if there is going to be any. Of course, if the gentleman makes the point that there should not be any banks, that is a different proposition. But if they are to exist, then your committee thought they should stand upon the same footing as any other business institution of the country.

The next proposition is: "But no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States." Now, sir, these were the reasons that moved your committee in reporting that section as it is. If it can be improved we have no pride in its present shape. If anything can be added to perfect it, put it in.

MR. TERRY. What is the object of the words, "in this State?"

MR. ESTEE. I do not know why the words, "in this State" were put in. If any member of the committee would explain it—I do not remember. But if the business is done in this State, of course the power of the Constitution cannot reach beyond the limits of the State. However, if the gentleman wishes to strike that out, I am perfectly willing it should come out, unless some member of the committee can give a reason for its being there. I do not believe in putting anything in this Constitution unless it is needed, and I am desirous of having any section amended that can be improved. But we object to such amendments as interfere with the old established reading and meaning of the section as it is and has been used, unless it is to reach some evil, and I am unable to see that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, is going to do that; we want the declaration that the Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes. As I said before, we have no pride about the terms of the section or its wording in general, so long as it makes the rights of the people more secure, and limits the power properly.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: My proposition was intended to accomplish that very purpose; that is, to place a banking institution on precisely the same footing as other corporations, giving them no more favor, and taking from them no more rights. There is a declaration in the first section of that article that corporations cannot be formed by special enactment. Now, is not that sufficient? Does not that apply to all corporations? Most undoubtedly. Now, the only purpose I can see had in view in the fifth section is to prohibit the issuance of paper to circulate as money. Now, I am willing to go to the extent of the committee and the old Constitution in that particular, and I have included individuals as well as corporations—that they should not be allowed to issue paper to circulate as money. And, with all deference, I cannot see the necessity, after we have declared most emphatically that no corporation shall be formed by special Act, to repeat again that no corporation of a particular kind can be formed that way. I object to unnecessary repetition in the Constitution—to tautology. If any good can be done by it, I would like to see it; but it is not enough to say that it existed in the old Constitution. But it did not so exist in the old Constitution. They have stricken out, "for the deposit of gold and silver." I am willing that they should be on the same footing with other institutions, and, while I voted to hold the directors and trustees responsible for the misappropriation of the funds intrusted to them, I am willing to concede that this class of corporations are a useful institution in the State, and have been promotive of the best interests of the State when properly managed and conducted, and I am willing that they should stand upon the same footing as all other corporations. That is the purpose I have in this amendment. Then the section will be stripped of everything excepting the declaration that neither corporation, nor individual, nor association, shall issue paper to circulate as money.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I would ask the gentleman to accept this proposition as a substitute for both amendments, and I think it will include the idea that was intended to be retained in the original section by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, and also the purpose of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, and not be subject to the objection of being tautological:

"No person, corporation, or association shall be authorized to make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States."

That includes an inhibition to the Legislature, and at the same time it prevents them from issuing paper to circulate as money. Now, if the gentleman will accept that as a substitute, gentlemen can be accommodated with reference to the meaning which we desire that this section will have.

MR. VAN DYKE. That is my amendment.

MR. HERRINGTON. With the exception of the words "be authorized to." I can only get it in by your accepting it as a substitute.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I suppose that the committee aimed at these three propositions; that the Legislature shall not grant any special charter; second, that associations or corporations may be formed for banking purposes; third, that they shall not issue paper to circulate as money; and that the majority of the Convention are in favor of this proposal. Now, it does seem to me that we can accept that. I am sorry that the word "special" has been stricken out. It reads now that "the Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes," and yet it says "that corporations or associations may be formed under general laws." Now, the general law is in itself only a charter. A charter is a mere grant, and the general law is a grant, and I think the word "special" had much better be left in there. But, sir, if we are in favor of banks being organized for general banking purposes, except that they shall not issue money, it seems to me that this expression in the report is much better than the old Constitution. The old Constitution says that there shall be no banks, but associations may be formed for the deposit of gold and silver. That means upon the face of it that you can only have places where money can be deposited with some person who shall take care of it for pay and hand it back to you when you want it. Yet, we know that we have had banks that do a general banking business, except that they cannot issue money, and I understand that the people want them and the Courts have been compelled to get around the proposition. If we want these banks it is much better to say so, and I think the committee has done so. It seems to me that this section had better be left just as it stands.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I hope that these amendments will be voted down. This committee is dealing with corporations. If I am correctly informed the Committee on Legislative Department will propose a general section forbidding the Legislature granting any special privileges of any kind or forbidding special legislation of any kind. This section reported by the Committee on Corporations, is prepared as relating to corporations. I do not mean to go into the Legislative Department, for that will be regulated by the matter presented by another committee; but if these amendments are voted down, and I get an opportunity, I propose to offer to amend the section where I think the committee have fallen short in not putting the banking corporations, as they intended to do, on the same footing as all other corporations. They stopped short, after providing that they might be formed under general laws, by not inserting "but such laws may be repealed or altered from time to time." I propose to add that to the section and make it conform to the declaration in section one which has already been adopted by this committee. Section one provides: "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act. All laws passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time, or repealed." In other words, putting the corporations under the control of the Legislature. This section five might imply that the banking corporations are not subject to that provision. Therefore, I propose to add to the section, after the words "under general laws" the words, "but such laws may be altered from time to time or repealed," just as in the first section; and then some proviso further as to the duty of the Legislature in controlling and regulating them.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I spoke to the substitute, but not since my amendment was offered, and I wish to point out the difference between the section as reported by the Committee on Corporations, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, and the amendment proposed by myself. In the first place, in the old Constitution we find a limitation. We find that while associations may be formed, it points out for what purpose. The report of the Committee on Corporations ingeniously avoids the limitation, and simply provides that corporations may be formed for banking purposes That of course includes all, without any limitation whatever. Next, the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, would simply declare that no corporation, person, or association shall be formed which shall have power to make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other papers, to circulate as money. The same limitation that now exists. But, that would leave the question open with the Legislature to form the class or character of banking institutions without limit.

Now, sir, it is wise, in my judgment, to retain the limitation. My amendment retains that specification, or the limitation. It declares that while a corporation may be formed, it shall be for the deposit of gold and silver and the lawful money of the United States, as experience has proven necessary. I see no reason why that clause should not be added. I believe the section would then be all that is desired. But, as for changing it as proposed by the report of the committee, and destroying these limitations, I am certainly opposed to it. Gold and silver is lawful money, and there may be other money that is lawful—and there is—so there is no reason for that limitation. While, on the other hand, I do not think it is wise to obliterate the restriction which states for what purposes these institutions may be formed.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: If this amendment is adopted, a bank could not do any of the ordinary business. They could not negotiate notes; they could not loan money; they could not carry on that very kind of business that every man knows that bankers do do, and that they must do. If they are only for the purpose of receiving deposits of gold and silver, it amounts to nothing. They cannot carry on that business. We do not want to restrict the gentleman in any limitations that are legitimate. If he has got any limitation that will protect the people against any evil, we are anxious that he should submit it and have it adopted. And I will say that he is very much mistaken when he says that the committee has sought ingenuously to avoid the limitation. On the contrary, the committee sought ingenuously to impose all the limitations consistent with the business in which they are engaged. I do not think that the amendment offered by the gentleman will be either advantageous to the people, or offer any limitation of use to the people, or protect the people from any wrong, and at the same time it would merely destroy that class of business.

REMARKS OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the committee will vote down all the amendments that have been so far offered. The object of the people in adopting this clause in the old Constitution was, first, to prevent the formation of banks, except under general laws; second, they desired to prevent the establishment of banks of issue. Now, they used language that accomplished that purpose, and I am entirely opposed to departing from the language of the old Constitution, unless some good can be effected by it. The first clause read: "The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes." That covered individuals as well as corporations and associations. So we desire to preserve that intact.

The gentleman from Alameda is entirely mistaken, when he says that the Ensign Act fell for the reason that he assigns. Every lawyer here who has studied that decision must know that it fell because it was a practical evasion of the provision of the Constitution that provided that corporations should not be formed by special Act. The Ensign Act pretended to grant a special charter to individuals, on which they were to form a corporation within a given time, and if that part of the Act had been left out, the Supreme Court would have upheld the Act. But, in the language used by the framers of the first Constitution, it was provided that "associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver." Under a strict construction, commercial banks could not be formed. However, they have been formed and carried on for a long time. The committee have changed that, but still inhibit banks of issue. I think that was very proper.

This amendment, offered by the gentleman from Alameda, would open the door to special privileges to other than corporations, and leave the Legislature untrammeled in that regard. The other amendment leaves out the word "corporation;" and I was anxious to hear a reason for it, but did not. But the committee provide that "no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation, any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States," so that they have covered the whole ground. But the balance of the section, after the word "money," I am satisfied ought to go out. But either one of these amendments will impair or destroy the usefulness of this section. I am satisfied that the committee has worded it according to the wishes of the people of this State, and it ought to stand down to that word.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: In this discussion, it seems to me, one important thing has been lost sight of, and that is this: the old Constitution has no article—no special article—in relation to corporations and corporations alone. Now, it seems to me that whenever any Court passes upon any article of the new Constitution (if the new Constitution is adopted), the Court will take into consideration the section that it is passing upon, and in what particular article that section happens to be. If the section being passed upon is under the general title of "Corporations," of course, of necessity, the section must be specially considered with reference to the law of corporations, and not with reference to the Legislative Department. In the old Constitution we had no article on corporations. Article four, in which we find the subject of corporations, is the article upon Legislative Department; and therefore, when, in section thirty-one of article four of the old Constitution, it is said corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act, except for municipal purposes, that section thirty-one relates to corporations. Then, when we come to section thirty-four of that article, it relates to banks, and not to corporations. And when the gentleman says that special privileges have been granted other than privileges conferred upon corporations, of course—this article relating to everything within the bounds of the Legislative Department—it was necessary to designate, to make a distinction, between corporations and other franchises and privileges that might be conferred. But in the particular article under discussion, and to which the gentleman from Alameda has offered an amendment—it relates to corporations solely and alone, and every section found in that article relates to corporations. But when the word "charter" is used, it means an Act of the Legislature conferring the right of incorporation. It does not mean special privileges outside of corporations. And, as was well said by another gentleman, if we want to insert anything of that character in relation to banks, it ought to be inserted in the article on Legislative Department; and I am perfectly willing to vote for it in the article on the Legislative Department. But it seems to me, to allow it to stand in section five, is to say, in effect, that the Legislature shall have power to pass Acts granting special charters for other purposes, because there is a special inhibition which says that the Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes. The expression of one thing is the exclusion of everything else, and the exclusion of everything else may be said to be the expression of that very thing. Therefore, if we say here that the Legislature shall not pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes, it seems to me that they can grant a special charter for other purposes.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I propose to say a few words in favor of the amendment as offered by the committee, and I think it is very clear that the language used by the committee is an improvement upon the old Constitution. I may say in the beginning that it was the intention, no doubt, of the framers of the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine to allow all banking except banking for the purpose of issuing and circulating money. But it has been expressed in a very obscure manner. Section thirty-four, of article four, is this:

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes; but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver, and other lawful moneys of the United States, but no such association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money."

Now that excludes banks of loan, and excludes banks from taking any other deposits than gold and silver, which obviously could not have been the intention of the framers of the Constitution, although so expressed. But we know that our banks are banks of loan, and would be banks of very little utility if they were not banks of loan. They have gone on loaning money continually, and always in violation of the Constitution. Now, sir, let us look at the next section. It says:

"The Legislature of this State shall prohibit by law any person or persons, association, company, or corporation, from exercising the privileges of banking or creating paper to circulate as money."

Now, in the first place, they say there shall be no banking except for the deposit of gold and silver. There shall be no banks of loan. There shall be no banks that may take any other money except gold and silver; and then in the thirty-fifth section it is still further contracted. Now, it is obvious to every one that this language is obscure, to say the least. We have met it by providing, in substance, that there may be banks of deposit of all classes of money; that there may be banks of loan; that there may be banks for all purposes usually understood by the word banking, except banks for issuing paper money. It seems to me that the language of the committee is clear; that it gets rid of the difficulty of this ambiguity, and places banks where they should be placed in this country. It allows banks of loan and banks for the deposit of all kinds of money, but prohibits them from making paper money and circulating it.

Now, sir, this provision is brought down from the Constitution of Texas, with which I had something to do. There we prohibited paper money. Now, I will say that in Texas we had no paper money up to the time of the Rebellion, when it was deluged by Confederate money. It was found to be a salutary provision. We always had an abundance of gold and silver, and I hope we shall adhere to the policy here, which has been engrafted upon our specific contract law, and which has protected this State from the commercial convulsions and failures that have prevailed in almost every other State in the Union. This is to be done by prohibiting, in clear and explicit terms, banks from making paper money to circulate as a circulating medium. We have used clear language for that purpose. We have removed the ambiguities in the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, and I trust, sir, that the language of the committee will not be tinkered with, but that we will use clear language, as we have used, and which we propose to engraft in the Constitution, to express what we mean. I hope these amendments will all be voted down.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke.

The amendment was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher. The Secretary will read it:

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes; but associations may be formed under general laws, for the deposit of gold and silver, and other lawful money of the United States, but no such association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money."

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: That is open to the same objection. It prohibits banks of loan.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend by adding at the end of the section the following:

"All laws passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time, or repealed. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to pass laws for the regulation and control of corporations formed under this section; to protect the depositors in savings banks; to prohibit loans at high rates; to prohibit discrimination between borrowers; and to regulate by law the salaries of officers of savings banks."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Cruz, Mr. White.

The amendment was lost.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the whole of the amendment and insert the following:

"No person, corporation, or association shall be authorized to make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, or promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States."

Now, it seems to me, that ought to cover the ground contended for by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, and the ideas intended to be conveyed by the gentleman who offered the first amendment; and it also embraces the substance of the present section, and is not subject to the objection that was interposed to the section as it now stands. It inhibits the Legislature from authorizing any person, corporation, or association to issue any paper to circulate as money. It also, as a matter of course, attaches to the private individual. It leaves also the power in the hands of the Legislature to authorize these banking associations to loan money. It takes no authority away from the Legislature to give full and ample power and authority to do all the business they are now doing, and does not limit them to the deposit of gold and silver coin or other moneys of the United States. It strikes me that we should be satisfied with that and avoid the difficulty that is now in the way of the adoption of the section as it now stands.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order. My point is this: that this amendment is substantially and almost literally the same as was offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, and voted down. Now, although I favored that amendment, it was voted down, and I cannot see any material difference between it and this one. The only difference I can see is that one says, "no corporation, person, or association shall make, issue," etc., and the other says, "no person, corporation, or association shall be authorized to make, issue," etc. He puts it in a different form, but I cannot see any difference in the meaning.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken. This is an amendment offered to another amendment entirely.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I object to this amendment on the same ground. Now I do not wish to present myself before this body as a critic, or anything of that kind, but this amendment comes before us in a certain form. I am not saying whether other forms that embraced about the same are correct or incorrect, but I am opposed to this because I think it is decidedly ambiguous. "No person, corporation, or association, shall be authorized to make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, or promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States." Now, do we consider that they have a right to make and put into circulation the lawful money of the United States? [Laughter.] Look at the language as it is. Now, Mr. Chairman, we wish in these cases to see correctly. We want good sense. We want law. We want principle. But we do not want things which would show that they would have a right to make, issue, and put in circulation, the lawful money of the United States of America. [Applause and laughter.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

The amendment was lost.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I wish to call the attention of the Convention briefly, before the vote upon this last amendment, to the three substantial propositions before the committee. One is the Constitution as it is; another is section five of the report of the Committee on

Digitized by Google

Corporations, and the other is section thirty-one of the report of the Committee on Legislative Department. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, is section thirty-one of the report of the Committee on Legislative Department.

MR. HOWARD. I rise to a point of order. The report of the Committee on Legislative Department is not before the committee now.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is to the manner in which he is discussing the question. Gentlemen have every range they desire in this discussion.

MR. McCALLUM. I think that if the gentleman will notice that my discussion is strictly in order, for this reason: the gentleman from Placer has offered section thirty-one of the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, as an amendment to section five of the report of the Committee on Corporations.

MR. HOWARD. I was not aware of that. That is all right.

MR. McCALLUM. The Committee on Legislative Department have inserted it too, and deemed it a part of their duty to report upon these sections in regard to corporations, to a limited extent, and this section thirty-one is a part of the report of that committee, and is the one offered as a substitute for section five. I submit that the report of the Committee on Legislative Department upon this point, is all that is necessary, and we are not to duplicate this section. Where they come in contact, or are upon the same subject, we have to take our choice, and now is the time to take our choice. Gentlemen, I prefer the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, because it seems to me that the wording has been more carefully considered, as admitted by the Chairman of the committee. He was asked what use the words "in this State" were in the section, and he confessed that he does not know why that change was made, and asked some other gentleman to tell. There is no such thing in the present Constitution.

MR. ESTEE. Judge Terry has an amendment that will remedy that evil. I am not pretending to know how it got in.

MR. McCALLUM. That is the very point that I urge in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher. We need such a change as is in the amendment—that is, section thirty-one of the report of the Committee on Legislative Department—and there is no need to amend, or go to work upon this section five, provided, in the judgment of the committee, section thirty-one is good as it stands. That error does not occur in the report of the Committee on Legislative Department. It is now before the Convention in the amendment pending. The section reported does not contain the clause now in the Constitution about associations for the deposit of gold and silver. They use generally, the language, "for such purposes." What is attempted, as a matter of grammatical construction, I am unable to very clearly understand. It reads: "The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes; but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws." Now, we state, in that respect, the report of the Committee on Corporations is ambiguous.

It is said that in the twenty-nine years of the Constitution the Courts have construed that section, giving the banks the right to do the kind of business which the banks have done in all these years. Then if construction has been given to that language where is the necessity of changing that language? I am opposed to inserting anything in the Constitution, as we find it, or to striking anything from it, without some good reason showing the necessity. It is a strong argument against the section reported by the Committee on Corporations, that they change the section after the Courts have construed it for twenty-nine years, without any difficulty. If it is wrong it has been so for twenty-eight or twenty-nine years. If difficulty can come in the future, I submit that we had better not change it, for fear some other construction may be given, giving them some right which we do not propose to give by the amendment.

MR. LAINE. I would ask the gentleman if the Supreme Court has ever construed that language? If it has, I never found it.

MR. McCALLUM. I understood the Chairman of the committee to say so.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I will say that what the Chairman of the committee said was this: that the Supreme Court had permitted these banks to exist, which the old Constitution did not seem to contemplate, and had permitted them to get into Court on that kind of business, notwithstanding the apparent inhibition of the Constitution, and we thought we would make it a little clearer if we could.

MR. McCALLUM. I would say, in answer, that the language reported by the Committee on Legislative Department is the language of the Constitution proposed by Mr. Laine, section thirty-four, it reads:

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes; but associations may be formed, under general laws, for the deposit of gold and silver; but no such associations shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money."

That is the identical section reported by the Committee on Legislative Department, with the addition of the words, "and other lawful money of the United States," a point upon which we are all agreed. So it is a part of his own Constitution.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: Mr. Laine is not one of the Courts.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I am not quoting any decisions. Here is section thirty-one of the report of the Legislative Committee, which I beg leave to read and submit the matter to the committee:

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes, but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver and other lawful money of the United States; but no such associations shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money."

That is the amendment now pending, and I submit that it is rather preferable to section five of the report of the Committee on Corporations. My own judgment would have been to strike out section five and pass it entirely, and consider that when we come to consider the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, where it belongs.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: There is the same objection, the same obscurity, in the section proposed by the Legislative Committee that there is in the old Constitution: "The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes." Now, under that all banking is forbidden. That is the trouble with this thing. And then it goes on and makes a single exception: "but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver and other lawful money of the United States." It limits banking to that single operation. It, in effect, prohibits banks of discount, banks of loan, and banks of exchange. "But no such association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money." So far as that is concerned it is the provision of the old Constitution and of all the amendments. The thirty-second section of the report of the Committee on Legislation reads thus:

"The Legislature of this State shall prohibit by law any person or persons, association, company, or corporation, from exercising the privileges of banking, or creating paper to circulate as money."

Now there is an absolute prohibition against banking at all. All banking would be excluded under that. It strikes me that this is a very inadequate way of banking. In effect it destroys—if it is carried out and interpreted by the Courts, as it is here reported by the Committee on Legislative Department—all banking in this State, except that of receiving deposits of gold and silver, and other lawful money of the United States. It is not, I apprehend, the intention of this Convention to do that. If banking, banks of deposit, banks of discount, banks of exchange, banks of loan, and banks for general commercial purposes are beneficial institutions to everybody, I cannot believe it is the intention of this Convention to prohibit banking entirely. Why should we?

MR. GREGG. I offer an amendment to the amendment. Strike out the words "in this State" at the end of the fifth line, and insert the word "individual" after the word "association," in the fourth line.

MR. GRACE. I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion was lost, on a division, by a vote of 55 ayes to 65 noes.

MR. GREGG. I have sent up my amendment in writing.

The SECRETARY read:

"Amend section five to read: 'Section 5. TheLegislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes; but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws; but no corporation, association, or individual shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money, except the lawful money of the United States.'"

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: There is something in the criticism that has been made, that a strict construction of this section would authorize corporations to make the lawful money of the United States. It says that no corporation shall make, issue, or put in circulation, any bill, etc., to circulate as money, except the lawful money of the United States. That is, they shall not make any money unless it be the lawful money of the United States. By the Constitution of the United States, we are prohibited from making anything but gold and silver legal tender——

MR. GREGG. My amendment strikes out "in this State."

MR. HAGER. I was going to read the Constitution of the United States. It says, that no State shall "coin money; emit bills of credit; make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts;" and we cannot as a State make even the so-called legal tender of the United States a legal tender of this State. The Constitution, as it was originally framed, does not contain this provision, "except the lawful money of the United States," and I think it ought to be stricken out here. When you come to speak about the lawful money of the United States there is another power, beyond the authority of this State, which overrides anything we may do or say here. That is, the Constitution of the United States, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, are the paramount law of the land.

MR. ESTEE. When we come to a vote on this amendment, then the gentleman can propose an amendment to meet that.

MR. HOWARD. What power is there in the Federal Government to make any lawful money except gold and silver?

MR. HAGER. That is a conundrum that I am not called upon to answer. I did not undertake to say that the Government could make anything legal tender but gold and silver. I am arguing how far we can go. I read in the Constitution of the United States what a State may do, and it is foreign to our purpose to discuss what the Government of the United States can do. For my own part I should say that the greenback, so-called, never was a lawful currency within the meaning of the Constitution.

MR. HOWARD. That is all I wished.

MR. HAGER. That is my idea. The Supreme Court has decided that they were to a certain extent. But they decided one way and then decided the other way, and if it should come up now the general prevailing sentiment is that the Supreme Court would decide that all currency issued since the war is in violation of the Constitution. These are my ideas; but we are not here for the purpose of discussing that matter.

MR. TINNIN. How about Butler's fiat money?

Digitized by Google

MR. HAGER. That is the easiest defined money in the world. You print on a piece of paper "I am a dollar," and it is a dollar. That is fiat money as I understand it. But as I was saying, I think these words, "in this State, unless the lawful money of the United States," should be stricken out altogether, and I have drawn an amendment with reference to that matter to strike out these words and let the clause stand just as it was in the old Constitution; "but no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money;" and there it stops. Then the Constitution of the United States comes in as the paramount law, and it says, whatever is the legal money of the United States, any bank, or any corporation, can make use of the same as any individual; that we, by our legislation, cannot do anything with it one way or the other. If my friend will accept my amendment to strike out all after the word "money," that is, the words, "in this State, except the lawful money of the United States," it would remove the difficulty. I am opposed to having that clause left in. They might make money to circulate in some other State. They might send it into Nevada and elsewhere to circulate as money.

MR. GREGG. My amendment strikes out "in this State."

MR. HAGER. But if it stands as reported now any banking corporation of the State of California might make and issue money to be circulated in the State of Nevada, in New York, Philadelphia, Europe, or elsewhere, provided they did not make it to be circulated in this State. We want no such provision as that. We do not wish it to appear that there is even an implied authority to issue paper money to circulate anywhere in the world. It has never been the policy in this State to have anything but gold and silver for money. The banking corporations have been for deposit and discount, and nothing more. So they ought to be, for the reception of money and for the loaning of money, but not for the issue of paper as money in any form. The older States of the Union are coming around now to that principle and stop State banks from issuing paper to circulate as money. I will offer this amendment if I am in order.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending, but the Chair will receive the amendment to perfect the original section.

MR. HAGER. So that the section will stand as in the original Constitution.

MR. McFARLAND. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I wish to send up a supplemental report from the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, and ask that it go to the table, and be printed without reading.

So ordered.

Following is the report:

SACRAMENTO, November 15th, 1878.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, to whom were referred proposed amendments number four hundred and fifty-one, introduced by Mr. Hale; number four hundred and sixty-one, introduced by Mr. Vacquerel; number four hundred and ninety-eight, introduced by Mr. Hughey, have had the same under consideration, and report them back, with a recommendation that the same be indefinitely postponed.

The committee recommend that section six of the article on corporations, submitted by the committee on October thirtieth, be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 6. All existing charters or grants of exclusive or special privileges, under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith, at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity.

The committee also recommend that section fourteen of the article proposed by the committee be amended to read as follows:

SEC. 14. Every corporation, other than religious, educational, or benevolent, organized or doing business in this State, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock; the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the names and place of residence of its officers.

The committee also recommend that the following words be added to section twelve:

Provided, that coöperative societies may be formed under general laws, which may provide by by-laws of their own for limiting the representation of shareholders of their stock, and the number of shares that may be held; and the Legislature shall enact such laws as may be necessary for their faithful management and protection, and may limit the liabilities of their members.

The committee further recommend the adoption of amendment number four hundred and fifty-eight, proposed by Mr. McConnell, to be known as section fifteen, and that the numbering of the sections following be changed to correspond thereto. The section proposed reads as follows:

SEC. 15. No corporation organized outside the limits of this State shall be allowed to transact business within this State on more favorable conditions than are prescribed by law to similar corporations organized under the laws of this State. The Legislature shall enforce this section by appropriate legislation.

Respectfully,

M. M. ESTEE, Chairman.

REPORT FROM THE CONTROLLER OF STATE.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I have a communication from the State Controller, addressed to the committee of which I am Chairman, showing the precise condition of the appropriation under which we are working, how much has been drawn, the daily expenses, and how long the fund will last.

THE SECRETARY read:

CONTROLLER'S OFFICE, November 15th, 1878.

To the Hon. S. G. Hilborn, Chairman Committee on Contingent Expenses:

Amount appropriated for expenses of Constitutional Convention	$150,000 00
Cost of Convention up to and including November 16th, as shown by Controller's books	92,645 00
Balance in appropriation	$57,355 00
Per diem of delegates and attachés	1,651 00
Estimated expenses other than per diem	94 00
Estimated total expenses per day	$1,745 00

From the above showing, I would estimate that the appropriation for expenses of Constitutional Convention will last for thirty-three days, from and including the seventeenth day of November.

The estimated expenses, other than per diem of members and attachés, is only an approximation, made by taking the amounts that have already been paid for printing, stationery, etc., and dividing it by the number of days up to date of payment that the Convention had been in session.

W. B. C. BROWN, Controller.

THE PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table and be printed.

BANKING CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Gregg, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment of Mr. Filcher:

"SEC. 5. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes; but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver, or other lawful money of the United States; but no such association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, or promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money."

MR. GREGG moved to amend the amendment:

"Strike out the words, 'in this State,' at the end of the fifth line, and insert the word 'individuals' after the word 'association,' in the fourth line."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment offered by Mr Gregg:

"Amend section five so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes; but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws: but no corporation, association, or individual shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper to circulate as money, except the lawful money of the United States."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment will not pass in the shape in which it is proposed, and that the section reported by the committee will be adopted. No one can ignore the fact that we have a large number of banks in this State, exercising general banking powers, and all of the powers except issuing money. Now, under the old classification of banks, a bank of deposit was a generic term which embraced all except those which issued money. But this is not confined to that. It is analogous, therefore it should not be put in the Constitution. The Code of California contains some provisions showing the legislative construction of the old Constitution. That legislative construction provides for the accumulation, saving, and loaning, so as to create what are called savings banks. Also, provides for banks of discount and deposit, and ultimately the section was altered so as to provide for all other general business purposes. Now, we have banks of savings, general savings banks; one institution I think I may mention here, against which nobody will make any objection whatever, and that is the Hibernia Savings Bank of San Francisco. I never heard any objection to that institution, or to the management, or against the directors, in any way whatever. It is certainly a very useful institution, and the practical workings of it are to induce the laboring classes, having small earnings, to bring them and deposit them in the bank, that the money may go into general circulation, thus adding to the aggregate amount in the general business of the country. Now, upon these deposits, the depositors receive regular dividends. The money is loaned out, and as far as this bank is concerned, the business has been done safely. It is a good institution, and the benefits are recognized by all. And yet, literally, upon this amendment no such bank could exist. None of the savings banks could exist, because, to restrict it in this manner, it could not loan the money out, and it would have to remain in the vaults, and it would be simply in the possession of a safe deposit company. Now, the safe deposit company receives money to keep safely, and nothing else. If the Constitution is intended to limit the business to this one thing, then say so. If you intend to have your savings banks, which receive money of the people and loan it out on interest, and pay dividends to the depositors, and accommodate the general commercial necessities of the country, if that is the desire, then this provision should be broad enough to embrace it. If you intend to embrace other banks, which are banks not only of deposit but banks for loans, for discount, and banks to the whole extent, then this language should be broad. The great and principal business of the world is done by banks that are not banks of issue. And that I am not incorrect, I say that the Bank of France, in Paris, is not a bank of issue, but a bank possessed of general powers of banking institutions—that is, such as loaning money, discounting paper, selling bills of exchange, etc. It is impossible to get along, it seems to me, in this State, or in any of the modern States of the Union, without banks of discount. The bullion of the country goes to the banks, and then goes into the mints; a portion of it is transmitted to the East in bullion, and upon that bullion banks draw their exchange. Exchange is necessary to the country. Unless our own banks—those incorporated here in our own State—are permitted to sell exchange on the East, that business will fall to the foreign banks. They will sell exchange, and the home banks will be deprived of it. Without banks of exchange it is impossible to get along. It seems to me, therefore, that this section as reported by the committee: "The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes; but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws; but no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States," prohibiting them from putting in circulation anything that should circulate as paper money, is the proper clause, and that the old Constitution should be amended in that respect, because the old clause simply limited them to banks of deposit. We find, upon examining the Journals of the old Convention of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, that the Convention was composed mostly of old fashioned, hard-money Democrats. They came here, therefore, with all that prejudice, and dislike, and abomination of anything in the nature of paper money, many of them coming direct from those States that were flooded with paper money, and they determined to put a veto on the issuing of paper from local banks. Such was the meaning of the Constitution. They meant that we should have banks of deposit, banks possessed of other general banking powers, except the power to issue paper money. Everybody here will agree to the wisdom and policy of that clause, or the intent of that clause. I do not suppose there is a gentleman upon the floor of this Convention who would be in favor of allowing banks to issue and circulate paper as money. Therefore, the question is, shall we so word this Constitution as to make it plain and clear, that there can be no doubt about the proposition that banks may exist having the general powers belonging to banking institutions, or shall we adopt this obscure language of the old Constitution? It is wise to make this section as clear and as plain as we can. It says they may exist for general banking purposes, and that is all. They are specially prohibited from making, issuing, or putting in circulation, any paper money of any description. I do not see how any difference of opinion can exist on this subject. This first clause is a prohibition of any charter except for regular banking purposes. That has been explained. The objection is insisted on here that this clause was intended to prohibit individuals from doing a banking business. It says, for general banking purposes, corporations and associations may be formed under general laws. So far, that is perfectly consistent and perfectly harmonious. Then follows another distinct prohibition, making it still clearer and stronger: "But no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State." Now, with the insertion of the word "individual" there, and strike out the words "in this State," it seems to me that the section should be adopted, and that is what this Convention desires. Otherwise, you have all the time to place the construction of the old Constitution, which is apparently against its letter, seemingly against the ordinary meaning of language, in order to make your savings banks in this State to exist, in order to permit any bank to discount paper, or sell bills of exchange. For that reason, I would suggest that some gentleman who voted in the negative on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kern, to move a reconsideration. This section, as reported by the committee, will be sufficient, with a few trifling alterations. Then it would read in this way:

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes; but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws; but no corporation, association, or individual shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money"——

(Omit the words, "in this State,") "except the lawful money of the United States."

I will say one word in regard to that sentence, "except the lawful money of the United States." Of course, it is generally understood that the United States is going to make no money except gold and silver, but we cannot tell what may occur. Whatever is lawful money, whether paper or gold, the banks ought to have the privilege of circulating. Therefore, I can see no harm in leaving those words in the section. I can see no harm in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Placer.

SPEECH OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: For myself, I would prefer if possible that a still simpler form than section five be arrived at. While I do not particularly disagree with the remarks of the other members, it seems to me that there is a confusion of ideas arising from the language of the section as it exists in the report of the committee, and I believe the will of the Convention to be in favor of the amendments proposed. Following the example set here I wish to say that in case I should have an opportunity, I propose to submit for the consideration of the Convention what seems to me to be a reduction to its lowest terms, of the absolute sense of the Convention, as sought to be embodied in the various amendments, though I may be utterly mistaken in that idea. The amendment I propose to submit strikes out of the second line of section five the word "special," and "for banking purposes;" strikes out the remainder of the second line and all of the third line to the words "no corporations;" add the word "persons" where the amendment of the gentleman from Kern inserts it, and strike out the words, "except the lawful money of the United States," and the words "in this State," in lines five and six, so as to read:

"SEC. 5. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter. No corporation, association, or person, shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money."

Mr. Chairman, the reason why it seems to me that this will embody the sense of this Convention, and why it is that it embodies my best judgment of the intent and meaning of the section. A great number of words have a tendency to mislead members. The first section of this article prescribes that corporations and joint stock associations may be formed under general laws. Now, I understand that to be a general proposition. There is no restriction, nothing to prevent such corporations or associations from being formed for any legitimate purpose. I think that is clearly understood by the Convention. Then, when we come to section five, why introduce words saying that a particular business shall not be specially chartered by the Legislature; it seems to me that, at least, it does introduce the implication, when we say that the Legislature shall have no power to pass an Act granting a special charter for banking purposes—it does imply to the ordinary mind, and we'll come within the legal rule—that the expression of the one is the exclusion of the other; that it may be done for other purposes; that the Legislature may pass such laws for any other purpose than banking institutions. I do not understand that this was meant by the committee when they reported this section, but it certainly bears that construction. If we don't mean that, why say it? If we simply mean that the Legislature shall not pass any Act granting any charter, why not say it and have done with it? Then, following the words of the report, that corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws. Is there anything to prevent them organizing for this or any other business under the first section of the report? If that is so, why put these superfluous words in there? And then it is implied again that other business may not, perhaps, be done under general laws. Then comes the proposition, that no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation, any check, etc., to circulate as money in this State. The words, "in this State," are not required. And, following up the words, "except the lawful money of the United States." Now, I see no propriety, no use that these words can serve here. If we adopt this section as it stands, we will not adopt it to the extent that you cannot pay a man, or deliver to another man, to put in circulation, greenbacks, if he is willing to take them. No bank can emit any paper money whatever if we leave off these words. If we retain them, then we retain this word person. Then we have this proposition, that no person can put in circulation any, even of the lawful currency of the United States, for that would be paper money. It would be a nugatory provision as regards the person. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we can dispense with all these words upon which we have been differing, which would simplify it very much. The Hibernia Bank, that have been doing business under the present Constitution, will stand where they stood in the beginning. There will be no discrimination against them. But even if it should be found necessary, as this Constitution will not be retroactive—there will be abundant time for them to adapt themselves to any provision which we may adopt. If they have been outside of the Constitution heretofore, there will be abundant time to bring themselves within the scope and the protection of the organic law. Therefore, I speak against the amendments that are proposed, for the simple reason that it seems to me that the amendment I have suggested will be all sufficient. It will prevent the issuance of any paper money, which seems to be the principal object here. The other amendments, as well as the section itself, are calculated to mislead.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Gregg, was rejected.

MR. HOWARD. I second the motion.

MR. TERRY. The rule requires notice to be given the same day.

MR. WILSON, of First District. I do not think so. The rule says you must at least give that notice. You cannot do it at a later period than the day on which the vote was taken. It is not exhaustive of the power of the Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion to reconsider can be entertained by the unanimous consent of the Convention. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Placer.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: We have two reports before us on the same proposition. The Legislative Committee have reported upon the same branch, and they adhere more closely to the phraseology of the old Constitution. In the old Constitution these provisions are under the head of "Legislative Department;" therefore the committee had a right to report on them. I think it is nothing more than fair that we should discuss the different propositions brought in here by the Committee on Corporations and the Committee on Legislative Department. So it is a matter of choice between the two, whether we shall take the proposition reported by the Committee on Corporations, or whether we shall adopt the proposition reported by the Committee on Legislative

Digitized by Google

Department. The Legislative Committee have adhered more strictly to the provision of the Constitution as it now exists. The Committee on Corporations have departed from that provision, and changed the phraseology. They have changed the language in one particular about which I have some doubt—using the express terms that charters for banking purposes may be formed under general laws. The old Constitution does not contain any provision so broad as that—that corporations and associations for banking generally may be formed under general laws—but it provides that corporations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver. That is the provision in the old Constitution; and the Committee on Corporations have changed the phraseology by putting the words into it, "may be formed for banking purposes under general laws." The one limits them to the deposit of gold and silver, the other allows them to be formed for general banking purposes. The Committee on Legislative Department have reported back the following provision:

"SEC. 31. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes; but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver and other lawful money of the United States. But no such association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money."

Nobody objects to that; so that the Legislative Committee have reported substantially what was in the old Constitution.

Now, the point to be decided by this Convention is, which do you prefer—the language that was used in the old Constitution, as modified by the additional words, "or other lawful money of the United States," or the provision reported by the Committee on Corporations? I sent up one amendment, to strike out the words (as reported by the committee) "in this State," and "except the lawful money of the United States;" which will make it satisfactory to me. But, upon reflection, I am inclined to favor the proposition reported by the Committee on Legislative Department, with the simple amendment which I will send up and explain. I am inclined to adhere to the Constitution as it is, with some little improvement, and that is, to let it read in this way:

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes, but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit and loaning of gold and silver, and other lawful money of the United States."

My amendment is to put in the words "and loaning."

MR. FILCHER. I accept the amendment.

MR. HAGER. That will cover every bank now legally in existence under the laws of this State, if it was originally intended to have banks of deposit and discount. Now I think perhaps it is the sentiment of this Convention that we should not engraft anything in the Constitution which would authorize banks for general banking purposes so far as to authorize the use of any paper money in any shape by them, or in any form. I hope never to see a banking corporation in the State of California with authority to issue paper money. I know that it is contrary to what has been the policy of the State, the purpose of the State, contrary to the sentiments of the people of the State, and it has become the sentiment of the world. All the old State institutions are going out of existence. The Bank of France has been referred to. That, like the Bank of England, is an official government institution. The notes are guaranteed by the government. Go where you will, in England, in India, in Turkey, anywhere, and you will find the notes of the Bank of England and of the Bank of France in circulation, and considered better than gold. But in England there are no private banks that issue paper money, not one. The Bank of Ireland is the only one that does. Take the great Bank of London, and other banks; they are merely banks for the purpose of receiving and loaning money, according to the phraseology of the provision here.

MR. WILSON. Don't they discount paper and sell exchange?

MR. HAGER. Certainly; and I do not intend to prohibit that here.

MR. WILSON. You are prohibiting by construction, why not put in the words?

MR. HAGER. The Rothschilds of London are not classed as bankers, but general commercial men. They are depositors who receive and loan money. But I did not intend to restrict the operations of banks here as they now exist. My intention is, as far as I can influence the Convention, not to have anything in the Constitution that will authorize the issuing of anything like paper money by the banks. Now, sir, I think the trifling amendment which I offer will make the section reported by the Committee on Legislative Department acceptable.

NOTICE OF RECONSIDERATION.

MR. HOWARD. I give notice that, to-morrow, I will move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Gregg, was voted down.

SPEECH BY MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. If I understand the amendment, it is, "The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for any banking purposes, but corporations and associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws; but no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money." Now, Mr. Chairman, I think it is the duty of this Convention to do everything in its power to put a curb on these rotten banks. But there seems to be a strong tendency here on the part of many delegates, to put in a provision to injure the force of section three, which is aimed to destroy these rotten banks. As long ago as eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, General Jackson predicted and swore that these gigantic corporations were the most terrible foes with which a republic has to deal. Experience has proved the truth of that prophecy. At that very time Old Hickory was engaged in making war against the most terrible corporation that ever existed in America, that is, the United States Bank at Philadelphia. And he destroyed it. Destroyed it at the risk of his life. That is the way the delegates in this Convention have got to deal with these gigantic corporations, who, singly and alone, would be contemptible, but who, banded together for plunder, are more remorseless and merciless than a band of cutthroats. Corporations, it seems to me, and monopolies, have a club with which tyrants beat our brains out. It is an engine by which the wealth and power of the country is centralized in the hands of a favored few. It is these dark crimes conducted under the cloak of respectability. It is a power which to-day wields thousands of millions of dollars. It is a power which to-day wields and controls your Senators, and I think, Mr. President, that it is high time now that we should put a curb on these rotten banks. I find a strong feeling here to-day, in regard to this amendment. There can be but one or two little objections to it, and those we have rectified so far, I think, removing that word in the second line "special," before the word charter, and removing in the fifth line the words "in this State," and the words "except the lawful money of the United States." Now I hope that the members of this Convention will support that, and vote down all other amendments. Some of the gentlemen have asserted here that it would have a tendency to blot out some of these banking institutions. I think it would be a good thing if they were all blotted out. I don't think there are half a dozen solvent banks in the State of California—all the rest are rotten.

[A Voice. "Name them."]

MR. O'DONNELL. I can name them if you want them.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: It strikes me that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, accomplishes no purpose except to weaken the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher. I know it has been accepted by the gentleman from Placer. The reason is this: the committee reported that corporations and associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws—that is, for banking purposes. Banking is a generic term, and the committee intended that there should be associations and corporations for banking, having all the powers of banks, with one solitary exception, and that exception was the making or issuing of paper money or anything of that character. Now, sir, we do not want to mark out any line for these banks to follow—that is for the Legislature to do; because if gentlemen insist in putting in the words "and loaning," it may be inferred that they can only receive and loan money, and nothing else. Let me say to these gentlemen, and all concerned, that receiving and loaning money is not the chief part of banking; not the most beneficial part. Selling exchange, deposits, checking out, and saving the money of the people, are some of the things done. And I hope the Convention will vote down this amendment, and then you can amend the section by striking out the words which have been shown to be useless.

SPEECH OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that in elaborating a new Constitution, we should depart from the phraseology of the old instrument as little as possible, and only when some grievance has been sustained. If there is no grievance it is better to retain the old phraseology, because our people are familiar with the language and its meaning.

Now, let us consider this section of the present Constitution, section thirty-four of article four, and see what grievance under it remains to be remedied. "The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes." So far there is no objection, and in the report of the committee I see that they retain the phraseology. Then the section further provides, "but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver." I should prefer the word corporations, instead of "associations," but am not particular.

The section as reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal reads: "The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any special charter for banking purposes; but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws, but no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States."

MR. HAGER. Let me refer you to section four, where the term corporations is defined. I will read it:

"SEC. 4. The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships; and all corporations shall have the right to sue, and shall be subject to be sued, in all Courts, in like cases as natural persons."

MR. JOHNSON. I am not very particular about the word "corporations," but I think that word would be sufficient by itself and preferable to any other, because section four, as just read, makes it include associations.

Now, to resume. In section thirty-four of article four of the present Constitution, the disjunctive conjunction "but" is followed by this language: "Associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver."

In the report of the committee it is proposed to amend as follows: "But corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws."

Leaving out of consideration the tautology implied in the words "corporations or associations," the amendment of the committee thus far is an improvement. What is the use of stating whether these banks shall loan money, or receive deposits of money, or discount paper, or sell exchange? There is no occasion for it at all, and the language of the committee thus far is preferable to that used in the present Constitution. It is a change from the old section, which limited, it would seem, associations to be formed under general laws, to the deposit of gold and silver.

We come now to the qualifying clauses. In the present Constitution the qualifying clause reads: "But no such association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money."

In the report of the committee the qualifying clause is: "But no corporation or association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money in this State, except the lawful money of the United States." This amendment of the committee is certainly subject to criticism. With an ellipsis the proposed amendment would read that no corporation should make any money except the lawful money of the United States. In other words, that only corporations should make, and that they should have the right to make, the lawful money of the United States.

The intent of the present Constitution was to inhibit the making or circulating of paper money by corporations, and in it there is another provision that the Legislature shall inhibit individuals from creating paper to circulate as money. It has been suggested that the word "individual" could be inserted in this proposed amendment, so that the inhibition shall run against corporations and individuals alike, and the whole be embodied in one section. I think this is a good suggestion. This proposed inhibition of the committee is not against individuals, but against corporations or associations. It occurs to me that the inhibition should be equally against individuals.

Now, in order to preserve the old phraseology as nearly as possible, would it not be better to read in this way: "But no corporation, association, or individual shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, to circulate as money?"

The gentleman from Kern proposed an amendment, but he left out the word "make." In this amendment which I propose to offer, this word is inserted, and the word "individual" is inserted, so that the whole will read as follows:

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes, but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws; but no corporation, association, or individual shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper to circulate as money."

I preserve as far as possible the phraseology of the provisions of the present Constitution, with which our people are familiar, and at the same time seek to correct them, where correction is advisable or necessary.

MR. WILSON. Allow me to look at your amendment.

MR. JOHNSON. With pleasure.

MR. VAN DYKE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question; "but associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws." I would ask if that cannot be done under the first section of this part?

MR. JOHNSON. In answer to that I have this to say: that the phraseology in our present Constitution, as I have already remarked, should be preserved as far as possible, unless there is some grievance. We are not here as mere sticklers for phraseology, not to make idle criticisms, not to say there is a word too much in the old, but intelligently to discuss the sense of it. Inasmuch as the present Constitution has this provision, that corporations may be formed under general laws, and this further provision that the Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes, etc., I see no reason why these two sections should not be preserved in the new Constitution.

MR. VAN DYKE. They are given the power to form under the first section, and why repeat here that they may be formed under general laws?

MR. JOHNSON. There is a special inhibition in the existing Constitution against granting charters to banks by special Acts; but it is added they may be formed under general laws, for the deposit of gold and silver. I think it best to retain this special inhibition, for the reason that it is emphatic, and we are familiar with that language; but the words, "for the deposit of gold and silver," should be eliminated, and the words, "for banking purposes," or something equivalent, should be substituted, as those words will include all the purposes for which banks are instituted; and then will follow in proper order the limitation on the power of banks as to making or issuing paper to circulate as money. Thus the cognate sections in the existing Constitution will serve to illustrate and explain the new; and by comparison the purposes and objects of this Convention will be readily seen. The advantage of my proposed amendment is, that the phraseology of the present Constitution is but slightly changed, the inhibition is equally against corporations and individuals, and it is in the same section, and it does not give to any corporation the privilege to make the lawful money of the United States, a privilege which—with all due deference to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal—would not be much protection to the defendant in a criminal case in the United States Criminal Courts.

Mr. Chairman, I now offer this proposition which I have read as an amendment to the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Johnson.

SPEECH OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me, in a matter of so much importance as this is, we should be quite deliberate in our action. These banks are a necessity; something that our business men cannot get along without. The commercial world can hardly move without banks, with those very powers which they have now. The banks today, in California, as I understand it, exercise five important functions. One is, receiving deposits and loaning money. This is done by the savings banks, and by the ordinary commercial banks. Also, transacting the business of buying and selling exchange, and issuing letters of credit. Also, another branch, which is very important to us here, and will become more so in the future, and especially to the mining regions of the State, and that is the business of handling gold dust and bullion produced by the miners. Now, sir, the amendments which have been offered, except the last, it seems to me, limit the business of banking substantially to only one of these important functions. As I understand the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Placer, it amounts to this: that hereafter banking corporations and associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver, or other lawful money, and for the loaning out of the same. Now, section nine of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal reads:

"No corporation shall engage in business other than that expressly authorized in its charter, or the law under which it may have been or may heretofore be organized; nor shall it hold any real estate for a longer period than five years, except such as may be necessary for carrying on its business, or which is incident thereto.

That section probably will be adopted by the Convention. Now, the gentlemen propose to say that banks may be organized for the purpose of receiving and loaning money. This section nine says that the business of corporations shall be limited to that expressed in the charter, and this amendment will limit the banks to receiving and loaning money, and in that case the old maxim will apply—expressio unius est exclusio alterius—and when this amendment is adopted, which says that banking associations may be formed for receiving moneys and loaning moneys, that is all they can do. Then the stockholders in banks will be cut off from the large profits arising from selling exchange, letters of credit, dealing in gold dust, and making collections, and the commercial communities would be cut off from the dues which they derive from these sources. We must consider these matters carefully. Simply because it is a bank we must not tear it to pieces. We cannot get along without banks; and the business of receiving deposits is so intimately connected with the issuing of letters of credit, the business of buying and selling exchange, the business of making collections, that they must go hand in hand together, and we should not adopt a provision which will cut off the stockholders in banks from receiving the benefits which will accrue by allowing these various branches to be combined. In some sections of the State these incomes amount to a considerable sum. I have in mind one bank in Nevada City, where the total expenses of the bank are sustained by the business of dealing in and handling bullion. Now, the stockholders have the full benefit of this. It is a business which is as safe as any that a bank could do. I am opposed to any provision which will take that very important and profitable and legitimate business away from them. The banks could not afford to keep open simply for the transaction of the one branch of business proposed by the amendment—that of receiving and loaning money. The expenses of the bank would have to come entirely out of the earnings of the depositors' money, and it would leave nothing to be paid to the depositors in the shape of dividends. I am therefore opposed to all these amendments, and in favor of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Johnson.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma, Judge Johnson.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I wish to call attention to the fact that a section of the Constitution seems to be overlooked in that amendment. Section thirty-five of the present Constitution, which in the report of the Legislative Committee they do not propose to change, reads as follows:

"The Legislature of the State shall prohibit by law any person or persons, association, company, or corporation from exercising the privileges of banking, or creating paper to circulate as money."

Section thirty-four reads as follows:

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes; but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver; but no such association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money."

The report of the committee seems to cover both those sections. Section thirty-four uses the identical language of the report of the Legislative Committee, except the use of the word "association." It says, "associations may be formed under general laws, etc., for the deposit of gold and silver, but no such association shall make, issue, or put in circulation," etc. The legislative report uses the identical language of the Constitution except the words, "or other lawful money of the United States." Therefore it seems to me to be the very expression of the Constitution as it is.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. MCCONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I now move the previous question.

MR. WYATT. I second the motion.

THE CHAIRMAN. The previous question has been moved. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The main question has been ordered. The question comes first on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Judge Johnson.

Division was called for, and the amendment to the amendment was adopted by a vote of 81 ayes to 46 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

Adopted.

GRANTS, CHARTERS, AND FRANCHISES.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section six.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 6. All existing charters, grants, franchises, special or exclusive privileges, under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity.

MR. LAINE. I would like to ask the Chairman of the committee what is intended to be done by this section.

MR. ESTEE. I have an amendment to the section which was adopted by the committee this morning. Then I will explain it. I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 6. All existing charters or grants of exclusive or special privileges, under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith, at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman; I will state for the benefit of the gentleman from Santa Clara, the reason why this section was modified, and the reason why we have placed it in our report. Section one, of article sixteen, of the new Pennsylvania Constitution reads as follows:

"SECTION 1. All existing charters or grants of special or exclusive privileges, under which a bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith, at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity."

The reason of that is this: that it seems in the last twenty-five years the whole State has been covered with certain exclusive privileges, franchises, etc., under which, in many instances, no organization has taken place, and no work has ever been done, but the parties still claim certain invisible rights to water, without having actually appropriated it, without performing any of the work which is required by the Act of the Legislature. A large number of these water rights were applied for. Notices were put up, and that is about all that has ever been done. Now, these special grants and privileges should end some time, and that is the object of this provision. The object is to invalidate all fraudulent claims and force men to enter into the work in good faith, and with that object in view the committee have presented this section for the consideration of the Convention.

MR. JOYCE. Mr. President: It seems to me this section should not have any place here. It seems to me we are suffering from the scheming tricks of corporations. The gentleman has acknowledged just now that there is no competition in corporations. Now, this amounts to nothing unless we can have some competition. To-day the people of the City and County of San Francisco are looking to have anybody that will bring them a different water system from the one that supplies them. I think if this was to be passed it would shut off the water competition of the City and County of San Francisco. I think the people of the City and County of San Francisco need some system to regulate competition with the present system, and it may be that some of these other companies will make it convenient to give us a competing line. We need a competing railroad system too, and if this should be passed and made part of the Constitution, I think it would shut off all competition. I move that any further consideration of this section be laid on the table. [Laughter].

THE CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

MR. ESTEE. The amendment is simply to strike out the word "grants" and place it in a different position, so that the section will read:

"SEC. 6. All existing charters or grants of exclusive or special privileges, under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity."

MR. SCHELL. Why do you strike out the words "franchises and special privileges?"

MR. ESTEE. We thought it better to follow the language of the Pennsylvania Constitution. It is intended to cover all grants made by the Legislature to any person or persons, or corporations, where the parties have not complied with the provisions of the law.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the article reported by the Committee on Corporations by striking out section six thereof."

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that this can serve no good purpose. I am not able to see any purpose that it can serve. I am fearful it will work some wrong, because if grants have been made, they are either contracts or not. They are either valid or invalid. If they are contracts, we cannot by any means impair them. I see no good in it, therefore, I move to strike it out.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. I wish to call the attention of the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations to the language of the section. It says: "All existing charters or grants, or exclusive or special privileges." Now, what class of cases would that cover in this State? I may have a franchise to build a bridge across a river somewhere, or build a toll road, and it would be a little awkward if I had to go and execute it before this Constitution is adopted. But the general law establishing the proposition that a certain number of men may organize a corporation and go on and take up water rights, is that in the nature of a grant to them; is it a charter to them; is it a special privilege? I do not think it is a charter, or a grant, or a special or exclusive privilege—that is the term used in this section. A charter or grant means a charter or grant to some person mentioned by name, or to some association of persons. There must be a grantor and a grantee, and the grantee must be named and known too. I understand the proposition that anybody may go on and locate the waters under general laws. But a charter or grant contemplates a grant to some person who must be named. If anybody can take, there is no special grant or exclusive privilege. I am aware that the wholesale appropriation of the waters of the State should be prohibited, but does the phraseology of this amendment accomplish that result? I think not, sir.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: Your Committee on Corporations thought that this was a very important provision to put into the article relating to corporations. And your committee were informed, and believe it to be an acknowledged fact, that when gentlemen come to go through the statutes, they will find a very large number of grants of the kind I have mentioned privileges and charters for various things throughout the State, which exist now only upon the statute, and which are a living menace to enterprise and improvements in those branches of business to which these privileges relate, and your committee believed, sir, that there should be an end somewhere, and that the balance of these things, where no work has been done, should be wiped out; and I cannot imagine how it can hurt anybody. I do not see how it could harm a single person or a single bona fide institution in this State. I cannot see where it will wrong any one, and it certainly will do a great deal of good.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I do not suppose I can inform the gentleman upon a question of law, but it seems to me there is danger in this proposition. Now, some of the grants and charters given by the Legislature might exceed the powers of the Legislature under the present Constitution, and this clause would make good all that it had done wrong. I say it might do so. If any person has acquired any right properly, from this State, any grant that the Legislature had power to make, then it does not require a provision of this kind in the Constitution to protect him in his rights. They hold these rights at law, and by the law, and they cannot be violated by any Constitution. It requires no provision to protect them in their rights, and no provision can deprive them of their rights. Therefore I shall oppose this section in the Constitution.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I trust the Convention will adopt that clause. I can't see any possible harm it can do, and there may be a great many half dead corporations that will be wiped out. I hope the members of this Convention will consider this thing well. I think it can't possibly do any harm, and it may do a great deal of good in wiping out many of these useless corporations; so I trust, sir, that it will be adopted. The Committee on Corporations were unanimous in its favor.

MR. LARKIN. I desire to offer a substitute to section six.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion cannot be received now.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not know whether there is any virtue in this provision or not. It is as plain as anything in the world can be that its retention in this Constitution can do no harm; and if it does no further good it will stimulate these gentlemen who have these charters, to commence work, to organize and proceed to business. If at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, if it should be inserted here, and the people adopt it, they have really organized in good faith, this provision will have no effect upon them. But if they have not organized and commenced work in good faith at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, then under its provisions the charters will have no existence. If they refuse to act, if they refuse to put in force the powers vested in them by virtue of their incorporation, they will cease to exist. There are the best reasons in the world why this provision should be retained here. If they refuse to comply with the terms of the statute authorizing their existence, they should be made in some way to conform to it. Here is a provision that puts them on their good behavior. They are compelled to proceed at once and organize, as the law contemplates they will do, for the benefit of the people, as is supposed their organization is instituted for. I do submit, therefore, that we should keep it here and compel these parties to make use of these rights conferred upon them, or else give them up.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I merely wish to say that the proposition in this section is this: it cannot operate upon any charter unless there has been a forfeiture, and a forfeiture for non-user cannot be enforced without direct proceedings. This provision saves the expense of direct proceedings in a Court. It seems to me, therefore, there can be no objection to it. It will do a great deal of good without doing any wrong.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: It is no argument against striking out the clause that it can do no harm if it is allowed to remain. The first chapter of Genesis might be put in the Constitution, and a motion to strike it out might be resisted for the same reason. It does do harm by its own dead weight, if nothing else. It is harm in itself. Now it only says, "charter or grant under which no bona fide organization, etc., shall have no validity. If a man claims a right to water I do not think this can affect it. More than this, there is one good it might do, it might benefit the lawyers—that worthy and deserving class. It would certainly give rise to a great many law-suits. The fact as to whether or not corporations had organized at the time this goes into effect would have to be decided in the Courts. It would only be a test question as to whether certain corporations were in existence at the time of the adoption of the Constitution; and that would give rise to a great many law-suits, as to whether they had organized or not, and as to whether work had been commenced in good faith or not. It seems to me we had better strike it out.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: Now, this forenoon, gentlemen of the Convention were in such a hurry that they could not take time to go to dinner. Now they propose to talk for hours over this section. Now all of them agree that it can do no harm, but the only objection is that it cannot do any good. The section might possibly do some good, but it is doubtful, and I think it would be more beneficial to the people and taxpayers of this State to devote the time of this Convention to the consideration of taxation and other important subjects.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: The provision, as the gentleman has said, is contained in the Pennsylvania Constitution, and also in the last Constitution of Missouri, adopted recently. The reasons for its adoption are very different—the causes do not exist here that exist there. In Pennsylvania and Missouri, as well as other States, charters were obtained from the Legislature. Corporations were incorporated under charters from the Legislature. We have no such things here. Therefore, when you say charters, grants, etc., shall have no validity unless they do thus and so, does not have the same significance as there. It might be put in a different shape. I would say that no exclusive privileges heretofore granted, and that hereafter may be granted, shall have no validity in this State, etc. I am against exclusive privileges of any kind being granted to any person. But, this is in the Constitution of Missouri and Pennsylvania, and I cannot see that it can do any harm.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: The objection I have to this, is that it does not cover a class of cases where special charters have been assumed under the general laws, and which form a very large share of the evils complained of. Therefore, I have drawn an amendment to that effect. Perhaps the phraseology may be defective, but it is open to debate and criticism. I will read it:

"All special or exclusive privileges, whether claimed under general laws or by special grants, shall have no validity unless such claim for special or exclusive privilege shall have been appropriated by occupancy or organization, and business commenced in good faith before the adoption of this Constitution."

MR. JONES. I would ask if it would not be better to substitute the word "and" in place of the word "or," before the word "organization?"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, to strike out the section.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, as follows:

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 6. All existing charters or grants of exclusive or special privileges, under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith, at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity.

MR. SHAFTER. I offer an amendment to the amendment:

"SEC. 6. All special or exclusive privileges, whether claimed under general laws or by special grants, shall have no validity unless such claim for special or exclusive privilege shall have been appropriated by occupancy and organization, and business commenced in good faith before the adoption of this Constitution."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: I desire to ask a question, whether that would not confirm all the grants made?

MR. ESTEE. Not much.

MR. MILLS. As I understand this provision it confirms every grant made, and I am opposed to that, and therefore I vote no. I hope this amendment will not prevail. I am not in favor of any proposition that will confirm these grants.

MR. ESTEE. I think likely the gentleman has not heard the section read.

MR. MILLS. Yes, I have read it.

MR. ESTEE. Well, it is all right.

MR. MILLS. The proposition is to confirm all the grants we have made. That is the proposition. You can't go into the Supreme Court against any man under this provision. Not much. No, sir. Leave it as it is, and let us get down to business.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I ask the Chairman of the committee whether or not this will not have the effect of confirming all these grants, as the gentleman has just suggested? That question has been on my mind also. This section says, they shall have no validity unless they do certain things. Would it not be inferred that they shall have validity if they do certain things, whether they are legal or not? Will not this section go to that extent?

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I think the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Marin is a great improvement, and I hope it will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: There is a question about this provision which bothers me some, and perhaps either the gentleman who proposes this amendment, or some other gentleman, will set me right. Now we have in this State such a thing as mining claims, which becomes a special privilege. Also a claim for water rights, the claiming of the waters of certain streams, and springs, and lakes. These claims are necessary and are certainly an important interest in this State. As I understand this amendment, as proposed by the gentleman, it will amount to this: that immediately after the Constitution takes effect, any claim which is now recognized by the laws of this State is liable to be cut off by this provision, and the benefits arising from such claim will be cut off. If I am wrong I wish to be corrected and informed as to the true meaning of the provision. I want to understand it, but my judgment is that this will be the result. The laws of this State provide that a man may go on to a stream of water and there make a location, and claim all or a portion of the water of such stream. For instance, this Constitution is to be voted for on the fifth of next May. As the law exists I may locate a water right on the third of May, for instance, and the law allows me sixty days in which to commence constructing a ditch, or canal, or other works, by which to conduct the water to the place where it is to be used. Now, as I understand this amendment, if I locate a water claim the day before this Constitution is adopted, if it should be adopted, by the adoption of the Constitution, I lose that right unless I commence work on the very same day. I understand if I commence work on the day after the adoption of this Constitution that my claim will have no validity, because I did not commence to perform some act to appropriate that right previous to the adoption of the Constitution. This will be true of corporations and individuals, because it is a special privilege, a special grant.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: The original section reads:

"SEC. 6. All existing charters, grants, franchises, special or exclusive privileges, under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity."

Then the committee amended it so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. All existing charters or grants of exclusive or special privileges under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity."

Now, I do not see how any intelligent man can put such a construction on the section, because the question of compliance or non-compliance with the law would constitute a question of good faith, and on that every lawyer will agree with me, I think. Now, as to the amendment of the gentleman from Marin, I think it is more explicit, and as far as I am concerned, I am in favor of it. I wish to say to the gentlemen of the Convention that there is nothing unique in this—we did not invent it, but found it in the Constitutions of Missouri, Colorado, and Pennsylvania; and it will be found in all, I think, of the more recent Constitutions, and it commended itself to the committee as a proper provision to be put in this Constitution, and I am unable to see how it can injure anything. I think the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Marin is a little more explicit.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Marin, Judge Shafter.

MR. JONES. I do not know as to the meaning of the gentleman from Marin, but I suggested the word "and" in place of the word "or."

MR. CROSS. I want an answer to my question, whether that will not cut off all such things as mining claims or water claims.

MR. SHAFTER. Everything of that kind will enter into the question of good faith.

MR. CROSS. Suppose these claims are made after the adoption of the Constitution?

MR. SHAFTER. It will have no effect at all.

Division was called for, and the amendment of the gentleman from Marin, Judge Shafter, was adopted by a vote of 65 ayes to 43 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the amendment and to the section simply because, whatever is intended by it, it will be utterly futile and a waste of words. Whatever rights have been acquired cannot be overthrown by any provision in this Constitution. Rights that have been forfeited by non-compliance with the law can be set aside by law without any constitutional provisions. It will neither invalidate anything that is good, nor overthrow anything that is bad. The whole section, as covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Marin, is, in my judgment, not only useless, but worse than useless—it is vicious.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Division was called for, the committee divided, and the amendment as amended was adopted—ayes, 65; noes, 48.

EXTENSION OF FRANCHISES.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section seven.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. The Legislature shall not extend any franchise or charter, or remit the forfeiture of any franchise or charter of any corporation now existing, or which shall hereafter exist under the laws of this State.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 7. The Legislature shall not extend or renew any franchise or charter," etc.

MR. BARTON. My object in offering this amendment is to make it a little more plain and explicit.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I would ask whether a motion to strike out the whole section is in order, and if it will carry with the amendment?

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. WILSON. I move that the whole section be stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the whole section.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I desire briefly to express the views I entertain upon the section before us. It is practically modeled after the Pennsylvania Constitution. It certainly is borrowed from that Constitution, although the phraseology has been somewhat altered. In Pennsylvania, at the time of the adoption of that Constitution, they had no law or previous Constitution resembling ours. They had no incorporations existing under general laws. They had merely the old fashioned system of special charters, and under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States all these special charters were placed beyond the control or power of the Legislature. They were held to be inviolable contracts, and every one familiar with the subject must know that the Legislature could not alter or repeal them, or impair them in any manner. When the new Constitution of Pennsylvania of eighteen hundred and seventy-three was adopted, they accepted and adopted substantially our system, providing for incorporations under general laws, and providing that all such corporations should thereafter be subject to alteration and amendment by the Legislature, and at the same time, in order to coerce the old corporations then existing under special charters to accept the new Constitution of eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and to place themselves in a position where the Legislature could control them by enacting laws which would affect them, the Constitution contained the following clause by way of inducement. Section two, of article sixteen, provides:

"SEC. 2. The general assembly shall not remit the forfeiture of the charter of any corporation now in existence, or alter or amend the same, or pass any other general or special law for the benefit of such corporation, except upon the condition that such corporation shall thereafter hold its charter subject to the provisions of this Constitution."

In other words, the Legislature of Pennsylvania was denied the power to remit forfeitures, or to enact any laws for the benefit of corporations existing under special charters, except upon the conditions set out in section two, which I have just read.

That section notified all corporations then existing under special charters, that unless they gave their unqualified consent to the provisions of the new Constitution, and placed themselves entirely subject to it, the Legislature in the future could pass no laws of which they could receive the benefit. When they did accept the new Constitution, the Legislature might then, in its discretion and judgment, remit forfeitures, or otherwise make them the recipients of its bounty. Such a provision is utterly inapplicable in California, because every corporation heretofore and now existing has been and still is under the control of the Legislature, and the existing general law under which they all exist may be altered or amended at any time in the wisdom of the Legislature; and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Santa Clara to section one of this report, and adopted by the committee, provides that these general laws may be altered or repealed, not only as to corporations hereafter to be formed, but as to those which already exist under the present Constitution. Now this section in the Pennsylvania Constitution, as any one may perceive by reading it, was intended merely as a standing inducement to these older corporations, with special charters, to place themselves in the same position as our present corporations are placed, and within the reasonable control of the Legislature. Every corporation now existing in this State has been organized under the general law, and they are all subject to the general power of the Legislature to alter, repeal, or amend the general law. But in the State of Pennsylvania, as I have said, many corporations were acting under special charters, and the Legislature could not control or interfere with them. They could not be affected in any manner by the Legislature of that State, and this provision of their Constitution of eighteen hundred and seventy-three was to induce them to place themselves in a position where the Legislature could legislate with reference to them. But if they preferred to stand on their special charters, and defy the Legislature, they could legally do so, but as a penalty in consequence of such election, they could never receive the benefit of any future legislation, because they refused to place themselves on a common platform with the other corporations of the State. We have no such special charters in California, and therefore we would receive no benefit whatever from such a provision in our Constitution; and as altered by the committee here—with all deference to them—it would work irreparable injury. As altered, the committee has ignored the entire latter part of the provision contained in the Pennsylvania Constitution, and has taken from the Legislature of California the power which the Constitution of Pennsylvania confers upon the Legislature of that State. The difference in the two is this: that whereas the power was reserved to the Legislature in Pennsylvania, there is no reservation whatever made in favor of our Legislature. There they have absolute power in the premises, while here the power is entirely denied to our Legislature. I do not think it is right. This section provides as follows: "The Legislature shall not extend any franchise or charter, or remit the forfeiture of any franchise or charter of any corporation now existing, or which shall hereafter exist under the laws of this State."

We have a vast number of corporations in this State which will be injuriously affected by this provision. Benevolent associations, and all that great class of corporations will be affected. Why should we to-day declare that the Legislature of this State fifteen years hence shall not extend or renew the charter of any of these worthy institutions which may expire at that time; in other words, why should not the Legislature, at some future time, pass general laws under which existing corporations may renew their corporate existence for an additional period of time, by adopting certain forms and complying with certain conditions to be prescribed by the Legislature?

Why is it that the purely benevolent associations of this State, or any other class of associations incorporated for fifty years, and whose charters are about expiring, should not be permitted to renew their existence under general laws uniform in their operation? Why is it that the banks of this State fifteen years hence should not be allowed to renew their existence under general law? Why is it that all the corporations in this State hereafter, when their terms expire, must be compelled to withdraw from business and cease to exist? A bank may be prosperous, or a corporation organized for benevolent purposes may be in a flourishing condition; they may be beneficial, worthy, and deserving, and one of a class of institutions which the people of the State desire to continue and foster, and yet, under the provision suggested, they would be compelled to wind up their business and pass out of existence. Many of the corporations in this State now doing an extensive business were organized twenty years ago, and their charters and corporate powers are therefore limited to a few years hence. Why should we compel them to abruptly wind up their business? Why drive them thus out of existence? Gentlemen may say they can reorganize; but they cannot reorganize and transfer their property except at a very great risk and possible disaster to depositors, stockholders, and creditors. Suppose that the charter of the Hibernia Savings Bank should expire at the end of five years, under this provision it would be compelled to wind up its business at an immense sacrifice, call in its money and settle up with its depositors, and legally terminate its existence before a new organization could be effected. I am apprehensive that if the section is adopted as at present drawn, it would prevent the Legislature from hereafter passing any general laws under which a corporation whose existence is about to expire, can reorganize without entirely winding up its business and legally passing out of existence. There is no just reason for adopting such a course, and in my judgment there is no sense in it. I have shown already that this section does not contemplate performing the same functions here as the one in Pennsylvania, and that the reasons which there exist for the enactment of such a provision do not exist here, and under our laws can never exist in California. I claim that our Legislature should be invested with the power to pass a general law by which corporations about to expire may continue their existence upon the terms and conditions which the Legislature in its wisdom may see fit to impose; and as to the question of forfeiture, I do not see why the Legislature should not be vested with equal discretion on that subject. Forfeiture may arise in various ways. A corporation may forfeit its charter by non-user; it may forfeit its charter by undertaking to perform an act beyond the scope of its corporate powers, and in various other ways may incur a forfeiture of its charter—still the forfeiture does not occur forthwith upon the act being committed, it is only a ground of forfeiture which requires proceedings by the Attorney-General of State, who files a petition setting forth that the corporation has committed or omitted certain specified acts, and seeks the judgment of a Court to declare the forfeiture or asking for a writ of quo warranto. Sometimes questions of law arise upon the construction of the charter, and often it is difficult to tell whether a corporation has exceeded its powers or not. A corporation may in good faith have been acting outside of its powers through inadvertence, and without intending to violate its charter. Any person aggrieved is at liberty to apply to the Attorney-General for the purpose of having him file or institute proceedings against the corporation, and in such cases the Attorney-General occupies the position, so to speak, of a Judge. He carefully reviews the matter, and takes a judicial, as well as a judicious view. If he ascertains to his satisfaction that the corporation has willfully committed an act or omitted the performance of an act which the law requires to be done, he may proceed by due course of law to have the charter forfeited. Should he find simply a technical violation, and yet no actual bad faith, no intent to disregard the law, he may in the exercise of a sound discretion dismiss the proceeding. Sometimes he notifies corporations of their failure to comply with the strict letter of the law where he is satisfied there is no bad faith or intention of omission, and requires their compliance with the law forthwith. I remember upon one occasion of presenting that question before the Attorney-General of this State, and I found from an examination of the authorities that such was the universal rule and custom. The Attorney-General would afford the parties a full and fair hearing, and then determine from all the facts adduced whether he would institute proceedings or not, and he acted upon this exact proposition which I have stated. If it were a mere technical forfeiture—that is a forfeiture based upon mere technical grounds, where the corporation was acting in good faith, he would never institute proceedings. Every lawyer knows that questions often arise as to whether the act sought to be done by a corporation is inside or outside of the line of its power, and it requires at times a nice discrimination to define the limit. It is frequently a difficult question to determine. In a case of that character, where an innocent mistake has been made, it is never the rule to institute a forfeiture. The law in its bounty does not favor forfeitures. I believe the question of forfeitures should be left as it is at present, to the judgment, discrimination, and wisdom of the official law officer of the State. If the violation is merely technical and no wrong intended, the Attorney-General may condone the offense upon terms, but if there is a willful or intentional violation, then proceedings should be instituted by him to declare the forfeiture. It is wrong in my judgment, to take from the Legislature the power to remit forfeitures in any instance, because the principle would apply to charitable and benevolent institutions, as well as to all other classes of corporations; and why should the Legislature, in the exercise of a sound discretion, be debarred from remitting forfeitures, based on violations of a technical character, looking fairly at the good faith and honesty of the transaction. For the reasons stated I say that this section seven, taken from the Pennsylvania Constitution, does not apply in California with the same force that it does in Pennsylvania. I think such action here would be highly injurious, and tend to tie the hands of the Legislature and embarrass it in the exercise of powers which should properly be vested in the Legislature. I therefore move to strike out the entire section as reported by the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: We claim, and claim justly, that the present policy of granting leases to corporations is liberal enough, and in the judgment of the people of this State, is too liberal. Granting them that power for a lifetime with the power of accumulating as they did and consolidating as they will, the present term is long enough, sir, and if the terms are not satisfactory, there is no compulsion upon any corporation to accept them and incorporate. Now, sir, it is a usual argument presented here—always brought forward in this Convention—when any proposition looking to the regulation of corporations is up for consideration, to point out the danger to various benevolent institutions, and to one or two popular banks, notably the Hibernia Bank. Does not the gentleman know that whenever he proposes to extend by the general law, or to renew by general law, the franchise of a corporation which has done good service to the public, that it brings under the same general law every corporation in the State, granting to them the identical power to further continue the oppression under which the people groan?

Why they seek, sir, to establish a principle here by an exceptional rule. Why? Because there are scattered over the State, may be, one or two benevolent institutions, they seek to lodge in the Legislature the power to grant an unlimited renewal of life to all the corporations in the State. We are here for a purpose, and we are commanded by the people of this State to take away from the Legislature the power to grant any further privileges, or of enacting any further special legislation. Now, how much better is it—how it would improve it—if at the close of their lease of life you notify them that their franchise shall not be renewed. They took the franchise with these conditions. They knew what those conditions were.

The proposition here is right; it is correct in both of its branches, not only as to depriving the Legislature of the power to extend or renew franchises, but also as to the power of prohibiting the Legislature from remitting forfeitures of charters. Why, sir, how much justice is there in allowing a Legislature to remit a forfeiture, where it has been determined by a judicial trial? The Legislature has no place to go for the purpose of obtaining evidence to reverse a judicial decision. Let us make the provision binding, so that corporations can no longer openly violate the terms of the charter, and then go to the Legislature and obtain a remission of the forfeitures. These life-long franchises never expire, and it is high time that the people should have some protection as well as the corporations.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I will offer an amendment, which I think will obviate all the difficulties:

"Insert in the first line, after the word 'not,' the words, 'by special Act,' so as to read: "The Legislature shall not by a special Act extend any franchise or charter, or remit the forfeiture of any franchise or charter, of any corporation now existing, or which shall hereafter exist, under the laws of this State.'"

Many corporations exist in this State to-day that are doing business which is beneficial to the State. Now, corporations are organized in the State of California for a period of fifty years. If this provision is adopted as proposed by the committee, whenever that fifty years expires that corporation must dissolve and distribute its property, and wind up its business. Take, for instance, the case of some banking association that is conducting an honorable business. Say its charter expires in twenty years. When its charter expires, there must be a distribution of all its corporate property among the stockholders. Now, pass this provision, and it is absolutely necessary that the corporation shall be wiped out of existence, without any remedy. If we insert this amendment, the Legislature can provide by general law that corporations now existing may continue their existence.

MR. WILSON. I will accept an amendment of that kind. That is sufficient for the purposes I desire to accomplish. I withdraw the motion to strike out the section, and allow this to be substituted.

MR. CROSS. This would be a great improvement, I think. When the Legislature passes a law which allows corporations to continue their existence, they can attach to that general law just such conditions or limitations as it sees fit, and thereby we will have every corporation which continues existence under the general law just where we want it—under the absolute control of the law of the State, and the general law at that.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: It was not thought by the Committee on Corporations, when section seven of the article on corporations was reported, that there could be any objection to its adoption. The natural inquiry is, what is wrong with this section; what material interest of the State does it injure; why should it not be adopted? On its adoption or rejection will, in a large degree, depend the future action of this Convention on subjects necessarily akin to it. Now, what is the objection made by the gentleman from San Francisco? He first claimed that it would be wrong to adopt this section, because it is copied from the Pennsylvania Constitution, and that under their Constitution no grant of exclusive privileges could be made by the Legislature, and hence, while it was very proper there, it would be very improper here. I have to remind the gentleman that we have just passed section one of this article, which provides that corporations may be framed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act—that all laws passed pursuant to the section may be altered or repealed. Hence, there is no such thing—if we wipe this out to-day—no such thing as granting a charter under the Constitution by special Act. That would be an impossibility. This section provides that the Legislature shall not extend the franchise of any corporation. What is the point about the extending of franchises? Why, sir, the point is—and the gentleman has admitted it—the point is—and the only point—when the life of a corporation expires, the corporations reincorporate, just exactly as any other persons engaged in like business; and thereby come under the provisions and restrictions of the other sections of this article, and will be bound by them. In other words, in the future, whenever there shall be a termination of the time for which a charter has been granted by Act to any corporation, they shall come in and reincorporate, if they wish to continue, under the general laws of this State, and be bound by all its provisions. And why not? I want to know why they should not? Can there be any rational reasons given why they should not conform to the same rule as all other persons in this State are bound by?

There is no question but that they can be incorporated. Any person or set of persons, engaging in business, who have a certain amount of property, can incorporate under the general laws of the State. They can do it. But it prohibits them from coming before the Legislature and asking for special privileges which they could not get under the other provisions of the Constitution. In other words, these corporations want to come to the Legislature and say, now we were in existence prior to the adoption of the Constitution, and therefore we come before you and ask you to extend to us this privilege—extend our franchise for twenty-five or fifty years upon the same terms that we now have. It is true, nobody else can get any such privileges, but we ask you to do it for us. And, sir, there might be influence sufficient brought to bear on the Legislature to induce them to do it, and it is against that right to come before the Legislature and get a special Act passed granting them privileges that they could not get under the general law, that your committee adopted this section.

Why, sir, a law extending the time of the corporate existence of the Hibernia Bank would not be a general law, it would be a special law. So with regard to every other corporation. Let me say to my friend from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, that there is very little that will benefit benevolent societies in this, and a great deal of something else, in my judgment.

MR. WILSON. Please define what you mean, sir.

MR. ESTEE. What I mean is this: there is no benevolent society in this State, not a solitary one, but what can afford to come in under the general law, and incorporate just as other institutions can, when their time expires. All honestly conducted institutions can afford to come in under the general law and incorporate. But there are special grants to street railroads; there are special grants to hundreds and thousands of mining corporations; they could not afford to come in under the general law, because new penalties would be imposed upon them. Benevolent institutions and honest corporations can afford to and will incorporate under the provisions of this article.

There is nothing peculiar about this section. You will find it in section three, of article eleven, of the Missouri Constitution. In the Illinois Constitution, section two, of article eleven. It is a good and wise provision, and has elsewhere proved of great utility. I have not had time to look through any other recent Constitutions. It strikes me, sir, however, that this provision must necessarily commend itself to the popular judgment. It cannot harm any one. It does not take the property from these people when their time expires. The gentleman is very much mistaken when he thinks that every one of these corporations would have to go into liquidation. They would simply have to reincorporate under the existing general law. This provision does not prevent them. The Constitution says corporations may be formed under general laws, and that means everybody that wants to incorporate. Because they have been incorporated once is no reason why they cannot incorporate again. The Constitution allows it, and there is no question but what the Legislature would provide the means by which every proper institution could incorporate under the laws of the State. Let us make this Constitution in such a manner that it will take nothing away from any body that belongs to them, and so that it will give no special immunities to any class. When the time of these corporations expires, let them reincorporate if they choose, but they must put themselves under the new provisions of law which the exigencies of the times have made necessary. I think this section will commend itself to the thoughtful examination of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, and the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross. I think it is one of the most important sections which the committee have reported. It was adopted by the unanimous action of the committee. There was no objection made to it. I believe if there is one section in this article that should be adopted, it is this section, which is not a similar provision. It was recently adopted in the new Constitutions of Pennsylvania, Missouri, Illinois, and, I believe, in Colorado, though the latter Constitution I have not examined. Therefore I hope that the amendment which the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, has proposed, will not be adopted. Better strike out the section entirely, because it would allow the Legislature to grant extensions to charters to corporations.

MR. CROSS. All corporations under this amendment can reincorporate, and become subject to the provisions of the general laws.

MR. ESTEE. Imagine twenty thousand corporations coming here and reincorporating under special laws.

MR. CROSS. And why not, as well as twenty thousand could incorporate in the first place?

MR. ESTEE. Let them reincorporate under the general laws; we do not want the Legislature to have the power to extend any franchise or charter, but leave it to the general laws. Let a corporation act under the law just as every other person. My friend from San Francisco spoke about there being cases of technical forfeiture where the Attorney-General was always willing to decide justly. If there is a case of technical forfeiture, the Courts will protect them, and I would leave it to the Courts rather than to the Legislature. My experience has been that it is much safer in the Courts.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I occupy a very different position here from that of the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations. He has a great deal of pride of opinion on this subject, and very sensitive as to any alteration of the section reported by the committee. With due deference to his feelings, I occupy a different position as a member of this Convention, and my duty will not permit me to sanction anything which my judgment tells me is wrong. The question here upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, is this: whether or not that amendment is an improvement upon the section as reported by the committee. Now, my objection to the section, as it stands, was that it would prevent the Legislature from passing general laws on the subject. My objection was, and my judgment is, that passing that in the shape in which it is, that no corporation could ever be reincorporated under general laws. I think so still. The old Constitution did not contain any such provision. Therefore, not containing any such provision, the Legislature had passed a Civil Code by which, when their time expires, corporations may renew. My judgment is that if we pass this provision in the shape in which it is reported, no such legislation in future could be enacted, as no special legislation could take place under this Constitution as we expect to adopt it, therefore I thought the whole section should be stricken out. But as the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nevada meets the question exactly, and presents it fairly to the Convention, I withdraw my motion to strike out, so as to allow his to come before the Convention. I think the amendment is a very proper one. The Legislature is not allowed, by special Act, to extend any franchise, or to remit forfeitures. Whatever they do must be done by general law. Now, the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations says, you will have the entire lot of corporations coming to the Legislature for an extension of charters. With all respect to the gentleman, I say it is absurd; it is an impossibility. Because the Legislature could only legislate by general law; they cannot legislate for the benefit of anybody, and the distinction between general and special law ought to be too marked to require any explanation. A general law is one passed which affects all alike, the provisions of which are applicable to all alike, and which benefits one as well as another. If any individual wants to take advantage of the general law, he must bring himself within its provisions; while a special law is intended to advance the interests of some particular person, or some particular corporation. He agrees that there should be a general law upon the subject of these corporations which would enable these institutions to continue their existence at the expiration of their charters. We all agree upon that, and I do not argue anything else—I do not seek anything else. He admits, therefore, that the Legislature should have power to pass such laws as will enable corporations to continue their existence, and that these laws must be general laws. The gentleman from Nevada desires to obtain the same, and so we are all in accord on this part of the proposition.

Digitized by Google

MR. ESTEE. I have here section one of the report, which I will read:

"SECTION 1. Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act. All laws now in force in this State concerning corporations, and all laws that may be hereafter passed pursuant to this section, may be altered from time to time, or repealed."

That would certainly apply to every corporation.

MR. WILSON. It seems to me that anybody ought to know that this applies to the original formation of corporations. It has nothing to do with the renewal of a charter after the fifty years has expired. They cannot form under this section without first disincorporating and then reincorporating. These are the facts, and there is no use in trying to avoid them. The object of this amendment to the section is to permit existing corporations, under the general law, to continue their existence without having to disincorporate; without having to start anew; and it seems to me that it would be wise to pass such a general law, one that will operate upon all alike. There has been considerable talk here about some gigantic corporations that come to ask some special privileges, and that there is no benevolence in any of the corporations. I asked the gentleman to explain his meaning, and his definition was one that failed to reach my comprehension. I do not yet fully understand what he was endeavoring to come at. Now, under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, there is a prohibition against the passage of any special law on the subject, and any measure passed by the Legislature must be general. They cannot legislate in favor of any one or against any one. I think the provision is right and proper, and ought to be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. In regard to the second clause, Mr. Chairman, I do not see any great necessity for it. Yet I disagree with my learned friend, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I shall not enlarge upon the powers of corporations to reincorporate under existing franchises. As to the next clause, the gentleman says that the same law does not exist here that exists in Pennsylvania. It is not material whether the franchise is granted directly by the Legislature to incorporate, or obtained under the general law; the franchise is equally a contract. That doctrine has been distinctly enunciated in a celebrated case. A man commences one day before the adoption of this Constitution to appropriate the waters of a stream. The law gives him sixty days in which to commence operations. It is a part of the contract, and he still has sixty days to commence operations. The Constitution cannot annul that contract.

Now, then, as to the second point. He says that it would apply to every religious society, to every benevolent society, and that the Legislature ought to have power to remit forfeitures in such cases. I don't see it. Suppose a religious society is incorporated for the purpose of establishing a Christian church. Money is collected for that purpose, but afterwards the funds were diverted and used in the erection of a Joss house. That is a misuse. It has incurred a forfeiture, and what sense is there in allowing that church to go to the Legislature and claim and obtain a remission of the forfeiture?

MR. CROSS. Do you think the Legislature would be apt to pass a general law remitting that class of forfeitures?

MR. HOWARD. God only knows what they would do. [Laughter.] The time may come when "Joss" will have influence enough to get a provision passed to remit forfeitures on the Joss house. [Laughter.] Again, sir, a railroad company has a charter in carrying freight and passengers. It abandons that business and goes into merchandising, or into insurance, or runs a steamboat. It has forfeited its franchise, and what right, what propriety is there in permitting them to go in the Legislature, and influence the Legislature to remit the forfeiture? Why, sir, I see that the President of the Central Pacific Railroad Company is the presiding officer of the Oregon Steamship Company, and the company whose steamers are plying between here and China. What propriety is there in permitting that corporation in going to the Legislature for a remission of its forfeiture? I am opposed to it. I say this is a necessary and wise provision which we have adopted here from the Constitutions of other States, and the adoption of it here will be a curb upon these abuses. I hope the Convention will have good sense enough to stick to this report.

REMARKS OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: This section seven is very brief and very short, but it embodies a great deal. I hope this Convention will not pass upon it without due consideration. My amendment reads that the Legislature shall not extend or renew any charter. Now there are hundreds of charters extended, and the people of this State, I think, are becoming tired of it. When the people, in their generosity, have granted them a franchise for a number of years, I think when the time expires they should be compelled to reincorporate. I hope the Convention will consider this matter carefully before voting on it.

MR. STEDMAN. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to set again.

Lost, ayes 47.

[Cries of "question," "question."]

REMARKS OF MR. HILBORN.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: It does seem to me that the proposition here is so mischievous that it ought not to be tolerated. It seems to me that gentlemen have not fully comprehended the meaning of the word franchise, as it is used in this seventh section. They seem to confine it entirely to corporations. Now a franchise may be held by an individual as well as by a corporation. Now what do we mean by the word franchise? We mean a privilege given by the Legislature, for instance, to a party to build a bridge and collect tolls for twenty years. Now, if you adopt this proposition you provide that at the end of twenty years the man who has put his money in there, who has accommodated the community, cannot renew that franchise. A franchise is a privilege granted, and I see no reason why we should prohibit the Legislature from extending that privilege at the end of the time for which it was originally granted. I cannot see any reason for it.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, moves the previous question, and the motion has been seconded. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

The motion prevailed, and the main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Barton.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section eight.

MR. HOWARD. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. HEISKELL. I move that the Convention adjourn.

Carried. And at five o'clock and fifteen minutes, the Convention stood adjourned.

FIFTIETH DAY.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. LAINE. Mr. President: I desire to offer a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Convention, to-day, dispense with the usual recess at twelve o'clock M., and that it continue its sitting until two o'clock P. M., and then adjourn until Monday, at two o'clock P. M.

MR. ESTEE. I second the resolution.

MR. SCHELL. I move to amend by inserting, "one o'clock" in place of "two o'clock."

MR. GRACE. I mode that the resolution be allowed to lay on the table.

MR. LAINE. I accept the amendment to make it one o'clock.

MR. SCHELL. I wish to explain that the amendment which I offered was in relation to the time of adjournment, making it one o'clock this afternoon.

MR. WHITE. I move to amend by making it two o'clock to-day.

MR. TERRY. I second the motion to lay on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Cruz, Mr. White.

The amendment was adopted.

THE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

MR. STEDMAN. I move to amend so that it will read, "Monday at ten o'clock A. M.," instead of "Monday at two o'clock P. M."

MR. BEERSTECHER. Make it seven o'clock on Monday.

MR. WELLIN. I rise to second that motion.

MR. HOWARD. I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE PRESIDENT. The main question has been ordered. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman.

The amendment was lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

COMMITTEE CLERKS DISCHARGED.

MR. LARKIN. I desire to offer a resolution out of order.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That all committee clerks are hereby discharged.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I ascertain that all the committees have reported that have business before them. There may be some committees that have some propositions left to act upon, but if so they can do the little work that is required. I think the resolution should pass. We have no need for them.

MR. CONDON. I second the resolution.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I would like to ask whether it will not be necessary to retain the Engrossing and Enrolling Clerks?

MR. LARKIN. I think we can employ them when needed.

The resolution was adopted.

STATE UNIVERSITY REPORT.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to present a report of the Regents of the State University. I do this in the absence of the Chairman of the Committee on Education. It is addressed to J. West Martin, of that committee, in obedience to a former resolution offered in this body. I move that it be printed and laid on the desks of the members.

The motion prevailed.

Following is the report and accompanying documents, as subsequently printed by order of the Convention:

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,
BERKELEY, November 23d, 1878.

To the Honorable President and Members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: In response to your resolution of date October thirty-first, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, the following statements are herewith respectfully submitted, arranged in the following order:

JOHN LECONTE,
President of the University of California.

ROBT. E. C. STEARNS,
Secretary of the Board of Regents, University of California.

WHAT HAVE THE REGENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY TO SHOW FOR THEIR EXPENDITURE?

1. They have secured a corps of professors and instructors of ability and reputation, and established a curriculum of studies which, for its range and variety, bears comparison with the oldest and best endowed institutions fh the Eastern States.

2. They have, in the course of nine years, succeeded in establishing an institution of high grade, which already assumes an acknowledged rank among the universities of our country—in which instruction is imparted in all branches of culture and useful knowledge, free to all residents of California, both male and female. No money consideration can represent the value of such an institution to the State.

3. The amount expended for instruction in its various forms, for free scholarships, and for support (during a short period) of a preparatory department, has, of course, gone beyond recall. For this they have nothing tangible to show. It is represented by the knowledge imparted to hundreds of the youth of our State It will assuredly bear its fruits in time, in the form of wise statesmen and legislators, accomplished scholars, original thinkers and investigators, able jurists, public benefactors, and virtuous citizens. Dollars and cents cannot represent the valne of these contributions to modern civilization

4. But, aside from the intangible blessings conferred by the University, the Regents have properties of great value to show for the money expended. The State now owns:

(1.) Two hundred acres of land at Berkeley, with cost of ornamenting, grading, and improving site—valued at	$250,000
(2.) Three first-class buildings at Berkeley, with the furniture of the same	397,000
(3.) A museum, embracing extensive collections of geological, mineralogical, botanical, and ethnological specimens; also, works of art, etc.—mostly private donations	50,000
(4.) A library, containing over 14,000 volumes—expended by Regents	18,000
Private donations (estimated value)	17,000
(5.) Collection of apparatus, physical, chemical, and other aids to instruction	25,000
(6.) Eight (8) cottages for students	24,000
(7.) Gymnasium building—recently the gift of Mr. A. K. P. Harmon	7,000
(8.) Printing office property	2,500
Printing press—gift of Dr. Samuel Merritt	1,500
(9.) Propagating houses, barn, farm implements, and orchard containing over five hundred varieties; also many varieties of grapes, etc.	4,800
(10.) Forty-seven acres of land near Oakland—a gift from the late Edward Tompkins—present value	40,000
(11.) Toland Medical Hall in San Francisco—a gift from Dr. H. H. Toland	75,000
(12.) Medal Fund—a gift from friends of the University	2,600
(13.) Brayton property—mortgaged notes	68,530
Brayton property—investment in bonds	20,140
(14.) Seminary Land Fund—invested by Regents in six per cent. bonds—cost	19,380
	$1,022,450

JOHN LECONTE,
President of University of California.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE,
BERKELEY, November 18, 1880.

Honorable J. R. Freud:

DEAR SIR: Your favor of sixteenth came duly to hand. As it would be difficult, and on account of the state of my eyes almost impossible, for me to make out, at short notice, as full a statement as would be desirable in respect to the matters you allude to, I mail to you with this such printed matter as I have published, bearing on the questions in hand. My Walnut Creek lecture, and the first fifteen pages of my report to the President, contain the gist of the whole matter, so far as my views on the past, present, and future of the Agricultural Department are concerned; and I have only to add that, with the aid of the appropriation made by the last Legislature, these views are now being carried out as rapidly as possible, in accordance with a printed, but not as yet published, programme, of which, unfortunately, I have no copy to send you, but which is in the hands of both Mr. Martin and Mr. Winans. This programme includes:

1. Courses of lectures on "special cultures," in accordance with the circular herewith inclosed. This is given regularly by Mr. C. H. Dwinelle, and by other lecturers specially competent in particular subjects, as these can be obtained. Among the latter, a clinical lecture on "glanders" was last week delivered by Dr. A. De Tavel, of San Francisco, to a large audience. Mr. Dwinelle's lectures are regularly attended by four students, and almost always by from two to six persons not regular students in the agricultural course, of which this is the "senior" year.

