READING IN THE JUNIOR AND SENIOR HIGH SCHOOL

P. B. JACOBSON

Principal, University High School, University of Chicago, Chicago, Illinois

It is possible that when a highly selected group of children were enrolled in the high school, all preparing for college and most of them for the professions, all of them were able to read adequately at that time. But it is doubtful that such a condition were ever true. The evidence we have about the reading of adults who have been out of school ten years tends to show they read about as well as sixth-grade pupils.¹ Reading in our high schools of twenty or more years ago was often restricted to a very few books studied intensively. It was not uncommon to spend eight weeks on Burke's Speech on Conciliation with the Colonies. Even a poor reader could stumble through the Conciliation in two months, decipher it if you will, word by word, as many of our foreign language students still plod through the intricacies of the Gallic war.

Since the war many new and complex problems of economics, government, and society have arisen. The desire and need to understand them in order to make intelligent decisions about them has caused people to read, to listen to the radio, and to listen and often to give credence to anyone who would express an opinion. Certainly the ability to read better than many of our adults do is not the whole remedy for our social ills. Discriminating insight also is necessary. But there probably would have been fewer followers of Townsend's Old Age Pension Plan had some of our oldsters been better and more critical readers. They didn't read some of our better magazines and simple economic treatises because they are written in language many of those people do not understand.

Reading has always been the subject dearest to the educators. It was the first subject to be investigated scientifically and has continued to be the field of greatest interest. Since the first report on reading was published by the National Society for the Study of Education in 1925 until the present time over twelve hundred investigations of a more or less scientific nature have been devoted to reading.

¹Buswell, G. T. How Adults Read. Supplementary Educational Monographs, No. 45, 1937. University of Chicago. p. 140.

Reading has often been thought of as getting thought from the printed page. While such a conception of reading involves both the recognition of words and phrases, and the fusing of them into a chain of ideas, it does not include reflection by the reader and rejection or acceptance of the idea presented. The committee which prepared the 1937 Yearbook of the National Society for the Study of Education has gone farther in its definition of reading. They assume that it includes not only recognition of the ideas presented but also reflection on their significance, critical evaluation, discovery of relationships among them, and acceptance or rejection of them. One might read two authors who hold different views and accept part from each or judge one to be correct and the other false on the basis of objective data presented. Some people have called this thinking. Others have called it study. It is now proposed that all of this be included under the term reading. Competent authorities on reading expect that such a definition will be quite generally accepted within the next decade. The development of reading under such a comprehensive and inclusive definition will require more attention and instruction than has been furnished in the past. It should be a program in which every teacher will have a part.

It would simplify the problem if all of the children who come to us, say at the ninth grade, had ninth-grade reading ability so that teachers could concentrate their attention on making the good readers better. Unfortunately, they have not this ability. In a study² made in fourteen high schools enrolling 5,705 freshmen, reading tests showed that 22 per cent or over one-fifth of the pupils were below seventh-grade reading ability. Four per cent read no better than second- or third-grade pupils; five per cent made scores equivalent to fourth-grade pupils; six per cent equalled the standard for fifth grade; and seven per cent read as well as sixth-grade pupils. Unpublished studies have shown that pupils who have a grade comprehension score below 7.0 are so seriously handicapped in doing ninth-grade work that they are likely to fail. There is little likelihood that these high schools were unusually poor schools so far as reading is concerned, for the average reading ability of the freshman was that usually attained by eleventh-grade pupils. The lowest quarter of these pupils scored so much lower than the upper quarter of the group that they are in no sense comparable in educational status. These pupils may be grouped into three classes: the lowest quarter who were in need of remedial instruction; the second quarter who were above grade 7.0 but below the median of the group and who need systematic instruction; and those who were already above the norm for their grade and who should be given developmental reading instruction to make the good readers better.

²Gray, W. S. "The Nature and Organization of Basic Instruction in Reading," Thirty-sixth Yearbook of the National Society for the Study of Education. Public School Publishing Co., 1937. p. 121.

Every school will have a considerable group of retarded readers who need remedial instruction. In fact, there is reason to believe that the better the initial instruction has been, the more likely it is that there will be a great range in ability, and that the poorest readers will be so far below the best that they are in no sense comparable.

