IMPLICATIONS OF PRESENT TRENDS IN THE HIGH-SCHOOL PROGRAM

An Address given at a session of the Department of Secondary-School Principals, July 2, 1935, Denver, Colorado

By A. J. STODDARD

Superintendent of Schools, Providence, Rhode Island
President, Department of Superintendence, N. E. A.

In dealing with the subject of trends and their implications, one must realize that there are many trends and many implications; they are without number. I shall try to consider at least the most prevalent ones, and the ones that you and I will have to deal much with in our life time.

There are three trends or changes that have become definite since I have been dealing with the high schools.

The first change is in enrollment. In 1920, just fifteen years ago, if you had lined up all the boys and girls of America of what we call high-school age, and walked down the line, tapping every one of them who was in high school, and telling the others to step back out of line, you would have tapped every seventh boy or girl, and six would have stepped back; I want to contrast that, if I may, with last year's enrollment; as nearly as I can get the facts, if you were to walk down that line to-day, and tap those registered in a high school, you would tap two out of three. That is a fact of startling interest to this nation of ours, and of significance to the world as a whole.

The second change is only starting, that is, the number and multiplicity of courses offered in the high schools. I was graduated from high school in 1905; at that time we had two courses in that high school, college preparatory and manual training. It was not long before they had added other courses, some required and some elective; I suppose they have many courses now, and have come a long way along the road of serving the needs of the times. There is still a long way to go; you and I will not come to the end of this road in our lifetime, of course, because as every new necessity is met, it leads outward into other phases of development, so that there never is an end to progress. This change is not cared for just by adding a multitude of new classes to the school curriculum; whole new departments have been added; many technical or industrial classes.

The third change has been the attempt on the part of the school to make courses of study and the materials of instruction minister to individual needs more definitely than ever before. Rare, indeed, is the present-day school where the boy or girl cannot find courses pretty well suited to his or her individual wants or needs. We haven't anywhere near finished this job, but we are headed that way.

As I have said, it is a growing process; just about the time we feel we have successfully established a new line of study, we find that the very change itself is indicating a trend that must be followed out. In the matter of expanding a curriculum to fit individual needs and capabilities, the very moment we feel we have accomplished something, suddenly we find that a whole new path has opened up, and we are still far from our ideal, the ideal of a curriculum which would meet the needs and abilities of each individual to fit him for useful living. This struggle has not been peculiar to high schools alone, but is being faced throughout the whole educational scheme.

There has been great development in extra-curriculum activities to carry on the interests and talents of the individual; and lots of other changes have taken place; the attitudes of teachers have changed, classroom procedure has been revolutionized. We could speak of many other types of changes. But these three have been singled out for our consideration today.

Many of our ideas are shifting. Take the matter of the problem of the size of classes in high schools; of the proper age for high-school pupils. There is strong evidence to lead us to believe that we are not going to conceive of high-school education in the future as we have in the past. Much, therefore, of what I am saying comes under the head of prophecy; when we let our minds run in pursuit of present possibilities many things heretofore considered impractical, or not considered at all, appear to be logical and reasonable developments of our needs. As Sam Johnson said, "When we can turn our minds from a contemplation of the present and the past, and project our imaginations into the future, we have become intelligent human beings."

In the near future we shall escape from the old idea of sending boys and girls to high school long enough for them to carry a certain number of courses to earn a certain number of points sufficient to send them on to college. Boys and girls should go to high school as long as they can get something of personal value in living from any course in that high school, as long as their natural abilities, mental and physical development, and economic situation justify that school attendance.

I think any boy or girl who is to be in school at all who is fifteen years old should be in a senior high school regardless of mental ability. He just does not belong in a grade school or a junior high school; I have found such pupils in as low a grade as the third grade. The senior high school should adjust to meet his needs, and not try to force him to be responsible for the adjustment. I don't mean to say that this is a minimum age; frankly I don't know at what age a boy or girl should be in high school, or in grade school.

How long should he be in high school? As long as he can't find something more profitable to himself to do with his time and effort. Of course, I do not advise that he play on the football team until he is twenty-six—you wouldn't stand for that; but let us consider his case for a moment. Supposing he can get a job, when he is only a junior in high school, which will enable him to support himself, help at home if necessary, and save money towards establishing a home of his own (and many of these young folks ought to be marrying and establishing families much younger than they have been able to do during these last years); perhaps he can get into an industry or trade where he can learn as he goes. All right; let him go, at sixteen or seventeen, or anywhere along the way, if it is to his benefit. Who can help him decide? The guidance department of the high school.

The guidance department should serve not only those young people who are in the high school, but the youth of the community, by all means, whether they are in school or not. A lot of the services rendered in our high schools should be continued after the pupils leave school. Why shouldn't the boys and girls come back for activities? Think of our schools as the center of the community for youth, as running any number of hours a day necessary to serve the needs of the people of the community, both adults and youth. The high school is the last public education available to them; let it minister to them as long as possible. Let the guidance department look at their problems with them; let them use their orchestral or band training in the high school after they leave the classroom.

Will boys and girls always drop out of school as they do now? The boy decides to leave school, for any of a dozen reasons, worthy or otherwise; there is a little rite required of him in turning in his books, his locker key, his grades—and he is gone. That ought not to be. He should not be cut off from contact with his school—let it follow him. He should be offered opportunities to come back at the hours of the day when he can come, for three years, or four years, or whatever would fit his need.

What is high-school age? How long should a pupil be permitted to stay? How young should he be permitted to leave? I don't know. How old may he be and remain in school with benefit? I don't care. We ought not to distinguish so definitely between graduates and students. You ask me, "Wouldn't you have any graduation? Award any diploma? Recognize any standard of high-school achievement?" Yes, by all means, but don't make it so complete a break that the graduate must feel cut off from his school, an outcast from the day of his graduation. Do not make him feel that he must leave as soon as he has acquired enough credits to get into some college or other. Let him come back for ideas as long as he can use them. A lot of people need to come back—would like to come back. I'm sure many of us would benefit by it!

There is the boy who finishes high school, and goes away to college. About December he comes home again—father needs him badly—to work in the drug store. There is the young person who goes out of high school into industrial life. They still need school; we ought not to make it a clean break. You say, "They don't want to come back. They are through with schools." Well, that is within our power to remedy—when we have something of value to offer them.

We must think of courses of study as offering something more than "book-learning," as something more than a trough at which our young people may feed, if they can find room at the trough; we must stop thinking of it as a course to be covered in three or four years, at the end of which time the pupil is graduated, because "he took" something, or "something took" on him! We are on our educational frontiers; we have continued the battle, but there is a long wilderness ahead. You say, "Give us money; we are ready. But who will meet the bill?" Now, these services would not cost as much as you fear; I believe you could make your high school the youth center of your community, without depending upon so many outside agencies, for about a ten per cent increase of your budget. Isn't this vision of service worth that? If we want it badly enough, I say, we must be ready to meet the future with the answer in our hands.

About that curriculum. In words we hear so frequently, you "Ain't seen nothin' yet." We have just begun on the matter. The world expands; the activities of young people in the world expand; and the school must expand to meet the needs of these young people as they live in that world.

Now, I don't believe it is necessary at all to attack our college interests. Let's quit talking about the heavy hand of the college on our high school. I have full sympathy with any college deciding what kind of students it will have in its membership. It's all right for Brown University to set up its requirements; I have no objection at all; I just thank God that there are other universities in the country. I don't think this problem needs to worry us at all. What I mean is just this: that we are going, as this high-school program expands and expands and we begin a real service out into the community, to see that the colleges will not be far behind in suiting themselves to the needs of the people coming to them from the high schools.

The curriculum has got to expand in other ways besides the addition of numbers of new subjects. We must find a way to care for this boy or girl with an I.Q. of 67, or 55, or whatever it may be, who cannot go on to school unless we find a way to serve him; or the shut-in boy or girl; or the one in an institution—not by the child going to the school, but by the school going out to him. Must we go on demanding that a pupil must come to the school room and sit in a particular seat, in good physical and mental condition? We have a teacher who teaches in our hospitals, and one who goes to the homes, to serve those who are confined, blind, deaf, or crippled—all types. We are taking the school out to the child wherever we find him. All schools will be doing that when we are taking the center place of service to the youth of our communities. We will be thinking less and less of a school as being "in a building", but as emanating out from that building as a center.

In that high school there will be more and more related to life needs of boys and girls. Let's leave the colleges out of it—let them use "the dead hand" as much as they want to. Let's look to expanding our program for boys and girls who are depending upon us to teach them how to live in every-day situations. It used to be that when boys and girls graduated from high schools or colleges they went right out into jobs; but lots of them now go out into loafing instead—I have no doubt that a good chart, such as the one we made in Providence following up the graduates of 1933, taken from the facts in any location with which we are dealing, would show that the largest percentage are loafing. Where are the jobs? So a follow-up program must be definite, more so than ever—not just a hit-and-miss proposition. What is this loafing doing to boys and girls not prepared for it? What are they to do when all their time is leisure time? These are strange conditions under which our boys and girls are leaving us, and they are to be strange for some time to come.

I don't see any reason why they cannot study some of the things closely related to their problems, or their community's problems, and difficulties. I haven't time to discuss all the ramifications of such a curriculum—the problems would vary with location, with individuals, with economic conditions. That is one of the beauties of this kind of a talk—I can throw you the suggestions, and then those who need the answers can work them out.

But you know as well as I do that our courses of study have greatly changed. Consider such sources as we offer on the art of the beautician—how many of us would have perished, twenty or even fifteen years ago, at the thought of that parade of beauty we have witnessed on that stage at this convention? And yet who is to say that this is not an improvement? Why shouldn't we teach a girl how to wear a dress, as well as how to make it? We are learning how to make life more beautiful. Many of our courses might well come under the head of "a charm school." I have no objection to that. We are going to try to relate what we learn to how we live, to elevate a way of living when we can.

A lot of the girls are going to marry in the community, or other similar communities; they will join some little art club, or literary club, in a haphazard way; cannot we offer them something better, something that will carry on with what has been taught them in high school concerning art appreciation, and music, and other activities? We must continue to use these abilities. I don't see how principals can go on complacently graduating into your communities every year young people to whom you have given fine training in orchestra, band and the arts, and fail to follow them out into the community with fitting continuing activities. What right have we to graduate tens and hundreds, sending them out into a community that has only one or two orchestras available to them, if they are the first to find them? We ought to have a dozen going all the time; we are just beginning to see this need. These boys and girls should graduate right out into them. How? Through the guidance department—I just overwork this guidance department all the time.

Guidance is important in a lot of ways; for instance, let me say, not just to be argumentative, I don't know how it can be changed (but there can be a workable way found when the problem is understood) but I have a big quarrel with the idea that a boy or girl can be incapable of casting an intelligent vote when he is twenty years, eleven months and twenty-nine days old, and on the next day can blossom out into a full-fledged, useful voter. Of course, there is the problem of government and legislature to meet here. But I know a city where automobile drivers' licenses are issued in the school, when the students complete a course in the mechanics of driving, safety procedures, traffic regulations, and so on. Why couldn't it be that citizenship right might be thrown upon the responsibility of the community? Is this a radical thought? Many of our well-informed high-school young people are much more capable of voting intelligently at sixteen and seventeen than are their fathers and mothers at forty, or fifty, or sixty. It is just an historical—not a logical—way of handling the problem of citizenship, this business of living 21 years. Let us teach citizenship; we could really make the social science courses work. Some pupils of high intelligence and understanding might get the privilege of voting. Send these young people out into your community, to the city council, to your state house; let them observe what they can. Then democracy and its problems would be pertinent and real to them. I don't believe we will otherwise get very far in teaching citizenship to high-school pupils.

Speaking of the city council reminds me of a story—not that it has any relationship to this subject, but I know from experience that ten years from now if you meet me, you will have forgotten the speech, but you may remember a story I told you. I would like you to remember that much of it, anyway, so here's the story. A small town newspaper came out in headlines with the statement, "The City Council is Half Crazy." Immediately the council descended upon the editor and remonstrated with him. "That is not true," they said. "We won't stand for it. You'll have to retract your statement. We won't stand for it, and we are running this town." "Well," said the editor, "it probably was a little strong. I'll fix it up in to-morrow's paper." And the next day the headlines read: "Half of the City Council Not Crazy."

I think if we can have opportunity for these young people to participate in civic and social problems because of their ability and understanding, and not because they reach the magic age of twenty-one, we will have met a great need. You say, this is fixed in the law of the land. Yes, but I believe that communities could work out ways for young people to have a part in local government, and I predict that they will participate more than they do. One city had a problem of rearranging the street signs; they had no means of taking care of this, and the project was turned over to the high-school classes, who worked out the whole thing, saved the city money, and learned much of the meaning of citizenship in so doing. Another city had a subway under a railroad track; much vulgarity in word and picture was forever appearing on its walls; officers were stationed to ward off or catch offenders, but the situation only grew worse. Finally the mayor took the problem to the high-school principal, and asked for help. The principal said, "Yes, I believe you have come to the right crowd now. I'll turn it over to the boys of my school." The boys' student body group organized, and cleaned it up over-night, and feeling their responsibility in the matter, are keeping it clean.