2 A garden of economic botany. This is now being laid out and occupied, on the level tract next the entrance from the railroad depot. It will embrace, as fully as possible, all the economically useful plants capable of outdoor culture in this climate. At the same time, culture experiments on a larger scale are being carried out on the grounds north of the branch of Strawberry Creek; and, for the culture of plants requiring heat, an addition is being made to the propagating houses already occupied. A large number of seeds of important forest trees have lately been put into the ground, to be later transplanted to suitable positions in the University domain, which will ultimately (if my plans are carried out) be to the agricultural student what the cabinet of minerals and laboratory are to the mining student.

3. Increased and improved means of demonstration in instruction in the several practical courses, in the way of collections, illustrations, implements, etc.

4. The continuation, to the extent rendered possible by our means, of the work of an agricultural survey, as explained in my report to the President, page eleven and following ones, and exemplified in the appendix, pages twenty to sixty-three. A number of important matters have been under examination since the date of this report, and will be published before long. At the moment, the work has received a check in the resignation of my assistant, who can be replaced only by training up another graduate in his stead. For this purpose, I have selected Mr. F W. Morse, of the class of eighteen hundred and seventy-eight.

I consider the prosecution of this work as the key to the situation, as it is the most direct means of proving to farmers how great are the benefits to be derived by their sons from the study of the scientific principles underlying agriculture. I cannot but ascribe largely to the published and unpublished results of this work, the gratifying increase of students in the strictly agricultural course, and the increased attendance of others upon the lectures of the department, so far from the "single student" of current report (which doubtless originated in the statement that there was but one student in the senior class this session), the facts now are as follows:

Regularly attending senior course of special cultures	4
Regularly attending junior course of agricultural chemistry	6
Electing the course of economic botany, second term, sophomore	12
Total in agricultural course proper, by January 1st, 1879	22
Deduct as twice mentioned	4
Total attending regularly	18

It should be remembered that, moreover, the entire scientific division of the sophomore class (from forty-five to fifty students) attend regularly the first term of my course, to wit: general botany, which begins the agricultural course. After the first term they elect their college, as above stated.

When you remember that years ago not a single student elected the agricultural course at this time of the year, the change that has occurred cannot but be gratifying. The course has become acceptable and respectable, in the eyes of the students and their parents, in proportion to its increased thoroughness and educational value And I have no fears as regards its future increase of patronage and usefulness, if the policy that has effected this change is continued. Let me add that I consider the number of students now in attendance here, on this course, as a fair index of the interest now taken by the farming population in the professional education of their sons as farmers. If the means and appliances for such education here are not, at this time, all that could be desired, whatever is offered is indispensable, and what is lacking can in a great degree be made up by practice on any well conducted farm. For mere drill in farm operations no sensible man will send his son to college; and business management of a farm will never be learned under the artificial conditions of a College farm. I am unable to see why, of all professional schools, the Agricultural College should be saddled with the task of converting young men to farming, by keeping them surrounded with what some are pleased to term an "agricultural atmosphere." It is the unintelligent drudgery of ordinary farm life that our boys run away from; and it is only by rendering them intelligent laborers, and not by rubbing in the drudgery, that their aversion to farm life (for which certainly the colleges are not responsible) can be overcome Whenever farming comes to be a learned profession amongst us, and to be considered as such, young men will not need to be surrounded by a dense "agricultural atmosphere," in order to keep them to their profession. And then, the many farmers who now send their sons to all but the agricultural course at the University, will cease to tell their sons that they "can teach them all the farming they need at home" I am hopeful that this day is coming sooner in California than elsewhere, for natural reasons; but its coming will not be hastened by removing our future farmers from contact with the rest of the rising and cultured youth of the State; and if Mr. Morrill's own statement is to be believed, that was assuredly not the object of the "Morrill grant."

In conclusion, allow me to suggest that the first thing needful for rendering the aid of science accessible to the rural population is, that the rudiments, at least, of natural science should be effectually, and not only nominally, taught in the common schools. The reason why this is not now done, is simply that there are too few teachers competent to give such instruction, and if the University does no more than supply these teachers, it will have done the greatest possible service to the cause of agriculture. Then, indeed, "farm schools" scattered over the country could do real service, because they would have suitable material to work upon. But so long as there are no teachers, no law or constitutional provision can create efficient schools.

If there is any farther information that I can furnish you, please let me know, and I will do so as rapidly as possible.

Very respectfully yours,

EUG. W. HILGARD.

LOCAL OPTION PETITION.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara, presented the following petition and memorial, signed by a number of citizens of California, requesting that a provision be inserted in the Constitution, providing for a local option law:

To the honorable the Constitutional Convention of the State of California:

We, the undersigned, respectfully petition your honorable body to insert in the new Constitution of this State a clause similar to that now in force in the State of Texas, to wit:

SECTION —. The Legislature shall, at its first session, enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, voting precinct, town or city, by a majority vote, from time to time, may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits.

Referred to the Committee on Education.

CORPORATIONS.

MR. FREEMAN. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the report of the Committee on Corporations.

MR. INMAN. Before that motion is made, I desire to avail myself of my notice to amend Rule Fifty-Six, and ask that it lay over until there is a full house.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be allowed until Monday or Tuesday. Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

MR. McCOMAS. I desire to present a memorial from the Board of Supervisors of Santa Clara County, asking for the establishment of a State Hospital, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings, without printing.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objections it is so ordered.

MR. REYNOLDS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion to go into Committee of the Whole, for one moment——

THE PRESIDENT. It is moved and seconded that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal——

MR. REYNOLDS. I insist that I have the floor, and had it while the motion was being put.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman did not have the floor.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the next section, section eight.

EMINENT DOMAIN AND POLICE POWER.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 8. The exercise of the right of eminent domain shall never be so abridged or construed as to prevent the Legislature from taking the property and franchises of incorporated companies, and subject them to public use the same as the property of individuals; and the exercise of the police power of the State shall never be so abridged or construed as to permit corporations to conduct their business in such a manner as to infringe the equal rights of individuals or the general well-being of the State.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I call attention to what appears to be a clerical error in line three, the word "subject" should be "subjecting." I have, however, another amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section eight as follows: after the word 'companies,' in line three, insert the words, 'at their own valuation as made for the purpose of taxation.'"

Adopted.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I notice in the same line what is undoubtedly a clerical error. The word "subject" ought to be "subjecting." It is not in grammatical form.

THE CHAIRMAN. That is a mere clerical error and will be corrected, of course. If there be no further amendments to section eight, the Secretary will read section nine.

LIMITATION OF CORPORATIONS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 9. No corporation shall engage in business other than that expressly authorized in its charter, or the law under which it may have been or may hereafter be organized; nor shall it hold any real estate for a longer period than five years, except such as may be necessary for carrying on its business, or which is incident thereto.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the words "or which is incident thereto."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: The reason that the committee put in the words, "or which is incident thereto," was to apply to savings banks and such institutions, where they are compelled to bid for property at public sales. Of course such purchases are not necessary to carrying on its business, but they are incident to its business, and the committee thought the amendment was very proper and ought to be put in there. The section is as follows: "No corporation shall engage in business other than that expressly authorized in its charter, or the law under which it may have been or may hereafter be organized; nor shall it hold any real estate for a longer period than five years, except such as may be necessary for carrying on its business, or which is incident thereto." We put it in there, for the purpose I have stated, and we think it ought to remain there.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: They are authorized to hold five years. If they are compelled to buy land to secure a debt, I think five years is long enough for them to dispose of that land. The construction placed upon these words by the gentleman, would enable any bank or corporation to buy land or other property, and hold it forever. That is not the policy of the State. The policy of the State is to prevent corporations from accumulating property in their hands. I think the words should be striken out.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I would like to ask a question of the Chairman of the committee. I do not know what this clause is intended to mean, "nor shall it hold any real estate for a longer period than five years, except such as may be necessary for carrying on its business."

MR. ESTEE. It means that they shall not engage in the business of buying and selling real estate, and that they shall not hold it for a longer period than five years; that is, that they shall not go on accumulating real estate and holding it. That is the statute now, I will state to the gentleman. It is only following the Code.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no further amendments to section nine, the Secretary will read section ten.

ALIENATION OF FRANCHISE.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 10. The Legislature shall not pass any laws permitting the leasing or alienation of any franchise, so as to relieve the franchise, or property held thereunder, from liabilities of the lessor or grantor, lessee or grantee, contracted or incurred in the operation, use, or enjoyment of such franchise, or any of its privileges.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no amendments to section ten, the Secretary will read section eleven.

STOCK OF CORPORATIONS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 11. No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void. The stock and bonded indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased, except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock first obtained, at a meeting called for that purpose, first giving sixty days' public notice, as may be provided by law.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I would like to inquire what the meaning of that is? It seems to me, sir, that this is a very loose provision to put in the Constitution. These matters are regulated by law, so far as they are necessary to be regulated, and it seems to me that that clause would give rise to a great deal of doubt. I move to strike out section eleven.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento to strike out the section.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I hope it will not be done. "No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received."

REMARKS OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I would like to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations what he means by a fictitious increase of indebtedness? I understand that a fictitious increase of stock means the watering of stock without the addition of any more property or value. That we all understand. It has become too common, and is very much to be deplored, and ought to be stopped. That is to say, the increase of the capital stock is almost always made for the purpose of enabling them to divide profits that are utterly disproportionate to the amount of capital. Take the case of a gas company that has invested in its property ten thousand dollars. It charges such a rate for gas that the return from the investment would amount to twenty, thirty, forty, or perhaps fifty per cent. per annum. Then, without the addition of a particle of property, they declare an increase of capital stock, and the burden upon the consumers, upon those who are compelled to take this commodity, whatever it is, is kept up at that unjust rate. It is proper enough that that should be stopped, but when you talk of a fictitious increase of indebtedness, I do not know what it means. Fictitious indebtedness, I take it, is always void, and I cannot understand that a corporation would create a fictitious indebtedness. What I want to get at is, what is a fictitious increase of indebtedness? I do not know.

MR. HOWARD. May not a lot of fraudulent directors create a fictitious debt?

MR. BARNES. That would be void at common law. It is a contradiction in itself. Indebtedness implies an obligation arising upon value received. I merely asked for information, because everybody else will be asking some of these days what it means, and I want to be able to answer. The watering of stock certainly ought to be stopped, but I cannot conceive of a man putting a fictitious indebtedness upon himself.

MR. ESTEE. "No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void." "Fictitious" is a well-known word. Its definition can be found out.

MR. CASSERLY. Allow me to suggest—I think that the word "fictitious" should be inserted again before the word "indebtedness," so as to read "or fictitious indebtedness."

MR. ESTEE. That is all right. There is no objection to putting that word in there. But the point is, that there is an evil there to be remedied. Everywhere throughout the country fictitious indebtedness——

MR. BARNES. What I inquired was, not whether fictitious indebtedness was an evil, but what is meant here by fictitious indebtedness? What can be covered by it?

MR. ESTEE. It is void because——

MR. BARNES. How can it be any more void than it is? Is it void as against the creditor who holds the fictitious indebtedness, or is it void against the fictitious debtor? I wanted to have it explained, that is all, if the Chairman of the committee will explain it.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. I will try to explain, if the gentleman will give me an opportunity. It is well known that mining companies, for instance, in this State, have been organized, that a few men control the mine, and a good many men pay for working it. It is almost a uniform rule, or it very frequently occurs, that these men make up a fictitious indebtedness, and draw money from the treasury, and thereby make it appear that the moneys of the corporation have been properly expended, when they have not been properly expended. There are some corporations that have issued stock, and issued bonds on fictitious indebtedness. There is one in this State that I might name. It is well known that it issued one million dollars of bonds—construction bonds, they were called—for constructing a certain road that never was and never will be built. Now, sir, what your committee intended to do here, was to enforce the rule of common honesty with corporations as with individuals. They intended to do nothing more. It was the object of the committee not to impose any penalty upon a corporation that the law did not already impose upon individuals.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I am laboring under the same ignorance that the gentleman over there is. I will ask if you mean that it shall be void as against the company?

MR. ESTEE. Either against the company, or any stockholder, or anybody else.

REMARKS OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: We understand then that when the directors inside the ring create an indebtedness and pay money to themselves, that that indebtedness upon which they have collected and received money is void. Is that it? Take the case of a railroad—the California Pacific Railroad extension. They did issue, not merely a million dollars of bonds, but two million and a quarter of bonds, and sold them in Europe upon a projected road that never was built at all, and for which the company received nothing but this Napa branch; a few miles of railroad, for two million and a quarter of bonds. Now, in whose hands shall they be void? Suppose the fraudulent directors—for we are wont to consider all directors fraudulent—shall determine to raise money for their own account upon the company paper, and in accordance with law, the directors authorize the President and Secretary of the company to make and execute a corporate note for ten thousand dollars, and to borrow money upon it, and they take that ten thousand dollars and put them in their pockets. Now, then, the indebtedness is held or owned by some person who discounts the company's note put out in that way. The directors have robbed the company, they have robbed the stockholders, and now it is proposed to rob the bona fide holder of the note, the innocent discounter. That is what it amounts to, if it amounts to anything at all. Now, there is nothing better understood than that the bona fide holder of commercial paper is protected in the holding of it. You cannot have commercial law, or commercial transactions, except upon that basis. Is it meant by this to say that if the directors of a company shall misappropriate money and rob the company, that the man who has loaned the money is responsible? If so, we have a new element in commercial law in this great reform State of California; that a man who loans money to a corporation or association has got to be certain before he loans it that everything is all right on the inside, and has got to know as much and more than the directors themselves. He has to inform himself as to what becomes of the money; and after he has loaned his money he has got to follow that money and see it invested in the land or applied to the purposes of the corporation.

Fictitious indebtedness is always void. But there may be a fictitious indebtedness that is good in the hands of a bona fide holder. There is not a gentleman on the floor of average capacity, which we lawyers claim to be, as well as truly good, that can understand what is meant by that phrase "in their." It is like some of these other ill-considered phrases, like one adopted yesterday. It is vicious. It opens the door to more litigation, and overthrows well settled principles, if it amounts to anything at all. Therefore it is, that before we put this into the Constitution of this State, that is going to stand for fifty years or so, I wished that we could all understand it, so that we would be able to explain it.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: My friend asks me a very leading question, and then he answered it in a very elaborate manner, for himself.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: The reason I did that, was that when I asked it before, the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations did not appear to understand me. He came up to the scratch and looked at it and then walked away.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: If the gentleman wishes to ask any more questions, all right. And if he wants to answer them himself, that is all right; but the proposition here is whether this section eleven is so worded as to convey correctly the ideas intended to be conveyed; and secondly, whether these ideas will meet the evil complained of. Now I am not unaware, sir, that it is impossible to draw any section but what is subject to criticism by all persons, and especially by very bright intellects. I am very well aware that my friend has the capacity of making black seem white and white seem black, and I know that if there is anybody here that can put the language into any peculiar shape I know he can do it. Now if the gentleman will propose an amendment to section eleven that will meet the evil which he condemns, and which we say exists, this committee will be most glad to accept of his eminent services in that line.

MR. BARNES. I will undertake the job.

MR. ESTEE. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Casserly, I think is a good one, that all fictitious indebtedness shall be void. Why shouldn't it be?

MR. BARNES. But against whom?

MR. ESTEE. Why shouldn't it be? There is no reason in the world. Now, my friend says that this fictitious indebtedness may come into the hands of innocent holders. That is possibly true; but this will not relate back to anything in the past, and it will make people who buy bonds—I do not mean railroad bonds, but any bonds issued pursuant to this Constitution—see where their money does go. And it is right enough that they should. In other words, that they shall not do as has been done heretofore by companies, issue bonds for fictitious indebtedness, and sell those bonds at twenty or thirty cents on the dollar, and then hold the stockholders responsible for the payment of the interest on them. I cannot, for the life of me, see, with this in view, with a full knowledge that this section exists, how many persons can be deceived. It is possible that there might be instances where there might be a wrong; but it strikes me that it will meet and remedy a great evil. Mark the language: "No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received." Now, they know whether they pay money for them or not, "and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void." Then it goes on further and says: "The stock and bonded indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased, except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock first obtained at a meeting called for that purpose, first giving sixty days' public notice, as may be provided by law."

Digitized by Google

I hope the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento to strike that section out will not prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I have no desire to criticise the work of the committee. I think the greatest error of the committee is in giving us too much on the subject of corporations. The old Constitution contained five or six sections on the subject. In this report we have twenty-three. I think there is a great deal put here that belongs properly to the Legislature. I think if the Legislature passes a law, and the words are found to be ambiguous, it can be amended, but it cannot be done so easily when it is in the Constitution. Now, the very first proposition here is: "No corporation shall issue stock or bonds except for money paid." How much money? I do not suppose the gentleman undertakes to say that they cannot sell stock or bonds unless for its par value paid in money. If that is what is meant it should be inserted, and then we must go on with a regular Code to carry out that idea. Now, look how this would work.

Suppose a corporation is formed up here in Grass Valley by laboring men, miners, men who were working by the day in the Idaho mine at this moment, but members of a corporation for the purpose of finding and mining some other mine for themselves. If you mean that, in that case, they must get the par value of the stock, I do not think the Convention would desire to adopt a proposition of that kind. They procure the land. They have no property at all to start with except the place to prospect. But they imagine that the chances are that a mine will be found in a certain hill. They form a corporation. The first thing they do is to determine their nominal capital stock, and it does not matter much to the community at what figures they place it. The members take a certain amount of stock, as much as they are able to pay for at the time. After they have expended a certain amount of money, they sell a portion of the stock for the purpose of carrying on the prospecting enterprise. They sell it for less than par. Should they not have a right to do that? It seems to me they should. If this was adopted men would be afraid to assist such enterprises. They would be afraid to buy stock under such circumstances as that.

Again: "And all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void." I am opposed to the idea. It would be a Herculean task to determine in all cases what was a fictitious increase of stock. Suppose a mining company has a capital stock of twenty thousand dollars, and they increase their stock. They have a perfect right to do it. They increase it two or three hundred per cent., and they issue and sell that stock. Now, is the title of the man who buys the stock to stand upon the condition of showing that it was not a fictitious increase? Suppose they increase it one hundred thousand dollars, and it is not worth that, is that a fictitious increase?

Now, gentlemen have in their minds two or three corporations that have watered their stock to a greater or less extent, and in order to get at their particular cases, they want to put into the Constitution a proposition most doubtful, that would tend to cripple all the ordinary corporations which are made by the people, for the people, and for the benefit of the people. It seems to me that this is a very doubtful provision—"except for money paid." If it means any money at all, it amounts to nothing.

It would be a very dangerous thing to say that all fictitious increase of stock shall be void. Who is to say whether the increase is fictitious or not? If the property of a corporation has advanced, it certainly would not be fictitious to increase it to the same extent. At what point would it be fictitious? It opens the door for an immense amount of litigation, and while you are attempting to benefit the people, you are putting them in a worse position than they are now. These corporations are used every day, by rich and poor, in the development of the country.

I think it would be better to strike out the whole section, and leave it to the Legislature. It is true that there have been cases of watering stock, but this proposition includes everybody and every class of corporations, and, it seems to me, is dangerous. If any law is necessary to reach that particular class, it may be done much more safely by the Legislature, where the law can be changed. Gentlemen will find that when they start that it must necessarily do injury, and give rise to great doubt and much litigation. I think it is much safer to strike it out.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I merely rise to correct one point. It would appear from the gentleman's remarks that the committee put this in to cover some idea of their own. Now, it will be found in the Constitutions of Pennsylvania and Missouri, and most of the late Constitutions. The committee have compared it with these, and then saw the application, and we all understood it; and I think there is nothing in it that a plain man cannot understand. It is a provision to prevent frauds of that kind, and everybody knows that there has been fraud. It is found in the other States, and they have adopted this clause. There are gentlemen here who have more brains than I have, but in the committee it was made very plain to me that it was very necessary.

REMARKS OF MR. DUDLEY, OF SOLANO.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. It was admitted by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, that the matter of watering stocks, or creating fictitious stocks, was an evil that ought to be corrected. And yet, suppose, in the instance given by him, that this gas company should increase its stock in order to make it appear that there was an increased capital in the organization upon which a dividend should be declared; and suppose this fictitious stock should get into the hands of third parties. Would that stock become void? I understand that in common law such parties would have acquired rights of which they could not be divested. Now, let us take the other proposition here, of fictitious indebtedness. Suppose you have engrafted in the Constitution a clause forbidding fictitious stock, and this supposed corporation or gas company, instead of issuing fictitious stock, should issue bonds to the stockholders, in order to create a fictitious liability upon which it was necessary to pay interest. Now, then, so long as those bonds were in the hands of those who had created them, it would be very proper to declare them void; but when subsequent purchasers, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, get possession of them, I do not know how you are going to divest them of their rights. There is no doubt but that these are evils that ought to be remedied; and I am willing to vote for this section for the purpose of making an effort in that direction. It has been admitted by the gentleman that fictitious stocks can be prevented by this section. I see no difference between the fictitious indebtedness and the fictitious stock operation; nor are innocent parties any more liable to be injured in the one case than in the other.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I see a difficulty about the phraseology of this section, when it comes to an adjustment of the accounts of a company with the public. The public are not supposed to know what has been done by a company. It cannot be presumed that the public will go and inquire into the validity of their action, provided they act within the authority of law; and that is all that any one could do—ascertain whether the company had acted in pursuance of law. But, when you come to the nicer question, whether it is a fraud or not, it is hardly right to say that the public should suffer. Suppose a man performs work for the company in a certain way. If he buys the obligation of the company, given for work, the presumption is that it would be legally issued, if procured legally, upon its face, and it would be difficult for a man dealing with the company to ascertain whether it was or not according to the requirements of the law. The section reads: "No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void." I presume that the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations had in his mind that India rubber account that he spoke of the other day. That would be a fictitious indebtedness. A railroad corporation, or street railroad corporation, may come up to the Legislature, and they may employ a lobby to get certain bills through. You will find that nothing appears on the books of the company that money was spent for any such purpose. You will find charged, under the head of construction account, thirty thousand dollars. That is, without any items, without any information, it would appear that on account of money expended for construction there is a charge of thirty thousand dollars. It is a fictitious indebtedness, so far as the stockholders are concerned, but the directors have expended the money. It is a fraud on the stockholders, but it is a matter which they have done, inasmuch as they had the power to do it, to pay out and use the company's money. I see the difficulty, as my colleague has said, in regard to the public generally. Now, I would like to amend it in this way:

"No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void; and the directors of all corporations shall be jointly and severally liable for any fictitious indebtedness created or authorized by them."

Would not that cover the point?

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: That is all right, so far as it goes. But our section says that "the stock and bonded indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased, except in pursuance of general law."

MR. HAGER. I leave the rest of the section exactly as it is, but I make the directors directly responsible for the fictitious indebtedness.

MR. ESTEE. We find just exactly such a section in Pennsylvania, Missouri, and Illinois, and it strikes me that it is right.

MR. HAGER. If the gentleman will point out the section in the Missouri Constitution.

MR. ESTEE. You will find it in section eight, article twelve, of the Missouri Constitution of eighteen hundred and seventy-five.

MR. HAGER. It is there, sir.

MR. WEST. You will find it also in section thirteen, article eleven, of the Illinois Constitution—the same in substance.

MR. HAGER. It is in the Missouri Constitution, and refers to the Constitution of Pennsylvania and that of Illinois, I suppose. I am inclined to adhere to the Constitution of Missouri and the one in Pennsylvania, because they are drawn with reference to making the Constitution to a certain extent a code, so far as it is a limitation upon legislative power. I am rather in favor of Constitutions being drawn in that shape—that they should contain, if necessary, a code, because Constitutions cannot be changed and overturned so easily. Laws may be by the Legislature at any time; but in a Constitution, when it is once engrafted there, it is like a rock against which the surges of corruption may prevail in vain, and I am in favor of engrafting in the Constitution every provision that I may think necessary for the protection of the people, rather than to leave it to the Legislature.

REMARKS OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I see no peculiar holiness or sanctity in the section because it has been shipped over here from Missouri. If it is good we ought to adopt it. If it is bad we ought to reject it. But while we are endeavoring to phrase an idea in order to meet what is acknowledged to be a mischief in the business of our corporations, I think it is just as well to phrase it, if we can, so that it will cover the evil intended to be corrected. Now, I will suggest this to the Chairman of the committee. Of course, it may be crude and perhaps not couched in the most fitting language. I remember hearing—if the Convention will pardon me one moment—I remember hearing it said that the elder John Adams, who wrote the Preamble and Bill of Rights for the Constitution of Massachusetts, gave to that great work at the ripe age of eighty-nine years, after twenty-five or thirty years study of republican institutions, after vast travel and experience to live and to learn, with a thorough knowledge of everything that relates to the rights of the people that could be drawn from the earliest existence of republics to the charter that has been so often spoken of here, which was wrung from King John by the Barons at Runemede—that he was occupied seven months, in the solitude of his chamber, in writing the Preamble and Bill of Rights of the Constitution of Massachusetts, around which all these other Constitutions have clustered. But we seem to think that we can come upon the floor of this Convention and suck a stump of lead pencil for five minutes, take an old scrap of paper and prepare any amendment for the Constitution of the State.

MR. HEISKELL. We have the benefit of his vast wisdom.

MR. BARNES. The work is altogether too hurriedly done; and therefore I say in apology for any amendment of mine, that I would much prefer that amendments should go to a committee for study and examination. It is very easy to use language, but it is not so easy to construe it when it has to be investigated. Here is my suggestion:

"No corporation shall issue capital stock, or any evidence of corporate indebtedness, except for money paid to, work or labor done for, or property actually received by it in the course of its business. No corporation shall increase its capital stock, except for the acquisition of property, or for the appointment of property among its stockholders, actually held and owned by said corporation at the time of such increase. No corporation shall create any indebtedness except as herein provided for the issue of capital stock; provided, that nothing herein contained shall affect any bona fide holder for value of any evidence of corporate indebtedness."

Now, that would cover the fictitious indebtedness by defining what they might contract a debt for, and the fictitious stock by defining what they might increase their stock for, with a proper reservation in cases of indebtedness only.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: The learned and eloquent gentleman from San Francisco has told us what a gentleman from Massachusetts did, and how many years it took that man to finally get into condition to be able to frame the Preamble and Bill of Rights of the Constitution of Massachusetts, but I must say that I was unable to see what pertinence these remarks had to the subject in hand. But, when the gentleman from San Francisco said that the Constitutions of all the other States clustered around the Constitution of Massachusetts, the only reason for that clustering that I can see is, that the gentleman from San Francisco happens to be born in Massachusetts himself, and that probably accounts for the clustering business around Massachusetts.

MR. BARNES. I beg leave to correct the gentleman. I was not born in Massachusetts. I think it is as good a place to come from, however, as——I do not remember where the gentleman came from, and I have not yet known him long enough in this State to know where he lives here. I think all this is out of the question—we are not discussing that subject.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I stand corrected. I understood the gentleman to tell me the other day that he was born in the State of Ben. Butler.

MR. BARNES. I never could have said that, for Ben. Butler has not got any State. He certainly did not get the State of Massachusetts at the last election. I am aware that the Convention biographer has located me in Massachusetts, and he also gave my age and previous condition of servitude, but he was incorrect about them. But that has nothing to do with this amendment.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I call the attention of the Convention to section seven of article sixteen of the Constitution of Pennsylvania. Section seven of article sixteen of that Constitution is the exact counterpart of the present section before this Convention; or, I should say, the present section is the exact counterpart of the section in the Constitution of Pennsylvania. Section seven reads as follows:

"No corporation shall issue stocks or bonds except for money, labor done, or money or property actually received; and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void. The stock and indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock first obtained, at a meeting to be held after sixty days' notice, given in pursuance of law."

It seems to me that we can well afford to copy a Constitution, such as was formed by the men who sat in Convention in Pennsylvania. The present section is a direct blow at the whole system of corporate companies in the State of California. A great talk is made here about innocent purchasers. Mr. President, in my humble opinion, I consider this talk about innocent purchasers as all bosh and bombast. Innocent purchasers! If men desire to be innocent, then let them not be stupid and foolish. If a man desires to purchase a promissory note, he naturally looks into the financial responsibility of the maker and the indorsers of that note. He naturally desires to ascertain whether the note is based upon any financial responsibility. If he does not do that, if his own ignorance and stupidity leads him to purchase a worthless piece of paper, he must suffer the consequences. We never can make laws to protect fools against their own foolishness. Talk about innocent purchasers! If a man desires to be an innocent purchaser, let him be a sensible purchaser. It is very well known that the great bulk of the stock of corporations is negotiated, not directly by the officers of the corporation, but is negotiated through the medium of brokers or agents. Whoever desires to buy stock, let him examine whether the act creating the stock is a valid act in law. Let the business be done through the medium of banks of financial ability; let them go to institutions and to men that they know to be solvent, and before purchasing let them require these negotiating agents to indorse the paper. Then, if the paper is worthless, they can come back upon the indorsers. There is no trouble about protecting innocent purchasers at all. And if the history of the railroad corporations of the United States, if the history of the corporations of the State of California is studied, it will be found that the great evil always has been the watering of stock. And it is to prevent the watering of stock, to prevent the fictitious issue of stock, that we desire to have this section inserted in the new Constitution.

The gentleman from Sacramento, Judge McFarland, says that a number of corporations are started in this State without any principal at all except a place to prospect. Mr. President, I have known a number of corporations to be started and run in this State for a number of months that did not even have a place to prospect. I know one company that was called the English Mine. When a certain newspaper in San Francisco sent its correspondents, to ascertain where that mine was located, they were unable to find that they had any location or that they had any place to prospect at all, and yet their stock sold in San Francisco, and was purchased. It is in order to break down this wildcat system of doing business, and in order to protect the citizens of this State and all other States against these corporations without any financial ability whatever. If a corporation desires to do business let it do business as a copartnership does business. Let it have money to do its business with, and let it have something to represent its capital stock; and if it has no financial ability, no principal, no means, then let there be no corporation.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: We have heard this matter discussed to a considerable extent, and it appears to me that new light has been shown with regard to the principles set forth in section eleven. Now, for instance, when we read this, on the first few lines, which has been under discussion, we cannot discover anything inconsistent or anything that is sinister in its tendency. It appears to be broad, correct, honest, and what might be wished for "No corporation shall issue stock or bonds except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received." That looks like starting out upon a solid basis. It looks after the old style of honesty, and it would appear at first review that it would be accepted and acted upon, but we find that there are members who can see something deeply sinister in it where common minds cannot, and if such gentlemen can make it plainly appear that there is something wrong, something radical, something sinister in its tendency, it is well for us to start out and act accordingly. But if, after due effort, there is a failure in that regard and nothing really wrong, nothing inconsistent, nothing corrupting, nothing contrary to our Constitution is shown up, why I think we may pronounce that nothing has been accomplished against what is here presented.

Now, for instance, with regard to another portion of this section eleven: "And all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void." That looks to be correct; and, in fact, the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, says that it is a principle that does exist. Well, now I am satisfied that the minds of the members of this Convention would inquire if this is a principle in law, why is it that it becomes so dangerous and subversive in section eleven, as to change the order of business. It is said that it would change the order of business. Now we are desiring to change this, and we think this reaches it. In the midst of everything I am convinced that this has been thought of before.

Here, gentlemen say, that men come here and chaw the stump of a lead pencil, and think upon matters for a moment, and conclude that they know more than men whose mighty minds have been engaged in the investigation of these matters. Now, for instance, I have nothing in particular to say with regard to the men who have sat in any Convention, but I would suppose that the gentleman would admit at once that the men assembled even in the Constitutional Convention of Missouri would know as much as members who have chawed a pencil here for a short time, and who oppose the measures which are presented here. We have also the Convention of Pennsylvania, which has investigated these things. These new deleterious effects that he speaks of as being introduced into business, have not been dragged to light before this body to show that there is something injurious in the article under discussion. With these matters before us, and being convinced that nothing has been shown against the proposition contained in section eleven, I am in hopes that the members of this Convention will consider it on its true merits, not particularly because it has been adopted in the Constitution of Missouri, not particularly because able men in Pennsylvania have adopted the same thing, but because it will prevent fraud in the State of California.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. KEYES. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Lindow, Larkin, Smith, of Santa Clara, and Smith, of Kern.

The main question was ordered, on a division, by a vote of 52 ayes to 39 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The main question has been ordered. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, to strike out section eleven.

The amendment was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes. The Secretary will read the amendment for information.

Digitized by Google

THE SECRETARY read:

"No corporation shall issue capital stock or any evidence of corporate indebtedness except for money paid to, work or labor done for, or property actually received by it in the course of its business. No corporation shall increase its capital stock, except for the acquisition of property or for the apportionment of property among its stockholders actually held and owned by said corporation at the time of such increase. No corporation shall create any indebtedness, except as herein provided for the issue of capital stock; provided, that nothing herein contained shall affect any bona fide holder for value of any evidence of corporate indebtedness."

The amendment was lost.

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco. I desire to offer an amendment.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Can an amendment be offered now?

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not heard the proposition of the gentleman from San Francisco?

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco. I desire to offer an amendment to section eleven.

THE CHAIRMAN. That is one of the anomalies of having the previous question in Committee of the Whole. There can be no more amendments.

MR. WILSON, of San Francisco. I simply give notice that I will offer an amendment to line three, section eleven, after the word "void," to say that nothing herein contained shall affect bona fide holders for value paid without notice.

A PROTEST.

MR. REYNOLDS. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to enter my protest against the action of the Committee of the Whole in ordering the previous question. It is subversive of the popular rights. It is subversive of the rights of the minority in the committee. It is subversive of the rights of the minority of the Convention.

MR. TINNIN. I rise to a point of order. It is that the protest must be sent up in writing.

THE CHAIRMAN. The rule allows it either in writing or verbally.

MR. BEERSTECHER. The previous question being called, I think cuts off all debate upon all subjects.

THE CHAIRMAN. The previous question has already exhausted that section. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

MR. REYNOLDS. I have nothing more to say. I have stated my whole objection.

MR. AYERS. I rise for information. Is there any such thing as a question of privilege in the Committee of the Whole?

MR. REYNOLDS. Is there any such thing as the previous question in Committee of the Whole?

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his question of privilege if he desires to speak to it.

MR. REYNOLDS. I have stated the whole of it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the next section.

ELECTION OF DIRECTORS OF CORPORATIONS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 12. The Legislature shall provide by law that in all elections for directors or managers of incorporated companies, every stockholder shall have the right to vote, in person or by proxy, for the number of shares of stock owned by him, for as many persons as there are directors or managers to be elected, or to cumulate said shares and give one candidate as many votes as the number of directors multiplied by the number of his shares of stock shall equal, or to distribute them, on the same principle, among as many candidates as he shall think fit; and such directors or managers shall not be elected in any other manner.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: By direction of the Committee on Corporations, I offer an amendment to that section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Provided, that coöperative societies may be formed under general laws, which may provide by by-laws of their own for limiting the representation of shareholders of their stock, and the number of shares that may be held; and the Legislature shall enact such laws as may be necessary for their faithful management and protection, and may limit the liabilities of their members."

Mr. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I have another amendment, not at all in conflict with the one offered by the Chairman of the committee, to this effect:

"Add to the section, 'and in elections for directors and trustees of corporations having no capital stock, each member may cast the whole number of his votes for one candidate, or distribute them upon two or more candidates, as he may prefer.'"

Section twelve, as reported by the committee, contains a very important and beneficial proposition, and one which has lately been acted upon, allowing parties to cumulate their votes upon one candidate, instead of scattering them. The section is good so far as it goes, but persons may be members of corporations and not stockholders. Now, this principle is not applied by the committee to corporations of that character. I think the principle ought to be extended also to that class of corporations. I find in the Pennsylvania Constitution that the same principle is extended to that class of corporations—as well to the ordinary moneyed corporations as to the beneficial and benevolent societies. Now, if this principle is good in one case it is good in the other. The Constitution of Pennsylvania is broad enough to cover all that class of corporations.

Section four of article sixteen reads as follows:

"In all elections for directors or managers of a corporation, each member or shareholder may cast the whole number of his votes for one candidate, or distribute them upon two or more candidates, as he may prefer."

There it applies to all corporations—as well to this class as the other. The object of my amendment is to make it apply to other corporations than merely pecuniary corporations.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say a word upon the amendment as proposed by the Committee on Corporations. It is a fact that there are a great number of people in different parts of the State who have desired to organize coöperative societies, wherein they could distribute the profit arising from the business; if it was a mercantile business, between those who patronized the corporation and also those who had furnished capital for it, it was found necessary, in order to keep these corporations, when they came to be prosperous, in the hands of those who were receiving the benefits, to limit the votes of stockholders to a certain number, and not have it based upon the amount of stock that they owned. This was to prevent large stockholders, when the thing came to be a success, stepping in and buying up a majority of the stock, and then control it in their own interest. The last Legislature adopted a provision which covers the ground covered by the amendment offered by the Committee on Corporations, that these corporations may be formed, and by their by-laws regulate the number of votes that each stockholder might cast at an election; and these organizations have been extended in different parts of the State. It is desirable, I think, to recognize that principle in this Constitution, in connection with the other; to provide that they may organize, and by their by-laws determine that each stockholder shall, perhaps, have only one vote in the election of the directors, and thus to cover that ground. I hope it will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: This second amendment shows the difficulty of trying to put a code into the Constitution. You provide, in the first place, that in corporations votes shall be had in a certain way, and that the directors shall not be elected in any other way. Now you propose that corporate societies may be formed with the privilege of electing their directors as they please. A corporation is a coöperative society, and a coöperative society, having any privilege that private individuals do not have, is a corporation. If you put in this provision you must define what kind of corporations you mean. If you don't you leave the whole matter to the Legislature in the future, because the kind of coöperative societies that are spoken of are all corporations, and the corporations are all coöperative societies.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I am inclined to think that the objection raised to this proposition by Judge McFarland is well taken. Section four of the report of the Committee on Corporation provides that, "the term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships." I would inquire of the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, if a coöperative society would not necessarily be a corporation, and a corporation a coöperative society, under this definition. All of us who possess a knowledge of current history know that this plan of corporate functions are not being tried alone in this State. In fact it did not originate here. It is an importation from abroad. I doubt not that the ideas concentrated and crystallized in this term have been already and will in the future prove to be very beneficial, and the case, in the mind of the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, is all well enough in itself, but will involve the Constitution in an inextricable confusion if section four stands as we have passed it. In other words, we shall be saying that corporations may elect their trustees and managing Boards only in one way, which we have prescribed, or which we propose to prescribe in section twelve, and then go on and say that a certain class of these corporations may adopt their own rules. Now that is to break down the rule itself.

I am in favor of this rule as it is contained in the committee's report of section twelve, with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson. I see no objection to that. I think the language adopted in the Constitution of Pennsylvania, from which he read, probably is a better form than that proposed by himself. It can be easily conformed to that mode of expression. But the object of that is sufficiently accomplished by his proposed amendment. I am not in favor of the amendment suggested by the Chairman of the committee, because it breaks down the rule which the Convention has intended to establish in the government of corporations. Now, what is the reason? These managing Boards of a corporation constitute the authority by which all its business is transacted, all its property is acquired and managed, all its privileges and franchises, when they possess such, are to be exercised. So it is intended that all the stockholders who may not be familiar with the inside manipulations of the corporation may be enabled to consolidate the number of votes that they are entitled to cast upon one or more of their managers, was to obtain at least a minority representation in that Board of managers. Now, sir, that reason is just as cogent in respect to the coöperative class as any other class. The avowed principle upon which all these corporations are founded is upon the coöperative principle. So far as they depart from that they have departed from the principle of corporations. It would be dangerous to break in upon this rule. There would be no reason for the adoption of section twelve. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, is right, though the language in the Pennsylvania Constitution is preferable, but as to the other, I trust that it will not be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I only rise for the purpose of speaking to the question of the general propriety of provisions concerning coöperative societies. I have not understood the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson. The minority of the Committee on Corporations introduced a proposition, at the request of a number of friends of the principle of coöperation. It is a subject that I confess I do not fully understand, but it is complained that the present constitutional provision is in their way; that they are subject always to that difficulty with regard to representation, where the representation is upon shares. I believe that the main feature of coöperative societies is a vote regulated by the membership. If I understand rightly they are an extremely useful society. They are the means of combining the labor of persons of small means into a society where every member is entitled to just as much voice as every other member. And another principle is that members are not allowed to accumulate into their own hands, more than a certain proportion of the principal of the concern. They have sometimes succeeded; they have sometimes failed. Some of them are very flourishing and they spread around about them a great deal of good.

Now, the one distinctive feature, and the one aimed at in the amendment proposed to this section, is with regard to representation. The present rule contemplates a property qualification, to which I do not object. The share is presumed to be potent. No matter how many shares a man has, he votes all his shares. The other is the personal representation of the coöperative plan permitted by the by-laws of their own. Can there be any objection at all, if every corporation in the State of California wishes to call itself a coöperative society, and limit the representation to the membership, so that if one person owns but one share, he has the same voice in it as any other stockholder in the concern? I know that they will not do it. There is no possible danger that they will do it. The only trouble is that in that class of corporations they may never be able to induce a man of ordinary means to invest his capital in it. On the contrary, the men of large means do invest, because by reason of the accumulation of stock in a single hand, they soon control a majority of the stock. There is the difference in the two propositions, and it ought to be recognized, in my opinion.

It seems to me that we are not throwing open the door to all corporations to call themselves coöperative societies and come in and claim the benefit, because they immediately put themselves upon a footing with coöperative societies in other respects. The word has a legal definition, I believe. At least they have got to be well known, and the principle upon which they proceed is well known. The main objection would be to the limitation of their liability. If we proceed entirely upon a cash basis there can be no necessity of any provision about the limitation of the liability of the members. That is my understanding of it, and that is the reason why I have advocated the adoption of this qualification of the rule.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: As there may be a question whether this does conflict with section four that we have already adopted—this amendment offered by the Committee on Corporations—I desire to make a motion that this amendment be rereferred to the Committee on Corporations for them to report upon.

THE CHAIRMAN. That cannot be done in Committee of the Whole.

MR. BLACKMER. When we get into Convention I will make that motion.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I had not compared it with section four. This proposition is right, in my judgment, but it seems to me that there would be a doubt about it. Therefore, for the purpose of remodeling that amendment and applying it elsewhere, at the request of those gentlemen who take a special interest in it, I would ask leave to withdraw the amendment that I proposed. I ask leave to withdraw it, with the understanding that I may present it again.

MR. WEST. I object.

MR. HAGER. I would suggest to the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations just to pass over that section for the present.

MR. ESTEE. I do not suppose there is any objection.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: There is a diversity of interest that would be affected by the adoption of these several amendments, and in order that the committee may have the privilege of reconsidering the proposition, and harmonizing these different and adverse interests, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. I do this in order that in Convention we can refer this back to the Committee on Corporations.

MR. SCHELL. I move that the further consideration of the section be passed.

MR. WEST. If it is the sense of the committee we can pass these amendments for the time being. I will withdraw my motion.

MR. SCHELL. My object is that it may be referred back to the committee when we get back into Convention.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 13. The State shall not subscribe to or be interested in the stock of, or in any manner loan its credit to any person, company, association, or corporation.

MR TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute for the section.

"SEC. 13. The Legislature shall have no power to give or to lend, or to authorize the giving or lending of the credit of the State, or of any county, city and county, city, township, or other political corporation or subdivision of the State now existing, or that may be hereafter established, in aid of or to any person, association, or corporation, whether municipal or otherwise, or to pledge the credit thereof in any manner whatever, for the payment of the liabilities of any individual, association, municipal or other corporation whatever; nor shall it have power to make any grant, or authorize the making of any grant of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation whatever; and it shall not have power to authorize the State, or any political subdivision thereof, to subscribe for stock or to become a stockholder in any corporation whatever.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: That is the clause agreed upon by the Legislative Committee, and it seems to me to be more full. The proposition reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal does not go far enough. If it is important that the State should not become a stockholder in these corporations, it is equally important that counties and cities should not be permitted to aid them. We know it has been done in this State, and we know that it has resulted in great loss to counties, cities, and municipalities. It is therefore desirable to prohibit it altogether.

MR. ESTEE. The general principle is correct. I did not hear the reading distinctly, but if it is intended to prevent a city like San Francisco, for instance, from acquiring and owning its own waterworks, I cannot sustain it.

MR. TERRY. It only prevents it from owning stock in a corporation.

MR. ESTEE. Does it not prohibit it from pledging the credit in any manner?

MR. TERRY. In aid of any corporation.

MR. ESTEE. In the fifth line, I do not know what that means. I would object to anything that will restrain large cities like San Francisco from owning its own waterworks. I think it is correct in principle, provided that construction cannot be put upon it.

MR. TERRY. It cannot have any effect to prevent the city from buying and owning its own waterworks exclusively. It prevents the city from becoming a stockholder in any private corporation, and nothing else.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I would inquire if the substitute is section thirty-eight of the report of the Committee on Legislative Department.

MR. TERRY. Yes, sir.

MR. ESTEE. I think there is probably no objection to it.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I can state in this connection, that the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization had before it this section, and have recommended the following:

"SEC. 21. No county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, by a vote of its citizens or otherwise, shall become a subscriber to the capital stock, or a stockholder in any corporation, association, or company, or make any appropriation, or donation, or loan its credit to, or in aid of, any person, corporation, association, company, or institution."

We have already adopted the principle that is there offered. It is substantially what is here offered. I mention this for the purpose of announcing to the Convention the fact that the committee having charge of this matter have agreed substantially upon the provision here offered.

MR. ESTEE. I think it is correct, and I certainly do not object to it. I hope the amended proposition will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute proposed by the gentleman from San Joaquin.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the insertion of that section in lieu of the section reported by the Committee on Corporations. This is not the proper place for the provision as it is proposed by the gentleman from San Joaquin. Very many of the provisions contemplated in that amendment no doubt will be inserted in the Constitution. But the proper place is in the Legislative Department, where it has been placed by that committee. I will read section twenty-two. I know what I am talking about. It reads as follows:

"SEC. 22. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and upon warrants duly drawn thereon by the Controller; and no money shall ever be appropriated or drawn from the State treasury for the use or benefit of any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or any other institution, not under the exclusive management and control of the State as a State institution, nor shall any grant or donation of property ever be made thereto by the State. An accurate statement of the receipts and expenditures of public moneys shall be attached to and published with the laws at every regular session of the Legislature."

Now, I submit that section twenty-two is in its proper place, and its provisions are proper. Now, section thirty-eight has reference to the powers delegated to municipal corporations denying the power of the Legislature to delegate any power whereby they should be permitted to invest money in these corporations in any way. I submit that the provision, as it is here reported by the Committee on Corporations, ought to be adopted. It is clear and perfectly applicable to the purposes designed by the committee, while the other provisions of the proposed amendment are not as proper as under the head of legislative department. The effect of its being separate only makes it more clear as to the real intent and purpose of the provision. When you undertake to restrict the legislative power under the head of corporations, you are not applying it in the proper place, and I submit that this amendment should not be adopted. The provisions are adequately provided for in sections twenty-two and thirty-eight of the legislative department, and that is the proper place.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: Rule Two says the Convention shall take a recess from twelve o'clock until two, and it is now twelve o'clock.

MR. WELLIN. I raise the point of order: the Convention is not in session. Rule Sixty says this rule shall not be suspended without a two-thirds vote, and one day's notice. Now, the vote by which this motion was carried was not a two-thirds vote of the members present, and I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. INMAN. I suggest that the gentleman go out and get his lunch.
MR. BEERSTECHER. There was no objection at the time.
The motion was lost.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: The amendment as proposed by the gentleman from San Joaquin has much in it that is unobjectionable, but it has some things in it which are hardly proper to act upon now, if I understand it. I was not aware that any such amendment would be presented to the Convention this morning. I had examined section thirteen as reported, but I had not examined section thirty-eight of the legislative report, now before us as a substitute. If I understand it, upon a casual reading, it has a wide scope. It reads:

"SEC. 38. The Legislature shall have no power to give or to lend, or to authorize the giving or lending, of the credit of the State, or of any county, city and county, city, township, or other political corporation or subdivision of the State, now existing, or that may be hereafter established, in aid of or to any person, association, or corporation, whether municipal or otherwise, or to pledge the credit thereof, in any manner whatever, for the payment of the liabilities of any individual, association, municipal or other corporation, whatever; nor shall it have power to make any grant, or authorize the making of any grant, of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation, whatever; and it shall not have power to authorize the State, or any political subdivision thereof, to subscribe for stock, or to become a stockholder in any corporation whatever."

Now, it seems to me, under that portion which says, "nor shall it (the Legislature) have power to make any grant, or authorize the making of any grant, of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation, whatever," the Legislature would be deprived of the power to aid any benevolent institution—for instance, orphan asylums—that now receive donations from the State. I do not think the Convention expected this section would be precipitated upon them this morning. It is outside of the ordinary run of the business. We are not considering that department, but the department on corporations. We are considering the matter of corporations other than municipal; and this now comes in to apply to municipal corporations, and the powers of the Legislature in certain matters which have nothing to do with private corporations or corporations other than municipal. This morning, if I were called upon to vote on this, I would vote against it, for this reason: that I am not prepared to say now that this State should not assist the orphan asylums, deaf, dumb, and blind asylums, and other benevolent institutions; and if this section is passed in the language in which it is couched, it certainly would cut off all aid to such institutions. There are other portions of it with which I agree; but I am not now intending to discuss the section, but merely to call the attention of the committee to the fact that it involves this important question. For that reason, and because I want to reflect upon this matter, I move that section thirteen and the amendment be temporarily postponed.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I hope this motion will not prevail. I do not see any reason why we should pass it. I do not know why this committee is not as well prepared now to discuss this question as they will be at any other time. I am quite willing to say that I shall vote for this amendment, because it will do precisely what the gentleman who last spoke fears it will do. Now, if there is any objection this is as good a time to hear it as any other. This is the fiftieth day of the Convention's session, and it is high time that these matters should be passed upon. I am quite free to admit that I shall vote for this amendment, because it will have precisely the effect that the gentleman attributes to it. In fact, the language is very explicit. There is not much chance for any one to mistake its meaning. Its true inwardness is expressed in its words. It is intended to cut off from receiving State aid, those institutions which the gentleman has mentioned. I do not know of any better time than the present to discuss the question. If gentlemen have anything to say, let them say it now. If there are any reasons why the system of the past twenty years should be continued, let those reasons be given here and now, so that we may reach a vote.

REMARKS OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: The amendment suggested by the gentleman from San Joaquin is not in order, because it is not germane to the section under consideration, which is confined simply to the question of the State becoming a stockholder, or loaning its credit to private corporations. The proposition of the gentleman involves not merely the giving or loaning the credit of the State, but also the credit of any city, county, township, or other political subdivision of the State, to any person, association, or corporation, whether municipal or otherwise. That is entirely a different subject. That matter was included in the Preamble and Bill of Rights—section twenty-two, I think—and it was by consent stricken out or withdrawn.

MR. TERRY. Because it was in the report of the Legislative Committee.

MR. BARNES. Well, it formed a part of the Bill of Rights. Under the head, now, of Corporations other than Municipal, it is sought to incorporate a clause here which covers, not merely these quasi corporations, but also municipal corporations, and also cities, counties, and towns all through the State, and also covers the question of making donations, which is a very broad question, and not at all involved in the question under consideration. There is no other possible limitation upon the legislative power that under this mode of amendment might not be introduced and debated here. I hope it will be allowed to remain where it belongs. My point of order is that it is not germane to the subject under consideration.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: If it is in order, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco——

MR. CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order to be disposed of first. Section thirteen provides that, "the State shall not subscribe to or be interested in the stock of, or in any manner loan its credit to, any person, company, association, or corporation." Rule Twenty-eight provides that, "no subject, different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment." The Chair is of the opinion that the subject-matter is not different from section thirteen. The point of order is overruled.

MR. HOWARD. I agree with the gentleman from Santa Clara, that this section should await action until we reach the report of the Committee on Legislative Department. I move that section thirteen be stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is a motion now pending that section thirteen and the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, be temporarily postponed, and that the committee proceed to the consideration of section fourteen.

MR. HOWARD. Is not my amendment in order?

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

MR. HOWARD. I think it had better go out or be postponed, because it is too weighty a subject to be considered in haste.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to postpone temporarily.

The motion prevailed on a division vote, ayes—43; noes 38.

MR. TINNIN. Did a majority vote?

THE CHAIRMAN. There were eighty-one votes cast. The Secretary will read section fourteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 14. Every corporation organized or doing business in this State, under the laws or authority thereof, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock; the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the names and place of residence of its officers.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I have in my hand an amendment which has been agreed upon by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. It merely changes a few words. I move that it be substituted for the original section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 14. Every corporation, other than religious, educational, or benevolent, organized or doing business in this State, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock; the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the names and place of residence of its officers."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend the amendment by striking out, in line four, the word "public," before the word "inspection."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. SCHELL.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: They should be open for inspection by any person interested in the stock. I think it is entirely too broad. My recollection is, that in the committee that word "public" was stricken out on my motion. I think it is improperly in there now. Possibly I am mistaken, but I remember that I made the motion to strike out the word "public," and I think it was stricken out; and my understanding was that the motion was carried. I think the section is entirely too broad. Under our statute, under the Code, every stockholder of a corporation has a perfect right to inspect the books of the corporation and see who has made transfers of stock and to see who the stockholders are. This accomplishes all that is desirable. I think it is too broad, when we say that every man, whether he has any interest or not, shall be entitled to come into the office and examine the books of the corporation. I do not think he has any more right to do it than he has to come into my private office and demand an inspection of my books, in which he has no interest and no possible right. I think it is in there improperly; but whether so or not, it ought to be out.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. My recollection is that Mr. Schell did put that amendment, and we voted it down. I recollect it was the subject of considerable discussion, and we concluded it would be one of the best means of preventing fraud, and enable the persons who wish to invest in certain companies to judge whether they should do so or not, and so that when corporations put their stock on the market everybody will know the position. That is my recollection, that the Judge's amendment was voted down. I hope the word will not be stricken out. It is one of the most important words in the whole section.

MR. HOWARD. That is my recollection also.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that if we strike out that word, as suggested by the gentleman, we take the vitality out of the whole section. You might as well strike out the whole section if you are going to make that discrimination. You might as well have nothing at all in there. The books are already open to inspection by those directly interested. The stockholders may go in at any time and inspect the books and accounts. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. HILBORN.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: Is it the deliberate purpose of this section to open the doors of all the corporations in this State to a crowd of curious persons who may take a notion to look at the books? I would like to know when and at what time the business of the corporation is to be done, if a crowd of men make a break into these offices at any time they see fit and demand to look at the books? I would like to know when the business is to be done? As the law now stands, anybody who has any interest in the corporation may examine the books at any time they may see fit; but I hope this Convention will not do such a foolish thing as to make the books public property.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: There is one portion of this section, it seems to me, which is of importance. Section three, which we have already passed, is this:

"Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities."

Now, how is any person to whom there is an indebtedness to know what stockholders are indebted to him, unless he can obtain that information in some way? Now, sir, they must inspect the books in order to know who the stockholders are, so as to enforce the responsibility. There must be some way of ascertaining who the stockholders are. If this section is adopted they will have the means of obtaining that information at all times. The section provides:

"SEC. 14. Every corporation organized or doing business in this State, under the laws or authority thereof, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock; the amounts of its assets and liabilities, and the names and place of residence of its officers."

Now, it seems to me that another great advantage is this: that if parties should wish to become owners in the corporation, they should have the privilege of investigating the affairs of the corporation, so as to know how to invest. I think it will have a tendency to make these corporations more honest in their accounts, and they will not be so likely to charge so much to "India rubber account."

REMARKS OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I understood the amendment of the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations to make an exception in favor of benevolent and charitable institutions. It reads:

"SEC. 14. Every corporation, other than religious, educational, or benevolent, organized or doing business in this State, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock; the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the names and places of residence of its officers."

I think it would be much better to say, "corporations having capital stock." That covers it. These societies do not have capital stock. Churches, so far as my limited experience goes, have no capital stock. There is another objection to this, if I understand it. "Every corporation organized or doing business in this State shall maintain an office for the transaction of business, etc., where transfers of stock shall be made." Now, that refers to two classes; one class organized under the laws of this State, and another class doing business in this State. I suppose that covers every case—foreign insurance companies, the Liverpool, London, and Globe, and all the companies doing business here. They must all get and keep an office in this State, where transfers of stock shall be made. Then they are to keep books for public inspection. It seems to me that there are several words which do not belong there. The word "and" should be substituted for the word "or," so as to refer to corporations native and to the manner born. But this covers the case of every corporation, wherever organized, that does business in this State. It would compel them to keep a record here of all transfers——

MR. FILCHER. Are there not corporations doing business in this State that have no capital stock, and yet do business?

MR. BARNES. I know of one recently exploded in San Francisco. If it has no capital stock, why then you cannot require them to make transfers of stock; it cannot transfer what it does not have. It seems to me that it should relate to corporations organized and doing business in this State, and having capital stock, and I move to amend by substituting for the word "or" the word "and," in the first line.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to an amendment pending.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: The committee, by this amendment, provides that every corporation other than religious, educational, or benevolent, doing business in this State, shall have and maintain an office, etc. Now, the criticisms of Col. Barnes, upon the wording there, in relation to foreign corporations, I think will convince every thoughtful man that we should compel them to have and maintain offices in this State. Why not? Why, for instance, if the Liverpool, London, and Globe Insurance Company is perfectly solvent—why should not the people of this State who patronize it, know the stockholders. Also the London and San Francisco Bank—why are we not just as much entitled to know who the stockholders are, and how much stock they have, and how much is paid in, and by whom, as we have to know the same things about the Bank of California, or any of the banks incorporated under our own laws. This is a proposition that seems to strike me as just and reasonable. I think we ought to have the right to examine their books.

MR. BARNES. I did not suppose for a moment that it was anything more than a misprint. If that is the idea it will have to be considered a little, because it will be impracticable to require corporations organized in Great Britain, with a capital of thirty-five or forty millions of dollars, to comply with the mandates of this provision. It is ridiculous. Who will be any the wiser by reading over the list of names of stockholders? How will we know whether they are responsible or not? What does this section mean? Does it mean that these corporations shall keep a transfer office in San Francisco?

MR. ESTEE. It means just what it says: "Shall have and maintain an office in this State for the transaction of the business." That is required under the present law—"where transfers may be made."

MR. BARNES. Why don't you read it as it is—"shall be made?"

MR. ESTEE. Yes, sir; that is a better word. I accept the correction. Where transfers of stock shall be made. That is the proper wording—"shall be made," and in which shall be kept books for public inspection. The section reads this way, and says just what it means, and nothing else:

"SEC. 14. Every corporation, other than religious, educational, or benevolent, organized or doing business in this State, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock; the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the names and place of residence of its officers."

We are entitled to this information. The people of San Francisco are entitled to know how much of the capital stock of the London and San Francisco Bank is subscribed. That institution no doubt is perfectly responsible, but we claim the same right to investigate for ourselves, as we do in regard to any other bank located there. I claim that we should treat foreign corporations and local corporations exactly alike, and theirs should not be put on a more favorable basis than ours. We do business with them, and their securities and their business should be known just as much as the affairs of our local corporations.

MR. BARNES. Why?

MR. ESTEE. Because it is a business proposition, that we should know just as much about them as we do about our own corporations. They come here and do business. We deal with them; we trust them, and we have a right to know.

MR. BARNES. What object could there be in knowing the names of the stockholders? We would not know whether they were responsible men or not.

MR. ESTEE. Of course that is one object, but not the entire object. We want to know who the men are, where they live, and all about it.

MR. BARNES. What sort of good will it do a man to know who the stockholders are in the London and Globe Insurance Company, who are scattered all over Great Britain.

MR. ESTEE. We may not know as to that, but we should know as to a great many other insurance companies scattered over different sections of this Union. We want to know how much stock has been paid up, and the names of the owners of this stock. It is true we may not know them; we may not know whether they are responsible or not, but we might go to people who are well known in the commercial world—in New York, Boston, Liverpool, and London. It says: "and the amounts owned by them respectively." They might publish a circular stating that well known capitalists of London own stock in the company. A great many business men might say, they are perfectly responsible, and when we come to look at the books it might be found that these capitalists did not own any stock. "The amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock." This is a general provision intended to apply to all corporations, and your committee thought it was just. If the section can be improved, I shall be glad to hear any amendments or suggestions from the gentlemen who are finding fault with it.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I believe this section to be important to become a part of the Constitution. My experience as a legislator is that it has been heretofore impossible to get any information in relation to corporations. They refuse to allow their books to be inspected. Under the provisions of this section I have no fears of curious men annoying the companies, only those men who own stock, or those representing owners, would examine the books. People should have the right to know all about them, because they are all more or less interested in their actions—in the policy and success of these corporations. I deem the section just. It protects the people, and I believe it should be adopted as a part of the Constitution.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the section, provided it be made applicable only to corporations formed under the laws of this State. This State ought to have a general supervision over, and control of her own corporations, and I am in favor of placing in the Constitution provisions amply sufficient to effect this purpose; but the proposed section not only applies to all domestic corporations but also to all foreign corporations that may do business in this State. Now, suppose the Bank of England, or any other foreign corporation, should, for business purposes, have an agency in this State; ought we to require them to keep their records here, with their books of transfer, list of stockholders, etc., open to public inspection? It is idle to propose such a thing when its accomplishment is entirely out of the question. There, too, are the foreign insurance companies of England, Scotland, Germany, France, and the countries of the world over, as also of the other States of the Union, that have their offices and agencies here, engaged in the business of insuring property for the benefit of our people. Would you require them to keep their records here, with all the information required by an exact compliance with this proposed section. It could not be done, and the result would be to drive all those companies from us, to the great injury of our people. It is an accommodation to our people to have the benefit of foreign insurance companies. An extensive conflagration in the City of San Francisco alone would destroy every local insurance company of this State. As was the case in Chicago, not one would survive a great conflagration. There is not sufficient capital invested in that business in this State to protect our property. Without the protection of the foreign insurance companies and their capital, would our people be secure against loss by fire? Every one will concede the foreign companies are a benefit to all who wish to effect insurance, and to drive them from us, by onerous provisions like this, would only be doing injury to our own people.

As I have stated, these foreign companies, whether incorporated in Europe, or in New York, or Pennsylvania, or in any other sister State, doing business here, are beneficial. No one is compelled to do business with them unless he chooses to do so. If they have offices here he can go either to them, or to our home offices for information, and effect his insurance according to his own judgment. I have no interest in any foreign insurance company, and I have no more interest in this matter than any other citizen; but every business man will tell you that if this provision is adopted in the Constitution, it will necessarily drive from our borders all insurance companies not incorporated in this State. This would be a calamity. They could not comply with the conditions proposed in this provision. They could not bring their books and records here for our inspection. A similar provision, so far as my knowledge extends, is not contained in the Constitution of any other State. Our Constitution should be framed in the interest of our people, and for our people, and their government. If we attempt to give to its provisions extra territorial force, as in this proposed section, our action would not be justified by any pressure of public sentiment. I have heard of no complaints against the foreign insurance companies doing business in this State. On the contrary, our people have relied upon them for protection in consequence of the inadequate security afforded by our home companies. Suppose the European companies, and those of New York, the New England States, etc., should be driven out of business here, would our people feel equally safe with the sole protection of our home companies? The proposition is too apparent to admit of argument.

This proposed section should be made to apply only to our home companies, organized and doing business under the laws of this State. I will favor any provision making our home corporations subordinate to our laws, but I am unwilling to place in the Constitution an imperative provision which will prevent any foreign corporation from doing business in this State, and from the evil effects of which we cannot be relieved by future legislation.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I think I may point my friend to the example of a certain Governor of Rhode Island, who never spoke unless he had something to say, and always left off when he had done. Now, I disagree with him on this proposition altogether. These foreign corporations do not transact business here for the purpose of accommodating our people, they come here for the purpose of making money—nothing else. Now why treat them any better than our own corporations? Why should they have any immunities which our home corporations do not possess? The object of this provision is obvious; that the public may know who the parties are that they are dealing with; that they may know whether or not the corporation is solvent, and that we may have some security for the business of the country. Why foreign corporations should not be compelled to give that information I do not know——

MR. HAGER. We might require them, for instance, to deposit insurance money in order to do business.

MR. HOWARD. That does not go at all to the question we are discussing. Not at all. It affects it in nowise. Now it may be important to us to have foreign insurance companies here. But it is not important to have those here who are not solvent, who are not trustworthy, who have no capital; and we know that a great many of these life insurance companies have no capital, and are little better than frauds. Now, sir, there is no difficulty about corporations being able to comply with this provision, for I have never known one that did business on any kind of an honest basis, that did not give the names of the stockholders, and the amount of stock subscribed and paid up. Therefore there is no difficulty whatever about this law. They are here for the purpose of making money. They do not exist here by law, they are here as a matter of comity.

MR. WILSON. The directors are published, not the stockholders.

MR. HOWARD. I have seen some that gave the names of stockholders; it may not be a general custom. But there is no trouble about that thing. There is no difficulty in their doing it. They are as able to do it as State institutions, and why they should not be required to do it I am unable to see. If they choose to withdraw from the country that is their business, but we shall not tolerate them here unless they are responsible, unless they have capital, unless they are solvent. It strikes me that it is our duty to see that they have capital. The provision proposes that the public shall be enabled to obtain the necessary information to enable them to determine that fact, to determine whether the corporation can be trusted or not.

REMARKS OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: One word more. This section has in it more than is contemplated by the gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard. It requires now as it stands that every corporation shall maintain an office in this State for the transaction of business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and that books for that purpose shall be kept, and in those books, which shall be open to public inspection, shall be kept all the dealings of the corporation. I would call his attention to this, that the only object we have in requiring books to be kept is to show who are stockholders, in order that the creditors of the company may know to whom he has to look, and that is all of it. It is not as a matter of general information. This article does not come under the personal liability clause, as claimed by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross. In England they have no such thing as personal liability, and there is only a corporate liability. You cannot hold the stockholders liable because an agent comes here to do business. They have no such provision as that. They have a limited liability Act, where the liability of the stockholder is prescribed in a certain way, not like ours. But it does not impair the security of the one who deals with the company. It requires that they shall transfer their stock. They might do it and nobody know it. It is a useless change that accomplishes no earthly good to anybody. If it could be pointed out to us what good it could do, it would be all well enough. The gentleman from Los Angeles says we have a right to know if the company is solvent. Well, sir, I appeal to any sensible man if the list of stockholders of the Liverpool, London and Globe Insurance Company were published, what man on the face of the earth—or this part of the earth—would know whether they were solvent or not? Who would know, and how would they know? They would be names we never have heard of. We would not know them, and no living man in the State of California would be able to tell whether they were solvent or not. Print the names of London directors, and who among us would be any wiser than before? We know our neighbors in this State—whether they are good or not, or we think we do—though sometimes we get badly fooled on that. But I say it can be of no assistance to require a list of the directors in London, and a list of the stockholders in London, and a list of the transfers. Every time a man bought or sold a share of stock, it would have to be shown on the transfer books in the San Francisco office. All the transfers that take place on 'Change in London, or Liverpool, or Hamburg, or Paris, would have to be noted on the agents' books here. Every time a stockholder dies in any of the great cities, the records of his estate must be forwarded here, in order that we may know who the administrator sold his stock to, and when we find out we know just as much as we did before, and no more. Now, what sense is there in it? The effect of it, as Judge Hager has said, will be to drive this desirable class of business men out of the State. As a matter of common sense this provision should be confined to the creatures of our own laws.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Schell.

REMARKS OF MR. CASSERLY.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: I am one of those who believe it is the duty of corporations to exhibit their books when persons—stockholders, creditors, or otherwise, whoever may have an interest in them—desire to inspect them. And if this section was not so strict I would be very willing to vote for it. It seems to me as it stands to be an obstruction to the transaction of business by the old corporations. The gentleman from Solano, I think, touched the point when he urged as an objection that any number of people, at any hour in the day, or under any circumstances, would have a right to go to the offices of a corporation and obstruct the business of the company, get in the way of the clerks, out of mere idle curiosity, having no interest in the affairs of the company whatever. But the real difficulty is with malicious persons, interested in the business of other parties, or employed by them, who would congregate and spy upon the books to the great detriment of the business.

Now, sir, I have no particular admiration for corporations. I was brought up in a political school that instilled into me a wholesome jealousy of corporations, and I have it to-day; it is bred in my bones, and I suppose I shall retain that jealousy until I die. I am fearful of these enormous aggregations of wealth and power which accompany modern corporations. But, sir, where is the sense, where is the judgment in our clamoring against foreign corporations? Some gentlemen have said that they should not stand on any better basis than our own corporations. I do not know that they should; neither should they be discriminated against, for they certainly serve a very useful purpose here. Whenever there is any great property to insure, we go to these foreign companies which have almost unlimited capital. There is not capital enough at home to take all the risks. The foreign corporations never attempt to interfere with legislation. If there be any class of corporations that are wholly innocent of any wrong against us it is this class of foreign business corporations. It seems to me that it would not be to the interest of the people of this State to pass such laws as would drive them away. Have we forgotten the fate of Chicago? Burned out in one night, millions of property destroyed. American insurance companies bankrupted and almost annihilated; and but for foreign insurance companies Chicago would hardly be there to-day. I do not believe in driving them out of the State by hostile legislation. If they should be driven away there is no safety for San Francisco from a great calamity by fire, for who does not know that San Francisco is as combustible as any city in the world? I hope, therefore, that this section will be materially amended before being finally adopted.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: As soon as it is in order, I shall move an amendment to insert after the word "inspection" the words "by every person having an interest in the same."

MR. SCHELL. Strike out the word "public" and I will accept the amendment.

Digitized by Google

MR. HOWARD. Very well, strike it out. I do not think the word "public" adds any force to it. The gentleman accepts this amendment, to add the words, "by every person having an interest in the same."

SPEECH OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I do not rise for the purpose of modifying the section to make it read smoothly, or for the purpose of making it fit home or foreign corporations any better than it does now. For, sir, if I could have my way, I would at one fell swoop wipe them all from the face of the earth. And if that is radical, then I must say I am a radical upon the subject. In discussing corporations, if you attempt to restrict them in any way whatever, or exercise any control over them, then we are told that they cannot live, and that they will be forced to quit the business. You must not put them on a level with other classes of citizens, or they cannot live; they will have to leave the country if you do. They must be privileged over and above all other classes of citizens. If you undertake to restrict home corporations, then the cry is raised that you are discriminating against domestic corporations and giving foreign corporations an advantage over them. If you say anything about governing foreign corporations, then you hear the cry raised that the people cannot do without them, and that they will be driven from the country. Now, my proposition is that foreign corporations here are not doing business as eleemosynary institutions. If they are here, they are here because it pays. They are here to make money, and for no other purpose. And if they cannot stand and do business upon the same footing as the others, then let them bundle up their traps and take their freight to the mother country as soon as possible.

MR. SCHELL. I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman is not discussing the question before the committee. I do not understand that to be the question. A motion was made to strike out the word "public." In the first place, the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations offered an amendment; an amendment to the original report of the committee. Then I made a motion to strike out the word "public." That is the question now before the house. I think the committee is bound to vote first on that amendment, and then the question can come up as to whether the phraseology shall be changed so as not to include foreign corporations.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken; the gentleman from Monterey will proceed.

MR. WYATT. I was stating that I was opposed to granting foreign insurance companies, or any other foreign companies, privileges that are not to be granted to home corporations. No corporation ought to be granted privileges beyond what are enjoyed by the citizen, but they are. But at least, as between corporations, foreign corporations ought not to be granted privileges beyond domestic corporations. Now, I do not believe the State of California exists by reason of corporations. I am inclined to believe that a very large number of corporations exist by reason of the State of California, and that they do not give existence to the State. I do not give them the credit of creating wealth. I do not give them the prominence of giving liberty to the people. I am in favor of restricting corporations, foreign and domestic, to the same level, and if the restriction necessary to some corporations drives others out, let them go. The foreign corporations, as I said before, are not here for the purpose of giving us eleemosynary institutions; they are here for the purpose of employing their capital profitably to themselves. If the domestic corporations can do business with profit under these restrictions, the foreign corporations can do the same, or go where the climate is less torrid. It is sometimes an advantage to rely upon ourselves, upon our own resources. I believe the chastening hand of poverty has been advantageous to some people and some communities. The State of Mississippi came out from under carpet-bag rule without a scratch of public debt, for twenty-five or fifty millions of dollars might have been forced upon the market, and would have been if she had had any credit. But having repudiated her public indebtedness, her bonds could not be negotiated upon the market of the world, and the only detriment they could be was to tax all they could get for the time, and when carpet-bag rule was raised it left the State without any indebtedness, but without a dollar in the treasury. Having no credit saved the State millions of dollars. And I am of the opinion that the State of California might be benefited likewise by dealing at home, and not depending so much on foreign capital. I can dispose of foreign corporations, so far as I am concerned. If they cannot come here and do business upon the same terms as our domestic corporations, then they had better not stay.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I confess judgment, that upon this subject under discussion there is a great amount of ignorance. There is another satisfaction I have, that in exposing my ignorance, not more than forty or fifty gentlemen can hear it. What I shall have to say will be more to obtain information than to enlighten anybody else. First, I would like to know whether the State of California has any power to enforce this section. Now, if after passing it, it will amount to nothing, what is the use of passing it? Have we any power to enforce it upon them. Suppose the article on corporations does not apply to them. Suppose they do not or will not keep books, transfer books, then what?

MR. TERRY. Put them in jail.

MR. ROLFE. What good will that do? It will keep the man from transacting business for awhile, and then he will go where he does not have these restrictions. But suppose he does keep an office here, and suppose he keeps a transfer book, and suppose he does not keep it correctly, how are you going to know? Suppose the company is insolvent, how are you going to know? Suppose they put men on the books who do not own a share of stock, how are you going to tell? These names may be put on there for the sole purpose of keeping up the credit of the institution. Suppose the company directs its agent in San Francisco to put the name of one of the Rothschilds on the list, everybody knows that they are good, they are worth their millions; how are you going to know whether it is a true entry or not? You might go to England and make inquiries, but how many of the people who deal with these companies are going to that trouble and expense, and if they did the agent might be out of reach by that time. There is another objection, it seems to me, and that is this: it requires every corporation, other than religious, benevolent, and educational, to keep an office here. Now there are religious and benevolent institutions here in this State, who, I believe, have capital stock. Now will we include them? It has been suggested by one gentleman that those words be stricken out, and in their place, the words "corporations having capital stock," and I hope that amendment will be adopted. The fact of a corporation being religious does not necessarily prevent its being bad, according to my experience.

REMARKS OF MR. HALL.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: I do not see why there should be any discrimination between home and foreign corporations. I think both should come under the same rule, and if we apply this process of regulation, it certainly should apply to all. But the matter now which seems to be of greater importance is the motion made by the gentleman from Stanislaus, to strike out the word "public." I think that motion should be sustained. There is a very dangerous principle embodied there. The right which it gives to the public may be perverted to improper use. We know that whether justly or unjustly, there are a class of corporations, created by private individuals, which are in bad odor at the present time. Some have good grounds, and others may be suspected without any grounds. Such a provision as this absolutely confers upon any person and every person in the community, the right to enter the place of business of the corporation, and inspect the books and the business, to overhaul every book connected with the institution. This is no more than a fair construction of the language. Look at it:

"SEC. 14. Every corporation, other than religious, educational, or benevolent, organized or doing business in this State, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State, for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock; the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the names and places of residence of its officers."

Now, sir, I maintain that under this provision it will be within the power of any man, a constitutional right, moved by whatever motives or feelings he may be, to enter the place of business of any corporation, and demand as a constitutional right, to examine and have explained to him every book connected with the business of the institution. Now, sir, I am not here as the advocate of any corporation. I have never been connected with them, never have been in a situation in my life to take advantage of the benefits flowing from such institutions. I have never been connected with them in any manner, except occasionally in a professional capacity. I am for retaining every power, and every right, which, by the law and by the Constitution is reserved to the people over these institutions; and I go further, and say that they should be surrounded by every possible safeguard necessary for the protection of the public, and for the general welfare of the people; but I am not in favor of doing an injustice to those institutions by any legislation which I shall participate in here. My conduct here shall be influenced by a spirit of justice and fairness. As a legislator here, I shall not participate in the making of any laws that will violate the spirit of justice. And I say that if we shall adopt this provision, and make it a part of the Constitution, great injustice may result to these institutions. It may be perverted to wrong ends and for undue purposes. If we shall say that institutions of this character shall keep open books for public inspection, to which all persons shall have access at all times, without any restraint whatever, depriving the Legislature of any power to grant any relief, we shall enable men, moved by improper motives, to inflict a wrong upon these institutions, under color of constitutional right. I am opposed to the principle. I am opposed to it now, and I shall oppose it during the entire session of the Convention. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Stanislaus will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of retaining the word "public" in this section. I think without it the section is absolutely of no benefit to anybody in the world, and no check whatever upon the corporations. I cannot see any very great wrong that is going to be done to any honest corporation that transacts business fairly and is solvent, in having persons at liberty to ascertain and know who are its stockholders, the amount of stock subscribed, the amount of its assets, and the amount of liabilities. They are required by law to make monthly statements under oath embodying this public information which we now seek to acquire. My friend, who is somewhat exercised about it, says, suppose they do not make these statements, but make false statements. But this section requires that these books shall be kept open for the inspection of the public. It is objected to because so many people will go there out of mere idle curiosity to examine these books. Now, gentlemen, for twenty-six years the books of every Recorder's office in this State have been open to public inspection—to anybody who wanted to look at them, and who ever saw a great crowd of people attracted by idle curiosity, going there and interfering with the business of the office, examining to see whether A had transferred to B, or B to C? No, sir. Nobody will go there to examine the books except those who have some interest in knowing whether they are solvent or not.

MR. HILBORN. Nobody objects to the stockholders examining the books.

MR. TERRY. The general public will not wish to examine these books out of mere idle curiosity, unless it be some public spirited newspaper man who may want to find out whether these men are deserving of public trust; whether the institution is sound and solvent. If the institution holds itself out as solvent, it ought to be glad of the chance of giving this information. There will be no one who will examine these books except those who have some kind of an interest, either the stockholders or those who may desire to have dealings with the corporations. Now without this word "public" the whole section might as well be stricken out. The law already provides that the stockholders may go and examine these books, and we want them open to those who have no direct proprietary interest. There are hundreds of men who are not stockholders who are more interested in the solvency of the corporations than many who are stockholders. Every man who desires to trade with them, and have dealings with them, insuring with them, selling to them, has a right to know whether they are solvent or not.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. This previous question, which is so unusual in legislative assemblies, sometimes cuts us off from offering amendments. The last section was passed in this way, and I had no opportunity to offer an amendment. I have an amendment, and ask if it is in order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be permitted, I think, to offer it.

MR. HAGER. I shall offer the following amendment:

"No foreign corporation shall do any business in this State without having at least one place of business and an authorized agent in the same, upon whom process may be served."

MR. ESTEE. That is the statute now.

MR. HAGER. That is the statute, but statutes are sometimes repealed. Statutes are sometimes declared unconstitutional, while Constitutions are permanent, and cannot be declared unconstitutional. I wish to put this in the Constitution. I find that some of the Constitutions have this proposition in, and I think it is proper to have a condition in that no corporation shall do business here without having at least one place of business, and an authorized agent upon whom process may be served. Now, different influences are brought to bear upon the Legislature to get these things repealed for the convenience of parties. Corporations are sometimes very powerful, as we all know. The Legislature sometimes falls down under the pressure of corporations, and though it may not be so in this case, still I can see no harm in putting it permanently in the Constitution. I hope it will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I have listened patiently to the discussion of this question. I fear that there is some disposition on the part of the Convention to go beyond what our better judgment would dictate to be right. I am aware that the people of this State are greatly irritated on the subject of corporations. They have been so managed in this State that there is a general feeling against them, and I believe that feeling is well founded from their course of conduct. They have not been content with pursuing their business vocations. But, having that feeling of hostility, we may be carried too far in this matter. It may blind us in considering the questions which come before us. We should bear in mind all the time, that if we are not statesmen we ought to be. We have been selected by the people of the State to frame a Constitution under which they expect to live and govern themselves. In doing that we should be careful not to be influenced by our feelings to do any injustice to any part of the community. Now, I am unable to support this section as it now stands. It goes too far. I believe in framing a Constitution that will hold our own domestic corporations to a strict accountability, to bind them as solid as a rock. By so building the government, our domestic corporations will be as solvent and trustworthy as foreign corporations. It is very natural that the people of this State should rally around our own people, and use home capital, because it is a family relation, and I know that it ought to be so, and no foreign corporation will be able to do a successful business in this State unless it places itself upon a higher plane than our domestic institutions—better managed than our home institutions. Now, if these foreign institutions are better managed, and more responsible, why should we put anything into the Constitution of this State that would prevent our people from deriving advantages from them? Hence, I believe that this section goes too far. It is attempting to compel all foreign corporations in this State to have an office where shall be transacted certain business. Books shall be kept open to public inspection, etc. I will read it:

"SEC. 14. Every corporation, other than religious, educational or benevolent, organized or doing business in this State, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom, the names of the owners of its stock and the amounts owned by them respectively, the amount of stock paid in, and by whom, the transfers of said stock, the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the names and places of residence of its officers."

Now, as has already been well said, suppose we have this system established, what real benefit will it be to the people of this State? There are corporations from England, and France, and Germany, and from different States of this Union. Suppose we compel them to keep a transfer book, would we know the stockholders? Why, nonsense. It would take weeks and months, to obtain any information as to who they were. It would, in the next place, be practicably impossible for them to comply with this provision. Hence, if this section is made to apply to our own domestic corporations, and then changed so that people shall not be allowed to inspect the books out of mere idle curiosity, it will do. It is true that these curious people might learn something, but these corporations cannot afford to devote their time to the gratifying of mere idle curiosity. If it is made to read in this way, I would support the proposition: "Every corporation having capital stock, organized and doing business in this State," etc. If it is altered to read in that way, with the other corrections I have mentioned, it would not be objectionable. If it is left as it is, these foreign corporations cannot comply with it, and if they could it would not benefit anybody. It will be of no benefit to the people to drive them out. Adopt the other course, and you make the domestic corporations safe and trustworthy, so that the foreign corporations cannot do business in this State unless they are sound, for the people will not patronize them.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I understood that the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Schell, accepted my amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. HOWARD. My proposition is, that the books should be open to inspection by all persons interested therein, and legislative committees I would not vote to strike out the word "public," without inserting a provision that will give interested parties the right to inspect them. Therefore, unless this provision is inserted, I shall vote against the motion to strike out the word "public." This gives recognition to the fact that these corporations are not to be subjected to inspection from mere idle curiosity.

MR. TERRY. Would they be inspected from mere idle curiosity?

MR. HOWARD. They might take interest enough to do so.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, to add to the end of the section: "No foreign corporation shall do any business in this State without having at least one place of business, and an authorized agent in the same, upon whom process may be served."

Division was called for, and the amendment was adopted by a vote of 50 ayes to 29 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Stanislaus, Judge Schell. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'public,' between the words 'for' and 'inspection,' in line seven, and add after the word 'inspection,' the words, 'by every person having an interest therein, and legislative committees.'"

MR. REYNOLDS. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost on a division vote—ayes, 31; noes, 57.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the amendment was adopted—ayes, 51; noes, 40.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, as amended.

MR. WILSON, of First District. I move that the word "or," before "doing business," be changed to the word "and."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on this amendment.

Lost, by a standing vote of 37 ayes to 51 noes.

MR. TERRY. I move to amend by striking out the words, "educational, religious, and benevolent," and inserting the words, "having capital stock."

MR. SCHELL. Corporations may sometimes do business without capital stock.

MR. LARKIN. Will not that let out all savings banks?

MR. TERRY. Every depositor is a stockholder, so they have capital stock.

MR. HILBORN. The gentleman well knows that savings banks don't have any capital stock.

MR. TERRY. If they have no capital stock, how can they keep books, and record the names of stockholders?

MR. ESTEE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

AMENDING RULE FIFTY-SIX.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. President: I wish to send up a notice.

THE SECRETARY read:

"I hereby give notice that I will, on Monday next, move to amend Rule Fifty-six so as to read as follows:

"RULE FIFTY-SIX.

"The rules of the Convention shall be observed in Committee of the Whole, so far as they may be applicable, except that the ayes and noes shall not be taken, and that the previous question shall not be moved."

MISCELLANEOUS MOTIONS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I move that proposed amendment number five hundred and five, concerning gas and water companies, be printed.

So ordered.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: I ask that the reports of the Committee on Military Affairs be taken from the table and placed on the general file.

So ordered.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: I move that sections twelve and thirteen of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, with the amendments, be rereferred to that committee.

So ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. JOYCE. I move the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence for one day was granted Messrs. Keyes, Cross, Hitchcock, and Dunlap.

Two days' leave of absence was granted Messrs. Noel and Mills.

Leave of absence for three days was granted Mr. Weller.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. HILBORN. I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and the same approved.

MR. BLACKMER. I think there is an error in the Journal in regard to the reference of a petition touching local option. It is reported in the Journal as referred to the Committee on Education.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman moved its reference to the Committee on Education, and it was so referred.

Mr. Hilborn's motion prevailed.

EVENING SESSION.

MR. LARKIN. I offer the following resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That this Convention meet for evening sessions on and after November nineteenth, at seven o'clock P. M.

THE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over one day under the rules.

PRINTING THE JOURNALS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: On Friday, the gentleman from Solano introduced a resolution ordering five hundred copies of the Journal printed and bound, and two hundred and forty copies laid on the desks of members. I now move to take that resolution from the table for the purpose of offering an amendment to it.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution for information.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That five hundred copies of the Journal be printed and bound in book form, together with an appendix, both to be properly indexed. Also, that two hundred and forty copies of the daily Journal be printed and placed on the desks of the members.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: Before the vote is taken upon that resolution, I desire to say that the object of this resolution is to give effect to the report of the Committee on Reporting and Printing that was accepted on the thirtieth of October, and it seemed to me, on motion of the Chairman of the committee, the Journal was ordered printed as recommended by the committee. Now, I understand that there is some doubt about the effect of receiving that report, and the verbal motion that was made and adopted at that time. The object of this resolution is to give effect to that motion, so that there will be no doubt about it, or any question that the Convention ordered the Journal printed and bound. As a matter of fact, the State Printer has gone forward and printed the daily Journal, and laid it on our desks every day since, but when it comes to drawing a warrant for his pay there seems to be a doubt as to the full effect, the legal effect, of the verbal motion that was adopted. Hence this resolution. The amendment which I shall make to the resolution adds these words: "The object of this resolution is to give effect to the report of the Committee on Reporting and Printing, and the motion by which the same was received on October thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight." In that way we shall not be ordering the work twice. The resolution is designed to explain that motion. With this explanation, I have no doubt that the Convention will readily adopt it.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on taking the resolution from the table.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 50 ayes to 36 noes.

MR. REYNOLDS. I now offer the following substitute for the resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That five hundred copies of the Journal be printed and bound in book form, together with an appendix, both to be properly indexed. Also, that two hundred and forty copies of the daily Journal be printed and placed on the desks of the members.

The object of this resolution is to give effect to the report of the Committee on Reporting and Printing, and the motion by which the same was received on October thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: One word in relation to that resolution—in explanation. I understand that there are some gentlemen who misapprehend the proposition. The motion by which the report of the committee was adopted, and this resolution, are intended to order printed and bound five hundred copies of the Journal, together with two hundred and forty copies of the slips laid on the desks of members. Now, some gentlemen, I understand, are under the impression that if we order five hundred copies bound, we shall incur a large additional expense. That, Mr. President, is not so. The type from which these slips are printed is the same type from which the five hundred copies to be bound will be printed, and the only additional expense for printing and binding the five hundred copies is a little presswork and paper and the trifling cost of binding. Gentlemen are misled, because in the report of the committee the two hundred and forty copies of the daily slips are estimated at two hundred dollars. The reason of that is that the cost of setting the type and reading the proof and distributing is all counted in in the first estimate on the five hundred copies to be bound; so that if we do not order the five hundred copies bound, and only take the two hundred and forty copies of the slips, these slips will cost four or five times two hundred dollars. It costs nearly as much to print these slips as it does to print and bind the five hundred copies. This is the true state of the case; so that in ordering the five hundred copies, we are incurring no material additional expense.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I am inclined to think that the gentleman believes that it does not cost anything to bind books and index them. I apprehend that this body, the other day, when they voted to adopt the report of the committee, did so under the apprehension that they were voting to have these slips at the cost—which appeared from the report—two hundred dollars. I believe that the estimates presented will be far below the cost. It seems to me that the proper way to do is to have as little printing as possible, and only that we are obliged to do. Having these slips printed saves time, and I do not think there can be any serious objection to that; but when you order it bound, and when you order an index made, and all these things, you are certainly adding a thousand or two dollars expense. Talk as you will, every move that you make incurs additional expenditure. Right at the outset this resolution will involve the employment of an additional clerk, and the cost will roll up larger than you expect. I think we had ought to be satisfied with furnishing the members of the Convention with these slips now. I think the next Legislature can order the Journal printed in proper form.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I am not certain that I understand this matter correctly; but I understood that the Committee on Judiciary reported that there was one hundred thousand dollars appropriated from the State fund for the printing, and that the Journal, and all the printing of this Convention, was to come out of that appropriation. I did not understand that it was to come out of the appropriation of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the expenses of the Convention. If this printing is to come out of that fund I am opposed to it.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I hear another objection to this resolution, and that is, on account of the estimated cost of the appendix. That appendix will cost almost nothing at all. It consists of the reports that have laid upon our tables from time to time. The type is already standing on which to print these reports. If the requisite number has not already been printed, it can and will be printed without setting any more type at all. The appendix will only amount to the cost of the paper for five hundred copies. The binding will not cost any more. It is a frivolous talk that the appendix is going to cost any such sum. We have, from time to time, ordered the appendix printed as we are going along. The reports of committees and State officers, etc., are the reports that are intended to be put in as an appendix.

MR. WHITE. Mr. President: I made it my business to inquire something into this since the last meeting of the Convention. It was said to me, and so figured out, that these slips are going to cost us, if we do not have anything bound, one thousand seven hundred dollars. I never heard of that before. I only supposed they would cost two hundred and fifty dollars. That is the way they figure the expense that has already been gone to. The binding will cost about forty cents a volume. But really the work is already done. Suppose we refuse to have this done, still we will have about one thousand seven hundred dollars expended in these slips which are laid on our desks. Now, if that is the case, and if it will only cost three hundred and fifty dollars more, which they tell me, I think it would be well to have the binding done. They figured it out to me very clearly that these slips are going to cost one thousand seven hundred dollars. The other day it was reported that the slips would only cost two hundred dollars. I would like to vote against the binding if that is so.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I will answer the gentleman. That estimate of the cost is based upon the fact that the Journal has already been set up; the type has already been set to print the Journal for binding. In that way the slips cost only two hundred and fifty dollars. But, if you have the type set for the slips alone, and do not order the five hundred copies for binding, then your slips are going to cost you in proportion more, because you have got to pay for the setting of the type just for the printing of the slips.

MR. JONES. Mr. President: I beg leave to ask the gentleman from San Francisco, whether he knows that at this day the forms of the Journal and slips which have been laid before us are still preserved. The Committee on Contingent Expenses were informed that the foreman could not preserve them more than twenty-four or forty-eight hours longer; that he should be obliged to distribute them. The gentleman from San Francisco may have information up to the present time; but from what I have stated, the committee supposed that after one or two days the forms would be distributed.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: On yesterday, the State Printer informed me that the forms were still standing, and that he had commenced printing the Journal from the first day of the session; it is standing in type waiting for this order to strike them off.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. There seems to be some misapprehension about the cost. Now the main cost will be for setting the type—for paying for the labor of setting the type. That we have undertaken already. If we want but the two hundred and forty slips it will cost the same for type-setting. The great cost will come in paying for the labor of setting the type. The extra cost of having these copies printed to bind will not be much. We have undertaken the rest already.

MR. BROWN. Mr. President: I think that it is evident to the members of this Convention that in every case yet where printing has had to be done, it has exceeded that which was first represented before this body; not that men did it with any intention to deceive, but such has evidently been the experience of this Convention, that the first estimates have been far surpassed in the results. I am under the impression that we should in this case, as in almost all others, learn by experience and judge of the future by the past. In this case I am under the impression that it is proper for this body to consider this principle and act wisely upon the subject. I shall consequently vote against it.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I move that the resolution and the amendment be indefinitely postponed.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 56 ayes to 42 noes.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I move that the petition presented by Mr. Smith, of Santa Clara, yesterday, and referred to the Committee on Education, be ordered referred to the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization.

Carried.

USE OF THE CHAMBER.

MR. INMAN. Mr. President: I have a resolution to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Honorable Z. Montgomery have the use of this chamber on Wednesday evening, November twentieth, for the purpose of delivering a lecture on the school question.

MR. GRACE. I would like to have that read again.

THE SECRETARY read the resolution again.

The question was put, and the resolution was adopted by a vote of 49 ayes to 42 noes.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: Rule Sixty-eight provides that the hall of the Convention shall not be used for any public or private business, other than that of the Convention, except by unanimous consent.

THE PRESIDENT. That is the rule.

MR. STEDMAN. Then I object.

THE PRESIDENT. Under that rule it seems to me that the Convention cannot allow the use of the hall, objection being made.

MR. ROLFE. I would like to inquire whether the Convention can monopolize the use of this hall exclusively; to be sure we have the use of it for our deliberations, but it has been used for other purposes without any leave. It has been used here for caucuses, woman suffrage meetings, and one thing and another. [Laughter.]

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole——

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. President: I desire, now, to make the motion, which I gave notice of on Saturday, to change Rule Fifty-six so that it will be as it was originally.

MR. TERRY. I call for the regular order of business.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. I understand that this is a privileged motion.

MR. TINNIN. I object.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is out of order at present, until we reach that order of business, which we will do in a few minutes.

PETITION.

MR. BLACKMER presented the following petition, signed by more than a thousand citizens of California, asking for a provision in the Constitution, for female suffrage:

To the Constitutional Convention in Sacramento, California, assembled:

The undersigned, citizens of California, respectfully petition your honorable body to so amend the Constitution that no citizen of the State shall be disfranchised on account of sex.

Referred to the Committee on Right of Suffrage.

REPORTS.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I have a report to make from the Committee on Legislative Department.

THE SECRETARY read:

MR. PRESIDENT: The Committee on Legislative Department, to whom were referred the following propositions: number four hundred and fifty-nine, by Mr. Barnes; number four hundred and sixty-two, by Mr. Dowling; number four hundred and seventy-five, by Mr. O'Sullivan; number four hundred and seventy seven, by Mr. E. O. Smith; number four hundred and eighty, by Mr. Mills; number four hundred and eighty-three, by Mr. Tully; number four hundred and ninety-three, by Mr. Tinnin; number four hundred and ninety-six, by Mr. Barbour; number four hundred and ninety-nine, by Mr. Barton; number ——, by Mr. Farrell; and the memorial relative to equal and proportional representation, presented by Mr. Estee; have duly considered said propositions and memorial, and beg leave to report the same back to the Convention, and recommend that no action be taken thereon.

The committee further report that they have examined proposition number four hundred and sixty-four, by Mr. Casserly, and recommend that it be adopted as a section in article four of the Constitution.

The committee herewith report back to the Convention several petitions on the subject of local option, and recommend that they be referred to the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization.

D. S. TERRY, Chairman.

MR. TERRY. The proposition offered by Mr. Casserly is as follows: "While Legislatures should be convened in special session, no legislation should be had upon any subject not designated in the Governor's proclamation calling such session."

I move that it take the same course and be printed.