There is a considerable and growing body of literature and research on effective ways of giving remedial instruction to retarded readers at the high-school level. It was at first assumed that such retarded readers required individual help, diagnosis, and guidance. Most rapid progress for the individual will result in this way, but it is wasteful of teacher time and is expensive. Many cases can be cared for adequately if the retarded readers are collected in small groups with a competent and interested teacher and a variety of exercises given them which seem best to fit their needs as shown by an analysis of their reading test scores. Exercises which aim to develop the abilities to comprehend, organize, and locate information will prove helpful. It is well to use either a textbook in some content field or find descriptive and narrative material pitched at the reading level of the pupils. In an experiment³ with reading exercises which aimed to help poor readers, drills were given on development of three skills: comprehension, organization, and location of information.

To develop comprehension exercises were prepared in which the pupil (1) answered fact questions—either yes, no, or multiple choice—which are contained in a paragraph, (2) answered a question about a paragraph. The ability to organize may be developed by having the pupil (1) form a question which covers the main point in a paragraph, (2) arrange the steps in a process in order, (3) form a summary sentence for a paragraph, (4) fill in a skeleton outline, and (5) outline without a skeleton outline. The ability to locate material can be developed by having the pupil use the index and table of contents to find material to be studied.

From three years' experience with such exercises it can be stated that they will benefit poor readers both in reading ability and knowledge of a subject matter field to an extent which cannot be explained by chance. The poor readers who were given reading instruction gained slightly more than a year's gain in reading more than the poor readers who were not given the exercises in a period of sixty days. They also had a significantly greater knowledge of general science, the content field for which the exercises were prepared.

Another illustration may be given from the University High School at the University of Chicago. While the pupils are, on the whole, two or three years beyond the public-school norms in reading, yet there are retarded readers due to a number of causes. The fault may be poor elementary-school teaching, though it usually is not due to that; it may be lack of innate ability, it may be absence from school, or there may be a number of reasons. Last year there were twenty-five such readers, divided into two remedial sections, which met with the teachers of English once a week for three months outside the regular time scheduled for instruction in English. The materials used were all taken from Carol Hovius' new book, Following Printed Trails,⁴ which is meant as a reading book for high-school pupils. The material is very interesting to high-school pupils and written at a grade level which poor readers can understand. There are exercises prepared for the selections, which is a considerable saving in time for busy teachers. These pupils showed about six months' gain for the three months' period, meetings being held once a week. During the Spring Quarter G. T. Buswell, of the Department of Education, taught both sections twice a week for ten weeks. Mr. Buswell has tried out a technique for developing the reading ability of adults who had been out of school for a period of ten or more years. Mr. Buswell was interested in seeing how effective the techniques would be at the junior-high-school level. If one can train pupils to perceive in relatively large units of printed matter at one time and to understand it, his reading ability will be improved. Good readers march their eyes across the printed page with four or five stops (fixations) of short duration and they have no or very few regressions (going back over the line.) The way this was done was to have the pupils read orally a rhythmic bit of poetry with Mr. Buswell to get into the habit of swinging the eyes regularly across the page. For example, one could use the following:

Blessings on thee, Little Man,
Barefoot boy with cheeks of tan,
With thy turned up pantaloons
And thy merry whistled tunes.

After practicing with the instructor for some time to get the rhythm, the material was thrown on a screen by a stereopticon and the instructor stood behind the screen and lighted a tiny flash light in rhythm with the poetry. When the pupils had mastered this, the beat of the metronome was substituted for the light, so that pupils read silently as the metronome beat. The metronome beat was constantly increased until the children were reading poetry very rapidly. They were urged to read in large perceptual units at home and in preparing their lessons. Next, material was presented on the screen in the form of moving pictures in which one-third of the line was lighted and the other two-thirds were darkened. This was run slowly at first and increased in speed as the children were able to perceive larger units more quickly. Sometimes the material was run in reverse which threw the material out of context but forced attention to perception of the material presented. In addition these people were given vocabulary exercises and some of the exercises from Hovius' Following Printed Trails. At the end of the ten weeks' period the eighth-grade level showed slightly more than a year's gain in reading and the ninth grade slightly more than a year. There was also an improvement in the number of fixations per line (5.4 per cent in grade eight and 9.6 per cent in grade nine) and in reduction of regressions per line (10.5 per cent in grade eight and 9.1 per cent in grade nine).