These young people could do a lot of things, if we just make a way so they can, and let them. Attitudes are changing.

The Junior Chamber of Commerce can be very valuable, if we don't allow politics to spoil it; young people should be sitting on advisory boards and committees in the city council—why not? Impractical? Why shouldn't the sixteen and seventeen year old boys and girls be participating in our community life? They can be destructive enough by the wrong kind of participation—why not use their powers constructively instead? If we once admit that it is right, we will work to find practical ways of doing it.

You may not agree with me, but I believe that in our regular high schools we will do less and less in specialized vocational training, carpentry, plumbing, etc. The criterion will be whether these courses are a means to more practical living on the part of boys and girls. I wouldn't take out stenography or shorthand, because I believe they will be used practically by many; but carpentry should be a course around which a study of furniture, or architecture, or art in the home, might be built. No boy should be considered a graduate carpenter because he can make a perfect table. He might be taught about wood, about tools, about a number of related things, and how to use them in practical life; then if he wants to become a finished carpenter, he may go to a technical high school, furnishing him with this specialized training which he needs. When should he go there? As soon as the guidance department feels that he can more profitably get his training there than in the regular school.

We have just begun to build—or rather, we are ready to begin as soon as we get the money—a couple of new high schools under the P.W.A. program. What is going to be the effect of all these changes upon the high-school building of the future? Nobody can tell. We are going to need high schools, more and more of them—probably not as elaborate or as permanent as they have been, I am sure of that. But the school will not be confined to the high-school building. Some of the classes will be over at the Brown and Jones Manufacturing Plant, or down at the jeweler's shop, not to teach them those industries, but to let them see real problems, and how they are worked out.

I believe every high school will have attached to it, not merely to bring boys and girls from rural communities to the school, but for carrying pupils here and there to classes, large equipment for transportation; just for trips to various places of interest in studying real life problems; not necessarily big heavy busses, but facilities for taking them out where learning situations are. I don't know why botany has to be brought exclusively into the classroom—wouldn't it be better studied out in the open country? It is already being done in many places. Many activities will emanate out from the school. I can't see any reason why we shouldn't use any situation anywhere that is better to learn from than a situation that would have to be built up artificially in the school.

We have come to think of a class as containing thirty or thirty-five pupils. A standardization like that is all right for Latin, or mathematics, or some of the exact arts or sciences; but perhaps some classes should have one hundred, or one thousand pupils, and some should have ten, or five, or two pupils. It is possible to do, and we in Providence are doing, some very fine teaching over the radio, where one teacher works with ten thousand pupils. Some subjects lend themselves to this type of teaching, which may be handled by one person or a group of persons—experts in their line. Use the radio, the stereopticon, talking pictures, and so on.

Must every class, to earn credit, come into a classroom every day in the week for a semester, sit in a seat, and read from a book? I wish that there might be a consumer's course in science for those who are not going on further into scientific studies, taught, perhaps, in the auditorium of the school, by real experts on the various subjects. Up-to-date, authorized knowledge on practical things might thus be offered to all of our high-school boys and girls, at a very nominal expense.

I believe that I am mentioning nothing here that is not already being done in some place or other, and successfully. Such progressive school systems as the Pittsburgh one are doing fine work along these lines of expansion. But please don't quote me as saying that classes should have a thousand members! Someone misquoted me in print, saying that the President of the Department of Superintendence wished to increase classes to a thousand, and fire most of the teachers! No—the suggestions I am offering will increase the number of teachers necessary to carry out the school programs—it is an expansion, not a decrease of work to be done.

I think there will be more teachers in the high school of the future than of the past and present. They won't be of one type teacher—some will be “master teachers,” worth more than a principal or a superintendent, and they should be paid accordingly,—if you don’t mind that. I know of one first-grade teacher, an outstanding success in handling her work, who has repeatedly refused offers to become a principal, and wishes sincerely to stick to her own job. She carries on happily and with brilliant success in the part of the educational program to which she is best fitted; isn’t she just as important in the scheme of things as any superintendent? Is there any reason why she is not entitled to the $4000 a year she is receiving?

I think anybody who can stand up in front of one thousand boys and girls, and teach them, and have them learn, should be paid for that kind of ability. I don’t know whether you like that idea or not. Maybe you believe all should advance “step by step on the salary schedule.” But I am afraid that is one of the drawbacks to advancing by ability. I don’t mean that I am for jumping the salary schedule; I mean definite and different types of teaching should be rated accordingly. Why is the principal worth a great deal more than a successful teacher? The principal is a teacher; the superintendent is a teacher; the supervisor is a teacher—if he isn’t, he should be.

Some of you—many of you—have heard of Mr. Hatch, of the Sinclair Normal School—an outstanding teacher of his type, unusual, with rare ability. Such a person is worth more to a school system than a teacher who handles only thirty or thirty-five pupils in a class. I have sat under Dr. Kilpatrick when he had a regular class of 430—and we all learned. That is the kind of teaching I mean. Master teachers can be found.

Now, I believe we should break down some classes to smaller groups. How small? As low as one. Teachers should teach for the best results—classes of twenty-five, ten, or three. I want, if necessary, to be able to send one girl into the dramatic activities of the community, or to study the Woman’s Club, or whatever is necessary to fit individual needs. Let us have large classes, small classes; let the size of the class be determined by the need of the class and the individuals in it.

Well, it is about time to reach a conclusion. What are we trying to do? To make high schools service agencies; to hold them more nearly to the needs and ideals of good living; to work on the guidance problems of boys and girls after they are out of school; to use the abilities developed in high school in carrying on those activities in the community. Isn't the high-school graduate the logical one to carry on?

I hope I haven't seemed to limit any job; I have meant to expand, to open up new opportunities for service and achievement, in the experiment of progress that you people have indicated to us superintendents you are willing to help promote. I think you high-school people have done a job that challenges the imagination; a job that, when the history of education has been written, will be called the romantic job of the whole scheme. You have been willing to expand your high school in keeping with the expanding age in which we are living. But, as we all realize, we still have a long way to go. We superintendents don't want to stand in your way. We are willing to go with you. We want to go sanely, we want to make our program sound as we go. I look forward to a new high school, twenty years from now, that we have built together. I am willing to follow the high-school principals and teachers as they go into this new field of the future.

You and I have heard a lot, at this convention, about "academic freedom." Really, there is very little to be said about it. I propose to say all there is to say about "academic freedom" in the next thirty or forty seconds. I think any teacher in a classroom, any principal, has the right to speak his opinion, providing he is willing to accept the responsibility for what he says. School people may be asked for an opinion on anything from breeding cattle to politics; when we go out into any of the controversial fields, and into the realms of opinion, we must agree that the other fellow has a right to free speech, also; if your bright pupil stands up and says to you, "You are wrong; I know twice as much about that as you do," and can prove his point, you must let him do so. If he writes a thoughtful examination paper, giving his opinion, instead of yours, you must give him "A" and not "flunk" him because he disagrees with you. Remember, we'll be talking about a lot of things we don't know about, and we shall have to be willing to be contradicted and put straight on these matters.

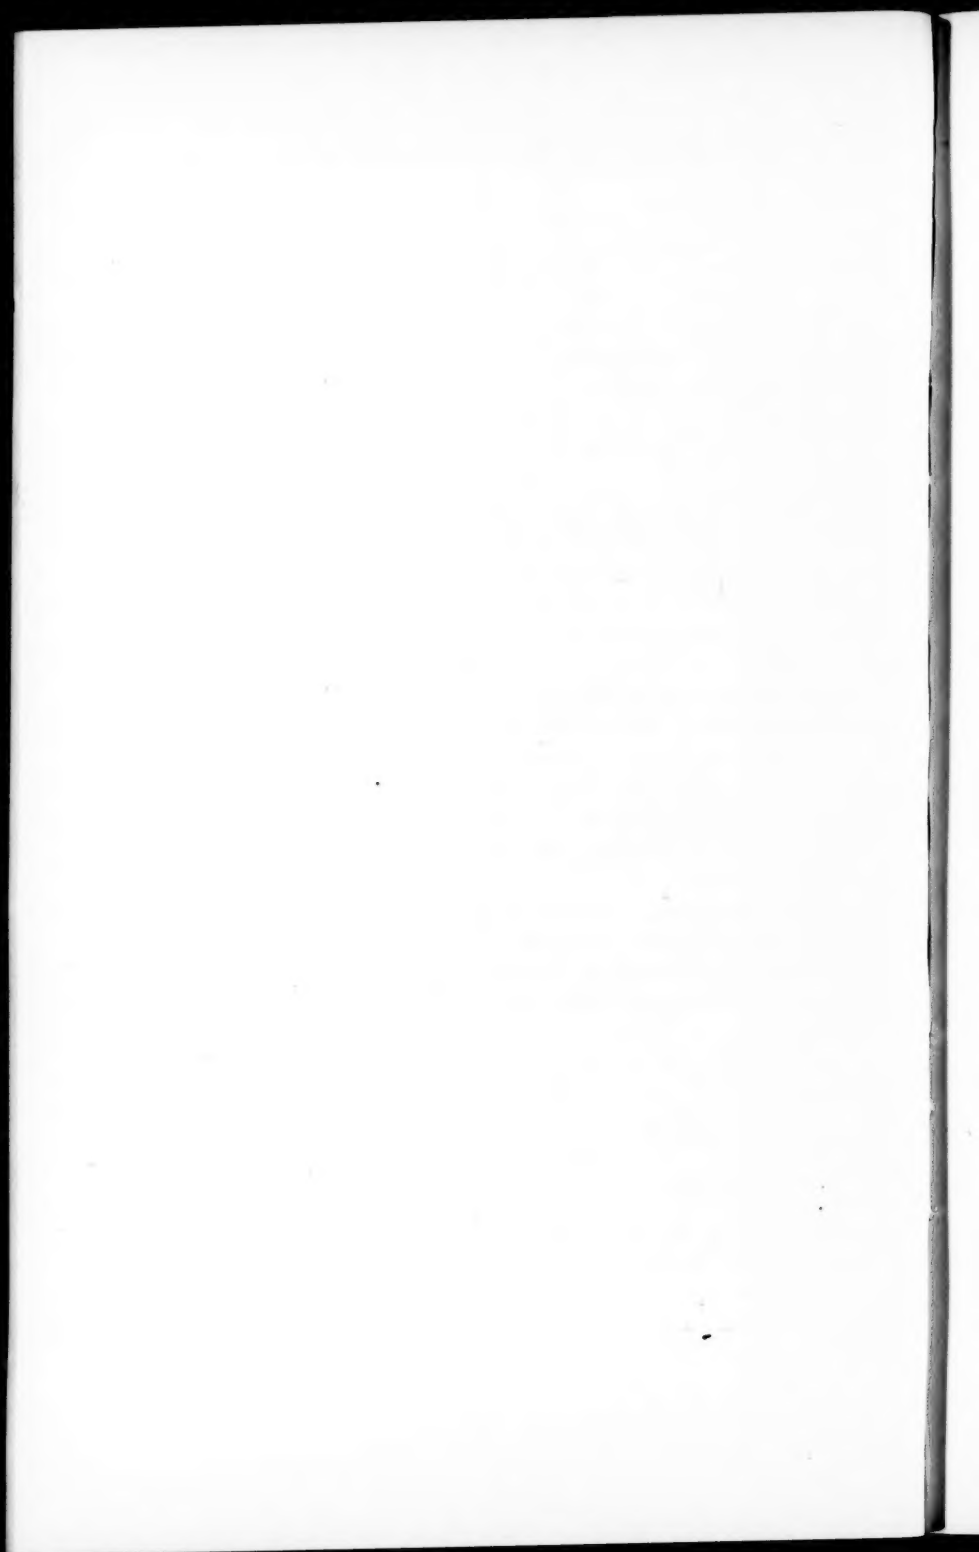

When we go into that field, (and I am willing that we should, for there is no group in the country to which I am so willing to entrust the thinking of our young people as I am to you, the high-school teachers—you notice I do not say I entirely trust you, but I will trust you farther than most groups!) we must realize that no longer can we ask boys and girls to take everything we say as gospel, coming from the Lord on High. We have to be ready to say, "All right, you stand up and tell me some of the things I should know about this subject; I may have been wrong." We shall be dealing with a lot of extraneous matter which is not in our classbooks. We are going to be standing on a different relationship of student to teacher—a more informal relationship. The student may express the results of his own thinking; we will learn from you. You know well enough that a lot of high-school boys know more about a lot of things than we do.

And so I say, there is nothing more to be said about "Academic freedom." You are free to express your opinions, if you are willing to stand behind them and defend them. It's a free country.

In this connection I might tell you of a college professor and his student. The Professor had been expressing himself very freely about some subject peculiar to his hobby, when a student rose and said, "What makes you think that?" Drawing himself up, indignantly, the professor roared, "I don't think! I know!" Smiling, the boy replied, "Well, I don't think I know, either."