Carried.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I send up a report from the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

THE SECRETARY read:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Revenue and Taxation, to whom were referred resolutions numbers twelve, twenty-two, twenty-five, twenty-nine, thirty-five, forty, forty-eight, fifty-four, seventy, seventy-five, seventy-seven, ninety-two, ninety-four, one hundred and ten, one hundred and twenty-six, one hundred and thirty-eight, one hundred and fifty, one hundred and fifty-five, one hundred and fifty-eight, one hundred and sixty-eight, one hundred and eighty-one, one hundred and eighty-seven, one hundred and ninety seven, two hundred and seven, two hundred and eighteen, two hundred and nineteen, two hundred and twenty-six, two hundred and twenty-seven, two hundred and forty-one, two hundred and forty-eight, two hundred and sixty, two hundred and seventy-one, two hundred and seventy-six, two hundred and eighty-seven, two hundred and eighty-nine, two hundred and ninety-three, two hundred and ninety-six, three hundred and twelve, three hundred and nineteen, three hundred and twenty-five, three hundred and thirty, three hundred and thirty-eight, three hundred and forty-six, three hundred and sixty, three hundred and sixty-one, three hundred and seventy-one, three hundred and seventy-nine, three hundred and ninety-two, three hundred and ninety-five, three hundred and ninety-eight, four hundred, and thirty-eight, together with two memorials, have had the same under consideration, and herewith report the same back, and recommend that no further action be taken thereon, for the reason that such propositions and suggestions therein contained, as your committee deem it expedient to adopt, have been incorporated in the plan agreed upon, and herewith reported and recommended to the Convention, by a majority of your committee, for adoption.

Messrs. Casserly, Cross, Prouty, Turner, and Edgerton, dissent from section two (2) of the plan.

Messrs. Biggs and Tully, from section four (4).

Messrs. Dudley, Overton, Prouty, Tully, and Turner, from section five (5).

Mr. Overton, from section six (6).

Messrs. Cross and Turner, from section seven (7).

Messrs. Dudley, Overton, Tully, Turner, and Edgerton, from section nine (9).

Messrs. Dudley, Overton, Prouty, Tully, and Turner, from section eleven (11).

Messrs. Cross, Overton, and Edgerton, from section fourteen (14).

Messrs. Cross and Turner, from section sixteen (16); and Messrs. Cross, Overton, Shafter, Wilson, and Edgerton, from section seventeen (17).

Your committee recommend that such plan, upon the subject referred to them, as the Convention shall adopt, be inserted in the new Constitution in the form of a separate article, and designated, "Article —. Revenue and Taxation."

HENRY EDGERTON, Chairman.

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. All taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws.

SEC. 2. All property, including franchises, capital stock of corporations or joint stock associations, and solvent debts, deducting therefrom debts due to bona fide residents of the State, and excluding growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States, or to this State, or any municipality thereof, and all property and the proceeds thereof which is used exclusively.

SEC. 5. A mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby. Except as to railroad and other quasi public corporations, in case of debts so secured, the value of the property affected by such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or obligation, less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property, and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof, in the county in which the property affected thereby is situate. The taxes so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security, respectively, and may be paid by either party to such security; if paid by the owner of the security, the tax so levied upon the property affected thereby shall become a part of the debt so secured; if the owner of the property shall pay the tax so levied on such security, it shall constitute a payment thereon, and to the extent of such payment, a full discharge thereof.

SEC. 6. Every contract hereafter made, by which a debtor is obligated to pay any tax or assessment on money loaned, or on any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien, shall, as to any interest specified therein, and as to such tax or assessment, be null and void.

SEC. 7. No corporation, except for benevolent, religious, scientific, or educational purposes, shall be hereafter formed under the laws of this State, unless the persons named as corporators shall, at or before filing the articles of incorporation, pay into the State treasury one hundred dollars for the first fifty thousand dollars or less of capital stock, and a further sum of twenty dollars for every additional ten thousand dollars of such stock; and no such corporation shall hereafter increase its capital stock without first paying into the State treasury twenty dollars for every ten thousand dollars of increase.

SEC. 8. No license tax shall be imposed by this State, or any municipality thereof, upon any trade, calling, occupation, or business, except the manufacture and sale of wine, spirituous, and malt liquors, shows, theaters, menageries, sleight of hand performances, exhibitions for profit, and such other business and occupations of like character as the Legislature may judge the public peace or good order may require to be under special State or municipal control. But the Legislature may by law impose any license, or other tax, on persons or corporations owning or using franchises or corporate privileges.

SEC. 9. The Legislature shall provide for the levy and collection of an annual poll tax of not less than two dollars, for school purposes, on every male inhabitant of this State over twenty-one and under sixty years of age, except paupers, idiots, insane persons, and Indians not taxed. Said tax shall be paid into the State School Fund.

SEC. 10. The power of taxation shall never be surrendered or suspended by any grant or contract to which the State shall be a party.

SEC. 11. The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of all taxes on real property by installments.

SEC. 12. The Legislature shall by law require each taxpayer in this State to make and deliver to the County Assessor, annually, a statement, under oath, setting forth specifically all the real and personal property owned by such taxpayer, or in his possession, or under his control, at twelve o'clock meridian, on the first Monday of March.

SEC. 13. Assessors and Collectors of State, county, city and county, town, or district taxes, shall be elected by the qualified electors of the county, city and county, town, or district in which the property taxed for State, county, city and county, town, or district purposes, is situated; provided, that vacancies may be filled by appointment, according to general laws.

SEC. 14. The State tax on property, exclusive of such tax as may be necessary to pay the existing State debt, shall not exceed forty cents on each one hundred dollars for any one year.

SEC. 15. A State Board of Equalization, consisting of two members from each Congressional District in this State, shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective districts, at the general election to be held in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and every four years thereafter, whose duty it shall be to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the State for purposes of State taxation. The Boards of Supervisors of the several counties in the State shall constitute Boards of Equalization for their respective counties, whose duty it shall be to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the county for the purpose of county taxation.

SEC. 16. The State Board of Equalization shall assess the value of all the property of all railroad corporations in this State. For the purpose of taxation, the value of all lands, workshops, depots, and other buildings belonging to or under the control of each railroad corporation, shall be apportioned by said Board to the counties, cities and counties, cities, townships, and districts in which such lands, workshops, depots, and other buildings are situate; and the aggregate value of all other property of such railroad corporation shall be apportioned by said Board to each county, city and county, city, town, or district in which its road shall be located, according to the ratio which the number of miles of such road completed in such county, city and county, city, town, or district shall bear to the whole length of such railroad.

SEC. 17. The value of the capital stock of a corporation shall be assessed in the county in which its principal place of business is located, and separately from all other property belonging thereto; and such stock shall be assessed at its market value when the assessment is made. The real and other personal property of such corporation shall be assessed in the several counties respectively in which the same is situate. The value of such stock, over and above the aggregate value of such real and other personal property, according to such assessment, shall be taxed in the county in which the principal place of business of such corporation is located; and the value of such real and other personal property shall be taxed in the several counties respectively in which the same is situate. The shares of stock belonging to the stockholders in such corporation shall be exempt from taxation; provided, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to railroad corporations.

SEC. 18. The Legislature shall pass all laws necessary to carry out the provisions of this article.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that nine hundred and sixty copies of the draft be printed.

MR. ROLFE. I move to amend by adding that five copies be placed upon each member's desk.

MR. EDGERTON. I accept the amendment.

The motion prevailed.

RESOLUTION OF INQUIRY.

MR. RINGGOLD. I have a resolution to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the San Francisco Gaslight Company, of the City and County of San Francisco, be and is hereby directed to furnish to this Convention a statement setting forth the number of meters which said company has furnished to consumers of gas since the organization of the company, the amount of money deposited with the company for meters furnished, the amount of money refunded for meters taken back by the company, and the amount of money the company still retains as deposits for meters

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be and he is hereby directed to forward immediately a copy of the above resolution to the President and Secretary of the San Francisco Gaslight Company.

MR. RINGGOLD. I have been requested to introduce that, and I now move its adoption.

Adopted, on a division, by an affirmative vote of 80.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I now move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

PREVIOUS QUESTION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. President: I desire now to make my motion to amend Rule Fifty-six, of which I gave notice on Saturday.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: The previous question has been moved and carried several times in this body, and I think it is very satisfactory to the members. In fact I think it the only protection that we have had the last few days. I move that it be laid on the table.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. Reynolds, Heiskell, Tully, Joyce, and Dudley, of Solano.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I want to see this Convention put upon the record on this subject.

MR. HUESTIS. I rise to a point of order.

MR. HEISKELL. Yes; ten or a dozen of you rise to a point of order.

MR. HUESTIS. The gentleman has no right to consume the time of the Convention in discussing a motion to lay on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

The roll was called, and the motion to lay the amendment on the table was lost, by the following vote:

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend Rule Fifty-six to read as follows:

"RULE FIFTY-SIX.

"The rules of the Convention shall be observed in Committee of the Whole, so far as they may be applicable, except that the ayes and noes shall not be taken, and that the previous question shall not be moved."

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. President: I am not classed as one of the talking members of this Convention, and I make this motion to-day, because I think that I saw a great deal of inconvenience arising last Saturday from moving the previous question. The situation seems to be this: a section is brought up for consideration, and one member moves an amendment, then another member moves an amendment to the amendment. No more amendments can be offered until these are disposed of. They are discussed until the patience of the Convention is exhausted. The previous question is moved, and no more amendments can be offered to the section at all. We have no chance to vote upon any amendments except the first two. I am willing to limit the time of debate, but certainly I think we should have a chance to consider and vote upon more than two amendments. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. Burt, Tinnin, Kelley, Wellin, and Huestis.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: I am opposed to the way the rule stands now, and I am opposed to the way it is proposed to be amended; therefore I shall vote against the amendment. It is as the gentleman says: a proposition comes before the Committee of the Whole and some gentleman moves an amendment; another gentleman moves an amendment to that. Then we get tired of discussing it, and the previous question is moved and carried, and then we only have the right, as I understand it, to vote on these three propositions, without giving any opportunity of making other amendments; whereas, it is possible that neither the proposition nor either of the amendments suit the Convention. I think the evil could be avoided in a different way—by allowing the previous question to be put and carried, but with such a modification that after we vote down all the amendments pending, then other amendments may be offered. But I shall simply vote against the amendment changing the rule.

The roll was called, with the following result:

THE PRESIDENT. It takes a two-third vote to change a rule. The amendment is lost.

NOTICE.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I give notice that I will, on to-morrow, move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution in relation to printing the Journal was this day indefinitely postponed.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. President: When this rule was first changed, it was changed by a vote of the minority only. There were no ayes and noes called at that time. According to that the rule still stands.

CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried. [Three o'clock and fifteen minutes P. M.]

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The pending questions were the amendments to section fourteen. The gentleman from San Joaquin moved to strike out the words "other than religious, educational, or benevolent," in line one, and insert the words "having capital stock."

MR. ESTEE. Will the Secretary please read the section as now amended?

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 14. Every corporation, other than religious, educational, or benevolent, organized or doing business in this State, shall have and maintain an office in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept for inspection, by every person having an interest therein, and legislative committees, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock, the amount of its assets and liabilities; and the names and place of residence of its officers. No foreign corporation shall do any business in this State without having at least one place of business and an authorized agent in the same, upon whom process may be served.

MR. TERRY. My amendment is withdrawn.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the Committee on Corporations as amended.

THE SECRETARY again read the amendment as amended.

MR. TERRY. It says, "and doing business."

THE SECRETARY. It says, "or doing business."

MR. BARBOUR. If it reads that way there is a repetition, because if the word "or" is used it refers to the foreign corporations, and they are, according to the amendment of Judge Hager, required to keep an office where the business is transacted.

The amendment as amended was adopted.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I now offer an additional section, to follow this section, pursuant to a report made by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section fifteen, as reported by the committee originally.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 15. All railroads, canal, and transportation companies shall be common carriers and subject to legislative control. Any association or corporation, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination.

MR. ESTEE. The section I offer was offered by direction of the Committee on Corporations, to precede this section fifteen, and be numbered section fifteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 15. No corporation organized outside the limits of this State shall be allowed to transact business within this State on more favorable conditions than are prescribed by law to similar corporations organized under the laws of this State. The Legislature shall enforce this section by appropriate legislation.

THE CHAIRMAN. That is offered as an independent section, but operates as an amendment.

MR. FAWCETT. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the section proposed.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section fifteen by adding: 'A corporation or association may be sued at the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or breach occurs; or at the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the Court to change the place of trial as in other cases.'"

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: That does not seem to be pertinent to section fifteen that was just handed up.

MR. FAWCETT. I think it does.

MR. ESTEE. Section fifteen was on foreign corporations.

MR. FAWCETT. It may not be pertinent, but before we pass all these sections on corporations I wish to offer that, either as an amendment or as an independent section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer it as an independent section.

MR. FAWCETT. I submit that it would be more proper added to section four, but inasmuch as we have passed that, I suppose it is too late. I will therefore offer it as an independent section, after the section offered by the gentleman from San Francisco is disposed of. I withdraw it as an amendment.

The section offered by Mr. Estee was adopted.

SUITS AGAINST CORPORATIONS.

MR. FAWCETT. I now offer that amendment, to be known as section sixteen of the chapter on corporations.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 16. A corporation or association may be sued at the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or breach occurs; or at the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the Court to change the place of trial as in other cases.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: With unanimous consent, why might not that be attached to section four?

MR. FAWCETT. Mr. Chairman: I suppose the object of this amendment will be readily apparent to all. Under our system, corporations have a legal residence at their principal place of business. The result is that corporations in this State are legally resident, nearly all of them, at the City and County of San Francisco, and that under our rules of practice, those who have litigation with such corporations must go to the City and County of San Francisco to sue. For instance, if the gentleman from Los Angeles has a cause of action against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, he must go to the City and County of San Francisco with his cause of action; bring his suit, carry his witnesses, and maintain his litigation there. That operates unjustly and unfairly. I think that the rule ought to be, that a person having a cause of action against a corporation should be entitled to meet at the place where the cause of action has arisen, where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs. We have transportation companies plying on the South Pacific Coast—steamship companies. It often happens that shippers there lay a cause of action against a steamship company, and they have to go to San Francisco at great expense, delay, and inconvenience. The effect of this amendment will be to authorize them to sue at the place where the cause of action arises, or at the principal place of business of the corporation. I think it is eminently just. Perhaps it may be said that it more properly belongs to the Code of Civil Procedure, but it is quite as important to the rights of the people as many of the provisions contained in this report.

Digitized by Google

The section was adopted.

RAILROADS.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section fifteen of the report, now numbered section seventeen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 17. All railroads, canal, and transportation companies shall be common carriers and subject to legislative control. Any association or corporation, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination.

MR. O'DONNELL. I would like to add to that section the following words: "The Legislature shall, by appropriate legislation, establish a tariff of prices to be charged for the transportation of passengers and freights on railways in this State, by which all such railways shall be governed."

MR. ESTEE. It does that now.

MR. O'DONNELL. I offer it as an amendment. I will send it up.

THE SECRETARY read the proposed amendment as above.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I was wishing before it came to a vote upon amendments to know more precisely with regard to the meaning of the language in the fifteenth section now before us. I acknowledge that I am not able to fully comprehend it with the present lights that I have before me. It says: "All railroads, canal, and transportation companies shall be common carriers, and subject to legislative control. Any association or corporation, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States." Now, I do not fully comprehend that portion about "organized for the purpose." It seems different when there is a purpose spoken of; but what that purpose is, I am not able to understand. Is it transportation companies that is spoken of? If it is for the purpose of being a transportation company, I am not sure of it by the language. If it means organized for the purpose of being common carriers, any company organized for that purpose, it does not seem to be clear. There is also legislative control spoken of, and it is not clear whether it is for them or not. What follows afterwards seemed at first to explain it: "shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States." Now, instead of the latter part being the purpose, there are several purposes spoken of, and I thought before voting upon it I would wish to hear what the purpose is, whether organized for the purpose of common carriers, or organized for the purpose of an association, as immediately precedes it.

MR. BARBOUR. I move to amend section seventeen by inserting after the word "control," in the second line, the words, "railways and navigable canals heretofore constructed, or which may hereafter be constructed in this State, are hereby declared to be highways, and shall be free to all persons for the transportation of persons and property thereon, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law."

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. O'Donnell.

MR. CAMPBELL. I sent up an amendment there.

THE CHAIRMAN. That amendment will be the second question.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment offered by Mr. O'Donnell.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I desire to call the attention of the committee to the amendment. It seems to be the entering wedge to defeat the Commission that the committee have decided upon. I merely desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the Convention will not entertain that amendment. If the gentleman is opposed to the plan of the Committee on Corporations, his time will be when we reach the twentieth section. It will cause a great deal of confusion in the whole argument. I trust that the Convention will observe the object of it and vote against it.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: Section seventeen, or section fifteen as it is printed, was drawn up by your committee to meet two or three propositions. First, that all railroads, canal, and transportation companies shall be common carriers, and subject to legislative control. Of course we are aware that they were common carriers, and that common carriers were subject to legislative control, and that expression was taken from the decision relative to the power of railroads and their duties to the people.

The second proposition is, that "Any association or corporation, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States." That was merely for the purpose, should the time ever come when there would be an opportunity for a competing line, to give that line an opportunity of running to the State line of this State to connect with any other railroad that might come from any other State or Territory for the purpose of transporting freight and passengers to this State.

The next was: "Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination." The object of that was to prohibit any railroad company from favoring one competing line over another, and transporting their passengers and freight or their cars to the exclusion of others, and thereby freezing out, if I may use the term, any connecting line. This section was taken almost verbatim from the Constitutions of Pennsylvania and Missouri. In the Pennsylvania Constitution it is section one of article seventeen. It reads:

"All railroads and canals shall be public highways, and all railroads and canal companies shall be common carriers. Any association or corporation organized for the purpose shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad; and shall receive and transport each the other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination."

Now these were the evils that were attempted to be remedied by your committee in reporting section fifteen, and I will state to the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. O'Donnell, that the amendment which he proposes is quite unnecessary, unless he wants to destroy the harmony of this article. If he does, why of course he had better adopt it. The proposition is covered by sections nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, and twenty-two. Section nineteen provides against discrimination, and section twenty provides for Railroad Commissioners, fixing their powers and duties. I hope that all amendments for changing this section, so far as the regulation of freights and fares are concerned, will be voted down.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I think that this code ought to be amplified a little. We say every railroad company shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty. Now in order to make that effective we ought to provide that each railroad company should have a certain width gauge. They might come with narrow gauge cars and our roads would not take them. It does seem to me that if they are going to take the cars from the other States that it should be so arranged that the cars of other States and our own should be the same gauge.

REMARKS OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: This section embodies a great popular demand. It is a measure which involves simply this proposition: Shall the people control the corporations, or shall the corporations control the people? That is the question now before this Convention. The section I think is a little cloudy, and delegates do not exactly understand the reading of that section. It says here in section fifteen, or section seventeen as it is amended: "All railroads, canal, and transportation companies shall be common carriers and subject to legislative control. Any association or corporation, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination."

Now my amendment is: "The Legislature shall, by appropriate legislation, establish a tariff of prices to be charged for the transportation of passengers and freights on railways in this State, by which all such railways shall be governed." There is an addition. That is the reason that I offer the addition there. As it is now, they have a right to charge their own prices for passengers and freight. The corporations have been controlling the people for the last fifteen or sixteen years. It seems pretty near time that the people were controlling these corporations. I hope that amendment will be added to that section.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I trust that the members of this committee will incontinently vote the amendment down. This State has trusted long and patiently to the Legislature of this State to handle that question. They have not done it; and it behooves this Convention itself to handle it; and I believe that this report, further on, provides an effective way by which we can gain control of that matter.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say to the gentleman from Sacramento that, so far as the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific are concerned, the Act of Congress provides that the gauge shall be uniform, and it also provides that they shall receive freights and passengers from other roads and run the cars over their roads.

MR. LAINE. I desire to call the attention of the Chairman of the committee to the wording of this section. I think you will find that the word "railroads" ought to be "railroad." You make railroads common carriers instead of railroad companies.

MR. ESTEE. That is right. The Secretary will strike out the letter "s" there.

SPEECH OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this amendment will not prevail. I see that the vote upon this question must necessarily be a test vote upon much more than appears upon the face of the proposed amendment. I beg the indulgence of the house while I attempt to point it out. As has been very truly said by the Chairman of the committee, the adoption of this amendment will be striking a blow, if not a death-blow, to the scheme presented in their report, so far as it applies to a Railroad Commission. For the purpose of showing the correctness of this conclusion, I will take the liberty of reading section nineteen. It is not now before the house, but I wish from it to show that the proposed amendment is not necessary:

"SEC. 19. No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State. Persons or property transported over any railroad, or by any transportation company or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates."

The next section provides:

"SEC. 20. Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State, at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation, or other transportation company, as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; hear and determine complaints against railroad or other transportation companies; affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in the foregoing sections."

Mr. Chairman, it will be observed from the construction of the sections I have read, that they deal with the matter in detail. The scheme of the committee is substantially this: that so far as the regulation of tariffs for the conveyance of passengers or freight upon railroads in this State are concerned, they shall be determined by the Railroad Commissioners. Now, sir, I am quite aware of the fact that there is a divided sentiment on this subject; that there are two opinions as to the proper mode of reaching this one result, namely, the exercise by the State of its proper supervision and control over railroads in the matter of conveying passengers and freight. The committee's report proceeds upon the assumption, as I take it, that it is unwise to attempt to regulate fares and freights by the terms of statute law. Am I correct, Mr. Chairman?

MR. ESTEE. Yes.

MR. HALE. Now, we have not been without experience in this matter of trusting to the Legislature to control corporations. I say this without reflecting upon any body. While the State, from the first, has claimed the right to control corporations in various acts, public declarations and laws, and I might add, that while the United States and the Courts of this country, both State and Federal, have upheld and sustained as the prerogative and power of the State to exercise this control over the railroads in the conveyance of passengers and freight—while, I say, this is true, this other fact stares us in the face, that we have been attempting, through the medium of the Legislature, to exercise this control for the past fifteen years, and thus far all efforts at success have been abortive. I suppose, without being particularly familiar with the views of the committee, that they are of the opinion (judging from the past) that we would be likely to have a similar experience in the future, and they have presented this scheme providing for a commission consisting of three Railroad Commissioners to be elected by the people, to become the agents of the people and the railroad companies, and fix and determine in all cases the scale of prices for passengers and for freight upon railroads in this State.

For myself, Mr. Chairman, this plan meets my unqualified approbation. I had the fortune—perhaps I should say the misfortune—at quite an early day, to introduce into the Legislature of this State the first bill ever proposed for the regulation of fares and freights. It did not become a law. I need not deal with a detail or explanation of it. At nearly every session of the Legislature, from that time until this, efforts have been made to pass bills of that kind, and they have either proven wholly or partially abortive to accomplish any beneficial exercise of State control over these railroads by such means.

I do not propose, sir, to discuss the reason, why that has been the case. I may call attention to this one fact, and would allude to a public document, or what is in the nature of a public document, an open letter written by the President of the Central Pacific Railroad Company—I allude to Governor Stanford. I doubt not it was written in the hope that it would be read and appreciated by the members of this Convention. While utterly disagreeing with the conclusions reached in that communication, I recognize, and you will all recognize, the soundness of many of its views. The soundness of many of them, and I think I might say most of them, are most prominently illustrated in our past experience, in our attempts to legislate upon this subject. To regulate fares and freights by the establishment of maximum and minimum rates, have proven to be abortive. In other words, he proceeds to reason out and reach the conclusion, that for the purpose of regulating fares and freights it is impossible to effect it justly and beneficially, either to the people or the railroad companies, by any statute of the State regulating fares and freights. For instance, it is true, and it will be plain to every gentleman who is familiar with the subject, that it would be utterly unreasonable to expect any railroad company to transport from San Francisco to the State line, or between any points in this State, a cargo or a carload of silk goods at the same price that it would convey for the same distance a carload of barley, or wheat, or potatoes. It needs no illustration to show the truth of this. It is also true that it is not feasible; it is not reasonable to suppose, perhaps, that you can transport over all portions of any given line freights at the same rate. The grade of the road, the facilities for furnishing fuel, and other conditions necessary to transport a train of cars, whether carrying passengers or freight, or both, are immensely different, and the cost depends upon these conditions. Hence, from these as well as other considerations, which I will not now undertake to detail, it is obvious to every one that it is practically useless to lay down a fixed and inflexible rule as to rates for railroad transportation, as it must be done, if done by statute, fixing maximum or minimum, or both maximum and minimum rates, for the transportation of passengers or freights.

In view of these circumstances, in view of the fact that a wise management will take into consideration all the facts and all the elements which enter into the account of cost of transportation, it is necessary to have somebody, some Board of men, if you please, who are authorized both for the people and for the railroad companies, to have and exercise this most important discretionary power. The committee have (and I think wisely) presented a plan whereby they propose that the people shall elect three Railroad Commissioners, who shall be at once the agents of the people of the State and of the railroad companies, and equally bound to do justice to the people and the railroad companies, and they are to fix and regulate all these railroad questions. That is the plan of the committee, and it is one that I heartily favor. Now it will be understood that when I say the vote upon this question must necessarily be a test vote, I allude to a vote upon the pending amendment, which, if adopted, will be equivalent to knocking on the head the committee's scheme of a Railroad Commission.

Mr. Chairman, as I have said, we have had some experience upon this subject. We are not alone. Other States have had experience likewise. I think it will be quite out of the question for any gentleman on this floor or elsewhere, to show that any beneficial results have resulted in any case from any attempts at State regulation of railroads, in the form of statute laws fixing maximum or minimum rates for passengers or of freights. But they have in various instances succeeded in the attempt to exercise a wise and just and reasonable power of the State over these railroads, through such provisions as are proposed here by this committee report. Now if any one should question whether this proposed State control will be well and justly exercised, he will have to question the wisdom of the people to make wise selections. That there is need of this control, that the State has power to exercise it, and that it is our duty to do it, I think is obvious to most men at this day. The question is, how should we do it? That is the great question. I think the committee have reported wisely upon this proposition. They have provided that the people shall elect a Board of Commissioners, confer upon them the power and the duty to decide all questions between the people and the railroad companies, and then remove this notorious source of vexation, excitement, and corruption from the halls of our Legislatures, and relieve us from the turmoil which it occasions among the people, and place it where there will be a wise, calm, and just exercise of the power of control by the people of the State over these railroad companies.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be voted down, and that in lieu of it the Convention will adopt the scheme presented by the committee as shadowed in section nineteen and twenty of their report.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I think the gentleman who offered this amendment was premature. I do not think the vote upon this section——

MR. FILCHER. I have been informed that the gentleman is waiting an opportunity to withdraw it.

MR. WICKES. If gentlemen would moderate their zeal to offer amendments it would be better.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: The Legislature at its last session passed a law regulating the fare on these railroads in San Francisco—these street railroads—and it acted splendidly. The fare for a single ticket then was ten cents. They made it five. I cannot see why the Legislature cannot regulate these steam railroads just as well; but at the same time I will withdraw my amendment until we reach section twenty.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I sent up an amendment there some time ago which I now offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section seventeen by inserting in line four, after the word 'railroad' the words, 'other than a street railroad.'"

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: As the section now reads it would, I am afraid, be liable to the construction that any person might construct a street railroad through the streets of any city at any point that he might desire to do it, and that would be attended with vast public inconvenience and great danger. For that reason I have offered this amendment. I presume there will be no objection to it on the part of the Chairman of the committee. I suppose the clause was not intended to include that class of roads.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: It was not intended to reach street railroads, and I do not think it could possibly be construed to mean railroads of that kind, but I do not see as there is any objection to the amendment.

Digitized by Google

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I would suggest to the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, a fact that is probably not in his mind for the moment—that in all this railroad legislation, street railroads are excepted. They are carried on upon an entirely different basis from the general railroad system. It is left very much to the municipalities where they are in use. I think the suggestion from the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, a very pertinent one. As the section now stands, it would include street railroads.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: It was not intended to reach street railroads, and for one of the committee, I see no objection to inserting the words, "other than street railroads."

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I must confess that I am somewhat in the condition of the gentleman from Tulare, Mr. Brown, in regard to the second clause of this section. The way it reads, I do not know that I catch clearly its scope and purpose. I presume it is intended merely to make a provision that railroads may connect with other roads at the State line, but the way it is written, I confess I am not able clearly to understand it. Being in that condition, I have prepared an amendment, to read in this wise, if that is the understanding of the committee: "Any association, or corporation, organized for railroad purposes, except street railroads, shall have the right to connect at the State line with the railroads of other States." That makes it shorter, if that is the purpose, but I confess that it is not at all clear to me.

MR. ESTEE. I think you have hit one point and missed another. "Any association, or corporation, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States." The whole section, this clause and the next one, gives them the right to make a railroad and operate it to a certain point, and provides that there shall be no discrimination between railroads in favor of one or against the other. That is the point. Of course, if the gentleman's amendment is thought more correct, if it represents the ideas better, or is stated more clearly, then we have no choice or taste about language, but there are two points in ours—constructing a railroad and operating it between any points within the State, and also to connect with the railroads of other States.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: It occurs to me that the same explanation might be necessary in other sections of this same article. And, in order to avoid any ambiguity, or misconstruction of the Constitution relating to railroads, I would suggest to the gentleman from Alameda, that he withdraw his amendment here, and offer it as a separate section, something in this shape: "Nothing relating to railroads in this article shall be construed to apply to street railroads." There might be a doubt about several sections the way it is. If the committee intended to apply the article to this class of roads, of course it would be better in. If they intend to apply it only to the general system of steam roads, then I think the adoption of the section to this effect is very important.

MR. ESTEE. There will be no objection to that when we reach it.

MR. CAMPBELL. I withdraw my amendment then.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I ask the Secretary to read the amendment I sent up.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section seventeen by inserting after the word 'control,' in line two, the following: 'Railways and navigable canals heretofore constructed, or which may hereafter be constructed in this State, are hereby declared to be highways, and shall be free to all persons for the transportation of persons and property thereon, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law.'"

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: This matter of declaring railways public highways was discussed in the committee, and the committee compared various Constitutions of the States, many of which have the same provision, and at first adopted this language which I have introduced here from the minority report, but on a subsequent day the committee, while I was not present, struck it out. Now, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, that is one of the most indispensable declarations in this article concerning corporations. In my opinion it brings it exactly within the modern decisions in regard to the power of the State to control railroads. If I understand the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the railroad cases, called the Granger cases, following after the decision in the Elevator cases, the People against Scott and Munn—that decision in favor of the right to regulate and control and prevent abuses and discrimination on the part of railroad companies, went upon the principle that they were clothed with a public character. There was nothing in the decision which directly reversed the former decision with regard to the inviolability of these contracts, but it went purely and solely upon the ground of their being clothed with a public character and conveying a public interest. Now, there is nothing in the declaration that a railroad is a common carrier, as I understand it; that is contrary to all the definitions found in the books. Angell on Railways, and many others pronounce them public highways. I consider that a better expression than common carriers, although I have no objection to making use of both expressions. But when you say that they are public highways and free to all for the transportation of passengers and property, you strike at the greatest abuse of all, and that is discrimination. As to the common carrier characters of them, that is all right enough so far as it concerns the right to regulate fares and freights, but you must use the other declaration, that all persons and communities shall have the right, without discrimination, to have their property transported over these public highways under proper regulations. I consider it a very beneficial proposition to declare that they are public highways free to all persons for the transportation of persons and property, subject to legislative control. I would call the attention of the Convention, although I have not the decision here at present, and would not be able to read it if I had, to this fact, that the Granger cases, so called, or the railroad cases, followed after the decision in the Elevator cases, and after the adoption of the Constitution of Illinois, which declared these elevators public elevators and public warehouses. Now, while the Court does not lay particular stress upon the provision in the Constitution of Illinois, nevertheless it followed the decision in the Elevator cases, and declared the right of the State to control railroads, and based it upon their public character. That it was not an interference with a private right, but being clothed with a public character the State thus obtained its jurisdiction to regulate their rates I maintain that the same proposition is true with regard to railroads.

It is their public character as public highways that is the foundation for the authority of the State to control them, whatever we do or whatever shall be decided on. This decision binds every Court, up to the highest tribunal of the land; and this declaration will come within the scope and purview of their own decision upon the subject in the Granger cases and in the Elevator cases. I never understood why the committee should have left it out. It seems to me an indispensable proposition and a declaration that is just as necessary as and more necessary than the declaration that they are common carriers. I do not know, and the people of this State do not know, but that the time will yet come when they will not only want to act upon the declaration that they are public highways, free to all persons for the transportation of their persons and property theoretically, and under proper control and regulation, but that they shall declare that communities and places along the lines of the road, under proper regulations, can put their own cars and their own locomotives upon these public highways. Whilst not depriving anybody of their property, whilst not depriving them of their franchise, pay all due and proper bills that may be coming to them, but at the same time make the only possible competition in the State of California—perhaps the only kind of competition that is possible under the peculiar geographical formation of this State. I hope that the committee will adopt the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I wish to ask the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, if he means, when he provides that a railroad shall be a highway, that any person can use it for the transportation of goods; whether he means that every person has the right to use it for the transportation of general freight, putting cars and locomotives upon it.

MR. BARBOUR. Yes; under such regulations as may be prescribed by law.

MR. McFARLAND. I supposed you meant that a railroad shall be a public highway, upon which any person can put such cars and locomotives as they please.

MR. BARBOUR. The gentleman misapprehends me. I say this declaration is made upon the same ground that we declare the right to control fares and freights. The same power can put a proper regulation upon the use of the roadbed, regulating the schedule time, and making a time table.

MR. McFARLAND. Then I understood the gentleman right. He says now that railroads shall be public highways, upon which any person can put cars and locomotives, in the manner provided by law. That is what the railroads in this State are to be compelled to do, and the Legislature is to fix up some schedule of time upon which you, or I, or anybody can run a train of cars. I do not care to argue that question. I merely wanted to know what his idea was.

I would like to call the attention of the committee to the two final sentences or clauses in this section. They certainly ought to be amended in some way. The second clause is entirely unnecessary, it seems to me. The general law provides that anybody can build railroads in any part of the State, from one end of it to the other, by paying for private property. What is the use of saying that they may connect with other lines outside of the State, for they have that right if they choose to do so, anyway. This clause is simply useless and unnecessary. The last clause reads: "Every railroad shall transport each other's passengers." Now, each other's passengers refers to the preceding plural. It does not seem to me that it is grammar or common sense to say the companies shall transport each other's passengers and cars. The clause seems to need amendment—I hardly know how. Now, if that first word was "all" and the third word in the plural, it might perhaps help the case some. But, certainly, it does not mean anything to say that every railroad company shall receive and transport each other's passengers. Why should you provide that any railroad shall receive the passengers of any other company? They are common carriers, and bound to take all passengers. There is no use in providing that they shall receive passengers, for they are bound to receive all passengers. They are common carriers, without any declaration in the Constitution to that effect. I do not see any necessity for putting these provisions in.

SPEECH OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: As I understand it, the only amendment is the one offered by Mr. Barbour.

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. SMITH. I am somewhat surprised at the committee omitting this part of the section introduced by Mr. Barbour—this amendment—inasmuch as I have looked over all the new Constitutions of those States that have dealt with this railroad question, and found without exception that they contain this provision, or substantially this provision. And when I consider further that in making railway and canal companies common carriers, that it is only half of the question, I am surprised at this able committee leaving out the other half. Of course, you can't make the roads common carriers, no more than you can make a river a common carrier. You can make the road a public highway and the company a common carrier; you can declare a river or canal a public highway, and the company plying thereon a common carrier. Now this question is not a new one by any means. I presume that no lawyer on this floor will deny the fact that it has been established by all the decisions known upon railroads, that they are considered public highways. It has been decided in a recent case in the Supreme Court of the United States, the case mentioned by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. They are considered public highways—not as common roads, not as canals, not as turnpike roads, not as street railroads, not as streets—but they are considered as improved highways. In this case, the People vs. Kerr, 27 Cal. p. 207, this question is fully defined.

Now it is not presumed that the Legislature will presume to allow men to put on trains and pass each other, or to run them on their own time. The object is to declare them public highways, and we want it in the Constitution, where the Legislature cannot repeal it.

Mr. Church, one of the ablest delegates in the Convention of Illinois, and one of the ablest jurists of that body, makes this declaration on the subject:

"Railway companies, with the extraordinary privileges they have been allowed to enjoy, and the extraordinary powers they have been allowed to exercise, in confiscating private property for private corporations, have been justified by the Courts, only on the principle that railroads are a species of public highways—improved highways, they are called by the Courts—yet the practices have been such that all participation by the public in these highways has been denied, unless they conform themselves entirely to the private regulation of the private corporation; the people, whose property has been condemned, having had no voice in the matter. The public, in their sovereign capacity, as law makers, have been held to have no participation in the regulation of these highways; but practically the roads, and franchises, and extraordinary immunities have been held and controlled by the companies simply as private property.

This proposition is simply declaratory of the limitation of those rights as they have been indicated by the Courts, and justified in the exercise of those great powers over private rights. The proposition does not contemplate any encroachments upon the rights of property; but that under the sovereign power by which the people of the State have the right to subject private property to public uses, this railroad property may be subjected to the public uses as a public highway, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by law, in reference to compensation and use."

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I would like to inquire if the amendment is open to amendment?

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. HOWARD. Then I suggest an amendment, after the word "law," by inserting the words, "securing just compensation to the railway or canal." I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco with the amendment I have suggested. I am willing to vote for it with this amendment, but I will not without. If we declare that anybody shall have the right to put on a train, it does not follow that they may do it without paying the railroad company. It is not within the power of the Legislature to take away the right of the company to demand just compensation for the use of the road. Now they must be under some police regulation in order to avoid accidents and collisions. This amendment of the gentleman secures a declaration recognizing the right to put cars on the road, and I shall favor it. The late Transportation Commissioners, in their report to the Legislature, say that one of the great means of solving the railroad problem is to permit any one who desires to run his own cars on the railroad, paying, of course, a just compensation therefor.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: When your committee was examining this subject, it was not unanimous in favor of the report adopted. The same amendment now presented by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, was presented by him to the committee, and it was duly considered by the committee, and rejected. So far as I understand, it was voted down because your committee believed, in considering this matter, that it would be better to assume the middle ground, and go to no such extremes as is proposed by the gentleman. The committee's report commences by asserting that all railroads, canal, and transportation companies shall be common carriers, and subject to legislative control. It was thought by us that, as the highest Courts of the country had declared that these common carriers were subject to legislative control, we would formulate a section making that law permanent, rather than say they are public highways; the first had received judicial interpretation, the latter had not. It is true that in Illinois, and I think in Missouri, railroads are declared to be public highways, but under this section of the Constitutions adopted in those States, nowhere is there any attempt to control railroads to the extent claimed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. Again; "transportation companies" was a term put in, as I understand it, for the purpose of reaching those companies referred to by the gentleman, namely, red lines and star lines, which are understood to be companies within companies, organized for special purposes, with exclusive and special privileges, to transport passengers and freight on more favorable terms than outsiders can obtain. We declare these companies, as well as railroad companies, to be subject to legislative control. Now, what does that mean? If it means anything, it means that the Legislature of the State shall have control over all those companies. And that, as I understand it, is what we want to do. It certainly is all that ought to be asked, it is all I am willing to do, and, for one, as far as that section is concerned, I believe it is right as it stands. I do not believe in putting in words that we ourselves do not know the meaning of, or which are of doubtful interpretation. What construction will be placed upon the proposed amendment no one can know.

I do not believe that anybody, outside of the owners of the railroads, contemplates running cars upon any of the railroads in this State; to run them on their own time, under their own direction, regardless of the peculiar business in which the companies are engaged, for the transportation of passengers and freight, would be hazardous in the extreme.

We are aware that there can be but one head to a railroad company. There must be one rule by which its business is done, and one time table. There must be a time for leaving one point, and a time for arriving at another. The business is of such a peculiar character that it must necessarily be under the control of one company and one mind. I do not believe there will ever be any practical solution of the railroad problem by allowing people indiscriminately to place and run cars on other people's railroad tracks. For that reason I do not propose to favor any amendment that will even contemplate the carrying out of that idea. I think we had better strike at the evils in sight, rather than hunt up imaginary evils and attempt to remedy them. The evils that exist let us remedy by means within our power, and which are practicable. There is a section reported by your Committee on Corporations which puts most of these matters in the hands of a commission. That commission will have a large control of this subject. Unless some gentleman can present some better formulated section, conveying the idea found in our report, I shall support the report as made by the committee. I do not say this section cannot be improved by amendment—that none other can be presented worthy of consideration—but, after full examination by your committee, it was believed that this section, as reported, would best convey the views of your committee, and would represent the views of the people and of the Convention on this subject.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Suppose one of these canal companies should sell to an individual; would the law of common carriers apply?

MR. ESTEE. I am not aware of any right at common law to sell a franchise. There is no right of alienation at common law. The right is statutory only. If the gentleman wants to amend the section by inserting the word "individual," all right.

MR. SMITH. A railroad cannot be sold without selling the franchise, and can be in the name of an individual as well as a company. I only mention this as an illustration that there are many matters that are not, could——

MR. ESTEE. Well, if the gentleman will point out what's the matter, and how it will be remedied by inserting the words "public highways," which will not be remedied by the section as it stands, I will support it. If he will refer to one solitary evil that can be covered by the language suggested by him, let the amendment be adopted. I submit, if he will turn back to the part already adopted, he will find that we have adopted a section that expressly provides that the Legislature shall not pass any law permitting the alienation of franchises, except as therein prescribed. I think my young friend is mistaken in his point.

MR. SMITH. I would ask if there can be an alienation of a franchise under the law?

MR. ESTEE. As I stated, it is not permitted at common law. It is done under the statute.

MR. SMITH. Under no circumstances?

MR. ESTEE. I know of no instance where at common law the owners of a franchise can be permitted to alienate the franchise.

MR. SMITH. Section ten reads:

"SEC. 10. The Legislature shall not pass any laws permitting the leasing or alienation of any franchise so as to relieve the franchise or property held thereunder from liabilities of the lessor or grantor, lessee or grantee, contracted or incurred in the operation, use, or enjoyment of such franchise, or any of its privileges."

I think they can be alienated.

MR. ESTEE. That section does not say that it can be or cannot be alienated. But I say, under the law, as I understand it, franchises are grants from the State, and cannot be sold at common law. They cannot be alienated. The right to sell is statutory.

MR. WATERS. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Under our statute law to-day, cannot franchises be sold under forced sale—under execution?

MR. ESTEE. If there is any special law on the subject, I do not know of it. This is the common law, and has for years been made the law of this State.

MR. WATERS. I think this gentleman will find it in the Code.

MR. ESTEE. I ask the gentleman this question: Unless otherwise specially prescribed, hasn't it always been the law that franchises cannot be alienated?

MR. WATERS. The Code provides that it can be done by forced sale or execution.

SPEECH OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: As to the point last made, as to the power to alienate a franchise—at common law a franchise is regarded as a matter of trust between the Crown and the grantee, and therefore not subject to alienation—in this State it has been held, over and over again, that any corporate franchise may be sold on execution, and the title passed, and that is the rule in this State now.

MR. ESTEE. Yes, sir; forced sale.

MR. EDGERTON. It can be at forced sale, and of course there are arrangements for consolidation, and all that. Now, as to the question immediately in hand, the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, declaring railroads public highways. It is true, sir, that this provision is found in the Constitutions of some other States, and also in the laws of other States. I object to their drawing the Constitution of Pennsylvania on us. Because this provision is found in the Constitution of some other State is no reason why it should be adopted here. I never could understand to what this proposition points, unless it be that these railroads are to be declared highways in the full sense of the word—open to anybody to go on with his steam engine, with his directors' car, with his passenger car, and his freight car, and use the road to the exclusion, perhaps, of the proprietor of the road, under regulations, of course, to be provided by law. Now, there is nothing new in this scheme. It is as old as railroad law, almost. At a very early day in the history of railroads in England, where railroads originated, the Duke of Wellington, in one of the first debates of Parliament, stated that it must always be observed that there was an analogy between a railroad and the King's highway, and it is that analogy that has been paraded before us here; and he tells us that upon that false analogy the past superstructure of legislation was reared, which in England was found to be utterly useless, and was in the end repealed. The folly of that legislation is, that the proprietors of a railroad may be separated from the carrier. In England they passed many laws providing rules and regulations by which the proprietor could go with his steam engine and cars over his own road. But the system was found to be a perfect humbug. It was found to work very great injustice, great inconvenience, and resulted in many accidents. As far as this section is concerned, I think the criticisms of the gentleman from Santa Clara are merited. Like a great many other sections, it is drawn in a bungling manner; it is bad English, bad grammar, and worse sense, and is evidence that the schoolmaster was abroad. It ought to be referred to the Committee on Education to be reformed. I hope the amendment will be voted down, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, will be adopted.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: The first part of this proposition simply declares that these companies are common carriers. Now, let us see how closely allied common carriers are to highways. It will be admitted by every one that those who run a stage line upon the public road are common carriers. They are not necessarily connected with the road. They are not so fastened to the road as that no distinction can be made. Now, the distinction is a very plain one, and when we say we will control common carriers, we simply mean those carrying upon the road. The two terms, common carriers and public highways, have not necessarily any connection whatever. There is as broad a distinction as there is between the clouds and the earth, as between land and water. There is no necessary connection whatever. Now, let us see if these are public highways. Nonsense. The authorities are full of these propositions, and the power of eminent domain is never exercised except where it is directed to a public use, for the public good, and you cannot call in the great power of the State to assist you in acquiring an absolute right except it is for a public use. Now, what is a public use? Why do you call it a public use? Simply because it is a use to which all your citizens have a common right, upon certain conditions. What are those conditions? Why, simply the payment of the toll to support the public highways, in your business as common carriers.

Now, Cooley—I do not know—he was not much of a railroad lawyer, I guess, but he understood a little about what constitutes a public use and what constitutes public highways. That distinguished author, page 533, says:

"Every government is expected to make provision for the public ways, and for this purpose it may seize and appropriate lands. And as the wants of traffic and travel require facilities beyond those afforded by the common highway, over which any one may pass with his own vehicles, the government may establish the higher grade of highways, upon some of which only its own vehicles can be allowed to run, while others, differently constructed, shall be open to use by all on payment of toll. The common highway is kept in repair by assessments of labor and money; the tolls paid upon turnpikes, or the fares on railroads, are the equivalents to these assessments; and when these improved ways are required by law to be kept open for use by the public impartially, they also may properly be called highways."

How is that? I think it is just precisely what this amendment provides, which we are trying to put into this Constitution. This provision means that they shall not be above the people. We want to declare that it is a public use, as distinguished from a private use. That is what it means. We want to distinguish it from a private use now attempted to be forced upon this Convention by the distinguished and influential chief of the railroad companies in the State of California, who is admitted to be potent. Now, I have given you the distinction between a common carrier and the road upon which he runs his vehicles; the conveyances and the road itself, as contradistinguished. I propose to vote for this amendment, because it simply declares a proposition of law which is as old as the hills and government itself.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I rise to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations one question. In the last clause, in line five: "Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty." I want to know if "loaded or empty" has reference to the passengers? [Laughter.] Whether the passengers are loaded or empty, or whether it has any particular reference to starting before breakfast?

MR. ESTEE. Does the gentleman wish an answer? The section reads: "All railroads, canal, and transportation companies shall be common carriers, and subject to legislative control. Any association or corporation, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination." If the gentleman wants to know whether I consider him loaded or empty—[laughter]—I don't know but that is good grammar.

MR. EDGERTON. If the gentleman will allow me; I move that the whole report be sent to the Committee on Education, to be reformed.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I do not intend, as far as I am concerned, to permit, if I am able to prevent it, any important amendment to this article to be laughed down. I believe it represents the advanced and true ideas of the times, and meets the requirements of the age. If you want to defeat it, defeat it squarely, or help us correct it, if it is wrong. If it is right, stand by your guns and pass it. [Applause.]

SPEECH OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any great difficulty about this section of the article on corporations, but I think it would be better in this wise: "All railroads, other than street railroads, and all canal and transportation companies, shall be common carriers and subject to legislative control." I think that is better phraseology, as it confines it entirely to street railroads. "Any association or corporation organized for railroad purposes" (that would be entirely proper) "shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State, and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each other's passengers and cars," etc. That would answer the purpose intended by the additional section of the gentleman from Placer. This would remodel the section and confine it to steam railroads. In respect to the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, I have this to say, I am not in favor of any experimental provisions in this Constitution. We have declared railroad companies to be common carriers, and that seems to me to be broad enough. I am not in favor of introducing anything into the Constitution which is vague and indefinite, to be construed by the Supreme Court. I want to use the simplest language possible. I do not believe the people would sanction such an innovation as this. I do not think this amendment should be adopted, because we cannot tell what construction may be put upon it. It may seem harmless, and yet when it comes to be construed, we may find that railroad companies have not the right to a reasonable possession and use of their own property.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. McCALLUM. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at five o'clock and fifteen minutes the Convention stood adjourned.

DEATH OF HON. J. M. STRONG.

MR. JONES. Mr. President: It is my painful duty to inform you, and through you the members of this Convention, of the death of a member of this body. Mr. J. M. Strong, a member of this Convention, representing the Assembly District composed of the Counties of Mariposa and Merced, died while in attendance upon this body this morning, in this city, and I offer these resolutions in respect to that matter, for the consideration of this Convention:

WHEREAS, We have been informed of the death of the Honorable J. M. Strong, a delegate to this Convention from the Counties of Mariposa and Merced; therefore,
Resolved, That it is with a feeling of profound regret that we have heard of the death of Honorable J. M. Strong, a delegate to this Convention from the Counties of Mariposa and Merced.
Resolved, That in his death this Convention has lost an honest, faithful member; society a useful and intelligent citizen, and his family a tender and devoted parent.
Resolved, That in this hour of their deep affliction and grief, we tender to his family our sincere condolence and profound sympathy.
Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to take charge of the remains of the deceased, and to defray the necessary expenses in connection with his funeral out of the funds of this Convention.
Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to forward a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.
Resolved, That this Convention do now adjourn out of respect to the memory of the deceased.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.
The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

THE COMMITTEE.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair will appoint, as the committee provided for in the resolutions, Messrs. Holmes, of Fresno; Heiskell, of Stanislaus; Lampson, of Tuolumne; Brown, of Tulare; and Jones, of Mariposa.

REMARKS OF MR. CASSERLY.

MR. CASSERLY. I cannot refrain from adding a word in regard to our deceased fellow member. I had at one time a great deal of correspondence with him in respect of his efforts to make the raising of cotton a success in this State. I found him an intelligent, upright, straightforward man. At that time his experiment fell short of success, and I believe carried with it a large part of his fortune. Whether or not the experiment, under the best of circumstances, could have been an entire success, is more than I am able to say; but he manfully and courageously addressed himself to the effort to make it a success. I feel that our young State owes to such as he the tribute of her good will, of her praise, and kindly remembrance.

MR. REYNOLDS. I move to lay over for one day the motion of which I gave notice yesterday to reconsider the resolution on printing the Journal.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the gentleman will have leave to make his motion to-morrow.

Pursuant to these resolutions, the Convention stands adjourned until to-morrow at ten o'clock. [10:15 A. M.]

FIFTY-FOURTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Wednesday, November 20th, 1878.

At nine o'clock and forty-five minutes A. M., a quorum being present, the President called the Convention to order.

OBSEQUIES OF MR. STRONG.

MR. LARKIN. I desire to offer a resolution.
THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That a recess be taken until one o'clock this day, to enable members to participate in the obsequies of the Hon. J. M. Strong.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I desire that this resolution may pass, so that this Convention will pay due respect to the memory of a deceased member; that we shall march in a body down to the depot and see the body on the cars. I hope there will be no objection.

MR. WEST. I second the resolution.
Adopted, unanimously.

THE PRESIDENT. The Convention will take a recess, according to the resolution, until one o'clock P. M.

PETITION.

MR. BEERSTECHER presented the following petition, signed by a large number of mechanics, material men, and laborers of San Francisco:

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned respectfully represent that the practical working of the present legislation, and decisions of Supreme Court based thereon, regarding the rights of mechanics, material-men and laborers to a lien for their labor and material furnished, is such that those who in a measure depend upon such law for just protection fail in nearly all cases to obtain it, because of the inefficient working of said law.

Wherefore, we pray you to declare in our organic law the right of every mechanic, material-man, and laborer to a perfect lien on the thing whereon his labor has been expended, or for which his materials have been furnished

Moreover, we would state that we would be satisfied with amendment number one hundred and sixty-seven, introduced by Mr. Van Dyke, on October tenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, and read and referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects, as follows:

"SECTION —. Mechanics, material-men, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property on which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials, for the value of such labor done and materials furnished, and the Legislature shall provide by law for the speedy and efficient enforcement of said liens."

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Referred to the Committee on Legislative Department.

REPORT ON CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE presented the following report from the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal:

SACRAMENTO, November 19th, 1878.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, to whom were referred several amendments to sections twelve and thirteen of the article on corporations, reported by the committee, beg leave to report that they have considered the same, and recommend the adoption of the following as a substitute for pending amendments:

Add to section twelve: "Except that members of coöperative societies formed for agricultural, mercantile, and manufacturing purposes, may vote on all questions affecting such societies in manner prescribed by law."

The committee recommend that no alteration be made in section thirteen, as reported by the committee, and which reads as follows:

THE STATE UNIVERSITY.

MR. WINANS. Mr. President: This Convention some time since passed a resolution calling upon the President and Secretary of the Board of Regents of the University of the State of California to furnish to the Convention a statement in brief of its financial condition, the nature of its funds, etc. The President of the Board of Regents, who is the Governor of the State, could not, of course, comply with that requirement, because he is located in this city and the work was required to be transacted in Berkeley, but the Secretary of the Board of Regents and the President de facto, did prepare and have presented to this body a report, in which the matter involved was exceedingly voluminous and the work very complicated and extensive. It has been discharged with extraordinary expedition, and the report has been ordered printed. It requires, in order to present the subject-matter more clearly to this body, that it should be separated into the different funds. The funds should be presented as separate funds, and the Secretary of the Board of Regents is now here and with the permission of this body can in a short time so arrange the matter now in the printers hands as to present a clear and distinct view of the subject, in that way, by segregating the funds. The Committee on Education, by a unanimous vote last night, instructed me to present to this body the following resolution: "Resolved, that the Secretary of the Board of Regents of the University be authorized to arrange the report of the financial affairs of that institution, hitherto presented to this Convention, and now in the hands of the printer, so as to segregate the several funds therein set forth; and also to add to said report, to be printed therewith, the separate report of the President of said University respecting the donations thereto."

The President also sends up a separate report, in which he specifies all the donations which have been made to the University that have already been completed. There are several donations the moneys from which have not been received, but are in due course of transmission to the University. The President's report is indispensable to a full understanding of the other, and our committee requests the passage of this resolution, that the tabulated statement now presented and in the hands of the State Printer, may be so arranged and classified as that it will show the condition of the University funds in the clearest manner; and in order that the President's report as to the donations that have been made to the University may be superadded to the report of the Secretary. I therefore offer that resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Board of Regents of the University be authorized to arrange the report of the financial affairs of that institution, hitherto presented to this Convention, and now in the hands of the printer, so as to segregate the several funds therein set forth; and also add to said report, to be printed therewith, the separate report of the President of said University respecting the donations thereto.

Adopted.

MR. WINANS. Mr. President: The Committee on Education also instructed me to present the following resolution:

Resolved, That the letter of E. W. Hilgard, Agricultural Professor of the University of California, respecting the condition and future prospects of the Agricultural Department of the University, submitted to the Committee on Education, be printed, and copies thereof furnished to the members of this Convention.

The object of that resolution is this: One of the members of the Committee on Education corresponded with the Agricultural Professor of the University, and has received a letter from the Professor, in which he fully sets forth the character and future prospects of the Agricultural Department. It contains valuable information for the use of this Convention, and will correct errors and misapprehensions which now exist. It is therefore asked that this letter be authorized to be printed. It will not consume much time, or involve much expense to have it printed.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the letter of E. W. Hilgard, Agricultural Professor of the University of California, respecting the condition and future prospects of the Agricultural Department of the University, submitted to the Committee on Education, be printed, and copies thereof furnished to the members of this Convention.

Adopted.

[The reports and letter alluded to above are printed in the proceedings of November sixteenth, as finally printed for the use of the Convention—REPORTERS.]

ESCHEAT TO THE STATE.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara, presented the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to property escheating to the State:

First—No person other than citizens of the United States, and those who are eligible to become such citizens, shall hereafter in this State acquire any estate in lands. And all real property acquired in violation of this provision shall escheat to the State.

Second.—Within the jurisdiction of this State, all lands, the title to which shall fail from a defect of heirs, shall escheat to the State.

Referred to the Committee on Lands and Homestead Exemptions.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

MR. CROUCH presented the following petition, signed by a large number of mechanics, citizens of California:

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned respectfully represent that the practical working of the present legislation, and decisions of Supreme Court based thereon, regarding the rights of mechanics, material-men, and laborers to a lien for their labor and material furnished, is such that those who in a measure depend upon such law for just protection fail in nearly all cases to obtain it, because of the inefficient working of said law.

Wherefore, we pray you to declare, in our organic law, the right of every mechanic, material-man, and laborer to a perfect lien on the thing whereon his labor has been expended or for which his materials have been furnished.

Moreover, we would state that we would be satisfied with amendment number one hundred and sixty-seven, introduced by Mr. Van Dyke, on October tenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, and read and referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects, as follows:

"SEC. —. Mechanics, material-men, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property on which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials, for the value of such labor done and materials furnished, and the Legislature shall provide by law for the speedy and efficient enforcement of said liens."

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

MOTION TO AMEND RULE.

MR. INMAN. Mr. President: I wish to bring up my motion to amend Rule Fifty-six.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend Rule Fifty-six as follows: Strike out, in lines two and three, the words, 'for limiting the times of speaking,' and insert, 'that no member shall speak more than ten minutes on any one proposition without leave of the Convention.'"

MR. BEERSTECHER. I move that it be laid on the table.

MR. INMAN. I will call for the ayes and noes.

The ayes and noes were also demanded by Messrs. Hunter, Dean, Smith of Santa Clara, and Ohleyer.

The roll was called, and the motion lost by the following vote:

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. President: I move to amend by striking out "ten" and inserting the word "fifteen" before the word "minutes."

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I hope that any proposition concerning the limiting of speeches upon the subject of corporations, or any other subject that we are about to enter into at this time, will be voted down. Mr. President, I am thoroughly satisfied in my own mind that the object of passing a resolution of this kind at this particular time is to stifle debate upon the subject of corporations. I for one do not propose to vote for any proposition to choke off any one, or for the purpose of stifling debate upon this important subject. We are now considering the subject of corporations. We have finished with corporations generally, and are now entering upon the subject of railroads. Now, at this particular juncture comes the proposition to limit the time of speeches to ten minutes. Just as soon as we reach the subject of railroads—a subject that interests every producer and every working man in the State of California—this motion is made. And not only that. The next subject will be the Chinese question, and then will come taxation and the legislative department. The debates, if debates are to be had at all, ought to be had in the Committee of the Whole, and if there is to be a limit the limit ought to be in the Convention. I am willing to limit debate in the Convention, but I never will place myself upon record as voting to limit debate in Committee of the Whole.

Digitized by Google

It seems to me a very significant fact that this motion for a ten-minute limit has not been broached at all until we have reached the subject of railroads. I think the subject of railroads ought to be thoroughly discussed, as well as the subjects of Chinese and taxation. I propose to vote against any amendment of this character which will stifle and cut off debate upon these important subjects. It has not been done in any Convention heretofore, it is unparliamentary, and it is out of place at this time.

MR. INMAN. Mr. President: I am the author of that amendment, and I introduced it simply to shut off such long-winded speeches that we generally have from the gentleman who has just taken his seat. Now, Mr. President, I am just as far from being in the interest of corporations as the gentleman is, and my votes will show it. We have spent some fifty days here and done nothing; ten minutes is as long as any gentleman need take to express his views as a general thing. But my amendment says, "without leave of the Convention." I presume that this Convention will grant any gentleman they desire to hear all the time he wants. I am satisfied that they will. But let them all take their own time and we will not get through here until the end of time. I am very anxious to see exactly who are the friends of the people and who are not. My vote will be my record. My vote shall agree with my talking and with my past history, and I refer the gentleman to that to satisfy him as to whether I wear a collar or not. I do not wear any. If he does I am only sorry for him. In regard to the amendment, I think five minutes would be better than fifteen. I am satisfied of that. We do not want these long speeches, Mr. President.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the article before the house.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I want the ayes and noes on this question.

MR. HERRINGTON. Ayes and noes.

MR. GRACE. Ayes and noes.

MR. O'DONNELL. Ayes and noes.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Ayes and noes.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: I am inclined to favor the proposition about short speeches. One of my colleagues has said that it was unprecedented. I think he is mistaken in that regard. In the Constitutional Convention of Illinois the limit was ten minutes. In the Constitutional Convention of Pennsylvania the limit was twenty minutes. But what I object to most is the rule we have adopted, an erroneous rule I think, in regard to calling the previous question in Committee of the Whole. That cuts off not only debate, but is worse than that, it cuts off any amendment that a member may wish to offer. I would much prefer to cut off these long speeches than to cut off the privilege of amending a proposition. But if we have the rule that we have adopted, and call the previous question in Committee of the Whole, and then shut off debate by a ten-minute rule, I think we should be brought up with a very short turn. I have been against calling the previous question in Committee of the Whole. It is unprecedented in any legislative or deliberative body. It not only cuts off debate but it stops any amendment that any gentlemen may wish to offer. I think it will perhaps be a valuable rule if we limit the debate to ten minutes, and I would favor that, but I would recommend the Convention to rescind the other rule about cutting off debate in Committee of the Whole by calling the previous question. I would not object to a rule that would allow the committee to lay any amendment on the table without debate for the purpose of bringing that matter to an end. That is, that any amendment might be laid on the table without laying the whole subject-matter on the table. In that way we could expedite matters very much. If we could get our rules in that shape we could lay any objectionable amendment on the table, and then act upon some other amendment. If there is anything worth discussing in it we can discuss it, if not we can lay it on the table. But this previous question business sometimes cuts off a very important proposition which some gentleman wishes to offer, and which the Convention would adopt if an opportunity was offered.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I wish to state to the gentleman that I propose to offer this as an amendment to the rule: "Provided, that when the previous question is sustained it shall only apply to the amendments then pending, and other amendments may be offered to the section." That will cover all the defects objected to by the gentleman who has just spoken.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. President: I voted "aye," myself. If this Convention thinks I want to make big speeches—they know I don't speak at all. I am glad that the big speeches always comes from the big side of the house, and I have seen gentlemen make speeches a day and a half. I am glad to have the debates. It is worth the time. If a gentleman will stay here and talk three days, I never will break him off, so that I can understand what it is about. I have seen there last week that it was discussed from the other side of the house—there was just where I was glad about that. If it was from the other side of the house they ought to vote it down. It was discussed over two days from the other side of the house; and I always will vote for it to give a man as long as possible. Let him speak, so long as he speaks to the point. You have to speak at the point. No, sir; so long as I can see it is good for the people at large I will vote for it. I am not in favor of fifteen minutes. Give him all the time he wants; then you will all be enlightened. [Laughter.]

MR. TULLY. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

MR. TULLY. Mr. President: I hope the ten-minute rule will be adopted, for this reason: I will state that I am very fond of listening to fine speeches, but I am satisfied that if the debates go on as at present, that the Convention will not get out of Committee of the Whole in the hundred days. I am satisfied of another proposition: that any ordinary man can tell all he knows on any subject in this Convention in ten minutes. If my friend Beerstecher cannot do it, I advise him to go out and rent a hall, and we will all come and listen to him.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I hope that the amendment to the amendment will be voted down, and that the amendment, as offered will be adopted. I believe it to be economy. I believe every man can explain his vote, and the reasons for his thus voting, in ten minutes. I believe that it is time that we should economize time.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I move the previous question.

MR. BOUCHER. I second the motion.

MR. VACQUEREL. I second the motion.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I call for the ayes and noes.

MR. TINNIN. I desire to offer my amendment.

MR. GRACE. I am in hopes that all the amendments will be voted down.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable. Shall the main question be now ordered?

The main question was ordered.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I call for the ayes and noes.

THE PRESIDENT. The ayes and noes have been demanded already. The main question has been ordered. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Smith.

The roll was called, and the amendment rejected by the following vote:

NOTICE.

MR. TINNIN. I desire to give notice of an amendment to Rule Fifty six.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Provided, That when the previous question is sustained, it shall only apply to the amendments then pending, and other amendments may be offered to the section."

Laid over for one day under the rule.

ELIGIBILITY TO OFFICE.

MR. HUESTIS. I have a resolution to refer.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects be instructed to report to the Convention a section providing, in effect, that members of this Convention shall not be eligible to any office under the Constitution, at the first general election after its adoption.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: I believe that the adoption of that resolution will have a salutary effect upon this body, and I call for the ayes and noes.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I move to lay the resolution on the table, and I call for the ayes and noes.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. Fawcett, Huestis, Tully, West, and Condon.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move to strike out the words "at the first general election after its adoption."

MR. BEERSTECHER. With the consent of the house I withdraw my motion to lay on the table.

MR. EDGERTON. I move to amend by striking out the words, "at the next general election," so that no gentleman in this Convention will ever be eligible to any other office. [Laughter.]

MR. FAWCETT. I call for the ayes and noes.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs Huestis, Overton, Hitchcock, Casserly, and Grace.

MR. REYNOLDS. I move to insert in the place of the words "stricken out," by the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, the word "forever."

MR. BEERSTECHER. I second that motion.

THE PRESIDENT. It is the same amendment as that already pending.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: I do not believe that this suggestion is at all necessary. [Laughter.] My own opinion being that if we don't behave better than we have been behaving up to this time, that it will be enough to finish the political or personal career of any man to say that he was a member of this concern. I move that we lay this whole subject on the table and proceed to business. We have had fun enough.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, to lay the whole subject-matter on the table.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. Fawcett, Huestis, Winans, Casserly, and Condon.

The roll was called, and the motion prevailed by the following vote:

PRINTING THE JOURNAL.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: Pursuant to notice given at the last session, I now move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution for printing the Journal was indefinitely postponed. I do not wish to consume the time of the Convention with any remarks upon this question at all. [Cries of "louder."] I do not care to consume the time of the Convention with any remarks concerning this resolution, neither have I any personal interest in the matter one way or the other, any further than to extricate the Convention from the absurd position in which it now is on this question of printing the Journal. When the resolution was before the Convention before, I explained fully the situation. The Convention was not then so full as it is now, and I will just say a word or two in regard to it. This resolution which I now seek to reconsider is a resolution explaining and giving effect to a former motion to print the Journal. The Convention supposed it had ordered the Journal printed. The printing office also supposed it had, and has gone forward and printed the Journal from that time until this. Now there seems to be some doubt about the legal effect of the motion, and this resolution seeks to remedy that defect. The motion was intended to order the copies printed for binding, and the slips to be laid on our desks. The printing office has done that, and incurred the expense, and we now wish to state distinctly what we mean. We are not going to incur another dollar's expense by this motion, whether it is passed or not. Now in regard to the figures. I understand that the gentleman from Placer has been to the printing office and ascertained exactly what the figures are and what they will be when we have completed the work that is designed by the resolution. I think the Convention wishes and intends to deal honestly and fairly with the printing office, and not get into any absurd position on this matter. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Placer.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: Is it in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole?

THE PRESIDENT. There's a question already pending.

MR. HOWARD. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 50 ayes to 46 noes.

CORPORATIONS.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The pending amendments are to section fifteen of the report of the committee, now numbered section seventeen. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by Mr. Barbour.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by inserting after the word 'control,' in line two, the following: 'Railways and navigable canals heretofore constructed or which may hereafter be constructed in this State, are hereby declared to be highways, and shall be free to all persons for the transportation of persons and property thereon, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law."

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, moves to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "law," the words, "securing just compensation to the railway or canal." The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: This amendment is certainly one of very great importance. The first objection that I have to it is the ambiguity of the term "public highways." The author of the amendment, the gentleman from San Francisco, a lawyer of well known and recognized ability, has put his construction upon it, and I presume that his construction is a correct one. He states to the committee that his interpretation is, that it would place railways upon the same footing as toll roads—wagon toll roads. That is, that everybody may go upon it and run their engines, their locomotives, their cars, and carry freight on their own account or the account of others.

Now, as I remarked, the term "public highways" is an ambiguous term, and is susceptible of two constructions; but inasmuch as the gentleman from San Francisco has put his own construction upon it, it is fair that we should argue from his own terms. Now, I venture the assertion, Mr. Chairman, that, taking that construction, that the scheme is wholly and utterly and entirely impracticable—that to run a railroad upon that basis would be a moral impossibility. Let us suppose, for instance, half a dozen individuals, or a dozen individuals, or companies, construct their trains and put them upon this road. Who is to regulate the time? Who is to be responsible for the accidents, for the collisions, for the confusion worse confounded that would result, certainly, inevitably, and unavoidably?

Now, Mr. Chairman, we hold railroads responsible for the damage to persons and property by accidents or collisions. From whatever cause, we hold them responsible. Now let us suppose this state of things inaugurated—a road that is regulated by nobody, or by everybody. It has been said that what is everybody's business is nobody's business. Who would regulate the time? Who would be responsible for the accidents that would occur by collisions, and the various accidents that would occur from the inevitable confusion that would attend the running of the road? I hold that the practical common sense of every man will show him that the scheme is utterly impracticable. It is true that many State Constitutions have adopted this very phraseology, but we are not informed yet as to what construction, if any, the Courts have put upon that term. But I will venture the assertion that the theory has never been carried out practically in any State, no matter what construction is put upon it by the Courts—that it is impossible to do it.

Then there is another aspect of the question that is important. The right to do this thing. The committee have adopted section fourteen of the Bill of Rights, that declares: "Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into Court for the owner, and no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal until full compensation therefor be first made in money or ascertained and paid into Court for the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law."

Now, Mr. Chairman, before we can take private property for public use, or for private use, or for any other use, we have got to do one of two things. We have got to confiscate that property or condemn it. What this proposition may mean to do is open to discussion. It is not exactly confiscation, because it provides that it shall be regulated by law. Law does not contemplate confiscation. And the amendment looks towards a certain kind of compensation to be made to the railroad company. Therefore we cannot call it confiscation. Neither, on the other hand, can we call it condemnation, because the right of the State, by virtue of its power of eminent domain, is recognized, not only by the Constitution and the statutory law, but by the law of universal application, as a judicial proceeding. Yet we are told by the gentleman from San Francisco that under this amendment anybody or everybody may put a train upon the railroad, and that there should be certain compensation provided. This would imply the necessity of a specific act of condemnation for every train that would be put upon that road. And I would just suggest in this connection again that the exercise of the right of eminent domain is a judicial proceeding, therefore we must institute a judicial proceeding every time that a railroad train is put upon that road. This, of course, is an absurdity. It may be argued by gentlemen that there may be one specific act of condemnation by the legislative power that will provide for condemnation for all, but I hold that that is wholly inadequate, for the reason that this is not the mode prescribed by law for the condemnation of property under the State's right of eminent domain. That would be a judicial proceeding and would not come within the purview of the laws of the case as recognized by the laws of all civilized countries. Now I desire to read from Cooley on Constitutional Limitations something pertinent to the subject under discussion. He says:

"The definition given of the right of eminent domain implies that the purpose for which it may be exercised must not be a mere private purpose; and it is conceded on all hands that the Legislature has no power, in any case, to take the property of one individual and pass it over to another without reference to some use to which it is to be applied for the public benefit. The right of eminent domain, it has been said, does not imply a right in the sovereign power to take the property of one citizen and transfer it to another, even for full compensation, where the public interest will be in no way promoted by such transfer. It seems not to be allowable, therefore, to authorize private roads to be laid out across the lands of unwilling parties by an exercise of this right. The easement in such a case would be the property of him for whom it was established; and although the owner would not be deprived of the fee in the land, the beneficial use and exclusive enjoyment of his property would, in greater or less degree, be interfered with. Nor would it be material to inquire what quantum of interest would pass from him. It would be sufficient that some interest, the appropriation of which detracted from his right and authority, and interfered with his exclusive possession as owner, had been taken against his will; and if taken for a purely private purpose, it would be unlawful."

Now, in this connection, I desire to suggest to the committee the fact that a practical application of the rule as laid down in the amendment would be, in my judgment, not a public use, but a private use, for the very good and sufficient reason that the public could not, in the very nature of things, avail themselves of the privilege. Here is a farmer who may be well off. He may be worth twenty-five thousand dollars, or fifty thousand dollars. Can he construct a railroad train and put it on that road? Certainly not. He could not do it. The most that could be done would be to enable competing companies to construct trains and put them upon the road and run in opposition to the road itself; that is, the owners of the road. Therefore, I hold that it would be a private and not a public use. It is true, it may be said, that it would cheapen freights by competition; but in this connection it may be said that we have proposed and do propose to establish by law a tariff of freights and fares. Should we not be satisfied with our own action, after having established a rate of tariff for freights and fares? Should we not be satisfied with our own work? Should we go farther and ask to still further cheapen freights by authorizing a competition in this mode and manner?

Now, Mr. Chairman, the theory upon which this amendment proceeds is, in my judgment, directly in violation of the law governing the exercise of the right of eminent domain. The mode ignores the judicial proceeding. It assumes that the Legislature may prescribe regulations. That is not condemnation under any law in existence; because, as I will read from Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, it is purely and essentially a judicial proceeding. Besides, considering the matter from a pure, equitable, and just standpoint, it would be an outrage, and it would be a destruction of the party's right. It would be taking from one man and giving to another, to proceed upon any other basis except through condemnation by a judicial proceeding. Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, page five hundred and sixty-one, says:

"Where, however, the property is not taken by the State, or by a municipality, but by a private corporation which, though for this purpose to be regarded as a public agent, appropriates it for the benefit and profit of its members, and which may or may not be sufficiently responsible to make secure and certain the payment, in all cases, of the compensation which shall be assessed, it is certainly proper, and it has sometimes been questioned whether it was not absolutely essential, that payment be actually made before the owner could be divested of his freehold. Chancellor Kent has expressed the opinion that compensation and appropriation should be concurrent: 'The settled and fundamental doctrine is, that government has no right to take private property for public purposes, without giving just compensation; and it seems to be necessarily implied that the indemnity should, in cases which will admit of it, be previously and equitably ascertained, and be ready for reception, concurrently in point of time with the actual exercise of the right of eminent domain.' And while this is not an inflexible rule unless in terms established by the Constitution, it is so just and reasonable that statutory provisions for taking private property very generally make payment precede or accompany the appropriation, and by several of the State Constitutions this is expressly required. And on general principles, it is essential that an adequate fund be provided from which the owner of the property can certainly obtain compensation; it is not competent to deprive him of his property, and turn him over to an action at law against a corporation which may or may not prove responsible, and to a judgment of uncertain efficacy. For the consequence would be, in some cases, that the party might lose his estate without redress, in violation of the inflexible maxim upon which the right is based."

Now, it is claimed that the property proposed to be taken is for the public. I deny it. The public are not in a position to take advantage of the privilege granted. It is only a private corporation or an individual having sufficient means to construct a train and run it that could take advantage of it. "On general principles it is essential that an adequate fund be provided from which the owner of the property can certainly obtain compensation." Now, I would ask the gentleman, how is this fund to be provided if the public did avail themselves of this right? Who provides this fund? "It is not competent to deprive him of his property, and turn him over to an action at law against a corporation which may or may not prove responsible, and to a judgment of uncertain efficacy." That is what the amendment proposes to do. That is the amendment proposed, that the State shall regulate it. In other words, that the State shall be the compensation. Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit to the candor of all sensible men if this scheme is practicable; if it is just. In the first place, I hold that it is impracticable; that no railroad could be under these conditions; that it would result in confusion worse confounded; that it never could be a success possibly. We are told that the things works in the East; that there are some States where parties are running independent trains. I believe it is true that one great transportation company has entered into an agreement with certain railroads to transport their cars, but they subject themselves to the President and officers of those railroads, who fix the time. But, that is just one corporation; one concern, different wholly from the public. It is not the public. The proposition here is not to confer the privilege upon the public, for the public cannot avail themselves of it. It is impossible that it should be so. But, as I remarked, it is so that independent companies might come in and compete. There is no necessity of that, for we have another means of creating competition and cheapening fares and freights; and we do propose to do it in a more efficient manner. I believe that the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, is prepared to support, and will support the proposition contained in the nineteenth and twentieth sections of the report of the Committee on Corporations, that will assuredly do that which he would seek to do indirectly by this species of confiscation, or condemnation, or whatever it may be called. I confess my utter inability to comprehend the nature of the proceeding proposed here. I say that it is not confiscation, and it is not condemnation. And in the event that it should be indorsed by this committee, I shall certainly propose to refer it to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions that they shall christen the foundling and give it some name by which we may know it.

SPEECH OF MR. GREGG.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I was much surprised when the gentleman offered the amendment. The purpose of the committee was to declare railroads under the control of law in the charges of rates of freights and fares; but I did not think there was one member of that committee that supposed the railroads themselves were the things that the law was to control. We found that the decisions and the rules would give the power of control—not against the railroads, but against those who operate them. The declaration in Munn vs. Illinois, in the first of the Granger cases, is this:

"Under the powers inherent in every sovereignty, a government may regulate the conduct of its citizens toward each other, and, when necessary for the public good, the manner in which each shall use his own property."

That was the warehouse cases. It was to use the property owned by a person in a public relation that we wanted this control by law. In the first railroad case that was before the Supreme Court of the United States, the declaration of the Justice there is that railroad companies are carriers for hire. They are incorporated as such, and given extraordinary powers, in order that they may better serve the public in that capacity. They are therefore engaged in a public employment, effecting a public interest, and under the decision in the case of Munn vs. Illinois, subject to legislative control. That is the whole sum and substance of that decision, and that class of decisions. And when any gentleman who pretends to be a lawyer gets up here and lays down the proposition that they are public highways and subject to control, I am astonished. It is the railroad companies that are subject to control in their charges, and not the railroads. Railroads have been considered the property of the railroad companies, and as such, owing to their public relation, subject to police control. As private property, they would be subject to control. Now we have the curious declaration that they are public highways. What is the effect? I ask the gentleman to answer it. Will they no longer be subject to taxation, if they are public highways? When there are injuries committed upon them, who is responsible? Who is responsible now? The public highways? I ask him, what will be the result of any such declaration? Why, I believe that the proposition is to declare that anybody may run here and there over the railroads of the State, at their pleasure, and only be subject to some charge for that privilege. Of course, every one recognizes that railroading now is a dangerous employment, and in some of the States the common law rule has been advocated in regard to liability for injuries.

Now, what is the result of such a declaration as this? It accomplishes nothing in the purpose that we are now proceeding upon. If our purpose is to regulate freights and fares upon railroads, when we declare that they are common carriers and subject to legislative control we have declared the whole truth. When we say public highways, we declare something that is endangering the whole of our system of taxation, and of our laws for the protection of the public. What would become of the laws requiring the company to fence the road. They would say: "Why, they are public highways; if they must be fenced, they must be fenced by the owners, because that is the rule." When a fire occurs along the line, occasioned by sparks from a passing locomotive, who will pay the damages? The railroad companies will say: "Why, we are not responsible; this a public highway. If anybody is responsible it is the public, and not us; because we are only going over it the same as you or anybody else can."

These foolish innovations, I will call them, they produce great changes in our jurisprudence—changes we cannot anticipate suddenly, upon the declaration. But, sir, the whole aim and purpose is accomplished by declaring them common carriers, and subject to legislative control. The other is not demanded. If gentlemen wish to make them free to any person to run cars and locomotives upon them, put a declaration of that kind in here. Of course, it will not amount to anything. Let them say that hereafter these common carriers shall permit anybody who desires to run trains over the road to do so. Then you will not be building up a system that may destroy the relations of this class of property to the public. But when the gentleman declares them public highways, he does it without examining the authorities, for not once in these cases can the gentleman find that they are controlled because they are highways. You are controlling the corporations that run them, and not the railroads. The railroad is their property, and they are subject to control.

REMARKS OF MR. WICKES.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: Every proposition that is placed before this house elicits a great deal of talk; and I do not believe it amounts to much in determining the position of members who have already made up their minds, either upon principle or upon prejudice. For my part, I think that we should employ what brief authority we now possess wisely and well, and to do that we must be just to all classes alike, whether rich or poor, high or low. I am opposed to this amendment, because I believe it involves a partial confiscation of the railway beds. I do not believe in laying obstructions in the way of associated wealth that is employed in developing the resources of our State. I believe rather in encouraging it, but preventing it from oppressing society. I believe that our railway system, under proper regulation by the State, might be made a benefit to all in developing the resources of the State. I am in favor of the State jurisdiction over railroad corporations, and in favor of their being equitably taxed, but I am opposed to this amendment, because I believe that it involves a partial confiscation of the railroad beds.

MR. GREGG. Mr. President: I argued the proposition upon the supposition that the other day the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

MR. BARBOUR. I said I had no objection to the amendment. I accept the amendment.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment; a corrected section as corrected by the Committee on Corporations, which they authorized me to present to the consideration of the Convention by way of a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"All railroad and transportation companies shall be common carriers, and subject to legislative control. Any association or corporation, organized for the purpose under the laws of this State, shall have the right to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each the other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, without delay or discrimination."

Adopted, on a division, by a vote of 78 ayes to 31 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 15. All railroads and transportation companies shall be common carriers and subject to legislative control. Any association or corporation, organized for the purpose under the laws of this State, shall have the right to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each the other's passengers, tonnage, and cars without delay or discrimination."

MR. WILSON, of First District. Is it open to amendment?

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir, I think not.

MR. WILSON. I would like to reoffer the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, "after just compensation being made therefor." As it is now, they have a right to pass over the road without paying for it at all.

MR. MCFARLAND. I would like to ask why the word "canal" has has been left out; whether it was intentionally omitted, or whether it is a mere oversight.

MR. ESTEE. It was left out intentionally, for the reason that there are no canals in this State that are doing a carrying business.

MR. MCFARLAND. You do not propose to regulate water companies?

MR. ESTEE. Yes, sir; we have regulated water companies, but a canal is a different thing.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

Adopted.

FURNISHING SUPPLIES TO CORPORATIONS.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the next section of the report.

THE SECRETARY read section sixteen of the report—renumbered section eighteen.

SEC. 18. No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any corporation shall, during his term of office, either directly or indirectly, buy, sell, or speculate in the capital of said corporation, or be interested in the furnishing of material or supplies to such corporation, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such corporation."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute.

SPEECH OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: It is neither my intention nor my desire to inflict upon this body a speech. I merely wish to point out wherein the substitute differs from the section proposed by the Committee on Corporations. The President and directors of a corporation hold positions of public trust; therefore, they necessarily ought to be held aloof from anything that might affect the private interests of the occupants of these positions. Few men are able to discharge a public duty wherein their own private profits and losses are concerned; therefore, it is but proper that they should be removed as far as possible from these things. Now, sir, while I freely recognize the correctness of the principles involved in this section, I cannot understand why the committee confined it to railroad and canal companies alone. The principle is eminently just and proper, and should not be confined to such a narrow scope. If it is a sound principle to apply to railroads, it is equally good when applied to other corporations; therefore, I have stricken out "railroads and canal companies," and inserted "corporations." The only other change is in the nature of an amendment, or an addition. I simply followed it out to its logical sequence. It provides that no President or director, who has the control and management of a corporation shall be allowed to furnish that corporation with supplies or material. That is a sound principle, and certainly the argument is more forcible, and the reasons more cogent, why they should not be permitted to speculate in the capital stock of the corporation. Hence, I have added that provision to the section, that no President or director shall be allowed to speculate in the capital stock of the corporation. It is an imposition upon the stockholders and an imposition upon the public.

Digitized by Google

It is to remedy these evils that I offer this amendment. It will be noticed that it makes no change in the original, but merely widens the scope of it.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I notice that this section provides that no President or director shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the transportation of freight or passengers over the works of any company. I would like to inquire if it means that no stockholder shall be President or director, for the stockholders are necessarily interested in the transportation of freight and passengers over the works of the company. It says that no President or director shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the business of carrying freight and passengers. Now that, sir, would preclude all the stockholders from being President or directors of the corporation, because, as soon as a man becomes a stockholder he necessarily becomes interested. It says he shall not be interested either directly or indirectly. It does seem to me that this would be a common sense construction of that section. I suppose the President would not be allowed to own a share of stock, and under this provision the corporation would have to go outside for the President and directors to manage the affairs of the corporation, because it says distinctly that they shall not be interested, directly or indirectly.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. I do not think the criticisms of the gentlemen are well founded. The present section reads that "no President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company." I appeal to the common sense of members whether any such construction can be put upon the section. The object is to prevent an officer from being in a position where he can sell to the company his own property.

MR. BARNES. Is not that the rule of common law now?

MR. ESTEE. Yes, sir; but——

MR. PORTER. The expression against these particular corporations might open the door to others, by giving them indirect permission to deal with themselves.

MR. ESTEE. I do not think it will.

MR. PORTER. I think it will.

MR. ESTEE. The proposition is in regard to the business of transporting, as a common carrier, freights and passengers. Now the section says that no member of a corporation—that is, no President, director, officer, agent, or employé of a transportation company—shall go to the company and make a contract whereby the company will agree to carry his freight and passengers for a less amount over their road; that he shall not deal with them in the position he occupies, the confidential relations which he occupies with the company placing him in such a position that he can defraud the stockholders and enrich himself, if he chooses. If he has no restraint upon him, he will necessarily make that kind of a contract whereby he would make the most money and the company would make the least. This is no modern provision; it is not new. But I wish to say to this Convention that this seems to be the reasonable and rational way to correct what are claimed to be evils affecting some of these corporations. As to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud, I have no objection to applying the section, the principle, to all corporations. I am speaking now for myself. I have no objections to it; but he uses a term about speculating in stocks. It seems to me that the word speculate would be a very vague and uncertain expression. What does speculate mean? We all know what the general acceptation of the word is, but still it is uncertain when the section comes to be judicially determined. Of course every President and every director must own some of the stock of the corporation. He must own it before he can be an officer in the corporation. He ought to own it, and therefore I would suggest, as far as the amendment is concerned, that he offer it as an independent section, and enunciate what he thinks proper, and in any form he chooses. I would not like to insert a clause here prohibiting an officer from buying and selling his own stock. So far as the evils he complains of are concerned, let us strike at them in a way that will be sure to accomplish some good. I do not think it is wise to adopt the amendment, although I would be in favor of having the principle applied to every corporation in the State.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I hope the amendment, under the circumstances, will be voted down, and I will then make a motion to rerefer this section back to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. It seems to me, Mr. President, that when in section fifteen we say that all railroads and transportation companies shall be common carriers, that is sufficient in that direction. We say they shall be common carriers. Now it is proposed, according to the express terms of section fifteen, to make them common carriers, and then we say in section sixteen that "no president, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company." He cannot be interested, directly or indirectly, in the legitimate business of the corporation of which he is a member, and certainly everybody will admit that the President and directors ought to be selected from among the stockholders of the company. It seems to me that the statements made by Judge McFarland are entirely pertinent here, and it seems to me that the section should be reconstructed. I am not in favor of any provision that will oblige the companies to put up directors of straw, and a President of straw. It certainly would not be advisable. I see one of the San Francisco journals, the Morning Call, refers to this matter, and suggests that the natural effect of this section would be to compel them to go outside for officers. I think it is nonsense.

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any reason in the world why all corporations should not be included within the purview of this section, and their officers put upon the same category as railroad officers, if the evil is exactly the same in both cases It strikes me, sir, that it would hardly be proper or reasonable to compel the Directors of a corporation to sell their stock simply because they are Directors. They may take advantage of the knowledge their position gives them and speculate in the stock, but cannot the private stockholder who is possessed of the means of acquiring inside information, do the same? But to say that either the director or the stockholder may not buy or sell the property, is in direct and flagrant violation of all principle of commercial business now existing or that have existed since the world began, and I shall be sorry to see any such innovation upon long established principles made by this Convention. Now, sir, as regards the officers of a corporation not being allowed to carry on business as common carriers to transport freight and passengers, such as carrying on the business of express companies, we all know what the evil complained of is, and that is intended to be remedied. But, sir, what sense, what reason is there in debarring a director of a corporation from selling his property to the corporation, the same as any private citizen can do. What sense, or reason, or justice is there in that: As I stated a few days ago, I am a director and an officer in a railroad company. I put my money into the enterprise, knowing that I was going to lose it at that, so far as any profits that might arise from the earnings of the road itself. The only way by which I calculated on being recompensed for the loss, was in the hope that the property which I owned on either side of the road would be enhanced in value by reason of having the road there, and thus counterbalance the loss. Now, on one side of that road it is twenty-eight miles to timber, and on the other side, about ten miles from the station to the timber. I have sold to the company twenty thousand cords of wood, and I have sold it to them cheaper than it could be bought for of anybody else, and yet, according to the idea here advanced, I ought to be debarred from selling my wood to the corporation, even though I sell it at lower figures than any one else can furnish it, simply because I am an officer of the company, having put my money into a precarious enterprise, for no other reason than to avail myself of these advantages. I have a thousand cords lying there now, and yet if you adopt this restriction the corporation will have to go thirty miles away, and pay half a dollar a cord more than they are paying me, and for what reason? For the simple reason that I, who have this wood to sell, have the misfortune to be a stockholder and director in the corporation. Another thing. That railroad was built partially for the purpose of carrying the milk from that region to San Francisco. I am engaged in milking about five thousand cows. Under this section I cannot send that milk to the city. It is admitted that the law should be so framed as to prevent certain patent abuses, preventing the directors from paying one price for an article and charging the stockholders another. This should be done by specific provisions. Neither the directors nor the stockholders are entitled to any privileges. If they have anything to sell, they should not be allowed to receive any more pay for it than any other citizen; but they certainly, in all reason, are entitled to receive as much, and entitled to sell to the company when the company wants to purchase. All such things as contract or finance companies, or rings within rings, should be guarded against by special provision; but such general provisions as this will not accomplish anything, and the person who puts his money out to build a railroad, not with any hope of reward in the way of dividends, but with a view solely to making a market for his produce, and providing a means of sending it to market, stands lower down, because his interest in the enterprise debars him from competition or selling to the corporation when it wants to purchase. I say he stands on a lower and less advantageous footing than the citizen who has not risked a dollar in the enterprise. Sir, it seems blank nonsense to me. If you shall say that no man who puts his money into a corporation shall do any business with the corporation, then men will not be very likely to enter into any such enterprises. Nothing of that kind will suit me.

REMARKS OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: In reference to the gentleman from San Francisco, the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, I will state that I prefer to offer this amendment to section sixteen, because I find this is the provision to which it was offered in the debates of the Constitution of Ohio. I will state that it was defeated there by a tie vote, and no member of that Convention objected to it because it was offered as an amendment to this section in their Constitution.

In response to the gentleman from Marin, I will state that the directors and President of a corporation hold positions of public trust towards the stockholders, and therefore the stockholders have a right to expect their duties impartially and justly discharged. If, as the gentleman states, these directors, of whom he is one, desire to buy and sell, or in any way deal in the capital stock of the corporation, or take part in any of the contracts of the corporation, it is their duty, and they ought, to resign.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: The abuse which this section is aimed at is well described in the report of the Railroad Commissioners to the Legislature last Winter, and I beg the indulgence of members while I read a portion of that report with regard to the officers and directors of corporations dealing with themselves. I read from section fifty-four of the report:

Digitized by Google

"That the fixed capital of most of our railroad companies has been illegally exaggerated or inflated, scarcely admits of doubt. The process of building railroads through the instrumentality of a construction company, managed by the same persons who control the railroad company, has grown, of late, to be familiar; it may be called common knowledge. The directors, or persons controlling the railroad company, organize a construction company composed of themselves, or of persons acting in their interest; a contract is made between the two companies for the construction and equipment of the road, which the construction company agrees to do for a price, nominally measured in money, but payable entirely in mortgage bonds and stock of the railroad company. In this way, as the construction of the road proceeds, bonds and stock are issued for an amount which bears no necessary relation to the cost of the work, but is fixed, arbitrarily, in advance. As the same persons control both companies, any modifications of the construction contract which their interests may suggest are made by common consent, and when completed the road and its equipment are represented by an amount of fixed capital in the shape of full-paid stock and bonds, on which henceforth interest and dividends must be earned, and which exceeds the actual cost of the work just as much as the directors see fit to prescribe in advance. The evils of this system of inflated capital are not confined to an enhancement of the cost of transportation. It not only affords an excuse for excessive rates, but operates to deter from the construction of rival roads, or the establishment of other competing lines, by giving a fictitious idea of the cost of the construction and of the wealth and power of those who are to be competed with. It likewise practically restricts the building of railroads to those who are willing to take the risk of violating the law by virtue of which they are constructed."

So, it will readily be seen what the evils are that this section aims to correct. The provision is right and just, and this Convention will act wisely if they adopt it.

REMARKS OF MR. SCHELL.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say that I think this section is not justly entitled to the criticisms which have emanated from the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, and the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher. They say that the President and directors and agents of a railroad company must necessarily be interested, either directly or indirectly, in the transportation of freights and passengers, and, therefore, it involves an inconsistency. Now, I do not understand that to be the meaning of this section. I think, for one, that if the section means anything, it means that no President, director, or officer, or agent, shall be, as an individual, interested, directly or indirectly, as a common carrier in the transportation of freight or passengers. It is the company itself which is interested in that matter, and the President, who is but an individual, acting as the agent of the company or the officer of the company, cannot, as an individual, be interested in the transportation of freight and passengers. And that is precisely the meaning of it, that he shall not be a common carrier himself, but it is to be the company that is the common carrier. That is the thing desired to be reached by this section. Now, I desire to say one word in relation to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud. It would not be proper, in my judgment, to amend this section in this way, for it certainly would destroy the object of the section, and would involve an inconsistency. The gentleman desires to have it apply to all corporations. The object of the section is to apply to railroad and transportation companies, and none other. Now, if it is made to apply to every other company, then every other company or corporation is denied the right to act as a common carrier. We do not suppose, Mr. Chairman, that other companies can act as common carriers. We do not suppose that a mining corporation could act as a common carrier. We do not suppose that a banking corporation could act as a common carrier. Hence, I say the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco involves an inconsistency, and would read in this way: That all companies and corporations shall be prohibited from carrying on the business of transportation and carrying passengers as common carriers. The amendment involves an inconsistency, and I hope it will not pass, and that the section as reported will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: One word on this subject. I have no doubt myself that the construction placed upon the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud, by the gentleman from Stanislaus, Judge Schell, is the correct one. This is a prohibition that owners in corporations shall not transact the business of common carriers. A man may own a sawmill—be a stockholder in a sawmill, sawing wood or sawing plank, making lumber, up in Humboldt, and if he was he could not deal in the business of transportation at all. He could not be a stockholder in a Humboldt sawmill and a stockholder in a railroad company in Los Angeles. I do not see any reason why a man transacting business in Humboldt could not own stock in a company in the City of Los Angeles. That is the natural reading and construction of this section. "No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any corporation, shall, during his term of office, be interested in the business of transportation as a common carrier," etc. Certainly the gentleman did not intend any such construction to be placed upon it, but that is the natural construction, it seems to me, that a Court would place upon it. Therefore, as a matter of course, this amendment will be voted down by this Convention. If a man is interested in a corporation in San Francisco which is engaged in making shoes, he cannot be interested in the business of transportation as a common carrier. There is no good reason why he should be prohibited. The man who owns mining stock cannot be interested in a railroad. That is certainly the construction that can be placed upon it.