⁴Hovius, Carol. Following Printed Trails. D. C. Heath, 1936.

For the second group of children who are below the median of the grade, but who can read the assigned material, guidance is necessary. The ability to comprehend, to organize, and to locate material can be developed by exercises similar to those described above. Every teacher then becomes a teacher of reading, exercises being based on the content subject matter for each class. When each teacher becomes a teacher of reading in her field, she takes responsibility for teaching the special techniques which are important in that field of study. The developmental program is helpful for the second class of readers.

The developmental reading program is one designed to make better readers of those who are already good readers. When one attacks this problem, he is on the educational frontier where there are no roads and not many signs. The exact nature of the developmental program has not been determined, but there are some signs of what may be fruitful. To expand the meaning-vocabulary seems one very useful way. The writing of key words for each subject on the board or mimeographing them for each pupil, the study of these words in class as to exact meaning and use, and the testing of vocabulary also seem useful. According to Pressy's investigation high-school subjects contain a heavy vocabulary burden. In his investigation subject matter was combed to find words which might be troublesome to pupils. These were divided into accessory and essential lists which would need to be taught if children were to understand the words.⁶

⁶Monroe, W. S. Directed Learning in the High School. New York: Doubleday Doran, 1928. p. 203.

It seems to me there is ample evidence here to convince every teacher of the value of teaching the vocabulary burden of her subject.

Another promising line is the development of the skills which pupils need through carefully prepared study helps. For example, in United States History in the study of the growth of population a teacher of history may give as one study help the reading of various sources about the growth of population with the direction that pupils shall read the sources and evaluate them and ultimately reach a decision as to why Chicago became a great metropolitan center. This requires some critical analysis or thinking, which is included in a modern definition of reading. Motivating pupils will also prove helpful.

Extensive and relatively easy reading should be furnished in every field. Textbooks are so abstract and condensed that it is necessary to fill out the skelton with some "meat." No matter how able a pupil is mentally he is not likely to gain a knowledge and understanding of the subject from an abstract textbook. He may merely memorize it. Experiments have consistently shown the superiority of extensive reading as compared with the intensive study of a few books. The former kind of reading necessitates a large library of carefully chosen books—not kept in a central place but loaned to the classroom for use for extended periods of time. These books may be either loans from the central library or special classroom libraries. In either case there is here a clear implication that the class period must become a study or laboratory period with little time for question-and-answer daily recitations. Wide reading to solve a vital problem results in an aggressive and thoughtful search for meaning.

A few illustrations of questions or problems which may prove helpful in a developmental program are added below. The field of mathematics is used first, as it is a field in which critical reading is necessary and in which practically no training has been given.

"1. The wages of Henry Adams have been $140 per month. They are to be increased 12 1-2 percent. What will his new wages be?

() A. Which of the following facts are you asked to find out?

1. His annual salary
2. How much his salary was increased
3. How much he can save
4. What his new salary is to be

() B. Which of the following facts is given?

1. His new wages
2. How much his wages are increased
3. The per cent of increase
4. His annual salary

() C. Which of the following is the most reasonable answer?

1. $150 2. $55 3. $1400 4. $250

D. Write the hidden question in this problem."

"2. If you know the number of crates of oranges ordered by a fruit dealer and the price of a single crate, how would you find the cost of the entire order?

- a. Divide the cost of the entire order by the number of crates.
- b. Subtract the price of a single crate from the cost of the entire order.
- c. Multiply the number of crates by the price of a single crate.
- d. Divide the number of crates by the price of a single crate.
- e. Multiply the price of a single crate by the cost of the entire order."

There should also be furnished problems in which there are facts not needed in the solution of the problem. Our school mathematics problems are so compact there are no "jokers" hidden in them.

John has x marbles and Henry has y . Bill has seven more than John. How many does Bill have? No doubt some pupils would say $x + y + 7$ instead of seeing that Henry's marbles have nothing to do with the problem. Probably some problems should be included that cannot be solved so that children will find that not all the problems, even those given in school, can be solved.