If we are going to develop in the high schools of the future critical mindedness, I think we in the high schools had better get busy. We are now on the frontier, and the trends in modern education are more than trends—they bring us a real challenge.

TRAINING PUPILS TO BE DISCRIMINATING VOTERS

By THOMAS C. BARHAM, JR.

High School, Framingham, Massachusetts

Condensed from The Social Studies, November, 1935, pp. 455-458.

Published by McKinley Publishing Company,
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Now that economic welfare has become inextricably interwoven with politics, intelligent voting is imperative. It seems hardly necessary to say that there is a wrong and a right way of voting. Voting for the party label, voting on prejudice, voting in accord with the tradition of ancestral ghosts are excellent examples of harmful voting.

The effect of a barrage of principles that have for their goal the creation of high ethical attitudes toward voting is mostly lost on pupils whose intellectual traits are strongly stamped with mediocrity. An overwhelmingly large proportion of those participating in the procedure will have completed their formal education when they leave high school. Consequently if the opportunity to set up in the minds of these young people normal, sane, judicious thought-patterns is lost now, the loss will probably be irreparable. It is their opportunity and the teacher's obligation to see to it that they learn to be discriminating voters while in high school.

To teach successfully the problem of exercising sound judgment in voting, a more direct method is needed. It is much more effective to draw upon an existent, or potentially existent, suffrage problem and use it to give the pupils some actual training in the practice of voting. It is not difficult to do this.

Let us now give our consideration to a specific case demonstrating how a class can be given a realistic lesson in intelligent voting. The time selected for its presentation was just previous to the state primary election. The particular problem was to determine the fitness of two state representatives and one state senator. All three were candidates for re-nomination. The only material supplies to each pupil was a half sheet of arithmetic paper.

(1) The class was asked to name their state senator and representatives. If they were unable to do so, the teacher answered the question and also told the name of their political party.

(2) Every member of the class was asked to vote in writing for or against the reelection of each man. If they knew nothing about them, they were asked to vote for the one they "believed could do no wrong."

(3) The teacher explained that he had the record of how each of the candidates had voted on important bills before the state legislature; and that each member of the class was to consider himself a member of the legislature, and after hearing each of the bills explained, was to vote according to his best judgment. The teacher, in order to be sure of having an alert class, explained that after the class had voted on each of the bills, the actual votes of the three legislators would be given them for comparison with their own judgment. In this way, they could determine with strict impartiality whether they would favor another term for each of the representatives.

(4) Every bill was explained and voted upon, a short title of each bill being written on the paper, one below the other, with the corresponding vote written in. Some of the bills set forth provided for compulsory unemployment insurance, minimum wages, cutting state salaries, making it easy for a municipality to purchase a privately owned and operated gas or electric power plant, coordination of the local police throughout the state, and meetings of the legislature biennially instead of annually.

(5) The pupils then wrote the names of each legislator so as to head columns to the right of the pupils' vote. Then, the teacher read the actual vote of the first representative of each bill, asking the class to indicate by a show of hands whether they agreed with the candidate's vote. After all the votes for one candidate had been given, each member of the class was asked to determine whether he would support the candidate for reelection. The same procedure was repeated for each legislator. Excellent interest was maintained during this period.

(6) The teacher made a point of focusing the attention of the class on the difference between voting on a basis of a legislator's actual record and the contradictory mass of conflicting promises, charges and countercharges uttered by the speakers at political rallies, and over the radio, as well as printed in the press. The class was thoroughly impressed with the superiority of the method of determining fitness for office in which they had just engaged.

(7) The last step taken by the teacher was in the form of a suggestion. Each member of the class was required to watch the newspapers in order to get the actual primary returns and be able to report the success of the legislators in being renominated.

This method of teaching the duty of voting knows no political or geographical boundaries. It can be applied to county officials, city and town officials, state representatives, state senators, federal representatives, federal senators, the governor, and the president. The records of these officers may be obtained by the teacher.

The time consumed in presenting the lesson was not more than thirty minutes. There is not the least doubt in the writer's mind that the pupils learned more from that short exercise than they would have from studying for several class periods the evils inherent in careless voting. What youngsters need is a situation providing them with the opportunity to exercise their judgment if they are going to learn its value. The lesson described did not merely tell the class how to vote several years hence; it gave them the opportunity right here and now to exercise their judgment.

SERVICE OR SIEVE

By WILLIAM MCANDREW

Condensed from School and Society, November 2, 1935, pp. 609.

Published by The Science Press, Lancaster, Pennsylvania

The old war between defenders of arbitrary standards and fighters for the education of all sorts of youth continues in the two largest American cities. Superintendent Bogan of Chicago espouses the doctrine of public-school duty to fit the human material that exists and to make it fitter for the common life. High school must give up its old privilege of sifting its membership. It must adjust itself to all children of high-school age.

In New York a Committee on Articulation and Integration, under Associate Superintendent Stephen Bayne, has worked for four years on a plan to fit pedagogics to the pupil. Every pupil, bright or dull, is better off moving ahead than going back to repeat. Educational literature records enough experience with "left backs" to show the futility of repetition of grades; therefore, failure of promotion is to be reduced to a minimum.

John Tildsley, high-school superintendent, takes a crack at the committee's report. He tells the world, as reported by the New York Sun: "This is the most dangerous report ever made by any committee in this system. See what it means: A pupil goes through six years of elementary schooling without being required to satisfy any standards. He passes on to the junior high school which must lower its standard to meet him. The high school stoops to the same process. The boy, then, goes to college whether he is ready or not, and into medical school where the same conditions obtain. Let him hang out a shingle and operate on Steve Bayne for appendicitis."

It strikes me that the weakest link in Dr. Tildsley's argument is the last one. Nobody is recommending that special schools of medicine, engineering, teaching or of any profession in which inexpert practitioners endanger the public weal should accept students whose professors regard them as unfit. Dr. Bayne's committee holds that tax-supported schools are for serving children rather than for sifting out those whom Dr. Tildsley considers unfit to be moved forward. For the "standards" commonly used as alibi for the failure of teachers to develop such powers as each pupil has, Dr. Bayne's committee proposes standards graded to each boy's power to reach, which gives the teacher a task more within her power to perform.

Even the great Superintendent Maxwell was unable to maintain his conception of education as a sieve for selecting an élite. Dean Gauss, of Dr. Tildsley's own Princeton, has remarked that the American people won't stand for the selective doctrine. The odds are in favor of Bogan and Bayne.

IMPRESSIONS OF AMERICAN EDUCATION

By A. E. NICHOLS

A visit to American schools is a very stimulating experience—a sort of intellectual cocktail. They are apparently so like our own schools, actually they are so different.

Whatever we may think of American education, there is one thing that can be said with certainty. The Americans really believe that the schools are the main instruments by which they are going to weld a cosmopolitan community into a nation. The public high schools are, therefore, the most significant things not merely in American education but in American social history.

Education is free and compulsory in the United States from the age of six to the age of sixteen or eighteen. The first eight grades are elementary, and the high school was established to take the last four. This eight-four plan has a serious disadvantage, a boy who leaves school with a trade certificate at the age of sixteen has spent only two years in high school. There is, therefore, a movement toward making the division at the age of twelve, sending the pupils first to a junior high school for three years and then to a senior high school for the remaining three, and there is also a six-six plan which avoids the break at fifteen.

The aim of the high school is a social, not an intellectual one: it has been described as "an institution for the improvement of democracy, to prepare the young for greater social efficiency by teaching them what is directly useful." The standard of work is far behind that of the English school, but that is to be expected in an institution which provides for all and not for a selected number, and which does not regard intellectual development as an end to be desired for its own sake.

The high school differs from the English secondary school in one other respect: the ideal school is very large and cosmopolitan; it receives both sexes and all classes of society and for them it has to provide a very wide curriculum. It is, in fact, the English secondary school, art school, domestic science center rolled into one, though here and there one finds high schools with a technical or commercial bias.

Nothing shows the difference in spirit between American and English schools more clearly than the list of required subjects. Generally, the only subjects which must be taken throughout the course are English, physical training, and hygiene. Other compulsory subjects are civics, history, economics, art, and music, the time allotted to them ranging from one term for civics to six terms for music—a term is half a school year.

An important factor in deciding a pupil's choice of subjects is the system of credits or units. To pass successfully through the high-school course, he must accumulate, say, eighteen units during the four years of his school life. His required subjects provide him with eleven units, the rest are made up by electives. The temptation to take an easy subject for a year and then drop it for another easy subject is checked by regulations as to the length of courses.

Methods of teaching in high school are what might be expected: there is very little regard to the deferred value of a subject, treatment is superficial and determined by immediate interest and usefulness. I thought English was usually well taught, especially literature. I found American boys much readier to state their views and much better speakers than their English cousins.

The history teaching suffers from haste, and the difficulty of developing a sense of history in a country so lacking in historical remains of any importance. Most history that matters much is of other countries: their treatment of it is fair and impartial, but hasty and superficial. Geography teaching seems to be merely incidental to history in most schools and entirely neglected in universities.

The technical efficiency of the United States is not due to the teaching of the physical sciences in the high schools. In one school boys spent a good deal of time grading petrols, and girls analyzing face powder: both obviously regarded as immediately useful. In only one school did I see evidence of science teaching which would compare with that of a good English school. That was in an academy, and the science masters were English.

Music and art are very competently taught in the high schools. The arts and crafts are treated very seriously, and the results are well ahead of normal achievement in this country. The American genius for construction expresses itself everywhere.

I am not competent to criticize the technical and commercial work, but if enthusiasm and equipment count there is evidence of good work.

The outstanding feature of the high school is the disregard of intellectual interests, and the lack of special supervision for the exceptionally able pupil. Aristocracy of intellect is considered to be as sinister a thing as aristocracy of birth. To misquote Lincoln, "the high school is dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal," and with disastrous results.

To this contempt for their pupils' intellect American teachers couple far too high a respect for their opinions and in the organization of the voluntary or extra-curriculum activities the pupils' opinions are given full weight. In one school the whole community is governed by three boards which supervise everything except the classroom work and the school administration. This service is regarded as of first-class importance in the training of citizens of a democratic state. Both teachers and pupils take it seriously.

Specialization is the bane of athletics in American schools; even cheering is done by a special squad of tall boys who get seventy per cent of marks in their major subjects, and are rewarded with major honors in athletics.

The feature which impressed me most favorably was the excellence of the school libraries. One of the conditions of recognition as a high school is a library worth five hundred dollars, and every school with fifty or more pupils must have one teacher who is a trained librarian. If the classrooms fail to supply adequately the needs of the more intellectual pupils, the libraries remedy this defect to some degree. Americans can teach us a great deal about school libraries.

I thought the American children were a very fine lot physically. Every pupil takes hygiene, and the department of biology and health education is very generously staffed. This may be why America is so far ahead of us in measures for promoting health and preventing disease.

The non-public schools are grouped under various names: (1) Private schools; (2) Preparatory schools; and (3) Independent schools. Others, notably the country day schools, have been founded in recent years.

The tone of these schools seemed to me to be very good; the better class American school boy is very likeable, companionable fellow, and the relationships between masters and boys are frank and friendly. There is no sort of repression, yet the boys are well-mannered and well-behaved.

The outstanding American virtue seems to be intellectual honesty. He looks his problems straight in the eye and applies his remedies without regard to tradition. Americans confess that they want the balance of mind which we get from our tradition; it is that lack of tradition that makes them and their schools so stimulating.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT EXCHANGES

By STEPHEN DUGGAN

Editorial condensed from the News Bulletin, November, 1935, pp. 3, 4.
Published by the Institute of International Education, Inc.
2 West 45th Street, New York City.

From a scholastic standpoint it is contended that in the dictatorship countries where no professor dares teach anything contradictory to the views held by the dictatorship, there is no use for an American student to study. He would get only a distorted view of the subject and he could not engage in free research. Moreover, he might become indoctrinated as the result of the constant and skillful propaganda which, it is maintained, is directed particularly to influencing foreign students.

Life transcends governments and changes of governments. We are interested in humanity as such and in these days when life everywhere is in such a fluid state, it would appear to be unwise to cut oneself off from a portion of humanity because of a change in political organization.

We do not recall either the military or naval attaché because of the establishment of a dictatorship in a foreign country. We are naturally desirous of knowing what effect the change might have upon its military or naval policy. Surely if there were an educational attaché, as this Institute has always maintained there should be, we would want him to remain and inform us about the effect of the change upon the spiritual life of the country. In the absence of an educational attaché the exchange student serves the purpose admirably.

Americans have often assumed that the great mass of immigrants to this country, with their lower standards of living, are typical of the civilization of their country; therefore, it is fortunate to have with us as many well-selected exchange students as possible, who embody the best of their country's culture, and who may remove at least some of the wrong impression that prevails among us.

THE NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

Condensed from Occupations, October, 1935, pp. 663-71.

Published by National Occupational Conference, 522 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Fifty million dollars of Works Progress Administration funds have been ear-marked for the NYA. More than half of this sum will be devoted to student aid in various forms.