Now, the original section sixteen is susceptible to the construction placed upon it by the two gentlemen preceding me. Called upon as a lawyer to construe that section, at the request of a client going to operate under it, I would say, if you are a President, director, agent, or employé of any railroad company, or canal company, you cannot own any of the stock in that company, because it is an interest, and you are prohibited from being interested directly or indirectly. As a President you cannot be interested in any way or shape. Now, the learned gentleman from Merced, Judge Schell, says that this is the business of the corporation which is being carried on. I say, in the business of the corporation the stockholder is interested, and the meaning of this is that he shall not be interested. "No President, director, officer, agent, or employé, of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly," etc. It seems to me he is directly interested. The wording is very broad—"he shall not be interested." Of course the business belongs to the artificial entity of the company, but certainly the words are broad enough, it seems to me, to bear this construction. "No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company, shall be interested in the business as a common carrier." Now, if a gentleman is interested in any railroad—if he is interested in a narrow gauge railroad as a stockholder—he could not have his goods transported over a wide gauge railroad, because he is engaged in the transportation of goods over a wide gauge road. There will be very serious results, in my judgment, growing out of this section. As to the first portion of it, in relation to the furnishing of material and supplies by the officers of the company, I have this to say: In the first place, this is a principle of the common law, and you do not want to take up a principle of the common law, for the very reason laid down by the gentleman, Mr. Porter, that when you come to specify one thing you naturally exclude everything else, under the maxim, "expressio unius exclusio est alterius." Now, it says the President shall not be interested in the furnishing of material and supplies, which might be construed as a permission for them to do everything else. They may make any other trade, they may sell real estate, they may speculate in a thousand ways, so long as they do not furnish material or supplies. The limit is simply upon furnishing material or supplies. They may trade with the company in any other way, they may speculate in other ways. For that reason I think it is much better to let it rest on the common law principle, that no man can serve two masters; that he cannot act as an officer of the company and be engaged in speculation with the company at the same time. Better leave it as it is. It is better, broader, and more comprehensive in the law than you can make it in the Constitution. There are many good things we approve, but we do not want to put them all in the Constitution. We approve of the command, "Thou shalt not steal," but need we embody it in the Constitution? We approve the command, "Thou shalt do no murder," but need we therefore embody it in this instrument? Certainly not. We leave that to the Legislature. Therefore I am opposed to this whole section. I am opposed to the first part, because it is only a partial and limited exposition of the common law principle. The common law doctrine is better and clearer than anything we can put in the Constitution. I am opposed to the second part of it because it is susceptible to the construction—and that is enough—that no President, director, officer, agent, or employé can own stock in his own company. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud, because, as I said before, it would exclude a man who is a stockholder in a Humboldt sawmill from owning any stock in any railroad company, or in any transportation corporation.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the Convention will pardon me for referring to the authority of the Constitutions of the older States of the Union in the debate upon this occasion. I confess, sir, I think the experience of others can well be taken as a guide for our action. Now, I find, notwithstanding the very elaborate argument of my friend from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, in opposition to this section, that in nearly all the recent Constitutions that have been adopted, this section, or something substantially like it, has been adopted. If the gentleman will turn to the debates in the Constitutional Convention of Missouri, he will find there the most elaborate reasons given for the adoption of this very section. The Constitution of Missouri, adopted in eighteen hundred and seventy-five, contains the following:

"SEC. 22. No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad company, shall be interested directly or indirectly in furnishing material or supplies to such company, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company."

MR. WILSON. If the gentleman will permit me. Do you know of any instance in which any Court has construed that section?

MR. ESTEE. I was coming to that. As far as Missouri is concerned, the Constitution was not adopted until eighteen hundred and seventy-five, and I do not know of any case having arisen under this section. But you will find, by referring to the Pennsylvania Constitution of eighteen hundred and seventy-three, under article seventeen, section six, the following:

"SEC. 6. No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company, shall be interested directly or indirectly in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company."

Now, it is true, sir, that your committee, in adopting this section, were guided in a great degree by the experience of others. This was the part of wisdom; it would have been folly not to have done so, and therefore I do think it would be eminently proper to have this section incorporated in the Constitution. If the gentleman will point out any harm that will come of it, then of course it should be remedied so as to relieve it from that objection, so that no wrong can come to any person by reason of it; for we are not here to legislate, as I understand it, in the interest of any particular enterprise or against any particular enterprise. But the fact that this provision, in substance, is a part of the common law of the land, does not argue against its adoption here. Sometimes it is wise to put a little common law into the Constitution so we all may know what it is. A little common sense will not hurt either, and there is no question but it would aid us in the construction of the law. There is no doubt about that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is true that this section does not apply to all corporations, as the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud, proposes. This section only applies to officers of transportation companies, and to them only. All other corporations are left under the control of the Legislature. It strikes me that the criticisms about directors not being permitted to deal with the corporation is unjust. Why should they deal with it as individuals and thus contract with themselves?

The statements of the gentleman from Marin show very conclusively that they ought not to be allowed to deal with the corporation. There may be instances where the corporation is benefited and the officer is benefited, but in the main, in the great majority of cases, no director or officer of a corporation ought to be allowed to deal with the corporation in which he is an officer. He is in the position of a trustee; he may represent millions of dollars, and in the exercise of that trust it is expecting too much of a man, that he will deal with the corporation of which he is a trustee, where there are vast sums of money involved, holding its secrets and in possession of its business knowledge, and not get the best of the bargain. It would be very natural for him to deal with himself in the most favorable manner to himself. I do not say he is necessarily dishonest, but without this protection he could be. He certainly is not going to give away his own interests for the benefit of the corporation. I submit to the Convention that no such opportunities should be allowed him. These officers should be confined to the transaction of the official duties imposed upon them by law, as the representatives of corporations. Now, I cannot see how, in the consideration of this section, it can be said that a President or director of a corporation is interested as a common carrier when he is a stockholder only. The section reads:

"No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company."

That is all right; no objection is made to it. No one can certainly object to that; but further, "or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company."

That is, that he shall not, while occupying a judiciary position, engage in business with his own company, as an individual, as a common carrier of freight or passengers, outside of his official relations with the company, because if he could do so it would be very easy for directors to contract with themselves to carry freight and passengers at one price, and then make the public pay another price, thereby permitting them to commit a great fraud upon the people and upon the stockholders. If the gentleman can present any more correctly worded section than that reported by the committee, embodying the same ideas, we will accept it. The committee have no pride of opinion about this matter. The question is an important one and ought to be embodied in the Constitution. It is fair and honest. It can do no harm. It will protect important interests and destroy none of them.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: Is an amendment now in order?

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. MCCALLUM. Then I offer this amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert between the word 'company' and the word 'shall,' in line two, the words, 'except as a stockholder of such company.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. MCCALLUM. Now, Mr. President, while I am aware that this section is to be found in the Constitutions of some other States, I think it is a pertinent question to ask if any Court has ever given it judicial construction. It seems that the committee have reported the identical language of another Constitution, which was read awhile ago by the Chairman. It must be apparent to every man, whether he is a lawyer or not a lawyer, that the views expressed by Mr. Wilson and others are correct, and that the section is susceptible of no other construction. It says:

"SEC. 16. No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company."

Therefore he is interested, both directly and indirectly, as a stockholder. The general law provides that no one can be an officer of a corporation unless he is a stockholder. It is admitted here that the object of this provision is not to require that the President, directors, officers, and employés shall not be stockholders; that is admitted. The section—I don't care if it is found in other Constitutions—in the absence of judicial construction, is susceptible of no other construction than that it precludes every person who is a stockholder from being engaged in the business of transportation, directly contrary to section fifteen. I am in favor of the principle presented here in this report, therefore I have tried to make it intelligible, and not contradictory of what we have done. Therefore I offer this amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I have not had much opportunity to consider this amendment (Mr. Freud's). As a general rule the report of a committee ought to be followed, unless for special and obvious reason its recommendation should be disregarded. In this matter I prefer to adhere to the report of the committee. Section sixteen, as I understand it, is intended to prohibit the officers and managers of corporations from dealing with themselves. It is intended to protect stockholders by making it unlawful for directors to enter into contracts for or among themselves. This same provision may be found in other State Constitutions. It is contained in the Constitution of Pennsylvania of eighteen hundred and seventy, and after being in force for six years it was again adopted in the new Constitution of that State—ratified in eighteen hundred and seventy-six. This is some evidence that the provision is a good one, and has operated satisfactorily in one of the great States of the Union.

Now, I do not understand, as has been argued, that this provision will operate to prevent directors, etc., from disposing of their own property. They are only prohibited from either directly or indirectly disposing of their own property to the companies of which they are directors.

It is true, as has been said, directors may have power to dispose of the whole corporate property, and to deal with the public generally. The section does not prevent this, and is not intended to restrict their powers in this regard, but only to limit their powers when making contracts among themselves, or in which they may be personally interested. In furnishing materials or supplies, the directors cannot deal with the President or director, officer, etc., of the company, and such President, etc., shall not either directly or indirectly be interested therein, but they may deal with any one else.

They may sell the corporate property, purchase or authorize the purchase of property as fully as the law may authorize, in all other respects, notwithstanding this limitation.

If the limitation be nothing more than the declaration of a principle of recognized common law, there certainly should be no objection to its being a declared principle of constitutional law.

As to the other branch of the prohibition, that directors, etc., shall not be interested in the business of transportation as a common carrier, etc., over the works owned, etc., by such company, we all understand its purpose. We all know it is a common practice for railroad companies to grant special privileges and concessions to individuals and companies for the transportation of freight, etc. Not granted to the public generally. We have heard of the "Red Line," the "Blue Line," and others, that have these special privileges; we have also heard of express companies having certain exclusive privileges, and it is asserted and generally believed, the directors and officers of railroad corporations are sometimes interested in these special and exclusive privileges, to the detriment of the public and the stockholders who have no interest therein. The purpose of this portion of section sixteen, is to put a stop to this practice, and I am in favor of its adoption. It reads, "railroad and canal companies." Canal companies should be stricken out, as was done in section fifteen.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I am glad to see gentlemen so morally inclined as to quote so copiously from the good book. I remember, also, of having read some time, in a Sunday school book, that God created man upright; but he has sought out since that time many inventions. It is in order to preclude some of those evil inventions that man in his wisdom has suggested, that this section is offered. What has occurred in other States, what has been done by the officers of railroad companies in other States, may possibly be done in this State. And in order to avoid a repetition of the abuses, and frauds, and rascalities that have been perpetrated in other States by office holders, and Presidents, directors, and employés, acting as interested parties, dealing with themselves, to the injury of the stockholders, we have offered this section. There was rather a singular exhibition in the Western States; almost every railroad officer suddenly became wealthy, and the Legislatures in those States appointed Commissioners to investigate and report, and they discovered in these examinations that there were certain men who had studied the ways that are dark and tricks that are vain. Men who had been poor all their lives, living in very ordinary dwelling houses, suddenly became rich, and had mansions to live in, and their wives and daughters suddenly began to dress in very different style from what they had been accustomed to, and they continued a life of extravagance which precluded the idea that they had obtained this sudden wealth honestly. These investigations showed they had obtained money indirectly, profits indirectly, from the fact that they were officers of the corporation, and were engaged in making contracts for the company, being interested themselves, privately, in those contracts. Now, this section sixteen is simply intended to correct such abuses; and I believe every lawyer here will say its plain, common sense meaning is, that these officers shall not, as officers, transact any business only as representing the company; that the stockholders shall not be defrauded in any such manner as I have described; that there be no such middle operations as will place money in the pockets of the officers at the expense of the rest of the stockholders. That is the object of the section, and I believe it is competent to accomplish that object.

REMARKS OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I like the wording of this section. It reads well. Listen: "No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company." That section reads well and should be adopted. I am sorry to see so much dissension among these lawyers. [Laughter.] We have an immense delegation of lawyers, and we find them ranged in the ranks in opposition to the workingmen. That is very natural, Mr.

Digitized by Google

Chairman. Down in San Francisco, they have a bar association, and they have also an association of bar-tenders. [Laughter.] Between the two the most friendly relations exist. [Roars of laughter.] The bar-tenders, by unanimous vote, have admitted members of the bar to their association. [Laughter and applause.] Now, sir, we find a great deal of dissension among these lawyers. They are trying in every manner, way, and shape possible to destroy the effect of this section sixteen. That section is just what the people of the State of California want, and I hope every honest member of this Convention will vote for it.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. President: I make a motion, or an amendment, that O'Donnell don't read any more of his speech; but I make a motion to have it printed.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that one great consideration, in the discussion of this section, has been lost sight of. The real merit of the case is not in the single consideration of the interests of the stockholders. The great consideration in the adoption of this section as it now stands—and I may as well announce now that I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, because I believe it will destroy the entire section. I accept the construction given by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, as an honest interpretation of this section. It is perfectly proper that it should exclude these officers from the positions that they occupy in the company. What is that for? The object is to exclude these officers, while they are occupying positions of trust in the company, from the business of transporting freight and passengers on their own account. You all remember the great fire of eighteen hundred and fifty-two, when the City of Sacramento was laid in ashes by the flames. D. O. Mills, one of your citizens, and a man of great influence and resources, he chartered the solitary boat that was capable of transporting lumber, and he was able, in the period of three days, to furnish you lumber at three hundred dollars per thousand. You could not get lumber in any other manner. How was it done? Why, by simply controlling the solitary line of communication. Now, what is the object and purpose of this section? Simply to prevent these officers from being interested in such a manner as to make a discrimination against the public. That is the object and purpose of it. Does any gentleman understand the force and effect of the argument? Do you understand the depth and breadth of this section? Do you understand the purpose for which it has been drawn? I accept the construction given to it by the learned gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, as the correct interpretation. The object is to preclude these officers, while occupying confidential positions, from being interested in the carrying of freight or passengers. That is exactly what this does. I undertake to say that the amendment proposed destroys this section, and by simply allowing them to own stock you destroy its effect for good.

MR. McCALLUM. Under this section, as it reads, no stockholder could be an officer of the corporation. It says: "No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company." They shall not be interested, directly or indirectly.

MR. HERRINGTON. It is unnecessary to put that amendment in. The section is perfectly clear. We have no objection to their being stockholders in the company over which the freight is carried. It is as clear as a sunbeam to anybody who will read it. He is directly and indirectly interested in the freight that goes over the road, but he shall not be directly interested in the line that transports it. That is clear enough. I am speaking of owners of the freight. It is very clear, and I will read it: "No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any railroad or canal company shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the furnishing of material or supplies to such company." Everybody can understand that. He shall not be interested in furnishing it to the company. He is interested in obtaining supplies, as a matter of course, because he is a part owner in the company, but he must not be interested in selling it himself. The other part of the section is just as clear: "Or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such company." Now, there can be but one construction given to that. It is unnecessary to say that because he is a stockholder of the company he is interested in the manner contemplated by the prohibition in this section, because he is not. He is in no manner interested in the freight. He owns none of it; has no interest in it, except so far as the toll is concerned. That is all he is interested in. It is the business of furnishing this material that he is prohibited from engaging in. It is the business of a common carrier that he is prohibited from engaging in. Now, if it can be made any plainer, I would like to see it. They are not in any manner interested in the ownership of the property. The section is clear and explicit, and should be passed without amendment.

MR. CAPLES. I may be permitted to suggest to the committee that it is really a waste of time to discuss this matter. We are practically a unit upon the principle involved. There is but one sentiment here, and that sentiment is in favor of the idea intended to be conveyed by the section, but we do differ as to the construction which can be placed upon the language. There is a direct conflict between it and the preceding section. At the best, the language is susceptible to two or three interpretations, and I therefore move that we refer the matter back to the committee, with instructions to put it in language that will convey the idea, and be less ambiguous.

SPEECH OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I did not intend to take any part in this discussion upon this section. But it does seem to me that the criticisms expended upon it are to a great extent hypercriticisms. I do not think the section is open to the construction that is placed upon it. We all understand that by this section there are two evils desired to be remedied. One, that trustees of a corporation shall not traffic with themselves as such trustees. That they shall not be interested in furnishing supplies or material to the company. The committee are satisfied, I think, that this is all right. That is a rule of law as old as the law itself. This is not as broad as the rule which has been laid down by the Courts; not as broad as the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of this State in a case where a gentleman was a member of the Board of Trustees of one of the southern towns in this State, either Santa Barbara or San Diego. He was also interested in a corporation that was to get a grant of land from the town, and he acted in the first place as a trustee of the town in making the grant of land. He was also interested as a member of the corporation that received this grant. There was no pretense of any wrong or fraud of any kind in the transaction; and yet, upon the suggestion being made, and the point being raised, the Supreme Court of this State declared that it came within the rule which prevented a trustee from trafficing in his trust. Now, I say it is less extensive than the general rule of law; but it is, of course, intended to apply to a class of cases which exist, and has existed, in this State in almost every one of these corporations. That is to say, that the persons who are in the management of the companies reap benefits and extraordinary profits by reason of contracts made with themselves in relation to furnishing materials and supplies.

The second part of the section is intended, as I understand it, to prevent such evils as may grow out of companies being organized within the company, to do a carrying business over the same line. This was the evil which existed in the State of Pennsylvania, and which exists here. For instance, Wells, Fargo & Company have an exclusive monopoly of the packet business over all the railroads of this State, and they reap a very large reward from the expeditious manner in which they are enabled to conduct their business. The evil in Pennsylvania, and other States, was this: lines were gotten up called fast freight lines, which ran almost entirely independent of the general lines and general freight business of the company. They solicited freight at great points like New York and Cincinnati, over blue lines, red lines, and star lines, which, under their contract with the railroad companies, had peculiar advantages. They had the right of way over the railroad, and the right to displace all other trains, so that they could get through more quickly. For such transportation, these companies charged a higher rate than the usual price over the same roads. These corporations were thus enabled to reap a large reward. In these contracts the officers of the corporations were largely interested. In other words, they derived benefits from the contracts for the transportation of freight made by themselves with themselves. These were the two great evils. They were sought to be overcome by that section of the Constitution read by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee. I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento, to send it back to the committee. Let us vote on it as it stands. I am prepared to vote for the section just as it is.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

MR. INMAN. I second the motion.

MR. EVEY. I second it.

MR. STEELE. So do I.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. I second it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The previous question has been called for. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

MR. REYNOLDS. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that it is out of order to move the previous question in the Committee of the Whole. I also make the point that there is no rule by which the previous question can be moved in the Committee of the Whole.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order in debating the question.

MR. REYNOLDS. My point is that there is no rule by which the previous question can be moved in the Committee of the Whole.

THE CHAIRMAN. Rule Fifty-six expressly provides for the previous question in the Committee of the Whole.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: It is understood that there was an attempt made to change Rule Fifty-six, so as to provide for the previous question in the Committee of the Whole. There was an attempt made to change Rule Sixty, which passed by a majority vote, but not by a two-thirds vote. Now it requires a vote of two thirds of the whole Convention to change a standing rule, but a rule or order may be temporarily suspended by a vote of two thirds of the members present. That is Rule Sixty. The vote by which Rule Fifty-six was attempted to be changed was not a two-thirds vote of the whole Convention—see Journal of November eleventh, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight; affirmative 77, negative 29, which was not a two-thirds vote of the whole Convention. Now, Rule Sixty reads as follows:

"No standing rule or order of the Convention shall be rescinded or changed without a vote of two thirds, and one day's notice being given of a motion therefor. But a rule or order may be suspended temporarily by a vote of two thirds of the members present."

The expression of the one thing is the exclusion of the other; therefore, Rule Fifty-six was not properly amended. The amendment was not carried according to Rule Sixty, and it is therefore not in order to move the previous question in the Committee of the Whole.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried on a division vote—ayes, 73; noes, 33.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

Lost.

Digitized by Google

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud, which the Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No President, director, officer, agent, or employé of any corporation shall, during his term of office, either directly or indirectly, buy or speculate in the capital of said corporation, or be interested in the furnishing of material or supplies to such corporation, or in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works owned, leased, controlled, or worked by such corporation."

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section seventeen.

MR. DOWLING. Is not an amendment to the other section in order?

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

THE SECRETARY read section seventeen, now numbered section nineteen:

SEC. 17. No railroad or other transportation company shall grant free passes, or passes or tickets at a discount, to any person holding any office of honor, trust, or profit in this State; and the acceptance of any such pass or ticket, by a member of the Legislature or any public officer, shall work a forfeiture of his office.

MR. MCCONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

The SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding after the word 'office,' in the fifth line, the following: 'The Legislature shall provide by statute for the punishment as a felony of any officer or employé of any railroad or other transportation company who shall give or offer to give to any public officer of or in this State, legislative, executive, or judicial, or other position, a free ticket or pass, or ticket for less price than the usual rates, or who shall knowingly permit such officer to ride on or over such railroad without paying therefor the usual rates.'"

MR. SHAFTER. I move to amend. After the words "public officers," insert, "or member of any Constitutional Convention."

MR. MCCONNELL. I accept the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

MR. MCCALLUM. I move to insert the word "capital" before the word "punishment," so as to read, "capital punishment as a felony."

THE CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order at present.

REMARKS OF MR. BARNES.

MR. BARNES. I hope these amendments will be voted down. This is making a farce of a very serious piece of business. I think it is time to stop these ridiculous amendments which are intended to make this a matter of ridicule. What is the use in putting in an amendment, "any member of a Constitutional Convention?" It is simply ridiculous. It is not a proper provision to put in, and I hope my sportive friend from the hills of Marin will get a lesson that will make him refrain from this kind of sport in future. Let him retire to his favorite hills if he wishes to indulge in this kind of thing. For my part I am tired of it.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: This amendment seems to me to be a very reasonable proposition. I do not see why this provision should not be made to apply to the members of Constitutional Conventions as well as to officers of the State. The gentleman has accepted my amendment, and I think it is just as proper and just as sensible as the balance of the provision, though I don't think either very sensible.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

Mr. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: The section as originally reported reads as follows:

"SEC. 17. No railroad or other transportation company shall grant free passes, or passes or tickets at a discount, to any person holding any office of honor, trust, or profit in this State; and the acceptance of any such pass or ticket by a member of the Legislature, or any public officer, shall work a forfeiture of his office."

That provision is found in several of the Constitutions, and it will not do any harm here, and it may do considerable good. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Marin, and a number of other gentlemen who argued very learnedly here that we were all officers of the State, that if we are, it is quite unnecessary to adopt the amendment proposed, because this section says, "any person holding any office of honor, trust, or profit in this State." If being a member of this Convention constitutes an officer; if membership here is an office; if it be an honor; if it is a trust; the amendment of my friend is entirely unnecessary. I hope the section will be adopted as it is presented.

MR. SHAFTER. I am gratified to see the gentleman from San Francisco backing down from his position and coming over to my ground at last. He said then that we were not officers, and now he agrees with me that we are. I offered this amendment in accordance with the decision of the majority of this Convention. I am glad to see the gentleman coming over to my side on that matter.

MR. MCCONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will be adopted. The man who offers a pass as a bribe, is as guilty as the one who accepts it, and ought to be punished. The section is a proper one, and this amendment is necessary to give it full force and effect.

MR. REYNOLDS. I move the gag rule, politely called the previous question.

MR. HOWARD. I second the motion.

THE CHAIRMAN. The previous question has been called for. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

Carried. Ayes, 80.

THE CHAIRMAN. The main question has been ordered. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McConnell.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, the Secretary will read section eighteen.

THE SECRETARY read section eighteen, renumbered section twenty:

SEC. 18. No railroad company, or other common carrier, shall combine or make any contract with the owners of any vessel that leaves port or makes port in this State, or with any common carrier, by which combination or contract the earnings of one doing the carrying are to be shared by the other not doing the carrying.

MR. AYERS. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section eighteen, by adding after the word 'carrying,' in the fifth line, 'and whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with a rival railroad line, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not be again raised or increased from such reduced standard.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I offer this amendment in obedience to what I consider a correct principle. This is a principle which is in part contained in the O'Connor Act of two years ago, and which has worked some good. That Act required that rates existing on the first of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, should remain the rates from that time forth. The rule worked well in some portions of the State, at least it did in that portion of the State which I in part represent. At that time Senator Jones, of Nevada, had built a railroad from Santa Monica connecting with Los Angeles. The Southern Pacific Company already had a road in operation from Los Angeles to Wilmington, both roads reaching tide water, and giving the inhabitants of that section the benefit of an ocean highway. But it was soon found that the policy of the old company was to crush out every competing line, so, in order to kill off this competing road, they put the fares down to a very low rate, less than a paying rate. While the fares were thus reduced, the O'Connor bill was passed, fixing the rates at those which obtained on the first of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-six. The Santa Monica road was frozen out, and the owner was compelled to sell to the old corporation, and they found themselves in this position: that while killing off the opposition they had placed the rates below a fair and living rate, and when they had killed it off this law came in and prevented them from raising them again. It worked well in that instance, but a factor has come in which prevents the people there from realizing the benefits of that Act. The aim of this amendment is to incorporate that principle in the Constitution. There are many places in this State where an established line of railroad might subserve the interests of the people, and be made to pay a fair rate, and might be made a good investment to its owners, but under the existing circumstances no man is willing to place his money in the stock of a corporation of that kind where the great monopoly has the power at any moment to crush it out of existence or compete it out of existence. At the present time I know, that if that protection were in the Constitution, the people of my section of the State would disenthrall themselves from the oppression now put upon them, and build a road, provided the great corporation could not come in and crush it out by ruinous competition with them, lowering their rates until this result could be accomplished, and then raising them again, and making up for the loss afterwards. I know that the people of my section would take stock in building a narrow gauge road into Inyo County if it were not that it is well understood that the moment such an enterprise is undertaken the great corporation would step in and either crush it out, or discourage it just before it is entered upon, by threats, as they do every such project that is undertaken, that they will also build a road there. Now, it seems to me that competition ought to be encouraged and protected. I do not think the old corporations would be apt to put down their rates below a fair standard for the purpose of crushing out opposition, if they were made aware that they could not raise them again. We have already established this principle by legislative enactment, and I hope the Convention will pass this amendment.

MR. O'DONNELL. I move to amend the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding in the third line, after the word 'carrier,' the words, 'navigating the waters of this State,' and 'no corporation shall offer to pay any bonus or premium to prevent lawful competition with its business as a common carrier.'"

MR. O'DONNELL. This is an amendment that ought to prevail. It provides that no corporation shall offer to pay any bonus or premium to prevent lawful competition with its business as a common carrier.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. GREGG. I move that we do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at four o'clock and forty-five minutes P. M. the Convention stood adjourned.

Carried.

PETITIONS.

MR. Van Dyke presented the following petition, signed by a large number of mechanics, citizens of California, asking for the insertion of a clause in the Constitution providing for a lien law:

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned respectfully represent that the practical working of the present legislation, and decisions of Supreme Court based thereon, regarding the rights of mechanics, material-men, and laborers to a lien for their labor and material furnished, is such that those who in a measure depend upon such law for just protection fail in nearly all cases to obtain it, because of the inefficient working of said law.

Wherefore, we pray you to declare in our organic law the right of every mechanic, material-man, and laborer to a perfect lien on the thing whereon his labor has been expended, or for which his materials have been furnished.

Moreover, we would state that we would be satisfied with amendment number one hundred and sixty seven, introduced by Mr. Van Dyke, on October tenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, and read and referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects, as follows:

"SEC. —. Mechanics, material-men, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property on which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials, for the value of such labor done and materials furnished, and the Legislature shall provide by law for the speedy and efficient enforcement of said liens."

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

Messrs. Stedman, Wellin, and Barbour also presented petitions on the same subject.

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

RESPONSE TO INQUIRY.

THE PRESIDENT. I have here a communication from the Superintendent of Streets of the City and County of San Francisco, in response to a resolution of this Convention. If there be no objection, it will lie on the table and be printed.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC STREETS AND HIGHWAYS,
CITY HALL, SAN FRANCISCO, November 19th, 1878.

To the honorable Constitutional Convention, Sacramento:

GENTLEMEN: In compliance with resolution number seventy-three, passed by your honorable body, I herewith have the honor of transmitting the information sought for in said resolution.

Holding myself entirely at your service for any information connected with this department, I remain,

Respectfully, your obedient servant,
L. M. MANZER, Supt. of Streets, etc.

ACQUISITION AND ALIENATION OF LAND.

MR. DAVIS introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to the acquisition and alienation of land:

Amend by adding a new section, to be known as section ——, and to read as follows:

SEC. —. The Legislature may by general law promote the abolition of land monopoly, by regulating and restricting the quantity which hereafter may be in any manner acquired or alienated.

Referred to the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose——

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

MR. VAN DYKE. I desire to present a petition from citizens of Oakland, requesting that there be a suitable expression in acknowledgment of Almighty God as the source and authority for civil government. I desire to have the petition laid on the table, as the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights have already reported.

The petition was read and laid on the table.

PETITION—TAXATION OF STOCKS.

MR. EAGON presented the following protest, signed by a large number of citizens of Amador County, protesting against the insertion of a clause taxing the capital stock of mining and other corporations:

To the honorable the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention of the State of California:

WHEREAS, Propositions have been offered in your honorable body to be engrafted in the new organic law, making it mandatory upon the Legislature to tax the stock of incorporations organized under the laws of the State; and,

WHEREAS, Incorporations so organized are mainly for the purpose of opening and developing mines which, as a rule, have no certain or fixed value until made so by an expenditure of moneys derived by assessments upon stockholders of said incorporations; and,

WHEREAS, The development of mining property and the encouragement of mining industry is largely dependent upon the coöperation of individuals associated together under the law governing incorporations; and,

WHEREAS, The taxing of the stock of incorporations of this character would have a tendency to discourage mining, and retard the growth of one of the most important interests of the State; and,

WHEREAS, The property created by the expenditure of money upon the development of mines is the only legitimate subject of taxation of such incorporations—the certificates of stock being but evidence of ownership therein;

Therefore, your petitioners, citizens of Amador county, do hereby enter their earnest protest against the adoption of any clause in the Constitution whereby the stock of incorporations shall be taxed, as wrong in principle, and calculated to discourage mining and other legitimate pursuits, and to cripple the efforts of those who, by their association in companies, would otherwise add to the material wealth of the State.

Laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO RULE FIFTY-SIX.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I move to take up the amendment to Rule Fifty-six, of which I gave notice yesterday.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the committee resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of——

MR. TINNIN. I rise to a point of order. I made a privileged motion.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not a privileged motion. It is moved and seconded that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Lost.

MR. TINNIN. I move now to take up the amendment to Rule Fifty-six.

Carried.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amendment to Rule Fifty-six: Provided, that when the previous question is sustained it shall only apply to the amendments then pending, and other amendments may be offered to the section."

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I hope that amendment will be adopted. We saw the utility of it here yesterday. As the rule stands now, the previous question is moved and carried, and the result is we cannot amend a section reported by any committee, for it will work like this: objectionable amendments may be offered to a section, and they will be voted down as a matter of course. Then the section, however objectionable in itself, cannot be amended. This will allow the Committee of the Whole to vote down objectionable amendments, and then go on and perfect the section, and of course that is in the interest of good government and what we all desire. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: I move to amend by inserting before the word "amendment," the word "last," so that it will read "the last amendment then pending," because we might desire to retain the first amendment offered while we would be unwilling to discuss the last amendment that is pending. Now, I move to amend by inserting the word "last" before the word "amendment."

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I make this point of order. This resolution admits that there is a previous question in Committee of the Whole. If you will refer to Rule Fifty-six you will find that in Committee of the Whole the previous question shall not be moved. I hold, sir, that the rule has never been changed. It is true that on the eleventh of November an attempt was made to change that rule, which resulted in a failure by a vote of seventy-seven to twenty-nine, and the Journal declared that the amendment was "adopted by the following vote." That, Mr. President, is probably a mistake of the clerk, an error of the Journal, for we find by reading Rule Sixty that "no standing rule or order of the Convention shall be rescinded or changed without a vote of two thirds, and one day's notice being given of the motion therefor; but a rule or order may be suspended temporarily by a vote of two thirds of the members present, except Rules Fifty, Fifty-one, Fifty-two, Fifty-three, and Fifty-five. Hence it follows that seventy-seven was not two thirds of the Convention required to change an established rule, and was therefore lost. Secondly, there is no authority for the use of the previous question in Committee of the Whole. The point of order that I make therefore is that this resolution is not in order.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. President: I do not believe that this Convention wants to fritter away the whole forenoon talking over this amendment. For once in my life I move the previous question.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point is not well taken. The rule was changed by a two-thirds vote.

MR. REYNOLDS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

THE PRESIDENT. It takes three to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. I second the appeal.

MR. NELSON. I second the appeal.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds, raised the point of order that the amendment proposed to Rule Fifty-six is not in order. The Chair held the point of order not well taken, from which decision an appeal has been taken. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: It seems to me that the only question between the Chair and the gentleman from San Francisco, is this: Rule Sixty says, "no standing rule or order of the Convention shall be rescinded or changed without a vote of two thirds." If "two thirds" means two thirds of the delegates elected to this Convention, or in other words two thirds of one hundred and fifty-two, then in such case the rule was not changed. But if "two thirds" means merely two thirds of the members present, then the rule was changed, and regularly changed.

MR. ESTEE. I rise to a point of order. My point is this: that the President of this Convention recognized a motion calling for the previous question. If that be so, then any intermediate questions are not debatable.

THE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Then I suppose that the appeal is not in order.

THE PRESIDENT. The appeal is in order, but not debatable. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

The ruling of the Chair was sustained, on a division, by an affirmative vote of 103.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Sacramento called for the previous question. There was a second. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

The motion prevailed.

THE PRESIDENT. The main question has been ordered. The amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington, was not seconded. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin.

The amendment was adopted.

CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I now move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendments to section eighteen were the amendments pending before the committee. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"By Mr. Ayers. Amend section eighteen by adding after the word 'carrying,' in the fifth line, 'and whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with a rival railroad line, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not be again raised or increased from such reduced standard.'"

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment proposed by the delegate from Los Angeles will be adopted by the committee. If it would not weary the committee I would like to have read sections sixty-four, sixty-five, sixty-six, sixty-seven, sixty-eight, sixty-nine, and seventy of the report of the Board of Commissioners of Transportation—General Stoneman, Mr. Doyle, and Mr. Smith—to the Legislature two years ago. It contains a recommendation, and gives the reasons in full for that recommendation, which is covered by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles. I hate to tax the patience of the committee to read so long a document, but I should like very much for these sections to be read.

THE CHAIRMAN. It cannot be read except by a vote of the Convention.

MR. WYATT. I will read it myself as a part of my argument. It is better than anything I can say, and the members of this Convention, in my humble opinion, ought to hear it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can adopt it as his speech.

MR. HOWARD. Can it not be read by the Secretary as a part of his speech?

THE CHAIRMAN. Not except by vote of the Convention.

MR. WYATT. I can read it. The Commissioners say:

"Before concluding the consideration of rates of freight, the subject of competition calls for some remarks. Without seeking to deprecate the great benefits derived from the construction of railroads, one evil, incident to their construction, which cannot be denied, is their tendency to destroy all other means of communication, especially in a new and sparsely settled country. The almost unlimited capacity of the railroad, its superior speed, safety, and punctuality, give it a natural preference over all other modes of communication for certain purposes. The passenger, to whom time is always important, invariably prefers it, and the stage coach infallibly disappears on its construction. So also does the old-fashion carrier's wagon, which cannot possibly compete with it in price or speed. So far, its operation in displacing previous modes of conveyance, is normal, and consequently beneficial to the public. But the greater cheapness of water-borne freight, especially over natural waters, secures a preference to it even over the railroad for many purposes, and this, incidentally, tends to keep down railroad rates. This natural and healthy competition, however, the railroad managers invariably seek to destroy.

"The history of all competing lines of transportation is nearly, if not quite, uniform. It commences with a reduction of prices by the railroad company, responded to in the same way by the other party, and followed up on both sides until rates are reached which resolve the contest into a single question—which party has the longer purse? When that point is reached, the railroad, which, once constructed, is as much a permanent feature in the geography of the country as a river, buys off the opposition line, and prices are raised to a point sufficiently high to indemnify the company for its previous concessions, for which, probably, indemnity has already been found in the augmentation of charges to points not reached by the water line. As the organization of transportation lines by water necessarily calls for the outlay of considerable capital, new parties are little likely to recommence the enterprise, after the old line, with established connections and trained employés, has been fairly beaten off the route, and thus the railroad secures an absolute monopoly of the carriage, even between points possessing navigable water routes, and at higher prices than would be charged over the latter. In this way the steamers which formerly navigated the interior waters of the State have passed into the possession or control of railroad companies, and recently the steamers plying on the coast have been compelled, by the low and evidently losing rates of the Southern Pacific Road, to come into an arrangement to pool their earnings with that road.

"Now, it is no part of the normal functions of a railway to destroy other means of transportation, or supersede their use, except so far as it is permanently more advantageous or cheaper than they. That in the hands of private owners and under the spur of individual gain it does so, is one of the fruits of the system of committing to private hands that which is a natural function of government.

"Such proceedings as we have adverted to are a public evil. They affect vitally the interests of whole communities, and lead to the decay of flourishing interior towns, and this without permanently cheapening the cost of transportation to producers, or benefiting any one, except the owners of the railroad. If legislation can prevent them, they should be prevented.

"It is, however, vain to denounce as illegal the contracts by which they are affected, for evasion of such enactments is easy; we believe it can best be accomplished by laws which will require the management of the railroads to be as permanent in its character as their structure is, and forbid, without the consent of the public authorities, the retraction of any concession once made by them to the public. This rule has the advantage of being just in itself, easily enforced, and in harmony with the rules that govern the management of such enterprises in the hands of enlightened self interest.

"A railroad, as before observed, is a permanent feature of the country. On the faith of its existence, and the regularity and cheapness of its communication, people settle on the line of the road, and adapt themselves, adjust their industries, and invest their means on the faith of its permanence and the permanence of the accommodation it affords. To permit it afterwards to withdraw or diminish those facilities, or to enhance their cost, is a wrong to the parties so related to it, differing only in degree, not in kind, from permitting it to tear up its rails and destroy its roadbed. The management of a railroad, even in the hands of men ever so selfish (if they be but wisely selfish), is naturally progressive. Additional facilities for business and travel go hand in hand with additional business and travel, and usually precede and lead to them. The superior accommodations of the Oakland ferry have created Oakland, not Oakland the ferry. The railroads created Chicago, not Chicago the roads. This is the history of all the great West.

"It is not, perhaps, possible to frame a law which will compel the adoption of an enlightened and progressive policy by the companies without conferring undue power on executive officers; but it is in the power of the Legislature to prohibit any progress backwards, by forbidding the raising of rates and the withdrawal of facilities once furnished. Such changes of this kind, if any, as may be consistent with the public interests, the Commissioners may be authorized to assent to on behalf of the public."

Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Convention, I say that the experience of this State is as well portrayed in the few sections I have read to you as it is possible for them to be portrayed, and any man in the State of California who has any knowledge of the railroad system of management in this State, and of the geographical conformation of this country, is perfectly aware that the system of conducting business is precisely as described by these Railroad Commissioners, and complained of yesterday by Col. Ayers, who introduced the amendment. Take, for instance, the Napa Valley. There is a railroad there, and who can now build a competing railroad there? It is a moral impossibility. The valley had just as well be shut up by nature to a second railroad as to be closed by the power of capital as it is there. But not only is that valley so shut up, but every valley in the State is sought to be. A railroad in possession of a valley now can prevent all other competing lines entering. If it does not prevent the construction of a competing line, and one should be built, it is run out of existence by a reduction of rates, and stands as a warning against all future efforts at competition. With this clause in the Constitution they would either be compelled to furnish such facilities as would be reasonable to the community, or they would be liable to be competed with by competing lines and with capital. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to this amendment, for the reason that I do not think it is at all necessary if sections nineteen and twenty should be adopted. Section eighteen reads:

"No railroad company or other common carrier shall combine or make any contract with the owners of any vessel that leaves port or makes port in this State, or with any common carrier, by which combination or contract the earnings of one doing the carrying are to be shared by the other not doing the carrying."

Now, the amendment proposed by my friend from Los Angeles, goes to the effect that in case any railroad company lowers its rates of prices for freight or passengers for any cause, that they shall never raise them again.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it provides that if they lower the rate in competition with a rival line.

MR. ESTEE. Of course that would raise the question as to whether it was in competition. They would say it was not. It would raise a question of fact in every instance. It would be holding out a premium against their ever-lowering their rates, because, if they ever did, it would be a question of fact as to whether they lowered in competition, and therefore they never could raise them if the business did not pay. But, my chief objection is that sections nineteen and twenty remedy all the evils that my friend complains of. Section twenty, speaking of these Commissioners, says that they "shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; hear and determine complaints against railroad or other transportation companies; affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law."

Now, if this Convention adopt that section and adopt that principle, then the Commission would have the power to regulate fares and freights first, and, second, they would have the power to correct abuses by railroad companies. My idea is, and I think it was the opinion of the committee, that that meant all the complaint and evils that my friend speaks of.

I hope that this amendment will not be adopted, because we cannot now, looking at it and examining it carefully, know exactly the construction that may be given to the words which are embodied in his amendment. But we do know that section twenty, if adopted, will remedy all these evils, or, at least, I think so, and that was the opinion of the committee. I hope that new things that do not seem to meet any necessity, will not be put in. If there is any great necessity for it, let it go to the table and be printed, and let this Convention have a fair opportunity of examining the proposed amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I am in hopes that this amendment, offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, will be adopted. The way the matter stands in the State of California, it is almost utterly impossible for there to be and exist any such thing as a competing line against the great corporations that control the public thoroughfares and highways of this State. There is a corporation in this State, which has its principal office and place of business in San Francisco, known as the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the different companies that it controls, that runs every steamer and every railroad line that is run, almost, in the State of California. A man cannot leave the State of California without he buys his ticket and pays his fare to that company, and it is impossible for any line to compete with it, because if any company invests their money they immediately reduce their fares to a trifle, and reduce so low that it will starve them out and force them to quit, and immediately that they stop, then the fare goes up higher than ever to make it up. I tell you that it is a system of wholesale robbery, and I know that there are gentlemen on this floor that have got retaining fees to stand up and try to gag down and to defeat the will of the people in compelling the railroad corporations in this State to do a legitimate, square, honest business, as any individual has to do in this community. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there should be a steamboat in opposition to the Sacramento boats put on to-morrow, the fare would be reduced to fifty cents. You could go from Sacramento to San Francisco for fifty cents. But as soon as it was drawn off they would raise their fare to three dollars. The working people, the honest people, the producers of the State of California are tired of it, and they send their delegates representatives to Sacramento to amend this Constitution in such a way as would forever prohibit these corporations from robbing the hard-fisted toilers of the country out of their honest money. And all we want here upon this floor, all I ask them, is to make these thieving corporations come down and do a legitimate, square, honest business, the same as any responsible private citizen of California has to do. I do not see as there is any other way to do it except to adopt this amendment, put it into the Constitution, and fix it so that they cannot change it like they do the Code every Legislature. I tell you I have seen for years in California that some way the corporations manage to control the Legislature; that they can change the Code any time that suits their convenience; and I am in hopes that you will come right up to the mark and vote in favor of this amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, and it will have a good effect,

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I am not a professional gentleman. I presume that I can safely say that I am not one of the paid gentlemen on this floor, alluded to by the gentleman who has just taken his seat. Nevertheless, I am opposed to this amendment. I am opposed to it because it proposes to interfere with the system that is being adopted by this committee. Now, if we commence on that system, if we adopt this idea of appointing a transportation Commission, vested with sole powers to regulate this matter, why do we step in and interfere with a programme in regard to their duties? This idea may conflict with the idea of the Commission. If this Commission is established, if their duties are laid out, they can step in, when a railroad would attempt to raise freights and fares where they had lowered them before, and regulate them. That is the system that we should adopt. We should adhere to this system, and allow the Commission to control this matter.

MR. JOYCE. If the railroads reduce their rates haven't the people a right to keep them there?

MR. TINNNIN. That is a question it is impossible for me to answer. I say that the Commission is to be established to remedy these evils, and if we adopt that system let that Commission remedy the evil.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any conflict between section twenty and this. I do not understand that if this amendment, offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, is carried, that it necessarily conflicts with any part of section twenty. Section twenty provides for the appointment of a Commission who shall fix the rates of fares and freights. I do not suppose it is contemplated that the Commission shall say to the railroads, "If you are willing to take less you shall not take less." This simply provides that when they voluntarily, by their own motion, and to carry out their own ends, fix freight at a certain rate, that they shall not raise it. I do not know that there is any present necessity for the adoption of the amendment, but if the gentlemen who have been here for some years will look into the past, they will see that it would have been a very useful provision in years gone by, when the carrying trade and the waters of this State were monopolized by a corporation. Whenever an individual or company came here with boats, willing to work for fair compensation, freights and fares were put down to nothing, until they were starved out, and then put up again. Now, if some man starts an ox team to carry freight, and for the purpose of starving out that teamster, they lower their rates of freight, and say that they are able to carry for less than the teamster, let it stay at that price. It does them no harm. Our policy is to encourage competition.

I do not think it is a good argument that this amendment should not be voted for, because section twenty has been proposed to the committee. How do we know that section twenty is going to be adopted? I say here and now, that I do not propose to give, by my vote, to any triumvirate the power that is proposed to be given to three Commissioners in the State of California. If they would give me the appointment of the Commission, I do not know where I could find three men that I would be willing to trust so far. It is against the principle of the Lord's Prayer. These men are being led into temptations which they would be more than men if they could withstand.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I would like to see that amendment adopted, because there is, perhaps, a danger that section twenty may not be adopted. I understand that there is a powerful effort being made to defeat it. Letters are written here to members from every quarter of the State, begging them not to adopt that section. If we should lose it by the influence of the railroads, I would like at least that that clause should be adopted. I do not think that it is inconsistent in the least with section twenty or section nineteen, and I think that gentlemen who are opposed really to the monopoly of this railroad ought to steadily vote for everything that tends to check it as we go on. The monopolies will be on one side and the representatives of the people on the other. We may be defeated in that struggle, and therefore let us take, as we go along, every single amendment that tends to curb and control the railroad. Therefore I hope that the amendment will be adopted. We will strive hard on the section, but we may be defeated, so I am asking of you who are opposed to the railroad to adopt that amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: So far as my vote upon this section is concerned, I shall not be governed by any anticipations of what may be done on the twentieth section. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof. When we get to that section, I think it should stand on its own merits, but the proposition of the gentleman from Los Angeles is a good proposition. It is a proposition demanded in this State. I will refer the gentlemen of this Convention to the first railroad built in this State, the road from here to Folsom, and from that on to Shingle Springs. The fare is four dollars, forty-five miles. Let a stage line be put on that will carry people for two dollars and fifty cents or three dollars, and they will reduce their fares to one dollar, in order that the stage company cannot compete. The fare has been kept up because it is impossible to start a road and run it for a few months. But, provide in that section, that if they reduce their fares they shall so remain, they will be compelled to keep their rates at a reasonable price, or there will soon be competition. The fare from here to Placerville used to be five dollars. It is now five dollars and fifty cents, with a railroad running within five miles of Placerville. All we ask is such reasonable opportunities as we would have, providing there was no railroad there. If we pass this provision, men could take their teams on the road again, and reduce the price of freight. But, the very moment that is done now, the railroad will reduce their rates to half the rates.

Every man who knows the history of the old Steam Navigation Company, that have for years controlled the trade of the river, knows that they will reduce at any time the freights and fares upon the river, and freeze out any company that starts there. I do not desire to do any injustice to a corporation, either railroad or otherwise, but the rights of the people are to be considered first. But if the companies, for the purpose of freezing out competition, reduce their rates, let them remain there. I believe that the amendment is just. I believe that it is equitable. I believe that it is in the interest of the people of this State.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will be adopted. I can certainly see no injustice in it to the corporations, and I see in it a provision that will be in the interest of the people of this State. It does not need that I should call the attention of this committee to instances where the people have been wronged by the very operations of the corporations that this amendment proposes to remedy. They are common everywhere, in many places in our State. Wherever there is a business grows up in any particular portion of the State, and the railroad is there with its track and its cars to do that business, they then, by the combinations that it is possible for them to make, endeavor to control that business entirely. They do it from the selfishness of a corporation. It is a selfishness natural to the position. They have built their works for the purpose of doing the carrying trade, and the profit is to be determined by the amount they carry and by what they are expected to charge for it. Now, then, if another corporation attempts to put a road from one point to another, which is already reached by the corporation, they will reduce freights between these two points to a figure so low that no corporation can live by it, and the consequence is that the smaller or weaker corporation must go to the wall, while that which has been enabled to create the monopoly, having the longer purse, can hold out until the smaller corporation is unable to do anything, and they not only do a great wrong to the people who have invested in the competing line, but to the whole community.

Sir, it is a fact well known to many here that the corporations all along the coast, above and below, have managed to control the coast line of steamers, so that wherever there was any opposition and people were enabled to get their freight at anything like a fair rate, that opposition has been crushed by a reduction of rates, and then the rates put up to the old figure, or higher, and it has been impossible to get anything below it. There is another reason why this should be done, and that is that the interests of the people of this State are at stake. No one corporation ought to have the power to control and dictate the terms under which any community or the people of any part of the State can have the right or the privilege, that ought to be theirs, by the investment of capital, to carry their freight and passengers from one place to another. Now, sir, we cannot in justice to the people that sent us here overlook this question, and it is no hardship upon the corporation. They do this upon their own motion. They are not compelled to reduce their rates below living rates. But for the purpose of ruining the people and in the interest of their own pockets, they put their rates below living rates, then it is but just that they be compelled to keep them there, and it is the only safeguard that we can have to prevent them sealing up every place in this State.

I hope the amendment will be adopted. I believe it is the only point that we can aim at that will be of real and substantial benefit. It is an addition to the provisions of section twenty, if I may foreshadow the action to be taken by the committee. The Commissioners might not think it their duty. That section might be construed that they should regulate freights and fares, without taking into account competition. So long as they did not allow them to charge more than other routes between the same points, they might consider that they had accomplished their duty and the purpose for which they were elected. But this amendment protects the people. It provides that in a case of that kind they shall not again raise the rate above the point that they have voluntarily reduced it to.

REMARKS OF MR. GREGG.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: The proposition, upon its face, looks very fair, but when you come to examine it you will find that it will impose upon the people a worse evil than that complained of. It has been held that the Legislature has the power to regulate freights and fares. It simply takes that power away from the Legislature. Now I will illustrate it. There are two competing lines between this place and San Francisco. The owners of the railroad can come here and invest in property in Sacramento, put down their rates, discriminate in favor of localities, and there is no power on earth that can raise them again, because there happens to be a competing line. What is the result? Why, that any place must stand or perish at the will of the railroad company. They could build up the trade of one place at the expense of another. It is discrimination that the people have been complaining of. If the directors of a railroad corporation wish to swindle the stockholders, what is easier than to put down the rates below living rates? They are never able to raise them again, and bankruptcy is the consequence, and the rival company buys them out. They can make combinations for that very purpose. Instead of being the relief sought by the gentleman, it simply makes matters worse. I say that the very thing intended to be remedied is in effect fixed stronger upon the people, and this amendment will make them more suffering than ever. It is a whited sepulcher, fair without, but within filled with dead men's bones. It is fastening upon us what the people have been growling about, and that is discrimination.

REMARKS OF MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this amendment will be adopted. I will read that amendment: "And whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with a rival railroad line, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not be again raised or increased from such reduced standard." That is what men in this Convention were sent here for. That is a want of the people of the State of California. Our system of government contemplates a proper distribution of power. There is another safety for the people, because a monarchy is essentially a one man power, and the king is the embodiment of all power. If we consider the tremendous power which the railroad king of California has wielded for twenty years, can we say that it is consistent with our theory of government? Is it a proper distribution of power? Is it any distribution at all? No! It is a system more nearly resembling oligarchy than a republican form of government. This power must be destroyed. This man must be dethroned. The purple robe of authority must be struck from his back, and he must stand upon the broad principle of manhood, as every man in this Convention stands to-day. See, for instance, this Central Pacific Railroad Company. It is impossible for any other railroad company to compete with it. The very moment that it is undertaken, it controls the entire State. It will cut down the ruling rates of fare to almost nothing. It controls all the boats and all the steam vessels almost in the harbor of San Francisco. If they undertake to run an opposition, the result is they will reduce the fare to starving prices, and I say when the fare is once reduced let it stay there. I hope that every member will vote for this amendment. That is the amendment we were sent here to vote for, and to put into this Constitution.

REMARKS OF MR. TULLY.

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment will be sustained. I think that the reasons assigned by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, were full and correct, but I did not rise particularly for that purpose. There are some gentlemen here that assume that they are the embodiment of all the virtue that is in this Convention. Whenever you differ with them upon any little subject connected with the railroad, they begin to threaten you with "the people." I protest against any such proposition as that. I have long since learned that whenever you find a woman going around prating about her virtue, you can suspect her integrity, and as a rule you have the greatest old bawd before you in all the country.

Now, I am in favor of this amendment, and I am not going to vote for section twenty. I am not going to vote for any section that gives a Commission a right to determine everything—to hear complaints, take evidence, fix penalties, and through the Courts enforce those penalties. I am not going to vote for any measure that gives to Commissioners the right to confiscate railroads, and vest the rights of all the railroads in this State in themselves. Now, if the gentleman thinks, or any other gentleman thinks, that railroad influence, or railroad rings, or railroad letters, influence me, they have a perfect right to think it. I am not afraid of any such lash or any such measure. It has been reported here that the railroad has attempted to load down this Constitution with obnoxious measures, that it may be defeated before the people. I would scorn to make any such reference to any man. I believe, and I will continue to believe, that every gentleman in this Convention is an honest man and votes for what he believes to be the best interests of the whole country and of his constituents. I repeat, again, I am tired of these allusions; I think they are in bad taste and unbecoming to any gentleman on this floor.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. President: This is one of those cases where I am unwilling to vote without explaining the reason of my vote. Having come to the conclusion that this amendment ought to be voted down, I wish to state the reasons why I come to that conclusion. It has been shadowed forth by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, Mr. Estee. Believing as I do, that it is the best policy for the people of the State to adopt the Commission system, upon the plan—I do not speak of all the details—reported by the committee, I feel very reluctant to vote for any measure which will either have a tendency to prevent its adoption by the Convention, or, being adopted, may cripple its usefulness. As has been truly said by the Chairman, the commission plan which they have adopted, furnishes a foundation upon which, according to their estimate, there shall be an effective remedy for the evils aimed to be corrected by this amendment. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the reading of the amendment from the desk for the purpose of getting at the exact language.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section eighteen by adding after the word 'carrying,' in the fifth line: 'And whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with a rival railroad line, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not again be raised or increased from such reduced standard.'"

MR. HALE. The proposition is that when a railroad company, or transportation company, shall lower its rates in competition with a rival line, then, and only then, are they subject to this rule, that they shall not afterwards raise their rates. Now, I call attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that this species of constitutional legislation is in the nature of lex talionis. I submit that it is not wise for that reason alone. In other words, we say to the railroad company, "Now, if you dare to put your rates down, either above or below living rates, if put down for the purpose of superseding or breaking opposition, you shall not afterwards raise them." I submit that it is not dignified or right. For myself, sir, I do not propose as a member of this body to legislate nor to make constitutional law merely for the purpose of crippling anybody. I have no more disposition to do an act of injustice towards a railroad company than I have towards the people. The truth of the matter is, our duty is to do justice to all and injustice to none. Now, the plain purpose of the committee here is to establish a Commission—a Commission representing whom? It will be said on the one side "the people." Yes, they will represent the people. I hope, on the other side, that they will equally represent the transportation companies; that they shall be a Commission whose duty—a duty as high as was ever imposed upon a citizen or officer for the execution of a trust—is to deal justly, to deal honestly, to deal wisely, not only for the protection of the rights of the people, but equally for the protection of the rights of the railroad companies.

Mr. Chairman, I think we shall fall into a gross error here, if we permit ourselves to lend color to the pretense of arraying ourselves or the people against the transportation companies of this State. Every intelligent man in the State of California knows, if he has studied the history of his own time, that these transportation companies have wrought a mighty revolution in the destinies of this State; a revolution already achieved, and still only in the future to be accomplished. It is not our duty, and in my humble judgment, it is not our moral right to array ourselves against these great improvements which are the engines of progress in the world to-day, and will be in the future. Now, sir, I do not wish any one to imagine that because I take this, which I believe to be a broad, liberal, and just view of the subject, that I am opposed, in spirit or letter, in part or in whole, to a just and reasonable restraint upon these corporations. This, in my judgment, is the truth of the matter, that while these railroad companies are in the great work of working a mighty revolution in the destiny of California, equally with the destiny of the civilized world, yet the experience of the time has demonstrated the necessity of the exercise of that power, now fully recognized as belonging to the State, to control these corporations in the exercise of their franchise rights; to do it, sir, with a strong hand; with a steady hand. That it shall be a control that shall not be awake at noon-day and asleep at midnight. That it shall be strong and steady, but that it shall be just.

We have been trying legislation. We have been attempting, for the last fifteen years, to accomplish this supervision of the railroads through legislation. The failure has not only been complete, but it has been disastrous, or disgraceful—both, I think. I use the terms with a full knowledge of their import, and advisedly. I am in favor, nevertheless, of exercising this power, and I want this Constitutional Convention to submit to the people a plan upon which they can exercise that control; do it steadily, firmly, wisely, and justly—justly to all parties concerned. I am, for that reason, in favor of setting this Commission going from the highest authority that exists in the land, and that is by the people themselves. Let them select them. Not from San Francisco, not from Placer County, but from all over the State of California. It is said by some men that we are intrusting to these men extraordinary powers. True, sir, you are, but there is no other way, in my judgment, of having a steady, uniform, and just control. It is said that you will lodge this power in the hands of men where it will be unsafely lodged. Why, the people of this State and the people of other States have elected officers of just as much importance. They elect Justices of the Supreme Court. The Chief Justice of the State is elected by the people. Before them they come as a last resort. The aggregate rights of the people of the State may be brought to the bar of that Court and finally determined, and from their decision there is no appeal—no appeal except to the right of revolution. Yet the people elect these men. We have found no such recreancy as is anticipated. We have found these positions occupied by men of high character; men who have performed their duties with credit to themselves and honor to their common country. The Executive of your State, who is clothed with the whole executive power of your State, including the power of pardon—he, too, is elected by the people. Are these trusts more sacred? If we leave these questions to be determined by the people, may we not trust questions and responsibilities such as are to be devolved upon this Commission, to the people of the State, to make their choice by their own election? My observation teaches me that when the people take upon themselves the exercise of a choice, they are generally found to be correct, to be conscientious, to be conservative in making the choice. I further observe, as a lesson of history, that when you devolve upon one man, or body of men, and especially a small body of men, these high responsibilities, the inevitable effect is to make them conservative; to brighten their sense of duty. I think, sir, it is safe to intrust this power where the Convention proposes to lodge it. I am not speaking now of the details in full of the plan, but of the general plan itself.

Now, sir, the reason why I must vote against this amendment is that, in the first place, I want to know what we are to do with this plan of the Convention. If we are to adopt it, as I hope we may, then, sir, there will be found a remedy. I take it this is a sufficient remedy for the evils sought to be remedied by the amendment. If, as I should think, unfortunately, that plan were to fail, then I would say to the gentleman that he has a reason for the amendment, but until this plan is defeated, I must feel it my duty to vote against this, because I think that the adoption of this will go a long way towards the defeat of the other. These are my reasons for voting, as I say, against this amendment.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I desire to propose an amendment: Amend by striking out the words "a rival railroad line" and inserting "any other common carrier." I propose that if they reduce their rates of freight for the purpose of competing with ox teams, that they shall keep it there. Anybody who carries freight is a common carrier.

REMARKS OF MR. HALL.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: I cannot support the amendment. I have, as a member of this Convention, been called upon to give my assent to the declaration in the Constitution of this State, that corporations may be formed for railroad and transportation purposes. I have indorsed that declaration because I believed that the public good would be subserved by authorizing the creation of these institutions. Now, Mr. Chairman, having thus indorsed that declaration, I am called upon to give my approval to another declaration which will provide the means for their destruction. Let me illustrate. The rule which it is sought to engraft into the Constitution here, as I understand it, is this: There are existing two rival transportation companies. If either reduces its rates of charge for the purpose of breaking the other in the competition for business, it shall be held to those rates. Now, as a matter of practice, as a matter of history, as a matter of every day observation, we know that companies organized for transportation purposes will occasionally engage in active competition; that both parties will enter into the matter of reducing rates for the purpose of achieving success, and they sometimes reduce to what are called starving rates. Now I suppose that the rule is not to be applied to one of these companies as against the other, but in order to make it equitable and just, and equal, it must be applied to both. So I understand the principle involved in this amendment. If both reduce their rates they shall both be unalterably held to those rates. The result will be, and that will be the controlling idea with me, that whilst we create these institutions, believing them to be beneficial instrumentalities, believing that they will inure to the public good, believing that they will promote the public interest, we at the same time say that "if you enter into competition, whilst the public receives the benefit of it, you shall be bound hand and foot to those reduced prices and we will leave you to perish." That is the attitude in which the State of California is to be placed. It shall not receive my assent, and I shall vote against the proposition.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. I move to amend by adding "unless the lowering or raising of such rates be by mutual consent of the competing parties."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at present. There is an amendment to an amendment pending.

MR. AYERS. I will accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the amendment can be accepted. The Chair hears no objection.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I did not intend to say anything upon this amendment, which involves, in my judgment, the question whether certain conditions of things may exist in railroads where the Legislature would be without any power at all over the subject-matter; but by some gentlemen the question has been discussed in such a tone, and such a manner, that I would feel myself wanting in self-respect, and recreant to my duty, if I did not express my sentiments upon it, and also my sentiments upon that demeanor and manner which certain gentlemen upon this floor assume whenever they rise to discuss any question. From the beginning, almost, of this Convention, gentlemen who seem to lack argument make it up by insinuations as against the motives and position of other gentlemen who seek to present their views upon this floor. They have one or two catch words which seem to suit them, and take the place of argument. As I came to this Convention the other day, passing along by one of the beautiful little residences for which Sacramento is celebrated, I saw two men engaged in earnest and serious conversation upon business apparently of great importance to them. As I got opposite, there was a loud, cracked voice that uttered two words, startling me and those who were conversing, and looking round I saw that there was in a tree near by a feathered biped, that uttered the words, "Pretty Poll!" As the gentlemen who were conversing started and looked round, the bird spread his wings and shook his head with pride, as if he had said something intelligent, and as if he had participated in the serious conversation which occurred between these two gentlemen. I have been frequently reminded of the circumstance during the debates in this Convention. When we were discussing the question upon the Bill of Rights, and great questions which underlie a republican form of government, great principles which underlie constitutional government, great principles which control all of us in this great nation, and affect the rights of the people—while men here were seriously discussing and seriously considering these questions, a voice, shrill and harsh, went up, "Kar-r-r-paration liayer-r-r!" and the unfeathered biped shook its head, and seemed to pride itself that it had said something intelligent, and had participated in the debate which was going on. When we had reached the question of eminent domain, one of the most important questions that can come before the Convention, and men were discussing when private property should be taken, and under what circumstances private property should be taken for public uses; and endeavoring to frame a section under which no wrong should be done to the property holder, and at the same time no impediment should be interposed by an obstinate or perverse person in the way of the taking of it in a proper case; and whilst men were seriously and earnestly discussing that question, with a view to arriving at the right, the same fierce shriek went up, "Kar-r-r-paration liayer-r-r!" and again the unfeathered biped shook his head with pride as if he had participated in the debate, and said something sensible. Now, when we reach this question and are discussing these great questions as to what should be the control over corporations, and how far the Legislature should be deprived of its power—because that is the question involved here—how far the Legislature should be deprived of its power to regulate corporations under certain circumstances, and men here are earnestly and anxiously seeking, in my judgment, to find out the right, and to do the right, we have the same "Kar-r-r-paration liayer-r-r" presented as an argument in the case. And I suppose that from the beginning to the end of this Convention the same unfeathered bipeds will gratify themselves with the same unmeaning words, and supply the place of argument by these unintelligible squawks.

I propose to say a few words upon the subject now before the Convention as to whether this Convention should put it out of the power of the Legislature to exercise any control over the subject, which it would by the adoption of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers. Now, this amendment is aimed at certain abuses. I have no doubt that they exist. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Los Angeles has presented this, in his judgment, as a remedy for these abuses, in good faith and with an earnest desire to protect the people; but we should recollect this, that in attempting to cure one evil we should not run into another. I suppose I may employ a figure of speech never before used except by my friend Colonel Barnes, who referred to Scylla and Charybdis. When the sailors passed along the coast of Italy, and were liable to run upon Scylla, they had to take great pains that they did not run upon Charybdis. I pride myself upon this, as the gentleman——

MR. BARNES. If the gentleman wishes to play unfeathered biped to me I have no objection.

MR. WILSON. The truth here really is that we are running into other faults probably greater than the one it is sought to avoid by the amendment. In the first place, the directors of a company may reduce the rates against the wishes or desires of the stockholders. They might put the company in very great jeopardy, and from an error of judgment they might paralyze forever the interests of the corporation. This is one objection. But that it puts it out of the power of the Legislature to control the matter is, to my mind, the greatest objection, because circumstances may arise where the Legislature ought to exercise a profound discretion, and exercise a wholesome control over these matters. For instance, a corporation which has placed itself in the position which has been contemplated by this amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, may have its rates very low, may have its rates below living rates, and if they are continued it may bring the road or other common carrier to absolute insolvency, because of its inability to raise its rates to living rates. Now a railroad is subject to accidents. We may have a very bad Winter; bridges may be carried away; culverts washed out: depots may burn down; collisions may destroy trains. Accidents of this kind are all the time happening, and I think it is ascertained that in the great collision that occurred between two trains in Alameda County on the first starting of the overland road, the loss in destruction of cars and damages recovered against the company was over three hundred thousand dollars. The great corporation of California, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, is under the control of Congress to a very great extent. Gentlemen have been treating that corporation as the great leading corporate interest in the State of California. They have been treating it as absolutely subject to the control of the people of this State. They forget that after the Act of Congress of eighteen hundred and sixty-two was passed, by which Congress granted great privileges, great subsidies, and great aid to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, in connection with the Union Pacific Railroad Company, that it acquired certain rights and interests in this great national work, and that the Legislature of California, by a solemn Act passed, consented to that, and therefore the United States of America is a party to this contract, and the State of California, by an Act of the Legislature, is a party to this contract. They forget that the United States has large interests in that road. The United States has a mortgage upon that road. There are other bondholders who have a mortgage upon that road prior to the United States. The Act of Congress reserves the right to regulate the freights and fares itself upon that road. Recently, by an Act passed here in this last session of Congress, called the Thurman Act, Congress has undertaken to legislate upon this subject and made very large demands upon the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Ohio, Mr. Thurman, and it made very large demands upon the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company for a sinking fund. Hereafter, the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company have to pay very large sums of money into the treasury of the United States. In the first place, as I understand this Act of Congress, there is a lien, first, in favor of the bondholders, upon this road: then there is the lien of the United States upon it, by way of a mortgage. Then the United States has a claim upon this road for five per cent. of its net earnings. Then the Act provides that in addition to that the road shall pay up certain sums each year, amounting to a certain specific amount, which shall go into a sinking fund, there to be placed at interest in order to meet the bonds as they mature under the original Act of Congress. Besides these great burdens upon the receipts they have, of course, their current and running expenses. Now, I regard this business——

MR. GRACE. I would like to know if the Central Pacific Railroad Company has ever paid any interest?

MR. WILSON. I will answer you. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that the interest has never matured; has never yet been due. The Supreme Court of the United States has so decided. This is an intricate business, the running of a railway. The road must be self-sustaining over this period of time. It has no longer any subsidies. The time has arrived when it must pay its debt, and these annual sums it must make out of the running of its road. There may be some gentleman in this Convention wise enough to state here to-day, the amount of money which is necessary to meet all these accruing sums. I confess, it would take me, with my limited learning, information, and experience, several years to undertake the management of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, if I ever could do it at all. Some gentlemen who are wise enough to run that institution may be able to tell us now the amount necessary, of fares and freights, to enable this road to perform all of its obligations. I am not.

Now, if it should so happen that a railroad company—the Central Pacific Railroad Company, if you please—has reduced its rates of freights and fares on a certain portion of its line, and by reason of that it is unable to meet its obligations to the United States, it is unable to pay all of its accruing debts, its interest, and its running expenses, would any member here say that the Legislature, if it had the power, ought not to enable them to raise their rates to make the institution self-sustaining? Yet, the proposed amendment would prevent the Legislature from exercising that power. Your Transportation Commissioners may report this road as not self-sustaining, that at the present rate it will run in debt and become forfeit to the United States. In such a case any one here would say that the rates ought to be raised, no matter what they might have been. The road should be permitted to save itself from insolvency, to raise its rates, and any sensible Legislature would allow it to raise its rates. But if this amendment is adopted, the Legislature would be powerless to effect any good. The hands of the Legislature would be tied, and it would be impossible to save it from impending ruin. That is the reason why we should be careful as to what we insert in a Constitution. Leave it to the Legislature, where there is some flexibility. There must be judgment exercised upon the present condition of things. There must be some room to ward off a crisis which may arise; but put it into this iron-bound Constitution, and it is beyond control. Though ruin stares the State in the face, the legislative body or the Executive of the State is unable to render any assistance.

It seems to me that such a course is not wise. This State can exercise control over corporations, and can regulate them better through its Legislature than it can through provisions in the Constitution. The Constitution is not intended as a Code. The Constitution is intended as a great system of general principles outlining the form and principles of the government, leaving the Legislature to fill up the blank upon the escutcheon, and to make everything work according to the interests, the wants, and the exigencies of the people. Now, because I oppose this amendment, is no reason why I should oppose such power being vested in the Legislature. Upon the contrary, I would provide that the Legislature might pass some rational and proper Acts upon this subject, sufficiently guarded and with sufficient flexibility to avoid wrong, and at the same time to enable them to conduct their business in a self-sustaining manner. Now here, as I said before, if the directors commit an error of judgment contrary to the wishes of the stockholders, that wrong becomes by virtue of this clause in the Constitution beyond remedy forever, and may produce insolvency and forfeiture against the interests of the people. I know that it is popular here to say, "Let them be forfeited. Put corporations under rigid laws to do no wrong; if wrong follow from a violation of the Act, then let forfeiture follow." That kind of argument is not sound, because the State has an interest in these great improvements. The State and the people at large are interested in these great works, and it is not to the interest of the people that they should be destroyed. It is not to the interest of the people that they should be made incapable of sustaining themselves by the profits which they may make by their business as common carriers. Different years make a great difference in the carrying trade in this State. If I am correctly informed, whilst a year or two ago a hundred vessels were loaded with wheat at the Oakland wharf, the succeeding year but three vessels were loaded. Now it may be that Commissioners, or the Legislature, having control of this matter, would look to that condition of things, and not expect that a carrier would carry at the same rate one year that he would carry it another. Men in business would not so act. When freights were plenty, when they had more than they could do, they would be willing to reduce rates. When freights were light and they had the same expenses to meet, freights and fares might be higher. I say that the Legislature should be allowed to control these matters. There is a flexibility; there is a capacity to conform to the necessities of the hour. By this constitutional provision the whole subject-matter is placed out of the power of the people, because the Legislature is the people, by its representatives. I know that there is a great disposition here to say that the Legislature cannot be trusted; that the Legislature will be bribed; that the Legislature will commit fraud. But I beg leave to say here that this Convention can proceed upon no such theory as that. This Convention cannot present as one of the cardinal principles upon which it acts that one of the great departments of the government of this State will not faithfully and honestly perform its duties. This Convention, which claims for itself so much virtue and honor and integrity, and I may say so much hostility to railroads, was elected by the same people, in the same manner, and under the same general circumstances that the Legislature is elected. I do not see why that great branch of the government may not be trusted as it always has been, and always must be, with the essential powers of legislation which pertain to a great State.

I object to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, for the reasons which I have stated; that the power is better lodged either in your Commission, if that should be the determination of the Convention, or with the Legislature, if it should be left to legislative control. While I can only give my single voice, I think this would be unwise as a clause in the Constitution, placing this subject matter beyond the reach of the people through their representatives in the Legislature.

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: Is an amendment in order?

MR. O'DONNELL. I shall first have to read Rule Forty-four to my friend from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson. "If any member be called to order for offensive words spoken in debate, the person calling him to order shall report the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Secretary's table."

MR. WILSON. Mr. Chairman: I am very much obliged to him for his prescription, but I prefer my own doctor.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I wish to ask who he alluded to as an "unfeathered biped." If there is any squealing done at all, I think my friend from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, has done all the squealing. I should like to have that language taken down at the desk. [Laughter.]

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. I offer the following amendment. Add the following: "except by consent of the Legislature."

REMARKS OF MR. STEDMAN.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I am not aware, sir, whether it is because the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, has been listening to "pretty poll"—whether that is the reason that he has such a faculty for evading the point at issue, for evading the question. I am not aware whether that is the reason or not, but I am aware that he has not spoken to the point in the beautiful speech that he has made.

MR. WILSON. In your judgment.

MR. STEDMAN. Yes, in my judgment. As I understand the amendment——

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I endeavored to offer a resolution on words used in debate before Mr. Wilson got the floor, and now two gentlemen have spoken, but I desire to offer a resolution upon that subject, and I do not want to be cut off by the rule.

MR. STEDMAN. I claim the floor.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman, has the floor.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: The amendment reads as follows: "And whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with a rival railroad line, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not be again raised or increased from such reduced standard." Now, then, the gentleman has argued to this Convention that this amendment contemplated keeping down the rates when any reduction in rates was made by any railroad corporation for any purpose whatever. Now, Mr. President, that is not true. The question presented to this Convention is whether we are going to prevent extortion by these corporations. I want the law to stand up boldly between these corporations and the people. I stand in this Convention as the advocate of the people, not of the corporations. I do not charge that any gentleman is for the corporations, but I say that I am for the people. If an individual or a company shall place a railroad, or a steamboat line, or any other common carrier to compete, with this Central Pacific Railroad Company, we know it to be a fact that in the past this Central Pacific Railroad Company has reduced its freights and fares to such a low rate that it was impossible for the new line to compete with it, and it has been froze out. But the question is whether it will not be right, when such a reduction is made in order to freeze out a new company—a company that is the friend of the people from the fact that it is a competing line—to say that when the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or any other railroad or common carrier, shall reduce its rates for the purpose of freezing out this line, that it shall not have the power to again raise such rates. I believe it would be right, and I shall vote for the amendment, because I think it is for the people. I think the people are crying out for such legislation as this, and I think it should be put into the Constitution.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

The hour having arrived, the Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and a quorum present.

A PRIVILEGED RESOLUTION.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: I wish to offer a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

WHEREAS, The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, has publicly asserted, in debate, in this body, as follows: "I know that there are gentlemen on this floor who have got retaining fees to stand up and try to gag down and defeat the will of the people, in compelling the railroad corporations in this State to do a legitimate, square, honest business;" and, whereas, the language above quoted amounts to the charge of an offense against the law of the land, committed by some member or members of this body, and to a charge of giving or offering a bribe to a member, or by corrupt means or device, directly or indirectly, to control or influence a member in giving his vote;

Resolved, That the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, be and he is hereby required to name the persons, within or without this body, whom he knows have entered into such corrupt agreement to gag down and defeat the will of the people, to the end that the power of this Convention to punish such offense may be exercised pursuant to law.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: Since the assemblying of this body, the charge embraced in the language used by the gentlemen has been, in one form or another, repeated—not once, but, if my recollection serve me, many times.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I raise a point of order: I call attention to Rule Forty-four of the standing rules, which reads:

"If any member be called to order for offensive words spoken in debate, the person calling him to order shall report the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Secretary's table; and no member shall be held to answer or be subject to censure of the Convention for language used in debate if any member has spoken, or other business has intervened after the words, and before the exception to them shall have been taken."

My point of order is that other business has intervened since Mr. Grace uttered the words complained of, and other members have occupied the floor, and spoken, and therefore, according to the standing rule number forty-four, the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, is not answerable nor censurable by this Convention for anything he then said.

MR. BARNES. In reply to my colleague from San Francisco, I will call attention to the fact that the resolution does not involve the calling of the gentleman to order for abusive words spoken in debate at all.

MR. BEERSTECHER. For the purpose of censuring him.

Digitized by Google

MR. BARNES. On the contrary, Mr. President, when a gentleman rises in his place and asserts that there are members in this body, upon this floor, who have taken money for the purpose of gagging and defeating the will of the people of this State, that he is not censurable for making the statement, if it be true, and I take it that no gentleman will make a charge of that character unless he knows it to be true. No gentleman will say, "I know there are gentleman on this floor who have got retaining fees to defeat the will of the people of this State," unless he states it upon good grounds, and from knowledge. Now, this is not for the purpose of censuring the gentleman, but when a charge of that kind is made, I think the Convention is entitled to know who these persons are.

MR. STEDMAN. I rise to a point of order. As I understand it, the resolution is not debatable.

THE PRESIDENT. It is debatable. The point of order is overruled.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: I would like to proceed in order. This is not for the purpose of censuring Mr. Grace; that is not what the resolution is offered for; but it is to afford the gentleman an opportunity to state who the members are that are guilty of these things, and the Convention an opportunity to know who it is that has been bribed to stand up in this Convention and defeat the will of the people. We are in the middle of a very important debate, as important as any that will take place here; we are about to consider questions of very great importance, in respect to which, and the policy of which, gentlemen may well differ; and before we proceed further I think we ought to be informed if there is any one here who is paid to advocate any proposition, anybody who is a hireling to anybody for any purpose, in order to weigh his words and know what dependence to put in his words. I can say for myself, as far as this debate has proceeded, I have seen nothing in the report of the Committee on Corporations that I do not give my personal and hearty assent to. I stand with the committee on the main propositions; but there may be gentlemen here who may raise questions and present considerations that may, in the light of their ability and learning, materially influence and change the views which I entertain; and if there is a man here on this floor, who comes here paid and bribed to defeat the will of the people of this State, I want to know it, and I want to know it too, before he speaks here, in order to understand and appreciate what he says, and why he says it. If the charge of the gentleman from San Francisco be true, the Convention has a right to know who the man is, in order that he may be dealt with as he deserves. You will remember that the Act under which this Convention was called, has reference to this very subject. It provides the means by which the Convention may deal, or shall deal, with any person who shall occupy such a position. This is not the first time it has been alluded to, it has been often alluded to; but this is the first time the charge has been absolutely and publicly made, and now is the time to deal with it.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the resolution is not in conflict with Rule Forty-four, and therefore decides that the point of order raised by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, is not well taken. The question is on the resolution, which the Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

WHEREAS, The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, has publicly asserted in debate in this body as follows: "I know that there are gentlemen on this floor who have got retaining fees to stand up and try to gag down and defeat the will of the people in compelling railroad corporations in this State to do a legitimate, square, honest business;" and whereas, the language above quoted amounts to a charge of an offense against the law of the land committed by some member or members in this body, and of a charge of giving or offering a bribe to a member, or by corrupt means to devise, directly or indirectly, to control or influence a member in giving his vote;

Resolved, That the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, be and is hereby required to name the persons, within or without this body, who he knows to have entered into such corrupt agreement to gag down and defeat the will of the people, to the end that the power of this Convention to punish such offense may be exercised pursuant to law.

AN APPEAL.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair. It seems to me, sir, that when it says that no member——

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman is not in order; it takes three to appeal.

MR. STEDMAN. I second the appeal.

MR. BARBOUR. I second the appeal.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that the resolution is not in conflict with Rule Forty-four, and overrules the point of order, and from that decision of the Chair the gentlemen appeal to the Convention. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I take this appeal with due deference and respect to the ruling of the Chair; but the resolution of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, asks the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, to rise before this body and make explanation as to the words used by him in debate this morning. Of course, if this resolution is adopted, of necessity Mr. Grace will be obliged to rise before this Convention and make answer.

Rule Forty-four says: "If any member be called to order for offensive words spoken under debate, the person calling him to order shall report the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Secretary's table; and no member shall be held to answer or be subject to censure of the Convention for language used in debate, if any member has spoken, or other business has intervened, after the words spoken and before exception to them shall have been taken." Therefore, with due deference to the Chair, in my humble opinion the resolution is in direct conflict with Rule Forty-four, that no member shall be held to answer for language used in debate, if any member has spoken, or other business intervened. It seems to me, as I said before, that the resolution is in direct conflict with the standing rule of this Convention; and furthermore, it seems to me useless and idle to call upon the gentleman, Mr. Grace, to get up here and make an explanation, when the words were not directed to any person, to any gentleman; and I am sorry that the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, feels so sore over the words that have been used.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: I accept the sympathy of my friend, Mr. Beerstecher, but I am not sore over words uttered in debate. I am sorry that gentlemen have seen fit, whenever there has been any difference of opinion upon subjects under debate here, to throw out these insinuations, when these subjects have been debated, on one side at least, with fairness and candor. I am sorry that these charges should have been made. This thing has been more than once protested against. This morning was the first time that they have assumed a definite form. I submit that the view taken by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, is not the correct one, because this is not a charge against Mr. Grace at all. It does not call on him to answer for any words spoken in debate, because if they were true he had a right to say them, and he ought to have said them. If any member upon this floor knows of any one who is paid to stay here and defeat the will of the people, he ought to rise in his place and say so. I would if I knew it. There is no charge against the gentleman at all. As far as this resolution is concerned it simply seeks to inform the Convention who it is.

MR. TULLY. Is it simply a resolution of inquiry?

MR. BARNES. Yes, sir; he says he knows there are gentlemen on this floor who receive money for gagging down and defeating the will of the people. Now, I cannot conceive of any charge more serious.

MR. GRACE. I spoke it generally. I did not say the gentleman was here; that was not the intention——

MR. BARNES. I have the floor, I believe.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from San Francisco, Colonel Barnes, will proceed.

MR. BARNES. I was very much struck with the observation when it was made, and I took occasion to go to the reporters, and from two of them obtained the language which I have quoted. He said this: "I know that there are gentlemen on this floor who have got retaining fees to stand up and try to gag down and defeat the will of the people, in compelling the railroad corporations in this State to do a legitimate, square, honest business." I now ask the Convention to adopt that resolution. If Mr. Grace says he did not say it, or did not mean it, well enough. But if he knows anybody, or if he can even point the finger of suspicion at anybody, I want to know who it is—that is all.

MR. BARBOUR. I wish to offer an amendment.

MR. TERRY. The question is on the appeal.

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: I did not hear the words spoken, and I did not know that anything of that kind had been said. In parliamentary bodies I always bind myself not to violate parliamentary rules and usages, because order is necessary for the conduct of business, and unless we observe order, of course we will fail to reach the point of debate. The ordinary rule applicable in cases of this kind—the general parliamentary rule, as well as the rules governing this body—are to the effect that the words must be taken down at the time; they must be recorded at the time they are spoken. The President may order them taken down by the clerk, and then the matter comes up immediately. Cushing lays down the rule as follows:

"If offensive words are not taken notice of at the time they are spoken, but the member is allowed to finish his speech, and then any other person speaks, or any other matter of business intervenes before notice is taken of the words which gave offense, the words are not to be written down, or the member using them censured. This rule is established for the common security of all the members, and to prevent the mistakes which must necessarily happen if words complained of are not immediatly reduced to writing."

Now, there is a dispute as to what was said. We cannot appeal to the reporters, because that is contrary to the rule. When words are uttered that are offensive, some member can rise in his place and have the words taken down; and the member may then be censured. But it is now in a stage where we cannot take notice of it with a view to censuring the member who uttered the offensive words. I do not see how we can do anything in the matter. I regret that this resolution has been brought up, because I am at a loss to know how to vote. I am inclined to think the appeal should be sustained, inasmuch as the period has passed under which this body can take notice of the offensive words.

MR. TULLY. I think, sir, this case don't come within Rule Forty-four for offensive words. That rule says:

"If any member be called to order for offensive words spoken in debate, the person calling him to order shall report the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Secretary's table; and no member shall be held to answer or be subject to censure of the Convention for language used in debate, if any member has spoken or other business has intervened after the words spoken and before the exception to them shall have been taken."

I think the Chair is right in its ruling. If this is anything, it is a resolution of inquiry, and perhaps, if it is brought up in proper shape, this matter might be inquired into by a committee, or otherwise; but, sir, I do not think the gentleman himself can be held to answer for the language, or censured under this rule. I do not see that it is anything but a resolution of inquiry. But it certainly cannot be brought within the scope of this rule, because he would have to be called to order by some person for words spoken, and the words taken down. I submit to the gentleman to change the resolution in some way, so as to make it a resolution of inquiry.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: The language of the resolution is extraordinary. It is an order, as I understand it, to name certain persons——

Digitized by Google

MR. BARNES. I call your attention to the fact that it does not make any charges against Mr. Grace himself, nor impugn his motives.

MR. BARBOUR. The resolution sets forth that he made certain statements, and follows up with an unqualified demand that he shall name certain persons. Suppose he says, I am not at liberty to comply with the resolution without betraying confidence, what happens? Would it not be monstrous to censure him for not doing what no gentleman could do? I maintain that you cannot impugn the motives of a member of this Convention in any such manner. It is enough to say that it cannot be done. I have had charges sent me by letter day after day, impugning the motives of some of the Workingmen's delegates on this floor, and saying that some of them are ready to sell out. If this matter is to be investigated, there is a good deal more to be added to it.

MR. HAGER. I move the matter be laid on the table.

MR. LARKIN. I regret that this matter should have been raised here. In legislative bodies I believe there have been paid advocates, but I do not believe there are any such in this body. As to Mr. Barbour's statement, no one believes that he has sold out to any one, or that he is a paid advocate of any company, and no investigation on these general charges should be gone into. If they are to be gone into at all, then I am in favor of a thorough examination.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the reasons for the decision. Rule Forty-four provides: "If any member be called to order for offensive words spoken in debate, the person calling him to order shall report the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Secretary's table; and no member shall be held to answer or be subject to censure of the Convention for language used in debate, if any member has spoken or other business has intervened after the words spoken and before exception to them shall have been taken." The resolution here is of a different character; it does not proceed against the member, or call him to account for the use of offensive language at all. It is not in conflict, therefore, with Rule Forty-four, or the parliamentary rule. The Convention can institute an inquiry at any time, and in any shape they may deem proper. This resolution is capable of amendment, so as to appoint a committee, or in any other way that the Convention may see proper. It has nothing whatever to do with Rule Forty-four, and therefore the Chair decides that the point of order raised by the gentleman from San Francisco is not well taken. From that decision an appeal has been taken. The question is on the appeal.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. President: I wish to call the attention of members to the fact that not very long ago I was required to get up here and explain myself, though it was two days after the words were spoken. I did explain my position. It has been asserted that I am—not exactly a traitor—but a man to be looked upon with suspicion. Now, I say if a member is asked to explain, he should explain. I had to stand up here and explain, and besides that explanation, I am looked upon with distrust, as a man that might be bought by the corporations, and if this thing is to be investigated, I am in favor of it.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

MR. WEST. I move that the whole matter be laid on the table.

MR. INMAN. I object.

THE PRESIDENT. The question on the appeal must be decided, unless you move to lay the appeal on the table.

MR. WEST. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President——

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Pres——

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I desire to state——

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is to lay on the table, and it is not debatable. The question is on the motion to lie on the table.

MR. BARNES. Will the Chair be kind enough to state what the effect of this motion will be; does it lay the whole subject on the table?

THE PRESIDENT. No, sir; simply the appeal. The resolution will remain before the Convention.

MR. WEST. I move that the whole subject-matter be laid on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. The appeal must be disposed of.

The motion to lay the appeal on the table prevailed—ayes, 85.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

THE SECRETARY read the resolution again:

WHEREAS, The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, has publicly asserted in debate, in this body, as follows: "I know that there are gentlemen on this floor who have got retaining fees to stand up and try to gag down and defeat the will of the people, in compelling the railroad corporations in this State to do a legitimate, square, honest business;" and, whereas, the language above quoted amounts to the charge of an offense against the law of the land, committed by some member or members of this body, and to a charge of giving or offering a bribe to a member, or by corrupt means or device, directly or indirectly, to control or influence a member in giving his vote;

Resolved, That the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, be and he is hereby required to name the persons, within or without this body, whom he knows have entered into such corrupt agreement to gag down and defeat the will of the people, to the end that the power of this Convention to punish such offense may be exercised pursuant to law.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I am opposed to the passage of the resolution, for the reason that there was no foundation laid for the "whereas," that the gentleman from San Francisco has made certain statements, that he has used such and such language. The resolution purports to repeat the exact words used. I say that no foundation has been laid for the resolution by establishing the fact that the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, used those words. And notwithstanding the point of order made by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, has been overruled, still the parliamentary rule holds good that if language is put into the mouth of any gentleman, for which he is to be investigated, or anybody is to be investigated, the foundation must be laid by establishing the fact that he used these words. There has been no such foundation laid here. There is no proof before this Convention that any such words were used, and that is the reason of my objection. Cushing's Manual, 227, says:

"If a member, in speaking, makes use of language which is personally offensive to another, or insulting to the assembly, and the member offended, or any other, thinks proper to complain of it to the assembly, the course of proceeding is as follows: The member speaking is immediately interrupted in the course of his speech, by another or several members rising, and calling to order, and the member who objects or complains of the words is then called upon by the presiding officer to state the words which he complains of, repeating them exactly as he conceives them to have been spoken, in order that they may be reduced to writing by the Clerk; or the member complaining, without being so called upon, may proceed at once to state the words, either verbally or in writing, and desire that the Clerk may take them down at the table. The presiding officer may then direct the clerk to take them down," etc.

Now, if you are going to investigate, you must have something to investigate. Then, sir, that makes it necessary to establish the words that were used, and how. The gentlemen should have been interrupted at the time he used the offensive language, and the words should have been taken down by the clerk. Now, the language which is put in the gentleman's mouth, was not taken down at the time by the clerk. It is said here by the gentleman introducing the resolution, that he obtained a copy of the words from the shorthand reporters' notes. Perhaps he has, but there is no official reporter here, and if there was, the shorthand notes are not evidence, because the attention of the Convention was not directed to it at the time, and it was not taken down.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I call the attention of the Convention to section six,——

MR. REYNOLDS. I believe I have the floor yet.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Then go on and talk. I thought you had finished.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: Besides these objections to the resolutions, outside of that, I am fully prepared to go into any amount of investigation. There have been charges, and counter charges——

MR. BARNES. On this floor?

MR. REYNOLDS. I did not say on this floor, but by members of this body. Early in the session here the gentleman from San Francisco was reported to have said——

MR. BARNES. Where?

MR. REYNOLDS. It has been stated in a caucus here, that "we must unite two thirds against one third," and referring to "these communists here." Now, who are the "communists?" Let us have a committee of investigation, and find out who are the communists on this floor. Let us go into the investigation business for the balance of the session. There is plenty of room for it. And I call attention now to the fact that the gentleman complains of something this morning which I did not hear, that certain gentlemen had been alluded to as "corporation lawyers." Very well; I heard the latter part of the gentleman's argument, and if it meant anything at all it meant that if Leland Stanford and the railroad company have not the ability to rob the people of California to as great an extent as they desire, the Legislature ought to provide the means for their doing so. That was what the gentleman's argument meant, or it means nothing at all. Now let us find out whether there are any corporation lawyers here, and let us find out whether there are any communists in this body. We are ready to pass the resolution to that effect.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I call attention to section six, or a portion of section six, of the law calling this Convention. It says the Convention shall have power to expel any of its members, and punish its members and officers for disorderly behavior, by imprisonment or otherwise, but that no member shall be expelled until after the facts have been examined into and reported upon by a committee appointed for that purpose. Now, it seems to me that it is contemplated in every case, not falling within or under Rule Forty-four, that a committee shall be appointed to make an investigation; and, Mr. President, I don't believe that this body has got any power to oblige the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, to make any answer to the resolution, should the resolution be passed. Mr. President, if that resolution were passed upon we should not make any answer to it, and the Convention could do nothing about it at all. It is an absurd resolution and ought to fall through. But if the object is to appoint a committee, I shall vote to appoint a committee, because I want to find out who the "featherless bipeds" are who sit in this Convention. I want to find out their names. I want the names of the "Communists;" and if we are going into an investigation, let us go into it thoroughly, and let us examine every circumstance that has been uttered upon this floor. But, at the same time, I do not believe that the opinion of the people of California, or the voters of California, will be changed in the least. The opinion of the people as it exists will remain, and this resolution of investigation, or any investigation, is not going to remove the cloud of darkness that envelops members upon this floor, if there is any such cloud of darkness. Therefore the resolution is useless. If members desire to purge their reputations, they are not going to accomplish it in any such way as this, because the opinion of the people of this State will remain, resolution or no resolution. I do not believe in this method of procedure. I will vote against this particular method, but I will vote for a committee to investigate gentlemen who have given utterance to certain things on this floor, because I do not approve of them. I do not approve of these things; they belong not in a deliberative body of this kind, and I hope it will be voted down, and I hope we will resume the business of the Convention, and I hope we will not take up the time that belongs to the people of this State, already overburdened with grievous taxation, on account of this Convention and other matters.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. I do not see the necessity of spending valuable time on this matter, and I move to lay the whole matter on the table.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President: I understand this matter in this way—that there is a motion to indefinitely postpone.

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir, but another gentleman moves to lay it upon the table, which motion takes precedence. The question is on the motion to lay on the table.

MR. WATERS. I call for the ayes and noes.

MR. HUESTIS. Ayes and noes.

MR. SCHELL. Ayes and noes.

MR. WHITE. Ayes and noes.

MR. O'DONNELL. Ayes and noes.

MR. McCALLUM. The vote just taken sustains the Chair in his decision that this does not come under Rule Forty-four. It must follow that this is not intended in any manner as a reflection upon the gentleman named in the resolution. There is a word used there that ought not to be used. It is the word "required." I move to insert the word "requested."

MR. BARNES. I accept the amendment.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I understand the previous question is now before the house.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President:——

MR. BARBOUR. I send up the following amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding to the resolution as follows: 'And the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, shall be required to answer as to who he meant by the words, 'unfeathered bipeds,' and 'communists.'"

THE PRESIDENT. The amendment is out of order.

MR. BARBOUR. I offer another amendment as a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to investigate the facts of the matters stated by Mr. Grace, and any other matters impugning the integrity of members, with power to send for persons and papers.