One other reading problem at the secondary level will be mentioned briefly. The problem of semantics, or the problem of meaning, may well become the next educational fad. Originating in England it is now making rapid headway in America. The problem of understanding exactly what the author means is important and is not always easy. When a candy advertisement says, "I can't make all the candy in the world so I make the best of it," not all pupils or teachers see the double meaning involved. The problem of semantics involves, among other things, understanding figurative language, and understanding how an undefined or ambiguous word in a critical place, say in an editorial, may change the whole tone of the discussion. Frequently to understand what the author means it necessitates a rich and varied reading background. Semantics involves greater analysis than extensive reading; at times it will involve intensive study of a relatively small selection. It is not to be inferred that good teachers have not used such techniques in their teaching. Rather it is true that the semantic approach has been used incidentally rather than as a planned activity. That it deserves more attention than has been given it can scarcely be questioned. It will no doubt be a valuable technique to add to remedial, developmental, and extensive reading. It should not be a substitute for, but rather a complement to, them.

⁹Thirty-sixth Yearbook of the National Society for the Study of Education. Part I. The Teaching of Reading: A Second Report. Bloomington. Ill.: Public School Publishing Co., 1937. p. 169.

¹⁰*Ibid.*, p. 170.

Perhaps it is appropriate to mention that only three types of work-type reading skills have been discussed. The entire field of improving appreciation and discrimination in the type of leisure reading practiced by adolescents has been omitted deliberately.

The three types of skills mentioned are: (1) remedial reading for poor readers, (2) developmental reading to make good readers better, and (3) semantics. Remedial reading is being furnished with increasing frequency in public schools because it has proved to be effective and essential. Developmental reading, which aims to improve all pupils in reading, demands that every teacher share the responsibility for the success of the program. Finally, semantics, or the study of meaning, has been added. If the study of reading is to succeed, it must be planned and executed deliberately by all teachers.

The authors are herein concerned with economic efficiency, third of the four major aspects of present-day education recently reported by the Educational Policies Commission: (1) self-realization, (2) human relationship, (3) economic efficiency, (4) civic responsibility.

The units into which Getting a Living is divided are: The Consumption of Wealth, The Production of Wealth, The Exchange of Wealth, Value and Price, The Role of Government, and Economic Policies.

HEWITT, DOROTHY AND MATHER, KIRTLEY F. Adult Education—"A Dynamic for Democracy". New York: D. Appleton-Century Company, Inc., 1937. Pp. vii+193. $1.75.

The authors discuss adult education as a creative force and in reference to analysis of the community, adult interests and their discovery, the appeal to the public, and the need for adult centers. Methods and techniques in the search for truth embrace the discussion group, public conversation, panel discussion; and methods and techniques for dispensing information are found in the lecture, forum, symposium, and debate. In the concluding chapter the need for leadership is stressed, and a Bibliography follows.

LEVINSON, RONALD B. The College Journey. New York: Thomas Nelson and Sons, 1938. Pp. xiii + 569. $2.50.

In the Introduction, the author states that College Journey is designed to serve in some sense as a guide book, or Baedeker, for the student who is about to travel through four years of study in the college of Arts and Sciences. Therefore, "the student may reasonably expect to find in it a map or general ground-plan of the typical Arts college. In Part I, he is offered historical introduction to the various subjects which comprise its curriculum. Part II presents a perspective view of the scope, interrelations, and major applications of the various fields of study"—mathematics and the natural sciences, the social sciences, the humanities.

COX, PHILIP W. L. AND DUFF, JOHN CARR. Guidance by the Classroom Teacher. New York: Prentice-Hall, Inc., 1938. Pp.xxv + 535. $3.

"Guidance requires motion; motion implies direction. Guidance, by its very nature, implies that the person who is to be guided be going somewhere." The authors discuss guidance in reference to self-adjustment, factors of biological inheritance, integrated personality and ethical character, out-of-school lives of pupils, classroom teacher, college entrance, vocations, evaluations and records, school organization, home rooms, club programs, athletics and health, dramatic art, student participation in school management, and guidance of youths of superior intellectual ability, as well as guidance of those mentally and physically defective.

THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION. State Personnel Administration. (with special reference to departments of education). Staff Study Number 3, prepared for the Advisory Committee on Education by Katharine A. Frederic; Introduction by Walter D. Cocking. Washington: United States Government Printing Office, 1939. Pp. xiv + 271. 35 cents (paper cover).