NYA stands for the National Youth Administration, in which the following functions and duties were prescribed: "To initiate and administer a program of approved projects which shall provide relief, work relief, and employment for persons between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five years who are no longer in regular attendance at a school requiring full time, and who are not regularly engaged in remunerative employment."

The major objectives of the NYA, as recently formulated, are:

(1) To provide part-time employment for youths of certified relief families on work-relief projects suited to their abilities and needs.

(2) To extend part-time employment to needy college students and small cash assistance to high-school students in relief families.

(3) To offer vocational guidance, training and placement services to youths.

(4) To encourage the extension of constructive educational and job-qualifying, leisure-time activities.

According to a letter sent out by Aubrey Williams, Executive Director, to all State Youth Directors, the assistance to any student may not exceed more than six dollars per calendar month from the beginning of the school fall term after September 1, 1935, to the end of the spring term. Young persons will be selected on the following considerations: (1) Need; (2) Character and ability to do school work; and (3) Status of attendance.

In return for assistance, the students benefitting by the program must do socially desirable work which would not otherwise be performed, such as clerical work, library assistance, the checking of students' exercises, etc. The school principal must pass on the acceptability of the work assigned to students, and is responsible for assuring that the character of the work performed be satisfactory and under proper supervision.

Since the principal objective of the high-school aid program is to make it possible for school students of relief families to continue their education, NYA high-school aid funds may not be used to replace funds heretofore available to students in the school participating in this program, nor may NYA funds be used to finance ordinary routine work that would have to be carried on in any event. However, additional students may be assigned to work which would supplement routine activities. No students may be required to work more than ten hours in any week, nor more than three hours in any day.

All non-profit making school institutions below college grade are included within the eligibility scope of this program.

The number of students who will be given aid will be seven per cent of the number of young persons between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five on relief as of May, 1935. The principal of each school is required to submit to the State Youth Administration a detailed statement about the progress and scope of the program in his school.

Counseling, guidance, adjustment, and job placement services are to be developed in cooperation with the United States Reemployment Service and its two thousand officers and with other public and private agencies. Placement of youths on work-relief projects will be made through the Reemployment Service offices.

Provisions for job training will be developed by the State Youth Administrators through the utilization of available school shop facilities and private factories for trade training classes. These classes will be taught in late afternoons or evenings by unemployed but qualified persons on a work-relief basis. The Federal Committee on Apprentice Training will bring to the apprentice-training program its already established safeguard to prevent the exploitation of young workers, to forestall the displacement of adult workers, and to avoid the training of apprentices in those occupations now already overcrowded.

In many states, trade advisory committees have been appointed and have set up programs fitting specific trades conditions and requirements. Several of the state agencies have a full time employee promoting and supervising the training of young people under apprentice agreements.

Such are some of the main features of the NYA program. In certain respects it falls short of the comprehensive national youth program on a permanent basis that many educators, social workers, and others had visioned. It is manifestly the President's hope, however, that the year's experiment will lead to a permanent national youth program. At any rate, here is a beginning, even if only a beginning.

DIRECTING PUPIL GROWTH

By AGNES SAMUELSON

State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Iowa

President, National Education Association

Condensed from School Management, October, 1935, p. 53.

3 East 40th Street, New York, N. Y.

What can teachers in service do to help pupils to find themselves? How can they help them to make wise adjustments to life situations?

As we sharpen our thinking as to what each teacher can do, we discover several aims or purposes: (1) The development of wholesome school morale; (2) The realization of the contribution of education toward one's success and happiness; (3) The promotion of the wise use of leisure; (4) The cultivation of proper character traits; and (5) The investigation of vocational possibilities together with assistance in the choice of vocations are clearly important.

These involve the creation of a proper attitude toward work, authority, and associates. What if high-school pupils were made more aware of their educational opportunity in high school? More deeply conscious of the values in each subject in the program of studies? More zealous in learning about the various types of schools beyond high school and their entrance requirements? More searching in the discovery of their own talents? Better informed in the matter of choosing a vocation? In the cultivation of right character traits, for example, could more be done to discover the aptitudes, limitations, capacity for leadership, and opportunity for improvement? Let us remember that nothing which science has perfected has changed the definition of the virtues. Character has never been reversed by any court. It is still required.

Who is responsible for the success of this program of directing pupil growth? We believe that the county superintendent, schoolmasters' club, the city or town superintendent, the high-school principal, and the teaching staff all are in strategic position to be helpful. Of course, the pupils themselves are also very definitely in the picture.

The local superintendent and the local school forces are closest to the problem. Through conferences with parents, discussion of the problem in faculty meetings, careful reading and information, continuing interest in the progress of every pupil, intelligent counsel to pupils, special assignments, interest in character building organizations outside of school, contact with extra-curriculum activities, and in many other ways, they may be helpful in directing the program.

What examples of materials should be prepared or provided by the local school? It would be helpful to have a few good books on guidance; form for pupil's study schedule; form for rating personality; form for special reports to parents, their aim and values; list of special-interest clubs; outlines for self-appraisal by pupils; outlines on methods of study; schedule of topics for series of teachers' meetings; and topics for pupil forums.

Above all the important thing to remember is that the growth of boys and girls is the fundamental purpose of school. It cannot be too often said that the task is to teach pupils and not subjects. There is nothing quite equal to the sympathetic, intelligent guidance of pupils such as come in the happy teacher-pupil relationship.

CURRICULUM TRENDS IN AMERICAN SECONDARY EDUCATION

By MATTHEW H. WILLING
University of Wisconsin

Condensed from The North Central Association Quarterly, October, 1935, pp. 244-50.

Published by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Ann Arbor, Michigan.

One can no longer think of the secondary-school curriculum as made up of learnings, carried on in the classroom or in preparation for classroom recitations. In the thinking of a host of administrators, teachers, and educationalists to-day the secondary-school curriculum is made up of all the experiences which pupils realize in a systematic and intentful way in the course of the school session. The subject curriculum is only one part; the extra-curriculum activities are another part; pupil control is another part; the very plant and its equipment may be still other parts.

The changes and movements now apparently going on in our secondary-school curriculum will have to be presented within certain broad categories of change which in themselves are little open to dispute even where some of the specific evidences cited may be in doubt. The sources of data are course of study analyses, subject enrollment statistics, national committee reports in the subject fields, the biennial reports of the United States Office of Education, the National Survey of Secondary Education, special studies of curricular trends reported by individual research workers, and the general educational literature touching the secondary-school curriculum.

The broad categories of change, or major trends, which the data suggest to me are as follows:

(1) The trend toward a more explicit social functionalism.—The trend is to be noted first in the process of cutting out the deadwood of the curriculum, and by the process of bringing a new and vital material to replace the deadwood. Most of the new subjects now appearing represent hitherto neglected aspects of social existence. As illustrations may be cited innumerable vocational courses, health courses, citizenship courses, and character courses.

(2) The trend toward a more comprehensive social functionalism.—This trend is, of course, correlative with the first named. The criterion of curriculum completeness has shifted from academic encyclopedism to the whole of extra-school living. The trend toward a more comprehensive social functionalism is also reflected in the curricularizing of the extra-curricular activities, which in the minds of many are becoming the most promising instruments for achieving a training for life which is at once explicit and broad.

(3) The trend toward individualization.—In many respects this trend is the converse of those just described. In its varied manifestations one can distinguish at least three levels or stages: The first relates chiefly to the recognized differences of individuals in their ability to learn; the second recognizes individual differences in interests and needs as well as in learning ability; the third makes the resolving of personality conflicts, the integrating of experiences, individual adaptability, and fullness of individual living the objective to be sought by the curriculum. It is closely associated with the guidance movement.

(4) The trend toward integration.—The trend toward curricular integration is not to be confused with individual pupil integration. Four phases of the curricular integration trend should be noted. The first may be described as the "unitizing" of subject courses—the organizing of courses into a limited number of major divisions rather than into the traditional daily lesson assignments. The second appears in the building of broad, trunk-line, sequential and cumulative courses. A third phase is indicated by recently renewed interest in the correlation of subjects. A fourth does imply a sharp break with a subject organized curriculum. I refer to the frequently proposed organization of the curriculum into large units of study without consideration for the conventional subject divisions. The life-category or area-of-living centers of organization are most often mentioned as desirable substitutes. This scheme of organization is actually developing alongside the traditional organization in many of our schools.

(5) The trend toward the higher mental processes.—This trend appears, I think, as a reaction against what is regarded as an excessive emphasis upon memorizing, mechanical skills and the like in our schools. It reveals a growing concern for reasoning, orderly thinking, generalization, the mastery of concepts, the drawing of inferences, and the making of applications.

(6) The trend toward activism.—This trend, already implied in connection with some of the preceding discussion, presents two phases, as I see it: (a) Activities, as facilitating stipulated learnings, and (b) Activities as intrinsically educative. The first phase does not call for any marked change in educational objectives nor in the basic content of the curriculum; it merely recognizes the advantage of motivating study through enterprises involving a good deal more over-activity than is traditionally associated with that process. In the second phase, the activity, project, or unit of work is regarded as the central educative value and the subject learnings that may grow out of it as so many valuable by-products. Out of such projects come initiative, creativeness, goal setting, planning, coöperative techniques, persistence, critical attitude, and the progressive reconstruction of experience that is the central fact of all sound education.

In a somewhat gradual and subtle way the trend toward activism is serving to correct what may be our rather exaggerated view of the secondary-school subjects as accumulations of relatively static and stored up facts, principles, formulas, and processes. Those who are committed to subjects are at considerable pains these days to point out that a school subject properly conceived is not inert, lifeless, but is in reality decidedly dynamic both in origin and present value. A school subject, they say, is after all nothing but a model the mastery of which adds direction, force and general effectiveness to otherwise waste motion.

ACADEMIC FREEDOM

By CHARLES WESLEY FLINT
Chancellor, Syracuse University

Condensed from The Educational Record, October, 1935, pp. 433-443.

Published by The American Council on Education,
744 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C.

Just as judges are appointed, not to serve the will of their appointees, but to serve Justice, pure and unalloyed, so scholars are selected by trustees, not to reflect the judgment of trustees, but to serve Truth fearlessly and dispassionately.

For many decades the danger zone of academic freedom, or "area of sensitiveness", was in the field of the physical and natural sciences, where physical evolution seemed to clash with the church's teaching. Now, however, the field for inquisition is in the social sciences, where social evolution seems to clash with the established order.

Against the background of this realization that the area of social sciences has become an arena, we ask, "What is this academic freedom?"

In relation to students or to the classroom, it is the teacher's right, rather their duty, along with the students, to dig out all the facts without prejudice or passion, to examine and to present all sides of each proposition. For example, social, economic, and political life in all its phases should be thoroughly studied, all schools of thought, all serious plans and proposals, all doctrines, and all isms.

The true teacher, while having, of course, his own convictions and making no effort to conceal them, yet seeks not to impose his particular point of view, or specially to promote his particular theories. Rather, with personal detachment he will seek to unfold fairly all possible views on controversial issues, even leaning over backward to be sure he is fair to views in disagreement with his own. His efforts are to train students to independent thinking, to refuse to accept on mere assertion or authority without personal investigation and persuasion, to become skilled to resist propaganda from any source, neither blindly accepting as right things as they are nor fantastically hitching his wagon to the comet of a current ism.

May I seemingly digress here to consider freedom of speech in its wider application, of which academic freedom is a part?

Whence these fears and questionings among us? Have we not confidence in the truth? Have we not confidence in knowledge? Have we not confidence in the American people, in their capacity to know and to discriminate in their balance and poise? Have we no more faith than that in ourselves and our institutions?

The only safe indoctrination is with truth—more and more truth. Repression, ignorance, and half-truths are always dangerous.

Fairly debatable is the question to what extent protection in freedom of speech should be afforded those who would use such freedom to promote what would destroy that very protection both for themselves and others.

But the question still is: By repression or by refutation? If they can be refuted, clearly refutation is the method both of Americanism and of common sense, and nothing more is needed. If they cannot be refuted, they cannot in the long run be successfully repressed.

Let us now return from observations on freedom of speech in general as a background of academic freedom to further specific consideration of the latter.

Academic freedom is neither an individual right nor the natural prerogative of a teacher; neither a license with some magic protection nor a senate-like privilege with immunity. Rather it is the freedom of the teacher to teach.

Academic freedom is not a blank check; it is limited by the deposits to the teacher's credit, the degree of his scholarly attainments. It is not freedom "to say what you think without thinking what you say"; not the right to unlimited expression whether or not possessing anything worth expressing; not license to scatter about publicly half-baked theories, egotistical vagaries, or to vocalize loose thinking masquerading as liberal thinking; but rather freedom to speak under compulsion of thought that which is worthy of being said by one who is qualified to be heard. The measure of the knowledge bounds the measure of academic freedom.

If the position and power placed in a man's hands by truth for truth are prostituted to partisan propaganda, or if by destroying confidence in his scientific spirit, he discredits his profession and his institution as guides for students and as leaders for the community, then his fellow teachers should undertake his reformation. America has made academic freedom a reality. To a percentage in the highest nineties have teachers proved themselves worthy of that trust.