MR. VAN DYKE. One thing at a time.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: That is in accordance with what I understand to be the opinion of gentlemen on this floor. If we are going into an investigation of this matter after it has passed, by the most liberal construction you can give it, we have the right to investigate other matters. If you can investigate a matter one hour or two hours after the speech has been delivered, and after other business has intervened, and after other persons have spoken, there is no reason why you cannot go a day, or a week, or a month, back. There is no reason why, if you depart from the rule in one case, you should not depart in all cases. I have a farther reason, Mr. President. I have been, all the time, anxious to go ahead and make a Constitution. I have not consumed any more of the time of the Convention than was proper; I have not brought forward long briefs and propositions; I have not risen to questions of privilege; but, if it has got to come down to it, even so, I will bring in my mud, and others here will bring on their mud. That is all there is about it. I propose now to make a change, and I will do so, too: that this is a trick, a transparent trick, gotten up for the purpose of getting rid of one vote which may be in the way of certain schemes and purposes; and if you can fire one member out on a charge of this kind, for contempt or otherwise, there is nothing to hinder you from firing out all the minority, and running this thing to suit yourselves. Now, I am associated with a class who have been taken from the machine shops, and other fields of labor. They are not skilled in the art of putting things. I, myself, have indirectly put as grave charges as this against the majority here, and against the mover of the resolution, but I have done it in such a way that they could not take it up. I have said things time and time again just as strong as the language used by the gentleman this morning. There is just this difference: one man, who is skilled in parliamentary language and tactics, can say things with impunity that another, less skilled, would not be allowed to say. These things have been said in the heat of debate, and the wonder is that more has not been said. My associates have had great provocation, and if a chance expression has been dropped which hurts some gentleman's feelings, I do not think it ought to be magnified into such a great offense. If it is the intention to expel this gentleman, and thus get rid of a vote, I will tell the gentleman that there are a great many more who will have to go with him.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Pres——

MR. BARBOUR. If they are going to apply that principle—[Mr. O'Donnell. Oh! Lord!] [Laughter]—they will have to include quite a number before they get through.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. President: I say there is a gentleman on this floor to-day that travels on a free pass, and he gets that pass from Leland Stanford.

[Cries of "Name him." "Name the man." "Who is he." "No, no; don't." "Take down the language."] [Laughter.]

MR. O'DONNELL. I can name him. If need be, I can name the man who told——

[Cries of "Name him." "Name him."]

MR. O'DONNELL. If you are going to appoint a committee, I will then name him. If you want me to name him, I will name the party who told me—[Hear, hear]—so I hope now that all this buncombe will cease right here, and that the Convention will come down to business. I am sick and tired of this bickering.

MR. BARNES. Is the gentleman's name Barbour.

MR. O'DONNELL. It is not you. [Laughter.]

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: I was not aware that anybody who was supposed to be opposed to the views entertained by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, and his colleagues, has used any unfriendly personal remarks towards them. I am not aware of it, sir. At least, as far as I am concerned, in the little I have had to say I have made no unfriendly personal allusions, except in response to attacks upon myself.

MR. BARBOUR. I call your attention to one thing. You charged me on this floor with brutally insulting the Governor of this State.

MR. BARNES. Well, I think you did. That, however, was with regard to language used by the gentleman in debate. I did not call the gentleman a brute; not at all. I characterized the language he used, which I had a right to do. It was not personal at all. On the contrary, if I remember right, I did not take any offense at it, because I know his kindly nature too well to believe he meant it, when he said the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, had a voice like a fog horn, and that I had a voice like a dying bull calf. [Laughter and applause.]

MR. BARBOUR. I don't want a committee on that. [Laughter.]

MR. BARNES. I don't either. These are mere pleasantries; expressions of the sportive gentleman. We are not all of us as gifted as he is, and therefore he should not attack us because our voices are not as sweet as his. [Laughter.] Now, if there is anybody here who is under pay of the corporations, I think we have a right to know it. If, as my friend, Mr. Barbour, says, and it may possibly be the case, it was an expression thrown out in the heat of debate, in a straightforward, blundering way, I think it is time that blundering should be stopped. I do not want any more of it here. I do not want to get up and call the gentlemen on the other side hard names. There are lots of names we might call them—I know some of them come from a climate where names are much in vogue, and some of them seem to follow out the idea here. The gentleman says he can throw as much mud as anybody. But mud throwing is not what we are here for. What I want to know is this: Does the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, know of any man on this floor who has been paid to defeat the will of the people of this State? If he does, let him say so. If he says it was but an expression that fell from his lips in the heat of debate, let him say so, and that will be the end of it.

Nobody proposes, as the gentleman says—at least such an idea never entered my head—to expel Mr. Grace from this body, or have him fall from grace in any sense. It only means that if he knows of any such person who has been bribed to defeat the will of the people, he shall name him, and make good his charges; and if he does not, to say so. But for one, having been in the employ of the railroad people, as an attorney in Court to try cases, and where I tried to do my duty to my client, and to earn my money, I do not want it intimated that because I have been so employed, I am now the paid attorney of the railroad company on this floor, drawing ten dollars a day as the servant of the people. I do not want it intimated that I am the paid hireling of any corporation, for it is a base slander; I am no such thing. The man who intimates it, intimates a slander. I do not know—I may be mistaken—but I think Mr. Grace was himself at one time an employé of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. That is no reason why he should be their enemy, or their servant. I am not in their service. I am not the servant of any man that lives, when it comes to that point; and when it comes to voting, I shall vote for what I consider to be for the best interests of the people of this State, according to my best judgment. No man shall say of me that because I have been employed occasionally as a lawyer, by the corporations, that I am their dog, their slave, paid by them to do their bidding, and wear their collar. I will leave it to any member upon this floor, Mr. President, if these insinuations have not been made—not once, but a hundred times—but this is the first time that they have assumed a definite shape, and I propose to have it stopped. I want it understood that I shall do what I think is right and just, and in doing what I consider right, what my conscience and judgment tells me is right, I do not want to be insulted and attacked, and accused of being bribed, and the paid hireling of a corporation, a miserable scoundrel, a dog, for money, to come on this floor and sell out the people of this State. That is the proposition, sir. As far as changing the opinions of the people is concerned, I will say to the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, that I do not care the snap of my finger for the people of this State; not the snap of my finger. If a thing commends itself to my judgment, and my conscience tells me it is right, I will do it, and as I am not going to run for Congress, or any other office, I shall not toady to the people. [Applause.] Now, sir, I have been employed from time to time to try cases for the railroad company in the Courts, and they have paid me for it, and I have earned the money they paid me, and I will continue to try cases for them the same as for any other client, just as long as they pay me. But that is not a reason that these insinuations should be thrown out here. I am not swayed in my course by public opinion. I am moved by a consciousness of right, and I would rather feel the conviction of right in my breast than to receive without the highest office from the people. I want no more of these wholesale charges unless they are well founded. I want the gentleman to make good his assertion, and point his finger at the man who wears the corporation collar.

Mr. KLEINE. Mr. Chairman: I don't see why Mr. Barnes is so sensitive. If the shoe don't fit why Mr. Barnes don't need to wear it. I don't think Mr. Grace intended the shoe for Mr. Barnes, but if it fits Mr. Barnes, then let him wear it. We have wasted over an hour over this resolution, and I think it's about time to come to business. I hope we will stop this foolishing, and come to business. That is what we are here for. Since I have been here, gentlemen have thrown out insinuations about the Workingmen's party of San Francisco. They have been called names, we have been called libertines, we have been called communists by members on this floor, and now the gentleman seems to be very sensitive because Mr. Grace said he knew—I don't know whether he said it—Mr. Barnes says he heard him say it. I don't believe the majority of this Convention heard him say so. But, he said he knew there was some members bought by the railroad company. Well, Mr. Barnes should be the last one to be so sensitive. Mr. Chairman, I hope this nonsense will cease. For my part, I consider myself just as honorable as any of the delegates. I don't come here to spend my time in play. I come here to frame a Constitution for the people of the State of California. I have been talked to death by the lawyers every day. We have wasted time enough already, and I move we come to business.

Mr. GRACE. Mr. President: I have been advised by my friends not to say anything upon this resolution now before the Convention, and perhaps it would be as well that I should not. But I cannot stand here, sir, and hear myself misrepresented in such broad terms. I cannot do it. Mr. President, I was born in this country, under the stars and stripes, and the blood of my ancestors stains every battlefield that has become familiar in history, from the period of the Revolution down to the present time. I did not make the assertion as stated; if I had, I would stand up to it though the heavens fall, though the earth should open and swallow me. I did not say, I never meant to say, that any lawyer in this Convention was paid a retaining fee for the purpose of attending to the business of the corporations in this Convention. I meant to say—perhaps the language was misunderstood—I intended to say there were lawyers that had retaining fees, paid by corporations, to attend to their business, outside of the Convention, in this city. I know that was my meaning, and I believe there are. I did not say they were here as delegates to the Convention to represent corporations. Colonel Barnes, the author of this resolution, I have always admired as a man and a lawyer who stands high in his profession, and if I had a case in Court now I would as leave put it in his hands as anybody, but I regret to see him misrepresenting me. I am willing to stand by what I say, but my language has been misunderstood. All I want is for the corporations to do a square, legitimate, honest business, just as partnership firms and individuals do.

Mr. BARNES. If I may do so without being accused of being afraid, I will say that I am satisfied with the explanation. I was surprised myself to hear him make the remark, and I went to the reporters——

Mr. GRACE. As to working on the railroad, I have worked for the railroad company. I worked as a carpenter at four dollars a day. They cut me down and I refused to stand it.

Mr. BARNES. I ask leave to withdraw the resolution.

The PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the gentleman will have leave. The Chair hears no objection. The resolution is withdrawn.

RAILROAD COMPETITION.

Mr. DUDLEY, of Solano. I move that this Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of taking into consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations. Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The CHAIRMAN. Section eighteen, and amendments, are before the committee. The first is the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers: "And whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any other common carrier, lower its rates for transportation of passengers and freights from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not be again raised or increased from such reduced standard." To which the gentleman from Tuolumne, Mr. Walker, moves an amendment to add, "unless the lowering or raising of such rates be by mutual consent of the competing parties." The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I call attention to the fact that this penalty is not mutual. It binds railroad companies, transportation companies, but it does not apply to stage companies or steamboat companies. That is the way it reads now. Therefore the penalty is not mutual. It seems to me to open the door to all sorts of blackmailing schemes against the railroad company. A steamboat company can compete against a railway company, and raise and lower its rates at will, and so can a stage company. A railroad company cannot. So the penalty is not mutual. I think it is mischievous.

Mr. DUDLEY, of Solano. Is the question on the amendment I sent up, or on the one last sent up?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Tuolumne, Mr. Walker.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I sent up an amendment to this section last evening.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been lost sight of. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, proposed by Mr. Walker.

Lost.

Mr. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman:——

Mr. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman:——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley, to add, "except by consent of the Legislature."

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

Mr. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: That comes right back to the original proposition, namely, whether this matter shall be left to the Legislature or to a Commission. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I do not think this Convention wants to place that power in the hands of the Legislature. I want to say one word to the gentleman from Los Angeles, as to the effect of his amendment, as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry. What I understand by the proposition is this: to remedy certain evils local to his section of the State, and thereby to remedy evils of like character in other portions of the State. Now, Mr. Chairman, suppose the citizens of Los Angeles do go to work and build a road down to the coast. They raise the money and build a road down to the ocean. The moment they commence building that road, the Central Pacific will put down their rates, and the result would be that the competing line would have to put down its rates to a very low figure in order to get business, and they could not again raise them. The result would be that the competing line would be the first to suffer. My idea is that the very remedy my friend seeks for will prove an injury. It is a two-edged sword that will cut both ways. I hope it will not be adopted. I hope this Convention will conclude to leave these matters in the hands of a Commission, and if you are not satisfied with the Commission as recommended in section twenty, then adopt some other; but I hope it will be taken out of the hands of the Legislature and left to some distinctive body elected by the people of the whole State, with full power to deal with these great questions.

SPEECH OF MR. DOWLING.

Mr. DOWLING. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment to the amendment will pass, because the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, is an article that ought to be inserted in the Constitution, by all means. I am acquainted personally with the ills which the people of Los Angeles have suffered from the lowering and raising of the rates by this great, overshadowing monopoly. They lowered their rates on the local line between Los Angeles and Santa Monica in order to freeze out Jones and his cohorts. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am interested in this thing myself. I am one of a party that went down to Los Angeles, during the excitement, and bought some town lots there. These lines have since been abolished. We all know that corporations have rights that are to be respected, and protected, too; but it must not be forgotten in the meantime that individuals have rights which are sacred and must be held inviolate. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that we are here as representatives of the people, in order to engraft some laws and provisions in the Constitution by which they will be better guaranteed in the future than in the past. Now, sir, this amendment is a new idea; it is one that is compatible with reason, with common law, with common sense, and common justice. No man has a right to deprive another man of his property. I don't believe that any transportation company has a right, under this same principle, to drive a competing line out of existence. Now let us look at this thing in California for a moment. The original old wagon roads were superseded by railroads. It has robbed their functions and destroyed their vocations; hence, the only mode of transportation we have is railroads. In the City of San Francisco, it must be remembered, some years ago, when the railroad fare was raised to six and one fourth cents on the street cars, there was an opposition line of omnibuses started at five cents a head. But as soon as they were fairly under way the street car monopoly reduced fares and drove the opposition out. As soon as the opposition was run off the old companies raised the fares to the old standard. The Legislature then passed a law restricting the monopoly. Now, sir, this is a common sense question, though it may appear superficial. We have several places in this State to-day where omnibuses and stage coaches could make a living if the railroad companies had not the power to reduce the rates and drive off the competing line. As soon as they get started down comes the fare until they are driven off, and then the fare comes up again. Now, sir, this is not an infringement of the rights of the railroad at all; we don't want to do that. We want to bring down the railroad company to a basis so they will make a good fair interest on their investments, and not crush and abuse the people. Then, certainly, I hold that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles ought to pass. I hope it will be adopted.

Now, sir, I am sorry for this little squabble going on here to-day. It is in fact outrageous for a body of men assembled together, representing the people, spending an hour and a half or two hours wrangling about nothing. Of course, sir, there has been always, in the heat of debate, remarks made by speakers which, in cooler and calmer moments, they would be sorry for. I know that is the way with myself. A man who was never in a deliberative body before, is apt to say things he would be sorry for. But I would like to know of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, who he referred to when he mentioned the "unfeathered biped." [Cries of "Come to order."] Perhaps he referred to myself. [Laughter.] There is the bullfrog, an unfeathered biped, [laughter] which represents capital and concentrated wealth, bloated and pompous. Now, I don't care, as far as I am concerned, what gentlemen may call me. They may call me an unfeathered biped; they may call me a jackass. [Laughter.]

MR. HUESTIS. Is the gentleman talking to the question? I would like to know what the question is.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to section eighteen.

MR. HUESTIS. I suggest that the gentleman had better confine himself to the question under consideration.

MR. DOWLING. Of course, we have to have our merriment. I would like to know if I have not some rights here as well as Mr. Wilson. He was not called to order this morning. When I stand up to defend myself, the gentleman calls me to order, and wants to know what the question is. I will tell him. I don't care if he calls me a jackass, an animal that can bawl louder than any other. But a corporation jackass outbawls them all.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I would not at this late hour say a word on this amendment, if the people whom I in part represent were not deeply interested in this question. I do not think the proposition has been fairly met or fairly dealt with. The Chairman of the Committee on Corporations says that we ought to adhere strictly to the report of the Committee on Corporations, and he intimated that this proposition would somehow conflict with the report. It seems to me that this is entirely a mistake, because this provision ought to be incorporated in the Act creating this Commission. Now, I do not assume as a member of the Committee on Corporations, that we know everything. I do not assume that we know better than anybody else or everybody else. But this proposition was recommended by the late Board of Transportation Commissioners, composed of General Stoneman, a graduate of West Point, Mr. Tuttle, a professional engineer, and who a short time since was in the employ of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and Mr. Doyle. The legal propositions contained in the report, and themes discussed, are from the pen of Mr. Doyle, who stands among the foremost men in his profession in this State; and, having devoted two years of constant study to this subject, I assume that what they recommend is worthy of the consideration of this Convention. Now, sir, they say this: that all of the steamer lines are under the control, if not owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and that, therefore, we have no chance of competition through water communication. That being the case, this provision is necessary to protect society here, and to preserve it from the grasping schemes of this monopoly. That is the fact in the southern portion of the State. It is true. Now, sir, what is the proposition? It is proposed that when one party is in possession of a line which is a monopoly, and competition goes in—and competition is the life of all business—that the old line shall not, by reducing rates themselves, drive off this competition, and then after they have driven it off, raise the rates again and make the community pay for the cost. I say the amendment applies legally and properly to all common carriers. I maintain that a stage coach line would have no more legal or moral right than a railroad company; therefore, the whole thing ought to be subject to the same regulations.

Now, sir, allow me to state the facts as best I can; allow me to state them as the Commissioners have stated them, and I shall not go beyond their statements, as they state them in Los Angeles County. Previous to the laying down of any rail there, the transportation of freight did not cost over ten dollars a ton, and generally not over six dollars. But as soon as the rails were laid down, and the Southern Pacific commenced operations, freights were increased to nearly double those figures, by rail. And then, when the railroad to Santa Monica came to be built by Senator Jones, the old line again reduced its freights, for the purpose of running off the competition. And they kept it reduced until they had not exactly run out the opposition, but forced Senator Jones to sell his road to them, and the Commissioners say that is the history of the whole subject everywhere, and they say true. Then they raised it again—a year ago last July they, in consequence of their purchase, raised freights again on general merchandise fifty per cent., and they continued them at that figure. Having in the meantime combined and pooled freights and fares, as this report says, with the steamship company, they again raised the rates. A gentleman of that county, having a small steamer, thought he could do a safe business, and benefit the community as well as himself; he put his steamer on in opposition. He put it on and carried freight at four dollars a ton. The company reduced, and he reduced to three dollars per ton, and then they reduced to one dollar, driving him off or compelling him to sell to them. This is the thing we are arriving at. This monopoly is a vice; it is contrary to public policy; it is contrary to right and justice; and I contend, as the Commissioners have said, that we want a law which shall prevent them from raising their rates again when they have lowered them for the purpose of running off competition. The recommendation of the Transportation Commissioners is right, and will accomplish good, and ought to be adopted.

Now, sir, we contributed seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the railroad by way of subsidies, to enable the road to cut our own throats. But, thank God, they did not get it by my vote. I made what feeble opposition I could to it. They have not only combined with the steamship companies, but they have bought up the landings and wharves. They are virtually monopolizing the ocean, by driving off all competition. They forced the steamers to pool freights and fares and increase the rates for both. Now, sir, if the railroad company would take up their rails and quit the ocean, and leave it as free as it was before they came there, they could get from the people of Los Angeles another seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars to quit. We are very much in the condition of the man in the circus who gave the clown one dollar to commence singing, and five dollars to quit. I think this provision would correct the abuse aimed at. It cannot injure the report so far as the constitution of the Commission is concerned. If the Commission is created, still this is a salutary recommendation which ought to control them in their action. More than that, sir, this road is constantly raising the rates of freights and fares. I find in a Los Angeles paper of the ninth that they have recently raised the rate. I read the following paragraph from the Express:

"Mr. S. M. Tuttle received an invoice of sewing machines from San Francisco yesterday by water route. His freight bill was thirty-four dollars. Last month he paid on an exactly similar invoice, by the same route, the sum of fourteen dollars. The Philadelphia Brewery received four bales of hops this morning; freight, fourteen dollars and fifty cents. Two months ago the same concern paid on four similar bales, four dollars and seventy-seven cents. In the former case the increase in rates was one hundred and forty-three per cent.; in the latter case it was two hundred and four per cent. The monopoly club has fallen. Comment is unnecessary."

Now, sir, are we bound to submit; have the community no power to defend themselves against this enormous outrage? If not, then we had better transfer this government over to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, if they will pay the expenses, for it is the practical government of this State, and of this country, and the most grasping, unprincipled government at that.

Now, the bills of lading—and they have passed through my hands repeatedly—the shipments now made there are sent by steamship line, the bills of lading run to the Southern Pacific Railroad; that is, they ship by steamer and then charge railroad rates. That is because they have pooled freights and fares with the steamers. Sir, I maintain that it is a violation of their charter, assert it is a violation of law, for it is too plain for controversy that they are doing what the Transportation Commissioners assert is not a railroad business. They have no right to crush out opposition by running a line of steamers combining with steamers, as they are doing between here and San Francisco, and from San Francisco down the coast to Los Angeles, and on the Colorado River, for there they have bought up a line of steamers, and are running them on the river, and have destroyed competition in freights and fares upon the ocean, compelling everything to be shipped by their own conveyance, and by rail. I shall cite a case which states the law of this question.

In the case of Samuel Pearce vs. the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Company and the Peru and Indianapolis Railroad Company, the Supreme Court of the United States decided that, "Where two separate corporations were created to make railroads, they had no right to unite and conduct their business under one management; nor had they a right to establish a steamboat line to run in connection with the railroads. Notes given for the purchase of the steamboat cannot be recovered upon." Now, it has been settled in English cases, and in American cases, that a railroad being chartered to transport freight by rail has no power to own or run a line of steamships. I assert that if this company was proceeded against in the Courts for a forfeiture of charter on the ground of willful misuses, that their charter would go under so quick that the heads of the officers of the company would swim. Now, all we ask is that justice shall be done, and that the law shall be enforced that shall loosen the grasp of these monstrous monopolists.

The O'Connor law provided that the rates prevailing on the first of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, should not be increased. They were increased, in violation of that Act, and the railroad had influence enough in the Legislature to get that Act repealed in the Hart law. The Commissioners directed suits to be instituted for its violation in Los Angeles, but before they could be instituted the law was repealed by the Hart Act, which took away the right of action. This demonstrates the enormity of the abuse, and how little reliance can be placed upon a Legislature manipulated by the railroad, and how potent the railway is for control.

DEATH OF A MEMBER ANNOUNCED.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Convention: It becomes my sorrowful duty to announce to this Convention the death of the Honorable B. F. Kenny, delegate elect from the City and County of San Francisco, and in respect to his memory, Mr. President, I move you, sir, that the Convention do now adjourn. It is announced in this dispatch that there will be a further dispatch announcing the time of the funeral, and it would be better for the Convention to adjourn until to-morrow morning, when we can determine what farther action to take.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion cannot be made in Committee of the Whole.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again. What is the pleasure of the Convention?

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I move that the Convention do now adjourn, out of respect to the memory of our deceased fellow delegate, the Honorable B. F. Kenny.

Carried, and at three o'clock and fifty minutes P. M., the Convention stood adjourned.

FIFTY-SIXTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Friday, November 22d, 1878.

The Convention met in regular session at ten o'clock A. M., President Hoge in the chair.

DEATH OF MR. KENNY.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. President: I rise in connection with the death that was announced here yesterday—the death of the Honorable Bernard F. Kenny, of San Francisco, a young man just verging into manhood; one whose upright conduct and gentlemanly behavior had endeared him to us all. I offer the following resolutions.

THE SECRETARY read:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst, by death, one of the delegates to this Convention, the Honorable Bernard F. Kenny, a native of the City and County of San Francisco; therefore,

Resolved, That it is with feelings of profound regret that we have heard of the death of the Honorable Bernard F. Kenny, a delegate to this Convention from the City and County of San Francisco.

Resolved, That in his death this Convention has lost an honest and faithful member, society a useful, moral, and intelligent citizen, and his parents a fond and affectionate son.

Resolved, That in this hour of deep affliction and grief we sincerely tender his parents our sincere condolence and profound sympathy.

Resolved, That a committee of six be appointed by the Chair to act as pall-bearers, and convey the remains of the deceased to the place of burial, and to defray all necessary expenses in connection with his funeral out of the funds of the Convention.

Resolved, That the Secretary be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to the parents of deceased.

Resolved, That this Convention do adjourn at twelve o'clock on Saturday, out of respect to the memory of the deceased, until two o'clock on Monday next.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair will appoint as the committee, under the resolutions, Mr. Beerstecher, of San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, of San Francisco, Mr. McCallum, of Alameda, Mr. Barbour, of San Francisco, Mr. Larkin, of El Dorado, and Mr. Reddy, of Inyo.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: At this sad hour I feel that I cannot without pain drop upon the green memory of my companion, and colleague, and friend, a few flowers of devoted love. He was one of California's frank and noble youths. I fail to recall one harsh or unkind word towards friend or foe that ever fell from his lips. His ambition was not lofty. He did not care for fame, nor yet did he sigh. He loved his party much, but he loved his country more. I cherished him for his candor. I admired him for his principle and his liberality, but, above all, I loved him for his humility. I would never desert him while living, nor shall I now fail him when dead. He was one of those of whom it ought be said, of all the world, "This is a man."

PETITIONS—MECHANICS' LIENS.

MR. VAN DYKE presented the following petition, signed by a large number of mechanics and others, citizens of California, asking that a provision be inserted in the Constitution for a lien law:

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned respectfully represent that the practical working of the present legislation, and decisions of Supreme Court based thereon, regarding the rights of mechanics, material-men and laborers to a lien for their labor and material furnished, is such that those who in a measure depend upon such law for just protection fail in nearly all cases to obtain it, because of the inefficient working of said law.

Wherefore, we pray you to declare in our organic law the right of every mechanic, material-man, and laborer to a perfect lien on the thing whereon his labor has been expended, or for which his materials have been furnished

Moreover, we would state that we would be satisfied with amendment number one hundred and sixty-seven, introduced by Mr. Van Dyke, on October tenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, and read and referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects, as follows:

"SECTION —. Mechanics, material-men, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property on which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials, for the value of such labor done and materials furnished, and the Legislature shall provide by law for the speedy and efficient enforcement of said liens."

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

MESSRS. FARRELL, WELLIN, TERRY, GORMAN, LARKIN, THOMPSON, HEROLD, and SMITH, of San Francisco, presented petitions on the same subject.

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

CONSTRUCTIVE FEES OF OFFICERS.

MR. ESTEE introduced the following proposed amendment to the Constitution, relative to constructive fees of officers:

"No person holding an office or position under any law of this State, or under appointment by any corporation, board, or body created or authorized by any law of this State, shall receive or be entitled to compensation for constructive services.

"The Legislature shall pass no law authorizing any person to receive pay or compensation, except for services actually performed."

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that it be referred to the Committee on Legislative Department, and ordered printed.

Carried.

NOTICE.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. President: I desire to give notice that on to-morrow I will move amendments to Rules One and Two. I send it up to the Clerk.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That Rule One be amended so as to read as follows:

The Convention shall meet each day of sitting at half-past nine o'clock A. M., unless it shall adjourn to some other hour.

Resolved, That Rule Two be amended so as to read as follows:

The Convention shall take a recess each day from half-past twelve o'clock P. M. to two o'clock P. M., and from five o'clock P. M., or such earlier hour as the Convention may determine, until seven o'clock P. M.

Laid over one day under the rules.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

REPORT—WATER AND WATER RIGHTS.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I would like to offer a report from the Committee on Water and Water Rights.

THE SECRETARY read:

The Committee on Water and Water Rights, to whom were referred propositions numbers two, thirty, sixty-three, ninety-three, one hundred and forty-four, one hundred and seventy-two, two hundred and eighty-five, three hundred and thirty-seven, three hundred and sixty-two, three hundred and sixty-three, three hundred and sixty-four, four hundred and twelve, and four hundred and twenty-eight, have carefully considered said propositions, and recommend that no further action be had thereon.

The committee recommend that the following sections be made part of the Constitution:

SECTION 1. All water appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale or rental, is hereby declared public, and subject to the control of the State.

SEC. 2. The unappropriated waters of the lakes and rivers of this State are declared to be public property, and may be appropriated by individuals, associations, or corporations, subject to such conditions and restrictions as the Legislature may impose.

SEC. 3. The Legislature shall enact laws permitting the appropriators of water and the owners or occupants of land to construct levees, ditches, canals, flumes, and aqueducts, or run their water through natural channels for agricultural, mining, manufacturing, milling, domestic, drainage, reclamation, or sanitary purposes, across the land of others.

JOHN McCOY,
DANIEL LEWIS,
J. A. FILCHER,
J. H. KEYES.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. Mr. President: I move that the report be laid on the table until the minority report is presented.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, it is so ordered.

RESOLUTION OF INQUIRY.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: I send up a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Board of Commissioners of Transportation be requested to furnish to this Convention, at as early a day as practicable, a compilation of all the general and special laws hitherto passed under which railroad corporations have been formed or franchises granted, together with an abstract of subsidies granted and subscriptions made to corporations by the State and the several counties thereof; provided, the expense of the printing thereof be not chargeable to the funds provided for the expenses of this Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. The resolution is not in order at present, but if there be no objection, the gentlemen will have leave to introduce his resolution.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: I am informed by the Commissioner that he has the matter to which that resolution is addressed, already prepared for his annual report, and that if the Convention desire that information, he can furnish it in about a week, and that he will have it printed himself. It will have to be printed with his annual report, and the Convention may as well have the benefit of that information this much in advance. I certainly think it would save a great deal of labor on the part of members who are desirous of informing themselves thoroughly with reference to corporations. It would require at least a month's labor on the part of any gentleman, to look up this matter. It would certainly be a valuable class of information for the Convention to have.

The resolution was adopted.

CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section eighteen and the amendments were before the committee. The Secretary will read them.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 18. No railroad company or other common carrier shall combine or make any contract with the owners of any vessel that leaves port or makes port in this State, or with any common carrier, by which combination or contract, the earnings of the one doing the carrying are to be shared by the other not doing the carrying.

Amendment by Mr. Ayers. "Amend section eighteen by adding after the word 'carrying,' in the fifth line: 'and whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any other common carrier, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not be again raised or increased from such reduced standard.'"

Amendment to the amendment, by Mr. Dudley, of Solano: "Add, 'except by consent of the Legislature.'"

MR. CAMPBELL. I desire to offer an amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is already an amendment to the amendment pending.

MR. CAMPBELL. I was under the impression that the amendment had been accepted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The immediate question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley, to the amendment.

MR. GREGG. I move that the further consideration of section eighteen be passed over until sections nineteen and twenty are disposed of. It may be that this matter may affect the adoption of those sections.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I have not been present nor heard the discussions, but it appears to me, if such a regulation as that should be adopted, that it might have a tendency to cramp the Commission spoken of, provided that Commission should be finally determined upon. Here it is proposed that this part of it shall be regulated by a special Act, that once these rates of freights and fares are reduced, they shall remain so. Yet, it seems, in this report as presented, so that the Commission is to have sole power. I have no doubt but that it is proper in some cases, to regulate to a certain extent, but yet it might conflict with their action. I am opposed to the amendment.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I second the motion of the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Gregg. I hope it will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this motion will not prevail. I do not see that the amendment now before the Convention will at all conflict with section twenty, providing this Convention adopts section twenty. We have yet to pass upon section twenty and the amendment, and the amendment that is now before the Convention is one which I believe a majority of this Convention, and of the people of this State, believe is necessary to the protection of the people; and I believe in incorporating into this Constitution as we go along such principles as we consider shall be for the safety and protection of the people. The amendment is not, however, inconsistent with section twenty. It will act as an admonition to the Commissioners, should they be appointed, and it seems to me it will be the greatest protection in the Constitution to the people of the whole State. I hope that the amendment will not be passed over for the present, and I hope that it will be adopted before we get through with it.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: The reason I second the motion is that I am opposed, for one, to meeting this issue except right square in front. Now the gentlemen have presented amendments here which would seem to settle certain propositions which are presented to this Convention squarely in sections nineteen and twenty. I hope that the committee will pass over this section for the present, and then come back to it, as they have to come back to sections twelve and thirteen, and then consider section eighteen with the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles. I will say to the Convention that it does not endanger the amendments. It does not affect the gentleman's right. It does not affect the right of this Convention in any degree to adopt any amendment they desire to put to section eighteen. But I hope we will meet the question first as to the power of regulation, as represented in sections nineteen and twenty, squarely, and not by a side track. That is my only object in seconding this amendment. It is not with any view of smothering the question as presented by the gentleman from Los Angeles at all. His amendment will come up in its regular order.

REMARKS OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I hope this section that the committee now has under consideration will be acted on at this time. It seems to me that it does affect certainly the time of this Convention. We have now been considering it one or two days, and now, that we have had it fully discussed, we are just as ready to act upon it as we will be at any time. I concur with the gentleman from Los Angeles in considering that this section, and the amendments pending to this section, do not affect the other sections presented by the Committee on Corporations. I consider, Mr. Chairman, that this Convention should act upon that matter by itself. The question is whether this amendment which is now proposed is a correct amendment—whether this limitation should be made? I believe that it is an amendment which should be made. I think it stands by itself, and has nothing to do with whether this Convention shall conclude to propose a Commission or not. I hope that we will act upon this section, now that we have spent the time in its consideration that we have.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the motion made by Mr. Gregg will be voted down, and that the amendment of Mr. Ayers will be adopted. It seems to me that if the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations has such great confidence in this Commission, he ought to leave this whole article on corporations in the hands of the Commissioners. It is just as sensible as to skip over section eighteen until we get to section twenty.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Gregg, to temporarily pass this section until after the consideration of section twenty.

The motion was lost.

SPEECH OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: In the first place, there is no question raised as to the power of this Convention to exercise the claim of regulation which is covered by this amendment. The question of naked power is not raised in this controversy. As far as that question is concerned, it stands on impregnable grounds, not only by early decisions, but by more recent ones. As is known by almost every lawyer in this Convention, in the case of Munn vs. Illinois, Chief Justice Waite decides that even private property, if it is affected by a public interest, is subject to legislative control; and in the next case following—the case of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company vs. The State of Iowa—he simply refers to the previous decision, seemingly taking the ground that if private property affected by a public interest is subject to the legislative control, so much more must be subject to legislative control the powers exercised by the common carrier. He traces it back—he goes as far back as the statute of William and Mary, by which, in England, the rates of charges by common carriers were regulated. I am not sure but that it may be traced back to the edict of the prætor, in Roman law. At any rate, it exists, and may be safely predicated on the police power of the State. Besides, we have a provision in our present Constitution in respect to corporations, which says that the provisions in relation to corporations are subject to alteration or repeal. These corporations are clothed with an immense power. They take the property of a private citizen by virtue of the right of sovereignty. It is exercised under the claim of a public use or public benefit, and every citizen's right is subservient to that sovereign right of the State, which it may exercise in its own capacity, or which it may delegate to a political division, to individuals, or corporate bodies, as public agencies in respect to some public good sought to be advanced. Therefore, as far as this question of power is concerned, it does not figure in this controversy.

Now, as to the question of expediency. Sir, I have nothing to say in this argument in respect to these men who first started the Central Pacific Railroad; I am willing to concede to them the full meed of praise which they deserve for their thrift and enterprise, and I am glad that the conception occurred in this City of Sacramento; that in an humble tenement at fifty-four K street, in this city, these men, Huntington, and Hopkins, and Stanford, and the two Crockers met, and combined together, having confidence in one another, and started the great enterprise of the Central Pacific Railroad. Because I object to a perversion of the doctrine of the rights of these corporations, I am not driven to the necessity of aspersing these men. I listened, sir, with a great deal of pleasure, yesterday, to the argument of the distinguished gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, a gentleman of high character and of conceded ability. In his argument he takes the position, first, that the directors of a transportation company may themselves imperil the interests of the corporation by unwise reduction. He said: "First—That the directors of a transportation line may imperil the interests of a corporation by unwise reductions—those which shall prove unwise and destructive, and which would be fastened upon the company by the provision proposed." Sir, I do not contemplate any danger of that kind. It is not the history of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. When they sent Huntington East, and gave him as ample power of attorney as was ever given to agent, to represent them, they had entire confidence in him, and it showed that there was a bond of union between these men that was not capable of severance. And it has been the history of this road from the beginning that the projectors have always coöperated together, and it is these five or six men who have had the complete control of it. Now, sir, is there any danger of this kind to be apprehended, that these directors, elected by the stockholders, that is to say selected by themselves, may reduce their tariff of freights and fares so as to imperil the interests of this great corporation? Can any one think so? These gentlemen, with all their experience; these gentlemen who have had charge of this magnificent enterprise from its inception? I say that it cannot be supposed that they will exercise any such power; but they will exercise it discreetly, with a view to their own interests. That is the history of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. That has been their past, and that will be their future.

There is another position taken by Mr. Wilson, his third, omitting the second: "Third—The inability of a company to raise lowered rates to a living scale might bring a corporation to bankruptcy." Well, sir, that is covered by what I have already said. There is no danger of any such bankruptcy. These men will always agree—with their untold millions, with the richest dowry that was ever given to a corporation, embracing miles and miles, in alternate sections, of the richest land in the State of California.

Let me call the attention of the committee to the earnings of this road. I read from the report of the Commissioners of Transportation, established by an Act of the Legislature of this State, in April, eighteen hundred and seventy-six:

Baltimore and Ohio Road, for seven years ending September 30, 1871.

Gross earnings	$67,763,308 00
Operating expenses	42,372,433 00
Net earnings	$25,390,875 00

Being, say 37½ per cent. of the whole.

Pennsylvania Railroad, 1862 to 1871, both inclusive.

Gross earnings	$158,073,822 00
Operating expenses	110,184,053 00
Net earnings	$47,889,769 00

Being 30 4-10 per cent. of the whole.

New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, 1862 to 1871, both inclusive.

Gross earnings	$187,032,624 00
Operating expenses	127,958,239 00
Net earnings	$57,074,385 00

Or 31½ per cent. of the whole.

Central Pacific Railroad, 1864 to 1871, inclusive.

Gross earnings	$28,374,781 00
Operating expenses	15,162,203 00
Net earnings	$13,212,578 00

Being 46½ per cent. of the whole.

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, for the year 1871.

Gross earnings	$12,557,529 00
Operating expenses	7,998,175 00
Net earnings	$4,559,354 00

Or 36 3-10 per cent. of the whole.

Central Pacific Railroad, year 1871.

Gross earnings	$9,546,342 00
Operating expenses	4,325,428 00
Net earnings	$5,220,914 00

Or 54 6-10 per cent. of the whole.

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, year ending September 30, 1875.

Gross earnings	$14,444,238 00
Operating expenses	9,908,665 00
Net earnings	$4,535,573 00

Or 31 4-10 per cent. of the whole.

Pennsylvania Railroad, year 1875.

Gross earnings	$34,464,104 00
Operating expenses	23,040,908 00
Net earnings	$11,423,196 00

Or 33 1-10 per cent. of the whole.

New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, year 1875.

Gross earnings	$29,027,218 00
Operating expenses	17,262,107 00
Net earnings	$11,765,111 00

Or 40½ per cent. of the whole.

Central Pacific Railroad, year 1875.

Gross earnings	$17,021,015 00
Operating expenses	7,417,944 00
Net earnings	$9,603,071 00

Or 56 3-10 per cent. of the whole.

Now, sir, with its magnificent dowry, with all of its land lying along the line of the road, they have not been driven to the necessity of bringing it into the market. They have been realizing these immense sums, and have their millions of acres of land in reserve; and this is not the whole secret of this matter, as has been said by the gentleman from Los Angeles. They have not only claimed these great highways overland, but they have also usurped the ocean highway, the throne of international sovereignty. They have even tried to take the trident from Neptune over the sea, and to wield this in connection with this great landed power. Talk about a company such as this being thrown into bankruptcy? No, sir!

Now, I will read the next reason that Mr. Wilson gives: "Accidents will occur; severe seasons and heavy Winters be encountered; fires will burn depots and sheds and other property." The same answer applies to that. In reducing these fares and freights they will take these matters into consideration. So that is not available. What is the next reason given? That is the second one, which I omitted before: "Second—He believed the amendment would put it out of the power of the Legislature to exercise, when it finds it right to do so, wholesome discipline and control over these carriers." Now, sir, I imagine that if there are three men elected by the people of this great State, as is contemplated by section twenty, that the people will hold these men to a rigid responsibility. I tell you that not one of these Commissioners selected by the suffrages of the people would dare violate that trust. They would not pretend to do it. These Commissioners would doubtless act for the interest of the people. But, sir, as to the idea of putting it out of the power of the Legislature to control this matter, we can insert a facile provision in this Constitution for an amendment to this Constitution. We can put it in such a shape so that if our own provisions in this Constitution should operate against the interests of the people of this State, these sections can be changed by an easy amendment of the Constitution.

Now, sir, let us look at this matter in a practical, business light. Here is this great railroad enterprise, with its hundreds of arms, like Briareus, stretching over the State of California, and owing to its spirit of grasping cupidity, not confining its operations alone to the land, but reaching out farther, so that the little boat which passes through the gateway of commerce here on the Pacific slope, that golden gateway, as she speeds along on her errand, with her little capital, to carry our produce to the City of Los Angeles, or the City of San Diego, encounters the power of, and is terrorized by, this magnificent corporation. This grasping cupidity stretches out its tentacles to inveigle this little competitive corporation. It prevents the growth of the towns in the southern portion of this State. And yet that is not all. It does not confine itself to the Pacific seaway, but these great river routes throughout the State of California are similarly affected, and the wharfage, the river fronts, as well as the ocean front, are taken by this magnificent corporation so as to exclude all capital and all competitive enterprise. Sir, I have always regarded the State as the alma mater of her citizens. I have always regarded that doctrine taught many hundred years ago by one of the seven wise men of Greece, as the best doctrine, that that government is best which protects the rights of the weakest citizen as well as the strongest. My sympathies, therefore, are in favor of the weaker power, and I very often find myself drifting in that direction. But I endeavor to control it by a judicious exercise of reason in the same connection. I say further that this is no case for sympathy for the Central Pacific Railroad Company. This provision is applicable to all railroads. We do not make any specialty in respect to the Central Pacific Railroad Company. This provision covers the whole ground, and is applicable to all of these corporations. I say that if there is any place for sympathy it should be exercised in favor of the weaker power; in favor of these weak competitive enterprises. They start out with their little capital. They find that they are anticipated; that they are compelled to sell out; that their boats are driven away from the ocean highway, and this great power forestalls and controls the whole trade. In the first place these great corporations seem to commend themselves to the attention of the public: "Why, we reduce the carriage; we reduce this tariff of freights and fares."

But, after they have frozen out the small enterprise, they go back to their first love, they reëstablish their tariff, and make it more odious than before. It is a good deal like the invitation which the giant gave to Ulysses to go into his cave and partake of his hospitality, intimating to Ulysses, that, as a mark of distinguished respect, he would eat his companions first and himself last. So it is with these corporations.

This giant monopoly will consume these little competitive industries first, and afterwards the otherwise growing towns of the south. No, sir; in the very nature of things the carriage by water is cheaper and should be cheaper. The expense is less. There is a less number of operatives; there is less capital embarked; but on the other hand, the railroad commends itself on account of its increased expedition. This southern country should be developed, and we should endeavor to have it developed by all of these competitive enterprises. It is a noble country; a country with a climate which is tempered to the invalid; a country with its orange groves, its lemons, and almonds, and semi-tropical fruits, reminding us of the Gardens of the Hesperides. But the interests involved are not confined to the South. The whole State is interested in this matter, because, as I have said before, this great railroad has almost corraled the State from one end to the other. Now, sir, it occurs to me that inasmuch as this doctrine, which is contended for by us, is founded upon conceded power; inasmuch as it has the sanction of hundreds of years; inasmuch as it can be made plastic by an easy process of amendment of the Constitution, and the argument in favor of its expediency being equally strong; it occurs to me, I repeat, that the amendment which is offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, should be adopted, and I hope, sir, in behalf of the people of this great State, from one section to the other, that it will be adopted. Not that I wish to disturb any vested rights. Whenever I come in sight of the Rubicon and find that the vested rights of the people of this great State are disturbed or in any way impaired, I shall not cross it, but shall stand upon the sure foundation of any and every constitutional safeguard.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment may be perfected, so as to suit what I believe is a majority of this Convention, and that then it will be adopted. I beg leave to say a few words upon the question. At present it is presented in this light: The original proposition, as presented by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Colonel Ayers, was, that whenever a railroad corporation should, for the purpose of competing with any other railroad corporation, lower its rates, that thereafter it should not be allowed to raise them again from that reduced standard. Since that time there was an amendment accepted by the gentleman from Los Angeles, including in this class of corporations, or including with the railroads, all common carriers. As the proposition now stands, if any railroad corporation shall lower its rates for the purpose of competing with any other common carrier, it shall not again raise them. It does not say that no common carrier shall lower its rates for the purpose of competing with any other common carrier, but they shall be compelled to retain them at that reduced standard. Now, sir, in my judgment it ought to embrace common carriers upon one side as well as upon the other, or we shall have this result: a railroad corporation may not combine against any common carrier, and reduce freights for the sake of freezing them out, but a corporation doing the same business, if it is not a railroad corporation, may with impunity combine against any common carrier, and having frozen out the competing line, they are allowed to take their freights and fares back again to the old standard. In my judgment that is not correct. I do not see why we should inhibit railroad corporations from doing this, and allow others who are engaged in the same business to do it. I think the amendment, as it stands, should be amended so as to include all corporations doing the business of common carriers; that they shall not be allowed to lower their rates, or having done it to compete with other common carriers, that they shall not be allowed to raise them again from that reduced standard. I propose, if I have an opportunity, to offer an amendment to that effect.

Now, sir, in regard to the question as to whether this is something which should not be put into this section, provided we adopt sections nineteen and twenty. It seems to me that neither one of those sections cover this point at all. Section nineteen regulates the matter of discrimination in charges of freights and fares from one point to another, and it puts it into the hands of this Commission to determine that. But the question as to one corporation reducing its rates for the purpose of killing another corporation and then taking it back again, is not included either in sections nineteen or twenty, and, as I said yesterday, it seems to me that it is a very proper direction to that Commission, if it should be appointed, that they should see to it that this is not allowed. It is one of the things that should come within the purview of this Commission, and I hope the amendment will be adopted. I think we shall not do ourselves justice unless we adopt an amendment of this kind, and it is certainly very proper here. I hope it will not be confined to railroad corporations, upon the one side, who are inhibited from doing this thing, but that they shall not be allowed to oppress those who are doing a business, no matter what the corporation is on the other. Whatever is included on one side, should also be included on the other.

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I am very reluctant, after this question has been so long under discussion, to say anything upon it, but it seems to me that there are some considerations connected with this matter which have not been presented to the Convention, and which ought to operate upon our minds in determining this question. As the amendment was originally presented by the gentleman from Los Angeles, I was in favor of it with a slight alteration, which placed the competing line upon the same ground with the line originally in operation. But an amendment has since been accepted which, it seems to me, will be mischievous and dangerous in its consequences, and the dangers of which have not been foreseen and explained to the Convention. When the Commissioners recommended that in the event of a competing line of railroad being constructed, the original line, after reducing its rates to break down that competition, should not be permitted to raise them, they made, I think, a wise recommendation. They did not clothe it in the legal language of a section, but they simply put forth the general principle, which meets with my hearty approval. Now I, in common with most of the members of this committee, have felt the exactions and oppressions which have been practiced upon the people of this State for a number of years by the giant corporation which, with its branches, has overshadowed the State, the Legislature, the officials of the State, and the people themselves. And for the last few years, so far as I have taken any part in public life, it has been simply for the purpose of aiding organized opposition to these exactions and oppressions. And at the same time I feel that that sense of indignation which we all experience at the oppressions and exactions which we have witnessed, may lead us into extreme measures which, so far from benefiting the people and remedying existing evils, may lead to other evils, the consequences of which we have not foreseen.

Now, the amendment as it now stands proposes that whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any other common carrier, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not be again raised or increased. Now that is a prohibition in the first place, to inhibit them from at any time authorizing these rates to be changed; no matter what changes in the road; no matter what changes in the financial condition of the country may take place, rendering a change necessary, there is no power under that amendment, even assuming that sections nineteen and twenty should be adopted, which can at any time authorize the corporation which has lowered its rates in consequence of any competition from any quarter, or of any kind, ever to raise those rates again until the Constitution has been amended. Now with reference to railroads, I desire to say that at the proper time, and when it shall become proper to offer it, I have an amendment which I shall desire to offer, and which I will now read for the information of the Convention. It goes as far as I think we ought to go, and no farther. It is as follows: Add to section eighteen, "And whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any other railroad, constructed or in process of construction, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, it shall not again raise its rates without the consent of the governmental authority in which shall be vested the power to regulate freights and fares upon railroads; nor shall such other railroads raise its original rates without similar consent." As the section originally stood, while the competing line might raise its fares and freights the one which had lowered its rates never could raise its rates again. That would be clearly unjust and improper. In my amendment I limit it to competing railroads, for this reason: if this section is adopted in the form in which it is now before the house, it will offer an unlimited capacity to blackmail railroad corporations. I do not limit myself to the Central Pacific Railroad, or to its branches. I do not suppose, and I hope it will not be the case, that this will be the only railroad ever built in this State. We have already some one or two others. We have the Santa Cruz Railroad—a road which goes from Alameda to Santa Cruz—now in process of construction.

There is another railroad already built by the citizens of Santa Cruz, running from Watsonville to Santa Cruz. There will doubtless—under proper restrictions of the power of the vast, overshadowing monopoly which now controls—be a number of other railroads—short railroads, constructed from one convenient point to another in the State. Well, now, if you say, in regard to these railroads, that any railroad company building a competing line, as against them, shall, if it lowers its rates, not be permitted to raise them, you do that which is just. But if you leave it the way it is, any man having, for instance, a stage line for which there is no present profitable employment, might go to them and say, "Gentlemen, if you don't pay me so much money I will put on an opposition to you. My stage line at present is doing nothing, or nothing profitable, and I can afford to cut under you for the present, and I can run for some time against you, and while I run I will destroy your business." You can see at once that if that is the case it offers an unlimited opportunity for blackmailing railroads. Now, here, for instance, there was a little railroad between Galt and Ione City, in Amador County. It has, to be sure, been swallowed up by the railroad corporation, and is under its control. But suppose that road had been running alone. It was built at great expense. It was difficult for those who were engaged in it to run it. A very slight opposition would break them down. Now, if it so happened that anybody chose, having an unprofitable stage line, to run in opposition to it, that enterprise, valuable in itself, and instituted for just purposes, might be broken down and utterly destroyed. And so with all that class of weak railroads built with limited capital. There is no reason why this should be confined to competing railroads alone. A railroad is a permanent structure. It cannot be moved from place to place. It cannot be shifted about here and there. Along the coast, for instance, where there is water communication, a vessel or a steamship may be run from one point to another to-day, and shifted to-morrow to a different locality. We all know that in dull times these steamers may be out of employment. They find it difficult to obtain freights and fares. They may be willing to put on their lines at hardly living rates. Now, we all know that water transportation is a good deal cheaper in the main than railroad transportation. It is much less expensive. Now, if in such a case as that a person owning such a vessel, or steamboat, or any other means of transportation, would have an opportunity to go to the railroad company, and say, "Gentlemen, so much money, or I put on an opposition line. I will either take your business from you for the time being, or I will force you to reduce your rates to less than a living rate." It may be used as an engine of vast oppression. It may be used as a check to the construction of small railroads—the construction of which might be of vital importance to the State. It is not done now for fear of this central corporation, but take away that fear by suitable provisions in your Constitution, by limiting its powers, in the manner proposed in the amendment which I just now read, and you will effect the purpose and object in view; and if in connection with that you go on to further provide for such regulation of freights and fares as shall be just, you have then put a check upon the undue exercise of corporate power. I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, to detain the Convention. I have merely presented these considerations because I feel that in the form in which this amendment stands, I cannot support it; but if put in a reasonable form, one which will do justice to the people, and not be oppressive to any one, I will support it.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. This amendment, offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, is an inflexible rule which applies to all railroads, if they should do anything of that kind. I would prefer, myself, to have an amendment added (which I have drawn), if I could get it in, by adding: "unless the Legislature, by law passed by a majority vote"—or by a two-thirds vote, just as may be preferred—"of all the members elected to each house, shall authorize a change of rates." That will not conflict with the action of any Commission that might be appointed under the subsequent section, if that should be adopted. Then the Commission would be authorized to fix the rates in this case, just the same as in all other cases. And, as I cannot offer it under the rule, if the author of the proposed amendment would accept this in addition, I think, perhaps, it would popularize the measure.

MR. AYERS. I would accept the amendment, with the leave of the Convention, to have the rates changed by a vote of the Legislature.

MR. HAGER. Then the amendment will read: "And whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with a rival common carrier, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, such reduced rates shall not be again raised or increased from such reduced standard, unless the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each house, shall authorize such change." There would, therefore, be no conflict between section twenty and the section we are now proposing to amend. The object of this amendment we all understand, and it is simply in relation to the vast power of railroads in this State. Efforts have been heretofore made for the purpose of controlling railroads to some extent in the charges that they may impose upon the people, or upon the property that is transported within the limits of the State of California; and hitherto every effort made in that direction, as we all know, has proved to be a failure. Some years—many years—ago, a bill passed the Assembly called the Freeman bill. I believe it passed by a very large vote in the popular branch of the Legislature. It went to the Senate, and it there slept the sleep that knows no waking. It rested with the Committee on Corporations until nearly the end of the session, when, finally, no action was taken on it, or on any other measure in its place. Next, at a subsequent Legislature, a bill was introduced in the Assembly called the Archer bill. That was intended to regulate fares and freights. It passed the popular branch of the Legislature—if I am correct; and if I am not, the member from Santa Clara, who was a member, will correct me—it passed the popular branch, I believe, by a large majority. It went to the Senate, and it there slept until the end of the session, in the hands of the Committee on Corporations; and finally there was reported what is now known as the law constituting the Commissioners of Transportation. By that bill a Commission was appointed, with a view to regulating fares and freights in regard to railroads and transportation companies. That Commission, composed of men well known throughout the State, went to work under the provisions of that authority, with the intent of executing its provisions upon all railroad corporations within the State. Did they succeed, sir? Why, the corporations defied the Commission and defied the law. They made no response to the Commission. And when called upon to comply with the law and its provisions by making responses and returns by communication or otherwise, they disregarded every appeal made to them, and defied the Commission, and defied the sovereign authority of the State. And that is the condition in which it now rests. That Commission went to work, and they made their report. They tried to control the corporations; and in order to do this, they instituted suits against them. They brought them into Court by mandamus, and they obtained judgment in the District Court against them; and the Court, by its judgment, attempted to compel them to comply with the requirements of that law. What did they do—acquiesce? No. Appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, from these judgments; and in regard thereto, Mr. Doyle, one of the Commissioners, says:

"You are aware that several actions of mandamus were brought to compel railroad companies to afford statistical information demanded by the present Commissioners, and which they had refused to furnish. These actions are pending in the Supreme Court, on appeal from judgments rendered below in favor of the State. They were set for argument for December third last, but postponed, and finally, by consent, were set for hearing on March fourth. On that day they were pressed by the counsel for the Commissioners, but postponed a week at the instance of the railroad companies. On Monday, the eleventh instant, when they again came up, the same counsel applied to continue them for the term, on the ground that one branch of the Legislature had passed an Act abolishing the Commission, and the other would probably concur. The Court, thus called upon to discount the action of the Senate, did not hesitate to do so, and postponed the cases for the term."

And then the Legislature, while this Commission was engaged in its work, repealed the law, and left the cases standing in the Supreme Court unprovided for, where I believe they quietly rest at this day.

MR. ESTEE. I would like to ask the gentleman, if this amendment does not place the same matter back in the Legislature that he so earnestly denounces.

MR. HAGER. Not at all.

MR. ESTEE. It strikes me that it does.

MR. HAGER. It merely gives the Legislature the power to relieve them from a penalty.

MR. ESTEE. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell, would meet the case.

MR. HAGER. I have no objection to that, so far as I am informed. My amendment was merely to do away with the objection urged, that when a company had once placed themselves in this position it was impossible for them to extricate themselves, by reason of the provision contained in a subsequent section. My amendment was intended to cover a possible contingency of this kind.

MR. SCHELL. I would ask the gentleman if this would not come in conflict with the authority intended to be vested in the Commission, provided sections nineteen and twenty are adopted, which says that they "shall have the sole power," etc.

MR. HAGER. That provision must be subordinate to the other portions of the Constitution. I have very little faith in that sole power, and I have very little faith in the Commission. But I will come to that proposition, and may say something about it hereafter. This is a proposition substantially, in its prominent features, following up the efforts made in this State to control the railroad corporations, or in some measure to fix the limits as to freights and fares. I do not say whether or not they have been unjust to the people of California, or excessive in their charges. I am referring to history here, so far as I can recall it from general recollection. It is true, as has been charged, that they have refused to pay the interest claimed to be due the Government on their bonds, but as has been said by my colleague from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided in their favor, so that is no longer a cause of censure or complaint, and as a consequence of that decision, the Thurman bill, so-called, was introduced into Congress, and passed, and became a law. The intent of that law is to compel them to pay to the Government these bonds and interest which the Government issued as a subsidy for the construction of the road. That Act applies to the Union Pacific and to the Central Pacific. It is in consequence of a clause contained in the Act of Congress authorizing the construction and subsidizing of this great enterprise, to the effect that the law may be altered, changed, or amended, that this Thurman bill was passed. The Union Pacific acquiesced in it; but the Central Pacific Railroad Company rebelled even against the Government, as they have rebelled to a certain extent against the Government of the State of California. They are not satisfied with this law of Congress; they will not comply with its provisions. A suit has been instituted here in the case of Gallatin against that compauy, which is supposed to be instituted in their interest, that they may obtain a final and favorable decision. How that may be, I do not know; but I am informed by good authority from Washington that the Government has no confidence in the suit, and that they have there taken measures to institute proceedings on behalf of the Government to compel the Central Pacific, as well as the Union Pacific Railroad, to conform with the Act of Congress under the so called Thurman bill. I do not undertake to give my opinion in regard to it one way or the other, but simply state what I consider history.

Now, this Central Pacific Railroad controls all the carrying trade, with some inconsiderable exceptions, of this entire State. Their railroads run through our valleys and over our mountains. Their transportation companies control our highways and rivers, and to some extent the ocean. They will not tolerate any opposition, and the people are substantially entirely dependent upon them, and their freights and fares are just what they may please to make them. Well, sir, this great railroad was a grand enterprise, we all admit, but by whom was it built? Certainly not by the persons who are the owners and managers, so called, of that great enterprise. It was built by the munificence of the Government of the United States and the people of the State of California. I do not suppose that the men that started this enterprise, creditable as it may be to them, had enough capital to construct one hundred miles of the road, but by the liberality of the Government in lands and bonds, and by liberal donations in not only this State, but also in others, they were able to carry it through, and, I believe, obtained a great profit in its construction in addition to the road itself. That they deserve great credit for their energy and enterprise, that they should enjoy all the credit, the honor, and the glory, and are entitled to the fruits of success, none will deny. If they had rested on their laurels, and had confined themselves to this enterprise, to this great continental road and its business, and let the State of California—its people, its valleys, and its rivers, its navigable waters and its mountains—alone, it might have been said of them as Junius said of Lord Chatham: "Immortal honors will gather around their monument and thicken over them. It is a solid fabric, and will support the laurels that adorn it."

But further than this, it has been said that they control legislation; that they control the political conventions of both parties, and in this way effectually control the destiny of this great State, by keeping it in their own hands. Now, sir, I was brought up in a State where they had a railroad corporation and a railroad monopoly. It was all powerful, overshadowing, and controlled as effectually the destinies of that State—perhaps more so—than the Central Pacific controls California. I refer to the Camden and Amboy Railroad of New Jersey; which for more than twenty years ruled that State with an iron hand. Political conventions met and nominated candidates for office pledged against monopolists. Both parties were pledged against monopolists. Yet, when the Legislature assembled, an unseen hand, an underground railroad, was at work, and that unseen hand, and that underground railroad, was more efficient than if it had been visible, and in the open air, to control legislation in that State. Is not this our condition in California?

Well, sir, you may go to Washington and see the effect of the influence of corporations there. Take the Erie Railroad, and the New York Central, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Pennsylvania Central, the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, all combined together, exercising their influence upon legislation there. Are they not all-powerful, overshadowing, and incapable of being resisted? Take them in combination with the manufacturers, protected by high tariffs, and with the national banks, and they can control the Congress, and the nation. They can nominate Presidents; they can elect Senators; they can elect members of the House of Representatives; they can nominate Governors in the States; they can nominate legislators, and when they nominate and elect them, they can control them. You may ask, where is the strong arm that is capable of breaking them down? You may say the people—the people. Is that so? Why, sir, they are more powerful than the people. They may crush you, and they may crush me—they can crush any man that raises his arm in opposition to them, if they undertake to do so. Your prosperity is dependent upon their favor, and their enmity may crush you to the earth, and destroy you and your business.

Now, in regard to this amendment—I am referring to the twentieth section, so called—as the great palladium which is to restore us to prosperity, and, so far as railroads are concerned, into happy relations. It reads thus:

"Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporation or any other transportation company as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies."

This looks fair. But I would ask how it is to be accomplished, and where do we find the machinery by which it is to be done?

MR. O'DONNELL. We are not discussing section twenty; it is section eighteen that is before the Convention.

MR. HAGER. We are discussing the whole subject. The section says further:

"Establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make."

Now, that reads well enough. They have the power to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers, and they have the power to publish them; they have the power to report to the Governor annually their proceedings, with such other facts as may be deemed important. Well, there is nothing there excepting the announcement that they may establish rates of charges; and when made how will they be enforced. Who is bound to obey them? What means can these Commissioners resort to by which these objects are to be accomplished?

MR. WHITE. I merely ask the gentleman to read the balance of the section, and he will see where the authority is.

MR. HAGER. I intended to do so, and will read it, as follows: "Report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; hear and determine complaints against railroad and other transportation companies; affix penalties and enforce them through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law. Nothing in this section shall prevent individuals from maintaining actions against any of such companies." Now, we have a Government composed of a judicial, a legislative, and an executive department. Are these Commissioners to be transformed into a Court? Can they issue processes, summon a jury, subpena witnesses, hear and try the case, and pronounce judgment? Can they issue executions, and will Sheriffs be found to obey? How will these powers be enforced, even if this provision should go into effect, in regard to fixing fares and freights? There is no power to enforce the order, so far as I can see. It says that they may hear and determine complaints against the railroads, affix penalties, and enforce them through the Courts. Penalties for what? Because they have damaged some man's grounds, or because they have failed to charge a man the fares and freights as fixed by the Commissioners? There is nothing, sir, that will be a guide to this Commission. There is nothing that will be a guide to the people in seeking redress as against the railroads. I think that if I had the control of the Central Pacific Railroad I would favor all that is contained in this section twenty to constitute this Railroad Commission. Now, sir, in the Constitution of Illinois we find some very stringent provisions in regard to railroads. In the new Constitution of the State of Pennsylvania and in the new Constitution of Missouri they have them also.

MR. WHITE. There is an additional clause you have not read, and I will call your attention to it for the purpose of showing the Convention that there is some provision for the enforcement of these penalties.

MR. HAGER. I will read it.

"It shall be the duty of the Legislature to confer all such further powers on the Board of Railroad Commissioners as shall be necessary to enable them to perform the duties enjoined on them in the foregoing sections."

Suppose the Legislature fails to do it? Suppose they treat a bill from the Assembly as they treated the Freeman bill and the Archer bill, and refused to do anything; and suppose, while the Commissioners are acting under a measure passed for them, the Legislature repeals the measure; the intent of this Convention is to have something permanent, that will be binding upon the Legislature as well as upon the railroad companies in this State. The people expect this. If we leave the enforcement of this provision to the Legislature, why not leave it all to the Legislature? This constitutes the weakness of this proposition. You must resort to the Legislature to clothe the Commission with the necessary powers. That is why I object to it. I want to see something in the Constitution that will operate by itself, and be self-executing. Not to punish the railroad, but to protect the people in case it should become necessary to protect them. But, as I was saying in regard to Illinois, they have constitutional provisions that are stringent, and I wish this committee had reported some of these provisions applicable to railroads that they have omitted in place of some of those they have presented to us.

MR. ESTEE. Will the gentleman read one? I want to know what the gentleman wants.

MR. HAGER. In section fourteen, as reported by the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, they have this provision, not applicable to railroads only, but to corporations in general:

"Every corporation organized or doing business in this State, under the laws or authority thereof, shall have and maintain an office or place in this State for the transaction of its business, where transfers of stock shall be made, and in which shall be kept, for public inspection, books in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed, and by whom; the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively; the amount of stock paid in, and by whom; the transfers of said stock; the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the names and place of residence of its officers."

Now, sir, that provision is taken bodily from the Constitution of Illinois, where it applies solely to railroad corporations.

MR. ESTEE. I would like to ask the gentleman if it makes it any less effective upon railroad corporations because it is in the section referring to corporations in general?

MR. HAGER. It makes it so effective that in connection with other private corporations it is wrong. If it had been reported in regard to railroads, which are quasi public corporations, every man here who wishes to do something effective would have said it was right. But when you come to prying into the affairs of private corporations, whether it be a woolen manufactory, a laundry, or any other establishment for private business, you are doing a wrong. You have no right to go into private corporations, unless you have an interest, or there are great overpowering reasons. But you have a right to go into the corporation books of any railroad company, because they are quasi public corporations, and are dependent upon the State for the advantages they possess.

MR. ESTEE. I will ask the gentleman if he does not know that section fourteen has been amended, and already adopted by this committee as amended?

MR. HAGER. Certainly. I ask why it was not put in its place and confined to railroads, as in the Constitution of Illinois, from whence it was taken? Then it would not have been objectionable, but if I had wanted that provision rejected, I would have made it applicable to all corporations; but I do not intend to impugn the motives of the Chairman of the committee, or the committee, in the least. I am criticising the act of the committee rather than impeaching their motives. But I should have put this section under the head of railroads, and made it applicable to railroads alone, as in Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Missouri. There is another provision in the Constitution of Illinois to which I will call the attention of the Chairman of the committee, Mr. Estee, and should have been pleased if it had a place in the report of the committee. I have it before me—Constitution of Illinois, article eleven, section fifteen. It reads as follows:

"The General Assembly shall pass laws to correct abuses and prevent unjust discriminations and extortion in the rates of freight and passenger tariffs on the different railroads in this State, and enforce such laws by adequate penalties, to the extent, if necessary for that purpose, of forfeiture of their property and franchises."

That, sir, sounds like business. That sounds as if those Constitution-makers intended to put in some provision that might be and could be enforced. Why did not the Chairman, or rather the committee, put a clause here that these Commissioners might take steps to enforce these provisions, if necessary by a forfeiture of the property and franchises of the corporation? Why did they not put that there when quoting from the Constitution of Illinois? Then there would have been some reason by which we could infer that the intention was to put some check upon the power of railroad corporations. But they are not there. So in these States, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Missouri, the three last Constitutions, they have declared that all railroads are public highways. That "public highways" is left out here. And we never had an opportunity here to vote whether we would so declare, inasmuch as under our peculiar rule a substitute was adopted and cut off all other amendments.

Now, sir, I am in favor of engrafting into this Constitution such wholesome and necessary provisions as may be required to protect the people, and prevent the railroad from oppressing them. I care not if this Constitution swells into the magnitude of a code. Let it be a code if it is right. Principles, if correct, should be eternal; Constitutions, if founded on correct principle, might be eternal, and I do not object to it. I prefer a Constitution founded on correct principles, even if it were of the magnitude of the Pandects or the Pentateuch, to the fluctuations that prevail in legislation. As we all know, laws are evanescent; like Summer flowers, they fall and fade away. Legislatures meet and pass laws; and other Legislatures meet and repeal them. Sometimes corporation pressure is brought to bear upon Legislatures, and legislation is thus influenced. Courts may declare laws unconstitutional. Men are elected to the Legislature under pledges. When the Conventions meet, the candidates rush before them like the leaves of the forest when the Summer is green; they get their nominations, they make their pledges against railroad monopolies, against water monopolies, against gas monopolies, and against monopolies of all kinds, and when they are elected, too often, like the leaves of the forest when Autumn is blown, they fall, they fall. They forget their pledges, and forget the platforms upon which they were elected, and we are subject to uncertainty and to change. Not so with Constitutions. Constitutions are made in a different way—

"By freemen casting, with unpurchased hand,
The vote that shakes the turrets of the land."

Freemen make Constitutions. The people make them, and it requires the same power to amend or destroy them. Constitutions cannot be declared unconstitutional. They are something fixed and permanent, as a general rule, and, like a rock in the ocean, the surges of corruption may dash against them in vain. If right, the Constitution will be our protection when laws may fail. Therefore, I am in favor of engrafting in this Constitution every provision that I think wholesome and right, even if it swells to a volume of the size of the codes of the State of California. No harm can come of it if it is right. And if we do not avail ourselves of this opportunity, if we do not engraft some provisions in the Constitution that will be accepted by the people, it will be a source of disappointment from one end of the State to the other. In regard to this particular amendment, with the amendment I have sent up, I am ready to give it my support.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. The gentleman from Los Angeles having accepted the amendment of Judge Hager, which covers the same ground as mine, I withdraw my amendment in order to permit Judge Campbell to get his in. I believe the Committee is ready to vote, and, for one, I should like to have the previous question.

MR. GRACE. Does the gentleman want to move the previous question and cut off the debate?

MR. DUDLEY. I do not desire to call the previous question if there is any desire to debate the question further.

MR. CAMPBELL. I now send up my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to section eighteen, 'and whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any railroad constructed, or in process of construction, lower its rates for transportation of passengers or freight from one point to another, it shall not again raise its rates without the consent of the governmental authority in which shall be vested the power to regulate fares and freights on railroads; nor shall such other railroad raise its original rates without similar consent.'"

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I think that amendment is a good one, and I hope it will be adopted by this Convention. I think that each provision in this Constitution should stand upon its own foundation, and I hope that the members of that committee will not be such sticklers for their particular ideas as to seek to defeat any amendments that are offered. So far as this provision is concerned, I do not intend to vote for the proposition to give that Commission the power that is provided for in section twenty. I believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, with the amendment as sent up, is the correct principle, and is a proposition which should be adopted in that section, and be adopted by this Convention. I have not the fears of the future Legislature of California that the experience of the past would seem to warrant. In eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, when the question of subsidy was fought upon the floors of these legislative halls, but one member south of San Francisco, but one member in the south end of the State, was opposed to subsidy. I allude to Fowler, of Tulare. Every other man from the southern portion of the State came upon the floor of the Legislature and demanded, in the name of the people of the southern part of the State, that this people should devote ten million dollars to the building of this road. That is not the condition now. They have pillaged the people. In the history of this State, wherever this corporation controls, wherever they have sought to oppress the people, wherever they have the monopoly, they claim that they have a right to all the profits upon the articles which are raised; all that can be made above the actual cost of raising. The people have seen the situation. They have seen the slavery that has been brought upon them, and will be kept upon them, if they are allowed to continue in power. So in the northern part of this State. Years ago I said that we never could regulate this question; never could correct these abuses, until a majority of the counties of this State had these railroad corporations to deal with, and then we would find a clear working majority, without regard to parties, in favor of limiting and controlling this immense corporation.

The vote of California has indicated the opinion of California. That vote will be to protect the people, and I am willing to trust the Legislature. What! Cannot we trust the Legislature? Cannot we trust the people themselves? What power on earth can we trust? Where else can we rest the future hopes of the people? No Commission for me that shall have the power of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Departments of the State of California. Let us give it to the people. They have indicated their intention to stop the abuses of this corporation. In every county, in every village, in every hamlet of the State, where they have left their mark, the people are aroused. It is an anomaly that a corporation created by the good will, created by these magnificent endowments that Judge Hager speaks of, should have created such a change in the civilization of the State wherever they have a road. Why, in Los Angeles they are now prohibiting the people there from running a skiff without their permission. Their transportation costs them more now than before they had a railroad. And that is the reason why these men that set here come here and stand by the people of that part of the State, and in standing by them stand by us and the balance of the State. Let us pass this proposition as submitted here and amended. It is better than the twentieth section. It is a principle that is right and just, and that the people of the State will indorse.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say a few words before the Convention votes upon this amendment, but I beg to inquire as regards a question of order that seems to embarrass a great many. Now this Committee on Corporations has reported an independent proposition, not as an amendment, but as a proposition submitted by them. It is an independent proposition. Now one member proposes an amendment and then another amendment is proposed to the amendment. The rule has been to vote upon these two amendments and then pass to the consideration of the next section.

THE CHAIRMAN. That rule has been amended.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: Then the pending amendments are only cut off. But the practice has been here to vote upon the amendments and then the section is held to be adopted because the Convention refuses to amend it. I disagree with that ruling. A distinct vote should be taken upon the approval of the proposition after we get through with the amendments.

As the hour for recess has arrived, I respectfully ask to be recognized when the Convention meets this afternoon. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: On the suggestion of some gentlemen who think the language of the amendment somewhat doubtful, and that it may be construed only to apply to railroads already constructed and in process of construction, I desire to add the words, "heretofore constructed or hereafter to be constructed."

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the clerk will insert the words.

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I have no lengthy speech to make to this Convention upon the question before it. I have sat here and listened patiently to the arguments and reasonings which gentlemen have indulged in, and have drawn from them such wisdom as was capable of being assimilated, and I crave the attention of the Convention for a few moments, while I give the reasons for what will be ultimately my action in this matter, unless further debate shall convince me that I am wrong. I regret to see this topic treated as it seems to be, not in a judicial, impartial, and just manner in some respects. Justice is the gift of God, sir, and ought to be impartially administered by those into whose hands it is given by the law. I am admonished, sir, that men are passing away constantly, and in a few years there will not be a solitary one of us left; but after we are dead and gone our work will still remain, and I, for one, want that it should be planted upon equal and impartial justice, upon honesty, and upon law. Mere personal considerations should not be allowed to influence our actions.

In the first place, we ought to consider the importance of the railroads of this State to its welfare and material prosperity. The railroads have redeemed this State from a wilderness, and made it what it is to-day. The railroad property of the State to-day pays taxes on five hundred millions of dollars. Five hundred millions! And they say here, and I have no doubt it is so, that if property was impartially taxed, they would pay a good deal more. Take away these roads, tear up the rails, and the country would soon revert to savagedom, unless somebody else should come in and build roads, and place their charges upon a basis that would make them self-sustaining. I hear gentlemen on this floor constantly asserting that the road was built with somebody else's money. That is entirely a mistake, sir. The money was given to them outright, and belonged to them upon the consideration that they would build the road, which they did. There is no legal right, there is no moral right, to ignore their absolute title to that property whatever. It is the basest meanness, in my judgment, in a man who makes a gift to another, to use for a particular purpose in his own way, to call him to account for the use. There are strong moral considerations as well as legal considerations, in this case, considering the manner in which that trust was executed. They received this money to be used for a beneficial purpose. The property was given to them, and belongs to them. As far as legal considerations are concerned, they are under no legal obligations whatever to the people. They may have made a bad bargain, or they may have made a good bargain; that does not matter; it is as broad as it is long. But I will not dilate upon this matter.

A great deal has been said here as to the immense wealth of those gentlemen who have been engaged in these operations, and I must say that it seems to me that this language was characterized by a strong expression of envy and jealousy. I have no feeling as to the manner and style in which these gentlemen choose to live. If they can live in buildings costing a million of dollars, that fact does not trouble me—not in the least. If I wish to go inside of their mansions, and they wish to have me, I will do so, and if not, I can stay away without any feelings of envy, or jealousy, or dissatisfaction whatever. I say such ideas and such reasonings constantly breaking out are calculated to disturb the judgment of people; they are calculated to disturb the poise of the scales of justice. They are thrown into the scale for the purpose of heaping obloquy upon the question, and exciting prejudice in the public mind. Such arguments are made for the purpose of and are calculated to excite distrust and discontent in the public mind.

Now, gentlemen cannot conceal the fact that the general tendency of our acts here is to avoid all deposit of powers in the Legislature—the tendency is to give to the Legislature no power whatever upon this particular subject. I may say, I think, without varying from the fact, that the tendency is to withdraw from the Legislature, whenever it is possible, all power to legislate upon this subject. We take off part of the power with regard to railroads, and leave the balance. I for one cannot adopt this idea in any respect whatever. We started out by declaring that the legislative powers of this State shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly. It is said in the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, that the Legislative Department of the State shall consist of the Senate and Assembly. Now I do not suppose any gentleman here will for a moment entertain the proposition to take the legislative powers of the State, except in exceptional cases, from the Senate and Assembly. But, sir, what is the reason that a distinction should be made against the railroads and their function. The lives of other citizens, and their property, and their rights in every other respect, their personal rights, are left with the Legislature. The Legislature may say for what a man shall be hanged; what the punishment shall be for stealing. You define and express his right to hold property and to convey property; you leave all this matter to the people at large, through their representatives in the Legislature. You confide every vital interest in the community to the Legislature, but propose to take the management of railroads away from them, and confide those powers to another body. Why? Because you say the people themselves are too ignorant, too corrupt, to make laws for their government—applicable to this particular case.

There were heroes before Agamemnon, and there have been heroes since. There were honest men before us, and there will be honest men who will come after us. There will be statesmen and honest men who will survive when we have passed away, and they will be wiser than we have been. We are the oldest men that ever lived in the world. We have had the benefit of the learning, and the wisdom, and the experience of all that have lived before us, and those who come after us will have, in addition to that, our experience and wisdom added to their own. They will be better learned and more enlightened than we upon this topic. And yet you solemnly propose to say that they have sent us here, as members of this body, and that all the wisdom, and all the ability, and all the virtue in this State, when we go away from the capitol, will die with us. Sir, I do not believe any such thing. When they undertake to tell me that the people of this State are too corrupt to elect the proper men to come here to administer the law and to create law, too, for every portion of government, and for the affairs of government in its daily intercourse, I say I do not believe it. We had better go back and make a new distribution of the powers of government, and provide that the powers of government shall be vested in an Executive, Legislative, Judicial Department, and in a Constitutional Convention, and a Railroad Commission. That is the only division that can be made, and what answer can there be to the proposition? That is precisely the position certainly, if this provision is adopted.

Now, sir, constant allusion has been made to the untrustworthiness of members of the Legislature. I know that in almost every session of the Legislature it is charged that some dishonest, tainted men have been sent here. But you go home to their constituents and tell them that, and they will vote down your Constitution. They can't believe it. I do not believe it either. I have been here for three several sessions of the Legislature. I saw men in the Legislature that I thought I might get along just as well without any particular acquaintance with them, but they were very few in number, and after all, I might just as easily have been mistaken as themselves. It is said here that the Legislature cannot be trusted. I see two or three or half a dozen men about me who belong to that company, who have served with credit in past Legislatures.

It is said by some that the people of this State sent us here to regulate corporations. Well, sir, I should be glad to receive some authoritative expression what the people do want upon this subject.

Way back in eighteen hundred and sixty this railroad excitement commenced. There was not a man in the State who would not turn his pockets wrong side out to help build a railroad. The people were willing to give them all they asked, and all they did was to take all the people gave them. You forced it upon them, and they scarcely had to ask for it. You gave it to them without any restrictions whatever. Congress gave them fifty millions of dollars themselves without scarcely inquiring what they were going to do with it. They did not even inquire where their probable terminus would be. It was mentioned as being at or near the Bay of San Francisco, and they stretched that as being at Sacramento. It was given to them without a solitary condition. All this was done by our delegation in Congress. The State itself gave them millions of dollars, and the people subscribed for millions of their stock. I voted against it, and would do it again. Another bill was passed granting them ten thousand dollars a mile for every mile the Pacific Railroad had built or should build in this State. These subsidies amounted to about twenty million dollars. The people got cooled down a little, and sent me with others here to have that Act repealed. We did so, and what did the people do? They sent the man who introduced the bill and got it passed to the United States Senate. Talk about the people wanting this thing and that thing, here is an instance of it. I was sent here to repeal the bill, and I did so, and after I had done so I could not probably have got a vote, because I was a monopolist and the other gentleman was an anti-monopolist. The people are generally hasty, and do not examine deliberately.

Now, sir, this thing takes away certain rights of the Legislature. This amendment seems to contemplate a contest or competition between railroad companies and other public carriers. The original proposition was as to competition between railroad lines. That proposed to correct an evil which cannot occur. Now, the only competition that there can be of any consequence is by water to Marysville, Sacramento, Colusa, Red Bluff, and the coast ports down below San Francisco to Monterey, Los Angeles, San Diego, and other places. These are the only places interested in any practical respect. And it is seriously insisted that this provision shall go into the Constitution, and shall not be left subject to legislative control at all, and all for the particular benefit of these places. Now, sir, as was said this morning, freight and passengers can be carried by water a great deal cheaper than by rail—two to one, almost always. There is fifty per cent in favor of water transportation. I admit I am entirely in favor of having these railroads supervised, and compelling fair dealing in regard to freights and fares; having some competent authority to fix that matter and make it obligatory upon these corporations to deal fairly with the people. I do not believe in turning the State over to the railroads; nor do I believe in turning the railroads entirely over to the people who are making this clamor. Take the case of Los Angeles. I am advised that the receipts on that road are not sufficient to pay interest on the money invested, let alone the running expenses, and nothing allowed for wear and tear of the road. After demanding that their rates be fixed at a given specific sum—no matter whether right or wrong—along comes a steamboat running on the ocean and competes with it. Anybody knows that a steamboat can run land carriage off, fares being the same; the steamboat can run the cars off, if their means of competition be the same. It is merely a question of money, and the weaker must go to the wall. Suppose the steamboat puts its rates down below the actual cost of carrying on the railroad, what is the railroad going to do? It has to run at a dead loss for every ton of freight carried. And yet this amendment goes upon the ground that the railroads drive off opposition by carrying below cost. How are they going to run if they have competition? The steamboats can carry for a sum that will not pay the expenses by rail; and you propose that they must either continue their old prices and lose all the business, or carry at a dead loss, and continue to do so.

The same people who make complaints here are the very ones who patronize the railroads the moment they reduce their rates on account of competition, and aid them directly in running off the competition which they are talking so much about. Why do not these gentlemen pay seven, and eight, and ten dollars a ton to the steamboat, and continue to pay it, instead of patronizing the railroad, and assisting in running off the opposition? Because they look to their own temporary, selfish interests. When they have by assisting the railroad, driven off competition, they come up to the Constitutional Convention and ask to be relieved from the rule which they have put in force, and that the competition rates shall be continued for their benefit. I say it is in direct violation of the provision of the Constitution which declares that punishment for crime shall not be excessive, and this is a violation of this rule. You want this Constitution to say that the railroad company shall continue to carry freight for less than actual cost, as a penalty for the crime which it has committed in running off this opposition, and take freight at the prices which the people prefer to pay. They demand that they shall continue to reap the benefits accruing from the crime which they themselves participated in, and that the penalty should be continuous as to the railroad company, while they themselves go free. That is the case. What road is going to run and carry passengers for five dollars when it costs ten dollars, and carry freight for three dollars a ton when it costs six and seven dollars? Why, sir, it is compelling the road to run at a dead loss, and that is equivalent to absolute destruction of the road. That is what it will do. When they have to run at a loss you may be sure they won't run at all, and you will have to put in another provision, and say that they shall be compelled to run their railroad anyway, whether at a loss or not. That is the only way to make this law effectual. There should be a provision inserted that they shall still continue to run, notwithstanding they have to run at a dead loss. I do not see any way of avoiding it. But, sir, I say, because these people have got their blood up at some improper action or some supposed local grievance, this provision should be forced into the Constitution, is monstrous, and violates all relation between crime and punishment—a perfect Draconian Code.

I believe one amendment here is to submit this question to the Legislature—to the majority of the Legislature; the other is proposed by Mr. Hager, to have a two-thirds vote of the Legislature. Well, it seems to me rather a hard state of things that these corporations, confessedly obliged to carry freight and passengers at less than cost, should be obliged to come to the Legislature and get two thirds of that body to go for them—two thirds of that corrupt body. It will cost too much. We had better take that money and divide it among ourselves, for we are virtuous and can take care of it. Why compel them to get two thirds? Why should two thirds be required to act in this case? It is inflicting a penalty which is not general. It is subjecting them to a rule which nobody else is subjected to. It seems to me a monstrous proposition that the Legislature on this matter is to be compelled to follow a different rule from that laid down in all other cases of like character. Now, I could almost leave the matter here, but there are other sections that are cognate sections, and are also involved in this discussion. There will be a conflict if these amendments are adopted. I would like to know how it is going to be ascertained whether there is any such competition between the railroad companies and the steamboats; how is it going to be decided? Who is going to decide it? There must be some sort of machinery in the matter to work with. The Constitution does not include this. Here is a simple declaration that if they are competing, and lower their rates, they cannot again raise them. Now, suppose they do raise them after the steamboat is driven off, who is going to say whether they were competing or not? They simply raise them, and in what manner are you going to show they were competing? Who is to settle it? It will have to be left to somebody to decide.

Some indication should be put in that section, either to ascertain that fact, or else to declare that the simple fact of raising the rates after the steamboat has stopped running, shall be considered sufficient to establish the fact that they were competing. There is nothing of that kind in the section.

Now, as to the twentieth section, I do not believe that any man can look at it for a moment and not see that the whole basis of republican institutions is shaken absolutely; that the whole basis of the Constitution is absolutely shaken. Three men are to be given absolute control over one hundred millions of dollars, forming at least a sixth part of the entire assessment rolls of this State; and, as I said before, if justly assessed, no doubt it would greatly exceed that amount. I think I may safely say that one quarter of the assessable property is composed of railroad property. This entire property is to be given over to the legislative, executive, and judicial control of these men. Well, sir, I would like to see these men. I would like to see them stuck up here for examination. Why, sir, the whole nations of Europe would flock here to look at them. They would be the center of all eyes, and their names would be in every mouth, and the monarchs of the world could not be compared with them. They would be a Trinity that it would hardly be blasphemy to call Deity itself, such a Trinity as was distinguished among the heathens. I am horrified. With all respect to the Convention, they will be the Government, and there is no branch of the Government that will have any control over them. The Courts will have nothing to do with them, except to enforce the mandates of the Commissioners. The Courts are obliged to do this. They no longer form part of the Government of the State. They are mere whippersnappers, standing there to obey the beck and whims of these three men. The Judges will crouch down before them like Gerard says the natives do when they meet the lion, and say, "You are the masters, we are but dogs to your will." What does this say? "Shall not be interested." "Their compensation shall be fixed by law. Said Commission shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad companies or other transportation companies." This covers stage coaches, omnibuses, and city railroads—in fact, there is not a single mode of conveyance that does not fall within the scope of their supervising authority. You cannot select out three or four kinds of transportation companies—it must apply to all interests alike, railroads as well as all others. Now, sir, this is puerile. "These Commissioners shall have sole power to correct abuses by railroad corporations and other transportation companies." What is an abuse? If I say you must pay your fare before you get on my stage, is that an abuse? Put a man off the cars if he does not pay his fare, is that an abuse? It has been held by the Courts that you have a right to put a man off the cars, and if he will not go, use force, and if he hangs on, put the screws to him and shove him off. Whether if you put him off in the middle of a desert that would constitute an abuse, I do not know. If you specify that a man must buy his ticket before he gets on the cars, is that an abuse?

Some of my friends here might object to colored gentlemen—for whom I entertain great respect, which I manifested at the time when they needed it—getting in the same car, and have them put out. If a Chinaman gets into the same car with you, and he is put out, is that an abuse? If you happened to get a couple of old lineback, New England abolitionists, they would fetch you up with a round turn. Now they shall "hear and determine complaints against railroad and other transportation companies, affix penalties, and enforce them through the medium of the Courts," etc. Now what is a complaint? Is there any definition as to what shall constitute a complaint? None at all. The terms of the section, it seems to me, are a little ambiguous. How does the complaint have to be presented? Do they have to follow these three men around, as the populace used to the Chief Justices on the King's Bench, pulling them by the coat-tails, saying, I have such and such a complaint, whereupon the Judge would hear and determine them right then and there. In order to hear a complaint, as I understand it, the man complained of should have a chance to be heard. Notice, among lawyers, is considered to be the very essence of justice. Without notice, no man can be deprived of his property. And in the Courts notice is absolutely necessary. I do not know but these Commissioners may decide to determine cases as Sir Thomas Moore did—no, I know they will not either. When Sir Thomas Moore's wife got into a dispute with the fishwoman, he took Mrs. Moore and placed her at the head of the hall—she being the more dignified—the fishwoman at the foot of the hall, and the dog in the middle, and commanded them to whistle. They did so, and the dog ran to the fishwoman, whereupon she was awarded the dog. They may administer law in some such crude mode as that; something like Sancho Panza, on the Baratarian Island, when he decided the question of alleged assault upon the woman, and awarded the money. The result of this sort of thing will be bad. It violates the moral sense of mankind. It violates the experience of ten centuries of labor and work to get the administration of justice up even to its present imperfect form. It violates every principle of law, it violates ever principle of public faith. It violates every principle of caution, and of common sense, and we should pause and hesitate when we come to give such absolute sovereign powers to these men. They will have power to snuff out of existence any and every interest in the State. I have been railroading more or less for twenty years. Even with that experience I doubt my ability to satisfy myself upon the simple question of freights and fares from here to San Francisco. How much less would be men selected at random, without experience or knowledge, to administer upon such a great interest as this—men utterly ignorant of the essential low down details of the business?

SPEECH OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: When the Convention first went into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this report, it was announced by the Chair that full liberty would be allowed in the committee, and that gentlemen in their remarks upon any amendments could traverse the whole subject. I have no desire, sir, to avail myself of the utmost latitude of this rule. But it will be agreeable to my feelings, while I am now up, to discuss sections nineteen and twenty, and, incidentally, section eighteen, with its amendments. They are cognate sections, intimately related in their more remote relations, at least, and may be properly considered together. I shall, therefore, with the consent of the Chair, pursue that course. An analysis of section nineteen will reveal some extraordinary provisions. With the indulgence of the committee I will read it. I may do so with an emphasis different from that which it received at the Secretary's desk, and possibly in a manner that will better develop its meaning. It is as follows:

"No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad—"

And I may here observe parenthetically, that this inanimate mass of matter known as a railroad, is made to assume a wonderfully live personality all through this report.

"Or transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State."

That is to say, in the charges for facilities for transportation first, and afterwards in the facilities for the transportation of freight and passengers. How the force of the first sentence is augmented by the latter I do not see.

"Persons and property transported over any railroad, or by any transportation company or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class, in the same direction, to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates."

The section inhibits, absolutely, any discrimination whatever in the business of transportation. I therefore challenge it, first, upon the ground that it is repugnant to an immutable economic law and various economic conditions, under which such discrimination is not only justifiable and equitable, but indispensable to the success of the business. It then extends the inhibition to transportation from points within to points beyond, and from points beyond to points within the State. I therefore challenge it further, upon the ground that it is a direct attempt to regulate commerce between the States, as such a usurpation of an exclusive power of the Federal Government, and a plain violation of the Constitution of the United States. The section then descends to particulars, and inhibits greater charges for transportation over a shorter than over a larger distance. Such charges in themselves constitute discrimination in the strictest sense, and the provision is clearly within the purview of the first clause of the section. I therefore object to it upon the ground first stated, and upon the further ground that it is surplusage; and, if I may borrow an aphorism from Lord Bacon and slightly change it, "all surplusage in an organic law is accursed." But, sir, it carries the principle of inhibition still further, and applies it indiscriminately to all transportation companies and to individuals. I therefore object to this provision, upon the ground that, for the evils at which it aims, if any exist, there are ample common law remedies; that under no circumstances could the subject-matter rise above the level of an ordinary legislative enactment; and that to elevate it into the organic law is to belittle and degrade that instrument. I challenge the whole section further because it is legislation. And the pertinency of this observation will appear further along in my remarks. Finally, sir, departing from the substance, I challenge the whole form of the section, upon the ground that it is defective in construction, cumulative or ambiguous, or both, in its provisions, and in point of literature everyway disgraceful, and that hopelessly so. When the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal addressed this committee some days since, in a speech running through nearly two hours, with the avowed purpose of making an exposition of his most extraordinary report in its whole scope, and of the intent and meaning of its various sections, I was surprised that he did not resolve this section into its component parts and lay them fully before our view; that he kept nearly aloof from its specific provisions and contented himself, and attempted to impress the constitutional mind of this house with the perfection of his work, by the bold, unfounded assertion that the section contains nothing new.

I have observed that some gentlemen on this floor, and conspicuously the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have contracted the fatal habit of browsing through the organic laws of other States, borrowing enough to show a want of invention and inventing just enough to show a total want of judgment; wrenching from its context a phrase here and a sentence there, which they think gives the slightest color of sanction to their peculiar fancies, and then bringing the result of their labors in here in form of superficial, charlatanic patchwork, of clumsy hybrid eclecticism, and attempting to pass it off upon the credulity and judgment of this house under the authority of great names abroad. Now, sir, against all such quackery as this I enter my protest. When there can be found in, or compounded out of, the organic law of any other State, a terse, unmistakable expression of a broad, universal principle of government, applicable alike to all parallels of latitude, it is eminently befitting that it should be presented here for our consideration. But, when the principle of selection is carried to the extent of pressing upon our approval those special exceptional provisions of other organic laws which had their origin and growth in the peculiar circumstances and condition of the communities for which they were framed; which are wholly unsuited to the political habits, modes of thought, and social wants of our own people, it becomes obnoxious and open to severe animadversion. Above all things, when those provisions are robbed of the only qualifying terms that make them tolerable anywhere; without which they would become mere definitions of tyranny everywhere; when they are brought forward and urged upon us thus mutilated and distorted, the act becomes one of rank, barefaced imposture. And it is that precise kind of imposture that I arraign here to-day, and which I intend to expose and denounce without stint.

Turning now to the gentleman's speech, he said, and I quote his exact language:

"And let me say that this is nothing new. I want you to understand distinctly that the committee do not claim the honor of inventing this. We find that section—or one of the same purport—in several of the most recent Constitutions adopted by various States in the Union. I find section three of the Pennsylvania Constitution reads as follows."

And the gentleman read the section. As I shall further on contrast it with the section now before us, for the purpose of showing how radically they differ, I pass it for the present, pausing only to relieve myself from the pressure of a supposed authority invoked by the gentleman, that of the world-renowned lawyer, Jere Black. Judge Black was not in the Convention of Pennsylvania when that section was considered. He resigned on the second day of October, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and this section was not introduced into that body until the twenty-third of that month, nearly a month after his resignation.

MR. ESTEE. I will say that what the gentleman states is true. It was Charles Black. Knowing that Jere Black was a member of that Convention when Judge Black was spoken of, I naturally supposed that is was Jere Black. Since then, it having been called to my attention, I have found there was another Black, Charles Black, whom I should have referred to.

MR. EDGERTON. I accept the gentleman's apology. The gentleman also stated that that section was passed by an overwhelming majority. It was passed by a vote of forty-six to forty-three, and that minority, sir, contained some of the ablest men of that Convention, some of the ablest men in this nation, and they were only "overwhelmed" by a vote of three. Passing to the gentleman's remarks, he says further:

"Again, I find in Missouri the Constitution which was adopted as late as eighteen hundred and seventy-five. I read section twenty-three of article twelve, on corporations: No discrimination in charges or facilities in transportation shall be made between transportation companies and individuals or in favor of either by abatement, drawback, or otherwise, and no railroad company, or any lessee, manager, or employé thereof, shall make any preference in furnishing cars or motive power."

Now, sir, if a layman should cite that provision as an analogue to the section under review, it would be surprising; but that a constitutional lawyer should do so is astonishing. The framers of that Constitution were not then dealing with the question of discrimination in its larger relations. The object aimed at by that provision was a special form of discrimination between special classes, viz.: transportation companies as such and individuals. It is aimed at the evil suggested by my friend from San Francisco, Colonel Barnes, the other day, where they had certain transportation companies called the "Red line," the "White line," the "Blue line," and the practice was to discriminate in their favor against individuals to avoid the laws which had been passed in those States. But, sir, nothing resembling this section can be found in the report which the Chairman of the committee has submitted for our action. The gentleman proceeds to say:

"Again, in Illinois, I find almost the same provision. I do not recur to it now, but my recollection is that it is also in the Illinois Constitution; also in Colorado; and in the Ohio Convention the same rule was adopted. But when it was submitted to the people, the Constitution as a whole was defeated. And it is indorsed by the strongest minds everywhere over the country. I took occasion the other day, in this State, to ask an eminent railroad engineer where there was anything wrong about it. Without wishing to be quoted, he said: 'While in some instances it might hurt the companies, in the main it is right and ought to be done.'"