This the last of a series of nineteen studies published by the Advisory Committee is devoted to the personnel problem as it relates to state officials and agencies, chief state school officers, functions and classifications selection, qualifications, length of service and provision for retirement, findings and suggested improvements.

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION. Emotion and the Educative Process. A Report of the Committee on the Relation of Emotion to the Educative Process, Daniel Alfred Prescott, chairman. Washington, D. C.: American Council on Education. Pp. xviii+323. $1.50.

The report is described as an exploratory study of the relationship of nonintellectual factors and the aims, methods, materials, and personnel involved in education. It raises the question of the responsibility of the school for the guidance of students to affective life maturity. The various chapters discuss basic affective phenomena, physiological basis of affective experience and behavior, patterning and trainability of affective experience and behavior, affective maturity, basic personality needs and conditions, and other phases of emotion and the educative process.

EDUCATIONAL RECORDS BUREAU. Guidance in Public Secondary Schools. A Report of the Public School Demonstration Project in Educational Guidance edited by Arthur E. Traxler. New York: Educational Records Bureau, 1939. Pp. xxv + 329.

The outcomes of the Public School Demonstration Project in Educational Guidance which was conducted in seven different schools with the aid of a grant from Carnegie Foundation, are herein recorded. The major points of emphasis are the development of cumulative record systems, the establishment of regular comprehensive testing programs, the education of teachers in the interpretation and use of cumulative records, study of the relationship between curriculum requirements and individual needs, and the improvement in means of informing parents about the progress of the pupils. The project was confined to the junior-senior high school level.

PROGRESSIVE EDUCATION ASSOCIATION. Language in General Education. A Report of the Committee on the Function of English in General Education for the Commission on Secondary-School Curriculum. New York: D. Appleton-Century Company, 1940. Pp. xii+226. $2.00.

Language in general education is dealt with in terms of individual development, cultural participation, and as a symbolic system. Stress is given not only to language teaching in the field of English but also to the interdependence of English and other subjects. In English, the basis of language teaching is focussed on three theories of meaning—good usage, authority, and context. Special attention is directed to referential and emotive language, verbal fictions or abstractions, shifts in meaning, definition, statement, description, metaphor, and generalizations. Suggested applications and methods embrace shifts of meaning, metaphor, elements of meaning, range of material, operational analysis, abstractions, wide reading, testing composition, classroom teaching of interpretation.

Campus Activities. Prepared by the Stanford Student Leadership Seminar. Edited by Harold C. Hand. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company, Inc., 1938. Pp. xiv+357. $3.00.

With a foreword by Elbert K. Fretwell, Campus Activities has twenty-one chapters devoted to the many activities existing on college campuses. The first chapter gives items in a philosophy of student activities and takes the position that through these activities, attitudes, appreciations, and modes of behavior, as well as information and skills, are learned. Also stress is given the how and what is to be learned. Other chapters deal with the governing of the college campus, social life on the campus, the controlling of conduct, student-faculty relationships, guidance, self-help, clubs and societies, forensics, dramatics, men's and women's athletics, religion, music activities, student-alumni relationships, the college handbook, newspaper, and yearbook.

JONES, ARTHUR J., GRIZZELL, E. D., AND GRINSTEAD, WREN JONES. Principles of Unit Construction. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company, 1939. Pp. x + 232. $2.

Describing the concept of the unit of learning emphasized in this book, the authors say: "The unit of learning consists of a group or chain of planned, coördinated activities undertaken by the learner in order to obtain control over a type of life situation. The unifying principle is not the logical organization of the activities themselves, often thought of as subject matter, nor a center of child interest, but the learning product to be achieved." For example, "Making a dress is an enterprise; developing the ability to make other dresses is a unit. The ability to control some type of life situation is thus the central objective of the unit of learning."

The various chapters deal with principles underlying unit organization, psychological basis of the unit of adaptation, essential elements of the unit, place of the teacher in the unit of learning, unit planning, motivation of learning activities, guiding learning activities, testing progress and attainments. The 94-page Appendix is devoted to sample units: subject matter, center of interest, adaptation.

NEWS ITEMS

TESTS BY REGENTS HELD INEFFECTIVE.—New York teachers are seeking to have the traditional state regents' tests modified or abolished. A certain number of these tests conducted by the State Department of Education must be passed by each student before he can receive the academic high-school diploma. The instructors explain that the regents' tests result in cramming, limit the scope of work, and cause a superficial approach to their subject.