But freedom is all of a piece, whether freedom of opinion, of speech, of the seas, of the air, or of academic association. All phases are of truth, both released and limited by knowledge of the truth.

RURAL EDUCATION

By EDWIN R. EMBREE

President of the Julius Rosenwald Fund

Condensed from School and Society, November 2, 1935, pp. 585-593.
Published by the Science Press, Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

The growth of the public-school system is one of the wonder stories of American history. No nation in world history has even attempted to provide educational facilities to the extent that we are doing.

The estimate of the National Education Association for enrollment during the year 1934-35 in public high schools (last four years of the course) is 6,719,000. If to these are added the approximately 450,000 students in private secondary schools, the total secondary-school enrollment appears as 7,169,000. The estimated present United States population aged fifteen to eighteen is 10,175,000. If these estimates are at all correct, approximately seventy per cent of the American young people of high-school age are actually in high school. In such highly developed countries as Great Britain, France, and Germany, secondary education is fifteen or eighteen per cent of the young people of secondary-school age.

Simply because America has done so great a work in building a system of public schools, she must now begin the task of offering real education to her young people. We have been busy constructing the gigantic physical plant, we have been overwhelmed by the necessity of finding teachers of even minimum qualifications to handle the swelling hordes of pupils, we have been fighting our way through problems of organization and administration. But now we must turn our attention toward education itself, toward developing the intelligence, the skill, the individual and social resourcefulness of the thirty million of young people.

The whole school system suffers from formalism, from routine concern with a few items; and scholastic routine is peculiarly harmful to rural schools. The present curriculum has been largely made up by people in cities and has been chiefly aimed toward urban schools. Much of the rote learning is of little value even to children who are growing up to become clerks and industrial workers. But it is even less appropriate for children of the farms and countrysides.

The first and great reform in rural schools, therefore, is that education shall direct itself to the peculiar needs of country children. When we look at the kind of preparation children need for rural living, five items stand out: (1) Ability to read (and write) understandingly; (2) Some skill in the use of figures; (3) Knowledge of farming; (4) Manual dexterity; (5) Health.

Reading is, of course, the first commandment even among the basic three R's. If a child can and does read he can care for the rest of his education by his own efforts. The difference between educated and uneducated people is almost entirely the difference in the range and understanding of their reading. Abraham Lincoln was one of the best educated of men in spite of meager schooling—because he read so avidly.

Expression in written and oral language is the obverse of reading. It is a part of the process of gaining acquaintance and competence in the use of that amazing social tool—one of the most important inventions man has ever made—the communication of ideas by words. Penmanship and spelling are among the mechanics of writing; the ability to express oneself clearly and effectively is a higher aspect of the same process.

Ability to deal with numbers and figures is another of the essentials of modern life. It is very important, but this importance has to do with real life, not with a lot of crossword puzzle work, however hallowed these puzzles may be by history and tradition.

The remaining subjects on our list fall into another class. They are recognized as needed preparation for living, especially in the country. If we think of education as the leading out of a child's capacities, as the development of him to be happy in himself and effective in his community, we must plan not in terms of traditional school disciplines but in terms of what the child needs as preparation for his life.

No one can deny the influence upon modern life of skill in bending nature to our needs; no one can deny the rich field of learning in the general and special study of nature. If the school has not yet organized these rich and living topics so that they can be readily acquired by pupils, it is high time it did so. With all due modesty we suggest that an exact knowledge of how to manipulate corn and cows and honey bees is even more enlightening (as well as more useful) than intimate acquaintance with the vagaries of least common denominators, lists of the kings of England, or other traditional tricks of the school-master's trade.

Manual dexterity is equally necessary to the country boy. It is not merely that he be enabled to mend a broken chair or tinker with an automobile—important as these are—but also that he be given outlet for creative work in making objects both useful and beautiful. The person who can use his hands with a master's skill in building a house, painting a picture, playing the violin or weaving cloth has a means of expression that is about as nearly godlike as a human being can achieve. He also has a pretty sure foundation for making a living.

In connection with these arts of living, of course, attention will be given to the home as well as to the farm. Cooking, dressmaking, and housekeeping are natural partners of carpentry and planting.

Health is a more difficult subject for the school. Yet health is so important to any sort of robust living that every child should have some knowledge of its basic laws, some competence in protecting himself and his companions from the commoner diseases. This is especially true in the country, where public sanitation is apt to be less developed than in cities and where the struggle against disease is more nearly an individual or family matter. Since poor country diet often results from the absence of diversity of crops, health and gardening become supplementary subjects. At the moment health is probably the most unsatisfactory of all school courses. Any one who can devise good courses in this topic will be a public benefactor.

The whole school should be organized around the social setting. In earlier days the task of the school was simple. Parents in the home gave children their social direction and acquainted them at first hand with the homely skills of farming, the hand trades, and homemaking. The parents knew very definitely why they sent their children to school. And if they didn't learn to read or spell or figure the parents applied an immediate stimulus or applauded the teacher for doing so. If social behavior was aberrant, the school was not left to deal with it alone; the home and the church moved up their strong forces to an immediate and direct attack.

Then in the western world two things happened swiftly and simultaneously. With the industrial revolution and the rapid progress of machinery and science, life became enormously complex. With labor-saving machinery the work of children was no longer needed or even permitted. Therefore, increasingly children were dumped onto the schools, which have had to assume custodial as well as educational functions. At the same time the home and the church began to wane in influence until to-day they retain only a shadow of their earlier prestige and social power. Thus the school has been left with a stupendous and ever-growing task and without the support of other social forces.

The problem to-day is to make both teachers and pupils realize that learning is vital to the happiness and effectiveness of the individual children and of the community. At the same time the school must be enabled to take into itself those functions of social leadership which unfortunately other agencies have given up.

More and more we need fine, well-balanced, thoroughly educated persons for the high post of teacher—more so in the country than in the city, for rural regions are peculiarly lacking in other agencies and other leaders.

Since we cannot expect to transform quickly the million and a quarter teachers who to-day staff our educational system, a short cut to improved education is better organized and better edited materials which may be used directly by the pupils. If these texts and pamphlets make clear the history and the direct social utility of such seemingly artificial processes as written language and the use of money, as mathematics and science and political organization, the pupil himself may take an increasing part in his own education.

THE SECONDARY-SCHOOL ASSEMBLY

Among extra-curricular activities the assembly occupies a place that is rapidly increasing in importance. I do not mean, of course, the old type of assembly in which a brief devotional exercise was followed by announcements and an all-too-often impromptu lecture from some "distinguished guest" but rather the vital school "town meeting" based on the realization that pupils are citizens of the school and that they can share best in its proffered opportunities by sharing in the responsibilities associated with these opportunities.

A long list of values may be reduced to three general objectives for the assembly. It should be: (1) Educative (of benefit to the pupil); (2) Unifying (of benefit to the school); and (3) Vitally concerned in the formation of good citizenship habits (of benefit to the community).

It is the general feeling that assembly planning by teachers alone robs students of valuable responsibilities and experience, while planning done by students unguided is apt to be vague and productive of unnecessarily inferior results. Influenced by these opinions, therefore, I would recommend an Assembly Committee of eight: three faculty members, and five students appointed by the Student Council, for a high school of six or seven hundred pupils.

Of the three advisory faculty members, one should be the principal, who sometimes furnishes the only point of contact and influence with desirable outside speakers, and who is responsible for all activities in the school anyway; one should be the special music teacher, whose department will make some contribution to every assembly; and the other should be the English teacher, who will be expected to pass on all performances and announcements to be given by students, advising as to diction and stage presence. The limitation of faculty members to these three does not mean that other heads of departments should not be consulted about program features pertaining to their particular fields, but these three have a responsibility for every assembly and should therefore be kept constantly in touch with the yearly program.

The first problem to be met after organizing may have to do with scheduling the assembly period itself on the school program. Shall a short assembly be held every day, or once a week, two or three times a week, or only when occasion demands? The next problem for the Assembly Committee is the planning of a year's schedule of activities. What groups are to be assigned individual programs? Personally, I incline toward club sponsorship of the assembly. It furnishes a focal point for varying branches of interest, a promise of immediate rewards for expended effort, a unifying project for a group of heterogeneous abilities.

The Assembly Committee in arranging its schedule attempts to give the earliest dates to strong, experienced clubs so that their good example will set a high standard for others to follow. Weaker clubs may be combined in joint programs if necessary. The program duties of the Assembly Committee are not limited to the simple ones of securing sponsors and assigning them places on the schedule, but they also include the careful selection from a multitude of possibilities of a varied and purposeful series of topics and types of program.

The following is a suggested list of rules which aim to establish certain habits of stage and entertainment etiquette and

WHAT I MEAN BY PUBLIC FORUM

By JOHN W. STUDEBAKER

U. S. Commissioner of Education

Condensed from The Democratic Digest, October, 1935, p. 9.
Published by Women's Division, Democratic National Committee,
Washington, D. C.

It is basic to good democratic action that we develop the capacity for group discussion of all issues and problems which affect our group life. Without this counseling together and sharing of ideas, facts, and points of view we have no adequate basis for coming to intelligent conclusions on public policies.

First of all, I want to see public forums operated as a regular adult education program in the public-school system. The discussion method is a technique of education. It should be used by the agencies for public education in a definite process of education. Nothing can add more to the value of public education than to extend it to include the majority of adults in the community. This participation of adults in the program of public schools will improve the exercise of citizenship in the public control of education, the selection of school boards, and policy-making bodies.

Second, I want to see an adult civic education program along forum lines begun and developed in accord with high professional standards of leadership. The public forum is the last place in the educational world to engage amateurs. In the kind of forums I am advocating, we strive for nothing less than the continuous preparation of the citizen for self-government. This requires skilled leadership capable of maintaining an objective and impartial approach to the discussion. Therefore, we must have the very cream of the teaching profession in places of forum leadership.

Third, I think forums should be so placed and so managed that they are readily available to all of the youth and adults in the community, rural and urban, in the nation.

A program of forums should be operated at least thirty weeks of each year. In the local community, a public forum program should schedule meetings in all parts of the city or township. In addition, community-wide forums which present speakers of note representing a variety of points of view on important public questions serve to bring the people of the entire community together. But in these forums I want to see a panel on the platform, including able opponents of the main speaker's position, ready to challenge and question his conclusions. If we are in earnest about doing something really effective to wipe out civic illiteracy to preserve and improve our Democracy, we must insist that public discussion be so organized in our program that it actually engages the vast majority of the people.

In the last place, the public forums should strive to attain the ideal of education which is to aid the learners to learn. This means that the management of the program should be as far removed from political manipulation as possible. They must be sponsored, therefore, by an agency which has as its goal real education and not a point of view to promote. I think that public education comes nearest to being that agency.

YOUTH LOOKS AHEAD

By WILLIAM KENWORTHY

Condensed from The Forum, October, 1935.
Published by The Forum Publishing Co., Inc., New York.

I wonder if you who have always had a job have ever thought what it is to be unemployed. I know a great many of you think that the unemployed can be divided into two main classes: those who are unable to work, and those who do not want to work. Believe me, you are wrong. There are, of course, a few of both these types, but the main class consists of those who want work, badly, and cannot get it.

I am of the working class, when I am working. At present I am unemployed. My generation has passed the childish and adolescent stage, and, where it is capable, is beginning to think clearly and calmly; but unfortunately, there are many, especially of my class, who will never think.

In 1922 I finished my education at an elementary school in the Midlands,* where my parents had moved. I went to work in a factory and have had several jobs since in offices and factories, until July of last year, when I lost my work and went on the dole.

My education, such as it is, is of a rough-and-ready variety and owes more to what I have read since leaving school than what I learned at school; it takes second place to the more deeply inculcated experience of life itself. Perhaps that is why I prefer material things to imagery. My opinions of literature and art, therefore, would not agree with those of a university professor. Instead of reading poetry and studying art, my time has been spent in doing things more likely to bring me a living, yet, in spite of this, here I am on the dole. Whether literature or art would have served me better now, I do not know; it is no use thinking about it. The fact remains, I am on the dole.

I try not to grumble but to think I am just unfortunate. Yet, I cannot but feel it should not be so; it would not be if we were living by a system instead of for a system.

I have seen a great deal of the ugliness of life, of illness with poverty, of pain and suffering without hope of relief, of overcrowding and misery in the dingy back streets, of unemployment that has lasted for years. I go to the labor exchange twice a week and meet there all sorts of types, rough fellows mostly, but good-tempered enough to speak to. When I first went there, I slunk in shamefacedly, avoiding everybody's glance. Now, I go in openly and unashamed, for it is not my fault I go there; I would work if I could. It is not my shame, it is the shame of the state and its system of civilization that allows so much manhood, healthy vigorous manhood to grow up and grow old in idleness, losing its self respect, eating its heart away and gnawing at the heart of the nation.

I tell myself there are others much worse off than I. I am single. I try to imagine what a married man feels with a wife and family living on a few shillings a week. He sees the world going luxury-mad, with its motor cars, airplanes, radios, fur coats, and extravagant pageantry, while his children go to school ill-clad and ill-nourished. And he can see no relief.