Now, sir, it would be indelicate in me to press the gentleman as to the identity of the "eminent engineer," but I violate no rule of parliamentary propriety by interrogating him as to the "strongest minds everywhere all over the country." Who are they? What strong-minded man, or strong-minded woman, can he name who indorses the provisions of this section? I pause for a reply.

MR. ESTEE. I will reply in due time.

MR. EDGERTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have grouped the provisions of those Constitutions which relate to this subject, and as they are brief I desire to present them to this committee in connection with that which we are now considering, for the purpose of comparison. The comparison will show how utterly unfounded are the statements of the gentleman, and together with other authorities and considerations to which they lead up, will let in much important light upon the question immediately in hand—that of discrimination in railway transportation; and if the gentlemen have the section before them they can follow me as I read, and judge for themselves of the accuracy of the gentleman's statement. I shall present them in the chronological order in which they were adopted in those four States—Illinois, Pennsylvania, Missouri, and Colorado.

Section fifteen of article eleven of the Illinois Constitution of eighteen hundred and seventy, provides: "The General Assembly shall pass laws to correct abuses and prevent." Prevent what? "Unjust discrimination and extortion in the rates of freight and passenger tariffs on the different railroads in this State, and enforce such laws by adequate penalties, to the extent, if necessary for that purpose, of forfeiture of their property and franchises."

Article seventeen, section three, Pennsylvania Constitution of eighteen hundred and seventy-three, is as follows:

"SEC. 3. All individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal right to have persons and property transported over railroads and canals, and no undue or unreasonable discrimination shall be made in charges for or in facilities for transportation of freight or passengers within the State, or coming from or going to any other State. Persons and property transported over any railroad shall be delivered at any station at charges not exceeding the charges for transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station; but excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates."

Article twelve, section twelve, of the Missouri Constitution of eighteen hundred and seventy-five:

"It shall not be lawful in this State for any railway company to charge for freight or passengers a greater amount for the transportation of the same for a less distance, than the amount charged for any greater distance; and suitable laws shall be passed by the General Assembly to enforce this provision; but excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates."

"SEC. 14. Railways heretofore constructed, or that may hereafter be constructed in this State, are hereby declared public highways, and railroad companies common carriers. The General Assembly shall pass laws to correct abuses, and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in the rates of freight and passenger tariffs on the different railroads in this State, and shall, from time to time, pass laws establishing reasonable maximum rates of charges for transportation of passengers and freight on said railroads, and enforce all such laws by adequate penalties."

Article fifteen, section six, of the Colorado Constitution of eighteen hundred and seventy-six:

"All individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal rights to have persons and property transported over any railroad in this State, and no undue or unreasonable discrimination shall be made in charges, or in facilities, for transportation of freight or passengers within the State; and no railroad company, nor any lessee, manager, or employé thereof, shall give any preference to individuals, associations, or corporations in furnishing cars or motive power."

Now, sir, it is a noticable fact that not a single provision contained in the section now under review can be found either in the Constitution of Illinois or of Colorado. The section is inoculated with two vicious principles which are contained in the Constitution of Pennsylvania, of eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and one in that of Missouri, of eighteen hundred and seventy-five. The course of constitutional provision upon this subject is about as follows: The framers of the Constitution of Missouri had that of Pennsylvania, of eighteen hundred and seventy-three, before them, and gave it a careful consideration. The Supreme Court of the United States had decided that the transportation of freight, or of the subjects of commerce, is a constituent part of commerce itself; and had affirmed, in positive terms, a rule which excludes the power of a State to regulate in any manner whatever the subject of inter-State transportation; and, while in Missouri they imported into their Constitution, from that of Pennsylvania, many provisions, and in the precise phraseology there found, they rejected the clause which attempted to regulate transportation between the States. The authors of the Colorado Constitution, of eighteen hundred and seventy-six, had both of those of Pennsylvania and Missouri before them. They not only rejected the principle of State regulation of inter-State transportation, but, availing themselves of the experience of Pennsylvania and Missouri under their new Constitutions, and of the States of Wisconsin and Illinois, under what is called the Granger legislation, they also rejected the clause prohibiting greater charges for transportation over a shorter than over a longer distance. So that it turns out, upon examination, that there is no identity whatever between the section under consideration and any provision contained in the Constitutions of Colorado or of Illinois.

And while the section does contain the two provisions referred to, in common with the Constitution of Pennsylvania, the resemblance between that Constitution and the section here, as to all other particulars, fails upon every essential point of comparison. No Constitution yet exhibited here contains any provision attempting the regulation of transportation by individuals, or by companies, or corporations, other than quasi public, such as railroad and canal corporations. But the radical, essential difference between the section here and any constitutional provision the gentleman can find (and a distinction which I desire especially to impress upon the minds of members) is, that whereas this section inhibits absolutely any discrimination whatever in any kind of transportation, the several Constitutions to which the gentleman refers limit the inhibition, as in Illinois and Missouri, to unjust discrimination, and as in Colorado and Pennsylvania, to undue and unreasonable discrimination; and I here defy the gentleman to find in the whole range of constitutional composition the prototype of this section, or anything, or the image of anything, in the likeness of which it is made. I have traced the Constitutions referred to by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal thus minutely, because of an evident tendency on the part of many members of this body to take most any provision contained in any other Constitution simply on trust, and because I know that many members have been misled by the misrepresentations made by the Chairman of that committee, unintentionally of course, of the provisions of other Constitutions, concerning the subjects in hand, viz., discrimination in railway transportation. And it is quite natural that they should be so misled. We have a right to expect from a gentleman occupying the high position of Chairman of one of the most important committees of this house, a careful comparison of systems relating to the subject committed to his charge; we expect from him sound and judicious counsels regarding it; above all, we demand of him rigid exactness in his statements of facts. Such misrepresentations as I have noted would be hardly excusable if made in the heat of debate. But when they are made in cold blood; when they occur in a speech which was weeks in process of incubation, and for which the columns of a widely extended and influential journal were offered days in advance; when they are thus paraded to propagate, mislead, and poison the public mind, when their evils are thus diffused, they are simply atrocious.

Now, sir, I come directly to the question of discrimination in transportation on railways, which it is proposed by the section under consideration unconditionally to prohibit. I maintain that such discrimination under certain circumstances is just, and should be allowed; and that it is universally practiced, and that, too, under legal sanctions.

At the first session of the Legislature of Illinois after the adoption of the Constitution from which I have read, an Act was passed which will be found in Myers' statutes of Illinois for eighteen hundred and seventy-three, on pages thirty-three and thirty-four, by which any discrimination whatever in transportation on railroads was prohibited; and it specifically prohibited the precise form of discrimination indicated in this section, viz.: a greater charge for transportation for a shorter than for a longer distance; and in section five of the Act it was provided, that "any willful violation of any of the provisions of this Act on the part of any railroad corporation should be deemed and taken as a forfeiture of its franchise."

A case was made up against the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company for a violation of that provision of the law which prohibited a greater charge for transportation over a shorter than a longer distance. The case will be found in the Forty-seventh Illinois Reports, at page eleven. It was an information in the nature of a quo warranto on the relation of the Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners of Illinois, against that corporation, to have a forfeiture of its franchises declared, on the ground that it had repeatedly, in violation of the law cited, charged and received for transporting lumber from Chicago to Lexington, a distance of one hundred and ten miles, the sum of five dollars and sixty-five cents per thousand feet, while at the same time it had only charged for transportation of like lumber from Chicago to Bloomington, a distance of one hundred and twenty-six miles, the sum of five dollars per thousand feet. The company, by way of defense, pleaded its charter and alleged that the rates of toll from Chicago to Lexington were in fact reasonable, while the rates from Chicago to Bloomington were unreasonably low, and were established because of competition at the latter point with the Illinois Central Railroad Company. To this plea the relators demurred. The demurrer was sustained, a judgment of ouster was pronounced against the company, and its franchise was declared forfeited. From this judgment the company took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State. The Court held that the mere facts that Bloomington was a competitive point, that the mere facts that the rate to that point, or by its longer distance, was unreasonably low, and that the rate to Lexington, the shorter distance, was a reasonable rate, would not of themselves constitute a defense for such a discrimination. But it reversed the judgment upon the ground, among others, that the mere fact of making such a discrimination was, by the terms of the law, made conclusive evidence of unjust discrimination, and that in this the law was in violation of the Constitution of that State. The Court say:

"But in our opinion, if the Act of the Legislature had directed its penalties as it should have done, not against all discrimination, but only against unjust discrimination, and had made that the issue to be tried, it would have been no answer, in the plea, that the larger rates for the less distance were reasonable rates. That would have had only an argumentative bearing upon the issue to be tried, to wit: the existence of an unjust discrimination between towns. * * * Railroad experts might be produced who would testify that, in their opinion, the rate to Lexington, in the present case, was a reasonable rate; but the fact that a less rate was charged for a greater distance to Bloomington, if the difference was a permanently established and not a casual difference, and if it could be explained only by the fact that there was a competing line at one place and not at the other, might be accepted as conclusive proof that the rate to Lexington was not a reasonable rate. The only issue to be made under a law properly framed would be whether there was any unjust discrimination or not. If on the trial of such an issue the prosecutor proves a permanently established discrimination like that declared by the present record, and the company can show no other reason for it than the existence of a competing line at the favored point, the defense must be held unsatisfactory. * * * The discrimination forbidden by the common law to common carriers is an unjust or unreasonable discrimination. The provision in our new Constitution is also against unjust discrimination. It is in the following words:

"'The General Assembly shall pass laws to correct abuses and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in the rates of freight and passenger tariffs on the different roads in the State, and enforce such laws by adequate penalties, to the extent, if necessary for that purpose, of forfeiture of their property and franchises.—[Article XI, Section 15.'

"This provision, expressly directing the Legislature to pass laws to prevent unjust discrimination, is a recognition of the palpable fact that there may be discriminations which are not unjust; by implication it restrains the power of the Legislature to a prohibition of those which are unjust. That was undoubtedly the object of the Legislature in passing the existing law. This is clearly shown by its title. But the Act itself goes further. It forbids any discrimination whatever, under any circumstances, and whether just or unjust, in the charges for transporting the same classes of freight over equal distances, even though moving in opposite directions, and does not permit the companies to show that the discrimination is not unjust. The mere proof of the discrimination makes out a case against the railway companies, which they are not allowed to meet by evidence showing the reason or propriety of the discrimination, and then, upon this sort of ex parte trial, imposes as a penalty for the offense, a forfeiture of the franchise, which would often be equivalent to a fine of millions of dollars. The object of the law is commendable, but such a proceeding to be followed by such a penalty for the first offense, cannot be sustained. It could only have been authorized through the inadvertence of the Legislature.

"The law as it now stands, makes an offense out of an act which might be shown not to be an offense, but an exercise of a wise discretion, really beneficial to the people of the State, and while debarring the companies from all right of explanation, confiscates their franchises upon the first conviction. The Legislature cannot raise a conclusive presumption of guilt against a natural person from an act that may be innocent in itself, taking from him the privilege of showing the actual innocence or propriety of the act, and confiscating his property as a penalty for the supposed offense. Those provisions of our Constitution which forbid the deprivation of life, liberty, or property, except by due process of law, and which guarantee the right of trial by jury, 'as heretofore enjoyed,' and the right in all criminal prosecutions to appear and defend in person and by counsel, would all be violated by such a law. These provisions, it is true, are designed to apply only to natural persons, but artificial persons must be permitted to invoke the spirit of justice which prompted them, so far as may be necessary to protect their property and franchises against the operation of a law that substantially condemns without a trial. That the naked fact that a railway company charges a larger sum for transporting freight of the same class over a given distance, than it is charging for the same distance over another part of its road, or in the opposite direction, is not, of itself, conclusive evidence of an unjust discrimination, will be manifest on a moment's consideration. Take, for instance, the road of the appellant, with one terminus at Chicago and the other at East St. Louis. At one season of the year more freights are moving from Chicago towards East St. Louis than in the opposite direction. The consequence, of course, is, that the supply of empty cars at the latter point will be in excess of the demand. There is a water route between these points which also touches several intermediate stations upon the road. Now, unless the railway company is permitted, under such circumstances, to induce shipments over its line by lowering its freights, it is evident that a portion of its cars will return empty. This would, of course, necessitate a higher charge for freights moving towards St. Louis than it would be necessary to impose if return freights could be secured by lowering the rates on the return trip. To forbid the company to lower the rates of return freight would thus benefit no one, and would work an injury both to the company and to the people along the line. At other seasons of the year the larger amount of freights is moving in the opposite direction, and then the operation must be reversed. We give this illustration for the purpose of showing that a difference of price for the same distance of transportation is not necessarily an unjust discrimination, and that any law must be fatally defective which infers guilt, as a conclusive presumption, from the mere fact of difference of rates, without permitting the companies to show why the different rates were adopted.

"We may so far take judicial notice of the course of public affairs in this State as to say that the real abuse which the Legislature was endeavoring, by this Act, to prevent was not such proper discriminations as those we have just been supposing, but the practice, which had become general among the railways, of charging a higher compensation for carrying the agricultural products of the State to market when shipped at a station where there was no competing line, than when shipped where there was such competition, although the distance over which the freight was carried in the latter case might greatly exceed the distance in the former. The same system also prevailed in regard to the freight from Chicago to points in the interior, although probably not felt to be so great an evil. For discrimination of this character, when adopted as a system, we can certainly perceive neither justification nor excuse; but, nevertheless, it is the right of a company, when prosecuted on the ground of unjust discrimination, to offer what evidence it can by way of explanation. It might, for example, show in the present case that the lumber shipped to Lexington had caused a greater expense in loading or unloading than that shipped to Bloomington. This may not be a very probable defense, but defenses may nevertheless exist, and if they do, the companies should not be deprived of the right to make them. Before this Act can be enforced it should be so amended as to correspond with the requirement of the Constitution by directing its prohibition against unjust discrimination. It should make the charging of a greater compensation for a less distance or for the same distance, merely prima facie evidence of unjust discrimination, instead of conclusive evidence, as it now is, and it should give to the railway companies the right of trial by jury, not only on the fact of discrimination, but upon the issue whether such discrimination is just or not."

At the session of the Legislature of Illinois held in eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and at the next session after the rendition of this judgment, an Act was passed providing that if any railroad corporation—

"Shall charge, collect, or receive, for the transportation of any passenger or freight of any description, upon its railroad, for any distance within this State, the same or a greater amount of toll or compensation than is at the same time charged, collected, or received, for the transportation, in the same direction, of any passenger or like quantity of freight of the same class, over a greater distance of the same railroad * * * such discriminations, rates, charges, collections, or receipts, whether made directly or by means of any rebate, drawback, or other shift or evasion, shall be deemed and taken, against such railroad corporation, as prima facie evidence of the unjust discrimination prohibited by the provisions of this Act." [Myers' Statutes Illinois, pp. 184–185.]

It thus appears that the authors of the Constitution of Illinois, ex industria, limited the inhibition upon discrimination in rates of charges for railway transportation to unjust discrimination, thus by implication admitting that certain discriminations might, under some circumstances, be justifiable; that the Court of last resort in that State has decided that there may be many conditions under which such discrimination would be just; and that the Legislature of that State, squaring its enactments to that decision, have met the question, finally, by providing that any discrimination of the kind specified should be prima facie evidence merely of unjust discrimination, thus giving the corporations an opportunity to show, by way of defense in any given case, that the discrimination complained of is proper. In the annual report of the Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners of that State for the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six, I find the following observations upon this subject. I read from page nineteen:

"All persons having dealings with a railroad company would learn that his neighbor, having precisely the same kind of dealings with the company, was regularly and systematically charged at a less rate than himself for the same or a greater amount of service; or again, persons living in one community on the line of a railroad would be as certain that the charges made against them for freight or passage to a given point on the road were greater than those charged against persons living in another community for freight or passage to the same point, although they were miles nearer the common point than were these last named persons. These two instances are fair illustrations of the kind of acts, proof of which is declared by the law to be prima facie evidence of unjust discrimination. But every discrimination is not an unjust discrimination, and it is possible, therefore, that the two illustrations given may not be unjust."

Again I read from the annual report of Railroad Commission of Ohio for the year eighteen hundred and seventy-three, page twenty-six:

"A railroad company makes more money with less annoyance and cost in doing the business of the large shipper than that of the small one, though the rates per ton are less to the former. For example: A and B are shipping coal from the same locality. A ships a train load daily; B ships but fifteen or twenty cars per week, as he is able to mine and sell it. No argument is needed to convince a business man that the train load daily can be moved at a large per cent. less per ton than the occasional cars of B. One is reliable and in quantity sufficient to merit special arrangements and attention. The other is irregular and may often demand transportation when the company is least prepared to furnish it. The same advantages are apparent when distance is considered. From Columbus to Worthington is nine miles, to Cleveland one hundred and thirty-eight. Freight for either place must be received, handled, and loaded; on reaching its destination, unloaded, stored, and delivered; in either case subjecting the cars and men to delay, during which they are earning nothing for the company. When a train is going through to Cleveland, and the additional freight is received, billed, and loaded, it matters little, so far as regards cost, to the company, whether it is hauled ten, twenty, or the one hundred and thirty-eight miles. The same engine and train men, with only a trifle additional cost for power, can take the freight through to Cleveland as well as leave it at Worthington, and the company be better remunerated in proportion to the actual cost of carriage, though the through rate per mile be no more than one half or one third that of the local. An equipped road, one hundred or one thousand miles long, having a regular through business equal to its capacity, could reduce the average cost of carriage per mile per ton to the merest trifle, while in local traffic the large items of cost are the time and labor necessary to receive and discharge freight at the various stations. These "fixed costs" are the same as on through freight, and necessarily add to the mileage cost of carriage in proportion as the distance diminishes. It is only while the wheels are moving that they earn the company money. The impropriety and impracticability of fixing unyielding and inflexible rates for transportation by general laws, applicable to all roads, or by special acts applying to particular roads or classes of roads, seems too apparent to need comment. The almost unlimited differences in the condition of our roads, affected by location, grades, curves, equipment, regularity of business, management, charges in earnings caused by construction of branches, by developing new industries, opening new mines, or making new connections, and the innumerable and diverse matters which come in to affect or change their status for better or worse, but develop the folly of attempts to regulate rates of transportation by inflexible law."

The Transportation Commissioners of our own State have given this subject a thorough consideration, and I find in their report for the year eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, at page fifty-four, the following observations, under the caption, "The general principles and commercial laws influencing and governing railroad tariffs and charges—the necessity for a just discrimination in charges:"

"The problem presented for solution may be illustrated by what may at any time occur in an ordinary railroad depot. There may be a half dozen packages of the same weight and bulk, without exterior marks of difference, to be shipped in the same car, and for the same distance. What, if any, are the reasons justifying a discrimination of charges? And what the elements controlling the amount of charge in such a case?

"A consideration of the elements influencing and governing railroad tariffs will show that the charges are not and cannot be regulated on the principle of a fixed percentage of profit on the cost of the service, or on the capital invested, and that a just discrimination of charges, according to the value of the service rendered, and the ability and will of the public to pay, is a necessary and ruling feature of all transportation for profit, and is founded on the common law rights and mutual interests of both the carrier and the public."

And again on page sixty-five of the same report:

"Assuming the correctness of the principle set forth in this report, as regards the rights and obligations of shippers and carriers, and the elements influencing and governing the charges for transportation, it will be evident that the enforcement of the same uniform rates of charges over different roads, or over different portions of the same road, would be unjust and prejudicial to the interests of both the public and railroad companies. The difference in the cost of carriage even on different portions of the same road is so great that the charges must necessarily be varied accordingly, as otherwise the companies must either be forced to operate at a loss, or the rates of charges must be so high as to afford no protection to the public."

And then the report goes on to say:

"Another objection to the enforcement of uniform rates over an entire road is, that it would deprive railroad companies of the power of reducing their charges to competitive rates. There is, for instance, a competition by water between San Francisco and Los Angeles, and the railroad companies are forced to carry freight between these points at very low rates, or not at all. If such a reduction of rates on any road should necessitate a corresponding reduction of the rates between intermediate stations, the company would be forced to abandon the competitive business altogether.

"Admitting, however, the right and necessity of a just discrimination of charges, it is in the regulation of the exercise of that right, and the prevention of unjust discrimination by a general law, that the main difficulty lies in the regulation of freights and fares."

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the United States, Mr. Joseph Nemo, under direction of an Act of Congress, has made a most searching examination of the whole question of railway transportation in the United States, and in his report for the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six, I find the following observations on the subject of discrimination.

MR. ESTEE. What are you reading from?

MR. EDGERTON. I am reading from a report entitled "Annual Report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, Commerce, and Navigation, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, part two," and at page one hundred and sixty-seven:

"The subject of discrimination is the most complex and difficult one in the entire range of railway management and regulation. It is essentially a question of details, since each case or class must be determined upon its own merits. The conduct of railroad affairs having become so intimately connected with the social and business interests of the people, discrimination and other abuses must be corrected gradually in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, by regulations established by the railroad companies themselves, by such legislative action as may be taken as the result of a careful study of the whole subject in all its bearings, and by the establishment of customs commanding popular approval. Perhaps a safe guide in efforts to mark the line of distinction between just and unjust discriminations may be had from the following opinion of an English Court as to the general rule which shall prevail in deciding whether certain restraints upon trade, resulting from railway combinations, are reasonable or unreasonable: 'We do not see how a better test can be applied to the question whether reasonable or not, than by considering whether the restraint is such only as to afford a fair protection to the interests of the party in favor of whom it is given, and not so large as to interfere with the interests of the public.' This opinion has been reaffirmed in a leading case in this country. Public sentiment, while ever sensitive of every apparent inroad upon private rights, will undoubtedly sanction the extension to railroad companies of the largest possible immunities and privileges consonant with sound views of public policy, and with those rules of law touching the rights and duties of common carriers, which have become established by the custom of centuries."

And in this connection again, on page one hundred and sixty-three, he says:

"Unjust discriminations and exorbitant freight charges were the immediate cause of the popular uprising against railroad management in the Western States. It is evident that certain discriminations must be made in railway charges, from the fact that no common measure of the value of the services rendered by railroads can be devised. The unit of measure most frequently referred to in the theoretical discussions, is the cost of transporting one ton of freight one mile; but the unit, as we have seen, is inapplicable to the cost of transporting freights under the almost infinite variety of circumstances which present themselves.

"The service rendered by railroad companies as transporters of many kinds of commodities, especially those shipped in single packages, and requiring much care and personal service, cannot be estimated by weight, nor is distance in such cases a criterion of cost. In many cases the cost of handling freight bears but a small proportion to the total cost of receiving it from the shipper, holding it in warehouse, and delivering it to the consignee; and especially is this true in regard to commodities transported short distances. Discrimination, or differences in the rate of charges, with respect to the conditions of weight or distance, may therefore be regarded as proper, if the rates charged are not out of proportion to the actual value of the service rendered.

"The discrimination known as the 'classification of freights' is based upon several conditions, among which may be mentioned differences in the cost of transporting different commodities, the value of different commodities, quantity moved of one kind, the competitive influence of rival transportation lines, and the effect of the competition of rival markets upon traffic in different articles of merchandise.

"A consideration of these facts clearly indicates that the question as to whether discriminations are just or unjust is an exceedingly complex one. Not only is it difficult to decide in special cases, but it is also a very difficult matter to formulate general rules upon the subject. The question is not an absolute but a relative one, the relationships presenting themselves under an almost infinite variety of circumstances.

"Discriminations in rates exist upon all free highways where competition prevails among common carriers, and frequently in quite as marked degree as on railroads. Discriminations in opposition to the common law rule which forbids the charging of different rates for the transportation of commodities under similar conditions are evidently unjust. In practice, however, the cases in which the conditions may be said to be quite similar are comparatively few, while the cases in which they are unlike are many.

"Instances may be adduced in which railroad companies charge a greater rate for hauling commodities over a part than over the entire length of their roads. In many cases this practice is unjustifiable, but it is susceptible of proof that oftentimes the actual cost to a company of hauling freight between intermediate points on a railroad is greater than the cost of hauling it over the entire length of the road. This has already been explained in the section of this report entitled 'The Economy of Transport by Rail.'"

And again, in relation to the specific form of discrimination prohibited by section nineteen now under consideration, viz.: a greater charge for transportation over a shorter than a longer distance, he says at page twenty-four:

"As an illustration of the relative importance of magnitude of traffic, and of distance, as elements in the cost of transportation, the following extreme case may be stated: Assume a local point situated on a railroad fifty miles from New York City. The person who ships grain from that point to New York in small quantities brings it in sacks to the railroad station, where it is stored until a car is in readiness for its reception. It is placed in the car by hand, and in the same car are loaded the miscellaneous products of that locality seeking a market at New York. This car may not be more than one half or even one fourth loaded. It remains upon a side track until the train of which it is to constitute a part arrives on its way to New York. The time of this train, steam power of the locomotive, and the service of the employés of the road are consumed in the work of receiving the grain into the freight house, in delivering it into the car, and connecting the car with the train. On the arrival of the train at New York, the grain is handled in connection with various classes of freight in the expensive manner incidental to the transaction of a package traffic. The grain is then delivered by hand to the consignee, and the sacks in which it was contained are afterwards returned, being billed, receipted for, and finally delivered to their owner by the agent at the local station."

And then he says, generalizing from these facts:

"No computation is necessary in order to prove that the cost of transporting grain but fifty miles may, in such a case, be in excess of the cost of transporting it several hundred miles if in the latter case it is spouted into cars from grain elevators, and hauled in trains of twenty cars carrying four hundred bushels each, or eight thousand bushels in all, and running day and night, with no other interruptions than may be necessary for taking in supplies of fuel and water. The effect of distance upon cost of transportation may, in certain cases, be the element of least importance."

So much, sir, by way of authority. Now, sir, let us suppose the Illinois rule to be in force in this State, and a case for its breach on trial before this Convention. The Chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal took passage on the California Pacific Railway the other evening at Napa Junction for Sacramento. He was compelled to pay three dollars and twenty-five cents for his ticket. Had he started from San Francisco, some thirty or thirty-five miles more distant from Sacramento, he could have bought his ticket for three dollars—that is to say, he had to pay twenty-five cents more for a shorter than for a longer distance, traveling over the same road. He felt aggrieved.

MR. ESTEE. I paid it like a man.

MR. EDGERTON. Very well. The fact is as I state it. The gentleman does not deny that. I suppose, then, the prohibition here was upon unjust discrimination only. The issue in the case stated would be, whether the charge of twenty-five cents for the shorter distance from Napa Junction to Sacramento, in excess of the charge for the longer distance from San Francisco, was justifiable. The following are some of the facts that would enter into a determination of the case: At a time when the rates of transportation on that road were fairly and equitably adjusted to the circumstances of the country, to the volume of business, to the cost of transportation, etc., and when every one having dealings with the company was satisfied with its management, a company of blackmailing competitors placed a few old second-class steamboats upon the river, not for the purpose of establishing and maintaining an honest, healthy and permanent competition, but for the purpose of compelling the railroad company to buy their worthless property at an exorbitant price. The Chairman of the Committee on Corporations tells us that this competition is of no importance, but he overlooks an aphorism in the science of transportation, that in competition it is the weakest line which always fixes the rates. Now, a rule of prohibiting a greater charge for a shorter than a longer distance is equivalent to a rule prohibiting a less charge for a longer distance; they are, if I may so express myself, the face and obverse of the same fact. It is obvious, then, that under the rule prescribed by section nineteen of this report, which absolutely prohibits all discrimination under any and all circumstances, that the railroad company would be forced to abandon the competitive business altogether, or, if it entered into competition and reduced its rates at competitive points, that it would be obliged to make a corresponding reduction of rates between intermediate stations. Now, sir, I undertake to say that there is not a railroad in the State, standing alone by itself—unless, perhaps, it be the Central Pacific—that could be successfully operated under the iron rule proposed by this section.

The California Pacific Railroad Company is paying annually in expenses and interest on bonds and other interest, according to a statement I have just received from the Railroad Commissioner, five hundred and seventeen thousand five hundred and fifty-eight dollars and thirty-five cents; twice within the last four years a large segment of that road has been destroyed by floods, and it has cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to repair it. The company is now behind several hundred thousand dollars on current account, and notwithstanding all this is making permanent and expensive improvements, in order to bring its road up to a high standard of efficiency, and make it adequate to the wants of the public. But for this road, it would cost a passenger probably five dollars at least to come from Napa Junction to this city. A whole day would be consumed in the trip, and his necessary incidental expenses would increase the cost of his transportation to at least six dollars. Whereas, with the facilities offered him by that company he could attend to his business at home all day, get into a comfortable car in the evening, and come here in two hours. Under all the circumstances there is not an unbiased jury in America that would not justify the discrimination statute. It is not the case of a "permanently established" discrimination, as put in the Illinois case from which I have read, but a "casual" discrimination, not made with a view to the building up of one locality at the expense of another, or to favor any particular individual, or set of individuals, at the expense of another; nor does it injuriously affect any person or place. This discrimination is resorted to by the company from sheer necessity, to save its existence, and it is justifiable. The same observations, sir, are applicable to the case of the Southern Pacific Railroad. The California Steam Navigation Company, with its hundred thousand dollars of capital stock, absolutely controls the interests of that company with its thirty millions of capital, at all competitive points, San Francisco, Santa Cruz, Monterey, and Los Angeles. It is well known that that road has not paid, and does not now pay operating expenses. Its proprietors are endeavoring, without the aid of subsidies and at vast cost of construction, to extend it across the continent, and connect with it contributory lines of railway to run through Arizona and Mexico, and thus to secure to California, and especially to San Francisco, the traffic of half a hemisphere. And why it is that the delegation from that city upon this floor should seek to embarrass the prosecution of that great enterprise by supporting such illiberal proscriptive provisions as these now under consideration, is a matter of astonishment to me.

There are numerous other facts upon which I might insist, and in view of which I might elaborate the argument, if I had the time, going to the justification of certain discriminations in railway transportation. This ironclad prohibition ignores totally a variety of conditions out of which such discrimination inevitably grows, and which is inseparable, especially from railway transportation; such as comparative amount of business, of value of freights transported, of bulk, of gradients of road, cost of transportation, and a multitude of other considerations, which always and universally affect the great question of discrimination, and determine its justice or injustice. I hold then, sir, that it would be unjust to the railroad companies of the State, and not only unjust but impolitic, to harden in the Constitution the rigid rule proposed by this section, and that it should be so amended as to limit the inhibition upon discrimination to undue or unreasonable discrimination, and at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to that effect.

The next provision of the section to which I object, is that which attempts to regulate commerce between the States. I apprehend it will be sufficient to call the attention of this committee to the real purport of this clause, and to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in order to show the utter folly of incorporating this provision in our Constitution. In the case of the State Freight Tax, reported in the fifteenth volume of Wallace's Reports, at page two hundred and seventy-nine, that Court says:

"However this may be, the rule has been asserted with great clearness, that whenever the subjects over which a power to regulate commerce is asserted are in their nature rational, or admit of one uniform system or plan of regulation, they may justly be said to be of such a nature as to require exclusive legislation by Congress. Surely transportation of passengers or merchandise through a State, or from one State to another, is of this nature. It is of national importance that over that subject there should be but one regulating power, for if one State can directly tax persons or property passing through it, or tax them indirectly by levying a tax upon their transportation, every other may, and thus commercial intercourse between States remote from each other may be destroyed."

Certainly, sir, this provision ought to be eliminated from the section. What state of facts now exists, or is at all likely hereafter to exist in this State, which demands the adoption in our Constitution of any provision affecting the proprietors of stage lines, "mud wagons," express lines, and the various other kinds of common carriers plying their avocations in our State, I do not perceive. One hundred and seventy-five years ago, in the second year of the reign of Queen Anne, I believe, Lord Chief Justice Holt, rendering the unanimous opinion of the Court of King's Bench, decided that the business of a common carrier was in the nature of a public employment, and this has been the rule ever since, wherever Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence has prevailed. I know of no abuse that can be practiced by the classes aimed at by this provision that has not an ample remedy at law, and I protest against incumbering the Constitution, that great organic law, whose proper and sole province it should be to sanctify and confirm those great organic principles which lie at the foundation of free republican government, with these trivial details of legislation, and that, too, legislation of the lowest grade.

I pass now, sir, to the consideration of section twenty. This section provides that—

"Three Railroad Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at the regular gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any railroad corporations or any other transportation company as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney, or employé, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies; establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; report to the Governor, annually, their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important; hear and determine complaints against railroad or other transportation companies; affix penalties, and enforce them through the medium of the Courts, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law."

It is thus proposed to create a permanent Commission, to be composed of three persons, and to endow it with the sole power to establish rates of transportaion, not only over all the railways, but for every conceivable description of common carriage in the State; and the sole power to change those rates at will; also with the sole power to fix penalties for the violation of the rates thus established, and to correct abuses by transportation companies and individuals employed in that business; with the sole power to hear and determine complaints against companies and individuals for such abuses, and for violations of the rates thus established; and it is also made the duty of the Legislature to confer upon it all such further powers as may be necessary to enable it to perform the duties thus enjoined, and to execute the powers thus conferred. There can be no doubt but that the section would, if adopted ex proprio vigore create a tribunal endowed with legislative, judicial, and executive powers. The word "establish" as applied to "rates" of transportation, means to fix, to ordain, and clearly imports a legislative power. The words to "hear and determine" are a perfect definition of judicial power. Mr. Bouvier, in his law dictionary, defines jurisdiction to be the "authority by which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide causes. Power to hear and determine. It includes power to enforce the execution of what is decreed." And in the case of the United States against Aredondo, reported in Sixth Peters Reports, at page seven hundred and nine, the rule is laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, that "the power to hear and determine a cause is jurisdiction; it is coram judice, whenever a case is presented which brings this power into action."

Now, sir, if there is any one political apothegm more sacred to the American people, which is more thoroughly imbedded in their political thoughts, feelings, and instincts, than another, it is that which teaches the distribution of the three great organic powers of government, legislative, judicial, and executive, into three great corresponding departments; and the maxim implies in its perfection that the entire mass of each of these great powers, so far as it affects the community at large shall be lodged in its appropriate department. The discovery of this great principle of government, for countless ages locked up in the arcana of politics,

> "Which kings and prophets waited for,
> And sought but never found,"

Is the crowning glory of the Anglo-Saxon race. It is the source of every political and social blessing we enjoy, the palladium of our liberties, the solid rock on which securely reposes the whole fabric of Anglo-Saxon institutions. To the extent that you impair this great conservative principle, to that extent you weaken free institutions. Destroy it, and republican government would perish from the earth. And yet right here in this young republic, which lives, and moves, and has its being by force of this vital principle; in this Constitutional Convention, sworn to guard, preserve, perpetuate, and build upon it; a foul assault is made upon it. It is proposed, not only to blend these great powers and hand them over thus confounded, in perpetuity, without ascertainment, limitation, or definition, to a single Board composed of three men, but to bind forever at the foot of this despotic tribunal all the industrial interests of the State, and the most potent of all agencies for good or for evil. Sir, this measure protends evil and only evil, and that on the most gigantic scale. If adopted it would distort, emasculate, and maim all the sovereign powers of Government. It would draw to and centralize in the triple-headed monster it proposes to create, despotic and boundless powers, and encircle it with every corrupt and festering influence in society. The measure is, moreover, based upon a most vicious principle, regarded from a business point of view. Its theory involves a separation of the ownership of property from its management. Charles Francis Adams, from whose writings the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations has so copiously quoted—or misquoted, I should say—to support his positions, has again and again unsparingly denounced this principle of railway regulation. In the official report of the Railway Commissioners of Massachusetts for the year eighteen hundred and seventy-three, he says:

"The essence of the system is, that certain persons, whether the Legislature itself, or officials designated by the Legislature, have devolved upon them the responsibility of establishing the revenue of property belonging to others. The Commissioners have grave doubts as to the success of any effort at the regulation of the railroad system, which practically effects a separation between the ownership of a railroad and its management."

And subsequent experience and observation of that Board has amply confirmed these views. Why, sir, England and the United States have been experimenting in this sort of legislative regulation of the affairs of railway corporations for forty years, and with no good results. The British Parliament passed no less than three thousand three hundred enactments to regulate the rates of transportation on the English railways.

A single statute referred to by Mr. Adams, in the book from which the gentleman read so copiously the other day, contains over three hundred sections. It had incorporated in it all the old turnpike toll Boards, and contained regulations of the most minute character. But they were found by experience to be nugatory, and simply because they were based upon a false principle now admitted to be so in England, and generally in the United States, viz.: the regulations of the profits of business by legislative enactment.

In Wisconsin the same experiment was tried, and entirely abandoned. In eighteen hundred and seventy-four, the Legislature of that State passed the famous Potter law—a law by which all railroads in the State were classified into three classes, and also classifying freights, and fixing rates of transportation for each class. They also took one fatal step in the same direction in which it is now proposed that we shall travel here. They conferred upon their Railway Commission the power to reduce the rates so fixed by the Legislature. The result was just what we may expect here, should this measure be adopted. All railway construction was suspended, foreign credit was withdrawn from the State, the railway service was greatly deteriorated, and a deep and widespread disturbance of business ensued, and in two years the Legislature of that State wiped all these regulations from its statute book, and passed a new Act, by the provisions of which the Commission is deprived of all power other than inquisitorial, and the only restraint imposed upon the railroad corporations as to rates of transportation is, that they shall be reasonable, and that there shall be no unjust discrimination. The committee raised by the British Parliament in eighteen hundred and seventy-two, to whose report the gentleman (Mr. Estee) referred in his speech the other day, was a select committee, "appointed by the House of Lords and the House of Commons to inquire into the subject of the amalgamation of railway companies with special reference to the bills for that purpose now before Parliament, and to consider whether any and what regulations should be imposed by Parliament in the event of such amalgamation being sanctioned, and to report to the House."

On this committee were distinguished representatives of the great industrial interests of England, and some of the most distinguished statesmen of the present age, among them the Earl of Derby and the Marquis of Salisbury, now world renowned for his diplomatic achievements at the recent Berlin Congress. This committee was in session many months. It traversed the whole subject of railway management and legislation relating thereto in England, and took a vast amount of testimony in the premises, embracing that of representative men in all the great industrial pursuits of the realm. In their report they pass in merciless review all the attempts of Parliament to regulate rates of transportation by law, and recommend the establishment of a Railway Commission. The question as to the nature and extent of the powers that should be conferred upon it, and specifically the question whether they should include the power to "regulate," was thoroughly considered, and upon this point they reported, and I quote the precise language of the report, as follows: "It has been proposed to commit to some such tribunal the revision of the rates and charges of the companies. But this cannot be done, unless the tribunal is invested with absolute and arbitrary powers, which is out of the question, or unless some rules can be laid down by Parliament for its guidance—and it has been shown how impracticable it is to lay down any such rules."

The recommendation of this committee was adopted by Parliament, and in eighteen hundred and seventy-three an Act was passed providing for the appointment of a Railway Commission, to consist of not more than three members, one of whom should be "of experience in the law, and one of experience in railway business," and it was endowed with very limited powers, somewhat analogous to those vested in the Boards of Massachusetts and Wisconsin. Mr. Adams, in his recent work on the Railway Problems, reviews the report of that committee at length, and thus summarizes the results:

At first glance, therefore, it seemed as if this committee had arrived at only negative results; but in truth they had reached positive conclusions of the first importance. They had, indeed, clearly stated the problem; a thing never before done in Great Britain. The natural development of the railroad system as a system was recognized, and the folly of restricted legislation demonstrated. A new policy was thus established, at the base of which was the principle of private ownership and management, which was to be left to work out its own destiny through that process of combination in which competing monopolies always result. The members of the committee saw perfectly clear where their process of reasoning would bring them out. It could result only in a tacit assent to the growth of private corporations until they become so great that they must, soon or late, assume relations to the Government corresponding with the public nature of their functions. This was obvious enough. Meanwhile the committee also saw with equal clearness that this was a question of the future—perhaps of the remote future; a question which certainly had not presented itself, and which they had no disposition to precipitate. They accordingly fixed definitely the policy of Great Britian as an expectant one. The railroad system was to be left to develop itself in its own way, as a recognized monopoly, held to a strict public accountability as such. Whenever it should appear that it abused its privileges and power, then the time for action would have arrived. As yet this was not the case in any such degree as called for a decisive and far-reaching measure of reform. To better watch over it meanwhile, and to cause its members to work with less friction among themselves and with a more careful regard to the equal rights of private persons, an exceptional piece of governmental machinery was provided in the form of a Board of Commissioners. The powers of this tribunal were both judicial and executive in character and very broad. It was its duty not only to hear all complaints of private parties, but to intervene in cases of difficulty which might arise between the companies themselves. The Board was, in fact, designed to insure to the community an easy and equitable interchange of traffic over its railroad lines, as well as to put a stop in so far as might be practicable to that unjust and vexatious system of discrimination which seems to be inseparable from all active railroad competition. Through this Board the exceptional character of the railroad system was at last recognized. An attempt was made to deal with the anomaly as an anomaly. Meanwhile, the most noticeable feature in the career of the Board, which has now been in existence five years, is the very trifling call which seems to have been made upon it. So far as can be judged from its annual reports, the cases which come before it are neither numerous nor of great importance. It would, however, be wholly unsafe to conclude from this fact that such a tribunal is unnecessary.

"On the contrary, it may confidently be asserted that no competent Board of Railroad Commissioners, clothed with the peculiar powers of the English Board, will ever, either there or anywhere else, have many cases to dispose of. The mere fact that the tribunal is there; that a machinery does exist for the prompt and final decision of that class of questions, puts an end to them. They no longer arise. They cease to arise for the simple reason that the railroad corporations in these matters are not like the members of a numerous and complicated business community. The controveries among them, which do not involve legal points, are comparatively simple and confined to few persons. These they will in the vast majority of cases settle themselves, if they only know that if they do not so settle them a public official will. The English Board has always been composed of very competent men. Accordingly the officials of the corporations, knowing quite well in advance what their decisions will be, do not probably care to encounter them. A single test case disposes of innumerable subsequent cases."

Time does not permit me to recount the many other empirical laws upon the subject we are considering, which are now, at last, a dead letter upon the statute books of other States. Passing them by, I can only characterize them as Mr. Adams says the select committee of Parliament referred to, characterized similar laws in England: "They showed with great precision how, during that period, the English railroad legislation had never accomplished anything which it sought to bring about, nor prevented anything it sought to hinder." The Chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, Mr. Estee, has paid a merited tribute to the great ability and high character of Charles Francis Adams. He is the oldest Railroad Commissioner in the United States, and has devoted years of patient investigation and study to the railroad problem in all its relations. His opinions upon the questions we are now considering must necessarily possess great value, and we may safely take them for a guide in our deliberations. In an address delivered by him to the farmers of Wisconsin, at a State Fair held in that State, at a time of great popular excitement over railway affairs, speaking upon the subject directly before us, he said:

"And in the first place let me say one word of myself; and it will be no word of laudation; perhaps I might better describe it as a confession of sadly modified aspirations, if not indeed of downright failure. I am an old soldier now in this discussion. I was among the first to begin in the public prints; to-day I am the senior Railroad Commissioner in the United States. If you ask me what I have done, what I have accomplished, I must needs answer: Little enough in comparison with what I, a few years back, hoped, but still something. At least I have come back to first principles. Another thing I have learned in the healthy though disheartening school of experience, and that is to revise my opinions, for I must needs confess it, that there is hardly a single theory as respects railroads and their relations to the State which I held six years ago, that I have not since, as the result of honest study and mature reflection, either greatly modified or wholly abandoned. I have grown common sense, I think, and like most men thankful at last for little things. Six years ago, in the height of the railroad discussion, a Board of Commissioners was established in Massachusetts, and I became a member of it. The principle upon which the Board was established I at the time thought wholly unsatisfactory; I have since concluded it was a wonderfully happy legislative guess. The Board had no powers, or next to none. It was simply an agency through which publicity could be secured; it was to be the lens through which the scattered, diverging, individually powerless rays of public opinion could be cast, concentrated into a focus, and brought to bear on any given point of railroad management. In those days I had not the faith in public opinion which I have now, and it seemed to me that the law which organized our Board, and then placed us face to face with those great corporations, powerless to do more than to investigate and discuss, it seemed to me that this law was framed in a total misapprehension of the necessities of the case; that it left us in a position which challenged contempt. The fact is, like most officials, I yearned for more power. I wished to be able to compel, as well as to recommend. I wanted a little force bill of my own. This, I am now rejoiced to say, the Legislature of Massachusetts was too wise, perhaps too wisely distrustful, to give me. The law was badly, clumsily framed, but it was based on a very simple idea. A Board of Arbitrators was to be created, with a certain supervisory power. It then became the duty of its members to investigate every complaint brought against any railroad company, and this, too, without cost to the party bringing it."

Mr. Chairman, if the history of the railroad and its management in England and in the United States, if the partial investigations and thoughtful studies of eminent specialists and statesmen, teach us anything at all, it is that all attempts at a forced regulation of rates for railroad transportation, whether it be in form of legislative enactment or of constitutional provision, always have been and always must be the worst kind of empiricism; that the business of a railway is based upon, and must be conducted in accordance with those universal and immutable principles which lie at the base of every other business; that an arbitrary interference with it by government in any form always has been, and from the nature of the case must inevitably be, in proportion to the extent to which it is exerted, destructive.

The great student and observer of railway affairs in this country, from whom I have drawn so liberally in the course of my remarks, has never given utterance to sounder views upon this particular phase of the subject than those he addressed to the farmers of Wisconsin, when he told them, alluding to a state of things in remarkable analogy to that now prevailing in this house, that—

"Political makeshifts are more in vogue just at present than political philosophy. Accordingly, as our swollen statute books bear ample evidence, the regulation law-maker has during the last six years been more than ordinarily busy. I do not know that the passion for legislative panaceas for every ill which the social flesh is heir to is peculiar to America. I do not think it is; only in other countries it takes a different form, and is called not an Act of Legislature, but by some other name, such as "ukase," "firman," "mandate," "imperial decree," or the like. But if there is one thing which human experience has proved more thoroughly than another, it is that the limits of effective legislation are very narrow, and that nine laws out of every ten, so far as they have any effect at all, rather defeat than further their object. This somewhat important fact, however, has not received among us of late any very marked consideration. The essence of all successful republican government is conceded in thought to rest in an appeal to a calm and educated public opinion; but in our practice, the penal law represents the Constable—force; and the moment anything is wrong, it is but necessary to get control of the Constables to have it set right. So, in Massachusetts, for thirty years, now, they have been trying through the agency of the Constables to make men temperate; in nearly every State in the Union, the Constable is invoked to see that the borrowers do not pay more interest than is good for them; in the South, the Constable must see to it that civilization receives no detriment; in the West, the omnipresent Constable must have his eye on the railroads, so that no injuries shall occur from any deficiency in the operation of natural laws. To my mind, the force system, whether in Turkey, or in Russia, or in Massachusetts, or in Wisconsin, is all wrong. It is based upon power, not upon reason; upon an arbitrary will, not an enlightened public opinion. It is as if a physician were to cover with plasters the outward indication of disease and stolidly ignore its seeds in the depth of the system. A thorough investigation of causes and results would, I am confident, reveal past all dispute, the utter futility of the larger part of our statutes, and, by no means least of all, those intended to regulate our railroads—a department of legislation based on the principle that the State must sever itself from all connection with business undertakings, because experience has shown that every such connection tends to waste, to jobbery, and to corruption, and from this basis seeks at once to convert our Legislatures into irresponsible Boards of Railroad Directors, thus substituting a system of organized meddling in place of legitimate business, finally compelling the wealthiest corporations to have recourse, in self-protection, to systematic legislative corruption—an evil ten times worse than the worst executive jobbery."

Sir, the sentiments here advanced are no less pertinent to the scheme now proposed to us than they are to a legislative force bill. Mr. Chairman, I deny that there is anything in the present management of railroads in this State; or in the existing condition of public opinion here, which demands the expression of the power of this Convention upon the railroad corporations of this State. I deny that there is now, or that there ever will be, any action necessary to be taken by the government of this State in reference to railways that may not, with entire safety and absolute propriety, be left to the legislative departments. And, sir, I unhesitatingly affirm that in every instance in which your Legislature has been called upon to act upon this subject, it has treated it intelligently, wisely, and to the best interests of the people, as well as of the corporations. I deny that the people demand the adoption by this Convention of sections eighteen, nineteen, and twenty, or of any single provision contained in them. The management of the railway system of this State is, and for many years past has been, eminently satisfactory to that large class of people in this State having dealings with these corporations; and of this I have evidence of the highest character at hand. In the first report of the Railroad Commissioners of this State, made in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, I find the following statement:

"In October, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, we issued a circular, which was addressed to many hundred citizens in various parts of the State whom we deemed likely to be able to furnish us with information or suggestions of value, in connection with the subject of railroad transportation. A copy of it is as follows:

SACRAMENTO, October, 1876.

Among the principal objects proposed by the Legislature in creating a Board of Transportation Commissioners, is the compilation of facts and statistics connected with the building and operation of railroads in this State, and also the investigation of their management, especially as it affects the interests of their patrons and the public generally. It is believed that an impartial investigation of this subject will result in substantial advantage to all concerned; and to this end this Board desires to receive information and suggestions and statements from all who are interested. As your position has probably led you to give more than usual attention to the subject, there may be matters to which, in your opinion, the attention of the Board should be called; in which event, it is requested that you will communicate them to this Board in writing. By order of the Board.

WALTER M. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

"This was transmitted to Supervisors, county officers, members and ex-members of the Legislature, Judges, prominent merchants, storekeepers, editors, hotel-keepers, Patrons of Husbandry, etc., and it led to some valuable communications, although not to contributions of public opinions, or information on the subject as full or extensive as we might have reasonably looked for.

"We have deemed it our duty to visit and inspect, so far as such inspection can be made in transitu, every part of every railroad in the State, in order to acquaint ourselves, so far as possible, with the circumstances, local connections, situation, and condition of the various roads.

"Without entering into unnecessary detail on this subject, we observe that generally the railroads of the State are in good order, and their management wise and economical, and conducted with a view to public convenience." And further along in their report, in reference to discrimination between individuals, they say: "No instance of the occurrence of this abuse has been brought to our notice. There are rumors of its existence, and it is even said that the sufferers by it fear to complain, lest they be punished by further and ruinous discrimination. While it is possible that there may be some foundation for these suggestions, it is also probable that the instances, if they exist, are of rare occurrence, and in most, if not all cases, explainable by circumstances unknown to, or insufficiently considered by, the parties who have felt aggrieved. The present law is somewhat defective on the subject, and we believe the amendments proposed will be found sufficient to correct it."

But, sir, there is further evidence at hand, and the witnesses are now living and here present. The testimony I am now about to adduce proves to what agencies the regulation of this subject should be left, so far as we are at present advised concerning the conduct of railway business in this State. And the instances I am about to cite are only a few among a great many which might be enumerated.

Two or three Summers ago a special committee, representing the farmers of Solano County, who desired a modification in their favor of the then prevailing rates of transportation on the California Pacific Railroad, presented their demand to the managers of that road, and, after mutual consultation upon the subject, their demand was promptly acquiesced in. Soon after this a similar committee, representing a like class of citizens in Yolo County, presented to those gentlemen a similar demand, except that the reduction asked in their case was larger than that asked in the other, and their demand was also promptly acceded to. Soon after this another committee, representing the farmers of Colusa County, made a like request of those managers, and it was cordially granted.

I have before me an extract taken from a public journal published in the City of Stockton, under the caption, "Central Pacific Railroad and the Stockton Wheat Market:"

"The Central Pacific Railroad Company have made an important concession to the warehousemen of Stockton—a concession that will be mutually advantageous to the company and to the warehousemen. The committee of citizens, consisting of General George S. Evans, I. R. Wilber, J. D. Peters, and Andrew Wolf, visited the railroad authorities on the twenty-sixth ultimo, and made representations and asked relief. The railroad authorities stated that it was worth ninety cents a ton more to carry the wheat to San Francisco from the stations on the Oregon Division than to Stockton, and the committee asked to have that sum divided between the railroad, company and the grain men. The railroad company have consented, and granted to the grain men a reduction of fifty cents per ton, as will be seen from the following letter received yesterday:

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
GENERAL FREIGHT AGENT'S OFFICE,
San Francisco, July 3, 1877.

GENERAL GEO. S. EVANS, Stockton—Dear Sir: Referring to the interview between yourself and associates of the committee appointed for the purpose, and Governor Stanford, President of this company, I am instructed to say that the company will grant your request, and make the rate on grain in car-loads, from points between Tehama and Lincoln, on the Oregon division, to Stockton, fifty cents per ton lower than to San Francisco. Very truly yours,

J. C. STUBBS,
General Freight Agent.

These, sir, are only a few of almost numberless instances that might be cited, which show that there is a silent legislation constantly going on between the people and these great corporations, which, if left to itself, will much more satisfactorily adjust the relations between them, than will any number of "force bills" and Constables. The Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-one concerning railroad corporations, fixed maxima for transportation at ten cents per mile for passengers and fifteen cents per ton per mile for freight. As, in the progress of time, the railway system of the State became perfected, as the volume of business increased, the classifications of freight became more and more liberal, the rates of transportation were from time to time reduced, and at the session of the Legislature of eighteen hundred and seventy-five and eighteen hundred and seventy-six, when the Senate Committee on Corporations caused to be published in the public journals invitations which were spread broadcast all over the land, calling upon any and all persons to bring forward their complaints, if any they had, against the railway corporations, not a single individual responded. The Legislature at that session adopted the classifications of freights and the rates of charges of all the railway companies in the State in force on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, and fixed them in what is known as the O'Connor bill as maxima rates. At the session of eighteen hundred and seventy-six and eighteen hundred and seventy-seven the Hart bill became a law. During the interval of two years the classifications were adjusted upon a basis still more favorable to the public, the rates of charges were still further reduced, and the Legislature again fixed the rates and classifications in force on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, as maxima rates. The legislation to which I refer had the sanction of some of the purest and most eminent men in your State, and was the result of their investigation and study in their capacity as members of your Legislature. Among them were your present Governor, Miles O'Connor of Nevada, and a gentleman now a member of this body. I allude to Mr. Laine, of Santa Clara, himself a member of the Senate Committee on Corporations at the time to which I refer, and than whom a more patient, honest, industrious, and valuable legislator has never been a member of a legislative body since the Commons sat.

Mr. Chairman, there seems to be an intense prejudice against corporations in this body, and I cannot forbear to say that, in my judgment, it is as unfounded and unjust as it is intense. What is a corporation? It is a number of persons united in one body, under an artificial form, designated by a common name, having succession, and the capacity to sue and be sued, to acquire and hold property. It is the purpose of a corporation to secure a concentration of the brains, the will, and the capital of a number of individuals, in order to carry on great enterprises. These corporations, sir, have jerked this State a hundred years ahead of the point of progress at which it would have stood without them. They have been potent and beneficent instrumentalities for the diffusion of literature, of science, and art; for the spread of education; for the encouragement of commerce, of agriculture, and of manufactures. Occasionally, to be sure, one of them goes down, and then there goes up a general howl against corporations. It is to be admitted, that some evils are incident to this form of organization, but I know of no human institution that is altogether exempt from evil, in some form, unless it be this immaculate body. Of course, everybody looks for a general ascension from this hall at no distant day, but no one expects it, I believe, until all the money is gone.

Mr. Chairman, I confess that I have addressed this Convention not without some misgivings. I am a lawyer, and have been a legislator—two employments that seem to have come under the ban of this house. I have a realizing and saddened sense that the profession to which I belong does not enjoy the confidence, the respect, the homage of the people, in that high degree that it once did. But, sir, for this the people are themselves to blame. From what I cannot but regard as a most mistaken notion, they have done everything in their power, for the last forty years, to popularize, to democratize, that profession. And its better representatives have not made an effort during that period to close up its ranks against charlatans and pretendents, that has not been thwarted by the people. For example, a provision was placed in the Codes, which became the law in eighteen hundred and seventy-three, prohibiting any person from practicing in any Court of record in this State who had not been admitted to the Supreme Court. It was a salutary provision, and a security to the citizen. But at the next session of the Legislature a bill was introduced to repeal it, and though the lawyers made every effort to preserve it, the farmers and mechanics in that body opposed it, and it was repealed. But, sir, granting all that now may be said to the disadvantage of that profession; concede, if you please, that, as is alleged, it is somewhat conservative, somewhat aristocratic in its tendencies: as I look over this body and realize how large and predominating is the democratic element in it, I cannot but think it a fortunate circumstance that there is a good number of lawyers in it, and among them the best in the State; some, indeed, who rank with the best in any State. And I do not think the excellence of the work of this body will be at all impaired if a very wide scope is given to the influence of the lawyer in it. One of the profoundest of political philosophers—and a very close observer of our American institutions—in his great work entitled "Democracy in America," wrote thus of my profession:

"The profession of the law is the only aristocratic element which can be amalgamated without violence with the natural elements of democracy, and which can be advantageously and permanently combined with them. I am not unacquainted with the defects which are inherent in that body of men; but without this admixture of lawyer-like sobriety with the democratic principle, I question whether democratic institutions could long be maintained; and I cannot believe that a republic could subsist at the present time, if the influence of lawyers in public business did not increase in proportion to the power of the people."

Sir, it was the skill and wisdom of lawyers that laid the foundation and reared the superstructure of that benign Government under which we sit in this hall. It was an immortal company of lawyers whose statesmanship, supported by the deathless valor of its heroic armies, kept that Government firm on its foundations in the most tremendous shock of war the universe has ever felt. It was a lawyer, who, at the call of his country in the hour of its direst peril, left the walks of his profession and became the greatest organizer of war the world has ever seen. But, sir, I need not stand here and call the roll of its heroes. In the Senate, upon the bench, at the bar, in the camp, in the stricken line of battle, always and everywhere when civilization and the rights of mankind have been assailed, that profession has been in the vanguard of their defenders. The bones of its martyrs are at the base of every great monument which marks the progress of the race, and there is not a legal security, nor a constitutional guarantee of liberty or labor that is not illustrated by their genius, or consecrated and cemented by their blood.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot resume my seat without admonishing members that we are daily wandering further and further away from these great organic principles which alone ought to engage our attention in compounding a Constitution; that a torrent of radicalism has set in upon us which threatens to overwhelm our work; that we have already lost much of the public confidence. Let us curb the last innovation that has taken possession of us, this rerum novarum lubido, which the great Latin philosopher said was the bane and destruction of all republics, and come back to sound principles. Let us adhere as near as may be to the present Constitution. Under it there has been consummated more of general progress, more generally diffused happiness and prosperity, than has ever before been realized in the same period of time by any other people on the globe. For more than a quarter of a century it has held in equilibrium, like an elemental force, the rivalries of sections, the antagonistic customs, the clashing prejudices and passions of all the alien races of the earth. Believe me, sir, when I say it has the affections of this people, and that they will not tolerate any very radical changes in it. Let us amend it in a few particulars, adding a little to the judicial force, changing a little its provisions regarding taxation, and putting a few more restraints upon legislative power. Do this, and we shall regain the public confidence; do this, and we may return to our constituents confident of being greeted with that most inspiring of all salutations to a public man, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

MR. AYERS. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at five o'clock P. M., the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That when this Convention adjourns to-day, it shall be adjourned till two o'clock P. M. on Monday, December second, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight.

MR. KEYES. I second the resolution.

MR. GRACE. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Carried.

MR. CAMPBELL. I desire to call up my resolution amending Rules One and Two, as to the time of meeting of this Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman is out of order at present.

PETITIONS—MECHANICS' LIENS.

MR. REYNOLDS presented the following memorial, signed by a large number of mechanics and others, citizens of California, asking for a provision in the Constitution for a lien law:

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned respectfully represent that the practical working of the present legislation, and decisions of the Supreme Court based thereon, regarding the rights of mechanics, material-men, and laborers to a lien for their labor and material furnished, is such that those who in a measure depend upon such law for just protection, fail in nearly all cases to obtain it, because of the inefficient working of said law.

Wherefore, we pray you to declare in our organic law the right of every mechanic, material-man, and laborer to a perfect lien on the thing whereon his labor has been expended, or for which his materials have been furnished.

Moreover, we would state that we would be satisfied with amendment number one hundred and sixty-seven, introduced by Mr. Van Dyke on October tenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, and read and referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects, as follows:

"SEC. —. Mechanics, material-men, artisans, and laborers, of every class, shall have a lien upon the property on which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials, for the value of such labor done and materials furnished, and the Legislature shall provide by law for the speedy and efficient enforcement of said liens."

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

MR. FREUD presented a similar petition.

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

THE SUPREME COURT.

MR. BLACKMER presented the following petition from members of the bar of San Diego, in regard to sessions of the Supreme Court at Los Angeles:

To the honorable the President and Members of the Convention to amend the Constitution of the State of California:

The undersigned memorialists, as citizens and members of the bar of San Diego County, respectfully represent to your honorable body:

That we have been unable to discover any hardship in the operation of the law requiring the Supreme Court to hold certain of its sessions at points outside of the capital of the State. Nor have we been able to discover any good or even plausible reason, either from the arguments of the advocates of the proposed restrictive amendment or from our own investigations, why a term or terms of the Supreme Court should not be profitably and conveniently held at points other than the capital.

That no popular discontent has been manifested on the part of the people of the State at the action of the Legislature in providing for the holding of certain terms of the Supreme Court in San Francisco and Los Angeles; and that the suggested change in limiting the sessions of the said Court exclusively at the capital by the organic law, is uncalled for by any public demand on the part of the people of the State.

That for ourselves, as citizens and members of the bar, and as far as public opinion has been manifested upon this subject within the sphere of our observation, we are convinced that the sentiment of the people of the State, and especially of the central and southern portions, is manifestly opposed to the adoption of any clause which would prevent the people of the State from legislating upon this subject as the future growing and changing interests of the people might demand.

That the rapid increase of population and wealth, involving a proportionate increase of business in the southern part of the State, requires that the Legislature should at least be left at liberty to give us such terms of the Supreme Court as our future exigencies shall demand. Even at the present time our Supreme Court business is very large, as shown by the fact that the term just held at the City of Los Angeles has consumed three weeks of constant and arduous labor on the part of the Court and counsel, and was yet insufficient to dispose of the business before the Court.

That, at the southern part of the State, sessions of the Supreme Court are required as a necessity, saving much time to counsel and to litigants, besides the expense incident to more than a thousand miles of travel from points in the southern counties to the capital. And upon these grounds, and because no rights or privileges of others are infringed upon, we would hereby ask your honorable body to take such action as may prevent the incorporation of any such restrictive provision in the amended Constitution.

LEVI CHASE,
W. T. McNEALY,
E. W. HENDRICK,
WALLACE LEACH,
WILL M. SMITH,
W. J. WALKER,
W. J. HUNSAKER,
W. J. GATEWOOD.

Ordered to lay on the table, to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole with the report of the Committee on Judicial Department.

COMMUNICATION.

THE PRESIDENT. I have received a communication which the Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

THE SAN FRANCISCO GASLIGHT COMPANY,
SAN FRANCISCO, November 21st, 1878.

J. P. Hoge, Esq., President of the Constitutional Convention, Sacramento:

DEAR SIR: Copy of resolution number eighty-nine came to hand, and in reply have to say that the San Francisco Gaslight Company, since its organization, has furnished to consumers an immense number of meters, averaging between three thousand and four thousand annually, all of which are kept in perfect repair by the company without charge to consumers. There has also been a large number discontinued on account of removals, etc., leaving in use at the present time about thirteen thousand one hundred meters at customers' premises. The average life of a meter is about five years, and its destruction is a total loss to the company, as they are not sold to consumers of gas, and no deposit is ever required, nor any rent charged for them while in use, as is the custom in England and the Eastern States.

Very respectfully,

WM. G. BARRETT,
Secretary for San Francisco Gaslight Company.

Laid on the table.

REPORT—PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

MR. OVERTON presented the following report from the Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings, to whom was referred proposed amendments number three hundred and fifty, by Mr. Campbell; number eighty-four, by Mr. Cowden; number four hundred and sixty-five, by Mr. Freud; number three hundred and eighty-three, by Mr. Webster, have had the same under consideration. Number three hundred and eighty-three, by Mr. Webster—we recommend its reference to the Committee on Education; number four hundred and sixty-five, by Mr. Freud, to the Committee on Labor and Capital; propositions number three hundred and fifty, by Mr. Campbell, and number four hundred and sixty-five, by Mr. Condon, containing the principles which your committee have embodied in the following sections, and recommend their adoption.

A. P. OVERTON, Chairman.

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. There shall be a State Board of Prison Directors, to consist of five persons, to be appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold office for ten years, except that the first appointed shall, in such manner as the Legislature may direct, be so classified that the term of one person so appointed shall expire at the end of each two years during the first ten years, and vacancies occurring shall be filled in like manner. The appointee to a vacancy, occurring before the expiration of a term, shall hold only for the unexpired term of his predecessor. The Governor shall have the power to remove either of the directors for misconduct, incompetency, or neglect of duty, after an opportunity to be heard upon written charges.

SEC. 2. The Board of Directors shall have the charge and superintendence of the State Prisons, and shall possess such powers, and perform such duties, in respect to other penal and reformatory institutions of the State, as the Legislature may prescribe.

SEC. 3. The Board shall appoint the Warden and Clerk, and determine the other necessary officers of the prisons. The Board shall have power to remove the Wardens and Clerks for misconduct, incompetency, or neglect of duty; all other officers and employés of the prisons shall be appointed by the Warden thereof, and be removed at his pleasure.

SEC. 4. The members of the Board shall receive no compensation other than reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred while engaged in the performance of official duties, to be audited as the Legislature may direct.

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall pass such laws as may be necessary to further define and regulate the powers and duties of the Board, Wardens, and Clerks, and to carry into effect the provisions of this Article.

MR. CONDON. Mr. President: I move that the report lay on the table until such time as the minority report is submitted, and that they both be printed together.

Carried.

PAY OF GAS PORTER.

MR. O'SULLIVAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Controller of State be and he is hereby authorized to draw his warrant in favor of Patrick Leavy, for thirty-eight dollars, for services as Gas Porter prior to October seventeenth, eight hundred and seventy-eight, payable out of the appropriation for the expenses of this Convention.

Referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

AMENDMENT TO RULES.

MR. CAMPBELL. I now ask to call up my resolution to amend Rules One and Two, in relation to the hour of meeting.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That Rule One be amended so as to read as follows:

The Convention shall meet each day of sitting at half-past nine o'clock A. M., unless it shall adjourn to some other hour.

Resolved, That Rule Two be amended so as to read as follows:

The Convention shall take a recess each day from half-past twelve o'clock P. M., to two o'clock P. M., and from five o'clock P. M., or such earlier hour as the Convention may determine, until seven o'clock P. M.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to Rule One.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 80 ayes to 20 noes.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I desire to sit from one o'clock in the evening until one o'clock next morning.

THE PRESIDENT. The next question is on the amendment to Rule Two.

MR. REYNOLDS. Has the vote been announced on the last?

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir: 80 ayes to 20 noes. The amendment was adopted.

MR. REYNOLDS. I rise to a point of order.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman is too late with his point of order.

MR. REYNOLDS. I don't know that——

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman is too late with his point of order.

MR. REYNOLDS. I don't know that it is ever too late to refer to a rule or correct a mistake. Rule Sixty declares that "no standing rule or order of the Convention shall be rescinded or changed without a vote of two thirds, and one day's notice being given of the motion therefor; but a rule or order may be suspended temporarily by a vote of two thirds of the members present, except Rules Fifty, Fifty-one, Fifty-two, Fifty-three, and Fifty-five." Under that rule it requires one hundred and one votes to change a standing rule, and if it is the decision of the Chair that this rule has been changed by the vote of eighty members, why I appeal from the decision of the Chair to the Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that the point of order is not well taken.

MR. REYNOLDS. From that decision the gentleman from San Francisco appeals. [Laughter.]

THE PRESIDENT. It takes three to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

MR. SWEASEY. I second the appeal.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. I appeal from the decision.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I respectfully ask the Chair to state the grounds of his decision; whether it is that the gentleman from San Francisco is too late in raising the point of——

MR. REYNOLDS. It seems to me that the mover of the appeal is entitled to the floor.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, is on the floor. Go on.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I ask that the Chair state the ground of the decision—whether it is that the gentleman from San Francisco rose too late, to make his point, that is, after the Chair had stated its decision, or whether the Chair bases his decision upon the construction of Rule Twenty—because it will make a difference in my vote.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: The reason that I appeal from the decision of the Chair is to obtain a construction of this rule. There can be no doubt as a rule of law. The latter part of the rule distinctly states that, "a rule or order may be suspended temporarily by a vote of two thirds of the members present." The former part of the rule provides that no standing rule or order of the committee shall be changed or rescinded without a two-thirds vote. It undoubtedly means two thirds of the whole Convention. No lawyer would pretend in a Court of law that there could be any other construction put upon a statute or rule adopted by the Court, and no Court in Christendom would pretend to put any other construction upon it. We violate this rule every time we attempt to change a rule by the vote of two thirds of the members present. The farthest we can go by a vote of two thirds of the members present is to temporarily suspend a rule. And what is the reason of this rule? It is that there may be something like permanency to your rules. If you adopt any other construction of it, why a two-thirds majority of a bare quorum of the Convention can turn the rules upside down, as they have done several times, and the next day you are all at sea, and the members of the Convention know not what the rules are. And further: at the time the Committee on Rules were constructing these rules, and I appeal to the Chairman of the Committee on Rules if he did not distinctly state that that was the construction, that it required two thirds of the members elected to the Convention to change a rule, but that two thirds of the members present could temporarily suspend a rule. But two thirds of those present could not go at it and change the whole code we have adopted. There can be no other construction. It comes under the rule that the expression of one thing excludes the other. That applies to this case, perhaps not perfectly, but it applies. It applies to this extent, that we have said in the rule that a rule or order cannot be changed except by a two-third vote. I hold that that means two thirds of the Convention. Why? Because in the next clause the expression is, "two thirds of the members present." The first part of the rule does not say two thirds of the members present, and it certainly means two thirds of the whole Convention. There can be no doubt about this. There can be no two opinions about it.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: Rule Three says that not less than seventy-seven members shall constitute a quorum. Therefore, I say if seventy-seven members are present that constitutes the Convention, although forty or fifty may be absent. Those present constitute the Convention if there are seventy-seven. Then Rule Sixty says that no rule or order shall be changed without a two-third vote. What does that mean? It means two thirds of the Convention, and if there is a quorum present, and two thirds of that quorum vote in favor of changing a rule, it is a vote of two thirds of the Convention. I cannot put any other construction upon it. I know that in every instance in our constitutional provisions where it is required that a certain majority of all the members elected to either branch of the Legislature, must vote on a certain proposition to carry it, it is so distinctly stated, as, for instance, creating or changing a judicial district. Our Constitution says it can be done only by a vote of two thirds of all the members elected, whether they are present or not. No other construction can be placed upon this rule where it says that a rule may be changed by a two-third vote. No other meaning can be put upon it, than that it means a two-third vote of those present, provided a quorum be present.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I was a member of the committee that framed this rule, and I claim that when that body made this rule they intended it to mean what it said. If they had intended that a two-thirds vote of all the members elected were required to change a vote they would have said so. I think if they had meant that two thirds of the members elected were required to change a rule they would have said so. So far as the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds, is concerned, I give him credit for his perseverance in this great struggle, and I will say that he is entitled to a patent on his idea. I have served in the halls of legislation here for many years, and in all that time no member before him, to my knowledge, has ever contended for this peculiar idea. I think that he deserves credit for his persistency in giving forth an idea that is peculiar to himself. It was evidently the intention of the Committee on Rules that a two-third vote of those present should control this body in a vote of this kind, and I contend that the change was properly made by this body some weeks ago when they amended Rule Fifty-six.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: Perhaps I am one of the peculiar ones, too, and perhaps I do not understand the English language. I do not know much, but certainly I must agree with Mr. Reynolds in his construction of this rule. And the Chairman of the committee under stands the rule in the same manner.

MR. ESTEE. Who told you I did?

MR. STEDMAN. Well, the Chairman told me he did. "No rule or order of the committee shall be rescinded or changed without a vote of two thirds, and one day's notice given of the motion therefor; but a rule or order may be suspended temporarily by a vote of two thirds of the members present, except Rules Fifty, Fifty-one, Fifty-two, Fifty-three, and Fifty-five." Why do they say that? The gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe, says that evidently the first clause means seventy-seven members—two thirds of seventy-seven members. Following that argument out, less than two thirds of seventy-seven could change a rule temporarily. I do not understand it so. I think it is very plain that only two thirds of the whole Convention can change a rule. I do not care much at any rate. [Cries of "question."]

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: I just want to say two or three words. I presume this rule must be construed in connection with the others. Rule Three provides that not less than seventy-seven members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. That constitutes a quorum. If two thirds of a quorum vote that ends the matter according to my notion. That is my interpretation of Rule Sixty as construed with Rule Three. I think the decision of the Chair is right.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I understand now that the Chairman of the committee does not hold to the opinion that it requires a two-third vote of the whole Convention to change a rule. Now, Mr. President, my recollection is perfect as to the debate in the Committee on Rules, that took place on the adoption of Rule Sixty, and in answer to my question ——

MR. TINNIN. I call the gentleman to order. He has no right to refer to the debates in committee. It is contrary to parliamentary rules.

THE PRESIDENT. It certainly is out of order to refer to anything that took place in the committee.

MR. REYNOLDS. Out of order? As usual! [Laughter.]

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that the point raised by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds, not well taken, for the reason stated by the gentleman from San Bernardino. Two thirds of the members present—there being a quorum present—can change a rule after one day's notice of the motion thereof.

MR. MURPHY. Mr. President: I move that the gentleman from San Francisco be laid on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. Too heavy. [Laughter.]

THE PRESIDENT. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

The Chair was sustained.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: I ask that the motion to change Rule Two be divided, so that we can vote upon the two propositions.

MR. LARKIN. I move that the question be divided.

THE PRESIDENT. The first question is on the first clause of the rule.

MR. GRACE. Why not say perpetual session from two o'clock until ten o'clock in the evening? I move to amend, so that it shall read from two o'clock to ten o'clock.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order now. We are voting on a division of the question.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. President: I move to amend, so as to read: "The Convention shall take a recess each day from twelve o'clock M., to half-past one o'clock P. M."

Lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the first division of the amendment, that the Convention take a recess from half-past twelve M. to two o'clock P. M.

Adopted.

THE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the second division of the amendment, that the Convention take a recess from five o'clock P. M., or such earlier hour as the Convention may determine, until seven o'clock P.M.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I have an amendment to offer to that: "The Convention shall take a recess each day from five o'clock P. M. until seven o'clock P. M., and from one o'clock A. M. until eight o'clock A. M.

Lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the second division of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda.

MR. WILSON. Mr. President: I think it would be a great mistake for this Convention to meet at night. We are coming here to some very important questions. We are upon some very important questions. Now, I would like to know what time any gentleman will have for the study and examination of the great questions under discussion. Suppose we go into this discussion on corporations, and sit here morning, noon, and night, what time has any gentleman for that reflection and study which each should give to the subject? It would be a great mistake. This Convention wants to do its business well. Everybody, it seems to me, has been working pretty hard. I think this Convention has been as industrious and hardworking a body as any Convention that ever sat. I do not think any complaint can be made of the progress we have presented.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. President: In view of those considerations, with the permission of the Convention, I will withdraw that part of the amendment.

THE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the gentleman has leave.

CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the amendments offered to section eighteen of the original report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I shall endeavor to be concise in what I have to say. I can assure you, sir, that the Committee on Corporations, of which I am a member, has been in nowise surprised or moved from their purpose by the flood of vituperation and abuse which has been poured upon us by the salaried officers and pensioned press of the corporation. We anticipated, sir, when we presented this report, that the henchmen of the railroad would sound the bugles of monopoly—hasten to lick absurd pomp and "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee where thrift may follow fawning."

Mr. Chairman, this is a question of no ordinary magnitude. The control of the Legislature over corporations has agitated not this country alone, but England also, and their reviews state that the railroads, even in England, are too strong for Parliament, and that they control the Legislature of that country; and the thinking men of Great Britain are endeavoring to frame such rules in Parliament as will relieve the country from their oppressions. And here, sir, it is the same. The corporations rule the country. It is the whisky ring, it is the bank ring, it is the railroad ring, it is the manufacturers' ring, but ring always. Now, sir, for my part, I intend to maintain, as far as I can, the legislation in England and in this country for two centuries in relation to common carriers, and to follow the judicial sentiment and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. And standing there, sir, with that line and plummet in hand, and not going beyond these soundings, so far as I am concerned, I intend to apply the knife of reform to the putrid excrescence of existing abuses.

The committee has been assailed for copying provisions from other Constitutions of other States, and has been charged, even, with mutilating them. It cannot reasonably be objected to the report of the committee, that we have availed ourselves of the wisdom of others. We have reported nothing here but what is to be found in the Constitutions—the latest Constitutions—of other States. If there is any objection to the report, it is that we have not gone far enough, in borrowing the most stringent provisions—that we have not embraced all the late reforms. They have been briefly summarized in a late number of the International Review. I will read a brief paragraph, that it may be seen that we are not groping in the dark, but that we are availing ourselves of the light and wisdom of others:

"Railroad and canal corporations are common carriers and their ways public highways; they shall be chartered under general and uniform (in each State) laws; each shall have the right to connect with any other, and transfer and receive freight without delay or discrimination, but no corporation shall consolidate, directly or indirectly, with a parallel or competing line. Rates may be regulated and shall never be higher from a given point to another, than from the first point to one more distant, except the latter be on excursion or commutation. Discrimination in rates between individuals or corporations asking to be served is prohibited, and railroad officers are not permitted to become privately interested in transportation or furnishing supplies. Common carrying corporations are forbidden to engage in mining or other business. Every corporation is required to have an office in the State (for transfer of stock), and annual reports are required to be made to some State authority."

Now, sir, there is not a line in that summary which our report does not present.

Now, sir, the report falls short of many of these provisions, because we have not declared that they are public highways, and we have not provided—as the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, probably correctly contends—that a violation of the law shall work a forfeiture of charter. We are dealing with common carriers, and ever since the subject has been known, from the Year Books down, it has been a principle that a common carrier is bound to carry for all, without discrimination, for a just compensation; and all the elementary books, and all the cases, show that the determination of what is a just compensation is a matter for the Legislature, and, in the absence of legislation, for the Courts. I read a brief paragraph from Judge Story, on bailments:

"One of the duties of the common carrier is to receive and carry all goods offered for transportation, by any person whatsoever, upon receiving suitable fare."

That, sir, is and always has been the law. It is crystallized with time. It is the law of the ages. But here it is contended that the corporation alone has the right to fix the compensation and to regulate the freights and fares. If there is any law for that; if there is any book so crude as to maintain such a proposition, I would be much obliged to any gentleman if he would produce it. Sir, upon what conditions does the railroad receive its charter? What is it organized for? Gentlemen say it is created for the private stockholders—for their own gain and emolument alone. Such is not the law. I refer to a recent Illinois case, where this matter is briefly stated. It is the case of the Peoria and Rock Island Railway Company vs. The Coal Valley Mining Company, 68 Illinois, 489.

"The primary consideration and principal object in the creation of railroad corporations, and in conferring upon them privileges not enjoyed by private citizens, was the accommodation of the public and the promotion of their interests. It was not merely to aggrandize and enrich stockholders. The benefit to be derived by the stockholders was only incidental to accomplishing the primary object."

That is the rule, sir. It is a mistake to say, and it is a false principle to assert, that these railroad corporations are for the private cupidity of the private stockholder, alone. Sir, I maintain that the right to regulate fares and freights in this State by the Legislature, by legislative authority, is, in the first place, based on contract; that the railroad itself, under the Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-one, agreed and stipulated that the Legislature might prescribe and regulate, might alter, might change the rate as to freights and fares, at pleasure. Let us look then at the history of this thing in California. It is not what the gentleman from Marin—and I am sorry he is not in his seat—said on yesterday; it is not true that the corporate powers of this Act were forced upon the stockholders by the State or by the Federal Government. The truth is, as every one knows, that Mr. Stanford and the other corporators in the Central Pacific Company, inspired the Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-one. It was passed on the twentieth of May. In June they filed their articles of incorporation. They let no grass grow under their feet. They knocked at the door of the next session of the Federal Legislature. They solicited and obtained a grant, on the first of July, of land and money. There was no forcing of them. They were ripe for it and were all too willing to grasp the extended hand of subsidy, of national bounty. Sir, what is that Act? It is said by the President of the Central Pacific Company that it is impossible to form a maximum of freights and fares. Why, this very Act, in the fifty-first section, declares a maximum for freights and fares of ten cents per mile for passengers, and fifteen cents per ton for freight, per mile. But the eleventh subdivision of section seventeen declares the power said roads shall have:

"The corporation shall have power to regulate the time and manner in which passengers and property shall be transported, and the tolls and compensation to be paid therefor, within the limits prescribed by law."

This provision gives to the Legislature the power, and the sole power, whenever they see fit, to control this matter. It was a compact; it is a contract; it is a covenant, by the railroad, and its officers and their minions cannot rail the seal off the bond. It stands there, and will stand there. Nay, more, sir; when they appeared in Washington, they appeared with the articles of incorporation in one hand and the Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-one in the other, and the grant was made to them upon the conditions that the Legislature of California should control the freights and fares precisely as much as though it had been recited in hæc verba in the Act. They were paid for it—richly paid, thrice paid—by the State and Federal Governments and the municipalities. Now, is it not extraordinary that the President of the Central Pacific Company should come and tell us that the Legislature has no power to regulate the freights and fares; that the company alone can accomplish it; that for the Legislature to attempt it is an act of confiscation, a war upon property, and, as its pensioned organs say, "communism." Mr. Chairman, if it is a war upon property, it is a war which they have created; if it is communism, it is their communism; if it is confiscation, it is a confiscation which the incorporators provoked. It is too late for them to come and say that we cannot regulate this matter. It is a degree of effrontery and impudence which would overwhelm any natural person with shame; which would cover him with his own blushes. It is a position which could only come from a person without a soul, and therefore comes from the corporation. And now, sir, in that letter of the President of the Central Pacific Company, which has been so bespattered with praise by his peculiar set—a letter which, beyond a few wise saws and aphorisms which no one disputes, which have no application to the subject in hand—it is a bundle of sophistries from beginning to end. He answers, when asked to comply with his contract to permit the Legislature to regulate freights and fares: "Oh, that is confiscation, that is a war on property;" and he pleads that in bar of his contract. If any such plea, in such a manner, was ever preferred in any Court, or in any tribunal, or any legislative body, before, I would like to see the antiquarian who would produce it.

Now, let us apply this principle to the railroad itself. Suppose some purchaser—for they sell their land on time—suppose the purchaser of one of their odd sections, granted by the United States Government, had given his note and his mortgage for the purchase, and that the Central Pacific Company, happening to need a little of the legal coin of the realm, in convention times or in legislative times, should call on this purchaser to comply with his contract, and he was to say, "Why, that is confiscation; that is communism, to ask me to comply and to pay my mortgage. That is a war on property." Could he not say, as well as Stanford—he would say—"I am the legal owner of that land; the fee is in me; and don't you know, that, according to your letter, the owner is the man to run the thing? The owner is the man to control it; the owner is the man alone that can manage the affair; and therefore I shall not pay." That would be a personal application of Governor Stanford's own argument; and I think he would be apt to turn round to the railroad attorney who indited his epistle, and exclaim with Hamlet to Polonius: "All of which, sir, though I most powerfully and potently believe, yet I held it not honesty to have it thus set down."

Mr. Chairman, what of this clamor about war upon property? Who is to war on property? It was said by the Secretary of the Treasury the other day, in his speech at Toledo, that two thirds of the voters in this country are property holders. Are the people to war on themselves? Are they to war on their own property? There is no danger from the people. The people are to be trusted, so far as property is concerned. They pay the taxes in peace, and they bear the flag of the country in war. Then, it is said that regulation is communism. The railroad organ—for the railroad is in all sorts of business, it runs newspapers, it runs steamboats, it speculates in town lots, and it would establish a Methodist Church South and a Methodist Church North, if they thought it would pay in this materialistic age—the Record-Union, has denounced this report as communism. It is not long since it denounced Jesus Christ as a communist. Only two or three days ago it denounced the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Elevator case as communism. Well, sir, I think, as the committee are classed in company with Jesus Christ and the Supreme Court of the United States, they can survive all these attacks. [Laughter.] Sir, I question no man's religion. The editor has the right to promulgate his own views of religion in his own way, and he is responsible for it only to his God; but when the corporation undertakes to set up a press to assail the religion of the country, and to divert in that direction subsidies which have been given it for a railway, it becomes a question of what lawyers call ultra vires. They are going a little out of the charter. If it is not ultra vires, it is certainly ultra vile.

Yet this cry of confiscation, war on property, and communism, raised by the President of the Central Pacific, is in the mouth of all his lieges. It is a common observation, that when the President of the Central Pacific takes snuff, all his pensioned presses and his retainers, in the Convention and out, sneeze along the whole line.

Sir, I assume again that the Legislature has the right to regulate this matter of freights and fares, for the reason that it stands on higher ground even than the solemn compact with which this corporation received its charter—it stands, sir, on the principle asserted in England and in this country for over two centuries, that the Legislature has the right to regulate the occupation of common carriers; that for all that time legislation has exercised it, and that the power admits of no controversy; and I maintain, furthermore, that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Elevator cases expressly go upon that ground—the principle that the Legislature has the right to regulate the compensation of common carriers, for the reason that wherever their business touches a public interest, it was held in the Elevator cases (and they were not corporations), that the Legislature had the right to regulate their business and prescribe their compensation. And let me say, sir, the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, as given in the opinion of Chief Justice Waite, will stand the test of the scrutiny of time and of human talent; and, although I agree with most of what the learned gentleman said on yesterday evening in commendation of lawyers, I want no greater eulogy of lawyers for their patriotism, their attachment to the liberties of the country, to the rights of the people, than the opinion of Chief Justice Waite. It is an opinion that will hand his name down to posterity with that of Sir Edward Coke, that rough old lawyer of liberty, of Marshall, and of Taney. And now, sir, what is that decision? I will ask the Secretary to read two short paragraphs from it, that it may be seen that I do not seem to misrepresent it.

Mr. THORNTON, Assistant Secretary, read as follows:

"A 'body politic,' as aptly defined in the preamble of the Constitution of Massachusetts, is a social compact, by which the whole people covenants with each citizen, and each citizen with the whole people, that all shall be governed by certain laws for the common good. This does not confer power upon the whole people to control rights which are purely and exclusively private (Thrope vs. the R. and B. Railroad Company, 27 Vt. 143), but it does authorize the establishment of laws requiring each citizen to so conduct himself and so use his own property as not unnecessarily to injure another. This is the very essence of government, and has found expression in the maxim, sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. From this source come the police powers, which, as was said by Chief Justice Taney in the License cases (5 How. 583), 'are nothing more nor less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty. * * * That is to say * * * the power to govern men and things. Under these powers, the government regulates the conduct of its citizens, one toward another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulations become necessary for the public good. In their exercise, it has been customary in England, from time immemorial, and in this country from its first colonization, to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, etc., and in so doing to fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, and articles sold. To this day statutes are to be found in many of the States upon some or all these subjects, and we think it has never yet been successfully contended that such legislation came within any of the constitutional prohibitions against interference with private property. With the fifth amendment in force, Congress, in seventeen hundred and eighty, conferred power upon the City of Washington to regulate * * * the rates of wharfage at private wharves * * * the sweeping of chimneys, and to fix the rates of fees therefor * * * and the weight and quality of bread (3 Statutes, 587, Section 7), and in eighteen hundred and forty-eight, to make all necessary regulations respecting hackney carriages and the rates of fare of the same, and the rates of hauling by cartmen, wagoners, carmen, and draymen, and the rates of commission of auctioneers. (9 Statutes, 224, Section 2.)

"This brings us up to inquire as to the principles upon which this power of regulation rests, in order that we may determine what is within and what without its operative effect. Looking, then, to common law, from whence come the rights which the Constitution protects? We find that when private property is affected with a public interest it ceases to be juris privati only. This was said by Lord Chief Justice Hale, more than two hundred years ago, in his treatise 'De Partibus Maris,' and has been accepted without objection as an essential element in the law of property ever since. Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public, for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use, but so long as he maintains the use he must submit to control. Enough has already been said to show that when private property is devoted to a public use it is subject to public regulation."

Mr. Chairman, it would be presumption in me to attempt to add to the force of that reasoning. It stands boldly out; it has never been and never can be refuted. The law as stated by the Supreme Court, and the reasons given for it by Chief Justice Waite, will never fail, perish, or be destroyed. Then, sir, we place our power to regulate these corporations on two grounds: First, upon the contract which the corporation cannot go behind without dishonor and disgrace; and, second, upon the general law of the subject, as announced by the Supreme Court of the United States; and it is quite idle for the President of the Central Pacific Railroad to come and say in answer to all this, that control is confiscation. But the President of the railroad goes still further. He says there is only one way in which the State can control his corporation, and that is to purchase it—to buy it out; and he intimates that he is open to a bid. It leaked out, sir, nearly a year ago, after the supposed collapse of the Texas Pacific, that the Central Pacific would push for the Mississippi, and it also became apparent that if the Southern road was completed below the snow line at the distance from the Atlantic to the Pacific of only fifteen hundred miles, that the Central Pacific as a trans-continental road would become a useless elephant in the hands of the present corporation. It is now said that the railway managers are pushing for New Orleans. It is known that they have now on the bar, twenty-three feet of water at the mouth of the Mississippi, and the engineers confidently expect to obtain thirty; and when that is done, the great trans-Atlantic transportation, as a matter of expedition, as a matter of cheapness, will give the southern road, by whomsoever owned, the trade and commerce. I trust the State will never purchase this useless elephant, if it becomes so by the construction of this southern road. It should be content, I think, that they shall keep their elephant; that they should feed him, and travel him, and show him, according to their own pleasure—the State of California having the power to regulate the price of the show. [Laughter.] It has been more than surmised that, after the owners of the Central Pacific have extended their road, the Southern Pacific, to the Mississippi, they will abandon the northern road to the General Government in payment of their bonds and interest due. The Mississippi has been well termed a great inland sea. If the depth of water on the bar anticipated is attained, first-class ocean steamers loaded with merchandise can ascend as high as Memphis, and return with cargoes of cotton and Western produce. It is easy to see that such a result will revolutionize the commerce of half the continent. The managers of the Central Pacific exhibit sagacity in preparing for that result. The result of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is that whenever a use so affects the public interest and the public business that the public becomes interested in it, then the Legislature has the right to control the use. Now, sir, I will read from the book which the gentleman (Mr. Edgerton), referred to on last evening—Part two of the Internal Commerce, the chief, Nimmo, of that division of the bureau, who discusses the whole question of railways and freights and fares, and discusses it with affluence of learning which has never been bestowed upon it by any one else, and he gives the amount of the internal commerce of the country. It never has been doubted that Congress, by legislation, had the right to control our foreign commerce, and yet the internal commerce is sixteen times larger—and it is denied that we can control our own internal commerce. Sir, I dispose of that sophistry by reading this:

"The value of the commodities embraced in our foreign commerce, and the estimated value of commodities transported on railroads, are as follows:

Value of imports and exports (foreign commerce)	$1,121,634,227
Estimated value of commodities transported on rail (internal commerce)	18,000,000,000

"It appears from these estimates that the value of the railroads of the country is about twenty-three times the value of the shipping engaged in our foreign trade, and that the value of our internal commerce or railroads is about sixteen times the value of our foreign commerce," and yet gentlemen tell us that this vast internal commerce, this vast necessity, this great absorbing and overwhelming interest of the country, is beyond the reach of legislation.

It is said by the Railroad Commission of California, and by Mr. Adams, and by everybody acquainted with the subject, that the railway is a practical monopoly. It is a practical monopoly because it runs off, wherever established, all other means of transportation. It is under the control of a few men; on the Atlantic side of some four, on this side at most, I believe, of some six, and those men have a right, or at all events they exercise the power by controlling the price of transportation, they exercise the power of fixing the price of agriculture, labor, and, incidentally, the price of land and the price of farms, the profits of all industrial and commercial business. It was said in the Fortnightly Review, a couple of years ago, that whether the manufacturer or other producer can market at a particular place depends upon the rates of charges of the railroad. I will ask the Secretary to be kind enough to read a paragraph that I have marked, from the pen of Mr. Grosvenor, a distinguished railroad man, published in eighteen hundred and seventy-three:

"Three men meet in a room in New York. They are not called kings, wear no crowns, and bear no scepters. They merely represent trunk lines of railway from the Mississippi to New York. Other points settled, one says, 'As to the grain rate; shall we make it fifty from Chicago?' 'Agreed; crops are heavy, and we shall have enough to do.'

"Business finished, the three enjoy sundry bottles of good wine. The daily papers presently announce that 'the trunk lines have agreed upon a schedule of rates for freight, which is, in effect, a trifling increase; on grain, from forty-five to fifty cents from Chicago to New York, with rates to other points in the usual proportion.' The conversation was insignificant, the increase 'trifling.' But to the farmers of the Northwest, it means that the will of three men has taken over thirty millions from the cash value of their products for that year, and five hundred millions from the actual value of their farms. The conversation is imaginary, but the startling facts upon which it is based are terribly real, as Western farmers have learned. The few men who control the great railway lines have it in their power to strip Western agriculture of all its earnings—not after the manner of ancient highwaymen, by high-handed defiance of society and law, the rush of swift steeds, the clash of steel, and the stern 'stand and deliver!' The bandits of modern civilization, who enrich themselves by the plunder of others, come with chests full of charters; Judges are their friends, if not their tools; and they wield no weapon more alarming than the little pencil with which they calculate differences of rate, apparently so insignificant that public opinion wonders why the farmer should complain about such trifles.

"An increase of five cents per one hundred pounds in the cost of transportation from Western States to New York or other Eastern markets, is equivalent to three cents a bushel on wheat, two cents and eight tenths on rye and corn, one cent and six tenths a bushel on oats, and (allowing for convenience, forty-nine pounds to the bushel of barley and buckwheat, laws of different States varying widely) two cents and four tenths to the bushel of barley or buckwheat. At these rates, supposing the change in rates to affect the whole crop of all the Northwestern States alike, the loss in value to the farmer upon the crop of eighteen hundred and seventy-one, as given in the latest agricultural report, may be thus stated:

	Quantity Produced.	Loss in Value.
Wheat	149,600,000 bushels	$4,488,000
Corn	690,900,000 bushels	19,345,000
Hay	10,915,000 tons	10,915,000
Oats	153,789,000 bushels	2,460,000
Rye	6,625,000 bushels	185,000
Barley	10,019,000 bushels	245,000
Buckwheat	1,694,000 bushels	41,000
Total		$37,679,000

"This loss of over thirty-seven million dollars in the selling price of the products of forty-four million three hundred and seventy-five thousand one hundred acres cultivated, is about eighty-four cents an acre. It is a loss, not of valuation, but of the yearly income or profit upon which valuation is based. The actual value of land for farming purposes is that sum upon which the net profit of the yearly crop will yield a fair interest. At seven per cent interest, whatever reduces the net profits seventy cents per acre, reduces the actual value of the land ten dollars per acre. Hence the loss of thirty-seven million six hundred and seventy-nine thousand dollars, in the yearly income from certain lands, is equivalent to a loss of five hundred and thirty-eight million two hundred and seventy-one thousand dollars in their actual value. Such is the result of a 'trifling' change of five cents per cental in rates of freight!"