ALLIED YOUTH AT CONVENTION.—During the February convention in St. Louis, Allied Youth will give a dinner at which the speakers will be Alexander J. Stoddard, Superintendent of Schools, Providence, R. I., and Homer P. Rainey, President of the University of Texas, and newly elected chairman of the Board of Trustees of Allied Youth, Inc., W. Roy Breg, executive secretary of Allied Youth, Inc., is desirous that as many high-school principals as possible be present at this meeting. Place—Missouri Athletic Association; time—6:00 P. M.; Price of dinner—$1.75.

FEWER ENROLLING IN HIGH SCHOOLS.—Enrollment in New York City high schools, for the first time in its history, is showing a decline, according to information given out by the director of the Board of Education's research bureau. Major readjustments within the entire school system are presaged by this development, for within the next five years the secondary population will drop at an accelerated pace. However, the vocational high schools are still growing rapidly—as rapidly as funds permit. This division has grown from 14,660 in 1933 to 53,558 at present. But it is pointed out that not a very happy prospect faces teaching candidates on the various eligible lists awaiting appointment to the New York City School system.

CREDIT TO BE GIVEN FOR WPA TEACHING.—The New York City Board of Education will give credit to teachers for work on WPA projects, credit which will aid them in getting city school jobs, according to a news story published in The New York Times, January 23. The regulations governing the acceptance of WPA experience provide that such experience, acceptable for credit, must have been gained in an activity sponsored by the Board of Education and conducted under the board's auspices. Full credit may be given by the Board of Examiners where the experience is "fully appropriate to the experience requirement sought to be met," it was explained. Half credit may be given where the service is not at the normal pupil load, or is restricted to only part of a regular teacher's program, or in other ways is not fully comparable with the service to be rendered under the license sought.

THE UNIT SYSTEM IS DYING.—"One may summarize the status of the unit system of admission to college in a sentence: the unit system is on its way out; it's dying; soon it will be dead, and few will mourn at its funeral," says W. H. Cowley, in the January Educational Record. As president of a college of liberal arts, Mr. Cowley continues: "I am enthusiastic about the abandonment of the unit system, but we in higher education will be vigorous in our criticism of the schools unless they send us students who are better equipped to continue their general education. . . . Personally I ask but three things of the secondary schools: (1) that their graduates know the fundamentals of the English language and that they have substantial training in writing and speaking, (2) that they know how to read English with reasonable speed and comprehension, (3) that they have learned how to concentrate, how to study, and how to apply themselves in their work."

WHAT OUGHT TO BE.—"It is not enough for pupils to learn the what, the when, and the where; they must also learn the why and the how. It is not enough for pupils to be concerned with what was and what is; they must be concerned with what ought to be. Consideration of what ought to be is necessary in order to prevent the development in the minds of the pupils of the idea that what is, is right, the attitude which has often martyred the innovator and retarded the progress of civilization for centuries. The new social sciences demand that the teacher know the why and the how of conditions so that he can help improve conditions. . . . Social science aims to develop within the pupil a desire to leave society better than he found it. This requires study, thinking, and planning—such as only well-informed, broad-minded, conscientious teachers can do.”—(From W. R. Davis’ article “The Teacher of the Social Studies,” The Social Studies, January, 1940.)

PROBLEMS IN OCCUPATIONAL ADJUSTMENT.—Occupational adjustment is defined as a program the purpose of which is to bring about for each individual a reasonable relationship between the work that he desires to do, the work he is qualified to do, and the work which needs to be done, according to Edwin A. Lee of Teachers College, Columbia University. Speaking before the 1939 Educational Conference held in New York City, Mr. Lee discussed eight major problems of occupational adjustments, among which were those of “following the individual from the time he begins to think about an occupation until he is satisfactorily launched in one, getting school people to accept responsibility for occupational adjustment, of obtaining competent personnel, maintaining satisfactory relations with employers and with organized labor, resolving the controversy between general education and vocational education, and keeping occupational adjustment programs on the basis of research.” These remarks are from Educational Record, January, 1940.