Is it to be wondered that I doubt the sanity and common justice of mankind when I read of goods and foodstuffs rotting in barns and warehouses and even being destroyed? When I see that our five big joint-stock banks made a total profit last year of nearly nine million pounds and another large concern five million, fourteen million altogether, enough to feed and keep a hundred thousand families for a year?

From this gloom, this craziness, this topsy-turvydom, I search for some ray of light, some hope for the future. I look to the institutions of our fathers and what do I find?

I find a Church reft with animosities, sickly with moth-eaten pageantry and pedantry, and utterly divorced in practice from the principles it professes. I look to the policy of our government and find it can do nothing better than think of tariffs and make laws to prohibit betting among a working class that can hardly afford a glass of beer. I listen to finance and big business for their views of the future and hear that things are improving, dividends are increasing, but still there must be economy, rationalization, reorganization. Dividends! Economy! Good God! Must human life and flesh and blood be forever subservient to dividends, economy, reorganization? Must things pick up only when human life is crushed down and industry prosper amidst the poverty and distress of the people? Is rationalization our ultimate aim, our land of promise, the Utopia of our forefathers? Cannot two thousand years of civilization produce anything better than this?

I do not care a scrap for organized religion, for heaven and hell and the symbolic soul, but I find a wonderful basis for a social system in the word of Jesus, who was a man. I searched about for a creed into which these precepts were or could be easily incorporated and I found one in socialism—not altogether in the street corners, though that has the right foundation, but the socialism of true Christianity. A socialism based as much on Jesus as on Karl Marx, on equality, selflessness; and peace. It is a socialism that will give every man life and happiness, a socialism that will recognize no class but humanity, where bankers and financiers will no longer be powers for good or evil, where currency troubles will disappear when industry produces what people need, where science will be harnessed not for the destruction but for the benefit of man, where faith and courage and friendliness dictate the policies of races.

Rationalization, shorter working hours, improved trade do not touch the problem; an entire change of spirit, of face, and of outlook is needed. I believe this change has already started; I believe that many people, especially young people, are to-day looking towards the socialism of Christ not only as an ideal but as a longed-for reality, a reality where nation will speak unto nation not over tariff walls but over the planks of common interests and common progress, where the whole common progress, where the whole human race will be united in one brotherhood of good will. Admittedly, the goal is far and difficult to reach, but how much nearer it will be if we all have our faces turned toward it, acting toward it, helping toward it. The socialism of Christ offers us our only salvation; you can see that if you stop to think.

THE HIGH COST OF CULTURE

By CONSTANCE CASSADY

Condensed from American Mercury, October, 1935, pp. 169-175.
Published by American Mercury, Inc., 570 Lexington Ave., New York City.

One of the enigmas of the present era is the problem confronting those who are forced to rear their children in environment wholly opposed to their own cultural ideals. All over the country, there must be families like mine which have been constrained by financial circumstances to strike their roots in alien soil—alien in standards, in taste, and in reasoning.

It will be necessary, in order to view the picture clearly, to understand the exact status of such a family. The parents are products of a cultural background. Their preferences reflect a high standard of taste, and a certain breadth of outlook. But they are poor in the world's goods, and must find a home where rents are low enough to be encompassed by a shrinking budget.

For the parents this is all well enough. Their lives are enriched by the social and cultural factors which even those of limited means can enjoy, and they have little actual contact with their environment. But for their children it is another matter.

In his own home, the child is surrounded by evidences of good taste. But he finds, as he forms a few tenuous friendships with neighborhood children, that he is being constantly reminded of divergencies in training and point of view which seem to fix a barrier between him and his companions, and make him feel vastly inferior. "All the other kids" stay up later than he is allowed to, consume quantities of soda pop and penny candy, attend the dance marathon, bathe once a week, if then, and go to the movies every other day. The movies particularly are a bone of contention. The child whose parents have taken him to only a few selected pictures is definitely out of it. A privilege has been denied him, and his more fortunate companions eye him askance.

He may know the names and the habits of the birds about his house, he may be able to distinguish the different instruments in a symphony orchestra, he may have the beginning of an appreciation of color and line in art as well as in nature, he may be on the threshold of literary appreciation, but all this counts for nothing if he cannot recognize the popular film stars and talk glibly about the comparative merits of Fords and Chevrolets.

It is at this point that intelligent parents, if they are worthy of the qualification, will enquire more closely into the forces at work about the child. It is all very well to admit that the middle class has deplorable taste, but a society is built upon more essential foundations than that. One must strike through the top-soil of manners and customs to the basic strata beneath, in order to know whether this is rich or sterile earth.

The "sense of honor" which played so important a part in the early training of some of us, while it did not invariably work a charm, at least gave us pause in many a tight spot. It was in some instances a powerful deterrent. The public school makes nothing of social training. The parents are either too busy or too lax themselves to give it any attention. The church makes a half-hearted effort, but religion is admittedly a dead force in most respects. The only stimulus toward honesty and honor would seem to be the fear of consequences—a deterrent which may work wonders among criminals, but which seems hardly an admirable one for adolescents.

The middle-class mind has its own creed based upon cruelty, ignorance, and hypocrisy. Its innumerable by-laws are mouthed over and over, and the children learn to parrot them in the cradle. "I never sit next to a nigger in the street car." "If they don't like this country, they can go back where they came from."

One of the most interesting manifestations of the popular mind is its abhorrence of sex. The children of these homes are stifled by the frustrations of their parents. The dirtiness of the sources of life are made known to them by devious means, and thus the keynote is sounded for their adult attitude toward sex. The child of the cultured home will have acquired a healthy acceptance of sex along with his nursery rhymes. He has been privy to the family life of his own pets, and it is a natural and interesting phenomenon, but no more so than, say, the growth of plants or habits of insects. Then he suddenly finds that his own knowledge (which had not hitherto seemed particularly important) is a source of great interest. Curious, shifty eyes devour him when he speaks about obvious matters, there is nudging and giggling, and certain words he had not known are introduced into conversation. It is his first encounter with the leering underside of life, but, unfortunately, it will not be his last.

What, then, is to be done? Some of my acquaintances maintain that the child of the superior home should be permitted to run with the pack, and to accept the standards of the masses temporarily. For my part, I feel it an injustice to the child to stand back and permit him to follow the crowd, if one is aware of the utter futility of its goal.

Another school of opinion insist that to encourage the child to stand apart from his surroundings is not only harmful but it condemns him to a life of loneliness and possible maladjustments. The only answer is that the intelligent man or woman is consecrated from the beginning to partial isolation. The ways of the mob will never be his ways, so why not let this be understood at the start.

I believe, however, that in a truer sense an escape from mediocrity is possible. There is no reason why the child should not learn that the whole vast world of intellect is his, whether he be prince or pauper. His parents must, of course, face the fact that there will be a period of unremitting conflict when the child will turn eagerly to the glittering excitement of the here-and-now, rather than trust to the dim future which they see for him.

I think, to combat this, there is no sharper weapon than ridicule. Let us, then, amuse ourselves at the expense of cheapness, of intolerance, and irrationality, for surely gaiety is the natural prerogative of childhood.

Not by force but by constant demonstration of our own joy in abundant living, can we clarify the values of life for our children. Our endeavor must be to make of the home a vital and self-contained unit, compact within its four walls, and yet as wide as the catholicity of human thought—an integral part, not of the negligible community but of the whole civilization.

The child who has caught a glimpse of the majesty of man's progress down the ages, the sweep of philosophy and the arts, the dignity of simplicity, and the harsh beauty of truth, will not be led astray in later life. That he should accept his parent's beliefs on faith would be neither possible nor desirable. He must attain his own philosophy of living, but, whatever it is, it will be the result of a deep-rooted integrity. In the end, he will go his way, not necessarily happy, but content in the strength of his growing understanding. And I believe we can wish him no finer future than that.

THE TAIL THAT WAGS THE NATION

By DONALD A. LAIRD

Condensed from the Review of Reviews, November, 1935, pp. 44-61.

Published by Review of Review Corporation,
233 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Should the ballot be restricted to citizens able to take care of themselves? One out of four cannot.

It is not the general ability of our politicians and national leaders which should cause us concern. It is the general intelligence of one-fourth of our neighbors, those who live "across the tracks" or in the slums, or those who are content to live and raise large families in weather-beaten shacks on exhausted farms. Of slight concern to them is the balanced budget or the state of the national debt. They have tasted the dole—money without effort—and henceforth their votes are that demagogue's to command who shall promise most.

The tail is now wagging Washington and Wall Street and La Salle Street.

We are to-day faced with tremendous problems incident to trying to run industry and government successfully in a democracy which has seen its average general ability gradually diluted through successive generations. The public schools, free to all, have not been sufficient to offset undermining forces. This depression has witnessed no attempt to salvage the dignity and spirit of those possessing good general ability, those who have been the nation's mainstays. Rather it has seen them browbeaten through relief lists into hopeless despondency.

The fact of the matter is that our complex mechanized civilization has got too far ahead of too many of our people. A conservative estimate of the feeble-minded at large in the United States (outside of institutions) is about one-million persons. One-million are unable to do any work satisfactorily! And the general ability of thirty-thousand others must be damned by faint praise.

Each generation has seen some lowering of the American average level of general ability. Although we now have practically no immigration, the lowering process is still going on insiduously and almost irrevocably, due to the differential in the birth rates of the various ability groups. The birth rate is inversely related to the general ability, for some reason. In 1934, it is said there were one million children born to persons on the dole. That is how the problem of the dole will become a self-perpetuating octopus leading directly to national decay.

The restricted electorate of more than a century ago may be worth reviewing as pointing the way to a basic and sound approach. True, those were days when a young nation, with enemies in every direction and at every distance, charted a course which was eminently successful so long as both the course and the electorate were understanding.

We must consider some facts which will irritate many chambers of commerce. They cannot be blamed for taking offense, but the facts and the situation are of such critical import that it would be crass negligence to gloss them over, as has been all too common in the past. We have a blind tendency to blame crooked utility magnates and grafting welfare workers for our national ills, but some not-too-pleasant truths may open many eyes to something more significant in the vortex of our national crucible than hypocrites in high places.

Nineteen states rate below the average of the country in general ability of their citizens. Florida, with a 30 per cent Negro population, is the first state rating slightly below the national average, but New Mexico is so far below that we might almost be better off to give it back to the Pima Indians. The listing is as follows: Florida, South Dakota, Oklahoma, Georgia, Vermont, Missouri, Mississippi, Alabama, North Dakota, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, South Carolina, Arkansas, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Maine, New Mexico.

This list is taken from the work of the late D. L. Pearce Bailey, Lieutenant-Colonel in neuro-psychiatric work during the World War. It is based, not on literacy, but on a composite of rates for feeble-mindedness within the states and on army intelligence testings of draftees from the states.

It should be noted that there is not an industrial state below the average, and that the nineteen low states contribute only a little to the nation's tax receipts, in proportion to their population. In looking over the distribution of the dole, the low states generally head any list of per capita gifts from the pockets of taxpayers in other states.

The business man's burden is found where there is the largest proportion in the population who cannot figure out how many pencils they could buy for a quarter if the pencils sold at two for a nickel. The large proportion—larger in some states than in others—who cannot, through inborn lack of general ability, make even simple calculations and purchases or plan their work for themselves, are the focal spots of economic dry rot which spreads to draw down those with enough general ability to be frugal or thrifty.

Here we have discussed some of the neglected psychological factors which make reconstruction a difficult task—and a different task, possibly, from that conceived by those who have taken the reins into their hands. Our economic life and our external civilization have become so complicated that mastering them, or even getting along so that both ends meet, is beyond the ken of great portions of the population.

WHAT IS THE MEANING OF THE VERB "TO TEACH"?

EDITORIAL

Condensed from The Nation, December 4, 1931, p. 635.
Published by The Nation, 20 Vesey Street, New York City.

What is the meaning of the verb "to teach"? This simple question is agitating the District of Columbia. A rider to the District appropriation bill passed by the last Congress provided that salaries were not to be paid to teachers who "taught or advocated communism." The Board of Education has acted on the assumption that a teacher may present his pupils with information about communism if he is careful to refrain from championing any such subversive doctrine. This interpretation has been upheld by the corporation counsel for the District. In opposition the American Legion, the D. A. R., and the Hearst press have advanced the theory that the rider prohibits the dissemination of any information on the subject of communism. The difficulties in which such an interpretation would involve a teacher are obvious, ranging all the way from an inability to discuss in a classroom one of the most important issues before the country to-day to a more specific inability to describe the form of government under which one of the largest nations of the earth is now living. Our patriots should be warned that American children were too clever for the stork story; they will Find Out about communism! They will ask their parents why these matters are not discussed in school. Or they will learn their communism in the street, and they will learn not that communism is inferior to our own democratic form of government, but that it looks like a lot of fun for everybody.