From these facts, we learn what is the condition of the farmers in this country. We see that they cannot, when transportation is at such a figure is at present, send their produce with any profit to market; and if the five cents per bushel increase in grain produces that result in the West, what must it effect here, where it is changed and increased, from time to time, twenty-five, and, in some instances, even fifty per cent. I shall also ask the Secretary to read from the recent report of the United States Senate Committee of the Forty-first Congress, a single paragragh:

"In the matter of taxation, there are to-day four men, representing the four great trunk lines between Chicago and New York, who possess, and who not unfrequently exercise, powers which the Congress of the United States would not venture to assert. They may at any time, and for any reason satisfactory to themselves, by a single stroke of the pen, reduce the value of property in this country by hundreds of millions of dollars. An additional charge of five cents per bushel on the transportation of cereals would have been equivalent to a tax of forty-five millions of dollars on the crop of eighteen hundred and seventy-three. No Congress would dare exercise so vast a power, except upon a necessity of the most imperative nature; and yet these gentlemen exercise it whenever it suits their supreme will and pleasure, without explanation or apology. With the rapid and inevitable progress of combination and consolidation, these colossal organizations are daily becoming stronger and more imperious."

Now, gentlemen of the Convention, you observe the power, aggression, and oppressions of these corporations, and can it be said that we have no control by legislation; that we are powerless to protect the country? I deny the premises and the conclusion. It has no foundation. The proposition is monstrous. Be sure of one thing: the people here in this Convention may be baffled now, as they have been baffled and betrayed for the last six years, but this cause cannot fail. It is the cause of the people; it is the cause of the country; and justice and power are with the millions. This question for the next ten years will dominate all others in this country, and any party that places itself in the route of the people to reform will be shivered like a staff at the fountain; it will be wiped out and will pass into oblivion. For my part, I have been a tolerably strict party man. I was reared in the school of Jefferson; I have voted for every Democratic nominee for President from the reëlection of General Jackson to the nomination, and I like to have said the election—though I would not have got far wrong if I had—of Mr. Tilden; but I would not hesitate to trample down all party allegiance in the cause of this party of reform. The time has come when the running of party conventions of both political parties by these corporations must cease. For one I shall vote for no Democratic railroad man. I do not acknowledge the democracy of any such white blackbird.

Heretofore, the managers of the railroad have controlled the political organization and conventions of both parties. On each ticket were their own instruments, and it was immaterial to them which succeeded. A writer in the North American Review, two or three years since, declared the railway no longer purchased the votes of Senators in detail, but furnished funds to elect their man, and had title to him and all his votes for his term. Of late the Central Pacific has fallen in with that policy; elects their man, and sends him to Washington with a collar around his neck, on which is inscribed in golden letters "Central Pacific," so that if he is lost or strays he may be recaptured and returned to his lawful owners. I trust that in this Convention we shall inaugurate measures of reform which will put an end to this national infamy and disgrace.

There are suggested two means of control, two remedies for this evil. One is to leave it absolutely to the Legislature; the other is to take it out of legislative control and place it in the hands of a Commission. The latter is the course which the committee has recommended. I shall indulge in no reflections upon the Legislature. I have not seen it more than once or twice for the last ten years. I only know it from public report and public disgust, and thus judging it, I say it is an unfit place, morally, for the repository of this power. It is objected, sir, that we have no right to delegate this function to a Commission. I so understood the learned gentleman from Marin, yesterday—that it is giving to one body legislative, judicial, and executive power. Well, sir, suppose it is. Have we not the right in this Convention to do so? Is there anything over us but the Constitution of the United States and natural justice? And does that impede us? Everybody knows that the Constitution of the United States has no application to this subject. But it is not true that any sound objection can be interposed to it on the ground that the Commission would possess legislative, executive, and judicial functions. There is nothing in that objection. It has been decided not only by the Supreme Court of this State, but by the Supreme Courts of various other States, that the delegation of powers like these is perfectly regular and constitutional. It was decided in this State, first, in construing the powers of the Boards of Supervisors, not a constitutional body, but a mere creature of the statute, and the Courts held there was no objection to it; that it exercises legislative, judicial, and executive powers, and in a more recent case, the Court has discussed the principle more at large, going over the decisions of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois and other Courts, in which they hold that to delegate powers like these is perfectly regular and consistent with republican government, and free from any objection of any character. I refer to the decision in the case of the Savings and Loan Society vs. Austin, 46 Cal., and that case, so far as this principle is concerned, is unreversed, is unqualified, is unaffected by any other decision. I will ask the Secretary to read for me a couple of short paragraphs:

"That the Legislature cannot, in a general sense, delegate its legislative authority—its power to enact laws—is a proposition which, at this day, no one will question or deny. But, whilst the proposition is undoubtedly true in its more general sense, it cannot be maintained in its most restricted sense. As was observed by Mr. Justice Caton, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of Illinois, in the People vs. Reynolds, 5 Gilman, 12: 'We may well admit that the Legislature cannot delegate its general legislative authority; still it may authorize many things to be done by others which it might properly do itself. All power possessed by the Legislature is delegated to it by the people, and yet few will be found to insist that whatever a Legislature may do, it shall do, or else it shall go undone. To establish such a principle in a large State would be almost to destroy the government. The Legislature may grant ferry privileges, or it may lay out roads, and specify their metes and bounds; and yet who will deny that it may delegate this power to others, either by general or special laws? So, also, it may pass all the laws requisite for the government of a particular city, or township, or school district, and who will doubt the propriety of its authorizing this to be done by the people within limits of the city, town, or district, by their local representatives, or even directly? This is making laws, and laws, too, of as binding efficacy as if passed directly by the Legislature. They are dependent upon the Legislature for their vitality and force through the act of incorporation or law under and by virtue of which they are made. Necessarily, regarding many things, especially affecting local or individual interests, the Legislature may either act mediately or immediately. We see, then, that while the Legislature may not divest itself of its proper functions, or delegate its general legislative authority, it may still authorize others to do those things which it might properly, yet cannot understandingly or advantageously, do itself. Without this power, legislation would become oppressive and yet imbecile. Local laws almost universally call into action, to a greater or less extent, the agency and discretion either of the people or of individuals, to accomplish in detail what is authorized or required in general terms. The object to be accomplished, or the thing permitted, may be specified, and the rest left to the agency of others, with better opportunities of accomplishing the object or doing the thing understandingly.'"

These decisions, sir, dispose of that objection if it ever amounted to the dignity of an objection, that the Legislature cannot delegate these powers to a Commission. It is settled by a weight of judicial authority which admits of no controversy, and I shall pursue that subject no further.

And then, sir, it is alleged that the regulation of railroads by Commissions has been a failure. I deny it, sir. I will prove by the book to which the gentleman, Mr. Edgerton, referred, that, so far from being a failure, if it has not operated precisely as it was intended in all cases, that on the whole, it has been a success and has led to salutary reforms. I refer to page one hundred and seventy-three of Mr. Nimmo's report, which states:

"It is undoubtedly true that some of the expedients adopted for the regulation of railroads have been ill-advised, and in the face of economic principles, but the effect of such regulations is believed to have been, on the whole, salutary. * * * The moral effect of public vigilance alone exerts a wholesome influence. The very crudity of some of the remedial measures adopted has, perhaps, led to the more speedy correction of abuses, and to the diffusion of useful knowledge in regard to the circumstances which environ the railroad problem. Although the regulations and restraints which have been adopted may have subsequently been set aside, yet they have had their desired effect, and the people have been brought to a better understanding of the relations of the railroad to the State and to the commerce of the country. Thus many erroneous impressions in regard to supposed acts of injustice on the part of railroad companies have been corrected. The railroad companies have also been led to a knowledge of their responsibilities and duties to the public, and to realize the limits of their power. As reformatory measures, acts of Legislatures have in a great measure effected the purpose for which they were enacted, although not always in the way intended. * * * It is now quite generally conceded that laws for regulating rates, are useful mainly for the prevention of exorbitant charges and unjust discriminatiens when the effective competition of rival lines does not exist, and for the correction of other abuses."

Let us glance at one consideration here; we have no competing rival lines, we have narrow valleys, we can have no competition; the company that first gets position holds it against the whole world for an age—a monopoly. But yet it is said that we cannot regulate it. I refer to the case of Illinois to which the gentleman has referred, page one hundred and eighty, Report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics:

"In May, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, another law was passed prescribing what should be prima facie evidence of extortion and unjust discrimination, the burden of proof being thrown upon the railroad company. Under this law the Railroad Commissioners are required to prepare certain schedules of rates which shall be deemed reasonable until overruled in specific cases by a jury. The workings of the new law have not been in all respects satisfactory to the people of the State, although it is believed, that, on the whole, its operations have been beneficial."

And, in relation to the Wisconsin Act, the "Potter Law," the same authority says:

"A better understanding of the railroad question in the State of Wisconsin has resulted from the experience acquired under the Potter law. The information which has been gained has tended to correct many erroneous views, and the disposition manifested by the railroad company to comply with the legitimate demands of the people, with respect to their industrial and commercial interests, has also tended very much to bring about a change in public sentiment."

I understand the same report goes on to the same effect with Ohio and various other States, somewhat too much in detail for me to read, but the report establishes beyond controversy, the report of the head of the internal commerce in the United States, that all these laws, crude as they have been, and which give the regulation of this matter or supervision of it to Commissioners, has proved beneficial, has led to reforms, has corrected railroad abuses.

The gentleman from Marin said, also, that he objected to the mode of election; he thought the railway might elect the Commissioners. Well, sir, Governer Stanford didn't think so. He has written his letter mainly to assail this report so far as it recommends a Commission, and he says it would place the affairs of the road in the hands of a hostile Commission elected by the people. He does not agree with the gentleman from Marin. He has had experience; he has tried the Legislature, and from repeated success, he knows what he can accomplish there, but he does not know what he could do with a Commission of three men elected by the people. Again, in many affairs of government it is safer to trust to the honesty of the people, the honesty of the many, than to the intelligence of the few, and I advocate the many instead of the few, because the many have no interest except the public interest; they have no cupidity to gratify; their interest is the interest of all.

Again, the gentleman objects—and, as my memory serves me, the gentleman from Sacramento followed in that objection—he objects that it is placing the property of this company in the hands of three irresponsible men. Sir, it is an unfounded argument. It would apply just as well to the Supreme Court; that is elected by the people, and yet gentlemen do not hesitate to place their property, their lives, and their fortunes in the hands of seven Judges, elected by the people. It is, therefore, no sound objection to say the Commission is elected by the people; it is no argument to object that it gives great power to three men, because the power is limited, and if abused the country knows who to look to. If abused by the Legislature, the responsibility is so divided that it amounts to nothing. Again, sir, some of the Commissioners, with full experience, in their reports have recommended that this control over railroads should be by Commission. Our Commissioners in their report recommended that there should be a permanent Commission. Even Mr. Adams states that where a Commission existed and the Commissioners stated an abuse to the railroad companies, they were ready and willing to correct it. It is the only body that can, by possibility, have the necessary knowledge. Is there any one in this Convention, is there any one in the Legislature, or any number of Legislatures, who could form a suitable tariff of rates of freights and fares in the time of an ordinary session? It requires time; it requires investigation; it requires, where abuses are alleged, the going upon the ground; it requires the devoting to it of special care. No Legislature, and no part of any Legislature, can have sufficient time and opportunity to effect it. They cannot acquire the knowledge, even if they were sufficiently intelligent, and came with sufficient information. Then, I maintain, sir, that the Commission is the true if not the only remedy, and that those who oppose a Commission oppose any regulation practically, whatever may be their purposes, and that they leave the whole thing where the President of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and his clacqueurs wish it left—in the hands of the Legislature, or rather, in the hands of the corporations, uncontrolled, unadministered, unsupervised.

And now, sir, this brings me to the language of this nineteenth section, and it has been made the subject of strange criticism. I will read the first clause:

"No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State."

Every railroad report in other States that has spoken upon this subject, including Nimmo, denounces as monstrous all discrimination as to persons and places, and that is the whole effect of that section. It prohibits all discrimination as to persons and places, and yet this is subjected to an extraordinary kind of carping criticism, which, I confess, I was unable to understand. The second clause is this:

"Persons and property transported over any railroad, or by any transportation company or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates."

This is a declaration contained in every Constitution that has been formed within the last ten years, that there shall not be charged more for carrying freights or passengers a short distance than a long. It is difficult to see what the gentleman from San Francisco complains of; I don't comprehend from his speech what he understands by it. It is to destroy a thing that occurs here every day; it is to cut off a charge, for instance, more for carrying a passenger from Davisville to San Francisco than from Sacramento to San Francisco—a manifest fraud; and yet the gentleman objects to it. He criticises it verbally; he don't like the commas and the periods; he don't like the grammar or the collocation of the words; and neither he nor Mr. Stanford likes anything about it, because it would save to the people a large sum of the ill-gotten gains of this corporation. The corporation claims—it was so testified by Mr. Tuttle in his testimony before the committee the other day—that the average charge of the Central Pacific Railroad was two cents and one hundred and seventy-seven thousandths of a cent per ton per mile. Now, one of two things is true, and true beyond controversy, that the road is doing what Mr. Nimmo in his report denounces—that is, publishing one rate of charges and charging another—or Mr. Tuttle is mistaken in his statement. I have here in my hand a statement which was handed me, and which is vouched for as coming from one of the largest and most respectable houses in the West, as to the actual charges now made by the Pacific Railway, and by which it appears that for freight to Reno they charge the price of bringing it from wherever it is embarked to Sacramento and back again to Reno, although they never actually carry it to Sacramento or retransfer it to Reno. I will ask the Secretary to read this statement. I will have it read publicly, because, if it is true, it is monstrous, and if it is untrue, the officers of the road ought to have an opportunity to correct it:

Present rates of railroad freight charges on drygoods in cases or bales from New York to Reno Station:

Drygoods in cases from New York to Council Bluffs	$4 08
Drygoods in cases from Council Bluffs to Sacramento	7 96
From Sacramento to Reno	1 14
Total from New York to Reno, per 100 lbs.	$13 18
On bales from New York to Council Bluffs	$3 06½
From Council Bluffs to Sacramento	5 97
Sacramento to Reno	1 19½
Total from New York to Reno, on 100 lbs	$10 23

The above is about double the former rates charged on the above class of goods, and nearly or quite double the present rates charged on many goods which seem to be much more hazardous to transport. In order to secure the above rates, shippers are required to sign a contract releasing the companies from damages from chafing while in transit.

There is the same discrimination and extortion in the charges for fares. More is exacted for passage East from Reno than from San Francisco.

The gentleman objects to the section, because it declares that no more shall be charged for a short distance than a long one, and that a shipper shall be compelled to pay no more for goods landed at an intermediate point than at the final destination.

Another objection has been interposed, which is that this section and the section following (section twenty) furnish no remedy, and the gentleman from Marin says that it does not define what abuses are. I take issue with him. It does define what abuses are; it does, however, say that a discrimination between persons is an abuse; it does say that the charging more for a short distance than the whole is an abuse; that discrimination against places is an abuse; and it says it plainly, and it furnishes a remedy, and a remedy which cannot be mistaken, for it declares that the Commission may fix the penalty, and they may prosecute for its enforcement in the Courts of justice, and there is nothing in all these declamations about no hearing, because in the Courts the railroad could call a jury and put itself upon the country. Nay, more, sir; it is provided that any private party injured may also sue the railroad, and the result would be that if it discriminated between places, managing them unjustly, that if it charged more for a short distance than for a long one on the same line, the party might pay under protest and sue the company for a return of the money and his damages. Therefore it is a misstatement, or a gross misunderstanding of that section, to say that it furnishes no remedy. Nobody knows better than the learned gentleman from Sacramento, that a private party who is injured could pay under protest and bring his action for a return of the money and damages. The objection has also been taken by my learned friend from San Francisco, Judge Hager, that the remedy contained in the Illinois Constitution, of the forfeiture of charter, is left out. There is some force in that objection. I introduced into the committee a proposition preserving that provision. It was not adopted by the committee, because the committee thought, what was true, that if the corporation committed these acts they incurred a forfeiture under the general law for a misuser of their charter, and therefore this specific and exact declaration was not necessary in the Constitution; and that, also, is true, sir. For, if this thing is enacted, if the railroad is guilty of any of these acts here prohibited, it incurs a forfeiture at common law, and the Commissioners or any private individual may institute a proceeding in the Courts, and have a forfeiture declared. It is said—and I will dispose of that here—by Mr. Stanford, that the railroads pay five hundred thousand dollars in taxes, and it is shown by their official documents and reports that, if they were taxed as other people are taxed, on the value of the property, that they would pay annually over three million dollars. But they are not taxed as other people are taxed. In my county, and in others, they elect the Assessor, and in my county the road that cost on the average twenty-five thousand dollars per mile, was assessed at six thousand dollars per mile; and land which they are selling sometimes for ten dollars per acre, which they received in subsidy from the government, they have taxed at less than one dollar per acre. Sir, they fraudulently escape the just burdens of the State; they avoid the law; their influence pervades everywhere; it extends to the halls of Congress, to the State Legislatures, and to the officials of the State; and, in this State, no tribunal except the judiciary, has escaped untainted from their pernicious practices.

Mr. Chairman, the organs of the railroad here have expressed great apprehension that this Convention would not do justice to other corporations or to their abuses. They say the water monopoly is an immense abuse; the land monopoly is a terrific abuse; the gas monopoly is a monstrous fraud. In fact, they are very virtuous when their own ox is not gored, but when they are hit they cry "confiscation" and "communism"—communism in the United States Supreme Court, communism in the Convention, communism in the whole world. I entertain the opinion that the monopolists are the real communists. They are communists, and the worst communists of the country, who endeavor, under the pretended law, to filch from toil its hard-earned rewards, and from the production of the country all the profits of capital. But I doubt very much whether this solicitation of these people on account of the corporations other than their own is entirely patriotic and disinterested; for this reason: not long since one of the magnates of the Central Pacific Company declared to a friend of mine that they had been compelled to make all the fights in the Legislature for the corporations, and that they were getting tired of it, and they wanted these other people, these other companies—the Spring Valley Water Company and the gas people—to put something into the fund of common defense; and I think they are now passing round the black box for a contribution for the fight, instead of any honest effort to get justice done to these other delinquents.

The eloquent gentleman from Sacramento, on last evening, mourned the poor profits of the poor Southern Pacific Railroad; and I see that a writer in the Union this morning is most lachrymose on the same subject. He says that the profits of the Southern Pacific do not pay the expenses and interest on their bonds. Mr. Chairman, nobody knows better than the gentleman from Sacramento that the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific are one thing; that the Southern Pacific is a mere bob to the kite of the Central Pacific; that the same owners, or nearly so, own both practically; and that the Southern Pacific is run under the vaguely extended lease to the Central Pacific. Sir, it is one road from Ogden to the Colorado, and when we look at the profits, we are to look at the nine or ten millions paid to the Central Pacific by this speculation; for, according to the report of the Commissioners of eighteen hundred and seventy-five, it was nine million six hundred thousand dollars. The road south was started specially as a continuation of the Central Pacific to the Mississippi, because the managers of the Central Pacific had wisdom to see that if the southern road, below the snow line, connected with the Mississippi unimpeded, that their road would be valueless; and therefore, as a part of their system, and to head off the Texas Pacific and Tom Scott, and not for the benefit of the people of the southern counties, they run this road to the Colorado.

I see that another thing is stated in the public press, as to the people of Los Angeles—that the railroad managers did not intend to go to Los Angeles, but the people of Los Angeles begged them to run there, and gave them seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars to connect there. But the truth is, the Act of Congress compelled them to extend their road to Los Angeles, and if they had attempted to change their track and gone elsewhere they could have been forced by legal proceedings to go to Los Angeles. But, under the fraudulent pretense that they would construct north of the mountain and into the desert, they operated upon the fears of the people of Los Angeles, and extracted from them this immense subsidy. Sir, their conduct does not bear examination; their record in Los Angeles is a record of abuses, of violated charters, of violated laws, of extortion and false pretenses.

Mr. Chairman, there are several other topics that I wish to touch upon in connection with this subject, but I see that the hour is getting late, and I know that the Convention is anxious to adjourn, and if it is agreeable to the Convention I will give way to a motion that the committee rise.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. MCCALLUM. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at twelve o'clock and thirty-two minutes P. M., the President declared the Convention adjourned until Monday, November twenty-fifth, at two o'clock P. M., in accordance with the resolution adopted on yesterday.

FIFTY-NINTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Monday, November 25th, 1878.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

The roll was called, and members found in attendance as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

One day's leave of absence was granted Messrs. Barbour and Hall.

Mr. Jones was granted three days' leave of absence.

Mr. Graves was granted indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. ROLFE. I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and the same approved.

EVENING SESSIONS—ADJOURNMENT.

MR. CROUCH offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Convention hold sessions on the evenings of Monday and Tuesday, November twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, commencing at seven o'clock; and that this Convention will, on Wednesday, November twenty-seventh, at twelve o'clock M., adjourn until Monday, December second, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, at two o'clock P. M.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I call for a division of the question—first, on the proposition to have evening sessions; and, second, that we adjourn from Wednesday until Monday.

MR. LARKIN. I am in favor of the first proposition, and not the second.

MR. AYERS. While I am fully in favor of the first proposition, I am opposed to an adjournment for that length of time.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the question is not capable of division.

MR. AYERS. Then I shall have to vote against the whole resolution.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: The majority of the members of the Convention cannot get home and stay any length of time in the time specified in the resolution. Those that have railroad connections may go home, and many of the members have just come from home. I think it is time enough to adjourn on Thanksgiving day. So far as I am concerned, I desire to proceed with the work. We may have something else to do for the balance of our lives besides attending the Constitutional Convention.

MR. BROWN. Mr. President: It appears to me that it would be decidedly wrong to adjourn and lose time as wished for in that resolution. Now, it is evident that the people of this State are looking to this body, and they expect this Convention to attend to business carefully, and they know full well—as well as this body knows—that it is almost a matter of impossibility to get through with the business in the proper time. It is very gratifying to see gentlemen anxious to go home and give thanks with their families, and open their hearts large as they ought to be; but it is not necessary. Now, to conclude that we should go to adjourning when there is so much business before this body, it appears to me that it must show itself to every mind as being decidedly improper. That it will make this Convention appear to disadvantage before the people of this State, and they will not approve of it. I hope that the resolution will not be adopted.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I hope that the resolution will be adopted, and I am free to say to this committee, so far as I am concerned, that I am willing to assume the responsibility with my constituents of adjourning over Thanksgiving day. An adjournment merely over that day, without allowing us to go home to our friends, amounts to nothing at all. With many of us it is a time-honored practice to be at home with our families on Thanksgiving day. It is the day of the year. It is made a dies non by the laws of this State. No Courts are held on that day, and when gentlemen get up here and attempt to tell us that our constituents will not approve of our adjourning over Thanksgiving day, I think they mistake the temper of the people of this State. I think I work as many hours as any gentleman on this floor, but I do not believe that the people expect us to work at times when under the laws and under the customs of the country we are expected to adjourn. Now, what will be the result?

MR. LARKIN. I made no objection to adjourning on Thanksgiving day.

MR. ESTEE. Unless we adjourn beyond that day we cannot go home.

MR. HUESTIS. The gentleman must be aware that it is impossible for some of us even to get home on the time allotted in the resolution.

MR. ESTEE. It is true that there are a few members of this Convention who cannot reach home. It is a misfortune. It is to be very much regretted, but let me say that a very large majority of this Convention can reach home, and they want to go home. If you adjourn over for Thanksgiving day, you will adjourn until two o'clock, and you will only have the half day of Friday and a part of Saturday. If you adopt the resolution you will have evening sessions, and the people will be perfectly satisfied with what we do. I sincerely hope that this Convention will adopt the resolution.

MR. WHITE. Mr. President: I trust that the Convention will not adjourn. We can work on Friday and Saturday. I suppose everybody is willing to adjourn Thursday. But if this resolution is adopted the arrangement will be that we will really lose four or five days. I am willing to lose Thanksgiving day, but by this resolution we will lose four days.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. President: I am opposed to the resolution. We have already spent something more than half of the time allotted to us to make a Constitution, and we have performed but very little. We have merely made a beginning; and if it be the intention and the desire of this Convention to perform that function for which they were sent here, it certainly does seem to me that we should proceed with all dispatch. Now, the excuse offered by the gentleman for this adjournment of four or five days is that it is Thanksgiving. Now, Mr. President, we have very little to be thankful for, so far as anything that has been accomplished in this Convention is concerned. I sympathize with gentlemen who desire to go home, but they should have thought of that necessity before they took upon themselves the public trust that they have assumed in this body. I hold them to the bond, at least so far as my vote can go; to the faithful performance of that duty that they have assumed in coming here. I do sincerely hope that in view of the absolute necessity that exists that we shall refuse this adjournment.

MR. BARTON. Mr. President: Over half of the time has been spent, let us say, and it has been said that nothing has been done. I deny the charge. This body has been the hardest worked body, deliberative and legislative in its character, that has ever sat in the State of California. I am in favor of the adoption of the resolution so far as I am concerned. I deny that we make haste by overworking ourselves. There has never been a Legislature, even in the State of California, where during the holidays members did not go home, those that could get to their homes, and enjoy the holidays with their families, and the people never said anything in regard to that. They were perfectly willing that these hard worked men should go home. I shall vote for the resolution, and hope it will be adopted.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: It seems to me that this question of the adjournment is not thoroughly understood. Some of the gentlemen who live at a great distance from the State Capitol do not understand the programme. We who live near by will be able to go to our homes, and we have a programme. First let me say that this State will lose nothing by the adjournment, as during that time, by law, we draw no salary. These gentlemen who live near here are to invite such members of the Convention who live at a distance to go home with them and spend Thanksgiving day with them; eat Thanksgiving day dinners. They will be treated so well that they will not feel like work again until about Monday. Take these matters into consideration, and vote for the resolution.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I feel called upon to oppose this resolution. We must not follow this infamous Legislature that we have here each two years. The thing that has brought the most discredit upon the Legislature is their adjournments for the holidays. When we come to the Legislative Department we propose to change the time of the meeting of the Legislature, so that we can get rid of this infamy. Now here is a proposition that puts this body on the same plane with these infamous Legislatures. We propose to lose just about as much time as these corrupt Legislatures. I think we ought to set a better example, and I am opposed to the resolution.

MR. KLEINE. Mr. President: I move that the professional men be left here to make their speeches.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. President: I wish to call attention to one thing. If we adjourn for one day, Thanksgiving day, the State will lose one day's pay. If we adjourn from Wednesday until Monday, which is over three days, the State will lose nothing whatever. From Wednesday until Monday will be over three days, and the law says that if we adjourn over three days there is no compensation whatever. It is different in this case from the Legislature. They were always paid for the time. On the other side, the members lose nothing, as the time of this adjournment would be put in at the end of the one hundred days, so it is a case where there is no loss on either side. I shall vote for the resolution.

MR. WHITE. Mr. President: I move to amend so as to adjourn until the first Monday in January, because we have got Christmas and other holidays coming.

MR. TULLY. I second the motion.

The amendment was lost.

THE SECRETARY read the resolution.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

MR. LARKIN. I wish to correct the gentleman from Alameda. This Convention held that they were not under a law.

MR. LARKIN. I change my vote from "no" to "aye," for the purpose of giving notice of a motion to reconsider. I now give notice that, on to-morrow, I will move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

MR. GRACE. Does that apply to a night session this evening?

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

TEXT-BOOKS.

Mr. O'Sullivan offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of State Printing be requested to furnish to this Convention an estimate of the cost of composition, paper, and binding of a series of Readers, such as the Pacific Coast Readers, and McGuffey's Series of Readers, the work to be done by the State, under its present system. That he be requested to estimate the cost of the first edition of one thousand, and also the cost of each succeeding thousand.

MR. LARKIN. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 57 ayes to 49 noes.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section eighteen and amendments were under consideration when the committee rose. The gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, has the floor.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD (CONCLUDED).

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: Before I pass to the consideration of what I have to say in relation to the nineteenth and twentieth sections, I propose to allude to a point made by the gentleman from Sacramento, on the eighteenth section of this report. He argues that the eighteenth section is unconstitutional, because it attempts to regulate foreign commerce. I do not agree with that position. There is no attempt in the report to regulate foreign commerce. The whole purpose is to regulate the internal commerce of the State and the rivers and harbors of the State, for which State legislation and State government is entirely competent. I have not time, sir, to analyze the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States; that has been done in a recent work by Mr. Pomeroy, in a very able manner, and which is a book that has commended itself to the approbation of the profession. After giving his close analysis of the cases, he says:

"So far as the decisions of the ultimate tribunal upon constitutional interpretation now stand, the following propositions seem to be established: First, the several States have power to pass laws regulating the internal police of their own territories, which territories include navigable rivers and harbors, as well as unnavigable streams, and the land itself. These police measures are not, in any true sense of the term, regulations of commerce, although they may sometimes have direct reference to shipping, to the condition of harbors, and other instruments by which commerce is carried on, or to the commodities themselves which are the objects of interchange or traffic. They are simply a part of the general system by which each State endeavors to protect the good morals, lives, health, persons, and property of its inhabitants."

The decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States bear him out fully to the effect that the State, through its Legislature, has the right to control its rivers, its harbors, its streams, its internal commerce. It is extraordinary that all the advocates of monopoly on this floor find it necessary to trample down all the rights and powers of the State as they are acknowledged and enforced by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

This pooling of freights and fares, which the report forbids, between railroads and steamers, when only one party does the carrying, for the purposes of enhancing prices and running off competition, is a most flagitious abuse which calls loudly for reform. It exists to a greater or less extent throughout the Union. Mr. Nimmo, in his report, gives the names of more than twenty railways and steamers in the Southern States, who are united in an extended combination for this purpose. The ring formed by the Central Pacific, the Union Pacific, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for this purpose, is well understood by the people of California. It is confessedly an effort to prevent the New York and San Francisco merchants from shipping by the way of Cape Horn. There is a contract between them by which the steamers, as a consideration for allowing the railroad managers to regulate their freights and fares, receives a bonus for every ton of freight and each passenger, which is said to amount to between six hundred thousand and seven hundred thousand dollars a year. Such is the tax which this combination imposes upon the people, production, and commerce of California.

And, now, sir, I proceed to say a word on the pending amendment to this eighteenth section. Mr. Clerk, I will ask you to read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell: "And whenever a railroad corporation shall, for the purpose of competing with any railroad constructed, or in process of construction, lower its rates for transportation of freight from one point to another, it shall not again raise its rates without the consent of governmental authority in which shall be vested the power to regulate fares and freights on railroads, nor shall such other railroad raise its original rates without similar consent."

Now, sir, I have a word to say in regard to what fell from the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, the other day, in relation to this subject. He says, substantially, that this proposition is offered to enable the people of Los Angeles to go back and to maintain the standard of freights and fares that existed formerly. That is quite a mistake. He alleges the people of Los Angeles have asked here for action of that sort. That is equally unfounded. The people of Los Angeles have asked for nothing. My colleague has offered an amendment which covers the whole case, without any particular reference to Los Angeles. It is the case of Sacramento; it is the case of Marysville; it is the case of Santa Cruz; it is the case of Monterey; it is the case of Santa Barbara; it is the case of Ventura; and the case of San Diego. It seems to me that the gentleman is quite gratuitous when he arraigns here the people of Los Angeles as wanting something in this Constitution for their own particular and peculiar benefit. Again, sir, the gentleman treats this subject as though it were a proposition to engraft something in the Constitution which was improper. Not only that, sir, he assumes that the people of Los Angeles are making a false clamor. In other words, he seems to say that the railroad served them right when it refused to obey the law of the country, and afflicted them with the discrimination which the Railroad Commissioners condemn. That it may appear that the Commissioners have condemned it, I shall ask the Secretary to read from their report a single paragraph which I have marked:

"Quite recently, the active competition between the railroad and steamer lines carrying between San Francisco and Los Angeles resulted in an arrangement for pooling and dividing the earnings of the two lines, at rates of freight, etc., to be agreed on. The Southern Pacific Railroad not having been completed to Los Angeles at the time of the passage of the Act of April third, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, and no tariff of freight or fare adopted over it, the railroad rate between the two cities was not affected by that Act, and remained within the control of the company. Merchandise going by sea had, before January first, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, been taken from steamers' decks (by lighters, via Wilmington, and over the wharf at Santa Monica), and delivered at Los Angeles by the railroad company at schedule rate. Since the pooling arrangement, this rate has been increased, on the suggestion that no charge was then made for the lighterage in the one case or wharfage in the other, and that the increase consists of only a reasonable charge for these two independent services. The merchants of Los Angeles regard this enhancement of the price of transportation as a violation of the sixth section of chapter first of the Act, and we are of the opinion that they are right. At all events, the principle is too important to be allowed to rest on the decision of the railroad company alone. We have, therefore, formally requested a return to the former tariff by the company, and if its directors persist in refusing this, shall feel it our duty to institute legal proceedings to enforce it."

Thus, Mr. President, you will see that the Commissioners say that this Act was illegal, and that they have directed proceedings, or would direct proceedings to be instituted to correct this evil; in other words, to recover the penalties imposed by this Act. They did so direct, but, before the suits could be brought, the railroad came here, passed the Hart bill, as everybody knows, and repealed the Act, and, of course, repealed the penalties and dismissed all the suits that accrued under them. The Act briefly was this: "It shall not be lawful for any of said corporations to increase any rates of freight or passage, or to raise the classification of any species of goods, or to change any rule or instruction to employés, in such a manner as to increase the cost of transportation over and above the rates charged in such tariff, or in use on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-six; provided, nevertheless, that any such railroad company may issue excursion tickets at reduced rates, for special trains between certain places and for a fixed time." And the Act denounces heavy penalties, denounces that it is extortion, declares it unlawful discrimination, and makes it a crime, and the gentleman from Marin will allow me to express some astonishment that a member of the bar of his prominence should stand up here and defend crime, and say that when the railroad commits a crime against the people of a particular locality, that it served them right, and they have no reason to complain. It strikes me that it is an extraordinary position for any friend of the railroad and any member of the bar to occupy on this floor. Now, sir, I understand him to justify the railroad in its combination with the steamer for the purpose of running off competition. If that is his position, sir, I disagree with him altogether. I maintain there is no law for such a position; I say, furthermore, that it is a violation of the Act of eighteen hundred and seventy-six. It is not a case of the railroad endeavoring, by a legitimate running of its own cars, and by the competition created by its own cars, to keep down rates or run off an opposition line of steamers, but it is a case of a railroad buying up steamers, a railroad leasing steamers, or of a railroad combining with steamers for the purpose of buying up wharves, fronts on the ocean, for the purpose of monopolizing the ocean and preventing all competition by sea. If such a practice can be indulged in and defended, then the ocean ceases to become a highway of commerce and the highway of nations. I maintain, therefore, that this amendment is necessary, is proper, and that with it we take from the railroad the means of purchasing and owning steamers, and its absolute control of all transportation without competition, and that there can be no competition with the railway whatever; if it is not adopted, and this is the language substantially of the Railroad Commission, and it is the language of experience, for the Commission says there is no competition, and none can be had with the railroad except by the ocean; and this the railroad has assumed, and is assuming sole control, and does control the steamers and transportation of the ocean—takes property on sea and land. It has a practical monopoly of all transportation in California. If we cannot protect ourselves against this abuse—if it is not the purpose of this Convention to arrest this abuse, we had better adjourn sine die, and go home. I read from a case the other day, which I will again refer to. It states a principle of law in relation to this matter which is sound. It decides that a railroad, being organized for the purpose of transportation by rail, has no right to own or lease steamers; has no right to combine with steamers; has no legal right to do any thing but to transport overland by rail. That also is the law, as stated by Mr. Brice in his work on ultra vires, in which he collects the authorities fully, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I will read it:

"Where two separate corporations are created to make railroads, they had no right to unite and conduct their business under one management, nor had they a right to establish a steamboat line to run in connection with the railroads."

There is no doubt that a violation of the above principles is such a willful misuser as works a forfeiture of charter. There are several other English cases to the same effect. Does the learned gentleman from Marin intend to defend this practice by the railroads of this State of buying, of owning, steamers, of monopolizing the ocean, and thrusting all competition whatever away? I take it that he does not, because he told us that he was in favor of controlling railways by reasonable regulation. But what does he conceive to be reasonable regulation in connection with this subject? Does he conceive it to be reasonable for a railway thus to put competition out of the way, and thus to monopolize the rivers and the ocean, and thus to hold society in the iron grasp of one monopoly?

Now, sir, as the railroad is a corporation of our own creation, we have a right at least to put our hands upon the railroad, and say, "You shall not practice this abuse." And it is for that reason that the section is eminently necessary and proper, for the result of that practice is clear. Passage is so kept up on the steamer and on the railroad, by this combination with and the regulation between the two, that the passage is so high on the overland train for overland emigrants that it is very seldom that any laborer has saved up money enough to pay his way to this State. I understand that the passage on the overland train from New York to San Francisco or Sacramento is nearly seventy dollars; between sixty and seventy; while the ocean steamers, over which the President of the Central Pacific Company presides, brings Chinamen laborers here for about twenty dollars, and therefore it is that the Federal Government has subsidized the railroad to employ Chinamen; it has subsidized the steamer to bring them, and by arrangement between the two, it holds fares at such a rate that the Chinamen preoccupy the ground. That may be public policy, that may be right to the laborer, that may be right to commerce; but if it is I mistake justice, and I mistake the sentiment of the people of this State. The gentleman from Sacramento defends discrimination by the railroad; he defends the discrimination against which the nineteenth section is aimed; that is, the discrimination as to persons and places, and he reads from the one hundred and sixty-seventh page of Mr. Nimmo, from the report of the Bureau of Internal Commerce. He read a paragraph, but he omits to read the paragraph which precedes it. I shall read it for him, and he will remember that Algernon Sidney, when he was on his trial, said: "If you begin at one place you may prove atheism by the Bible, because in one place it says, 'there is no God;' but if you read further you will find it says 'the fool in his heart hath said there is no God.'" I will ask the Secretary to read that paragraph:

"The discrimination complained of in the Western States relates chiefly to 'local rates,' which are the proper subjects of inquiry and of relief by State authorities. Already the question has received the earnest attention of the Legislatures, of the Courts of justice, of Railroad Commissioners, and of others whose attention has been called to the subject, from duty, from interest, or from the force of personal inclination. Many unjust discriminations with respect to freight rates have undoubtedly been made ignorantly by managers of railroads, from the fact that they had no knowledge of the cost of performing the various classes of service of the roads intrusted to their care. A few able men in this country have investigated the economy of transport by rail, and other important conditions which necessarily exert an influence in determining freight charges. These men have pursued the subject in a thoroughly scientific manner, and have brought to the task great ability and patient research. It is their opinion that many freight tariffs have been framed by railroad managers in violation of economic and commercial principles. This was especially the case during the first twenty-five or thirty years of the history of railroads."

Now, sir, in every paragraph (and I might read others in which Mr. Nimmo speaks of this discrimination) he condemns, in the most marked terms, discrimination between persons, discrimination between places. And he declares that discrimination between places is of the most mischievous character—is a violation of all law and of all justice. He says: "For several years railroads have discriminated to such an extent against the commercial and industrial enterprises of certain cities in this country, that fears have been entertained of the practical confiscation of hundreds of millions of capital invested in productive enterprises. Such a result is not only to be deprecated, but if possible, to be prevented. If such destruction of values should be brought about, either by the voluntary or involuntary action of railroad managers, a doubt might arise in the public mind as to the security of property in all commercial cities."

And therefore it is that this beneficent thing which this coöperative society—as it is termed by the President, this coöperative society, I believe he calls it—has been and is now discriminating between places in a most unauthorized and unjustifiable manner, according to all notions of right and by the rules of commerce. And yet the gentleman from Sacramento sees something in this to admire. It was suggested the other day, rather than stated, that Congress had something to do with the regulation of these freights and fares on the Central Pacific. It was intimated, I think by the learned Chairman of the Judiciary Committee (Mr. Wilson), though he approached it very gingerly, and rebounded from it with commendable prudence. The fact is, that Congress has nothing to do with the freights and fares of the Pacific Railroad, because it has agreed, in accepting the Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and making a grant of subsidy of land and money to these incorporators on the faith of that Act; it has agreed to the seventeenth section of that Act, which says that the State, and the State alone, shall regulate the freights and fares; and I am informed that the railroad was sharp-sighted enough to see it, and that they introduced a bill into the Legislature to change it; that the bill passed both houses of the Legislature, and was vetoed by Governor Low, on the express grounds that the State had that right and ought to preserve it. All that Congress can do on the subject would be to regulate the national fares connected with the road as to the matter of the transportation of the mails, troops, and military stores, and the telegraph, and there its power ceases; for, in the Act of Congress, which gives to Congress the right to alter or amend or repeal the laws of Congress, that right is confined entirely and exclusively to the subsidy granted under the Act of Congress. Therefore it is that Congress has no power on the subject, but it is exclusively a matter for State regulation. It has no power except that it might, with regard to this State, as it can with regard to every State in the Union, regulate freights and fares as to inter-State commerce. It might pass a law regulating freights and fares, but not in consequence of the Act of Congress of eighteen hundred and sixty-two, but in the exercise of its power under the Federal Constitution, to regulate commerce between the States. That is the whole extent of its power; and I imagine that no lawyer who looks at it seriously will maintain the reverse.

Mr. Chairman, if we do not create a Commission for the regulation of freights and fares, we are bound to deal with what the Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-one declares we may control and may regulate, the maximum of freights and fares. I understand the gentleman from Marin to say that we ought not to regulate freights and fares by a Commission, because, he maintained, that while the people cannot find three honest men in the whole State to elect, that they may easily find an honest tribunal in a Legislature elected by the people. That is his proposition. Three honest men among all the people of the State cannot be found, and yet the Legislature may become a disinterested, an intelligent, and honest power of regulation. It seems to me that that proposition carries upon its face its own refutation, according to his own argument, because he admits that the Legislatures are no better nor worse than the people.

If we come to the regulation of freights and fares here, what is the rule? What ought we to do? What is the first element in freights and fares? It is stated by Mr. Nimmo, in this very able report, at page thirty, he says it is: "First, gradients; second, cost of roads; third, cost of labor and materials; fourth, cost of fuel; fifth, effects of frost and snow; sixth, volume of traffic; seventh, distance; eighth, alignment of road; ninth, distinction as to bulk or package traffic; tenth, regularity of movement; eleventh, nature of commodities, as to their being perishable or fragile; twelfth, speed; thirteenth, quantity transported of one kind; fourteenth, dead weight; fifteenth, maintenance of road; sixteenth, skill in management."

These, he says, are the elements. And now, as to the cost of the road; and the gentleman from Marin makes a statement, with which I concur, that in point of law it makes no difference whether the subsidies were given or not to the road; that if given, it is as much their property as though it had been put in by themselves. I admit that this is so; but another element is this: all the books hold that when we come to estimate a thing for dividends and for profits—that the railroad has no right to anything but fair dividends—the cost of the road is an element to be counted. And when it comes to a question of profits, if this road has been built by gratuities from the Government, as we know it has, to a large extent, with gratuities and subsidies from the Federal Government, with gratuities and subsidies from the State Government, with gratuities and subsidies from municipalities, then it is that we have a right in controlling the profits to look at the cost. I am for appointing a Commission, for giving them time for framing them, time to investigate and visit the localities that complain, and to adjust the rates. And Mr. Adams says, and Mr. Nimmo, substantially the same thing, that wherever it has been done, upon the suggestion of the Commissioners to the railroad that there is an abuse, and that some power will reach for them if they don't correct it, that they have always corrected it. Now, sir, I have already read a letter from one of the largest shippers of the country, which shows what their charges are; and now, sir, let us see what they are in other countries, and in other States, for from that we may approximate at least what would be a fair charge here. It appeared from the letter of a shipper, which I have already referred to, that on some articles of commerce nearly two hundred dollars per ton, through freight, is charged by the Central Pacific. These charges are more than a fair compensation, and result in larger profits than the railroad should receive. The railways have divided large profits, as a general thing, notwithstanding the late commercial revulsion. It is said in a recent issue of the Banker's Magazine, a publication of high authority:

"If railroads built with greenbacks worth only fifty per cent. in coin, are now worth fifty per cent. of their greenback cost, they are worth precisely what they cost. On the whole, admitting that the direct profits of railroads to their owners are less conspicuously clear than their effects in advancing the general interests of the country, and while admitting, also, that these profits have been in some instances inequitably divided, and in other cases diverted into unworthy channels, we believe that in the aggregate, and after allowing for all losses, they much exceed the average rate of profits upon their investment."

The great loss of the railways, whenever any has occurred, has arisen mainly from the fact that they have been run in the interest of the managers rather than that of the stockholders. It appears from Poor's Manual, that the very roads which, by reducing the wages of the operatives, produced the great strike of eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, were at that time dividing a profit of about seven per cent. The managers endeavored to compensate themselves for a shrinking of business by a reduction of the wages of the employés. It was right and commendable in the State and Federal Government to put down these riots at all hazards, because the true remedy in this country for all political evils is the ballot box, and not the torch. Still the course of the railways can no more be defended than that of the mobs. What are sources then from which a fair tariff of freights and fares may be derived? A learned engineer in New York, writing for the November Scribner for eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, says:

"Before the war, the cost of movement on leading main lines was about a cent and a third per ton per mile. From eighteen hundred and sixty to eighteen hundred and seventy, it was a cent and a half. In view of the advance of labor and materials, this was practically a reduction. Since that date, the cost has gradually decreased. In eighteen hundred and seventy-five, on the trunk lines, the rate averaged about eight mills, and in eighteen hundred and seventy-six, only six—the Pennsylvania road reporting under six, and the Philadelphia and Erie at five, the New York Central being stated at seven, and the Lake Shore at five and a half. The Baltimore and Ohio furnish no data on this subject. It will be remembered, moreover, that the above applies to the whole tonnage, both through and local, and that the former costs less to move than the latter, being exempt from large terminal expenses—cars not fully loaded, trains not filled up, and other unfavorable conditions that affect the purely local trade. It is the opinion of the managers of the New York Central and Pennsylvania roads that the net cost of through freight will not exceed four mills."

Now, sir, that is the statement of freights and fares as it then existed. It is true that within the last two months they have made another combination and have run them up, it is said by some, fifty per cent. Mr. Grosvenor, writing again on this subject in eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, in the International Review for September, eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, page five hundred and ninety-three, says—it is an article to prove that competition has run down rates too low, and with that I am inclined to agree; he says:

"The average receipts in cents and decimals for all freight per ton per mile during each of the years named, on six roads which moved in eighteen hundred and sixty, and now move, a very large proportion of all freight between the West and the East, have been as follows:

	1860.	1873.	1876.
New York Central	2.06	1.572	1.051
Lake Shore	2 02	1.335	.817
Michigan Central	1.97	1.57	1.03
Erie	1.84	1.453	1.09
Pennsylvania	2.06	1.415	.892
Pittsburgh, Ft. W and C	1.90	1.414	.928
Average of all	1.96	1.490	.968

"These roads, not only on grain, and not only on through freight, but on all freight business done, have reduced their average charges per ton per mile, more than fifty per cent. since eighteen hundred and sixty, and more than one half of that reduction has been made within the past four years. On most of the other important roads the reduction has been fully as great."

Taking the official data for a basis, it is true that the railroads of California are charging two or three times as much as the trunk railroads. Now, it seems to me, that it would not be difficult, certainly, for the Commission to take the data, to see what is the average charge in other States, to see what ought to be the increase here, for there ought to be some increase, to see how much that increase should be, and to form a maximum of freights and fares.

There has been a great deal of eulogy here upon the railroad—of what it has done for the country, of how much it has built it up, of how much it is doing for the commerce of the State, of how much it has benefited San Francisco. That may have been true to some extent, but it is not true as to present operations. On the contrary, it is well known that for the last twelve months the course of that railroad, by its extravagant charges for freight and passage, its unwise conflicts with other transportation companies, has driven immigration from Southern California to Oregon. It is now, by the extravagant freights and fares, driving commerce from California, and, in the place of attracting the whole commerce of the region of Arizona, and especially the northern part of it, which is the richest portion of it in minerals, to San Francisco, by their extravagant charges they have driven it, and are every day driving it from San Francisco. The merchants of San Francisco all know that, and yet they are under such a system of terrorism that they dare not complain. I conversed, just before I left home, with several merchants from Prescott, and they all concurred in the statement that it was in their interests, and they were actually pursuing that course of bringing freight from the East on the Denver road to points on the road nearest to them, and then transporting them by wagon to Prescott, and to other points in Arizona; and if the present policy of the railroad prevails, it will not be twelve months before nine tenths of that trade which belongs legitimately and fairly to San Francisco, will be driven from it. There are two sides to the pretended benefits of this monopoly. It is not a one sided thing at all, and if something is not done to control the freights and fares policy on that road, and done speedily, all the trade of Arizona and of Sonora, and of Chihuahua, which should be done in San Francisco, will go to Chicago and other places. Yet the gentleman from Sacramento says that competition is a bad thing, that consolidation is a beneficent thing, and that discrimination is a wise and good thing.

It is contended by some gentlemen that it is wiser to leave this subject to the Courts than to the Commission. I submit it is too large a question for the Courts, and that they have no time to study the subject sufficiently to control it. An English writer in the Fortnightly, to whom I have already referred, says:

"The power to adjust has been delegated to Courts of law, instead of some tribunal possessing practical acquaintance with the subject. Upon this point the following is the view of Lord Campbell, expressed during a debate in the House of Lords on the Canal and Railway Tariff Act of eighteen hundred and fifty-four: They were to form a just judgment on all matters of complaint relating to railway management that might come before them, and they were to lay down a code of regulations for the government of railways. The Judges, and himself among them, felt themselves incompetent to decide on these matters."

The writer continues: "The question of resorting to law with a great and powerful railway company has been far too formidable a one to be taken in hand by any single individual, and, as a result, grievances and over-charges have been submitted to rather than fight a battle with sides so unequally balanced."

The discussions in Parliament in eighteen hundred and fifty-four led to an alteration of the law in that country, and the creation of a Commission, a special tribunal for the regulation of transportation companies. Section fifteen of the Act of Parliament of eighteen hundred and seventy-three provides: "The Commissioners shall have power to hear and determine any question or dispute which may arise with respect to the terminal charges of any railway company, when such charges have not been fixed by any Act of Parliament, and to decide what is a reasonable sum to be paid to any company for loading and unloading, covering collection, delivery, and other services of a like nature. Any decision of the Commissioners under this section shall be binding on all Courts in all legal pleadings whatever."

The Act further provides: "Where a railway company use, maintain, or work, or are a party to an arrangement for using, maintaining, or working, steam vessels, for the purpose of carrying on a communication between any towns or ports, the provisions of this section shall extend to such steam vessels and to the traffic carried thereby."

"Section 12. Subject to the provisions in the last preceding section contained, the Commissioners shall have full power to decide that any proposed through rate is due and reasonable, notwithstanding that a less amount may be allotted to any forwarding company out of such through rate than the maximum rate such company is entitled to charge, and to allow and apportion such through rate accordingly."

The English experience on the subject, and the present English law, is in favor of a Commission.

I owe an apology to the Convention for detaining it for so long a time. The magnitude of the subject must be my excuse. Gentlemen of the Convention, the country expects, and has a right to look to us for reformation on the subject of railways and transportation companies. Nelson placed at the masthead of his ship, at the battle of Trafalgar, "England expects every man to do his duty." The people of California, on this great and vital question, expects every member of this Convention to do his duty, according to his best judgment and his conscience.

SPEECH OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: In the consideration of this subject, it seems to me, with due deference to the gentlemen who have spoken against the report of the committee, that with all a web of fallacies has been spun around this subject. Corporations have been considered as natural or private persons, and their rights and duties tested in the crucible of private rights and duties. Now, to me, Mr. Chairman, this is simply a fallacy. Corporations stand upon a wholly different footing than that of natural, private persons, and their rights and duties are wholly different. It seems to me proper—as it has been stated here that the regulation of corporations would be equivalent to confiscation, that it would be an interference with the rights of property, that it is contrary to the spirit of our institutions, and contrary to the spirit of the age—to examine briefly into the subject of corporations.

Digitized by Google

First, Mr. Chairman, I will call the attention of the committee to the language of Chief Justice Marshall, in the celebrated Darmouth College cases, in which the Chief Justice, in describing a corporation, uses the following language:

"A corporation is an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law. Being the mere creature of law, it possesses only those properties which the charter of its creation confers upon it, either expressly or as incidental to its very existence."

I call the attention of the committee particularly to the effect of the words of the Chief Justice in saying that it is a mere creature of law. That it possesses only those powers which the charter of its creation confers upon it. And I propose to show what the charter of creation of the existing corporations have conferred upon them in the State of California, and what rights the people have to regulate these existing corporations. It seems to be necessary to do this to meet and controvert the allegation that is flung into our face repeatedly, that we intend to confiscate this property; that we are interfering with the rights of property.

I also call attention to Field upon Corporations, in which he says: "The power to confer corporate franchises and privileges has always been considered as vested in the sovereign authority of the State. It is an act of sovereignty." In section seventeen of the same work the author says: "The public benefit to be derived is the consideration on the part of the State for the creation of private corporations. The motive of the sovereign creating it is supposed to be some good that the public will derive from it. This advantage has been considered sufficient to bring their creation, by the Legislature, within the scope of their general powers to legislate for the public benefit, and it seems now to be universally recognized."

It is the public benefit that is to be derived that is the consideration on the part of the State for the creation of private corporations.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I am very sorry to have to refer to it, but it is very unkind of the gentleman to interrupt these gentlemen in the lobby here who want to converse. His speech gives them a great deal of trouble.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I further call attention to section twenty-eight of Field upon Corporations. This work of Mr. Field is the latest work upon the subject of corporations published in the United States, and it is recognized authority upon the subject. He says in section twenty-eight:

"A charter, or act of incorporation, for private purposes and personal objects, if accepted, becomes a contract between the parties accepting and the State, and an offer of corporate privileges, on one side, must be accepted on the other, in order to give the contract full force and virtue."

In section thirty-one of the same work, he says:

"If a charter is offered, it is only necessary, as a general rule, that it be accepted by a majority of the persons mentioned as corporators. But it must, in all cases, if accepted, be taken unconditionally; and by accepting the privileges conferred, the corporators will be required to perform the conditions imposed by it. Nor can the corporators claim the benefits of the charter unless they perform all the precedent conditions required by it in order to constitute the corporation. These conditions precedent are anything which, by the express provisions of the charter or Act, are required to be performed by the persons claiming the benefit of it, as a preliminary to incorporation, or the foundation for the exercise of the powers and privileges of the grant."

In section thirty-three he says:

"Where persons proceed to incorporate under general statutes enacted for this purpose, the signing of the preliminary articles of association, or the certificate required by the statute, and a compliance generally with the requirements of the law, would undoubtedly be deemed an acceptance of the grant and the conditions of it."

But I propose, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, to show to you that the Central Pacific Railroad Company have, by a writing under the hands of their directors and signed by the President and Secretary of that company, directly accepted the provisions of the Constitution of this State and the statutes in force at that time. I call attention to section thirty-one of article four of the Constitution of this State:

"Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act except for municipal purposes. All general laws and special Acts passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time or repealed."

The corporations in this State are therefore formed under general laws, and those laws, by the organic law of the land, are subject to alteration or repeal, and every corporation accepting a corporate charter in this State, accepts it under this constitutional provision, and therefore its charter is subject to alteration or repeal. It is in nowise an unlawful interference. It is in nowise an unjustice on the part of the State if they do alter, repeal, or change the charters of these companies. Because the law in existence at the time the contract is entered into becomes a part of the contract. And every man and every person who is bound by that contract is bound by the law in existence at that time, and has no right to complain.

Mr. Chairman, I hold here a copy of the acceptance of the Act of the Legislature of the State of California by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, filed in the office of the Secretary of State on the twenty-sixth of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-two. I read from that document:

Know all men by these presents: That the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, a corporation duly incorporated under and in pursuance of the laws of the State of California, by filing their articles of association in the office of the Secretary of State, of the said State of California, on the twenty-eighth day of June, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, hereby accepts of the Act of the Legislature of said State, entitled "An Act to provide for the incorporation of railroad companies and the management of the affairs thereof, and other matters relating thereto," approved May twentieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and of all the provisions, terms, stipulations, and conditions thereof, and also of all other Acts amendatory of said Act, passed since said Act, and which are now in force.

In testimony whereof, the Directors of said company have hereunto signed their names, attested by the President and Secretary of said company, and have also affixed hereto the corporate seal of said company, this twenty-sixth day of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-two.

The Act of the Legislature under which the Central Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated, and to which reference is had in the instrument I have just read, contains the following regulation. After stating what powers are conferred upon any company incorporating under this Act, it contains the following regulation: Subdivision eleven, of section seventeen, says that every railroad corporation shall have power "to regulate the force and speed of their locomotives, cars, trains, or other machinery used and employed on their road, and to establish, execute, and enforce all needful and proper rules and regulations, fully and completely, for the management of its business transactions, usual and proper for railroad companies." Leaving the matter with the people—with the Legislature. Leaving the matter to be prescribed by law. This law was in existence at the time that the Central Pacific Railroad Company went into existence. It was in existence at the time every railroad doing business in the State of California to-day went into existence. It has not been altered or modified, to any extent, in the Codes in force to-day. And the people, at all times, retained, in accordance with the constitutional clause that I have read, and in accordance with subdivision eleven of section seventeen of the Act of the Legislature of eighteen hundred and sixty-one, the right to prescribe how trains should be run upon the roads in the State of California, and how much the railroad companies should be entitled to charge for the carriage of freight and passengers. I again call attention to Field on Corporations, in which he speaks of the subject of legislative control:

"SEC. 43. The general principle which allows legislation in these cases, on the ground of the public nature of the property or business in which the person is engaged, would be particularly applicable to common carriers; and especially to that class of them which operates our railroads. Their business is particularly 'affected with a public interest.' Their property is employed in a manner that directly affects the body of the people. The corporate franchise is granted, and extraordinary powers conferred on such corporations, in order that they may the better serve the public in the capacity of common carriers; they are certainly engaged in a public employment which affects the public interest, and are within the reasoning of that class of cases where the right of legislative control and regulation has uniformly been recognized."

I call attention to the opinion of the Attorney-General of Wisconsin, as reported in the Ninth American Law Review, page sixty-three, in which he says:

"The corporations cannot justly complain of this. They have accepted their charters subject to this express reservation, and, having so accepted, they hold them upon the faith of the State only, taking care to deserve its favor or command its justice by the manner in which they exercise the power conferred."

I also call attention to the opinion of the Court in the Wisconsin Granger cases, reported on page seventy of the same volume, in which they decided that the charters of railroad corporations, under the Constitution of Wisconsin, which is a similar one to that which I have read in the Constitution of California.

"That the charters of railroad corporations under the Constitution of Wisconsin may be altered or repealed by the Legislature at any time after their passage. In legal effect, therefore, there was incorporated in all the numerous grants under which the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company now claims its rights of franchise and property in this State, the foregoing condition contained in the Constitution. It became a part, by operation of law, of every contract or mortgage made by the company or by any of its numerous predecessors under which it claims. All share and bondholders took their stock or other securities subject to this paramount condition, and of which they in law had notice. If the corporation, by making a contract or a deed of trust of its property, could clothe its creditors 'with an absolute, unchangeable right, it would enable the corporation by its own act to abrogate one of the provisions of the fundamental law of the State."

It has been argued here, Mr. Chairman, that if we attempt to throw this matter into the hands of the Legislature, or if we attempt to establish a Commission here, that we will be confiscating property; that we will be prejudicing the rights of third parties; of the innocent purchasers of the stocks of the company; of the holders of the mortgage bonds that have been issued; but, as aptly said by the United States Supreme Court and the opinion which I have just read, this constitutional provision and this statute which was in force at the time the company took its charter from the State, was a part of the contract and entered into that contract, and every man that took a mortgage, and every individual that took a bond, and every individual who took a dollar's worth of stock, knew that the mortgage, bond, and stock were subject to the constitutional provision and subject to the law that existed at that time, because that law and that Constitution form a part of the contract, and, therefore, when we say to these men, "We desire to change the laws under which you exist," they say to us that you cannot do it, because it is an injustice, we reply to them that, "It is a part of the contract that you voluntarily entered into." And can a man groan at the bond that he himself signed?

It has been said that we propose to confiscate—that we have no right to regulate. We do not propose to confiscate, and we have the right to regulate. These men, if they had private property, if they had individual property, they saw fit to take that individual and private property and subject it to the regulations of the public. No one compelled any of the railroad magnates of this State to turn their private property into railroad property. But when a man takes his private money, his private property, and places it into a certain institution and into a certain position, then he cannot complain if the law steps in and places regulations upon him. No one asked these men to take their money and build railroads, and when they voluntarily built these railroads they are subject to the laws of this State that control railroads; and they have got nothing to grumble at.

I have heard gentlemen state upon this floor that these corporations were beneficent institutions; that they were charitable institutions, and that they never were created for sordid or selfish purposes. Mr. Chairman, I deny the assertion. And I do say to the gentlemen of this committee, that all these corporations, be they railroad or be they private corporations, were formed by the corporations for the purpose, not of being charitable to the public, not of benefiting the public, but for the purpose of benefiting the individuals that incorporate them; for the purpose of making money; for the purpose of placing money into the pockets of the men that manipulate these concerns. But it has been said that they were not made for this purpose, and that they should not be looked upon as having been created for any private or selfish purpose. The argument seems to me ridiculous in the extreme. Every one knows that they are a money-making enterprise; that these men who incorporated those institutions incorporated them with the express design and for the express purpose of increasing their private fortunes.

Mr. Chairman, without entering into the subject as to where and how much of the corporation property in this State—as to when and how much of the corporation property of this State—came from the State, it would not be difficult, if desired, to establish the fact that not only the authority to associate in corporations, but also the means by which these California corporations have been created, have been called into existence, and have been carried on, came from the State. But, as a gentleman on the other side of the house said, it is not for us, at this late day, to say that it was not proper that this money and these donations should be given to those companies. All I desire to say upon that subject is, it only again proves to us how a child can be ungrateful to its parent, as these corporations have become ungrateful to the people who contributed towards their establishment.

I read from the opinion of Breese, Chief Justice, in the case of Munn vs. The People, decided in the Supreme Court of Illinois. It was argued that it would deprive them of anticipated profits, and that is the argument, and the only argument, that can be used on the other side; what they expect to make by the monopolies of these corporations. The Judge says:

"Anticipated profits are not, and cannot, be held and regarded as property in the ownership or possession of him who owns the article out of which profits are expected to flow. The property is one thing, and remains untouched—the profits are not in esse, and cannot be claimed as property."

We do not desire to confiscate by these provisions, but we desire to regulate, and we merely regulate the property; and the Chief Justice of Illinois, touching upon that subject, says that it is not confiscation of property, because contemplated profits which are not yet in existence cannot be regarded as property. He continues:

"When it is said one is deprived of his property, the understanding is, it has been taken away from him; he is divested of title and possession. This provision in the Bill of Rights has never been so construed by the Courts of any State whose Constitution has such a provision, as to deny to the Legislature the power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the use and enjoyment of property."

I call attention to page ten of the report of the Commissioners of Transportation of this State, commencing at section twenty-two:

"Over the great plains which form the valley of the Mississippi River, a network of railroads is spread, affording various means of transit between any given points, and the whole are in communication with the great seaports by five great trunk lines of railroad, as well as the Erie Canal and the Mississippi River. No combination of so many interests as these can entirely suppress competition, for even if prices be agreed on, it will still exist in the effort of each party to secure the greater share of business by superior facilities, greater dispatch, and the like. Combinations, too, so extensive in their ramifications, break down of their own weight, and are succeeded uniformly by periods of active competition. Local interests and the competition of the seaboard cities for the trade of the great West, conduce, by increasing terminal and shipping facilities, to the same result. Here, our condition is quite different. The great interior valley of the State, extending from the Oregon line to the Tulare Lakes, forms a single geographical feature, communicating with the sea by the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, and by the roads controlled by the Central Pacific Company. The Valleys of Los Angeles, of San José, of Napa, Petaluma, Russian River, etc., have each its separate railroad to the seaport. None of these various lines, by any possibility, compete with the other. No reduction of prices, not even free transportation on one of them, would have any necessary effect in reducing prices on the others. The only competition to which our railroads are subject, is such as may arise on the ocean, or the interior waters of the State, and the railroad companies have become the owners or acquired control of the steamer lines which navigate these. These circumstances, while they increase the difficulties of the question in our State, render all the more necessary a constant and vigilant supervision of the management of the corporations which practically enjoy a monopoly of transportation business of this State.

"Among all civilized nations the construction, supervision, and care of highways has, until the beginning of the present century, been exclusively an affair of government. The extent of civilization of any country has been indicated by the character of its roads. The most striking and characteristic monument of the civilization and power of the Roman Empire, that which distinguished it from that of the Egyptians, Assyrians, and Greeks, was its great system of highways, 'marvels of conception and execution, which are still preserved, and which, even at the present day, traverse all those parts of Europe that acknowledged the sway of the Roman Emperors.' To devolve the construction of public roads upon private corporations is a modern idea, which first found expression in the creation of turnpikes, and afterwards, with the progress of invention, in railroads. The latter were at first designed to be operated as turnpikes are, every one putting on his own conveyance and paying a toll to the owners for the use of the road. Afterwards, from the advantage of a peculiar form of carriage, and more especially from the adoption of steam as a motor, it came about that the owners of the road first supplied the moving power, and presently became themselves the carriers, and, finally, the exclusive carriers over them. Yet the traditional policy of confining the grant of such franchises to corporations (over which, as creations of positive law, the control of the sovereign was complete), illustrates the proposition that they have ever been regarded as public highways, and designed to be kept entirely within the control of the government.

"The power of the State over corporations of its own creation is undoubted, and, for all practical purposes, unlimited; for, having created, it can destroy them; and, having the power to destroy, it may impose, as conditions of their continued existence, such terms as it sees fit. If, therefore, abuses have grown up in the railroad system, it is in the power of the Legislature to reform them; provided any form of enactment capable of expression in general language, any general rule, can be made adequate to the purpose."

Again, I call attention to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Munn vs. The People, upon appeal in that case. This case was a suit brought by Munn and others, to restrain the State from interfering with the regulation of the rates of storage in the warehouses of the plaintiffs. Now these warehouses were private buildings. They were not built under any charter of the State. They were private buildings, built by private capital—entirely a private enterprise—and yet the State of Illinois undertook to regulate this private enterprise not having the relations of the railroad toward the people of that State. As the Supreme Court of the United States held that it was perfectly competent for the State to control the rates to be charged in the warehouses, so the Supreme Court of the United States sustained the decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois. And in sustaining that decision the Chief Justice, in giving the opinion of the Court, made use of the following language:

"It matters not in this case that these plaintiffs in error had built their warehouses and established their business before the regulations complained of were adopted. What they did was from the beginning subject to the power of the body politic to require them to conform to such regulations as might be established by the proper authorities for the common good. They entered upon their business and provided themselves with the means to carry it on subject to this condition. If they did not wish to submit themselves to such interference, they should not have clothed the public with an interest in their concerns."

And that is the secret of the whole matter. If these owners of corporation property do not desire to have it controlled by the public, then, in the words of the Chief Justice, they should not have clothed the public with an interest in their property, which they did. And although it has been claimed that these were new theories; that they were startling theories; that they were theories first advanced and carried beyond anything that has existed heretofore; and as it has been claimed that certain members having seats upon this floor are given to the advancement of startling theories having no foundation, I desire to call attention to section forty-one of Field upon Corporations:

"The learned Chief Justice, in delivering the opinion of the Court in this case, observes: 'Looking, then, to the common law, from whence came the right which the Constitution protects, we find that when private property is affected with a public interest it ceases to be juris privati only.' This was said by Lord Chief Justice Hale more than two hundred years ago, and has been accepted, without objection, as an essential element of the law of property ever since. Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in effect, grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, and to the extent of the interest thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use, but so long as he maintains the use he must submit to the control."

Consequently, this doctrine does not seem to be an innovation. It does not seem to be something that was first brought out in the Constitutional Convention of this State, but, as the authority says, quoting from Chief Justice Hale, who delivered a decision upon this subject, and perhaps numbers of subjects of this nature, over two hundred years ago, he held that when private property was put into certain positions the public had an interest in that property, and had a right to control the property. I call attention to section forty-six of the report of the Railroad Commissioners:

"On the whole, therefore, while we think the public complaint as to existing railroad charges well founded as to some of the roads, we are forced to conclude that a general law classifying merchandise and prescribing rates of freight thereon, is not, at present, a practicable remedy for the evil. It is also to be considered that such a law could not do more than prescribe a maximum rate on each class of freight. Embracing as it must an almost unlimited variety of commodities, it is not within the range of probability that it should fail to operate harshly upon some of the roads or parties affected, unless the maximum were left so high as to be ineffectual as a restraint upon charges. Hence, if enacted, there could be no hope of its permanence. At every succeeding session, the Legislature would be wearied with applications to change the classification of this or that commodity, or to establish new classes of unenumerated ones, or to alter rates. Amendments to the Freight and Fare Act would recur annually in the statute book with the regularity of amendments to the Practice Act."

The Commissioners also say, in section sixty-three:

"Experience has so fully shown the advantages of requiring the business of great corporations, which enjoy practical monopolies, to be done under public inspection, and the vast influence of public opinion on their action, that there is good ground to hope that the mere public disclosure of all the facts bearing on the question, would lead them to meet, by voluntary concessions, the just demands of an enlightened public opinion.

"Before concluding the consideration of rates of freights, the subject of competition calls for some remarks. Without seeking to depreciate the great benefits derived from the construction of railroads, one evil, incident to their construction, which cannot be denied, is their tendency to destroy all other means of communication, especially in a new and sparsely settled country. The almost unlimited capacity of the railroad, its superior speed, safety, and punctuality, give it a natural preference over all other modes of communication for certain purposes. The passengers, to whom time is always important, invariably prefer it, and the stage coach infallibly disappears on its construction. So, also, does the old-fashioned carrier's wagon, which cannot possibly compete with it in price and speed. So far, its operation in displacing previous modes of conveyance is normal, and consequently beneficial to the public. But the greater cheapness of water-borne freights, especially over natural waters, secures a preference to it even over the railroad for many purposes, and this incidently tends to keep down railroad rates. This natural and healthy competition, however, the railroad managers invariably seek to destroy.

"The history of all competing lines of transportation is nearly, if not quite, uniform. It commences with a reduction of prices by the railroad company, responded to in the same way by the other party, and followed up on both sides until rates are reached which resolve the contest into a single question—which party has the longer purse? When that point is reached, the railroad, which, once constructed, is as much a permanent feature in the geography of the country as a river, buys off the opposition line, and prices are raised to a point sufficiently high to indemnify the company for its previous concessions, for which, probably, indemnity has already been found in the augmentation of charges to points not reached by the water line. As the organization of transportation lines by water necessarily calls for the outlay of considerable capital, new parties are little likely to recommence the enterprise after the old line, with established connections and trained employés, has been fairly beaten off the route, and thus the railroad secures an absolute monopoly of the carriage, even between points possessing navigable water routes, and at higher prices than would be charged over the latter. In this way the steamers which formerly navigated the interior waters of the State have passed into the possession or control of railroad companies, and recently the steamers plying on the coast have been compelled, by the low, and evidently losing rates of the Southern Pacific Road, to come into an arrangement to pool their earnings with that road.

"Now, it is no part of the normal functions of a railroad to destroy other means of transportation, or supersede their use, except so far as it is permanently more advantageous or cheaper than they. That in the hands of private owners and under the spur of individual gain it does so, is one of the fruits of the system of committing to private hands that which is a natural function of government.

"Such proceedings as we have adverted to are a public evil. They affect vitally the interests of whole communities, and lead to the decay of flourishing interior towns, and this without permanently cheapening the cost of transportation to producers or benefiting any one, except the owners of the railroad. If legislation can prevent them, they should be prevented.

"It is, however, vain to denounce as illegal the contracts by which they are effected, for evasion of such enactments is easy. We believe it can best be accomplished by laws which will require the management of the railroads to be as permanent in its character as their structure is, and forbid, without the consent of the public authorities, the retraction of any concession once made by them to the public. This rule has the advantage of being just in itself, easily enforced, and in harmony with the rules that govern the management of such enterprise in the hands of enlightened self interest."

MR. NOEL. I would suggest that there is no quorum present, and move a call of the house.

THE CHAIRMAN. It cannot be done. There is a gentleman on the floor.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire to weary the house, and I will simply call attention briefly in review to the fact that there is a constitutional provision; that there is a statute law enacted under that constitutional provision; that these railroad companies all accepted their charters subject to the organic constitutional law, and subject to the statute in force at that time; that the Central Pacific Railroad Company expressly filed an acceptance of the terms of the statute, and agreed to conform to the terms of the statute; that the Courts have uniformly held, even in the absence of any statute of that character, that the people had the right to control enterprises of this character. As to the feasibility and as to the propriety of the control, there can be no doubt. If the members will take the trouble of reading the report of the Transportation Commissioners—and I would state that I am positive that the Transportation Commissioners were in nowise the enemies of the railroad company, and that they represented truly and without exaggeration the condition of this State—they will see that if the Legislature attempts to establish a maximum rate of fares and freight, that it will operate unjustly; that it will be either too high or too low; and that it will be necessary to amend these rates of fares and freight, as established by the Legislature, continually. It seems to me that it will be proper to establish a Commission. The Commission, as it stands now, I think has too much power vested in it; but I understand that it is intended that the section will be modified, and if the section is modified to some extent I certainly propose to vote for it, because in no other way can railroads be justly regulated than through the medium of a Commission which will be in session at all times; a Commission composed of men who can travel over these railroads; who can personally inspect these grievances; who can daily—yea, hourly—change the rates of freight, which the Legislature can never do. As to vesting the power in the hands of three men, I believe that the three men would more faithfully execute and more honestly carry out the will of the people, would be more equitable and honest between the railroads and the people of this State, than what the Legislature possibly can be. I do not desire to throw any reflection upon the Legislature; not at all. But these men come here and they expect to remain but a short time; they desire to conclude their business in as few days as possible, and to go again to their homes. One man comes from the northern part of the State, another from the southern part of the State, and another from the central part of the State, and each one of them has got an axe to grind. Now the man from the north says to the man from the south, we will unite our interests, but you must vote upon the railroad bill in order to do it. And it is a well known fact that many of these local axes have been ground upon the railroad bills as the only means of uniting men, saying: "If you vote for this railroad bill we will vote for your pet hobby that you have brought down from your district." No money need be used in these matters at all, but we know that the Legislature of this State, and that the Legislature of every State in the Union, has been paralyzed and been unable to cope with the great powers of these corporations.

It seems to me that the report of the committee is eminently a just report; that it is a report that should be promptly acted upon, and should be carried through this Convention and become a part of the new Constitution. I believe in the three Commissioners, but I believe that the section should be somewhat modified, and I think that when we reach section twenty it will be modified. But so far as the justice, and so far as the legality of the control is concerned, there can be no manner of doubt, because these men, these individuals composing these companies, entered into a specific contract, and if we control them we are only carrying out our part of the contract, and there is no injustice and there is no confiscation in it at all.

MR. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I desire——

MR. ESTEE. Will the gentleman give way to a motion that the committee rise so that we can take a recess until seven o'clock. The gentleman can then claim the floor.

MR. O'DONNELL. I understand there is a motion to reconsider. I would like to know whether there will be a session to-night, Mr. Chairman. I would like to know the decision in regard to the night session, whether we are to meet here to-night.

THE CHAIRMAN. The committee adopted a resolution to hold the next session of this body at seven o'clock this evening, and when we adjourn it will be to meet at seven o'clock. The notice does not suspend the operation of the resolution.

MR. O'DONNELL. Then, under those circumstances, I will give way until to-night.

MR. NOEL. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention, at four o'clock and forty-five minutes P. M., took a recess until seven o'clock P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at seven o'clock, P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on section eighteen and amendments.

SPEECH OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: It is with a good deal of hesitation that I arise to discuss the questions which are presented here in a general way for our consideration, particularly after having listened to the able arguments that have been presented in this committee, both pro and con. And certainly I cannot hope to present to the committee arguments as scholastic, as fantastic, perhaps, as those to which we have listened; but I desire to say a few words as to the reasons that will govern me, and induce me to vote as I shall upon the propositions which are now before the committee. I must confess I have been both edified and instructed by the arguments presented here. It has been a feast to me in many respects, and in some respects it has exceeded my expectations. In fact, I believe some of the arguments have finished my education in one direction at least. It has been growing on me during my five years residence in this State, that this is the finest land—for railroad purposes—that the sun ever shone on. I have believed that no State could compare with this in the extent of its territory, and in the variety of its products, the climate, in the industry and progress of its people; and I have almost come to believe that there is no place under the sun like this glorious State of California. And, sir, I have been confirmed in that belief, and my education has been finished in that direction, by the very able argument of the gentleman from Marin, Judge Shafter; for he has told us the grand moving cause of all this success. He told us in his speech, yesterday, that railroads had taken the State from a wilderness and made it what it is. And, sir, when we have discovered the prime cause of the success in this State, certainly we can go no further. He says the railroad has made us what we are. Now, sir, I believe the railroad has done much for this State—as it has for every State where it has gone—in the development of our resources. I am also further indebted to the very able speech of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, for he has led me to this conclusion—that hereafter it will be necessary to change the very first proposition in the catechism, and the answer to the first question: "What is the chief end of man?" will be—"to be born in or migrate to this glorious State, to live under the mild and beneficent and equitable government of the Central Pacific Railroad." We must stand at the nod and beck of this modern Jove, and be governed by his direction.

Now, sir, we all recognize the importance of this question. It is a question which not only engages the attention of the very best minds in this State, but it has also engaged the attention of the best minds in other States of this Union, and of other countries, and it has not been mastered yet. But, sir, we have our humble part to perform in endeavoring to arrive at a correct solution of this question, and, sir, we have the experience of other States and other countries to guide us in our action here. At first the railroad corporations were granted all the privileges they asked; and it has been proved that those privileges were such as they could not consistently exercise without restraint. The result has been here, as elsewhere, that those privileges have been used until the interests of the people have been lost sight of, and the interests of the corporation have overpowered all else. They have been granted subsides, not only under the Federal Government, but by States, cities, and counties; and they have been enabled to build their roads by reason of these subsidies. Then they exercised the right of eminent domain, and they have taken private property for their use, often against the will of the owner. But it was done upon the ground that it was for the public good, for only upon that ground could it be taken.

Now, sir, this Convention is called upon to provide a remedy for some of the evils and abuses which we all know to exist in this State. We are asked to restrain the wrongs which these corporations have been perpetrating upon the people of this State, under the guise of law and vested rights. We are peculiarly situated here. The entire carrying trade of this coast is under the control of one corporation. In regard to two of the largest corporations, one belongs to the other—the offspring of the other—while many others are controlled by it, either by lease, or some other process; and there is no question about it that the Southern Pacific Railroad is entirely under the control of the Central Pacific Company, and many of us know by experience that not only are those corporations identical in their control, but that the whole business of the transportation of freight and passengers is under the control of the men who are the directors of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Why, sir, the men who control that corporation also control not only the entire carrying trade by rail, but they also have a controlling interest in all the steamship lines doing business on this coast, and also in the principal line of ocean steamers crossing the Pacific. And, sir, I wish here to call attention to the roads that are under the control of this corporation. The list contains all the standard gauge roads in the State, with the exception of four or five unimportant roads. Then, sir, if I am not incorrect in my statistics, and I do not think I am, they have the main line from San Francisco to Ogden, the Oregon division, the San José branch, Los Angeles and San Diego Railroad, Sacramento and Placerville Railroad, California Pacific and its branches, San Pablo and Tulare Railroad, Los Angeles and Independence Railroad, Visalia Railroad, the Southern Pacific and its branches, and some others. The same corporation also owns the Sacramento and bay steamship line, a line of steamers on the Colorado River, the Oregon steamships, the Pacific Mail steamship line, and the entire express business of this State is under the control of that same corporation. Now, sir, when we realize the fact that all the power concentrated in these corporations is centered in the hands of a few men, and that these very men, by reason of this combination, are able to control the entire carrying trade of this coast, we may well pause and ask ourselves the question whether it is safe to allow these corporations to go on increasing, and eventually absorb every road which joins them, without saying to them, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther; from this time you shall be under restraint and regulation." In my judgment, sir, there is no safety to the State, and no protection to the people, without regulation. They have been allowed to take the property of private individuals for their own use, and that, too, without the consent of the owner. It is true they have paid for it, and having done so it becomes their property. But they have been permitted to exercise the right of eminent domain only upon the theory of the public good—when it is clear that the great mass of the country will be benefited by the taking; and before this power could be invoked in their behalf the Courts found it necessary to declare railroads a kind of public highway. They were considered quasi-public corporations before this right of eminent domain could be invoked in their behalf. And as such public corporations, or public highways, the public have a right to expect and demand at least that they shall not be oppressed by them. They have surrendered their property to them because the public good demanded it. And, sir, when the public good is lost sight of and ignored, it is time for the people to step in and exercise their right over these corporations—the right of regulation and control.

Now, sir, as an illustration of how these roads have grown, the Central Pacific Railroad Company had not capital enough of its own at the time it started to build fifty miles of road. They received aid from the Federal Government and from other sources to build this road, and in eighteen hundred and sixty-nine it was opened to public travel, and since that time, during the nine years that it has been in operation, the company has been able, over and above all expenses, which involves salaries, running expenses, and the interest upon the money invested, they have been enabled to collect from the people, over and above all these expenses, eleven million dollars. Now, sir, when we remember that this immense amount of capital has been further extended, influenced, and controlled, until it has absorbed the entire carrying trade, not only by rail, but of the whole ocean, we are forced to the conclusion that the concentration of this vast amount of capital, together with the influences that they employ, is a power that in the very nature of things must be a standing menace to this State.

Let us see how the managers of this corporation have been able to accumulate this capital which they have used to secure the entire carrying trade of this coast. It is a simple mathematical problem. They take the price of the produce which they are to carry, in the distant market, at its value in the market, as the minuend of the problem, and then estimate the price of the article where it was produced, as the subtrahend, and the remainder is taken for freight. Now there are plenty of instances of this very thing, and here is one: A gentleman living in the southern part of the State had a large amount of barley. He had advices from Yuma that if he would send one hundred tons there he could get two cents a pound, while at the place where it was produced it was only worth one. It took but six hours for the train to go from his place to Fort Yuma. He went to the agent of the company to inquire what it would cost, and he was informed that they would carry it for one dollar per hundred. There is the problem. It was worth two dollars at the market, and one dollar at the place where it was produced. One dollar from two leaves one, the price of carrying it. That is the problem, and that is the reason they are able to accumulate this immense amount of wealth, and secure the entire carrying trade of the country. Now, sir, this is a truth which cannot be successfully contradicted, that this has been and is to-day the policy carried out by the railroad corporations of this State; and they have been able to continue this policy for two reasons—first, because by their management the carrying trade has been monopolized; and second, because the Legislature—the only power known to the State whereby they could be controlled—has failed to regulate them.

It is claimed by many, and by the corporations, that the State has no right to regulate or control them in any way, but that the owners should be entirely at liberty to charge what they please; that the State has no more right to say what they may charge for freights and fares than it has to dictate to the merchant what he shall charge for his goods, or to the manufacturer what he shall charge for his wares. But, sir, there is this essential difference between the two cases: that in the case of the corporation, the people, through their Legislature, have granted it the privilege of doing a carrying business as common carriers, and allowed them to condemn the private property of individuals for their own use, because they believed it to be for the public good, and believed that the people would be benefited by such a course. But, sir, when the public good is not only lost sight of, but the public itself is discriminated against, then, sir, in my opinion, it is time that the State should step in and regulate it.

This doctrine of non-control by reason of vested rights cannot hold in regard to these corporations. I submit that we are driven to this position. If the corporations have the right to continue to commit these great wrongs against the people, then, sir, we come to this: that the people, through their Legislature, have a right to repudiate the privilege granted, and regulate and control them. These corporations exist by reason of the action of the Legislature, and certainly, to deny this right to control would be to say that the creature is higher than its creator. Now, sir, the private individual is compelled to live within certain prescribed limits. A corporation is an aggregation of individuals. And if the people do not possess the right to go beyond these prescribed limits and commit these wrongs against the public, why should a number of individuals, banded together as a corporation, or in partnership, have a right to commit these wrongs; and how can it be said that the Legislature has not the right to control them?

Now, Mr. Chairman, though it has been very aptly said that corporations have no souls, yet they are, in a certain sense, immortal. Men who accumulate large properties die, and the estates are distributed. Partnerships, though the accumulations may grow, are dissolved, and the property is again distributed. But these corporations go on almost forever, though I know they are usually restricted in their first charter to a certain number of years, but their accumulations are accumulations for all time, and the power once in their grasp is never relaxed. There is no remedy for these wrongs but regulation and control. As has been well said in this discussion, competition fails, because the corporations have been able to combine and defeat it. The Courts are powerless, for the reason that corporations are indifferent to individuals when suits are brought by them. The individual may carry his grievance into Court, and the corporation is usually quite indifferent as to the result, for if they lose, they still have the power to fall back upon the people and saddle the loss upon them; and even if the individual wins his case, it is generally after a long and protracted litigation, and he has a barren victory, and is generally ruined. They care nothing for any threatened danger to their charter, and very few individuals care to come within their reach. Now, sir, these privileges have been granted by the people; these corporations are the creatures of the creators, and they must give way. It is not the sovereign people of the State that are to be controlled in the interest of the corporations, but it is the corporations that must be controlled in the interest of the sovereign people.

Now, sir, the question presents itself to us, how shall they be regulated, in what direction, and how far? In the direction, in my opinion, of not allowing them to exercise a dangerous discrimination. It should go far enough to restrain them from extorting rates unnecessarily oppressive, and from discriminating for or against any locality or individual. They should not be allowed to take money from the people without rendering a just compensation, but they should not be restricted to such an extent as to prevent them from doing a legitimate business. I believe corporations should be encouraged so long as they are doing a legitimate business. They are a necessity, and, honestly conducted, a benefit to the State. But when, by reason of the exclusive privileges that have been granted to them, they become oppressive monopolies, absorbing everything that comes within their grasp, then it is time they were regulated. We live in a country that is noted for corporations, and we live in a State that is to-day the home, the abiding place, of the most magnificent monopoly the world has ever seen. The means by which this monopoly has been established, and these extortions have been accomplished, and the manner in which they shall be regulated, are questions for us to take into account, and one must necessarily relate to the other in this question of regulation. The proposition before this committee is, in my opinion, the only means by which we can accomplish the result sought. While I should prefer the proposition changed in some particulars; while I shall, if opportunity offers, endeavor to so amend one or two of its sentences to meet the objections which I think are obvious, yet, in the main, the plan, I believe, to be a correct one. There are but two ways, in my judgment, to accomplish the regulation of corporations. One is by means of the Legislature, and the other by means of a Commission.

Now, sir, the history of legislation in this State upon this question is this—that it has been a broken reed in the hands of a giant. I believe the history of legislation in this State will bear me out in this assertion. The members have struggled manfully with the question until it came to the final vote; but in the end the corporations have always carried their point, and with it many other measures that the State would have been much better off without.

Now, it is claimed by some that we are conferring too much power on this Commission; that we are creating a Board of autocrats that will be beyond the reach of any power within the State, and that this is unsafe. But there are two reasons why these extreme powers should be vested in the Commission. One is, because they would be powerless without them; and the other is, that it has been proven that it is not safe to leave this matter to the Legislature. Three years ago the people had a Commission appointed for this very purpose. They were able, honest, and earnest in the work they did, but they failed, because they had not power enough. And they came to the Legislature with their report, which was full, ample, and complete in most points; but, sir, they had this same complaint of a lack of power to accomplish what the Commission was designed to accomplish. They asked the Legislature to grant them the necessary power. But, sir, when their report came before the Legislature, they were quickly snuffed out of existence. That has been the history of almost every effort that has been made to control these corporations. I believe, sir, that we cannot, in justice to ourselves and to the people of this State, allow this opportunity to pass without taking the necessary steps to control these corporations by a wholesome regulation. The necessities of the case require it, and the people demand it; and if we would be true to the trust confided to us, we cannot ignore this demand. These corporations have had grants of special privileges, entirely in their own hands, which they have exercised to the detriment of the people. They have been allowed to exercise these privileges solely on the ground that the public good required it. But when, by reason of the exercise of those privileges, they commit great wrongs upon the people, they must not be allowed to continue these wrongs under the plea of vested rights and the obligation of a contract, else we shall be met with the anomaly of allowing a corporation to do a wrong, when neither the Legislature nor the people possess such power. These wrongs and oppressions on the part of corporations must be met and dealt with by this Convention. There are but two ways by which it can be accomplished: one is, by and through the Legislature; and the other by means of a Commission. The latter has had a practical trial, and had it not been bound hand and foot by the Legislature, would have afforded us some relief. We shall be recreant to the trust imposed upon us, if we do not deal with this subject with a firm hand.

MR. CAMPBELL. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

REPORT—WATER AND WATER RIGHTS.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco, made the following report:

To the honorable President of the Convention:

A minority of your Committee on Water and Water Rights beg leave to report the following sections to be inserted in the new Constitution, recognizing that the right of water does not depend on the ownership of land, and as a natural element for the use of man, I question the right of the Legislature or of Congress, if such has been the case, to grant away that which belongs to the people.

SECTION 1. All lakes, except artificial reservoirs, shall be declared public property. All running water shall be declared public property, subject only to the control of the State.

SEC. 2. Three Water Commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State, at the gubernatorial elections, and whose salary shall be fixed by law, and whose term of office shall be four years. They shall be qualified electors of this State, and shall not be interested in any water company as stockholder creditor, agent, attorney, or employer, and the act of a majority of said Commissioners shall be deemed the act of said Commission. Said Commissioners shall have the sole power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for water, from what sources water shall be taken by such companies, report to the Legislature when in session their proceedings, and such other facts as may be deemed important.

H. W. SMITH.

THE PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table, and be printed with the report of the Committee on Water and Water Rights.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON MINING.

MR. PULLIAM made the following report from the Committee on Mining:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Mining respectfully reports that it has carefully considered propositions numbers ninety-one, three hundred and forty-five, and three hundred and fifty, and herewith return the same, and recommend that no further action be taken on them.

M. R. C. PULLIAM, for the Committee.

Laid on the table.

THANKSGIVING ADJOURNMENT.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the resolution by which this Convention agreed to adjourn to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, be reconsidered. I make this motion now, in order that it may be disposed of, so that we will know.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I am really glad that the gentleman from San Francisco takes it upon himself to act as my prompter, but I think he will succeed better in some other line. That motion, as a matter of courtesy, I was entitled to make. If the gentleman has any ulterior object, I propose to give him full opportunity to explain it. I gave that notice in good faith. Not that I am opposed to the people being thankful; not that I am opposed to the institution. I believe in it. That institution has no reference to a day; it was to an event. The people of New England celebrated Thanksgiving day not on the twenty-eighth of November, but on any day. It was a harvest feast; a time that they returned thanks to their God.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: I call the gentleman to order. He is speaking on a subject not germane to the matter under discussion. I do not know that the Supreme Ruler of the universe has anything to do with the adjournment.

MR. LARKIN. I don't think he has. But I am not certain but that some god has arisen that these men are worshiping who desire this adjournment. It may be, and I state here that we have spent one third of the time in delays and adjournments. I believe that these men are sincere in this motion. Many men are sincere in opposition to a Constitutional Convention, and men that voted against a Constitutional Convention. Men come here who represent the men who voted against a Constitutional Convention. They are satisfied with the old one. With all its evils, they prefer it to any Constitution this Convention may make. I have heard it said that they would go from this Convention and oppose any Constitution made here. These adjournments and delays have been perfectly in order. They are appreciated. So it is that one third of the time of this Convention has been taken up with unnecessary speeches and motions that tended to hinder the work of this Convention, if possible, and carry it over beyond the time to which this appropriation will extend. Then the people will demand an adjournment, leaving us with a Constitution partly made, and the people of the State disgusted with our action. A portion of the press has denounced this Convention and misrepresented us—actually misrepresented us before the people—and whatever Constitution is made by this Convention, be it as perfect as is possible, will be opposed by that element of the people of this State; and they are represented on this floor. These men who are satisfied with the present corporation laws of this State will oppose any new Constitution. These men who are satisfied with the present system of taxation, by which they escape their just share of the burdens of government, will oppose this Constitution; and some of them will seek that way to accomplish their purpose. I say that the bare majority that called this Convention, called it in the interests of the people, and not in the interest of these destructionists. Wait until we have gathered our harvest—a harvest to the people of this State, of equal taxation, of limited corporations—then we can hold a thanksgiving, and such a one as has never been held in California; not until then. Wait until the people have gathered that harvest—a harvest that was sown by the good will of the people—then we are ready to adjourn!

MR. BARNES. A-a-men. [Laughter.]

MR. LARKIN. On this question I call for the ayes and noes.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I did not interfere, or intend to interfere with any of the duties that devolve upon the gentleman from El Dorado, in this Convention. I did not suppose that I would effect anything great by making this motion. If I moved to go into Committee of the Whole I knew that he would have no opportunity to press the motion, and knowing that the notice had been given, I thought it was no more than just and fair that it should be decided this morning before going into Committee of the Whole. As to any insinuations that the gentleman may express, I do not wish to respond to them, or make any remarks about them; but I will say this, and I appeal to the Convention to verify my statement, that the gentleman from El Dorado has taken up more time on the floor of this house in calling for the ayes and noes on different questions, in order to make a record, than any five gentlemen on the floor of this house.

MR. HALE. Mr. President: I desire to say one word. I trust that the vote to reconsider will prevail, and that upon the final vote the resolution will be rejected. So far as I am individually concerned, it will not inconvenience me materially. I reside only thirty-six miles from this Capital. I can go home. I can spend the time very pleasantly with my family and friends, and I enjoy a Thanksgiving dinner as well as most of you, and I heartily sympathize with those gentlemen here who are anxious to return home for that purpose. But I submit two considerations. One is, we propose to adjourn over from Wednesday noon until Monday. The result will be that it will be a discontinuance of the period of the Convention, so that those who are forced to remain not only will be unable to attend to any of the business which called them here, but they will not even be permitted to receive any compensation for the time they stay here. It is true that there are many gentlemen who could return home and doubtless enjoy a very pleasant time. But I think, sir, it is decidedly an unfair thing to those who cannot go, who are residents so far from this Capital that they cannot go, and enjoy this Thanksgiving day, to require them to make this sacrifice. I think it is not fair to them. Besides, sir, I believe it will be found that we are all of us very anxious to make a final completion of the work of this Convention. We know the difficulties that surround us here. We know that there is a large amount of our work not accomplished. We know too that there will be much hardship upon members because the compensation which has been provided by law will soon be exhausted. I think it is not fair that we should fritter away our time. I think we can in no manner show our thankfulness more effectually, more sincerely, more rationally, than by sitting here in our places on that day as well as the days of this week, and attend to our duty. They say this is a non-judicial day, but that is no reason why we cannot sit in this Convention on that day as well as any other day of the session. For myself I think it will be found true that those who are in private business wish to conclude their labors here. It is important that we should conclude. We do not want to do things halfway. Let us stay here and work in this Convention until we get through—whether it is one week, or four weeks, or six weeks, at our own expense. We have been sent here by the people to perform a duty, and I think every member on this floor will see the performance of it accomplished. I trust that this motion to reconsider this vote will prevail, and that we shall come to the conclusion to stay here and perform our duties, Thanksgiving day or no Thanksgiving day, until we have completed the work for which we came here.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. President: I am opposed to this adjournment. This is a work that only comes once in a quarter of a century. We have now passed through nearly two thirds of the time allotted to us by law, and we have not one quarter of the work accomplished. Now it is proposed to adjourn and have a little play. A few members in their minds hoping to put into their stomachs good dinners want to draw the balance of the members from this Convention. I think it is unfair. I think it looks too much like child's play on an extraordinary occasion. Now, when the members of the bar have any extraordinary work on hand they work at it night and day until it is finished; when the farmer has a press of work he works out in the rain and hail until it is done; and now that we have got much more perhaps than we can do in the time left to us, I say that we should sit here and do it. Wait until Christmas and New Years come on. I propose to stay here on Thanksgiving day at least, and if we have to adjourn on Christmas and New Years, let us leave our play until that time.