SCRIPT EXCHANGE, U. S. OFFICE OF EDUCATION.—Do you know the outstanding radio programs available to you through Script Exchange? They are World Is Yours (Smithsonian Institution series), Brave New World (Pan-American Series), Let Freedom Ring (story of the Bill of Rights), Americans All—Immigrants All (contributions of racial groups to the Nation), Wings for the Martins (parent education), and many others. Some schools pace the work of the curriculum with these scripts, for programs are available touching on nearly every subject in the curriculum. To help in the production of its scripts, the Exchange publishes a Radio Manual, a handbook of Sound Effects, and a Glossary of Radio Terms. Also through one of its newer services, the Exchange aids schools interested in the use of recordings; free manuals are supplied with the recordings. A new catalogue listing more than 500 scripts is obtainable at ten cents a copy by writing to the Script Exchange, U. S. Office of Education, Washington, D. C.

THE HOSTEL TRAIL.—From one Youth Hostel in 1934 to 209 in 1939 is the record of the growth of the Youth Hostel movement in the United States. Writing in the January Clearing House, Edna V. Grodman tells the ways in which high-school faculty members can take part in its continued growth. “Among the schools sponsoring hostels are the Cambridge School at Kendal Green, Massachusetts; the Putney School at Putney, Vermont; the Praesidio Open Air School in San Francisco; the Roxbury School in Cheshire, Connecticut; the Dartmouth Outing Club cabin in Glenciff, New Hampshire. The AYH school at Meredith, New Hampshire, built on the ideals of youth hosting, includes among its buildings a year-round hostel. The Alfred Plant Junior High School students of West Hartford, Connecticut, not only initiated their own hostel at West Branby, Connecticut, but also built the bunks for sleeping quarters, made mattress covers, and sewed sleeping sacks as part of the school courses in manual arts and home economics. The project completed, they immediately began using the hostel for school outings.

PROMOTING INTERNATIONAL GOOD WILL.—The first prerequisite, an essential corollary of the educational process itself, is the need for factual information completely divorced from sentimentalism, superstition and emotionalism, information deeply anchored in a search for truth, and an openmindedness that is willing to admit that new knowledge may discredit old convictions. . . . A second principle is a clear presentation of the real reasons for differences in customs, manners, and habits of one group from those of other groups. . . . A third basic attitude that should be incorporated into a frame of reference on what the schools can do to promote international good will is to recognize frankly the existence of conflict, but to establish the fact that conflicts can be resolved by compromise and adjudication rather than by force and violence. . . . A fourth and final premise is to teach that there shall not be in the mind of the student a dual set of standards—one for himself and another for someone else. These remarks are from J. M. Klotzsche's article "What the Schools Can Do To Promote International Good Will," The Social Studies, January, 1940.

SOCIAL LANGUAGE FOR HIGH-SCHOOL SENIORS.—A social language class at Balboa High School, San Francisco, is described by Edith S. Anderson and Walter V. Kaulfers in the California Journal. One of the major aims of this class is to develop more intelligent critical thinking among our citizenry in those situations in individual and group life in which people frequently become victims of language, as, for example, in propaganda, advertising, law, and everyday conversation. The second objective is the development of a creative attitude toward language, which is approached through vocabulary-building activities involving elementary semantics. The third objective is the development of such an appreciative interest in language as will lead to discrimination in its use. The discussion of bulletins dealing with effective language usage and the collection of interesting and telling figures of speech are among the most effective approaches to this objective. The students have shown great interest in the section of Reader's Digest devoted to picturesque speech. The authors say that "although the offering does not carry foreign language credit and is in no way a substitute for a foreign language course, it is fully accredited for high-school graduation and as an elective for admission to college."

CHILDREN IN MINORITY GROUPS.—The report of the White House conference on children in a democracy sounds this warning: "The problem of minority group is one deeply rooted in our social structure and it is fraught with danger to the whole population. Examples are not lacking of the use of minorities to destroy national unity, to set one part of the population against another, and to defeat the common interest of all the people in raising the general standard of living and in attaining greater security of life and liberty." It is estimated that approximately thirteen million children sixteen years of age and under who are other than native-born white of white parentage—more than one-third the total population in this age group—constitute the number of children in the minority population. The plight of such children is told in these facts: Minority groups are at the bottom of the economic scale; they have the most children on the least money; their relief standards often are lower; they are likely to be segregated educationally and culturally; they are, in some communities, deprived of citizenship rights and suffer other legal discrimination and handicaps. The report delineates an approach to the minority problem both general and specific—general as to getting to the roots of economic causes and making clear that science has failed to prove any inherent superiority of one race over another; specific as to the unique problems presented by each minority group.

FRIENDLINESS THROUGH HOME-ROOM ADVISERS.—"Is it not often that part of the difficulty in meeting the needs of pupils comes from a lack of realization of their problems? Teachers and principals see the noisy and the self-assertive and sometimes forget the sensitive, retiring little girl who is not accustomed to pushing her own way up in the world. In the social activities of the school, as well as in every other activity, these two extremes must be given attention. Probably for a large number of those with introvert tendencies, it is 'now or never' if they are to become fully participating members of adult society," writes Grace T. Lewis in the January School Review. Describing the procedure in force at A. B. Davis High School, Mount Vernon, New York, Miss Lewis says that home-room advisers have the assistance of student leaders chosen by each home-room. All student leaders must be acceptable to the dean, whose search is for friendly girls (girls being more needful of help than boys), girls of high ideals and standards and a wholesome outlook on school affairs and life in general. The purpose of this plan is to make adjustment to school easier for new students. "The possibilities of service vary, of course, in each community and even in each school, but this plan is an effort to stress thoughtfulness and kindness in the best possible way—through practice. Leadership has many ways of expressing itself. At times there is need to take care that the word may not become almost exclusively associated with spectacular activities, such as cheerleading, athletics, and editorships."

AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION.—Last year the New Jersey Juvenile Delinquency Commission sought from more than two thousand convicted law-breakers replies to questions relating to their early lives and the conditions relating to their delinquency. These misfits laid the greatest blame for their failure on bad companions and on the lack of things important in the lives of children: lack of recreation, places to play, companionship, success in schools, better relations with adults.

Jersey City, New Jersey, decided to meet the challenge of delinquency by placing emphasis on preventing criminals rather than merely on apprehending them. To do so, Mayor Hague set up the Bureau of Special Service, a coördinated child welfare unit, empowered to handle all cases of juvenile delinquency found by school authorities and police officials. Headed by Thomas W. Hopkins, the Bureau endeavors to integrate all existing agencies which attempt to guide a child safely through difficulties; therefore, when a child shows a need for help, the Bureau immediately gets the complete picture, and a study of it suggests the best procedure for the particular child. School buildings remain open until ten o'clock to children and their parents, who may have supervised sports, swimming, skating, all kinds of music, art, shopwork, hobbies, dancing, gay community life—somewhere to go, something to do. Delinquency numbers have gone down, and the conviction comes that nature never did bring a criminal into the world; that a child lifted out of an evil environment can still make a good adult; that a community which is awake to possibilities can supply that lift; that it's the common sense, decent thing to do. A UNIVERSITY WORKSHOP FOR PARENTS.—The Parents Workshop at the Summer Laboratory School of the University of Wisconsin in 1939 was organized with three purposes in mind: to discover more effective techniques for the self-education of parents; to find ways to release and utilize the understanding and energy of parents in the service of the children and the school; and to demonstrate to student teachers the importance and value of parent education and of home coöperation. Writing on the subject in the January issue of Progressive Education, Katharine Whiteside Taylor describes the group of parents as being fairly representative of the cultural and economic background one might find in a school in a middle-class neighborhood, except for extremes at the upper level which made it somewhat richer but at the same time more difficult to unify; the economic range was from ten thousand dollars a year down to eighty-five a month on W. P. A. The majority were around the age of thirty with children below third grade in school, although there were several having adolescent children, and one with a daughter at college level.

In discussing "What do we want for our children at maturity?" the group evolved the following: (1) Happiness; mature happiness that does not need to exploit others; inner serenity; peace with themselves. (2) Capacity for giving of themselves in relationships. (3) Critical judgment. Capacity for analytic thinking. (4) A grasp of reality. Recognition of true values. (5) Capacity for satisfactions both through work and play. (6) Acceptance of responsibility for themselves and others.

Parents who came from out of the city discussed with enthusiasm the possibility of developing similar workshop projects for parents in their home communities.