PAINLESS EDUCATION

The American system of education ought to be the best in the world. It is universal. Every child not only may attend school, but is required to do so. The state does not discontinue free education at the end of the elementary period, but permits attendance in tax-supported schools, colleges, and universities up to any age. We have the most elaborate and expensive system of public training schools for teachers. We pay our teachers, not enough, but certainly more than teachers are paid in other countries.

One of the fundamental considerations offered to justify universal free education in a republic is that it creates thinking, law-abiding, and morally clear-seeing citizens. Do our schools succeed in turning out men and women of this kind? By the thousands, yes. By the millions, no.

A great many school executives and teachers regard this sort of education for citizenship as their job, and work conscientiously, intelligently, and with great patience to send out of their schools young people who have acquired skill in the use of the tools of education, who have learned to use leisure wisely, and who have habits of thinking and patterns of acting that will make them desirable members of society.

Another large section of the teaching guild assume that they fulfill their obligation to the public, that they return value to the state when they assist their pupils in learning to read, to write, and to do their sums.

Perhaps the largest section of all are entirely indifferent. They are not professional teachers. Many men take up teaching as a financial stepping-stone to law, medicine, engineering, or some other profession, business, or trade. Thousands of girls become certificated teachers, as an interim job between college graduation and matrimony.

Like the physician, the teacher is dealing with human material—the doctor with body and mind, mainly body, the teacher with mind and body, mind first. The coroner and the undertaker often dispose of the doctor's mistakes; but the mistakes of the teacher are projected into society as permanent liabilities or menaces.

If the teachers' influence upon the lives of the young is as important as this, it would seem that common prudence would require the teachers' colleges to survey the present needs of the schools, and admit to the colleges only the most intelligent, the most promising in character and personality for this high service.

In most states, the tax-supported university and colleges are required by law or custom to admit the graduates of any standard high school in the state. It is assumed that the unfit will be unable to pass the courses they enroll for, and will voluntarily withdraw. Local pressure has compelled the "prudent" teacher in the high schools to pass and graduate all students, good, bad, and indifferent, who have persisted in attending those schools for four years. The teachers' colleges are subject to the same pressure, only a little more distant.

The practical result of the condition is that at the end of two, three, or four years every student who has been stubbornly persistent is given the blessing of a reluctant Alma Mater and a certificate to teach in the public schools of the state. Then begins anew the vicious circle of painless education in the tax-supported schools of America. No one knows how many of the eight hundred seventy-five thousand public-school teachers are wholly unfit to teach, how many are half-qualified, and how many are excellent, and succeed in spite of all discouraging hindrances.

Our system of education has developed a restless hierarchy of supervisors and executives who so harass the teachers with the changing machinery of education that they cannot give their time and calm attention to the children for whom the schools exist. Learn to do by doing is followed by apperception, and we suddenly learn to proceed from the known to the unknown; apperception gives way to recapitulation, recapitulation to the five or seven primary objectives; objectives are succeeded by purposive motivations; these by activity leading to further activity; and then we find ourselves suddenly in a child-centred school; and just when we think the ship is swinging easily at her moorings in a quiet harbor, we find her dragging anchor and in the outbound current of progressive education.

The teacher who knows that her job is to assist children to learn to read, write, add, subtract, multiply, and divide, to tell the truth, keep clean and well, to respect the rights and property of others, to live usefully, peaceably, and happily in a complex social organization will be comforted by discovering that the essential part of all that tangle of terms is just one or two things masquerading under a succession of names through several generations, and that she has always been progressive and effective in her teaching when she was let alone and permitted to do her work with children, rather than with machinery and "statistical data."

Parents send children to school to learn. Seventy-five years ago children went to school only to acquire skill in using the tools of learning: reading, writing, and arithmetic—hammer, saw, and square. In the twentieth century we recognize these tools for what they are—merely tools to be used in building up the real structure of education. The real structure consists of all the kinds of knowledge, skills, arts, manners, tastes, principles of action, and the like, that children can acquire to aid themselves in living most completely the fullest life each is capable of living. If our elementary schools do not succeed in teaching these fundamental skills, how can we expect the young people to use them with intelligence and accuracy in the higher schools?

Students without a mastery of these skills go on into the high schools, then into the liberal arts and teachers' colleges; then they are graduated and begin to teach the next generation. What happens when the teacher is one of the uneducated persons? Not only a few dull children will fail to get any kind of acceptable education, but the majority of the children of all grades of intelligence will have that experience, and the condition will become worse and worse with each lap of the vicious circle.

What can be done about it? First, we shall have to abandon our approval of painless education. Parents must not insist upon passing grades for their children unless the children actually learn.

Second, only real teachers should be permitted to continue in the profession. We do not have to guess who the real teachers are. We can examine the children whom they have taught. If at the end of a year the children have made no progress, then, conditions for teaching having been satisfactory, the teacher has been a poor teacher, even though she may have been "very sweet" and the children "very happy."

Third, we shall have to remove those pressures from the supervisors, principals, superintendents, even college presidents, that keep them dancing around in spirals and making believe that movement in any direction is necessarily progress. Make it possible for them to give their attention to the quality of the output of the plant rather than to the noise of the machinery.

Fourth, let taxpayers, parents, school boards, school executives, teachers, and children join in a campaign of self education against the insidious current belief that everything worth-while can be attained without work. Let us find the money to give every child the fullest and most effective education he or she is able to take, each one according to his capacity and no more.

Special Correspondence

Exchange of letters between American High School Pupils and English- Speaking Boys and Girls in Foreign Countries

As head of the language department of our school, I am sponsoring an exchange of correspondence between American boys and girls and English-speaking boys and girls in other countries.

One can see that there should be a great deal of gain from a project of this kind through the interchange of ideas as well as of pictures, photographs, stamps, souvenirs, etc.

If your pupils are interested in this enterprise, please send me their names, noting the following directions:

Send numbered lists with ages of pupils, preferably typewritten. Only the school address is necessary. Put the names of boys and girls on separate lists. Send only the names of boys and girls who are seriously interested. (Ages twelve to sixteen are suggested.) It will be necessary to collect ten cents from each pupil.

Upon receipt of your lists, names of pupils from Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, etc. will be sent to you immediately. Your pupils will then write the first letters.

If for any reason correspondents do not reply within a reasonable time, other names will be sent to you upon request at no extra charge.

Senior Society

A METHOD OF CHOOSING MEMBERS

C. D. McMURRY

Principal, Tremont Community High School
Tremont, Illinois

The problem of correctly grading and selecting seniors for honors on the bases of service, leadership, and character seems quite difficult to me. Scholarship is not so difficult a factor to determine since grades have been taken and recorded in detail throughout the entire period of attendance necessary for graduation from high school. Since scholarship is a factor that can be more correctly judged, I think that it should be counted with the other three for at least twenty-five per cent of the total number of points.

Furthermore, I am convinced that, at least for small high schools, a more nearly just choice can be made by having each teacher rate the candidates 1, 2, 3, 4, etc. in each of the three factors other than scholarship rather than on a percentage basis. Then the rating for scholarship can be taken from the school records without any guess work or mere estimating being necessary in arriving at the relative standings therein. Now, by adding up the total ratings as given by all teachers, the pupil with the lowest score would be ranked first, the pupil with the next lowest score would be ranked second, etc.

By using twenty-five per cent as a basis for rating each of the three factors, other than scholarship, one teacher may use a wider scale of grading than another, thereby exerting a greater influence in the total averages. For example, let us suppose that three of four teachers rate the pupils Ruth, Mary, and John with percentages of 75, 73, and 71 respectively, while the fourth teacher rates these same three pupils in a reverse order with percentages of 60, 67, and 74. By addition, the totals for each pupil will then be made to run 285, 286, and 288, respectively. That is, by using the wider range of figures, the fourth teacher has reversed a unanimous first choice of three teachers down to last place and making the last choice of three teachers first.

But by requiring these four teachers to rank their estimates in numerical order, the scores for these three pupils are 6, 8, and 10, respectively, with the lowest score being first choice. Therefore, the system of numerical rankings is more likely to result in a majority choice for each place. With such intangible and uncertain bases as we have for grading character, service, and leadership, each of which is to be counted of equal importance with scholarship, it seems to me that we should use the system of grading which will most nearly result in a majority decision of participating teachers and which will limit and equalize the power of any one teacher in arriving at the final standings of the various candidates.

ANOTHER METHOD

MARIAN C. FETTE

Chairman of Sponsors of the National Honor Society
Hannibal High School, Hannibal, Missouri

First a list of pupils scholastically eligible according to the regulations of the National Honor Society is given to each teacher to be scored or voted upon as follows:

Only those teachers may vote for a pupil who have come into definite contact with him for a period of a semester or more in a class, study hall, or home room, or in some extra-curriculum activity of major importance, such as Class Plays, Pep Clubs, Hi-Y, etc.

Each teacher shall score a pupil on a maximum basis of three on each of leadership, service, and character. The total of the scores averaged under each of these three is then taken, and averaged with the score of the scholarship record. On this last the candidates election to the society is based.

In this scoring boys compete with boys and girls with girls, but no student can be considered who does not score as much as three out of a possible six and a half points.

Any teacher who knows of an outstandingly objectionable trait in any student candidate should inform the committee, whereupon the name of that student will be removed permanently; or until proof of change and amendment in that student can be obtained.

These rulings, with the exception of the last paragraph, were published in the Black and Red Review, our school paper, and we have been gratified to notice that while before this year there were frequent questionings about the members elected or neglected, since then, no further inquiries or complaints have been made. We have rather taken this to indicate that, cut and dried though this system may be, it is still to be preferred to the indefinite vagaries of the personal judgment of the committee.

We do neither insist nor urge that every teacher vote even on every pupil whose name he knows. If a teacher feels he is competent to judge a student's character but not his leadership or his service, he may vote on the one trait and leave blanks, which are not the same as zeros, in the columns for the others. We have felt that it was unjust to the student to require a teacher to vote for him, when that teacher did not feel well enough acquainted with him to pass judgment on him.

Neither have we considered the matter of office holding under a special heading. If a student has rendered a service as an officer in student affairs, this, we felt, would be brought out sufficiently by the scoring of the teachers, especially of the sponsors, and should not be allowed special points. As a sad matter of fact there have been student officers who have rendered anything except a service to the school.

We do, however, hope to simplify the teacher's task by setting up some rather definite criteria for the bases on which service, leadership, and character are to be judged as well as for just what degree the numbers one, two, and three shall stand. The list might also be shortened by the simple process of reading to the faculty at one of its meetings, the names of many eligible but improbable nominees, and asking any teacher who wished the student's name retained to speak for him at that time.

A SCHEME FOR RATING QUALITIES OF CANDIDATES

FREDERICK L. POND

Principal, Meadville High School, Meadville, Pa.

Since the publication of the Character Rating Scale used in Meadville High School in the Bulletin 42, Department of Secondary School Principals, numerous inquiries have been received for the rating scales used for scholarship, leadership, and service.

The only way that judgment of these qualities can be made more objective is by separating them into constituents and assigning descriptive values of an ascending order and allotting some mathematical relationship to them. The following scales have proven satisfactory in rating students for the National Honor Society and as such are recommended.

Junior Society

THE JUNIOR NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

By A. W. JOHNSON, Minot, N. D.

From The North Dakota Teacher

One influence that has helped to train and provide leadership in Minot Junior High School has been a chapter of the Junior National Honor Society. The chapter was granted a charter by the National Council of the Department of Secondary-School Principals in 1931 and has grown to be the greatest single influence for good in the Minot Junior High School.

The membership varies from about six to ten per cent of the enrollment of the school. A sponsoring committee from the faculty together with the officers of the chapter form the steering committee.

Membership in the organization is based upon four points: Scholarship, service, leadership and growth, and character. In order to become a candidate for membership a pupil must have an average of three B's and one A, if he is carrying four subjects; or four B's and one A, if he is enrolled in five subjects. If he meets the scholarship requirement he is rated by each of the teachers with whom he comes in contact on service, leadership and growth, and character.

Each of these traits has been defined so that somewhat specific meaning attaches to it. Service is said to be: (a) a willingness to render cheerfully and enthusiastically any service to the school whenever called upon; (b) a readiness to show courtesy to visitors, members of the faculty, and fellow pupils; (c) an eagerness to offer one's self as a representative of his school or class in inter-class competition; (d) a willingness to uphold scholarship and to maintain a loyal school attitude in upholding the regulations of the school.

Leadership and growth are interpreted to mean: (a) demonstration of initiative which leads to higher scholarship; (b) successfully holding a class or school office; (c) a willingness to do the right in a quiet, sincere way.

Character is thought of as: (a) meeting all obligations to the school promptly and completely; (b) demonstration of an honest spirit in class work and sincerity towards teachers and associates; (c) upholding the ideals of the school whenever the occasion demands.

The pupils are given a citizenship rating on specially prepared mimeographed sheets a few weeks before the end of the year. Then, at the last school assembly of the year the successful candidates are inducted into membership in the chapter. An impressive candle lighting ceremony is conducted by the officers of the society. Since few outside speakers are used at the school assembly programs, the one invited to speak at this particular event gets a good hearing. The entire program is dignified and impressive and sets a high standard of performance.

Incoming sixth grade pupils have been invited as special guests. The ceremony is new to them and hence it makes a vivid impression. Last year some of the sixth grade teachers used this as an occasion for having the pupils write letters of appreciation. These letters show, to some extent, how the program registered with these children who are looking forward to entering junior high. The following is a sample from the many letters that were written:

"I enjoyed the Junior high school assembly very much and I hope I will like school as much as I liked this meeting. I liked the speaker especially because I thought he could explain things very fully. I also enjoyed to be told what the candles stood for. Next year I am going to try to get into the honor society. The solo, orchestra, and the glee club were also very good.

"Some time ago you wrote us a letter about Junior high school. My mother and father have read this.

"Your next year's pupil,

"ERLING BALSTAD."

Through this assembly the honor society made a contribution towards higher standards for the school and helped in orienting the incoming pupils. Both contributions are assets to any school.

The honor society is the core around which other school activities are formed. Its ideals and standards prevade all organizations. It means something to be a member of the group. Special permits are granted to pupils with membership in the society; they have the privilege to go to the library without asking for a pass; they may enter the building as soon as they arrive at the grounds.

What do these pupils do for the school? The faculty sponsoring committee has assigned to each teacher some of these pupils as assistants. They are used as pupil coaches to help pupils who have been absent and have make-up work to complete; they help pupils who are having some difficulty in getting their subject matter. Some help to check papers of the objective type and to record marks. The organization develops friendliness and helpfulness between pupils and makes for a better understanding between pupils and teachers. It also opens a way for teachers to develop leadership in some pupils.

The standards which the society has set are desirable, but they do not "just grow" with the formation of an honor society. Like any lesson or ideal, it is learned by doing. First a pupil is made aware of a standard, then opportunity to practice its application under satisfying conditions is provided.

This society is not just a glorified honor roll. It makes a contribution that has elevated the school spirit to one where pupils are willing to follow the right kind of leadership in service to other pupils and the growth of individual character.

An honor society is only a means to an end. Most of us in our pupil organization need some plan, either ready made or improvised, through which to work. Here is one which is national in scope and which makes an appeal to young people. It can be administered very readily so as to become a vital force for worthy standards in a school. There should be more both junior and senior high schools getting the benefits from this organization.

PIPKIN JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL

Springfield, Mo.,
October 14, 1935.

Dear Sir:

The National Junior Honor Society has been striving to find the best way to serve its school.

Last year the National Junior Honor Society took over the keeping of the detention room. The members stayed with the children who were being kept after school. Some of the children picked up the papers off the yard while others polished silver ware and did similar tasks. This year we are continuing this plan.

The Junior Honor Society is the publicity committee for the P.T.A.

The ninth grade Junior Honor Society members are going to write an item called the "School News" for the local paper.

Several weeks ago Dr. Clarence True Wilson of Washington, D. C., who is specializing in public moral and temperance favored us by accepting our invitation to be the guest speaker at our Honor Society initiation. This was the first time we have had a speaker at an initiation. We found this pleasing, however.

I am inclosing a list of both old and new National Junior Honor Society members of Pipkin Junior High School.

Very respectfully,

PAT CRUMPLEY.

NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

About fifteen years ago the Department of Secondary-School Principals (then the National Association of Secondary-School Principals) organized the National Honor Society with the end in view of stimulating scholarship in the secondary schools of the United States. To-day there are over eighteen hundred chapters and these are in the best high schools in the country. The four objectives of the society are: to create an enthusiasm for scholarship, to stimulate a desire to render service, to promote worthy leadership, and to encourage the development of character. Every high-school principal who has a chapter is enthusiastic over the productive results of this organization in his school. Direct all requests for literature to H. V. Church, 5835 Kimbark Avenue, Chicago.

WARNING

The National Honor Society has met with such great success that imitations are springing up in different parts of the country. These pseudo honor societies seem to have largely a commercial objective, and plan to exploit scholarship for financial ends. Members of our department are warned to beware of any plan to sell pins or emblems to pupils under the guise of scholarship, and are urged not to lend their aid or influence to such organizations.

The Department of Secondary-School Principals recommends only the National Honor Society and the National Junior Honor Society.

All orders must have the approval of the Principal

All orders should be sent only to the National headquarters.

SEALS AND MEMBERSHIP CARDS

Membership Cards—Since the organization of the National Honor Society there has been a growing demand for membership cards in the organization. Cards of membership, both for members of the National Honor Society and for the members of the National Junior Honor Society are now on sale. The cards (2½"×3¾") are engrossed on a fine quality of cardboard, have the emblem of the Society embossed upon them, and require only the inscription of the name of the member.

The price of the cards is five cents apiece.

Seal—The Seal ($1\frac{1}{4} \times 1\frac{1}{2}$ ") is a gilt embossed sticker to be affixed on the diplomas of members of chapters. A replica of the emblem is embossed on the seal.

The price of the seals is five cents apiece.

NATIONAL HONOR MEMBERSHIP CERTIFICATES

In response to repeated demands, the Department of Secondary-School Principals has prepared membership certificates ($8\frac{1}{2} \times 11$) for members of the National Honor Society. These certificates are lithographed on artificial parchment with the die of a facsimile of the emblem stamped in gold. They sell for fifteen cents apiece post-paid.

ENGRAVED STATIONERY

So many requests for National Honor stationery have come in that a supply is now on hand to meet the demands. This writing material is designed for the use of members and sponsors of the chapters of the National Honor Society. The engraved letterheads with envelopes to match come in two sizes with prices as follows:

48 engraved sheets, $7\frac{1}{4} \times 10\frac{1}{2}$	{	-----\$1.00
48 envelopes, $3\frac{3}{8} \times 7\frac{1}{2}$
48 engraved folded note sheets, $6\frac{3}{4} \times 10\frac{3}{4}$	{	-----\$1.00
48 envelopes, $3 \frac{9}{16} \times 5 \frac{9}{16}$

These prices are post-paid. Remittance should accompany order, and orders must be approved by principal or by sponsor. Samples are sent on request.

PLAQUES

A bronze wall plaque has been designed and manufactured. Schools that have chapters of the National Honor Society will now have the opportunity of having this plaque. It consists of a solid bronze casting mounted on a walnut back. The size is thirteen by sixteen inches and the weight is ten pounds. A chain is furnished. All lettering, as well as the name of the school chapter and the emblem, is raised and polished above the bronze background.

The price is $30.00, which includes transportation and packing.

THE NATIONAL JUNIOR HONOR SOCIETY

The National Junior Honor Society is patterned very closely after the Senior Honor Society. The Junior Society is designed for ninth and tenth grades in four year high schools, and for eighth, ninth, and tenth grades in junior high schools. This organization is now a going concern, and already there are a number of chapters, both in senior high schools and junior high schools. The national constitution, the model constitution, and booklet of information as well as the application blank will be sent on request.

EMBLEM, NATIONAL JUNIOR HONOR SOCIETY

The emblem is made in two grades: ten karat gold and gold filled. All pins have safety catch. The prices are as follows:

10K Pin-----$1.60	Gold Filled Pin-----$1.00
--------------------	----------------------------

These are remittance-with-order prices, and are post-paid. Add ten cents an emblem to the above prices if C. O. D. handling is desired. Engraved letters 3c each additional; guard with chain one dollar additional. If a guard is ordered, be sure to state whether a numeral, as '33 or '34, or an initial, is desired. (The C. O. D. fee is 25c up to $10.00; 30c up to $50.00; and to this should be added 25c messenger service, besides the money order fee. It is too expensive to order C. O. D. Do not do it.)

CERTIFICATES, NATIONAL JUNIOR HONOR SOCIETY

These certificates ($7 \times 8\frac{1}{4}$) are engraved on artificial parchment with a die of a facsimile of the emblem embossed in gold. They sell for ten cents apiece post-paid. Send remittance with order.

SEALS

The seals are in blue and gold, the colors of the Junior Society, and are priced at five cents.

CERTIFICATES OF RECOMMENDATION

The Department of Secondary-School Principals has been distributing uniform certificates of recommendation for over ten years. At first they were sent out free to the members of the Department, but the demand for the certificates became so great that the printing and mailing charges became a burden to the treasury. Therefore, a change was made.

The blanks are used in transferring pupils from one secondary school to another and particularly from high school to college. The certificates are sent post-paid at the following prices:

NEW PRICE LIST

Mailing from	100	200	500	1000

8th zone	1.75	2.95	7.10	11.40

Twenty per cent discount to dues-paying members.

STANDARD HIGH-SCHOOL PERSONAL RECORD BLANKS

The standard record forms which were approved by the Department of Secondary-School Principals at the meeting at Boston are now printed on cardboard suitable for vertical filing systems. This card, 5x8, is especially designed for small and medium size high schools.

Space is provided on these blanks for scholarship records for five years. The extra year is included for pupils of four-year high schools who may desire to do graduate work. It is recommended that six-year junior-senior high schools use separate cards for the records of the junior and of the senior schools.

When the guidance information called for in the lower right hand corner seems to be of a changeable nature, as would often be true of such items as "Vocational Preference" it is suggested that it be written in pencil so that it can be erased and changed when necessary.

The schedule of prices, post-paid, follows:

NEW PRICE LIST

Zones	100	200	500	1000
1 & 2	$1.70	$3.00	$6.00	$11.00

BOOK NOTICES

Smallwood, Mary Lovett. An Historical Study of Examinations and Grading Systems in Early American Universities. Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press, 1935. Pp. xiii—132. $2.00.

The examination has played an important role in higher education in America from colonial times. The examination concept was brought from Europe by the college-bred colonists who contributed to the founding of our earliest institutions of higher learning in the new world. Little is known, however, about the examination practices in these early colleges. It has been generally believed that examinations were at first largely oral, and that later they were both oral and written, and that as the enrolments grew the examinations were chiefly written.

The study by Miss Smallwood traces the historical development of examinations in five colleges, namely, Harvard, Yale, William and Mary, Mount Holyoke, and the University of Michigan. Consideration is given to the earliest attempts to evaluate the achievement of students in these institutions. In the older institutions much restlessness and dissatisfaction with respect to examination practices was manifested between 1800 and 1850, and experimentation with new kinds of written examinations was carried on. The development of the written examination as the chief instrument in appraising the achievements of students came after 1850.

Consideration is also given in the study to the growth of grading systems for the evaluation of the written examinations and the development of standards of evaluation. Honors at commencement exercises were conferred on the basis of the ratings thus given to the students. By the same device demerits were determined and the suspension or dismissal of students for inattention to studies was determined.

The author has provided a valuable historical background for those who are striving at the present time to make progress in higher education through the improvement of the examination system.

Holmes, Pauline. A Tercentenary History of the Boston Public Latin School 1635-1935. Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press, 1935. Pp. xxiv—541. $3.50.

Persons interested in the history of secondary education in the United States will welcome the publication of the volume which undertakes to trace the history of the Boston Latin School from its founding in 1635 to the present time. The study sketches briefly the history of the school in two chapters and then treats in detail in eight chapters significant phases of the school's life, such as administration and supervision, the masters and ushers, some of the famous pupils, location of the buildings, the development of the curriculum, textbooks used between 1635 and 1876, and the methods of teaching the special subjects. A final chapter gives the conclusions reached by the author from her painstaking study.

The study is supported by some 1,400 documents most of which are not available to general readers. The volume is lavishly illustrated with maps, facsimile letters, report cards, pictures of the buildings, and portraits of the masters and famous pupils.

The volume is a unique contribution to the history of American secondary education. However, it will be valued more for the numerous quotations from original documents and the rare illustrations than for any new light thrown upon the well-known history of the Boston Latin School.

Edmonson, James B.; Dondineau, Arthur. A Pupil's Workbook in Civics. New York: The Macmillan Company, 1935. Pp. 117.

Here is a convenient, time-saving workbook that emphasizes the value of problem solving as a means of arousing and developing civic consciousness in young people. The material in the thirty-three exercises and tests is so organized as to be usable with the authors' Civics Through Problems or with one or more other basal textbooks.

Roemer, Joseph; Allen, Charles Forrest; Yarnell, Dorothy Atwood. Basic Student Activities. New York: Silver, Burdett and Company, 1935. Pp. 367.

This is a volume abounding in suggested procedures for grade placement of materials in the activities program. What to do, how to do it, when to do it, and who is to do it form the bases of many suggestions that will conserve much needless expenditure of teacher effort, and that will result in better pupil attitudes, habits, and ideals.

Adler, Alfred. International Journal of Individual Psychology. Third Quarter, 1935. Chicago: International Publications, Inc., Publishers, 1935. Pp. 135.

Contains thirteen nontechnical and easy-to-understand essays dealing with the theories and practices of individual psychology—written by psychologists of international renown. Specific cases are cited wherein the mistaken life-plan of the individual was sought and revealed, and successfully corrected through the application of highly individual psychic treatment of the child along with guidance of the parents. "The practical effects of individual psychology in school are ultimately not the results of a new way of teaching but a new interpretation of life." That, through research, you may be aided in understanding yourself and others, the Journal includes a supplementary list of the literature of individual psychology.