MR. McCONNELL. Mr. President: I am in favor of not rescinding the resolution.

MR. BARNES. Mr. President: In accordance with a time-honored custom as old as Plymouth Rock, the Governor of this State has issued a proclamation calling upon all people to refrain from their usual occupations and spend some hour of the day in suitable religious exercises, and the balance of it in social pleasure. We may not all meet him on the first, but we can meet him on the other. We can lay aside our usual vocations, as I think we ought to do. It would be a most remarkable spectacle to see this body in session on that day. The gentleman from Kern says this is an extraordinary occasion. It would be most extraordinary of this Convention, at a time when all the rest of the people of the State had suspended their usual vocations, when your stores are closed, commerce is suspended, and business, for the hour, all over the country, from one end to the other, is paralyzed, should sit here and go on with the business it has in hand. For one, I hope that no such idea as that will be entertained. I believe in these holidays. Thanksgiving day is a dies non, by law, the same as Christmas and New Year, and I would like to see the man who would say that we ought to sit here on Christmas. I would like to see the man who would say that we ought to sit here and work on Sunday. There is just as much reason for it. It seems to me, sir, that there is something else than economy in these speeches on this subject; something behind it. If gentlemen would lay aside those considerations, I think we would get along better with the work. We have got to adjourn over Thanksgiving day! We have got to! The gentleman from Placer to the contrary notwithstanding.

MR. HILBORN. Will he bring out the military to effect that result? [Laughter.]

MR. BARNES. I do not know what that remark was. I could not hear my fat friend from the country, but I have not the slightest doubt, although I did not hear it, from the smirk on his countenance and the titter around him, that he made some allusion to the Military Committee. That seems to be the end and aim of some of the gentlemen on this floor. Whenever there is anything occurs that offers the slightest opportunity, they bring up the military. When the report of that committee is taken up we will see how much there is to laugh at about it. But apart from my warlike character I am in favor of observing Thanksgiving day, and Christmas, and New Years. This day is a dies non, and except with a certain class of people who do not believe in Christian thanksgiving, all business is suspended. So far from the gentlemen losing their pay for all this time, I hold that they will be paid for three of the days. I wish to heaven there was no pay about it, but so far as the pay is concerned I think the gentleman from Placer is in error about that. We can adjourn for any period greater than three days. The law says "the delegates to the Convention shall receive ——

MR. LARKIN. A majority of this Convention has decided that the law has no bearing upon this Convention. I rise to a point of order.

Digitized by Google

MR. BARNES. "The delegates to the Convention shall receive the same per diem and mileage as members of the Legislature; provided, no compensation shall be allowed delegates after the expiration of one hundred days. No pay shall be allowed for any recess longer than three days at one time." We are entitled to pay for Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, and we may lose a day. We have got pay for every Sunday. I am in favor of the adjournment. Some of these gentlemen who have been speaking and who spend all their time here, would do better if they went home—a good deal better. They would see what their constituents think of them. Go home, as we do, and hear what people say, and I think some of them would come back with a large sized flea in their ear. It is awful! awful! [Laughter.] I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

MR. BROWN. Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Convention: This question has assumed considerable magnitude, and we have heard the religious sentiment and patriotism of the members appealed to. The matter of keeping the Thanksgiving day has been spoken of, and that this must be done, and that this shall be done. Now, perhaps this is all right, but when it comes to keeping four or five Thanksgiving days in one week for a Thanksgiving day, it is necessary for the members of this body to take into consideration that the Governor never proclaimed these four or five days. Now, the fact of the matter is, we have a vast amount of work to do, and I am under the impression that the members of this body are well convinced that it is necessary for them to work. They know the sentiments of the people that sent them here. They know what they wish of them. If certain members forget the wishes of those that sent them, that is no reason why all should. The great leading propositions, such as the one now before the house, have been discussed before the people, and they are not so vacillating as some members on this floor. If it is intended to carry these measures out, let us stay and do it. I was inquired of by my constituents, before I was elected, as to whether I would be opposed to this continual adjourning and going to San Francisco, and I told them I would, and consequently I have generally opposed everything of the kind. I will say to the Convention, if you wish to satisfy the will of your constituents, and carry out the great and grand purposes that they have in view, work. Work while there is work to do; complete that work; have your Thanksgiving day, but not days; and when it is all over there will be one of the grandest Thanksgiving days, as my friend from El Dorado has said, that ever delighted the State of California.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: I am in hopes that this resolution will not be reconsidered. The gentlemen all know that Thursday is a holiday by law, and we do not, under any condition, propose to occupy this hall or do any business. Then there are only three sessions left, because we adjourn at twelve o'clock on Saturday. How much economy is there in refusing to adjourn over Friday and Saturday? We agree to have three evening sessions, and that is supposed to make up the difference. I desire to know why these gentlemen proclaim so loudly that the people are watching us. I tell these gentlemen that I am not afraid to go upon the record in favor of this adjournment. I do not care who the gentleman referred to when he said that he wanted the ayes and noes. I am not afraid to go upon the record in favor of adjourning for Thanksgiving day and the balance of the week.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: The gentlemen opposing this adjournment seems to claim, as a point in their favor, the question of economy. I voted in favor of the adjournment, and feel disposed to do so again, on the ground that it will be economical to do so. As I reason the matter, Mr. President, it may be taken for granted that we will adjourn over Thanksgiving day. Adjourning over the day we would until two o'clock Friday. The next day being Saturday, we will not be likely to hold more than half a day's session. For those two parts of days, therefore, during which it is reasonable to suppose there will be not more than two thirds of the members present, we will draw, say for four full days, an expense of between six thousand dollars and seven thousand dollars, and, in reality, we will accomplish comparatively nothing. We may hear a few speeches, but there would be a strong argument against taking a vote on the presence of a thin house. It would be impolitic, and would not be just. Since the question has been raised as to whether we will receive pay, I would like to be satisfied about it. Some claim that we will receive pay. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, claimed that we will receive pay for three days. If we are going to receive our pay whether we adjourn or not, I shall vote against the adjournment. I would put in at least the two small half days for the six thousand dollars.

MR. WELLIN. Whether we adjourn or not, do you think we will go home on Thanksgiving day?

MR. FILCHER. I expect to.

MR. WELLIN. Then give us the same chance.

MR. FILCHER. I would like, if it is possible, either by a ruling of the Chair or otherwise, to have that point settled, otherwise I shall ask to be excused from voting at all.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Are you willing to remain here after the one hundred days?

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: I believe that I am as poor as any man on this floor, but I came here to help make a Constitution and carry out the demands of the people who sent me, and as long as I have a horse to sell, or a newspaper to sell, or anything that I can turn into coin to pay my board, I shall stay here until that work for which we have come is accomplished. It is a matter of supreme indifference to me in that respect, whether we appropriate this money here for the adjournment or not, as I can readily foresee that we will be compelled to remain here on expense after this one hundred days expire. But there is no use of appropriating this money for adjournments and working hereafter for nothing. Yet I insist on the question, it can be conveniently decided, as to whether we draw pay for this time or not. The decision of that question will govern my vote.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. President: That very question is what would induce me to vote for this motion to reconsider. It remains, as it stands, for the President of this Convention to decide it. If the President issues the certificates, of course the per diem will be paid. In my judgment it is not a just thing, receiving compensation and the State receive no services. Now if the President sees proper to give his construction of this statute, and that should be in accordance with that entertained by the gentleman from Placer and myself, that there is no per diem for that five days, I am in favor of the adjournment, and will stand by the resolution, otherwise I propose to vote for this motion to reconsider, with a view to amending the resolution, so as to take the decision from the Chair, and have it read, "provided no certificates of per diem shall issue for the term of the adjournment." I think that ought to be the rule upon which this question should be decided. I cannot offer the amendment now.

MR. GREGG. Mr. President: I move to lay the motion on the table.

MR. BARNES. I made that motion myself.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman was not entitled to the floor when he made it.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: My very courteous friend from San Francisco made this motion, knowing that in the absence of fifteen or twenty persons it was likely to prevail, but I hope that the matter will be disposed of. If these gentlemen propose the common law from this time on, the common law goes. We will see whether the common law is the rule here or not. I call for the ayes and noes.

MR. GRACE. Ayes and noes.

MR. WHITE. Ayes and noes; ayes and noes.

MR. HERRINGTON. Ayes and noes.

MR. EVEY. Ayes and noes.

MR. REYNOLDS. Before the calling of the roll, and in consideration of the remarkable exhibition of piety on the part of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, I move that we sing the Doxology.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman is out of order.

The roll was called, and the motion prevailed by the following vote:

MR. LARKIN (while the roll was being called). I move a call of the Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. It is out of order now, we are taking the ayes and noes.

MR. HUESTIS. I desire now, as one of the delegates who cannot go home to partake of a Thanksgiving dinner, to avail myself of the kind invitation to go home with the gentleman from Nevada to dinner. [Laughter.]

MR. MCCONNELL. I extend an invitation to any five or six delegates from distant parts, to go home with me and partake of an old-fashioned New England Thanksgiving dinner.

CORPORATIONS.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

Digitized by Google

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. LARKIN. I desire to understand what proposition is under consideration.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section eighteen, and certain amendments.

MR. LARKIN. I move the previous question on the eighteenth section.

Seconded by Messrs. Evey, Hunter, Huestis, and Wyatt.

A division was called for, and the Chair announced the motion carried by a vote of 66 ayes to 52 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first amendment was offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles.

MR. BARNES. Mr. Chairman: I would like to know whether it is proposed to take a vote upon this. My idea is that the motion did not prevail. It is a plain mistake.

[Cries of "Recount," "Recount."]

THE CHAIRMAN. There being some doubt on the matter, the Chair will order a recount.

A division was again taken, and the Chair declared the motion lost by a vote of 53 ayes to 54 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The committee refuses to order the main question. Section eighteen and these amendments therefore go over for one day. The Secretary will read section nineteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 19. No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State. Persons and property transported over any railroad, or by any transportation company or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: Several members around me, and myself, desire to know how section eighteen has gone over for one day?

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will explain it then. The previous question was called for and seconded. On the vote the committee refused to now put the main question, which necessarily carries over the whole section and amendments for one day. Therefore section nineteen is in order.

MR. WILSON. The explanation is satisfactory.

SPEECH OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: Owing to the protracted debate upon this subject and the able manner in which it has already been discussed, I will state that I have very little to say, and shall detain the Convention but a few moments. It seems to be admitted on all sides that the State has the power to regulate the charges made by common carriers in this State. That, I say, seems to be admitted on all sides, and I do not propose to argue that question. I will state that I expect to vote for section nineteen, but I shall not vote for section twenty in its present shape. Now, as to this section twenty; the reasons that I cannot support it are: First, that I think the construction of that section is a violation of every principle of republican government. It sets up three men in this State, the selection of whom is left to chance, as the final and sole power to stand between the people and the corporations or common carriers. There is no restraint or limit placed upon them at all. They go into a dark room and bring forth a tariff sheet. That tariff sheet may be favorable to the company, it may be just, it may be reasonable, or it may be otherwise. No man can tell. No man is entitled under the section to a hearing before that Board in any respect. And, mind you, the people are not entitled to this hearing as that section now stands. I ask you to pause and consider what you are doing. I ask you who are in favor of having just rates of freights and fares established in this State, to pause before you give the unlimited power, the sole power, to any three men who are to be selected by chance, to go into a dark room and make up a tariff sheet without hearing any one upon the subject, without any citizen of this State having a right even to talk to them about it, and without the high power of this State, either legislative, judicial, or executive, having any supervisory power over them. I ask you to pause, you whose ancestors have been living under a republican form of government for one hundred and one or one hundred and two years—to pause before you again set up a monarchy as to the common carrier business in this State—absolute monarchy. I am not sufficiently acquainted with any form of government other than that under which we live, to say exactly what it would be, and I leave it to the gentleman from San Francisco to define. I am unable to define it. It is something so entirely out of my line of thought that I cannot define it, or even find words to classify it. It gives them the sole power.

Now, these gentlemen who favor this proposition may say, "The people will get it. The people will get the whip hand of this thing." Now I ask, is it safe to leave it to chance? Is it right to leave it to chance? Are you satisfied in your consciences—you who favor the regulation of common carriers—are you satisfied in your consciences when you leave it to chance? I cannot satisfy mine in that sort of style. You may say, it is not leaving it to chance; it is leaving it to the popular vote. Even that will not do. You may review the history of railroad regulation—of the regulation of freights and fares, especially in this State, and you will see if you go by the experience that the people have had in this State, that it is not safe to leave it to chance, even if you restrict them. Now, the prevailing idea is that all the elections in this State should be held at one time. We elect the Justices of the Supreme Court, or as many of them as are to be elected. We elect the entire State ticket from Governor down; elect county officers from the highest to the lowest; we elect all these innumerable members of Boards that these committees seem to desire to establish in some shape or another, and you will have seventy-five or eighty names upon the ticket.

Now, do you pretend to say that with the power that corporations have in this State, with the wire-workers and wire-pullers they have under their control and have had—do you pretend to tell me that out of these eighty men they cannot swap off enough to elect their Commissioners? All the people of this State are not farmers. All the voters of the State are not men who have the interest of the people at heart when they come to cast their ballots. You must recognize that fact, and deal with it. There is no use in being carried away with sentimentality; not every man in the State of California stands square up and perpendicular upon his rights as a voter. We cannot recognize that as being a fact. You must recognize the fact that there is a great element in this State that can be manipulated, that can be voted, and recognizing that fact, we must guard against the evil results which flow from it.

Now then, I say, in regard to these officers all being elected at once, that it will materially affect the election of these Commissioners. Then how shall we get around this and prevent the evil that will follow in that regard? I am in favor of electing these Commissioners, and I do not wish any gentleman on this floor to understand me as not being in favor of electing them by a popular vote, but I desire that they, as well as every other man in a republican government, shall have only limited and restricted powers—powers for good and none for evil. That is the safeguard. But this absolute power to be given to these Commissioners cannot be justified upon any theory. It is not justified even upon the only one upon which they press it—that the people have the election of the men. I would not announce my allegiance to a King, even if elected by the people. That is the principle I object to. I care not if every man in the State of California voted in favor of giving absolute kingly power over me to any one, I should vote against it. And I would not support anything merely because the people are to vote upon it. My principles are not based upon any such sandy foundation. Now, sir, I do not oppose this absolute power Commission because I am not in favor of regulation. I do not merely get up here and state that I oppose this, and leave it to be supposed that I do not wish corporations regulated at all; but I shall very briefly state the manner in which I think these things should be done, and some reasons for it.

Now, in the first place, this is comparatively a new question with the American people. This railroad system is one that has not yet worked itself fairly out. In other words, the proper regulation of freights and fares is a matter that must have the experience and practice of more generations than one or two before the problem is finally solved. It has been the experience of those western States that have attempted it, that they cannot grasp them with one strong hand, and with one blow, forge the iron into proper shape. It requires a continuation of strong blows, well directed—not strong blows given at random—in order to bring this thing into any kind of shape, no matter how public feeling, or passions, or prejudice, may be in favor of regulating them instanter. We have got to profit by the experience of other States. We have got to avail ourselves of their experience, and we shall do better than if we attempt to do this thing at one blow.

Now all this giving absolute powers to Commissioners has been, I think, a failure. I do not think it can ever be shown that anywhere it has worked well. To give to this Board of Transportation Commissioners the absolute power to fix rates of freights and fares announces no principle. In other words, can the man who favors giving this absolute power to this Board say that he is announcing to the people that he is in favor of low fares? Can you find it there? I say no. Upon the other hand, can one of those individuals who are opposed to it say that section twenty is against higher rates, or in favor of higher rates? No. It is not there. Can you point to section twenty, and does it say anywhere that it is in favor of reasonable freights and fares? I say no.

Secondly, you are setting up something here that is not founded upon any principle; it is a bare expedient; it does not rise to the dignity of announcing any principle. And I say that the principle is as old as the hills, and you will find it in most of the recent Constitutions, that a common carrier is entitled to a reasonable compensation, and no more than a reasonable compensation, for services rendered to the citizen. Now what would be the result of a clause declaring that? It would dissolve that lobby which crowds about every Legislature; it would enable the corporations in this State to disband their army of political corruptionists, if they have any such army, as so many seem to think they have. It would enable them to strike from their tariff the millions of dollars now collected from the people in order to reimburse themselves for the expenses they have to go to in order to defeat what they consider unjust legislation upon this subject.

Another thing, if you place in there a clause that common carriers shall receive a reasonable compensation for their services, and no more, you will prevent another evil that the people have suffered under in this State. That is the rule of the common law which I have stated. Some gentlemen say it is the law, anyhow. I deny it. That is the law as to interests other than railroad carrying to-day, and it even included railroad carrying until the passage of an Act of the Legislature in eighteen hundred and sixty-one, where they made a maximum. In the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six the railroad company brought into the Legislature its tariff sheet, and had it legalized—had it legalized with all these discriminations from one end to the other, and received the stamp of the State that they were entitled to charge these rates. In eighteen hundred and seventy-eight they did the same thing. Now, sir, I say that they are making their own law and rule of compensation which a clause in the Constitution to this effect would cut off wherever it was found to be unreasonable or unjust. The main danger in leaving it entirely to the Legislature is, that the Legislature having only a limited time the railroad company proposes its own tariff sheet and it becomes the law of the land, so that the common law rule is not in force. Now, sir, in order that such a provision should have the necessary machinery to carry it out, and in order to have some supervisory influence over them, let a Board of Transportation Commissioners be elected by the people, with power to make prima facie rates; with power to make a schedule of freights and fares, and the Courts can decide if it is reasonable and just. Then if the Transportation Commissioners make out a tariff which is thought to be unreasonable by the people, they can go into Court and have it modified before a jury of the people. If these Transportation Commissioners make the freights exceedingly low, so that no common carrier can carry, give the corporations the same right. And, gentlemen, if we have not got the moral courage to do right toward the railroad company, we will never get right done towards the people. We have got to have the moral courage to do right to them before we can have any hope of ever having justice done towards the people. I am not one of those who are so far carried away as to think that we will get the people protected and let the railroad bankrupt if they must. I do not think that to be statesmanlike. Let us do right, and in doing right let us come back to the principle that has been found safe to go by in every business in the world.

Now, they say that you can not tell what is reasonable. That is a question that has been solved thousands and thousands of times. It is just as easy to figure up what a company can carry a carload of freight from here to San Francisco for as it is to figure up how much it is worth to haul a load of that clay from the river bed over here to the Park. It is only that you look at it with a microscope, and the railroad wants you to look at it with a microscopic view. Now, that is the rule. But you cannot be microscopic when you come to the affairs of man. You must make allowances; you must estimate; or, as some people have called it, you must guess. And it is but a guess at the best. Now, when you come to figure freights and fares, you have got to consider the life of a car, how long a car will last, how long an engine will last, respecting the cost of each, the cost of keeping them repaired, etc. Gentlemen, you have to do the same thing in the case of hauling the clay to the Park. You must consider the cost of the horse and of the wagon, the amount you can haul, how long the horse and the wagon will last, the necessary repairs, how much the man who drives the team is worth, etc. That same rule has been in existence since the common law. But we cannot be so microscopic in anything except railroads, and I do not think it is reasonable that we should say that every trifle should be figured. It is not just.

Another thing they may say—that what would be a reasonable compensation must be estimated or weighed according to the prevailing mode of transportation before railroads came into existence. I deny it. That view of the case would contend that the human family had made no progress in the way of invention. These people, the owners of the Central Pacific Railroad, claim all this property as private property. So it is, but it is in the public use. They claim all the improvements that give them the advantage over the stage traffic, although they do not claim them as a matter of legal right. Go to the passenger train that arrives in Sacramento this morning—look at the cow-catcher on the engine—and you will find an inscription thereon that John Jones or some other man has taken out a patent upon it; go to the first wheel and you will see a similar inscription; go from there through the train, to the last timber on the last car, and you will see the stamp of invention everywhere. Do you wish to tell me that the railroad companies are entitled to the whole profits of the invention of the human family? Do they expect us to regulate freights and fares, on the assumption that these railroad companies are the inventors of every invention that places them above the stage coach? I say no. It is not theirs. The inventor is poor enough. These men who have given their inventions to the civilized world are poor enough. But mind you, the railroad stockholders are not the inventors. They are not entitled to the credit; but what they are entitled to is this—a just and reasonable compensation as considered with the expenses, as it is now considered with the advancement of improvements, and not considered from the standpoint of fifty years ago.

Now, sir, this plan, which I understand will be introduced, though not by myself, will prevent the Commissioners doing wrong toward the companies, and will prevent them doing wrong toward the people. And I think it will place this question of transportation and the difficulties that may arise in the business, as nearly as possible on a level with difficulties arising between corporations and others, or between individuals themselves. It will bring them just as near to the same course of procedure. It will take them out of being special classes just as nearly as it is possible to do. Now, sir, when you bring corporations down to the level of other men, I hold that you have achieved a great end. A corporation knows the way into the back room of a Railroad Commissioner's office; but when you bring them before a jury of the people of this State, it is the last tribunal before which they wish to be tried for their discriminations or extortions. I think this plan the best because it makes all equal before the law. They will not then be coming to the Legislature to redress their wrongs. One of the main causes of a great deal of this railroad trouble has been the fact that the railroad companies have been so placed that the individual could not get at them. They have been hedged about with all this Commission machinery so that the individual could not proceed. But just the moment you place them on the common law rule, give the corporation its rights and the people their rights, and they know that the Courts are open to punish these railroad companies, then the clouds of war will drift from the surface. As soon as the corporations find out that if they charge exorbitant rates—if they charge above the rates fixed by the Commissioners, or even if they charge the rates fixed by the Commissioners, if they are unreasonable they will be liable to complaint in the Courts, and have to pay the penalty—they will bring their rates down to reasonable ones. I think with the benefit of the experience of the States beyond the Rocky Mountains before us, we should adopt a system based upon that experience.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment which receives the approval of a majority of the Committee on Corporations.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'no,' in the first line, the word 'unjust.'"

SPEECH OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of section nineteen as it came from the committee, and I think that the interpolation of the word "unjust" would tend to raise questions upon every complaint of discrimination. The question of what was just or unjust discrimination would be constantly rising, and we would do better to stand upon the section as originally reported, and to allow no larger charge for a short distance than for a longer distance. There can be no justice in discrimination like that. If the railroad company, or any other transportation company, can afford to carry a ton of freight a certain distance for five dollars, they can carry it any less number of miles for the same price.

MR. ESTEE. The amendment does not affect that part of the section. This is as to the question of facilities for transportation.

MR. TERRY. Then, I assert that any discrimination against one place and in favor of another, or against one man and in favor of another, or against one corporation and in favor of another, is unjust upon the face of it, and not to be justified under any possible contingency, and, therefore, that the word has no place there. Any discrimination between persons is unjust—giving one man an advantage over another. Any discrimination between places—giving one place an advantage over another—is unjust upon the face of it. Therefore, the word ought not to be inserted, and they should be absolutely required to give every man the same facilities, and at the same price as other individuals.

Now, a great deal was said here upon this question by various gentlemen, who enlightened the committee with some ideas that were new and some that were not, about the rights of these corporations, and I believe that before the debates got through, it was pretty well understood by the Convention that "corporations," as used in the argument, meant the Central Pacific Railroad Company. As was said by Mr. Edgerton, it seemed to acquire a personality in the course of the debate. It was said by the distinguished gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, and I confess to surprise at the statement from that source, that because of the fact that the United States was a creditor of this railroad company, and had a mortgage upon it, and because of the fact that other men had become creditors of this railroad and had mortgages upon its property, therefore the State had no right to interfere with the prospective profits of that company, and render it less able to settle with its creditors.

MR. WILSON, of First District. I used that for the purpose of showing that the Legislature, in view of that, might want to alter its policy. If we place it out of the power of the people to control, we might get into a position not contemplated.

MR. TERRY. That is a chance that the creditor takes who loans upon property, the title of which is subject to fluctuation of value. The creditor can stand in no better position than the debtor, and in no case can a man perfect his title by giving a mortgage or lien upon it.

MR. WILSON. I have no doubt of the power to regulate these things, and have not said anything of the kind.

MR. TERRY. I misunderstood it then.

MR. WILSON. It was in reference to the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, that if the rates of freight and fare were put down, they never could be raised, I said it might put the railroad in such a condition that it could not meet its obligations, and that the Legislature could not allow them to raise the rates in order to meet the exigencies of the case.

MR. TERRY. Well, if the railroad company, by putting down their rates, choose to commit hari-kari, for myself, I have no objections to it. I think that the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles is eminently proper, and ought to be adopted; that they themselves are the best judges of what they can afford to carry freight for, and if for any purpose they announce their willingness to carry for a certain rate, they should be held to their contract, and not be allowed to raise it.

Some allusions have been made to the magnificent donations of money, property, and credit which have been made by the Federal Government, by the State of California, and by several counties in the State. The gentleman from Marin asserted that these were free gifts, without any conditions; that after the property passed it became the property of the railroad, and that they were under no legal obligations to the donor. True, sir, the recipient of a gift is under no legal obligations to the donor, but the obligation of common gratitude is held to be an obligation by most natural persons. There was an implied understanding at the time when these donations were made to this corporation that the property which was given to them, and the money which they were endowed with, was not to be used as a weapon against the donors; not to be used for the oppression of the people by whom the money was given. It is true that it gave them an opportunity to increase the resources of the State, and it was supposed that they would use it so as to furnish employment for thousands of laboring men in building the roads, making cuts and tunnels, and laying down the rails. It was expected that thus a benefit would accrue to all. It was not expected that with these magnificent donations, the honest workingmen of the country would be thrown aside, and that hordes of Mongolians would be imported into the country to take the place of these working men. The parties that made the magnificent donations did it for their benefit, and not for the benefit of the corporation. How has it been? Go upon any of the lines, and you will scarcely see one citizen out of five hundred men employed. That, then, was a part of the implied condition of the gift that has not been kept by this corporation.

Again, something was spoken of the envy with which men looked upon the wealth acquired by these men; that they saw their magnificent houses, and they envied them the possession of them. Whether men look with pleasure or displeasure upon the accumulation of wealth, depends in some measure upon the manner in which that wealth is accumulated. Now, when this Central Pacific Railroad Company was organized there were many stockholders. I believe only six stockholders, who assumed the directorship, acquired wealth. I have not heard of any others reaping any very considerable profit from it. It is said that by forming a Contract and Finance Company, and taking a contract from themselves to build a road for themselves, that they put into their own pockets all of the money that came from the various sources into the corporation. However that may be, I know of some stockholders we never got rich from the profits of this corporation. The County of Placer became a stockholder to the extent of about three hundred thousand dollars—certainly more than twice as much money as any one of the present owners of that enterprise ever put into it of their own; and according to the wealth of these men, estimated at from eight to fifteen millions, the County of Placer ought to have had fifteen or twenty millions. I would like my friend from Placer, Judge Hale, to tell me how much that county made out of it. The County of Sacramento was also a subscriber to the stock to the extent of some three hundred thousand dollars. Certainly that was more than any one of these individuals put in; and while they have their fifteen or twenty millions, and are living in opulence, how many dollars has the County of Sacramento realized? The County of Santa Clara subscribed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and the County of San Joaquin two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and as the owner of twenty-five hundred shares, according to the profits made by the directors, who certainly did not put in half that amount to the man, ought to have had twenty millions of dollars, and not one dime of it has ever gone into the treasury of that county. Now, is there not some reason why people should look with some displeasure upon the accumulation of these large sums in the hands of a few men who are charged with using it for their own interests, for a corruption fund in the Legislature, and perhaps, in some instances, in the Courts of justice.

It is our duty here to adopt some plan by which the people of California are to be protected against this tyrannical corporation, because it has just come to be this question: either you have got to govern that corporation or the corporation will govern you. That is the question which the Convention has to determine first and the people afterwards. I examined with a good deal of care the twentieth section of this report of the Committee on Corporations, and I could not bring myself, as I thought, to support it; but I must confess that my determination to vote against that twentieth section was very much shaken by what might have been a warning or threat, one or the other, held out by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, in his eloquent address upon this subject. He intimated that the passage of that section would drive this corporation into politics, and that they would probably be able to control the election of these Commissioners and owning these Commissioners. They could discharge five or six thousand Chinamen and employ voters in their stead. Now, gentlemen, if I was certain that even that much good would result from it, if I was certain that five thousand Chinamen would be discharged and that five thousand citizens would be employed, and thus be able to earn an honest living for their families, I should be almost tempted to vote for it with all its faults. If it secured the discharge of aliens and employment of citizens who have families to support which would add to the future prosperity of the State, it would go very far to counteract the evils which might follow from this power in the hands of three men. I have too much regard for the honesty and intelligence of the people of this State to believe that the elections can be controlled by such measures. The people have seen too much of that in the past. In spite of all their influence, a square vote of the people of this State will sustain any measure which is intended to curb the grasping avarice of that corporation, and prevent further oppression upon the people of this State.

It is said that they themselves are the best judges of what they can charge; that no information can be obtained which will enable the Legislature or Convention to fix the rates at which their roads ought to be run. And it is said, in the argument against the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, that some man might get a stage line, have a parcel of old stages on the line, and blackmail the railroad company, and he might say, "If you don't come down with so much money I will run opposition to you," and they would be compelled, unless they could put down their freights and fares, to submit to blackmail. Well, gentlemen, I have always heard that one of the principal arguments in favor of fostering these railroad corporations was that it would secure a cheaper mode of transportation than stage coaches and mule teams. If that is not true—if the railroad company cannot afford to carry both freight and passengers at rates cheaper than stages and mule teams—then the sooner the corporations are destroyed the better for the future of California. If the freights are the same and the fares are the same when this work is being done by mule teams and stages, they are the best, for the profits of transportation are shared by the whole community. The farmers, in the first place, sell the animals, the wagon-makers make the wagons, the farmers raise the grain and hay to feed the animals, the blacksmith shoes them, the harness-maker makes the harness, and the money is scattered over the country to every class of people in it. Whereas, the profits arising from the freights and fares of the railroad company goes, most of it, into the hands of a few enormously rich men, and the balance of it into the purses of aliens who do not expect to become citizens of our country, and come here only upon the expectation of gathering as much as they can of the fatness of the land in the shortest possible space of time, and return with it to their own country. I say that unless the element of cheapness comes in they are an absolute curse to the country.

What effect have they had? It is said that they increase the prosperity of the State. Why, who ever heard of an able-bodied man in California going around and begging for a meal, or begging for the privilege of working, until these thousands of coolies were imported and employed by this company. What a spectacle was witnessed in San Francisco the other day, when one of these magnates gave notice that a certain number of men might be employed at one dollar a day and find themselves, to do some work, and hundreds of men were sitting there all day long, more having offered than could be employed, begging for an opportunity to earn even so small a sum. Is not that scene witnessed every day? Are there not hundreds of able-bodied men willing to labor, anxious to labor, who are absolutely deprived of the privilege of earning, by their own labor, the price of the food that is necessary to sustain life? Deprived of the liberty of carrying out the primeval curse which was placed upon man, to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow.

And we are told that this is private property; that we must not interfere with it; that the Central Pacific Railroad Company are the best judges of the price at which they can run. Well, so they are the best judges, and so they would be, if they were guided by the commonest principles of fair dealing. But their judgment is altogether exercised upon the side of self. It was shown by the statistics, read here the other day, that out of the gross earnings the profits were more than ten per cent. greater in California than any other railroad in the United States. I believe the highest was thirty-six per cent. in the other States, while it amounted in this State, according to the report of the Commissioners, to fifty-six per cent. Now, these men have made enough out of this magnificent corporation to be willing hereafter to deal fairly. We know that they won't deal fairly, and it is our duty to make them do it. It is our duty to prevent discrimination between places. They start out their railroad track and survey their line near a thriving village. Two or three cases of that kind happened between here and Lathrop. They would go to the most prominent citizens of that village and say, "If you will give us so many thousand dollars we will run through here; if you don't we will run by," and in every instance where the subsidy was not granted, that course was taken, and the effect was just as they said, to kill off the little town. Here was the town of Paradise, in Stanislaus County; because they did not get what they wanted they established another town four miles from there. In every instance where they were refused a subsidy, in money, unless their terms were acceded to; they have established a depot near to the place, and always have frozen them out. As stated by the gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard, they blackmailed Los Angeles County two hundred and thirty thousand dollars as a condition of doing that which the law compelled them to do.

Now, it is for us to do something to prevent this discrimination. We can say to them, and it is our duty to say to them, "If you undertake to publish to the world that you are able to carry a car or ton of freight for five dollars a hundred miles, you shall not charge the same rate for fifty miles. If the price from Sacramento is two dollars, you shall not charge more to Davisville or to any intermediate point." This is doing them no harm. They say they charge less to San Francisco, because there is competition, because people can send it by another route and they lose the freight. Very good. If they are obliged to carry freight at a loss, then it is their interest to lose it. But they are not carrying at a loss. They certainly get pay for it or they would not want it. If there was a hundred tons of freight to carry, and they were going to lose money in carrying it, they would rather some other kind of conveyance would take it. So it is absolutely certain that they are not carrying freight anywhere at a price so low as to lose money. Then if they do not lose money, they can afford to carry fifty miles at the same price they do one hundred. They can afford to carry to any intermediate point upon the same road for the same that they do the whole distance.

I do not propose to detain this Convention any longer in what I have to say, and end as I begun, by saying that the amendment proposed by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations ought not to be adopted; that in the very nature of things there can be no discrimination between individuals as to railroad facilities which is not unjust upon the very face of it, and we do not want any question raised or any trials had as to whether it was unjust or not. Say, "You shall not discriminate. If John Smith comes to you with a ton of freight, treat him the same as if Peter Jones came to you with the same kind of freight, and give him the same advantages." The putting in of that amendment, the insertion of that word "unjust" here, would give rise in every case to litigation and inquiry. Just have it understood that they shall not discriminate. We decide here in this Convention a fact that is patent to every man, and we say, "You shall not discriminate at all."

SPEECH OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I concur with the gentleman last on the floor, in regard to section nineteen. It reads, in my opinion, just as it should read. It is the proper interpretation, and meets the wants and demands of the people of this State to-day.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Convention, I confess myself at the present time in rather an awkward position. For several days I have had a desire to be heard upon the subject pending—the report of the Committee on Corporations—but having a degree of temerity, and a lack of courage, perhaps, to force myself upon this honorable body, I find myself with my manuscript totally routed and emasculated by the eloquent speeches and arguments offered by the very learned gentlemen who have addressed this Convention upon the subject; and when our old friend, General Howard, like an old Spartan, rose here and made his voice resound upon the side of the people, as against the oppression and encroachments of this soulless corporation, I felt as though the whole subject had been exhausted. I felt as though there was not a single word left for me to say; and I do say now, to the fullest extent, and with all sincerity and honesty of purpose, that Mr. Howard, the gentleman from Los Angeles, has more than answered every argument and sophistry that has been introduced upon the floor of this house upon the part of the corporations. I do not say by their paid attorneys; but, gentlemen of the Convention, it grieves me very much when I find myself associated with what is considered the very brightest and best talent of the people of this State—the chosen, and selected as such—to find upon one side of this Convention men who are willing to come forth and fight the battles of the people, as against the oppressions and tyranny of the the corporations; and upon the other side, another class of individuals who have been elected and are entitled to seats upon this floor, who come here with the determination—arguing from their reasoning, or their standpoint of reasoning—with a full determination that the people shall be thwarted in their efforts to revise the fundamental law of this State. And, Mr. Chairman, being a farmer from the northern part of the State—from one of the cow counties of the north—I want it distinctly understood, that neither the imperial frowns nor the scorns of the hirelings of the corporations in this State, can deter me from my proper rights upon the floor of this Convention. I, too, am here for a purpose, and if I might be indiscreet enough to use indiscreet language or terms, if I should in haste use any language that would be indiscreet enough to call things by a proper name, I will hold myself personally responsible for every word I utter in behalf of the people upon this question, and against that soulless corporation that has crushed down labor to-day to the menial serfdom of the Mongolian slave.

Mr. Chairman, I came here with the determination of working for the interests of the people (the corporations will take care of themselves); and in making just laws for the people, we cannot refrain from making proper laws for every one; and when I have beheld the ridicule and the scenes that have been perpetrated on this floor, I have been reminded that if the people were to hear all about the burlesque and the unreasonable conduct of this body, they would exclaim, with all their vigor and power, "This Convention does fall short of our expectations." And I am fearful that that will be the verdict.

We find ourselves occupying a position here, as delegates in this Convention, to revise the Constitution of this State; and it bears a relation similar to that of a jury, as we discuss and pass upon each of the propositions which are proposed to the new Constitution. Therefore, sir, great care should be taken that we may arrive at just and equitable conclusions, and render such a verdict as will be just, alike to those who are interested in railroads and other corporations, and to the people at large. A spirit of fairness should, and I hope will, characterize our actions and our conclusions. That the best interests of the State shall be promoted, of all other conclusions, will no doubt be admitted on all sides. Yet, sir, there is a strong feeling in the minds of the people of this entire State, that the corporations control this Convention; and when we look around this chamber and find the array of legal talent which is pitted against adopting the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, we are not surprised that such a feeling exists in the minds of the people at large. We find, sir, the ablest lawyers in the State—many of them—battling here against that report. On the other side we find the farmer, the merchant, the mechanic, and, in a word, sir, the producing classes. Does not this state of things itself bring conviction to the unbiased mind? It would be idle, indeed, for the farmers and merchants and mechanics upon the floor of this house to cross blades, if you please, in debate with such distinguished advocates as Mr. Wilson, Mr. Edgerton, Mr. McFarland, and others. But, Mr. Chairman, we desire that our views shall be heard; and, sir, while we admit the ability, the skill, and the ingenuity of these gentlemen, we must still admit that the provisions of this report ask for nothing but what is fair and just, nothing but what the people of this State demand, when we find that the Central Pacific Railroad Company earn such profits with the magnificent donations of the Government and the people, and seem determined to dictate in all questions of State policy, from the election of a United States Senator down to the selection of a Warden of the State Prison.

Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a conflict between this monstrous corporation and the people, and it might just as well be determined at once, now and for all, which shall control. It is fair to presume that the Commission will be just to these corporations; and if they are, what is there in the provision proposed by the committee's report which these railroad people complain of. The people are just and fair, and the representatives of the people have, or should have, no other motive than to reflect their will. Have the railroad companies become so obnoxious to the people that they are afraid that justice will not be done them? Or are they afraid that justice will be done? It seems to me, sir, that the provisions of the committee report, when amended as proposed, will meet the demand which the people of this State have made of us; and, sir, nothing short of this will fill the measure of that demand.

Of the corrupting influence of this railroad I desire to speak a few words. They have robbed cities of their water fronts; they have ruled through highest styles of power and tyranny in the counties of this State, and by their gross system of colonization they have removed county seats, against the will and the wish of the people; they have subsidized the press of the State, and of the Nation; they carry the political destiny of almost every man in this State around in their pockets; they have driven out of our State almost all of the intelligent labor, male and female, by giving Chinese slaves the preference. Both they and their henchmen, and their organs, have slandered the intelligence of this State and Nation by the statement, namely: that had it not been for the Chinese, the great Central Pacific Railroad could never have been built. I brand that as an insult to the intelligence of the American people, and especially to the people of the State of California. I brand such a statement as a falsehood, and characterize it as a gross insult.

I am sorry Mr. Edgerton is not here, because I do not desire to say harsh things about a gentleman in his absence, but I shall only refer to him casually. He said the other evening, that the Southern Pacific Railroad was running at a loss of five thousand dollars a day, or one million five hundred thousand dollars a year. I believe that is about his statement. Why, sir, this is the man who, as a servant of the people, said that these gigantic railroad kings set themselves up over us as our masters. Now, sir, if they are losing five thousand dollars per day, or one million five hundred thousand dollars per annum, I must say that I am compelled to give them less credit than I have always given them, to invest their money in an enterprise that never will pay any better than that. I will guarantee, gentlemen of the Convention, that the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad combined, will do nothing of the kind, to build a road where it will not pay them a percentage on their capital. In one breath, Mr. Edgerton says the railroad would discharge their Chinamen and employ white men, and thereby elect their Commissioners, and the next breath he says the result would be to utterly drive out and destroy the railroads of this State. Speaking of the lawyers and their efforts, he eulogizes that profession. So far as I am concerned, I think the lawyer is a necessary evil, to say the least of it. I have no unkind words to offer against the lawyers as such. It is possible that it is necessary that we should have that intelligent class with us. I have no objection to it; but when I find myself frowned down, or an attempt made to frown me down, because I am a farmer, forsooth, with their imperial frowns, then I claim it as my right to antagonize against that enormity, the profession of the law. And while upon that subject, allow me to say that the people of this great Nation do distrust the profession of the law. In our national Congress, out of about five hundred members, three hundred and ninety-seven of them are lawyers, twelve farmers, and the remainder are composed of bank Presidents, railroad directors, and so on, and so on. Now, this disparagement of representation upon the part of the lawyers, does not speak well for the Nation; and, take the history of this State and its legislative career, and it does not speak well, in my opinion, for the lawyers. What our friend, Mr. Howard, has said of the lawyers, covered nearly all the grounds, but what was left untouched, the gentleman from San Francisco, Dr. O'Donnell, finished up last night. Therefore, I may leave the lawyer to occupy precisely whatever position he desires to occupy in this life without any molestation upon my part whatever, because I accord to him, as I accord to every individual, the right to think and act for themselves, in accordance with his own will and conscience.

And, Mr. Chairman, while I am upon this subject, I desire to say that since I have been upon the floor of this Convention there has been a determination to cast their imperial frowns upon me and my friends to that extent that it is not pleasing in my sight nor to my feelings. Whilst I have endeavored to extend to the gentlemen every courtesy that was in my power, I have been branded with the sneering remark that I was a Kearneyite; that I was a communist; that I was an agrarian. I brand it as a falsehood. I am, sir, if I know myself, a representative of the people of this State, and of no individual. I bend the knee to no individual. I speak my sentiments clearly and boldly upon every subject, whether intelligently or otherwise, I will refer to the public to determine. But when a man rises upon the floor, and with his imperial frown attempts to drive me from my position in this body, by telling me, because I dare to be a Workingman, and cast my lot and my voice upon that side, I tell the gentlemen upon the floor of this Convention that it is an odium I am proud to wear, because of the fact that I find a majority of this Convention, gentlemen, upon the side of the people, and, God knows, they were not all elected upon my ticket. Thank God for it! I say all praise to those gentlemen who have dared to have the manly courage to come out here and assert their independence in behalf of the great fight and struggle they are called upon to perform here, and identify themselves with my side of the Convention, if you please, in defense of the people and the people's rights.

Why, sir, Mr. Edgerton, the gentleman from Sacramento, almost scandalized the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, and the entire committee. And while I am upon this subject, allow me to call attention to the contrast in his position here to-day, and that which he occupied four years ago last Winter, when I was entitled to a seat upon the floor of this very chamber, from this county, then my own home. When we found that monstrous corporation in here with its representatives, and the great fight was being made for the United States Senator, I then found myself here upon the side of the people as I do to-day, and along with me was the honorable gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton. The very manly fight that was made by that gentleman and his friends in behalf of the people, and against the corporation—for I had the honor of stumping the county with him and being with him during the campaign—a more honorable fight than he made was never made in the State of California. Yea, even the noble Haight never made a nobler fight than Mr. Edgerton. Then what has come over the spirit of this man's dream? We find him here to-day villifying, and scandalizing, and breaking down the report of the Committee on Corporations, and he does not offer to this honorable body one sentiment in argument that would lead to anything like an intelligent conclusion upon this subject, whereby this body might adopt some other report or some other means that would meet the people's demands in this State.

Why, sir, at that momentous time, four years ago last Winter, when the people were aroused from one end of the State to the other upon the subject of corporations, what do we find then? We find the honorable gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, championed by one side of the house, and Mr. James Farley, of Amador, from the other side, and the people sandwiched in between these two great parties, attempted to be crushed out of existence, making a manly fight, as we are to-day making. What was the result? The manly courage of the people's representatives went on from day to day, and from week to week, and the Republican and Democratic parties pooled their issues, if you please, pooled their political issues, and were willing to cast aside all of their bickerings and wars of years, throw Mr. Shafter overboard, and cast their entire vote, as they propose to do in this Convention, for the corporations and against the people; and though in our infancy, in our weakness as an element standing up and daring to battle for the people, we came forth from our sandwiched position, claimed the dignity of men, and made a gallant fight, which resulted in the overthrow of the mandates of the corporations, and elected the people's choice of this State, Newton Booth, to the United States Senate. Then it was, sir, that a Democrat, like myself, who has been for thirty years in this State, rose above party and voted for Newton Booth. Then it was that a Democrat like me could cast aside every other consideration and support the measures and the demands of the people.

Mr. Chairman, it does vex my heart, it pains me, to see the bright intellect that the people have sent here pitted against the insignificant and lowly representatives of the people of this State. Coming here as we do, without any knowledge in parliamentary law, without any experience in legislative matters, to see these misled minds pitted against us, I tell you, gentlemen of the Convention, it does grieve my soul and my heart. For why? Because I claim, sir—because I brand them—I send it home to their hearts—their motives are sinister, and not in keeping with the demands of the people and of the times.

And, sir, this corporation, this Central Pacific Railroad corporation, has filled our land with tramps, and when one of them comes along—a white man—he may be a man of education; he may have been educated in the highest schools of the East; yet he has journeyed with his education to this shore, and when he knocks and asks for admission and employment, because he carries his blankets upon his back he is told, "Begone! you are a tramp; we prefer to employ Chinamen." I am sorry to say that this spirit has permeated not only the corporations, but it has permeated the body politic all through the State. We find it, if you please, in its ramifications deep down among the Grangers, where I belong. I scorn them and brand them as false to their professions; that they are not Grangers, and are not entitled to the appellation.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not weary the committee but a short time further. The ground has been so thoroughly covered and so much has been said, that I believe that the intelligent members of this Convention—and I claim they are all such, and God forbid that I should utter anything otherwise—are ready to vote, and I hope that they will, as nearly as possible, adhere to the report of the committee.

Now, in regard to the appointment of the Commission, which section twenty refers to. I am not willing, for one, to submit this matter to the Legislature, and I will not support any proposition that has a tendency to throw this question into the hands of the Legislature in any shape, form, or nature. It has been asserted by Mr. Shafter, that there are only three distinct branches of government in this State. Admit it, sir. I am perfectly willing to admit that there are but three, but when the time comes that a soulless corporation will even go so low and so contemptible as to control the two great (so called) political parties and their party machinery, so that three distinct branches of government will not run this State, I am in favor of making four, yea five, if it is necessary, in order to mete out the views and the demands of this people.

THE AMENDMENTS.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I would ask what amendments are pending to section nineteen? I think that after being discussed for the last three or four days this house should dispose of it, so that we can discuss section twenty. In section twenty there is a question involved in relation to the Commission, and if there are no other amendments, I will move——

MR. CAPLES. I have one.

MR. LARKIN. My objection to the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, is that it nullifies the section. We should provide positively that no discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made. That is clear and positive, and I believe that the Convention is ready to vote down that amendment and carry that section as it stands. Therefore, as soon as the Doctor has offered his amendment, I shall move the previous question.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out, in the first line, the word 'discrimination,' and insert the word 'robbery.'"

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire to discuss this question at all, and I confess that the two terms are equivalent—discrimination and robbery—but I have a decided preference for the latter. Therefore I offer the amendment.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: If I understand it, the report, so-called, by the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, to insert the word "unjust," purports to be a report of the committee.

MR. ESTEE. I did not say it was a report of the committee. I said I had submitted it to a majority of the committee. I do not think it makes any difference one way or the other. I offered it at the suggestion of members on this floor who were friendly to the proposition, and with a view to uniting the friends of the measure.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I seriously object to this manner of introducing amendments. Every morning the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations comes in with an amendment, and says it is by the action of a majority of the committee. Running up to a member whilst perhaps he is talking to a man, he asks him, "Have you any objection to this proposition?" The member has no opportunity to examine it. Then he hands it in here as the act of a majority of the committee. I object to that mode of procedure, and I rise now, not for the purpose of discussing this amendment, but to say, as one member of the committee, that I never did consent to it, and do not now. To insert the word, "unjust," there, destroys, or qualifies, the whole section. In the speech of the gentleman from Sacramento, no allusion was made to the misfortunes to which the people of Illinois run by inserting that word into the Constitution, or where they had finally to legislate down to the proposition that the discrimination must be considered prima facie unjust. The moment you proceed in this direction, the question is raised, what is unjust discrimination? and you go wrong altogether; you open wide the door for construing the section away. I say that there is no discrimination that is not an unjust discrimination—prima facie an unjust discrimination. And that is all that is necessary to be said. It is inferred that any discrimination is an unjust discrimination, and I have not one particle of doubt that if those Conventions that have employed the word had the work to do over again, that every single one of them would leave the word out of the section. This Convention, seeing the dilemma into which these Conventions run, should not insert the word and open the door for construing it away.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise.

MR. TULLY. I would ask if an amendment is in order?

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can send up his amendment, and it depends upon what it is.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section nineteen so as to read: 'The Legislature shall, after the adoption of this Constitution, establish and provide a system for the enforcement of an equitable tariff of rates to be charged for the transportation of freight and passengers by the railroad and transportation companies of this State, and all appropriate legislation to prevent undue and unwarrantable discrimination in such charges or in the facilities for the transportation of the same class of freight or passengers by such companies between persons and places, and shall compel the observance of the same by fines and forfeitures upon such railroad and transportation companies, and by imprisonment of the officers or employés thereof, at its discretion.'"

REMARKS OF MR. MCCONNELL.

MR. MCCONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I desire to occupy the time of the committee but a few moments, and I will first read a few lines from the speech of the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter. He says: "Way back in eighteen hundred and sixty, this railroad excitement commenced. There was not a man in the State who would not turn his pockets wrong side out to help build a railroad. The people were willing to give them all they asked, and all they did was to take all the people gave them. You forced it upon them, and they scarcely had to ask for it. You gave it to them without any restriction whatever. Congress gave them fifty millions of dollars without scarcely inquiring what they were going to do with it. They did not even inquire where their probable terminus would be. It was mentioned as being at or near the Bay of San Francisco, and they stretched that as being at Sacramento. It was given to them without a solitary condition. All this was done by our delegation in Congress. The State itself gave them millions of dollars, and the people subscribed for millions of their stock. I voted against it in the Legislature, and would do it again. Another bill was passed granting them ten thousand dollars a mile for every mile the Pacific Railroad had built, or should build in this State. These subsidies amounted to about twenty million dollars. The people got cooled down a little, and sent me, with others, here to have that Act repealed. We did so; and what did the people do? They sent the man who introduced the bill and got it passed to the United States Senate. Talk about the people wanting this thing and that thing, here is an instance of it. I was sent here to repeal the bill, and I did so, and after I had done so I could not probably have got a vote because I was a monopolist, and the other gentleman was an anti-monopolist. The people are generally hasty and do not examine deliberately."

In view of the vast past experience of the gentleman—nineteen years as a legislator, and a great many years as a railroad builder—I expected we should hear from him something that would offer a solution to the whole question. I remember the time very well when the people of San Francisco opposed the building of the Central Pacific Railroad, and called it the "Dutch Flat swindle." It was at a time in its history when it was struggling for existence, without means, and in need of friends, and it was perfectly safe to oppose it. It was at this time that the gentleman, as he says, was sent up to Sacramento for the purpose of making a new bargain, in which he partially succeeded, by which the people are now, and have been ever since, paying the Central Pacific Railroad one hundred and eight thousand dollars a year. The people, as he tells us, failed to recognize his great services, and sent another gentlemen to the United States Senate, who had assisted the railroad. In course of time the struggling company accomplished the mighty undertaking, and its terminus was established at San Francisco. A few short years pass, and the people send the gentleman again to Sacramento to revise the fundamental law of the land. Behold! What a change has come over the spirit of his dreams! The struggling infant is now a giant, successfully contending with the people of the entire commonwealth; making Governors, Representatives, and Senators; controls the entire transportation of freight and passengers upon this coast, and threatens to enslave a free people. Where does the gentleman from Marin stand now? He has already answered. His speeches upon this floor too plainly tell on which side he is enlisted. This fight never will be settled, and it ought not to be settled, until it is settled upon the eternal principles of right and justice. The company will have a barren victory that ignores these principles. I desire information upon the following questions:

The distance from Winnemucca to Sacramento City is three hundred and twenty-four miles, and the return to Winnemucca, six hundred and forty-eight miles, and is over the high Sierra Nevadas, where the grades are high, the curves sharp, and often deep snow; and Mr. Edgerton says the cost of hauling is increased five times for every twenty feet of grade. Now, having two carloads of freight at Winnemucca ready for shipment, and desiring to send it to market—say to Boston, Massachusetts—is it necessary that it should be taken to Sacramento and then returned to Winnemucca before it starts on its destination? If the railroad should take your freight against your wishes to Sacramento and return it over the same road to Winnemucca, and charged you for that service one and one half cents per pound, or three hundred dollars per carload of twenty thousand pounds, would you not think it unjust and wrong? This is the management in eighteen hundred and seventy-eight. I find, in looking over bills of lading in eighteen hundred and seventy-three, that a different policy prevailed. Freight did not come over to Sacramento, but went directly east, and the charge was only one cent per pound, or two hundred dollars per carload, although it was three hundred and twenty-four miles nearer Boston than Sacramento. In addition to these charges through rates are added. Do you think such management in transporting produce to market a wise and just policy toward the producer? Should a person be punished because he is nearer market than his neighbor? Do you think that part of a thing is worth more than the whole of it? I cannot think of anything where such a rule would hold good, except it be upon the long speeches in this Convention. [Laughter.] I desire to know of the gentleman from Marin if his agent on his little farm in Marin should take his butter and cheese, the produce of his dairy of five thousand cows, and transport it to Ukiah—one hundred miles in an opposite direction and back again—before it took its departure to San Francisco, the market he wished it sent to, and charged him one and one half cents per pound for that kind of service, if he would retain him in his employ and think he was a good and wise servant? If he answers all these questions to the satisfaction of the Convention, I shall be disposed to assist him to the United States Senate the next time he is a candidate for that high and honorable position; for certainly no other man will be his equal in this State. And I would ask him further—he having been a lawyer for forty years, and a man of large experience and extensive practice, and familiar with legislation in California—if he can tell us what has become of the Contract and Finance Company? If so, was it a financial success? Also, what has become of the Western Development Company, and was that equally successful? And further, what is the name of the new company that has recently been formed, and are its objects the same as its deceased brethren.

MR. GRACE. I think we have a rule that we should take a recess from twelve o'clock to two. I am as much in favor of getting along with the business of this Convention as any gentleman on this floor, but I cannot see any use in sitting long after the usual hour and then having the balance of the time in the evening. We can take the recess at the usual hour. I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried, on a division, by a vote of 73 ayes to 35 noes.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention then took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

RECONSIDERATION MOVED.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: On yesterday the Convention passed a resolution to adjourn until Monday, at two o'clock. A gentleman gave notice of a motion to reconsider. That motion was laid on the table. I now move to take it from the table.

MR. BARNES. I move that the whole matter be indefinitely postponed.

MR. MCCALLUM. That motion cannot be entertained until it is taken from the table. It is not now before the Convention. Until it is taken from the table it is not before the Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barnes, moves to indefinitely postpone the motion.

MR. HILBORN. I hope this motion will prevail.

MR. BARNES. I moved to indefinitely postpone the motion of the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on that motion.

[Cries of "division," "division."]

MR. VAN DYKE. What will be the effect of that motion?

THE PRESIDENT. To indefinitely postpone the motion of the gentleman from Trinity.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. Will the Chair state the effect of that motion?

THE PRESIDENT. It will have no effect except to indefinitely postpone the motion made by the gentleman from Trinity.

MR. LARKIN. Ayes and noes.

MR. CONDON. Ayes and noes.

MR. WHITE. Ayes and noes.

MR. WYATT. Ayes and noes.

MR. HILBORN. Ayes and noes.

THE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the motion to indefinitely postpone prevailed by the following vote:

EXPENSES OF A COMMITTEE.

MR. HOLMES. Mr. President: I present a report from the committee appointed under a resolution of this Convention adopted November seventeenth.

THE SECRETARY read:

SACRAMENTO, November 26th, 1878.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your committee appointed on the seventeenth instant, to make arrangements for the obsequies of Honorable J. M. Strong, late a member of this Convention, beg leave to report that in the discharge of their duties incurred expenses to the amount of two hundred and ninety dollars and fifty cents, for which vouchers are herewith presented.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Controller be and he is hereby authorized to draw his warrant in favor of the Sergeant-at-Arms for the amount of two hundred and ninety dollars and fifty cents, to pay the expenses of the obsequies of the late Honorable J. M. Strong, a member of this Convention, and that the State Treasurer be and he is hereby authorized to pay said warrant out of the funds appropriated to this Convention.

Resolved, That the per diem for the remainder of the session of this Convention, which the late Honorable J. M. Strong would have been entitled to as a member of this Convention, be paid to the family of deceased.

S. A. HOLMES, Chairman.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the resolution. Adopted unanimously.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section nineteen is before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. STEDMAN.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I feel somewhat diffident, after listening to the very able arguments of the distinguished gentlemen who have preceded me on both sides of this great question, in offering a few remarks after this subject has been so thoroughly discussed; yet, sir, recognizing as I do, the fact that the subject-matter involved in the sections now under consideration is of vast interest to the people of this State, and believing as I do, that no subject will be brought to the attention of this Convention of greater importance than this question of corporations, the solution of which will require the most careful consideration, and, also knowing that the public mind is excited upon this question of railroad corporations especially, I cannot, in the performance of the duties incumbent on me as a representative of the people, do less than raise my voice in favor of these sections. The people expect us to act squarely on this question, and not dodge it. They expect us to place restrictions on these corporations, for the reason that there is, as has been demonstrated by the able gentlemen who have addressed the Convention on this side of the question, special abuses that have crept into the railroad system, which demand special remedies. It is proposed in section nineteen, that:

"No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming from or going to any other State. Persons and property transported over any railroad, or by any transportation company, or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates."

The section provides that no greater charge should be made for carrying a short distance than for a longer one. Here is one of the causes of complaint. A greater charge is in many cases made for carrying ten miles, where the business is local and no competition can exist, than in other cases is made for carrying fifty, and even one hundred miles, over the same line.

In the matter of freights, I am informed that grain is carried from San Francisco to Yuma for ten dollars per ton, and although Los Angeles is about thirty-six hours nearer Yuma than San Francisco, it costs the merchants of Los Angeles just the same price—ten dollars per ton—to export their grain there. Instances of further discriminations in favor of localities have already been noticed in this discussion, and thousands of additional instances could be cited, as well as the other unjust enforcement of arbitrary rates, made at points where no relief can be had from the extortion of the carrying companies, for the sole purpose of exacting all the tribute which the commodities carried will stand. On the other hand, where there is competition, a carload of freight is carried a hundred miles for a sum less than is charged for carrying the same freight ten miles where there is no competition. It is a matter of fact that upon small communities great impositions are practiced in putting upon them enormous charges for transportation, in order that the companies may be the better able to carry from the great cities at very low rates. And it is to abolish this abuse that this section is offered. I think all will agree with me that this injustice to the shippers from intermediate points is getting to be too grievous to be borne much longer, and a remedy must be found.

It is the experience of the past which tells us that we cannot expect the remedy from, or through, Legislatures. If restrictive laws were enacted, the companies would get other Legislatures to repeal them—therefore the necessity of putting in a constitutional provision which cannot be repealed, and which, being enforced under proper legislation, cannot fail to be salutary in its influence.

The next section provides for the creation of a Board of Railroad Commissioners, who "shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to correct abuses by railroad corporations or other transportation companies, establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight for railroad or other transportation companies," etc.

It has been said by gentlemen on this floor that this section contemplates the creation of a triumvirate, having powers that are absolute, exercising executive, judicial, and legislative functions combined. Well, sir, what if it does? To my mind there is merit in the proposition. I believe it is a correct one—for here are three officers of the State clothed with the sole power, not only to regulate fares and freights, but to enforce a proper obedience. It is an absolute necessity, to my mind, that there should be public officers charged with the duty of investigating these outrages and wrongs, and having the power to apply the remedy. It is evident to all that the acts of this Commission must fall far short of our anticipations, unless we provide some means by which they can be enforced.

The eloquent gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, spoke of the limited powers of existing Railroad Commissioners, especially the English Commissioners. Why, sir, the English Board of Railroad Commissioners provide for the limitation of freights and fares, as well as the character of the train's service, requiring them to run first, second, and third-class trains, and specifying the time for such service; also how cars shall be constructed, the length, breadth, heighth, etc., and various regulations, completely demonstrating the fact of their having and exercising the same powers in effect as are sought to be conferred upon the Commissioners provided for in this section. The gentleman admits the fact that in England the solution of the railroad question was recognized as an anomaly in the exercise of governmental powers, and that a creation of an anomalous power was necessary; that it required a Board possessed of different functions from any of the former methods; that it should possess powers of a combined legislative, executive, and judicial character. He admitted further, that there it was impracticable for Parliament to deal with the question, and that in order for the workings of this supervisory and controlling Board to be effectual, they should be clothed with arbitrary powers in some particulars, and then attempts to argue from the fact that they are called upon to exercise these arbitrary powers in but few instances, that the necessity for the existence of such a Board is brought into question. Does not the gentleman know that the very fact of the existence of such a Board, clothed with ample remedial powers, and ready to exercise the same upon the development of any reason for so doing, is, in itself, the reason why so little call is made upon it? And I am frank, sir, in saying that if we had had heretofore as thorough a control over the carrying companies in this State as is maintained in England, there would never have arisen this vast system of extortion and unjust discrimination, that now characterizes the railroad operations in this State.

No, sir; there is no question in my mind as to the duty of the State to exercise, through this Commission, all the powers contemplated by it, anomalous though it may be, if her citizens are to be protected. The gentleman's argument, therefore, resolves itself down to this: that under the claim of vested rights these corporations can bid defiance to the government—if they will acknowledge there is a government. He, with other gentlemen who have spoken on this subject, claim, according to the arguments they have made, that there is no government that can control, and regulate, and limit their demands. I maintain, sir, that corporations are subject to governmental powers, the same as individuals. I hold that the charges of railroad corporations can be limited, the same as tolls of ferry, bridge, plank road, and turnpike companies. It is a fallacy to assert that a railroad, or any private corporation, can have a vested right in any governmental power. It has been said that this is a matter of legislation. Whenever it suits some gentlemen on this floor to oppose certain measures, it is legislation; but when it suits their purpose to thrust the same into the Constitution, it is constitutional law. I have not heard any definition here of constitutional law as contradistinguished from legislation. I do not know where to draw the line. No one has attempted to do this. It is legislation when they do not want it, and it is Constitution when they want it placed in the fundamental law.

The Convention of Massachusetts of eighteen hundred and twenty, in an address to the people—a document prepared by Judge Story, Chief Justice Shaw, Daniel Webster, and a dozen other great lawyers and eminent men, set up the distinction, and this is what they said: "In framing a Constitution, or revising one for an extensive commonwealth, in which various interests are comprised, nothing more can be hoped for than to establish general rules adapted to secure the greatest good for the whole society."

This provision, I hold, is one of that kind—a "general rule for the greatest good." It is not mere legislation, and it is one of the most important on this subject. I am opposed to this eternal cry of legislation. We know what will be the result if we give up this matter of the regulation of corporations into the hands of the Legislature. The people are demanding that we secure them this protection through the medium of the organic law, and, sir, for my part, I am willing that organic law shall stand between the people and these vast moneyed corporations. The time has come when the constitutional power of the State should be brought in use to protect the people. In my judgment there can be nothing done by this Convention that will give such universal satisfaction as providing in the Constitution for the protection of the people against the aggressions and extortions of these great monopolies. Railroads are great and grand things. I place as high an estimate on the inestimable value of these immense commercial enterprises that are running throughout our State and country as any man, but I would rather see every railroad which has been constructed sunk out of sight, than to see this free people become, as they gradually are becoming, the slaves of these immense corporations. No gentleman has had the hardihood to assert that abuses do not exist. They not only exist, but are practiced under the forms of law. This crying evil demands redress at our hands. This robbery under the forms of law should be ended. The New York Evening Express recently, in an article on railroads, said:

"The most vital issue in the United States to-day, is whether the State shall be ruled by the people or ruined by the corporations."

This is too true. The daylight robbers are abroad, stealing from the people under the protection of miserable charters, and the practice is being rendered respectable by being followed under the cover of legalized methods, which gentlemen say here we cannot interfere with. I do not know that I can better illustrate the practice than by reading an extract from a chapter of Erie:

"Pirates are commonly supposed to have been haltered and hung out of existence, when the Barbary Powers and the Buccaneers of the Spanish Main had been finally dealt with. Yet freebooters are not extinct; they have only transferred their operations to the land, and conducted them in more or less accordance with the forms of law, until, at last so great a proficiency have they attained, that the commerce of the world is more equally, but far more heavily, taxed in their behalf than would ever have entered into their wildest hopes, while, outside the law, they simply made all persons stand and deliver. Now, too, they no longer live in terror of the rope, skulking in the hiding place of thieves, but flaunt themselves in the resorts of trade and fashion, and disdaining such titles as once satisfied ancient Pistol, or Captain Macheath, they are recognized as 'President this,' or 'Colonel that.' They rob and steal in every conceivable manner. We have seen our lands taken from the people and given to these corporations by corrupt Congresses, and these same corporations whose miserable, grasping, and soulless existences have been flattered into life by this wholesale robbery of the people, using the wealth of which they have defrauded you and I to corrupt our Legislatures and our Courts, until they are almost able to defy us."

These corporations are not the great benefit to the people they are said to be. They have laid their blighting hands upon every avenue of labor, have prostrated industries, reduced wages to starvation prices, and, in pursuance of this policy, have introduced into our midst, to compete with our white labor, swarms of the most degraded race whom God ever knew, or the devil ever dreamed of—the filthy, leprous Chinese—a race to whom no refinement is possible and no civilization attainable; to whom virtue is unknown, and vice and depravity their only religion. Our white laborers cannot compete with them, and are forced to succumb and accept labor from these corporations for the support of themselves and their families at the mere pittance of one dollar per day. This great State, with resources vast enough to support thirty millions of people, has only a population of eight hundred thousand, and notwithstanding this, there are thousands of our people suffering the greatest poverty in consequence of the general corruption of the times.

And now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I desire to say that my constituents, who have sent me here, have charged me to give all possible aid to the curtailment and limitation of the powers of these grasping corporations, and the abolishment of the abuses and evils which have grown up under their fostering care, and every sense of my duty to them, as well as all of my personal convictions, induce me to vote for these sections as they stand. To these corporations, together with the privileges that have been granted, there has been confided a high, sacred trust; and, sir, standing upon the broad platform of reform, I demand that in the enjoyment of their privileges they shall also discharge their trust with a proper regard for the welfare of the people, who, in giving the one, will insist upon the other.

SPEECH OF MR. EAGON.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: I am well aware that the Convention is becoming wearied over the protracted discussion of this question, and I need not detain this body any great length of time in hearing what I have to say. I would not detain them at all; yet, sir, there are some things I desire to say in order to set myself right in voting as I shall upon the questions now under consideration. I have not occupied any of the attention of this Convention before, and I shall ask their indulgence that I may say a few words, more in explanation of my vote than for the purpose of attempting to produce any new arguments that will influence the vote or action of any gentleman upon this floor. Now, sir, I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, as modified by Judge Hager. I am in favor of that amendment, for the reason that I am unalterably opposed to section twenty, creating this Commission. I believe, sir, that the object sought to be accomplished might very well be left to the Legislature. In voting as I shall, I cannot be charged as being either a friend or a foe to the great railroad corporations of this State. I have never had any connection with them, and never was said to be their friend or their foe; but I have always acted in public life in a manner to do justice, both to the people and the railroad corporations, and always intend to do so. Now, sir, I have not lost faith in the people. Like Judge Shafter, I believe an honest Legislature can be elected, if the people themselves will look to it and see that honest men are sent to the Legislature. It has been too often the case that these positions are left to men incapable of filling them—ignored by good men for more remunerative offices, without receiving proper attention from the people. I believe, sir, that this section twenty is in conflict with the spirit of our Government. It is a centralization of power that no man who believes in the true principles of government can give his sanction to if he will investigate the matter.

I have arrived at these conclusions, not from the force of the argument of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, because I differ with him as to the line of his argument. That argument was more a defense of the railroad corporations than it was to sustain right constitutional principles. I differ also with the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, in regard to his conclusions, but I am satisfied that a great portion of his argument is correct. There is no need of reiterating here what everybody knows. Go back to the commencement of railroading in this State, when Governor Haight first took a stand against railroads. These matters have been written upon and talked over day after day and year after year. Every man in this assembly knows well enough what the grievances of the people are. They know that these questions have been talked over. Every man in this body has read them. Every man knows that there has been great wrongs perpetrated by the railroad companies, but that is not the question here. The question here, in my judgment, is where the lodgment of this power to control should be. It is admitted by all that we have a right to control freights and fares; that we have a right to legislate against discriminations; and all we have to do is to arrive at the simple conclusion as to where this power to control should be lodged. Is it better, I ask, to lodge it in the hands of a Commission composed of three men, or is it better to lodge it with the people themselves? Let me say right here, that my honest conviction is, as soon as this Convention attempts to take that power away from the people of this State and place it in other hands, the people of this State will spit upon your Constitution, and I would not blame them for doing so. What right have we to take away from the people the great right of government—under a republican form of government—to act through the Courts?

Why, sir, if the people send corrupt men here without intending to do so, is it not an argument to throw in their faces that they themselves are to blame? It seems to me so. I can argue it from no other point. If the people are corrupt, they will send corrupt men to the Legislature, which I deny as a general thing has been done. If they are honest they will send their best and purest men here. I think they will hold the members of the Legislature to a stricter accountability hereafter. This being done, sir, would you take this power away from the people and place it in the hands of three frail men? As has been intimated by Judge Terry, I would not place these men in a position where they would be so tempted as these Commissioners would be under this condition of affairs, provided these railroad corporations are as corrupt as you make them out to be.

Now, sir, I say the people of this State will not give up this power. It is not a mere matter of legislation, that can be undone in two years should it prove oppressive. Gentlemen forget, it seems to me, the responsibility that is placed upon them. They forget the importance and the magnitude of the act they are about committing in this Convention. They do not look to the great principles of our Government; that it is republican in form; they do not stop to consider that the greatest, most important thing the people can do is to frame an organic law. Gentlemen have forgotten, I think, that they have been sent here for the purpose of founding a government for one of the greatest and grandest States in this Union. And yet they would put this into the Constitution, where it cannot be changed, altered, or amended; no matter what hardships it may work, it must stand there until a new Constitution is framed, if you place this great power, this vast power, this absolute power, in the hands of these three men.

Then, let us look further to the succeeding section, which districts this State, and says how these Commissioners shall be elected, and from what portions of the State they shall be elected. Now, it has been the cry all over the State for years, and it is the cry in this Convention to-day, that the railroad corporations control the politics of the State; that they control our legislative bodies; that they control our Courts; that they have a controlling power over this body. I deny it, sir; but if such is the case, how easy it would be for them, under the classification here, to elect three men to do their bidding, and do as they should dictate against the people. If you will notice how the State is districted—and certainly I mean no disrespect to the committee, for it would have been almost impossible to have done otherwise—you will find that the railroad passes through two thirds of the counties in every district. We know they sometimes interfere in the politics of the State. They control many of our primary meetings, and political conventions. How easy it will be to go into these districts where, out of twenty-two counties, ten are intersected by railroads, how easy it will be for them to control our primary meetings, and our conventions, and nominate three men who will carry out their wishes and desires. I say they could do it without any trouble at all. It is absurd to say that we can carry on this government without parties. They can organize a party in their favor if they see fit to do so. Now, sir, they could elect three men as easily—more easily—than they could elect one hundred and twenty men to the Legislature. If they can elect or control a body of one hundred and twenty men, how much more easily can they control three men elected under their influence, and in their own cause. And there is no denying the fact that, if they see proper, they can have influence and power in our political organization, and they do have it.

For these reasons I am opposed to this twentieth section. I shall vote against it upon the ground that I do not wish to take the power out of the hands of the people. I believe it can be controlled better by the Legislature, that the power will be safer in the Legislature, than in the hands of these three men. I believe, sir, again, that if we put that into the Constitution, the people will not allow that power to pass out of their hands, and that they will reject what we have done here, and what we may do, and all our work will go for naught. And, sir, as I said before, I am not here to protect railroads or to ruin railroads. I believe that the right place to lodge this power is in the Legislature, not in the hands of the Commissioners, therefore my vote shall be cast against this section and the sections following it, and I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, as modified by Mr. Hager. I believe that is all we were sent here to do upon this question, nothing else; not to take the power out of the hands of the people and place it in the hands of three men. If there is danger in the others, there is ten times more danger in bringing it down to the point the committee would have us bring it to. Some of the gentlemen who have spoken here, Mr. Beerstecher, for one, who has not been a resident of this State for more than a year, and has recounted all the things that are out of place. He, perhaps, has some excuse, but it seems to me that this is only consuming time to no good purpose. It is not the place. If these Commissioners are to be elected, these gentlemen should go before them and make their speeches there. Either before them or the Legislature is the place to rectify these evils, if they exist.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I would not again claim the attention of the Convention in discussing the subject before us, did I not believe the gravity of the questions involved demanded it. I do not propose to make any defense to personal allusions made of myself, or explain the motives which have actuated me in the performance of my official duties in this Convention, except only wherein the public interest may be affected thereby.

The report now under consideration requires no apology, and will receive none at my hands; yet, in so far as the criticisms of this great measure recommended by this report associates the person with the subject, I am entitled to be heard.

It has been stated that members of this Convention, favoring the report of your Committee on Corporations, are candidates for office, and are, hence, shaping their actions here so as to ingratiate themselves into the good wishes of the people, and thus secure their election. If this were true, which I deny, it proves too much, for it shows the people are in favor of the report. Whom do we represent, if not the people? For whom are we making a new Constitution? Who are to pass upon our work? The people? By whom are we to be judged, but by the people? For one, here! And, now, let me say, I am a candidate for no office in the gift of the people; yet it is honorable to aspire to public station. In a republic no man should hold himself aloof from politics, or avoid the duties or responsibilities of his citizenship. An honorable ambition to serve one's country is laudable, and every citizen should be willing—nay, anxious—to do so upon all fit occasions.

I say this much, sir, because I understand the peculiar tactics used to underrate the value of the report of the committee of which I am a member. Sir, in my opening remarks, the other day, on the article on corporations, I attempted to make clear five points, viz.: First, that the railroads of the country had now a virtual monopoly of the carrying trade; second, that competition was practically impossible; third, that the power of these great corporations was so boundless that the rights of the people were in danger, unless some remedy was devised; fourth, that regulation was the only practical remedy; and, fifth, that the best and safest form of regulation, for both the people and the railroads, was by a Commission. I attempted to present these five propositions, and to convince members of the Convention that these were the real questions at issue.

As far as I understand it, the gentlemen upon the other side have admitted—at least not denied—the truth of the first two propositions, namely: that the railroads of the country have now a virtual monopoly of the carrying trade; and, second, that competition is practically impossible. But they deny the truth of the last three of these propositions. And upon these three arises the issue between us.

Sir, before I proceed to discuss these, I wish to call attention to some of the arguments made by the distinguished gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton. I regret exceedingly he is not in his seat. My distinguished friend commenced by saying that I had deceived the people of this State, and the members of this Convention, and quoted from my opening remarks as follows:

"And let me say that this is nothing new. I want you to understand distinctly that the committee do not claim the honor of inventing this. We find that section—or one of the same purport—in several of the more recent Constitutions adopted by various States in the Union. I find section three of the Pennsylvania reads as follows."

Now, sir, I did not use those words; and I read the sections from the Pennsylvania and Missouri Constitutions. And here, and now, after having reëxamined them with great care, I say that in substance—in substance—the same are found in the Constitutions of these two States. And even if they had not been, my reading those sections showed exactly what I meant, and clearly vindicated any unintentional misstatement I may have made on that occasion. And in pursuing that subject, I took occasion also to refer to the distinguished men who participated in the framing of that Constitution in Pennsylvania, and referred to ex-Governor Bigler, Jere. Black, and other distinguished men of the State of Pennsylvania—men who had lived there for over half a century, some of them nearly three quarters of a century—and that these men took part in the debates in the Pennsylvania Constitutional Convention, and every one of them maintained that it was necessary to adopt such a provision in the Constitution of Pennsylvania.

The gentleman took occasion to say in his speech that I had misquoted from their speeches that the section in the Pennsylvania Constitution was passed by a simple majority of three, and that Jere. Black was not a member of the Convention at the time, having resigned some time before. Let me say, sir, that it was a mistake in one respect only.

On looking at the records, I find that Jere. Black had resigned his position as a member of the Constitutional Convention. I so stated on the floor of this Convention, which should have convinced the gentleman that there was no intention on my part to deceive the Convention. But, sir, in answer to the assertion of the gentleman, let me call the attention of the Convention to what Jere. Black did say, and then we will be able to observe whether or not I have led the Convention into error as to Mr. Black's position.

I will read from page four hundred and eighty-seven, of volume two, of the Debates of the Pennsylvania Convention, from remarks made by Mr. Black, upon the question of imposing new penalties and new oaths upon the members of the Legislature, upon the ground that they could not be trusted when dealing with corporations. Here is what he says:

"By such dereliction of duty on the part of the Legislature, that corporation has grown so mighty that its little finger is thicker than the laws of the commonwealth which created it. I do not say it bestrides your narrow State like a Colossus, for the ancient Colossus of Rhodes was but the image of a pigmy in comparison to this Colossus of railroads. Her stride is across the continent from ocean to ocean. Her head is in the clouds, and the arms of her gigantic power stretch out on either side from one horizon to the other."

That was the quotation, sir, which I intended to make when I read, or supposed I read, from Jere. Black, in my former remarks on this subject, but I got hold, in the hurry of the moment, of the wrong page; my distinguished friend is entitled to all the benefit of the criticism. Again I read, from page four hundred and eighty-nine of the same volume, in regard to the control of these great corporations, where Jere. Black says:

"The gentleman preceding me has described the tree of liberty, as his poetic fancy sees it in the good time coming, when weary men shall rest under its shade, and singing birds shall inhabit its branches, and make most agreeable music. But what is the condition of that tree now? Weary men do, indeed, rest under it, but they rest in their unrest, and the longer they remain there the more weary they become. And the birds—it is not the wood-lark, nor the thrush, nor the nightingale, nor any of the musical tribe that inhabit the branches of our tree—the foulest birds that wing the air have made it their roosting-place, and their obscene droppings cover all the plain about them; the kite, with his beak always sharpened for some cruel repast; the vulture, ever ready to swoop down upon his prey; the buzzard, digesting his filthy meal, and watching for the moment when he can gorge himself again upon the prostrate carcass of the commonwealth. And the raven is hoarse that sits there croaking despair to all who approach for any clean or honest purpose."

He was then describing the power, the influence, the unparalleled and inordinate influence of these great corporations over the Legislature of that commonwealth. He says further:

"We may preserve the forms of republican government, but the substance will pass away, and with it will depart all that is perfect in politics, all that is pure in morals, all that makes life, liberty, and property secure, all that makes existence in a free country worth having."

I call attention to this, sir, because, as before stated, by an oversight the other day I read from Charles Black instead of Jere. Black, and my distinguished friend took occasion to say that I had deceived the members of this Convention and the people of this State. I now leave the subject as to the position taken by Jere. Black in the Pennsylvania Constitutional Convention on the question of corporations to the enjoyment of the gentleman from Sacramento, and in conclusion on this point add: that no more incisive argument could be made in favor of the position taken by your committee than that marked out in the speeches of Jere. Black, made years before in the Pennsylvania Constitutional Convention.

The gentleman from Sacramento falls into another error when he says:

"Now, sir, it is a noticeable fact that not a single provision contained in the section now under review can be found either in the Constitution of Illinois or of Colorado.

"The section is inoculated with two vicious principles which are contained in the Constitution of Pennsylvania of eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and one in that of Missouri of eighteen hundred and seventy-five."

I merely said, and members will remember it, that the Constitutions of Illinois and Colorado contained provisions very similar to these sections under discussion. I repeat that to-day. Without reading from these Constitutions, I respectfully ask that gentlemen will refer to them, and see whether I am right or wrong. I understand that all the words used in these sections are not there; that these sections were not copied from those verbatim. I mean by that, that our section nineteen is not copied directly letter for letter, word for word, from any of those Constitutions. But what I said was true, that this section contained the substance of what is in those Constitutions, and I have made no mistake in that respect. The gentleman says further:

"No Constitution yet exhibited here contains any provision attempting the regulation of transportation by individuals, or by companies, or corporations, other than quasi-public, such as railroad and canal corporations."

Sir, our section nineteen, as reported, does apply to all transportation companies, and I submit to the Convention, to the friends of this measure, to those who are in favor of some regulation of this character, if it is not a wise provision to make it apply to all transportation companies. The reason of that is, that there shall not be any such thing possible as a wheel within a wheel; that there shall not be a transportation company within a railroad company, that will be irresponsible in itself; that in itself will do all the transporting of freight and passengers in this State, and yet which will not come under the control of the Government, or be bound to obey the law. Hence, your committee put that in, and I think it makes the section more perfect, and I think it will commend itself to the favorable judgment of this committee, and to the favorable consideration of the people of this State.

Again, my distinguished friend in his speech says, and I shall pass over that matter as fast as possible: "We have a right to expect from a gentleman occupying the high position of Chairman of one of the most important committees of this house, a careful comparison of systems relating to the subject committed to his charge; we expect from him sound and judicious counsels regarding it; above all, we demand of him rigid exactness in his statements of facts. Such misrepresentations as I have noted would be hardly excusable if made in the heat of debate, but when they are made in cold blood; when they occur in a speech which was weeks in process of incubation, and for which the columns of a widely extended and influential journal were offered days in advance; when they are thus paraded to propagate, mislead, and poison the public mind; when their evils are thus diffused, they are simply atrocious."

In reply to this sweeping indictment, I beg leave to say, it strikes me that if it was done for the purpose of poisoning the public mind; if it was done for the purpose of misleading and deceiving the members of this Convention; if it was done in an atrocious manner; then this Convention ought to know it. I appeal to what I said upon that occasion. I appeal to the history of these proceedings, if when I discussed the question at that time I did not treat it with all the candor that it was possible, at least for me, to bring to bear upon it. I know I tried to avoid personalities. Even if it had been in my power to punish the corporations, I had no enemies to punish, and I know I had no friends to reward. I did not come into the contest with anything rankling in my heart. I was and am but an instrument in the hands of this Convention, as Chairman of that committee, to present before you our views upon this question. I understand the importance of the question at issue. I know better than the gentleman from Sacramento can tell me how important it is, and how difficult to understand, and still how much more difficult to reach and remedy the evil complained of. But I appeal to the truth of history if on that occasion, by any word, or by any act, or any misrepresentation, I in any manner did anything, or said a word that was poison in its character or atrocious in its results. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Sacramento did not intend to say that I had, but he was trying to make the point which advocates often make when they have a bad case, namely, showing inconsistencies, if there be any, in the arguments of the opposite counsel, and thereby making the subject dwindle down to the insignificant size of the person making the argument.

I think this question rises away above all personal considerations; if it does not, then we had better adjourn and go home. If it does not rise above ordinary personal considerations and personal feelings, if it does not rise to the plain of broad statesmanship, then, sir, it is not worthy of our serious consideration. My friends upon the other side, the gentleman from Marin and the gentleman from Sacramento, seem anxious upon every occasion which offers, to tell this Convention that we who favor these reforms are just ready to put on our ascension robes, that we think we are clothed in immaculate robes of white, and that we will not admit that anybody else, in the Convention or out of it, has any reason for the faith that is in them. Sir, I know I expressed the opinions of the committee of which I am a member, when I said we approached the discussion of this subject with great solicitude. That for weeks almost continually we met in committee and discussed these questions. We knew how difficult it was to reach any result that would meet and remedy the evils complained of, and had no other object in view except to relieve the people of this State from what they believed was a great wrong. Again, sir, my distinguished friend from Sacramento took occasion to say that our report was replete with bad grammar and worse sense; that because of the bad language no one could tell what it meant. And yet, if I recollect rightly, the gentleman has discussed these sections for hours and hours upon this floor, maintaining that these very sections, framed in the very language they are, would work a terrible hardship upon the railroads, if not destroy them. Now, if this report does not present any ideas, if the grammar is so bad, if this report does not express any sense, I commend the matter to the serious consideration of this Convention, that it will not require any argument to show that these sections confer no power. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Convention, it is not the grammar, it is not the want of sense, that troubles these gentlemen—not a bit of it. My friend from Sacramento could stand the bad grammar, and the bad construction—it is not that that bothers him—very far from it. It is because there is too much in it; because it means too much; because it goes too far. That is the trouble. The report does mean something, and hence these criticisms. If the sections referred to had meant nothing, there would have been no struggle like this to cause their defeat in this Convention.

I think, also, my friend from Sacramento made a very grave mistake when he challenged us to produce any great names anywhere who were in favor of a similar proposition. He said it could not be so, and he paused in the debate to ask me to name some of them.

I will call your attention to a few great minds of the country who have favored similar propositions. In the Forty-third Congress, which met two years ago, Mr. McCrary, present Secretary of War, was appointed Chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals, of the Forty-third Congress, and during that session he proposed a bill providing for the appointment of a Commission of nine persons, with full power to require reports from all the railroads and other transportation companies engaged in commerce between the States, and to regulate and enforce the rates of fares, that they, the Commission, might adopt. The bill reported by that committee inspired a very lengthy debate, which runs through page after page of the Congressional Record, and I will give the names of some of the distinguished men, members of the House of Representatives, who favored the bill. Among them were: Messrs. McCrary, Hoar, Hurlbut, Pratt, of Iowa, Stanard, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of Missouri, Hazelton, Fort, Orr, Woodworth, J. A. Smith, of Virginia, Colton, Mellish, Hawley, present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Monroe, Lawrence, Kasson, McNulta, Gunckell, Cobwin, Garfield, Kendall, Erastus Wells, of Missouri, Holman, and Wolfe, of Indiana. The bill passed the lower house, but reached the Senate too late in the session to reach final action at that session of Congress. The arguments made in the discussion of this great question, I cannot better express than by reading an extract of a speech made by the Hon. J. P. Jones, Senator from Nevada. The argument made by advocates in favor of the McCrary bill, says Senator Jones, was:

"That their, the railroad companies, operations are part of that general movement known as commerce, which by the Constitution of the United States is placed under the regulative control of Congress. That where railroad operations are inter-State in mileage, extent, and character, they must necessarily be subject to such control. That it is both the right and duty of Congress to regulate, supervise, control, or it may be to possess and own them. The sovereignty rests in this practical power of Congress. It is in all respects a correlative of the rights to create such corporations, to grant them great franchises, to exercise the high prerogative of eminent domain in their behalf and for their security; above all, it is a necessary sequence to the power to grant subsidies to railroads and otherwise aid in their construction."

These were the arguments expressed by these distinguished gentlemen in favor of the bill, and that bill passed the House, as I said, but reached the Senate too late in the session for final action. Later than that, on February ninth, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, Representative J. Q. Smith, of Ohio, offered a resolution setting forth that Congress has the constitutional power to regulate by law commerce between the several States, and protect the people "from all unjust or oppressive tolls, taxations, obstructions, or other burdens, whether imposed by railroad companies or combinations thereof," and that the "condition and magnitude of the commerce among the several States are such as to demand the prompt and wise exercise of the power and duty declared in this resolution."

This resolution was passed by a vote of one hundred and twelve to sixty-four. But more recently, sir, in the Senate of the United States, a committee was formed, of which Mr. Windom was Chairman. That committee, after a lengthy examination of the subject, framed the following report and recommendations, which was adopted by the Senate of the United States: First, That legislation be framed to enforce the publication of all schedules of freight and fares made and issued by the inter-State railroads, and that no changes therein shall be allowed till after due notice, to be fixed by law. Second, That quantity should be receipted for, under regulation to be fixed by law, for freight carried between States. Third, That inter-State railroads touching at any inland port or point should be prohibited from charging more to or from such port or point than to or from a more distant point on the line. Fourth, That the power of the several States should be exercised to prohibit inflation of the stock by the process known as "watering" it, or by any other method. The States should also prohibit railroad officials from being interested in the "non-coöperative" freight or car companies or lines. Fifth, That Congress should authorize the organization of a bureau of internal commerce, empowered to collect and report all necessary information on the subject, and also to compel inter-State transportation companies to report at least annually, under oath, their rates of freights and fares, receipts and expenditures, sales of bonds and stock, cost of same, amount and value of commodities carried, together with such other facts as the chief of the bureau may deem necessary.

The committee further found that the problem of cheap transportation could only find solution in governmental control, and through the construction by Government of one or more through railroads as competing lines, and by the improvement of certain natural, and the construction of certain artificial waterways, which were specified. Besides other provisions which will be found in the report of the committee, the leading men of that body, let me say, favored the adoption of these resolutions.

This question has been before the Congress of the United States for a period of four years and over, and in a very short time Congress will doubtless find some adequate means of remedying the evil as far as inter-State commerce goes. Your committee, sir, did not attempt to go beyond the boundaries of the State, and the criticisms made by the gentleman from Sacramento upon the point, that it was unconstitutional, because we undertook to regulate inter-State commerce, seems to me very fallacious. He got that from the following expression found in section nineteen:

"No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of freight or passengers within this State, or coming to or going from any other State."

"Coming from or going to any other State." Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Convention, that the only reasonable construction that can be given to that section is that the regulation as to freights and fares shall affect only freights and fares within this State, and coming from other States and going to other States. Mr. Edgerton also said in his speech that heretofore there never had been any successful attempt made at regulating fares and freights. That it was a false principle, that it would result in nothing, that we are standing upon dangerous ground when we attempt it, and that the ownership and management of property must go hand in hand. Now, sir, I submit, that there has been, and there is to-day, a virtual regulation of freights and fares in a great many of the States of this Union. In England this is done, and in nearly all of the European Governments, and there is in the United States to-day, as for instance in the regulation of the transportation of cattle and other live stock. Only two years ago Congress passed a law providing that in the transportation of cattle by railroad from one point to another, it should be done in a certain specified manner, directing the manner and how often trains should stop, and how long they should run without turning them out of the cars for water and feed; and all the railroad companies, at least all east of the Rocky Mountains, obey that rule now, and it seems to work exceedingly well. In England, in relation to the freight and passenger tariff, the Commissioners have control over the subject. There are some questions, it is true, which they do not touch.

Looking at the law passed by Parliament in eighteen hundred and seventy-three, organizing the Commission and fixing its powers, I find, on page one hundred and fifty-three of the Law Journal, volume forty-two, among other powers, the following:

"It shall not be lawful for the Commissioners in any case to compel any company to accept lower mileage rates than the mileage rates which such company may for the time being legally be charging for like traffic carried by a like mode of transit on any other line of communication between the same points, being the points of arrival and departure of the through route; and the Commissioners shall have power to hear and determine any question or dispute which may arise with respect to the terminal charges of any railway company, where such charges have not been fixed by any Act of Parliament, and to decide what is a reasonable sum to be paid to any company for loading or unloading, covering collection, delivery, and other services of a like nature. Any decision of the Commissioners under this section shall be binding on all Courts and in all legal proceedings whatsoever."

Parliament has always controlled these companies in England, not in all cases to the fullest extent of governmental control, but in a large portion of them, and especially the class by which the people are most affected, such as second-class and third-class passenger traffic. The construction given to these rules is very much stronger than any that can possibly be given to sections nineteen and twenty of this report.

Again, on page one hundred and fifty-five of the same book we find the following:

"For the purposes of this Act the Commissioners shall—subject as in this Act mentioned—have full power to decide all questions, whether of law or of fact; and shall also have the following powers—that is to say: (a.) They may, by themselves or by any person appointed by them to prosecute any inquiry, enter and inspect any place or building, being the property or under the control of any railway or canal company, the entry or inspection of which appears to them requisite. (b.) They may require the attendance of all such persons as they think fit to come before them, and examine, and may require answers or returns to such inquiries as they may think fit to make. (c.) They may require the production of all books, papers, and documents relating to the matters before them. (d.) They may administer an oath. (e.) They may, when sitting in open Court, punish for contempt, in like manner as if they were a Court of record.

"The Commissioners may review, and rescind or vary, any decision or order previously made by them, or any of them. Save as aforesaid, every decision and order of the Commissioners shall be final."

Thus, you see, these provisions found in our report are not new. We can find abundance of precedents for our action. While I admit that in some instances the control of railroads by State Legislatures has not worked successfully, yet it must have a commencement, and this is but a commencement. But admitting partial, or even total failure, in some instances, there are now no less than sixteen of the States of this Union that have Railroad Commissioners, and every one of them organized within the last ten or twelve years. In the Congress of the United States the first time this question was ever discussed was within the last six or seven years, so far as the regulation of railroads was concerned. Then, in our Courts, the decisions affecting railroad transportation companies only date back seven or eight years at most.

I need not stop to speak of all the benefits of this section. I find that other distinguished men besides those I have named have favored the regulation by the States; and in our own State, Senator Booth, who favored it very strongly—and if I recollect rightly, my friend, Judge Hager, favored the resolution which came into the Senate from the House. I think he was in favor of appointing that committee.

MR. HAGER. That committee was appointed before. I was there when the report came in. I will say that when a report comes in the body votes to receive it, and it is printed. We do not undertake to subscribe to it, because we could not read it or know what it contained until it was printed.

MR. ESTEE. I find, also, that my distinguished friend from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, the other day said:

"Sir, I unhesitatingly affirm that in every instance in which your Legislature has been called upon to act upon this subject, it has treated it intelligently, wisely, and to the best interests of the people, as well as of the corporations."

And yet he follows it up by saying that the interference of the people of this State with this class of property is unwise, and productive of mischievous results. I find some very good authority on this question, and I shall call attention to the fact that my friend from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, has changed his views a great deal on the subject.

Now, I do not claim that a gentleman has no right to change his views. On the contrary, I believe he has, and I do not believe, either, that the fact of the gentleman's actions, four or five years ago, being inconsistent with his actions now, is necessarily evidence of the fallacy of his position to-day, except in so far as what he said four or five years ago is true. I quote from a speech delivered by the gentleman on August eighteenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, on the subject of freights and fares. I am aware that the gentleman's inconsistency, if he be inconsistent, does not necessarily weaken his argument; but as his speech of eighteen hundred and seventy-three was such an able one, and the authority so undoubted, I desire to read a short extract from it, merely to sustain my side of the case, and to show that he was right then and wrong now. I want to show what were the opinions of a very able man on this subject. He says:
